The cliffs have need to be impressive to form a fitting climax for the way which leads to them. The visitor stands as if lifted into the air above a chaos of jagged rock, amid which the sea surges and boils, heaping glittering, gem-like drops upon black ledges; crusting ragged boulders with evanescent frost-work of foam; drawing back as a tiger crouches his head down upon his paws, and then springing upon some impassive spur with a cat-like hiss. Before is the splendid reach of sea water, the islands dark and shadowy; and near at hand the bold and noble line of the shore stretching away toward Schooner Cove. On the left one looks far down into a sharp and sudden bay, where the shadows make the green water transparent and seamed with cloudy bars slanting downward toward the pebbly bottom. The walls of rock rise sheer and precipitous, like the rust-stained walls of a sea fortress; and from their tops the moss-bearded trees, standing sentinel, peer shiveringly down at their tremulous reflection far below. Forever over all is that sense of silence which seems to underlie the incessant sounding of the waves and the sighing of the wind in forest branches; and the place is ruled by that spell of the sea so powerful that it hushed even this gay and trifling company into silence and pleasant sadness. They sat around, talking quietly of the view—even Burt West subdued into quiet for the time being. Gilbert threw himself at full length upon the short, dry grass, and looked out over the bay, at the pearly gulls, at the amethystine wall of Grand Menan, at the sky, soft and pale beside the sapphire of the sea. He made no attempt to place himself near Mrs. Van Orden. The approach he had made to a declaration had upon him for the moment all the effect of success, and had he been a formally accepted lover, he could hardly have felt a warmer glow of happiness in his bosom. He was so deeply moved that his bliss almost brought a sob to his throat, as he lay there idly and unconsciously knitting his fingers into the dry grass, warm and slippery, and feeling the presence of the woman he adored with all the passion of his fervid young heart enclose him like a blessed atmosphere.

THE KERNEL AND THE HUSK.*

"PHILOCHRISTUS" and "Onesimus" are two historico-imaginative romances intended to illustrate life in the early periods of Christianity. Their author is Dr. E. A. Abbott, a well-known London scholar. His present work is in a different vein, being not romance but criticism. Its object is to discriminate between the alleged miraculous and the actually supernatural in the Christian religion, and to displace the former by the latter. Dr. Abbott has got through with miracles, but still holds to the supernatural, saying:

There are some who feel drawn towards the worship of Christ by love and reverence, yet repelled by an apparently inextricable connection of the story of Christ with a miraculous element which, in their minds, throws a doubt over the whole of His acts, His doctrine, His character, and even His existence.

His aim therefore is like that of a builder who removes what he believes to be decayed and unsound timbers in the foundations of a house and lets it down upon something better. The book is written in the form of letters to a Christian believer of the orthodox school, who accepts miracles without a question, who is aghast at any suggestion of abandoning them, and who meets the author's arguments as he goes along with all sorts of objections and difficulties born of hereditary faith and spiritual alarm. These difficulties, however, Dr. Abbott brushes away as he advances, and comes out finally to this practical conclusion, put in the form of imaginary advice supposed to be addressed by a Bishop of the Church of England to a young man seeking ordination:

"If with all your heart you worship Christ as the Eternal Son of God, if you can honestly and sincerely accept the Church services as excellent (though imperfect) expressions of congregational worship, and the Scriptures as super-excellent (though imperfect) expressions of spiritual fact; if you feel that you have a message of good news for the poor and simple as well as for the rich and educated, and that you can preach the spiritual truths which you and all of us recognize to be the essence of the Gospel, without attacking those material shapes in which, for many generations to come, all spiritual truths must find expression for the vast majority of Christians, then I can encourage you to come to the ministry of Christ. I myself am of the old school and believe in the miracles, or if not in all, at all events in most; but I recognize that this belief—though to me it seems safer and desirable—is not essential: come therefore to the ministry; with the miracles if you can, without them if you cannot."

The philosophical principles by which Dr. Abbott guides his argument may be found embodied in the following definitions:

Absolute reality cannot be comprehended by men, and can only be apprehended as God or in God by a combination of Desire and Imagination, to which we give the name of Faith.

Spirit, i. e. Breath or Wind, is a metaphorical name—implying subtleness, invisibility, ubiquitousness, and life-giving power—given to the ultimate Cause of Force in the Universe, i. e. God; sometimes to the Cause of Force in the human individual; more rarely to the Cause or Causes of maleficent Forces in the Universe.

The existence of Matter has never been proved; and it is nothing but a hypothesis.

Material, or Matter, is a name given to an unascertained and hypothetical "material," "matter," "substance," or "fundamental stuff," of which we commonly imagine all objects of sensation to be composed.

Law of Nature is a metaphorical name for a frequently observed sequence of phenomena (apart from human Will), implying, to some minds, regularity; to others absolute invariability.

Miracle means a supposed suspension of a Sequence, or Law, of Nature; Marvel, or Mighty Work, means a rare Sequence of Nature, in which great Effects are produced by Causes seemingly, but not really, inadequate.

Illusions are mental affirmations not harmonizing with immediate experience, but preparatory for absolute knowledge. Delusions are mental affirmations not harmonizing with experience, nor preparatory for absolute knowledge.

Accordingly Dr. Abbott believes that no real miracles are anywhere recorded in the Bible or anywhere attended on the origin of Christianity; that the manifest belief in miracles on the part of Biblical writers grew out of illusions honestly accepted; that all miracles are to be resolved into marvels or "mighty works;" and that the interests of spiritual Christianity do not suffer in the least by this shifting of the grounds on which it rests. He recommends a careful study of the Encyclopædia Britannica for the light its Old Testament articles throw on the subject. His explanations of Samson's slaying of hundreds with the jawbone of an ass and of the Battle of Beth Horon are curious instances of his rationalizing process. The literal bodily resurrection of Jesus he does not accept; it was a spiritual resurrection; and the witnessing of it by the disciples was illusory. The feeding of the multitudes, the withering of the fig tree, and other New Testament miracles are similarly explained. Christ's appearance to Saul of Tarsus on his way to Damascus was a vision. There was no miraculous conception or birth of Jesus. And yet faith and prayer, a Divine Son and a Holy Spirit, regeneration and immortality, are all real to Dr. Abbott, and he stands as firmly by these interior essentials of the Christian religion as if he held the historic position. In a word:

*The Kernel and the Husk. Letters on Spiritual Christianity. By the author of "Philochristus" and "Onesimus." Roberts Bros. $1.50.

What if miraculous Christianity is to natural Christianity as the Ptolemaic astronomy is to the Newtonian? Both of these astronomical systems were of practical utility; both could predict eclipses; both revealed God as a God of order. But the former imputed to the unmoving sun the terrestrial motion which the latter correctly imputed to the earth; the former explained by a number of arbitrary, non-natural, and quasi-miraculous suppositions—spheres, and spirals, and epicycles, and the like—phenomena which the latter more simply explained by one celestial curve traced out in accordance with one fixed law. I believe that in religion also we have made a similar mistake and are being prepared for a similar correction.

The single question by which to test any such hypothesis as this of the origin of Christianity is: Does it fit the facts of the case? To us it does not seem that it does; this impression is not the impression which we get from the natural and unforced reading of the records. But then if you go behind the records, as Dr. Abbott does, putting them aside as the mistaken statements of illusioned men, what are we to do?

We are glad for such books notwithstanding; they mark vividly the currents of present religious thought; they show how the best Biblical scholarship is widening the sweep of truth; and above all they illustrate the fact that even if Christianity does lose its anchorage in the miraculous it is not by any means thereby to drift into wreck and ruin. If obliged to we can give up the miraculous and yet save every stone in the spiritual temple. Dr. Abbott does this with reverence, fearlessness, and fervor. It is needless to say that he writes without passion or acrimony, in the sweetest and gentlest of tempers, in a spirit which is as thoroughly Christian as anything can be, and in almost faultless English. The book will disturb some minds, but it ought not to unsettle any.

One thing in it will comfort the elect and stay their trembling hearts: the author believes in a personal devil!

TWO MORE BALZAC NOVELS.

THESE two Balzac novels, the latest among Miss Catherine Wormeley's delightful translations, stand among the most perfect works that came from the hand of the great novelist. They represent different sides of Balzac's genius, and while it cannot justly be said that he who has read them both knows the range of Balzac in creative fiction, there can be no doubt that they afford a very profound and impressive insight to the resources of Balzac's imagination. In both, the motives are noticeably simple. A woman with two sons bestows all her love upon the scoundrel and only on her death-bed recognizes the unselfish devotion of the other. A man of genius is possessed of a hobby, to which he sacrifices love, fortune, honor, life itself. These, briefly expressed, are the themes of *The Two Brothers*¹ and The Alkahest.² Noticeably simple they both are. How our modern chronicler of small beer or manufacturer of sensational literature would scorn the elementary view of humanity which was the basis of Balzac's power! Now, "the stories are all told," or else we must make them up like nursery legends, "out of our own heads"—and so instead of The Two Brothers and The Alkahest we have The Minister's Charge and She!

The Two Brothers (known to readers of French as Un Menage de Garcon) deals with a good many unpleasant situations, but deals with them in a way which proclaims the skill of a consummate master. The ancestry of the Bridaus is unfolded; we know whence they derived their dissimilar traits; and we follow their separate yet mutually related careers and see all the main-springs of action laid bare. Again and again we are astonished at Balzac's modernness. Philippe Bridau, handsome, jovial, energetic, yet wholly unprincipled and corrupt; Joseph Bridau, modest, gentle, devoted; Madame Bridau, weak, indulgent, well-meaning—these are not types of a bygone era or of a foreign land. They are with us here in America today, and Balzac shows us how we may discover them. The Two Brothers is, in fact, a lesson in righteousness which one who reads it never can forget. "Woe to those whose misdeeds lead to fortune!" is the message Balzac delivers here. Philippe Bridau, by intrigue and persistent crime, has all the world at his feet and falls like Lucifer, and those who have trusted in his promises and have been beguiled by his wealth are punished with him. The conclusion of The Two Brothers is like the end of a Sunday-school book. Virtue in the person of Joseph Bridau steps into possession of the honors and luxury won by the wicked Philippe. And yet how often in real life are selfishness and greed powerless before fidelity and goodness. Balzac is true to universal laws, and by him the commonplaces of duty are endowed with new and enduring meanings.

At the beginning of the story of The Alkahest (La Recherche de l'Absolu) Balzac takes occasion to utter his contempt for "certain ignorant and voracious readers who want emotions without undergoing the generating process," who demand the flower before the planting of the seed. Does not this saying admirably characterize the passion for results, the impatience of methods which we are wont to consider so modern?

¹ The Two Brothers. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50.

² The Alkahest; or, The House of Claës. By Honoré de Balzac. Roberts Bros. $1.50.

To Balzac not only the events of human existence, but human existence itself is bound up with its environment, and he always insists on giving the whole picture. He describes the rise of the Claës family, the traits of its ancestry, the atmosphere of the town where it dwelt, the architecture and furnishing of the house which was its abode. Then the characters appear one after another—Balthazar Claës, inheriting the family tendency to hobbies; Madame Claës, one of the few successfully depicted good women among Balzac's dramatis personæ; Marguerite, with her mingled sweetness and self-reliance; Emmanuel, the naïf young student—and the relations of each to the other in the tragi-comedy that follows are at once made clear. And here once more the universality of Balzac's genius is strikingly evident. Wherever man is given over to an absorbing passion, it matters not whether it be the search for the philosopher's stone or the pursuit of wealth in Wall Street; wherever a woman devotes herself to the good of the man she loves and pities, there The Alkahest will be always and inevitably true.

The Alkahest, perhaps more than any other one work by Balzac, is distinguished by serenity of purpose, surety of touch, and magnitude of wisdom. The large utterances of a philosopher who had studied humanity to its depths and solved the problems of thought and deed are here to be found gleaming like jewels on every page. We have said once before that to read Balzac at his best and understandingly is a liberal education. With these two novels before us we may repeat the maxim. And we particularly commend the masterpieces of the "Comédie Humaine" to all who would comprehend the true range and purport of fiction, and who, in the perplexing vagaries and flat unprofitableness of current literature, would have in constant view a mountain range by which to take their bearings and guide their steps to the heights. We know of nothing more certain to disgust a thoughtful person with the pettiness of the great mass of contemporary fiction than a systematic course of Balzac.

PROSE PASTORALS.*

THERE are many imitators of Emerson, but none is like him. There are many seekers after the woods which Thoreau haunted, but few there be that find them. Some adventurous spirits have followed John Burroughs into the bird-world, and got lost therein. Mr. Sylvester marches in this train. Not that his ambition is Emersonian, or that his materials are wholly Thoreau-esque; but to open his book is to be reminded of greater because more natural explorations in the same field, and to read him far is to feel that his book is not born but made, and made after a model, and inspired not by nature but by other books about nature. It is a book of a kind, and the kind is not unfamiliar. The water flows, but it is a pumped and not a running stream. There is a lack of spontaneity and an atmosphere of artificiality. But this is probably inevitable now in any book about woods, meadows, cows, rainy days, brooks, mists, and all growing and creeping things of the great out-doors. We have been there before—to this sanctuary, this holy place, and have worshiped. Yet shall we not return to it, though the high priest may have gone, and the flavor of stale incense linger a little in the air?

* Prose Pastorals. By Herbert Milton Sylvester. Ticknor & Co.

Mr. Sylvester is to be commended for his tastes, for his close observation, and for his power to describe, and lovers of Nature in her New England dress may spend snatches of these rich, juicy days of midsummer over such dreamy pages with a quiet sort of pleasure. There is no humanity in them, almost none, save the humanity of the author, who sallies forth into the meadows and thickets, with squirrels and birds for company, and leaves and flowers for books, and rivulets for music, and the fresh air for food by the way. He pays a visit to the maple grove at sugaring time. He studies the procession of cows winding their homeward way at milking time. Here is a representative sketch in this portfolio of homely scenes, familiar to us all, so familiar that many of us miss the humor, or the pathos, or the poetry in them, until we look at them under the hand of a sympathetic delineator:

I see a rosy-cheeked woman on the sloping lawn with a pan of wet corn-meal tucked under her arm. She stirs the meal with an energetic movement, and as she straightens up I see the perfect contour of her figure against the dark background of a wide-open porch-door. She has the pose of a Hebe, leaning slightly back as she does, and might well pass for one of Nature's divinities in her simple beauty and native grace. I hear the sharp staccato rat-tat-tat of her iron spoon against the flaring side of the tin pan, and a musical call, a bird-like note from the rustic beauty's throat of—"Biddy-biddy-biddy-bid-bid-bid"—beginning with an adagio movement which is accelerated in crescendo to a full, robust tone, to die away in melodious diminuendo away up the scale. A thirty-second note is nowhere. The flock comes from every direction. The hens answer with outspread wings and swift-shod feet; the chicks scarce seem to touch the ground in their hurry; the turkeys roll along like sailors on the land with all their sea toggery on; and last of all to come to breakfast is lordly Chanticleer. The rooster is Lord High Constable, and he wields his baton with dignity. He is half human in his attentions to the beauties of his harem. But the breakfast is soon over; and the flock, done with their flurry and scramble about their mistress' feet, scatter themselves among the nodding buttercups and clover of the orchard, or over the broad lawn bespattered with the bright yellow discs of the dandelions and sweet honey-suckle.

Among the chapters in Mr. Sylvester's book are a group of three detailing wanderings in the White Mountains, along the Peabody River, and on the Nineteen Mile Brook and its West Branch, in the course of which he looks upon such landscapes as this:

The Presidential range presents a marked curve, forming the segment of a circle, with a broad valley between; and, standing on the northern shoulder of Mount Washington, this brook [West Branch] is seen far below in the tree-tops a tiny thread of silver. If the ascent is made to the Summit by the carriage road, after passing the Half-way House, a sharp turn to the left brings one to the rock-strewn plateau of the Ledge, which, treeless and bare of verdure, unless there may be a few scattered tufts of dull-gray feathery-topped grass to relieve its poverty of vegetation, juts out over a frightful precipice, that drops down, down, hundreds of feet into sheer nothingness, to where the giants of the forest have only the likeness of dwarf shrubs. To look down into the gulf below is terrifying to a person of weak nerves. The view from this point is one of uplifting grandeur and beauty. Down the valley are spread out the intervalles of Gorham, the villages of Milan and Berlin, with their curling smokes of mills and factories, the Peabody River and its tributaries, and the ever-narrowing pass of the Glen; and beyond all, a chain of lakes and rivers that look like burnished silver in the bright morning sunshine. Opposite are the symmetrical peaks of Madison, Adams, and Jefferson—a mighty sweep of wind-blown crags skirted by dark-green forests.

But Mr. Sylvester has a microscopic as well as telescopic eye, and can study a blackberry vine as enthusiastically as a range of mountains:

The blackberry is the last of all the wild berries to ripen; and what luscious fruitage lurks amid its low-trailing vines along the farm boundaries, over-running the cobble-stone half-wall, its half-rail fence oftentimes serving as a trellis against which it leans with a graceful abandon. The blackberry is a saunterer by the wayside margins and country roads, where you will meet it at almost every turn if you will but take the trouble to scrutinize the fences. The high-bush grows in the interstices of stake and rail, by some white-flowering thorn, or in the midst of a wild tangle of briar close to the edge of the wheel-rut, where every passing team gives it a swish with its loosely rattling spokes. It is a magnificent grower; like the wayside tramp it is, it has a wonderful reserve force in its roots; for break it down, plow it up, freeze the life out of it, when the tramp season opens, up comes our blackberry vine as stout and vigorous as ever; its bright purple stalks, virile and full-blooded, creep up day by day to overtop the tallest of the highway fences. What a vagabond, what a wayward wilding, this child of Nature is! Often I have searched for the plump, juicy fruit of this bramble when out with gun or rod, and one never knows in what secluded nook or sunny opening it waits for his coming in the closing days of August or in the earlier days of mild September. Very unexpectedly it reaches out across your path as you make some jaunt through the woods or over the hills, its brilliant leafage tinged with the richest dyes of crimson and purple, with top heavily bowed down under its dusky burden. In these black, glistening shapes, so much like an old-fashioned straw beehive in miniature, is concentrated the voluptuousness of summerhood; and in the graceful sweep and bending lines of these vines, thick with sharp, dangerous spines that prick and tear without mercy, the quality of sensuousness in Nature finds its perfect expression. Not infrequently it grows to the height of ten and twelve feet; and right royal is its blossoming in June, its tops making a mass of petals as white as the driven snow. A strange freak of Nature, is it not, that the blackberry flower should be so much after the pattern of the snowflake, while its fruit is of such a rich, dusky purple? Nature is full of quips and pranks and of precious secrets, which are well hidden within the mystery of her silences.

The poetry with which Mr. Sylvester prefaces and interlards his essays, though conscientious and sometimes creditable, could have been spared without loss to the book, likewise the opening chapter, "Outlooks," though it serves the purpose of an introduction. Some moralizing is indulged in, but not tediously, and the use of the personal pronoun is not more frequent than is to be expected in books of this class. Altogether it is an agreeable contribution to the stock of this summer's reading, and it is printed from that unique and elegant font of type which we first saw, and called attention to, in a New Jersey publication some months ago.

THE STORY OF METLAKAHTLA.*

METLAKAHTLA is the name of a settlement of Christian Indians in British Columbia, about thirty miles south of the Alaska line. The settlement, with its civilized, industrious, and moral population of more than a thousand souls, its schools, church, town hall, coöperative store, and other public buildings indicative of well-organized commercial life, is the fruit of the self-denying and truly apostolic missionary labors of Mr. William Duncan, an Englishman, who came to this distant corner of the earth some thirty years ago, actuated by the noble purpose of doing something for the elevation of the degraded tribes of the North Pacific. Planting himself first at Fort Simpson, on the Tsimshian Peninsula, he shut himself up for eight months in a stockade with a friendly Indian to learn the language. As soon as he was able to preach he began a round of visits to the Indian camps in the vicinity, carrying the Gospel story at the risk of his life. In this effort to get a foothold he spent five years of hardship, danger, and patient toil. At the end of the five years he found fifty of these once ignorant, vicious, savage Indians, born into a new nature, and so far under his influence that they were willing to follow him to a new home, under more favorable conditions, some seventeen miles distant from their heathen surroundings at Fort Simpson.

This was the beginning of Metlakahla. The colony grew. In the course of years the 50 became 1,000. A simple form of government was adopted. A church was built, the largest north of San Francisco. Industries were established. Commerce was inaugurated. A saw mill, a blacksmith's shop, a cooper shop, a sash shop, a planing mill, were added one after another to their equipment. Taxes were instituted, wells dug, roads opened, drains laid, a trading schooner bought, a savings bank founded, a fire brigade organized, and in a hundred ways Mr. Duncan educated and built up a model community around him. Nowhere in the world, not even in the Sandwich Islands, do the annals of missionary enterprise furnish a better illustration of the converting and uplifting power of the principles of the Gospel of Jesus Christ when intelligently, lovingly, patiently applied.

* The Story of Metlakahla. By Henry S. Wellcome. London and New York: Saxon & Co. $1.50.

All went well in the little Christian Indian colony of Metlakahtla until the arrival of an English Bishop, the Bishop of New Caledonia, claiming jurisdiction and undertaking to overturn Mr. Duncan's simple religious system in the interest of a more formal and showy ecclesiasticism. Mr. Duncan had entered on and prosecuted his work as a member of the Church of England and an agent of the Church Missionary Society, but felt, and as it seems to us felt wisely, that such a community as Metlakahtla was no place for the imposition of an elaborate and ornate churchly order. The simple teachings of the Bible and simple forms of worship and administration he judged to be best adapted to the minds and tastes of his simple people. Not so his Lordship, the Bishop of New Caledonia. Collisions of authority speedily ensued between him and Mr. Duncan. The trouble was reported back to the Church Missionary Society. The Church Missionary Society asked Mr. Duncan to resign. But his Indian wards would not hear of his resigning.

And now the Metlakahtlans are resolved to emigrate across the border into Alaska, and Mr. Duncan has been in Washington this last winter endeavoring to procure facilities for their removal. The British authorities deny their right to remove their buildings, claiming that by English law they have become part and parcel of the land, and thus the matter stands.

Such is the substance of Mr. Wellcome's narrative. It is illy written, with some matter that might have been omitted, and with a system of punctuation, in respect to the use of commas and semi-colons, the most extraordinary we have ever lighted upon. A good deal of the book is devoted to the unpleasant particulars of the quarrel between Mr. Duncan and the Bishop of New Caledonia, and to arguments and citations against ecclesiastical display, domination, and interference, and there are copious appendices containing documentary matters relating to the case. But as a picture of missionary achievement it has uncommon value apart from its controversial aspects, and when the interests of justice and peace shall have been served by its statements, we would wish that the extremely interesting facts which it embodies might be presented in a simpler and more readable form.

A poet who comes forward with a selection of his favorite effusions among his own poems is in the position of a beauty who blushing indicates to her admirer what she considers to be her own crowning charms. The position must be, though agreeable, embarrassing for the modesty of poets, which has always been proverbial. Perhaps this is why Mr. Swinburne refused so long and so obstinately to give to the public what it has been so long and so obstinately asking for; and perhaps this is why Mr. Browning delegated (so it is said) the selection of his charms to a judicious friend. — Athenæum.

MINOR NOTICES.

Outlines of Logic and of Encyclopædia of Philosophy. [Ginn & Co. $1.00.] This is the sixth and last volume of the "Philosophical Outlines of Hermann Lotze" which Prof. Ladd of Yale has done such an excellent service in translating. The portion on logic is not so peculiarly valuable as the later section on philosophy in theory and practice. Philosophy, says Lotze here, is not a kind of luxury superfluous to our real life. The rather is it nothing else than the strenuous effort of the human spirit, by a coherent investigation to find a solution that is universally valid and free from contradiction, for those riddles by which our mind is oppressed in life, and about which we are perforce compelled to hold some view or other in order to be able really to live at all.

All these volumes of Outlines are intellectual pemmican, to be taken by the wise in small quantities; but the enterprise of the translator and the publishers deserves the reward of a large sale of the series.

A Hebrew Grammar. By the Rev. W. H. Lowe, M. A. [Thomas Whittaker. 75 cts.] An Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament. By the Rev. B. B. Warfield, D.D. [The same. 75 cts.] We noticed a few weeks ago the excellent little volume of Rev. Dr. Warfield, in the "Theological Educator" series, when sent in by the London publisher. We are glad to see that it is now issued by Mr. Whittaker in this country, together with Rev. Mr. Lowe's sketch of Hebrew grammar, which, he claims, "contains sufficient to enable the student to read the Hebrew Scriptures with the aid of it and of a dictionary." Even after the widespread labor of Prof. Harper, now of Yale, in popularizing the study of Hebrew among our clergy, we should suppose that there is room for such a brief and handy little text-book as Rev. Mr. Lowe's. Cotton Mather, we believe, was accustomed "to sweeten his mouth with a bit of Calvin" before he went to bed: perhaps our un-Calvinistic clergy of today may prefer a bit of Hebrew in this condensed form!

Whit Tuesday.

MY DEAR SIR: You hear a great deal nowadays of the worst nonsense ever uttered since men were born on earth. Best hundred of books! Have you ever yet read one good book well? For a Scotchman, next to his Bible, there is but one book, his native land; but one language, his native tongue—the sweetest, richest, subtlest, most musical of all the living dialects of Europe. Study your Burns, Scott, and Carlyle. Scott, in his Scottish novels only, and of those only the cheerful ones, with the Heart of Midlothian, but not the Bride of Lammermoor, nor the Legend of Montrose, nor the Pirate. Here is a right list: Waverley, Guy Mannering, The Antiquary, Rob Roy, Old Mortality, The Monastery, The Abbot, Red Gauntlet, Heart of Midlothian. Get any of them you can, in the old large print edition when you have a chance, and study every sentence in them. They are models of every virtue in their order of literature and exhaustive codes of Christian wisdom and ethics. Always faithfully yours,

JOHN RUSKIN.

ENGLISH OPINIONS.

Politicians and public writers in England should not overlook a high-class American magazine to which there is not quite an equivalent here. This is the Political Science Quarterly, which is edited by the Faculty of Political Science in Columbia College—the London publisher is Mr. Frowde, of the Oxford University Press—whose mission it is to give, in the form of signed articles, the results of scientific investigation in politics, economics, and public law. It is admirably edited and arranged, and although the writers have the political problems of the United States mainly in their thoughts, there is almost nothing that they say which ought not to be of interest here.—The Spectator.

In short, Mr. Gardiner does not encourage the dream that haunted the English mind through the first half of this century—the dream of a grand epic narrative, a sort of Iliad of English history, at the same time sublime and moral, of which Charles I, Strafford, Pym, Hampden, Falkland and Cromwell should be the heroes. It is evident that he entirely repudiates not only the party view of that period, but also the poetical view. He rejects alike the rhetoric of Macaulay and the poetry of Carlyle. He replaces their poetry by prose, and tells with scrupulous exactness a story which leaves us somewhat bewildered and rather saddened than animated. For Mr. Gardiner is serious.—Prof. Seelye in the Academy.

The two last-published volumes of Mr. Lecky's work are most valuable contributions to the recent history of our country. They cover the first nine years of Pitt's ministry. . . . Mr. Lecky has given independent study to this momentous period, and his narrative will be found to be superior to any of those which have preceded it. His method of writing is peculiar; there is an appearance of accident both in what he includes and in what he omits. The space allotted to each set of incidents is not very evenly proportioned, nor are they all treated with equal fullness of knowledge. But we must be thankful for what is given us. There is scarcely a page in the two bulky volumes which is not worth reading.—The Athenæum.

For this book [The Western Avernus, by Morley Roberts] is likely, unless we are mistaken, to take a high place in that characteristically English class of travels of which it is the latest specimen. At the head of these sits Eothen—sedet æternumque sedebit—with Warburton's Crescent and Cross, and other well-known wanderings as good seconds. The keynote of them all is to be found, we take it, in the picture of a highly educated and refined Englishman holding his own in surroundings however wild, and amongst all companies, from learned pundits to cow boys and Chinamen. The wanderer must show himself "able to hold up his end," as they phrase it in Manitoba, in a free fight or an argument on free-will; and he must do it quietly, and without swagger, and with some artistic and humorous appreciation of the strange conditions in which he finds himself. These granted, he is sure of wide appreciation by the reading public at home, which we look for confidently for Mr. Roberts.—The Spectator.

It is impossible to say honestly that Mrs. Simpson's Madame Mohl seems to be a different person from Miss O'Meara's. In point of eccentricity there is not much to choose between a lady who sits on the mantel-piece and a lady who, teste Mrs. Simpson, at the age of eighty-six was seen on the terrace at Bournemouth "dancing and curtsying and figuring away to the sound of a German band." We think we can see very much the same personage in each, though, as has been said, the one writer naturally gives the outside, and, at first sight, striking presentment, the other the intus et in cute analysis and description. That the present is by far the fullest and most authentic portrait is, of course, unquestionable, even if we put aside the letters with which the book is richly stored.—The Athenæum.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JULY 9, 1887.

Returned at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class matter.

Sometimes I think it abominable, fanciful stuff, and then I think it's very good. I have lent it to a friend, and am quite quaking to hear what she says, and yet I'm such a goose that I put off sending for it because I know if she thinks it stuff I shall not have the power to write another line. It takes away one's animal spirits — did you never find that? I do nothing without my animal spirits. I can't get off my chair when I am bereaved of them, and I can't understand how some people live on in a sort of routine without seeming to like or dislike living.

— MADAME MOUL.

MRS. JACKSON'S GRAVE.

MISS WOOLSEY — there is but one Miss Woolsey, "Susan Coolidge" — has gone to Colorado Springs. She is a pilgrim to the shrine of Helen Hunt Jackson, whose name overhangs that spot as really though not as visibly as the snowy summit of Pike's Peak a dozen miles away. Colorado Springs was Mrs. Jackson's home the last years of her life. It is a handsome and interesting town, lying just where the ocean-like level of the great plains breaks into foot hills and dashes in a spray of green against the steep face of the Rocky Mountains. The town rides on the prairie billows five miles out from the mouth of a cañon in which nestles the Swiss-like watering place of Manitou, with its springs of iron and soda, and beside which Pike's Peak stands forever sentinel. Over all plays a clear air and brilliant sunshine in which Colorado has no rival.

Mrs. Jackson loved these plains and mountains and this translucent atmosphere; and she loved above most else an almost inaccessible glen known as Cheyenne Cañon, wild with craggy heights and tumbling waterfalls, opening into the mountains a little to the south of Manitou. She had a favorite seat here high up on the mountain side, and here it was her wish to be buried. Here her body lies, amidst the solitude and grandeur, as in an eagle's nest, overlooking the distant town and far-reaching plains, too remote and difficult of access except for the adventurous and resolute few. It is the characteristic terminal point of a characteristic life.

Is it the grave of "Saxe Holm?"

A NEW PUBLIC LIBRARY.

NEXT to gifts for strictly religious or eleemosynary objects it is doubtful if any public benefactions are so fruitful in good as the founding of libraries for popular use. It is pleasant to note the frequency with which the generosity of rich men is finding expression in this form. New England is beginning to be dotted with town and village libraries, memorial offerings or otherwise on the part of individuals or families who have prospered in the prosperity of their communities. The Nevins Library at Methuen, Massachusetts, whose fine catalogue we recently reviewed, and the Clapp Library at Belchertown, dedicated last week with an address by Rev. Dr. Storrs of Brooklyn, are late conspicuous examples under this head, and now the city of Cambridge, in the same State, is to be endowed with a similar treasure.

For a town of the age and wealth and cultivation of Cambridge, its destitution of any sort of public library worthy of the name has been marked and discreditable. Doubtless the presence of the College Library with some privileges of access enjoyed by the citizens, and the proximity of the Athenæum and Public Libraries of Boston, has met in a measure the common want. But not wholly so; and that a city of 60,000 inhabitants, the second wealthiest city in the Commonwealth in proportion to its population, should have nothing better than a collection of 18,000 volumes housed in second or third rate quarters, has long been one of the limitations to Cambridge's title to fame.

Mr. Frederick H. Rindge, not now a resident of the city, has tendered to it the gift of a fine lot of ground and the erection of a suitable building, conditioned upon certain details which have been cordially accepted by the city government, and a new Public Library it is to have. If some one else would supplement this $100,000 gift with another of equal amount as a book fund, the community would be well provided.

We commend such liberal examples to the attention of the money-makers in the growing towns of the great West. Despite what some of the publishers seem to be fearing, the public libraries of the country alone will not let the book trade die; our public libraries are to carry forward the education of the people from the point where the public schools leave it; in them, with our schools, our churches, and our press, lie the great controlling moral forces of the future.

THE CASE OF THE METLAKAHTLANS.

PUBLIC attention ought to be called by every possible means to the case of the Metlakahtlans, as stated by Mr. Wellcome in his book reviewed on another page. It is an ex-parte statement, of course, and final judgment might properly be reserved until the other side were heard from, especially as to any personal matters between Mr. Duncan, the missionary founder of the colony, and the Bishop of New Caledonia. But leaving personal matters for a later verdict, there would seem to be no room for question as to the general merits of the case, either the right of these converted and civilized Indians to elect their own forms of religious government and worship, or the injustice of any policy of coercion towards them, or the expediency of their removal across the border to Alaska, or the propriety of the United States rendering them assistance in so doing. Here is an opportunity to plant a first-class Christian native colony in Alaska, a colony numerous, thoroughly organized, and alive with many profitable industries, and that is precisely the sort of seed which needs to be sown in Alaska. We hope the Indian Commissioners and other authorities at Washington will see their way clear to receive these oppressed Indian neighbors and give them a refuge on our soil. If Mr. Wellcome's book accomplishes this result, it will be one of the most truly fruitful books of the season.

. The opinions of so intelligent and sagacious a publisher as Mr. Henry Holt, upon the decay of the book-buying habit, which we welcome to a place in another column, are entitled to great weight. Undoubtedly the growth of periodical literature, the multiplication of cheap libraries, and now last but not least the postal provision whereby the latter can be sent through the mails in serial form, have had some effect on the publication of books. On the other hand is not the growth of village and town libraries having an effect in the other direction? After all a considerable cure for present evils to the book-trade, and to authorship as well, it may be added, would come with a good international copyright law. We wish Congress had moral force enough to enact a law extending copyright privileges to foreign authors, without waiting for reciprocity. To do good hoping for nothing again is a law for individuals; why not for nations?

. A "Walt Whitman Society" is talked of among the admirers of that much discussed poet, not so much for the immediate promotion of any scheme for his pecuniary easement, as for the collection and preservation of Whitman literature, the cultivation of interest in and knowledge of his writings, and the general building up of a cult on the Browning pattern. A Mr. Hartmann of Philadelphia is prominent in the movement, and the Boston Advertiser is one of the papers extending to it a warm right hand. "There must be no question in the mind of any sane critic," pronounces the Advertiser, "that Walt Whitman, at his best, is grandly and truly poetical — a great seer-bard." So?

. A new honorary degree has made its appearance this year at two of the colleges. "D.L." are its cabalistic initials, and "Doctor of Letters" its force in full. Our Shakespearean editor, Mr. Rolfe, receives this decoration at the hands of the University of Vermont, and Editor H. M. Alden of Harper's Magazine from the hands of Williams. Both of these accomplished gentlemen have been Doctors of Literature in the best sense for many years.

Dying, as Marlowe did, ere he had completed his thirtieth year, it was impossible that his works should exhibit the qualities which distinguish the writings of men of mature age composed in the most advanced period of dramatic art. Marlowe had almost everything to teach to his successors, and little of importance to learn from his predecessors or contemporaries. Yet it is hardly too much to say that in masterly delineation of exceptional and, it must also be owned, somewhat repulsive types of character — souls completely absorbed by one master passion, or devoted, without possibility of redemption, to the service of evil — in melodious, massive, and stately blank verse, in affluence of poetic imagery, in combined purity and splendor of diction, in vigor and breadth of conception, in fire and intensity, in elevation though not in subtlety of thought, in rapturous expression of devotion to ideal beauty in all its forms, and in the portrayal of scenes of tragic terror and pathos, Marlowe's best plays are unrivaled by those of any of his successors, Shakespeare alone excepted. — Spectator.

World Biographies.

Arlo Bates. Mr. Arlo Bates, whose latest novel, A Lad's Love, is reviewed in another column, belongs in the rank of young American authors, having been born as late as 1850. The day of his birth was the 16th of December, and the place East Machias, Maine, where also he fitted for college; and having taught for several years he graduated at Bowdoin College in 1876. He married Sept. 5, 1882, Miss Harriet L. Vose, "Eleanor Putnam," who died March 13, 1886, leaving one son. In his senior year at Bowdoin Mr. Bates edited the Bowdoin Orient, and coming to Boston in the fall of his graduating year, joined the obscure company of would-be literarians, and resolutely set out by patient labor to make for himself a place. He has made it. For a couple of years (1878-'9) he edited The Broadside, a politico-eclectic sheet, writing also occasionally for the magazines. In 1880 he took the editorial chair of the Sunday Courier, which he still holds. Besides his regular journalistic work he has contributed to the Boston Advertiser, Providence Journal (as regular correspondent) and Literary World, doing for the latter at one time a column called "A Bookworm's Waymarks;" also to the Century, Lippincott's, Scribner's, Wide Awake, Outing, St. Nicholas, and others among the magazines. Mr. Bates's first book, we have reason to suspect, was Patty's Perversities (1881) in the anonymous "Round Robin Series;" his other volumes thus far being Mr. Jacobs (1883), a parody which ran through eight editions, The Pagans (1884), A Wheel of Fire (1885), Berries of the Brier (1886) — a book of poems, Sonnets in Shadow (1887), and A Lad's Love (1887). This is certainly a creditable list in length, and there is much in it creditable in quality. The author of A Lad's Love, to say nothing of any of its companion pieces, is capable of work of a very high grade in fiction, and that we shall have such from Mr. Bates as his powers mature we cannot question. In addition to these works Mr. Bates has printed in the Courier two serial stories, "Mona and Hilo" and "The Ties of Blood," neither of which has been put into book form. In 1886 he edited Old Salem, a book left unfinished by his wife at her death, a fragment of great promise. It is an example of what we must think to be the not uncommon perversity of genius that Mr. Bates is fonder of The Pagans than of any other of his literary progeny, and attributes the unfavorable criticism it has encountered to a misunderstanding of its purport. In many ways Mr. Bates's career is representative and in all ways interesting and encouraging to our younger authors. It shows how talent, industry, and patience will tell. Mr. Bates's ideals are obviously high, and it cannot be said that he has ever aimed at mere popularity. Conscientious, independent, strengthened by discipline, loving his work more for its own sake than for its reward, he is destined to do well; and should he follow the lines laid down in his best work for ten or twenty years it may be predicted with a great degree of confidence that he will rise to a high place among the writers of American fiction.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Decay of the Book-Buying Habit.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

In your last issue you did me the honor to criticize an abstract which appeared in "The Writer" of a minor portion of my recent lecture at Yale. That abstract made me appear to attribute the great falling off in the sale of books mainly to the increase in the sale of periodicals.

As you have thought this apparent position worthy of criticism, I must beg you to print the following extracts from the lecture, which indicate what my real position is:

But while the periodicals do not a little account for the fact that, relatively to the increase of population, the sale of books is falling off, the causes that have produced the periodicals have been working too long to account for the remarkable falling off in the past ten years. . . . Ten years ago there was a book-buying habit. . . . The favorite dissipation of many a substantial citizen, even in out-of-the-way places, was to drop into the bookstore of an evening, look over the stock, and take home some book in a shape that would be a permanent possession in the family. Now most of those bookstores no longer exist, at least as bookstores. They are toy shops and ice cream saloons with piles of seaside libraries in one corner, and the substantial citizen, instead of taking home an occasional volume of Irving or Emerson or Macaulay, or even of Timothy Titcomb or the Country Parson . . . takes home a toy, or a pound of candy or a pamphlet copy of the chances are even, some minor English author, who, if he had had to be reprinted in a book, would not have been considered worth reprinting at all. . . . Before these cheap libraries appeared only such books were published as for some reason could be expected to pay author as well as publisher. But the libraries have not confined themselves to such books, but have in addition flooded the country with stuff that under healthy conditions would not justify reprinting, and that is undoubtedly published in England at the authors' expense by hack publishers. . . . The reason for this is, that the series must appear regularly like a magazine. Unless it does, it is not entitled to cheap postage, and it will disappoint its customers. Nothing is more fatal to a periodical publication of any kind than irregularity of appearance. . . . So these cheap series, to keep up regular and rapid publication, at times when good authors were infertile, have had to fill in with poor ones, and even with forgotten ones. . . . And all this, of course, is in competition with authors of merit — authors prepared to instruct on living questions, and above all, authors prepared to make their themes our own society's needs and hopes.

The result of all this, I claim, has been a great diminution, outside of this trash, in the reading habit.

I also claim that the habit of buying books in the cheap editions which pay no royalty to authors has destroyed not only much of the habit of buying the same books in substantial editions which do pay royalties, but also much of the habit of buying any substantial books.

The detailed reasons for these claims I went over very carefully in the lecture referred to, but will not trouble you further with them now.

HENRY HOLT.

New York, June 22, 1887.

The Dialect in Miss Murfree's Stories.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

Now that it is the fashion for authors to turn upon their critics and confront them — even if they cannot confute them — I am emboldened to contribute to the cause my morsel of superior dissent. Although I am burdened with no personal grievance, I have long felt that I should like, quite regardless of the possible consequences to my personal safety, to disagree fiercely with those reviewers who find fault with the dialect of Miss Murfree's admirable stories. For a half-score years it was my fortune to hear this dialect spoken, and I believe that I am competent to testify to the wonderful accuracy of that author's reproduction. I have never been able to detect in this lady's art anything that is not in perfect accord with the most scrupulous fidelity to nature. Furthermore, this peculiar dialect (greatly enriched by the accretion of certain unmistakable Western idioms) is in use today in a few remote settlements in Missouri and Kansas; and, as far as I am able to discover, this uncouth though not unmusical speech is spoken by the descendants of émigrés from the old North State and East Tennessee. I am acquainted with several families living in the Kansas Valley whose domestic conversation is carried on in a fashion almost identical with that of Mrs. Cayce and Mink Lovey; abroad it is somewhat modified, especially by the younger members of the household. After a thorough study of the dialect in her stories, I am unable to find anything which in the slightest degree indicates that Miss Murfree has ever sacrificed nature to art, or that her veneration for the former is a whit less real than her appreciation of the latter.

GEORGE H. PICARD.

New York, June 25, 1887.

HOME CLUB STUDY.

THE intelligent work of home circles or clubs is a factor not to be overlooked in estimating the literary development of the times. My own experience in this line of work has been so pleasant, and, judging from results, so helpful, that I would like to add to what I told the readers of the Literary World some time since a brief outline of what another club under my care has since done. I do this simply as a help or suggestion for any one desirous of giving literary aid to young people around them.

This kind of work is especially desirable in places remote from literary centers. There is scarcely a well-to-do town in which there are not one or more families containing some member, who, through special advantages of study, travel, and leisure, is well adapted to take up gratuitously and lovingly just such a work. Such clubs could become literary centers for any town, and supplement the labors of church and school.

After accepting the leadership of the club above referred to, the first question asked was "What shall we study?" A recent reading of Edmund Clarence Stedman's Poets of America having stimulated my mind anew with the thought of our own country's literature, I immediately suggested that as a good basis for a study of American literature; for it was catholic in spirit, rich in learning and suggestion, fair in criticism, and hopeful in outlook. This being finally decided upon, a request was made that each member of the club—composed of young men as well as young women—should own the book and read carefully, before the first regular gathering, the opening chapter. This being done, the first meeting was the occasion of an intelligent discussion of early and recent conditions of American poetry. The next chapter, "The Growth of the American School," occupied several evenings and could easily have had more. All the books and poets referred to were examined and their chief gems read aloud at the meetings. Professor Moses Coit Tyler's History of American Literature was found to be invaluable. Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song, and Grinnold and Duyckinck's Compilations were also helpful. The lyrics of the poet of the Revolution, Philip Freneau, were especially noted. Drake's "Culprit Fay" added its dainty, unique charm.

This good study of the foundation of American literature—the extent of the field covered can only be judged by a perusal of the chapter—opened the way for a more intelligent appreciation of the next chapter on William Cullen Bryant. At this meeting each member read one or more selections, previously chosen from Bryant's works, to which he added any facts concerning them he had been able to learn, and also his own criticism. A look at the poet's life as well as at pictures representing different stages of his career gave added interest. Mr. Stedman's essay, having been first carefully read in the privacy of home, was then discussed as a whole. The next chapter on John Greenleaf Whittier was treated in about the same manner, with an addition of some pleasant reminiscences. Three evenings were devoted to Ralph Waldo Emerson; one to him as a poet and two to him as an essayist, when portions of his best essays were read and commented on. These evenings were, perhaps, to some, the most profitable of the whole; for to the young mind opening to truth, an inspiring, judicious lover of Emerson can be most truly helpful. The following "Longfellow evening" brought out such a general discussion of him and of Stedman's essay that, I doubt not, Stedman himself, critic as he is, would have found pleasure in hearing it.

The meeting on Edgar Allan Poe was perhaps the most novel of all, for he seemed to be the least known. After a fair study, and what seemed to me a just discriminative praise of Poe, the club was the better prepared for Oliver Wendell Holmes. I think none of the authors studied had so real a personality for the members as he. Two evenings were devoted to Mr. Lowell; the first as poet, when portions of the Biglow Papers with other chief poems were read and discussed, and the second as essayist, when his peculiar and strong characteristics were dwelt upon.

The chapter on Walt Whitman was the best and to many the first real introduction to this poet they had received. The chief poems to which Stedman refers were read and commented upon by the leader; also selections from other essays on the man and his work. Biographical facts from his Specimen Days and Collect were told to portray the poet's grand life among the soldiers during the civil war. I think I may say with all propriety that these young people could not have received a more pleasant introduction to this elemental force in our American literature.

Bayard Taylor received two evenings' attention. Through considerable reading of his works between these meetings, as well as by a study of his most interesting biography, much general information, unique selections from both poems and prose, and good criticism were added to the thoughts about him which Stedman had inspired.

The last chapter on "The Outlook" brought the club's meetings to a close with a general conversation upon the present condition of our literary affairs, in which it was gratifying to see the intellectual progress the members had gained from their study of the past. A feeling of gratitude was expressed for Mr. Stedman's help. I am sure he would be gratified could he see the members' books marked with suitable references for further study; and this besides note-books, containing, among other appropriate matter, many of the poems to which he refers, especially those of the earlier and less familiar poets.

I think he would smile at the enthusiasm of one of the young ladies who, in pasting in her book pictures of the chief poets mentioned, has given him the place of honor, since he is the "best introducer" she ever knew. She has not forgotten how he introduced her to the Victorian Poets. She joins with all the club in wishing him health and long life for further creative and "introducing" work.

ELIZABETH PORTER GOULD.

Chelsea, Mass.

MINOR FICTION.

Daniele Cortis. Translated from the Italian of Antonio Fogazzaro, by Mrs. I. R. Tilton. [Henry Holt & Co. 30c.] Readers of current fiction, who like a novel to be something more than a surface representation of social manners and customs, have a treat before them in Daniele Cortis, which goes deep into some of the problems of existence, and offers solutions on the side of truth and righteousness. Daniele Cortis is an Italian statesman, progressive in his ideas, noble in all the traits of a forcible, dynamic personality. He loves his cousin, Elena, who has married, to please her family, the Baron Di Santa Giulia, a libertine and a gambler; and Elena, who is leading a life of torture, turns to Cortis for the companionship of mind she can find nowhere else. But tried and tempted as she is by evil circumstances, she remains true to her husband, and when she learns that he is on the verge of public disgrace and about to commit suicide, she goes to him, dissuades him, brute as he is, from his purpose, and promises to leave the country with him if he so desires. Then she goes back to her uncle's villa, where Cortis, convalescent from a serious illness, is staying, and the two are much together. Nothing could be finer than the chapters describing this period, when Elena is expecting every moment the summons calling her to join her husband, and, in converse with Cortis, gains the strength she so sorely needs. At length the summons comes, and on hearing of it Cortis utters only the word "farewell." Elena goes away with her husband into exile, and Cortis returns to Rome to engage once more in political affairs. The characters are all finely drawn, and the interest grows with a constantly increasing intensity to the very end.

Behind the Blue Ridge. A Homely Narrative. By Frances Courtenay Baylor. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] Miss Baylor has given us a brilliant picture of a mountain hamlet in Virginia during the war period, the war itself being heard only in faint echoes in that remote spot, although it has its influence on the destiny of several characters. The story is chiefly concerned with John Shore, an honest, stalwart young fellow who marries the prettiest girl on the mountain and is soon left a widower. He makes over his house and lands and the care of his child to a neighbor and goes away to seek his fortune elsewhere. The news of Virginia's secession calls him home and he goes out to fight for four years. Then he is back again to find his son married to a termagant, and he obliged to play the part of Lear to his unkind step-daughter's persecutions. A foster son, Willy, is his only sympathetic companion, and on this lad the old man bestows all his affection. He is weak and given to drink, and once when he is intrusted with some of "Matilda's money" to put in the bank he gets drunk and it is stolen from him. Driven to desperation by the taunts of his step-daughter, he takes his own life. Miss Baylor has rendered the character with a good deal of power, and she depicts the characteristics of mountain life with a sure and faithful hand. A rustic picnic, a wedding, and other merry-makings afford ample scope for the author's descriptive skill and talent for humorous delineation. Jake White, the verbose searcher for "vital religion," seems to us somewhat overdrawn, and we should not wonder if he were modeled after Dickens's "shepherd." Miss Baylor has also the Dickens way of animating inanimate objects and of personifying roads, chimneys, valleys, and so on—a way which was not wholly defensible when employed by Dickens and which certainly cannot be justified in any imitation. But Behind the Blue Ridge is a capital novel, strong, vivid, well written and full of humor of a very gratifying kind.

Drone's Honey. By Sophie May. [Lee & Shepard. $1.50.] Miss Clarke takes as the motto of this novel a quotation from Plato's Republic: "When a young man has tasted drone's honey . . . then he returns unto the country of the lotus-eaters." It is Ben Kirke, a healthy young fellow standing six feet two in his boots, who has tasted drone's honey and is leading an idle, luxurious existence under the thin disguise of studying law. A chance occurrence takes him up to a sleepy Maine village, where he encounters Evelyn Searle, a blonde young woman of the angelic type. By mistake Evelyn takes atropine and Ben saves her life by the use of oxygen. He declares his love on the eve of his departure and is to have his answer in a year. In spite of family opposition he enters upon the career of a physician and is involved in a charge of forgery. This turns out to be false, but Evelyn hears of it and writes to him that all is over between them. After a time he comes East with documents demonstrating his innocence, with what result the reader may imagine. Miss Clarke's characters are not very clearly drawn, for she depends for the most part on the descriptive method, and her assertions concerning the qualities of this and that person are not always embodied in reported speech or action. Still the story is written in a smooth, agreeable style, it is serious and elevated in purpose, and it is carried without any break to a natural conclusion. It seems hardly credible that a woman such as Evelyn Searle is represented to be should sever her relations with a man like Ben Kirke simply on the strength of a newspaper "item," without making any effort to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charge; but of course there is no accounting for feminine vagaries, and possibly Miss Clarke knows best.

Who is John Noman? By Charles Henry Beckett. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] There is a little of everything in Mr. Beckett's novel—an "old man of the mountains;" a youth of mysterious lineage; a beautiful girl who is in the end discovered to be an English countess; a Yankee storekeeper; three or four young men of fashion; a gay adventuress; a group of anarchists; an apostle of Labor; a human fiend who murders people in sleeping cars and gets up dynamite explosions which alter most of the natural features of the State of New Jersey; a wonderful detective; a great fortune awaiting claimants—these are the more noteworthy elements which Mr. Beckett commingles in a way to carry sorrow to the heart of Mr. H. Rider Haggard. Mr. Beckett, in spite of his sensationalism, is realistic when it comes to details, and he spares no pains to make his tale harmonize with conventional conditions. If it were not for occasional confusions in the plot the story would be enjoyable.

Dinah Mite. A Story for Today. By Brenda. [Thomas Whittaker. 90c.] Bridget Mite was a hard-working woman, the wife of a drunkard, Tom, and when she had to go to the infirmary on account of a bad leg, Tom was left to take of the baby, Dinah. He was sorely tempted to return to his evil ways, but went to a "party" which turned out to be a temperance meeting, and when the rector called for those who were willing to sign the pledge the baby held up its arm. So Tom signed for the baby's sake, and comfort came to the home of the Mites. The story is admirably written, without a trace of cant, and would do good if signing a pledge would make drunkards sober and industrious men.

"That Child." By the Author of "The Atelier du Lys." [Thomas Whittaker. $1.25.] This is a well written story of young people which older readers will find of interest. A little girl is the survivor of a railway accident and is taken as ward by Philippa Beaumont, who brings her up without much training. She is a wild creature, although noble hearted, and when Miss Philippa dies and is succeeded by Miss Priscilla, the two do not get on very well. Avie—so the girl is named—forms a friendship with the old antiquary, Simon Ashbury, who teaches her music. He gives his time to the writing of a history of his native town, and proposes to use his fortune in publishing the work; but just before his death he burns the precious manuscript and leaves his money to Avie. The characters, as one might expect from the authorship, are all skillfully drawn, and the account of a child's emotions and experiences is very faithful and very true.

The Bride of the Nile. A Romance. By Georg Ebers. In Two Volumes, [W. S. Gottsberger. $1.50.] Prof. Ebers's latest romance is concerned with Egypt in the seventh century,

A. D.—a comparatively modern date for him—after the country had been conquered by the followers of Mohammed. So late as this time there survived the superstition that when the Nile was very late in rising a virgin must be devoted to the sacred waters. The learning which is rather oppressive in Ebers's earlier historical novels is here confined to the preface, almost no archaeological notes encumber the pages, and the narrative has full swing. When the Germans have written novels a hundred years longer they will probably have outgrown the somewhat chastened New York Ledger style in which Ebers and his compeers usually write. But meanwhile here, as in Germany, there must be many readers for whom this kind of novel is just the kind they like.

MINOR NOTICES.

"GREAT WRITERS." Edited by Eric S. Robertson. Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. By Hall Caine. Life of Charles Dickens. By Frank T. Marzials. Life of Dante Gabriel Rossetti. By Joseph Knight. London: Walter Scott. Each 1s. New York: Imported by Thomas Whittaker.

These modest books are the pioneers of a new series, which bids fair to be almost a repetition of the "English Men of Letters Series" on a smaller scale. Of English editorship, authorship, and manufacture, they are imported for American readers by Mr. Whittaker of New York, to whom thanks are due for bringing such excellent and cheap books within our reach. It is apparent from these three lives of Coleridge, Dickens, and Rossetti that the series of "Great Writers" will treat its subjects more descriptively and biographically, a little less critically, and rather more compactly than the "English Men of Letters Series." They are to be written by younger, though not necessarily less skillful, men, and they should appeal to a wider circle of readers. The design is commendable, and the execution promises to be good. The admirers of Coleridge will hardly concede that Mr. Hall Caine brings out his portrait in its full strength, though he gives a distinct and impressive picture, while not always writing in the best taste. Towards Coleridge's infirmities, and towards some of the scandalous charges against him, his tone is defensive, while he passes over his separation from his wife with an easy movement.

The reputation of Mr. Marzials's sketch of Dickens has preceded it to this country, and it is undoubtedly the best summary of the great novelist's character and life accessible. We like especially the tone in which Mr. Marzials speaks of Dickens's failings, and of his separation from his wife, kindly but firmly condemnatory. And, despite recent remarks in an American magazine, we presume there are few persons who will not concur with the feeling expressed in his closing words:

As I strolled through the abbey this last Christmas Eve I found his grave, and his grave alone, made gay with the season's hollies. "Lord, keep my memory green,"—in another sense than he used the words, that prayer is answered. And of the future what shall we say? His fame had a brilliant day while he lived; it has a brilliant day now. Will it fade into twilight, without even an afterglow; will it pass altogether into the night of oblivion? I cannot think so. The vitality of Dickens's works is singularly great. They are all a-throb, as it were, with hot human blood. They are popular in the highest sense because their appeal is universal, to the uneducated as well as the educated. The humour is superb, and most of it, so far as we can judge, of no ephemeral kind. The pathos is more questionable, but that too, at its simplest and best—and especially where the humour is shot with it—is worthy of a better epithet than excellent. It is supremely touching. Imagination, fancy, wit, eloquence, the keenest observation, the most strenuous endeavor to reach the highest artistic excellence, the largest kindness—all these he brought to his life-work. And that work, as I think, will live, I had almost dared to prophesy, forever. Of course fashions change. Of course no writer of fiction, writing for his own little day, can permanently meet the needs of all after times. Some loss of immediate vital interest is inevitable. Nevertheless, in Dickens's case, all will not die. Half a century, a century hence, he will still be read; not perhaps as he was read when his words flashed upon the world in their first glory and freshness, nor as he is read now in the noon of his fame. But he will be read much more than we read the novelists of the last century—be read as much, shall I say, as we still read Scott. And so long as he is read there will be one gentle and humanizing influence the more at work among men.

Mr. Knight's subject, in the third number of this series, has the charm of freshness, comparatively little being known of Dante Rossetti, either as painter or poet. Mr. Knight deals with him chiefly as poet, and his story is full of interest, romantic interest, on whatever side you take it. His Italian origin, his connection with the Pre-Raphaelite movement, his friendships in art and literature, his marriage of his model, her early death, and his burial of his poems in her coffin—these, with a hundred other novelties of incident, make up a singular biography, which Mr. Knight has related well. A valuable feature of each of these books is the full bibliography with which it is provided.

Connecticut. A Study of a Commonwealth Democracy. By Alexander Johnston. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] Prof. Johnston's contribution to the series of "American Commonwealths" is one of the ablest volumes that have yet appeared in it. He devotes himself mainly, though not exclusively, to the history of the political development, for he finds that Connecticut has had an immense influence on the constitutions of other and later-founded States and of the nation itself.

It is on the banks of the Connecticut, under the mighty preaching of Thomas Hooker and in the constitution to which he gave life, if not form, that we draw the first breath of that atmosphere which is now so familiar to us. The birthplace of American democracy is Hartford.

Here, too, was a more complete independence of the various towns, which yet, by their federation, gave rise to the "Connecticut proposal" in the convention that framed the Federal Constitution. The equal representation of the States in the national Senate is a Connecticut idea. While we are not prepared, as residents of Massachusetts, to admit all the points of superiority over the Puritan commonwealth which Prof. Johnston claims, we have found his volume a most instructive and enlightening chapter in American politics. The industrial development of the Nutmeg State receives full attention, and the whole volume has a symmetry and proportion the lack of which we were obliged to notice in the preceding volume of the series.

My Creed. By M. J. Savage. [Geo. H. Ellis. $1.00.] Like most of Rev. Mr. Savage's previous volumes this book is a collection of sermons of a season, projected and delivered according to a very sensible plan, as a series.

The people who do this preacher the injustice of supposing that he believes nothing in particular will find, if they read these robust discourses, that he is, on the contrary, a very vigorous believer. Many will be surprised at the extent to which, in the last discourse in the volume, he even accepts the so-called disclosures of Spiritism, or Spiritualism, as an argument for immortality. It may be that some law of mental compensation causes Rev. Mr. Savage, with all his extreme and often misplaced insistence upon scientific method, to believe over-much in this direction, to balance a lack of emphasis on some other realities of religion than immortality!

A third volume is out in the beautiful edition of The Complete Works of Franklin. It includes about one hundred and twenty letters, mostly private, ranging in date from 1758 to 1766. Those on political affairs are numerous, but there are not a few that treat on homelier matters of domestic life, or on those scientific topics in which Franklin took so lively an interest. How this old philosopher, to whom "strata of the earth," "producing cold by evaporation," "saltiness of sea water," and "best mediums of conveying sound," were congenial themes, would have revelled in the times we live in! [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.]

The re-issue of old novels, from existing plates, in compact and cheap form, and generally in paper covers, is a constant feature of the book trade. We have this week, in this style, Mary J. Holmes's 'Lena Rivers [Dillingham. 25c.], a descendant from the last generation; Miss Bradton's The One Thing Needful [Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.], in type which is sure to try the eyes of most readers; and Mr. Isaac Henderson's The Prelate [Ticknor & Co. 50c.], in dress very like the Riverside Paper Series.

Rand, McNally & Co. are rapidly covering the country with their Pocket Maps and Shippers' Guide, State by State, in folded form. Maps of Colorado, Florida, Connecticut, Arkansas, Indian Territory, Louisiana, and Utah, have lately come to hand; to which may be added one of British Columbia. These maps show the railroads, are printed in colors, are generally indexed, and contain much commercial and statistical information. They are well planned. Their execution is not uniform. But they serve their purpose well. Their prices range from 25c. up. [Chicago: Rand, McNally & Co.]

From Mr. Nathan Sheppard, of whose previous books, in considerable variety, we have had occasion to speak, now comes a summer "skit" in paper covers with good illustrations, entitled Saratoga Chips and Carlsbad Wafers. It is a very lively book indeed, descriptive of life at these two great watering places, American and German. Mr. Sheppard's humor is sometimes forced, and now and then runs into slang, coarseness, and vulgarity, but you cannot help laughing at his odd way of putting things, his queer comparisons and contrasts, and his terse and epigrammatic characterization. Despite what is silly and flat in it, for the amusement of an idle hour one may go farther and fare worse than to read this book. [Funk & Wagnalls.]

—A new translation of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables has been made for T. Y. Crowell & Co. by Miss I. F. Hapgood, and it will be published soon in a handsome library edition of five volumes, printed in excellent style, and with 160 illustrations. There is no good, moderately expensive edition of Les Misérables in English, and this new translation is therefore the result of an urgent demand. The work will also be issued in single volume form.

PASSING MENTION.

Cosette, Deuxième Partie of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables, in its original French text, has reached us from the press of Mr. W. R. Jenkins of New York, fresh in its delightful paper and type, uncut leaves, and paper covers. The type is of that same beautiful font of which we have had occasion to speak elsewhere.

Mr. Jenkins is also the publisher, in equally good typography and red cloth, of a Method Practical and Natural for the study of the Italian language, prepared especially for the use of American students by Professor Comba of the Brooklyn Latin School. The work is fitted to mature minds, but its contents are carefully graded into progressive steps.

The first and seventh books of Thucydides have been added to the "College Series of Greek Authors," the late Professor C. D. Morris editing the former, and Professor C. F. Smith the latter volume. The text is that of Classen's edition. The English notes are copious. [Ginn, Heath & Co.]

Professor James H. Carlisle of Wofford College, S. C., has edited for the "Chautauqua Library" Dr. Johnson's Memoir of Roger Ascham and selections from Dean Stanley's Life of Dr. Arnold, making of the two one small book of 252 pages. [Chautauqua Press.]

The Beecher Memorial, edited by Mr. Edward W. Bok of Brooklyn, is a thin 8vo (pp. 110) made up of a large number of admiring tributes to his memory, handed in at the editor's request, by leading public men and women in this country and in England. Dr. Holmes heads the procession, and Mr. Gladstone, Whittier, the Duke of Argyll, Mr. Curtis, Col. Ingersoll, Dr. McGlynn, and Henry George are among those who walk in it. There is a lithographic portrait of the famous preacher. Such flowers of encomium heaped upon his grave doubtless have efficacy on family feeling, but the idea of the book is artificial. [Brooklyn: Privately Printed.]

Macmillan & Co. have issued a new edition, two volumes in one, revised and amended by Charles Eliot Norton, of the famous Carlyle's Reminiscences, which, as edited by Mr. Froude, first appeared in 1881. Mr. Froude's abuse of his trust has been shown. Mr. Norton has now corrected the text according to Carlyle's MS. and softened it by some trifling omissions of unfortunate personalities. A map of Dumfriesshire is a happy thought of the publishers. This should be accepted as the standard edition of the work. [$2.50.]

Professor Alexander Bain's English Composition and Rhetoric and the same author's accompanying book On Teaching English are not to be confounded. The first-named book is an old one remodeled after twenty years of use, and is a text-book on principles and practice. The second-named is an auxiliary thereto, entering more into the philosophy of the subject, into the intellectual qualities and differences of style. The former is a grammar of composition; the latter a treatise thereupon. A feature of both books is their profuse illustration, by means of citations, from a wide range of English literature. [D. Appleton & Co.]

The Fitz-Boodle Papers, Etc., Etc., have appeared in Smith, Elder & Co.'s Pocket Edition of Thackeray, the sole objection to which is the fineness of the type. In every other respect it is desirable and singularly attractive. [50c.]

Mr. Charles A. O'Neill has written a work of considerable research upon The American Electoral System, the object of which is to show up the evils of the present way of electing a President of the United States, whereby the smaller States enjoy a disproportionate share of power, and to argue in favor of a new system of presidential districts without regard to State lines. An interesting history of electoral processes and difficulties is given in detail. The evils of the present method are marked and recognized; of the need of a change there can be little question. The question is, with the power lodged where it now is can a change be effected? We commend Mr. O'Neill's enlightening paper to the attention of our younger publicists. [G. P. Putnam's Sons.]

The Fishery Question, which is now the source of a little international unpleasantness between the United States and the British Provinces in the East, is the subject of a clear and instructive monograph—and not a long one—by Mr. Charles Isham, which treats the whole history of events leading up to the present complications, and illustrates it helpfully by a map. Besides its intrinsic merit and serviceableness, this tract, prepared in the ordinary course of post-graduate study at Harvard College, well illustrates how the sons of that progressive institution are being taught to grapple with live issues. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.]

Mr. John F. Baker of the New York Bar is the author of a brief historical and critical essay on The Federal Constitution, which concludes by giving the text of that instrument itself and all its amendments, making a good help for that study of the document which is the duty of every citizen. The author writes patriotically. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.]

PERIODICALS.

Mr. Woodberry's ode, "My Country," in the Atlantic for July, is rather an impressive performance, although some parts of it are keyed to an emotional pitch that is beyond the author's compass and there is a good deal of exclamatory rhetoric which somehow rings false. Nevertheless it has several passages of obvious merit. Miss L. I. Guiney contributes a pleasant article on the water-ways of Portsmouth; Miss I. F. Hapgood tells us how the Russian censor has treated Count Tolstoi's later writings in an article which also reveals much of Count Tolstoi's sociological views; Miss Agnes Repplier describes as "The Decay of Sentiment" the modern indifference concerning literary productions as contrasted with the enthusiasm attending the first appearance of the masterpieces of Scott, Byron—or L. E. L. H. E. Scudder advocates the use of "American classics" in schools; W. C. Lawton presents a scholarly analysis of the "Alkestis" of Euripides; and Dr. Holmes continues the chronicle of his hundred days as a hunted lion in Europe.

A picturesque account of how a printed book is made stands at the head of Harper's for July, the author, Mr. Bowker, tracing in a readable résumé the whole history of book-making and illustrating from the papyri of ancient Egypt down to the present day. The article is a careful piece of condensed information. Captain King's article on cadet life at West Point is well written. Joseph Thomson makes an interesting study of a central Soudan town, Wurm, the residence of Umurn, King of the Soudanese Mussulmans. These three papers are all well illustrated, that of Dr. Thomson from photographs. The romantic features of the new South are represented in a light descriptive article by Rebecca Harding Davis, with charming illustrations by W. H. Gibson. Charles Dudley Warner writes of two Mexican cities, Morelia and Patzcuaro, whose salubrity and general characteristics he praises with proper reservations. Mr. Howells discusses books of adventure in the "Editor's Study," and carries Dan Maving through two or three chapters of domestic felicitation. Dr. Ely considers the future of corporations.

The physical proportions of the typical man are set forth in a scientific way by Dr. D. A. Sargent in the July Scribner's. Dr. Sargent contrasts the pure American type with others, and points out its defects. His method of measuring and recording bodily capacity ought to revolutionize the theory of physical training. The Thackeray letters — we have used up all our eulogistic adjectives concerning them — are this time dated mostly from Paris, and some of them are very frank expressions of the author's moods. Major Ropes gives us another batch of Napoleonic illustrations, including a fine engraving of the Millet miniature. A girl's life eighty years ago in Salem, Boston, and New York comes out clearly in the letters of Eliza Southgate Bowne, which are full of interest. The fiction of the number, noteworthy as usual for its variety and excellence, includes a dramatic story, "A Great Patience," by E. I. Stevenson, and the beginning of a novelette by H. H. Boyesen. W. C. Brownell writes appreciatively of the social instincts of the French.

Julia Magruder's novelette "At Anchor" in the July Lippincott's is a tame and colorless production. Far better, and indeed a very striking piece of fiction, is Amélie Rives's story of "The Farrier Lass o' Piping Peabworth," a conception worthy of Blackmore and worked out with a skill worthy of Mrs. Burnett. The garrulous old farrier who tells the tale is a capital character and he is depicted in a thoroughly dramatic manner. Lucy C. Lillie gossips about Mrs. Cleveland as acceptably as one could wish. Jane Ellis Joy suggests that domestic service must be made a classified, skilled occupation. There are two readable articles on social life at the University of Virginia, and on West Point in its relations to the army and the militia.

Prof. W. T. Harris has something to say concerning Henry George's mistake about land in the Forum for July. By the aid of a few useful statistics he shows that the ground rent in this country amounts to only one eighteenth of the total average earnings, or less than one half of the total taxation. In other words, if all the landed property in the United States were confiscated and the proceeds divided among the population it would add but $8 a year to the income of each inhabitant. David A. Poe urges that the manifest destiny of Canada is to be a part of her sister republic; Prof. Peabody, in a delightful article on books, ascribes great benefit to Webster's Spelling-Book; Grant Allen, taking the purely scientific point of view, maintains that life in the abstract has no more object than the breaking of a wave, but that in the concrete its object is the pursuit of happiness; Prof. Newman Smyth writes of the "humanizing" tendencies of Andover; Mary Parmele has a thoughtful article on relation as the ultimate truth; and the Rev. J. O. S. Huntington presents a terrifying picture of tenement-house morality.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Mr. Morgan and Verse-Tests in Shakspeare. It is difficult to argue with a man whose mind is built on different lines to one's own. But as there may be some folk in America whose faculties are of the same kind as those of intelligent people in England, I should like to say a few words to them about verse-tests. Supposing a Shakspeare student to have eyes and brains, and a power (which many folk have not) of appreciating the difference between the structure of different lines of verse, we say to him, "Treat Shakspeare's works as the geologist treats the earth's crust, as the comparative anatomist treats the animal creation, as the natural philosopher treats the world. Look on Shakspeare's plays and poems as the product of a mind working in successive periods; and see whether this mind's productions show any characteristic differences by which you can settle the order of their creation." Thus instructed, the Shakspeare student sets to work as Lyell did at the earth's crust, as Owen and Huxley did at fossil and modern bones, at birds and fishes, as Newton did at the phenomena of nature. The student compares the structure of the verse in (say) Love's Labour's Lost, Julius Caesar, and Winter's Tale. He finds an extraordinary difference between the general character of the lines in these plays. He then turns to the thought and knowledge of life shown in these dramas, and he recognises a like difference. Assuming that he has brains, he sees at once that Love's Labour's Lost is the earliest, most artificial, weakest, and most ryme- and quip-loaded play of the three, that Winter's Tale is far riper and later in material and mental qualities, and that Julius Caesar holds a middle place between them. The student then says "Metrical tests are evidently the easiest ones by which Shakspeare's works can be classified. I'll count how many ryme-lines there are in each of these three plays, how many run-on and how many stopt lines, how many double-endings, and weak-endings, how much doggerel, and so on." He does this, and, to take only the ryme points, he finds the proportion is Love's Labour's Lost 1,028 ryme to 579 blank, or 1 ryme to .56 blank.

Julius Caesar 32 ryme to 2,181 blank, or 1 to 68 blank.

Winter's Tale 0 ryme to 1,825 blank, or 1 to infinity.

He finds that weak and light endings hardly appear in the two earlier plays, while they are plentiful in the last, and that the other metrical tests, on the whole, coincide with these results. The student then proceeds to apply these verse-tests to the whole of Shakspeare's plays; and when he has done so, he puts them all into a trial-order. He next compares this internal metrical evidence with the other internal evidence of power, knowledge of life, change from simile to metaphor, weight of meaning, etc., and he finds, on the whole, that all these tests coincide in result with the metrical ones. He then tries them with the allusions to known events, etc., in the plays; and here again the prior results are confirmed; while the dates of publication are never earlier — though of course often later — than the dates arrived at by the metrical tests. He next tries a case like that of Julius Caesar with Antony and Cleopatra, which he knows ancient critics used to put close together because they were both Roman, and included Antony. He looks at his numberable of metrical tests, and it shows him at once how ridiculous the juxtaposition in time of the two plays is.

The student, having thus treated his phenomena, his subjects of study, Shakspeare's works, in a thoroughly scientific way, feels quite comfortable about his results. And when Mr. Morgan tells him "argument is not evidence," he answers "that depends on the hearer's brain-power, and whether the argument is based on duly observed and recorded facts." Also when Mr. Morgan lays down this astounding dictum as the law:

The chronology of Shakspeare as established by the verse-tests either conforms to the chronology established by the printer's dates and the copyright entries, or it does not. If it does, the verse-tests are superfluous. If it does not, THEN verse-tests are of no value unless corroborated by external and circumstantial evidence.

When, I say, Mr. Morgan seriously utters this astounding nonsense, the student answers: "Mr. Morgan, I really am not a born fool. You know, as well as I, that for more than half Shakspeare's plays we have neither copyright entries nor printer's dates, save the Folio of 1623, published seven years after Shakspeare's death. You know that for many plays we have neither external nor circumstantial evidence. You know that Shakspeare's works, like the Creator's and every great artist's, do carry with and on them the evidence of the succession of their creation, just as Beethoven's symphonies and Raphael's pictures do; and you know that this internal evidence is consistent with the external; you would not insult a geologist or comparative anatomist, or a musical or art critic, by telling him that his faithful observation and study of his Master's works could not get at (or near) the time-order of them, unless printed or 'circumstantial' evidence for it were forthcoming. Why then do you treat the careful Shakspeare student as a greater fool than the student of nature? The fact is, you have either never apprehended the nature of metrical and internal evidence in matters poetic, or you are verse-blind, as some folk are colour-blind, and others insensible to music. Given, intelligence and perception in a student, the value of the verse-tests being certain, must be appreciated by him. But if men will not work at these tests, but insist, instead, on going by 'authority,' as they are pleased to call it, that is, by setting up one of the English Woodenheads as their idol, and swearing by all he says, then of course verse-tests are worth nothing, because old Sawdust thinks so."

F. J. FURIVALL.

Middleton in the "Mermaid Series." The third volume in this cheap and excellent series is devoted to Thomas Middleton. It is edited by Mr. Havelock Ellis, whose good work on the Marlowe we have before commended, and the introduction is by Mr. Swinburne. The plays included are A Trick to Catch the Old One, The Changeling, A Chaste Maid in Cheapside, Women Beware Women, and The Spanish Gypsy. The first of these, though one of Middleton's earlier plays, is certainly one of his best. Of the second Leigh Hunt remarked: "There is one character of his (De Flores in The Changeling) which, for effect at once tragical, probable, and poetical, surpasses anything I know of in the drama of domestic life;" and Mr. Swinburne adds: "The praise is not a whit too high: the truth could not have been better said." The Chaste Maid, in which there is more humor than chastity, the latter critic characterizes as "a play of quite exceptional freedom and audacity, and certainly one of the drollest and liveliest that ever broke the bounds of propriety or shook the sides of merriment." The tragedy of Women Beware Women he regards as "full to overflowing of noble eloquence, of inventive resource and suggestive effect, of rhetorical affluence and theatrical ability." The "graceful tragi-comedy" of The Spanish Gypsy, in which, as in The Changeling, the dramatist had the coöperation of Rowley, "bears the stamp of Middleton's genius alike in the sentiment and the style" of its best portions; and "the vivid beauty of the dialogue is equal to the vivid interest of the situation, which makes the first act one of the most striking in any play of the time." In closing his essay Mr. Swinburne says of Middleton: "We are more than justified in asserting that a critic who denies him a high place among the poets of England must be not merely ignorant of the qualities which involve a right or confer a claim to this position, but incapable of curing his ignorance by any process of study." He is "a man worthy to hold his own beside all but the greatest of his age; and that age was the age of Shakespeare."

The volume, like its predecessors, is unexpurgated. It is difficult, indeed, to conceive how some of the plays could be thoroughly pruned in accordance with the stricter canons of modern taste without dismembering them almost past recognition.

As we mentioned in a former notice, Messrs. Scribner & Welford of New York are the American agents for this series.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Mr. George H. Putnam of G. P. Putnam's Sons, and Mr. Charles Scribner of Charles Scribner's Sons, were in London June 11.

—Late accounts locate Miss Harriet W. Preston in Italy, whence some time this month she may be expected to wend her way northward over the Alps and across France into Brittany, and so into England by September.

—Our English files bring us the much-to-be-regretted news of the death of Professor Spencer Baynes of London, whose chief eminence at this time was his place at the head of the present revision of the Encyclopædia Britannica, the first volume of which appeared as long ago as 1874. He was formerly professor in the University of St. Andrews, and was once an assistant of Sir William Hamilton at Edinburgh.

—We learn from the Athenæum that Mr. Froude is writing a book on his recent visit to the West Indies; that Mr. Archibald Forbes, the famous war correspondent, is painfully ill; that the Dublin house of Gill & Son is about to bring out A Handful of New Verses by John James Piatt; that the first volume of Mr. Clayden's work on Samuel Rogers, the poet, is in the press, with much new material of interest.

—We have the first number of The Boston Journal of Health, a monthly paper of 12 large pages devoted to popular instruction on sanitary and hygienic topics. Such a paper is capable of doing great good. It is a limitation upon the usefulness of this that there is no professional name behind it, although its editor is understood to be a regular and reputable physician of Boston. But many people will be wary of anonymous advice on this class of subjects. The Journal is well printed and bright looking, and this first number contains really a great deal of excellent reading matter.

—A series of articles on "The Poets and Prose Writers of the Wyoming Valley," by Prof. W. S. Monroe, which has been appearing in the Sunday Argus of Scranton, Pa., is now in press for publication in book form, though only a limited edition of 150 copies will be issued.

—We have received from Bancroft Brothers of San Francisco advance sheets of a treatise on West Coast Shells by Professor Josiah Keep of Mills College, California. The work contains about 180 illustrations, and is just ready for publication.

—The new "History Building" on Market Street, San Francisco, erecting by H. H. Bancroft as the headquarters of his great work on the Pacific States, will be one of the conspicuously handsome buildings of the city.

—Prof. W. G. Hale's address on The Aims and Methods of Classical Study, delivered before the New England Teachers' Association, is to be published by Ginn & Co.

—Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd, whose Cathedral Days is pleasantly remembered, has written a political brochure which Cassell & Co. are to publish. The book is in the form of a series of letters supposed to have been written by a Swedish nobleman on a visit to America in the twenty-first century, when Socialism has become in this country a stable form of government. The title is The Republic of the Future.

—Cupples & Hurd, who announce a large paper edition of Mrs. Winslow's Yesterdays with Actors, have ready a novel, The Monk's Wedding, translated from the German by Sarah H. Adams.

—A wide circle of readers and friends will hear with pain the news of the death of Mrs. Mary E. C. Wyeth, which took place at her home in La Villa, near Jacksonville, Florida, the last of May or very beginning of June. Mrs. Wyeth was a Christian writer of sweet and interesting character, and was a native of Salem, Mass. Under her own name or the pseudonym of "Ethel Gray" she had contributed many poems and sketches to the weekly press, and had published a number of books for Sunday-school libraries. We learn that she has left several works in manuscript.

—Anson D. F. Randolph & Co. announce a Bible History in six volumes, by Alfred Edersheim, D.D., and an edition of the Memorials of William E. Dodge, the first edition of which was printed for private distribution.

—Mr. W. J. Rolfe, our Shakespearian editor, whom Amherst College honored the other day with the deserved degree of D.L., or Doctor of Letters, was a student at Amherst for about three years, but did not remain to take his degree with his class in 1849. An honorary A.M. was given him at Harvard in 1859, and also at Amherst in 1865. While in college he was for some time the "chum" of President Seelye.

—Mr. Henry T. Finck, who made something of a reputation during his Harvard course, 1872-'76, by his musical talents, and since graduation has occupied important positions in connection with New York journals as a musical critic, has prepared a curious work entitled Romantic Love and Personal Beauty, which will soon be published by Macmillan & Co.

—The "American Association of Writers" held its third annual convention in Indianapolis last week, Maurice Thompson presiding. The sessions were occupied with papers and discussions on topics of interest to literary people, such as "Character Painting in Literature," "International Copyright," and "The Best Methods of Preserving Local History." Mr. Thompson, in his opening address, was severe on Tolstoi, the Russian novelist, and deprecated the fondness for "dialect" among our American novelists.

—Mr. Walter Besant's new novel, Herr Paulus, is understood to refer to certain aspects of recent Spiritualism.

—Kegan, Paul & Co. announce Victorian Hymns, a representative collection of English sacred songs written during the fifty years of Queen Victoria's reign.

—A delightful work ought to be Walks in the Ardennes, by Percy Lindley, with illustrations by J. F. Weedon.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons announce for their earliest autumn publications a series of photo-graveurs of The Land of Sleepy Hollow; a volume on the Decisive Battles Since Waterloo, by Col. T. W. Knox; an account by Hon. S. S. Cox of his experiences while Minister to Turkey, under the title of The Isles of the Princes, or the Pleasures of Prinkipo; a new and illustrated edition of Mr. Mayo's Kaloolah; and a new life of George Washington, by Edward E. Hale.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

June.

The Westminster Review. — Mr. Chamberlain — The Form of Capture in Marriage Ceremonies — Ireland: the Struggle for Home Rule in Lower Canada — Women Workers in the Liberal Cause — American People and Their Homes — The Capitulations in Egypt — English Lake Dwellings — The Roman Church and the American Republic — Bordeaux — Contemporary Literature: Science; Politics, Sociology, Voyages, and Travels; History and Biography; Belles-Lettres — Home Affairs. Knowledge. — Shakespeare's Poems — Science and Religion — The Story of Creation: a Plain Account of Evolution. By Edward Clodd — Clothes Moths and Their Allies. By E. A. Butler — The Japanese Magic Mirror. By Dr. R. F. Hutchinson — Our Whist Column. By "Five of Clubs" — Our Chess Column. By "Mephisto." The Nineteenth Century. — The Jubilee, 1887. By Algernon Charles Swinburne — Our Great Competitor. By James Keith — An Actor's Notes. No. 4. M. Coquelin on Actors and Acting. By Henry Irving — Are Animals Mentally Happy? By B. Carill — French Penal Colonies. By Major Arthur Griffiths — Newnham College from Within. By Miss Eva Knatchbull-Hugessen — A Beggar Poet. By Thomas Woolner, R.A. — Comte's Atheism. By the Bishop of Carlisle — South Africa as It Is. By John Robinson, Member of the Legislative Council, Natal — Strange Medicines. By Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming — Lecky's History of England in the Eighteenth Century. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.

July.
Book, A Printed. R. R. Bowker. Harper's.
Books That Have Helped Me. A. P. Peabody. Forum.
Classics, American, in Schools. H. E. Scudder. Atlantic.
Philadelphia, Literary Life in. Moses P. Handy.
Sentiment, The Decay of. Agnes Repplier. American Magazine.
Thackeray, Unpublished Letters of. IV. Atlantic.
Tolstoi, Count, and the Public Censor. I. F. Scribner's.
Hapgood. Atlantic.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

A MEMOIR OF ROGER ASCHAM. By Samuel Johnson. With an Introduction by J. H. Carlisle. — MEMOIR OF THOMAS ARNOLD. Selected from Life and Correspondence by A. P. Stanley. With an Introduction by J. H. Carlisle. Boston: Chautauqua Press. 75c.

LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF GEN. JOHN WOLCOTT PHELPS. By Cecil Hampden Cutts Howard. Frank E. Hough & Co. Paper.

GREAT WRITERS. Edited by Eric S. Robertson: Life of Dante Gabriel Rossetti. By Joseph Knight. — Life of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. By Hall Caine. — Life of Charles Dickens. By Frank T. Marzials. London: Walter Scott. New York: Thomas Whitaker.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Compiled and Edited by John Bigelow. Vol. 3. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

KEATS. By Sidney Colvin. Harper & Bros. 75c.

Education.

ON TEACHING ENGLISH. With Detailed Examples and an Inquiry into the Definition of Poetry. By Alexander Bain. D. Appleton & Co. $1.25

Essays and Sketches.

PROSE PASTORALS. By Herbert Milton Sylvester. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

THE COLLEGE AND THE CHURCH. The "How I was Educated" Papers and "Denominational Confessions." D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

IMAGINARY PORTRAITS. By Walter Pater. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

OURSELVES AND OUR NEIGHBORS. Short Chats on Social Topics. By Louise Chandler Moulton. Roberts Bros. $1.00

Fiction.

PENELOPE'S SUITORS. By E. L. Bynner. Ticknor & Co. 50c.

BELLONA'S HUSBAND. By Hudor Genove. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

THE STOLEN LETTER. By Charles Morris. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.

IVAN ILVITCH, AND OTHER STORIES. By Count Léon Tolstoi. Tr. by Nathan Haskell Dole. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

THIRTEEN STORIES OF THE FAR WEST. By Forbes Heermans. Syracuse: C. W. Badern. $1.25

A GAME OF CHANCE. By Anne Sheldon Coombs. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00

TOLD AT TUXEDO. By A. M. Emory. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE VAN GELDER PAPERS, AND OTHER SKETCHES. Edited by J. T. S. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

TEMPEST DRIVEN. By Richard Dowling. D. Appleton & Co. Paper 50c.

THE PRELATE. By Isaac Henderson. Ticknor & Co. 50c.

JEAN COUPE-EN-DEUX. By Fortuné Du Boisgobey. Tr. by Sir Gilbert Campbell. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.

LENA RIVERS. By Mrs. Mary J. Holmes. G. W. Dillingham. Paper 25c.

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL. By Miss M. E. Braddon. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper 25c.

THE HOUSE OF THE MUSICIAN. By Virginia W. Johnson. Ticknor & Co. 50c.

A DATELESS BARGAIN. By C. L. Pirakis. D. Appleton & Co. 30c.

THE CRUSADE OF THE EXCELSIOR. By Bret Harte. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

THE MONK'S WEDDING. By Conrad Ferdinand Meyer. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25

History.

THE STORY OF METLAKANTLA. By Henry S. Wellcome. Saxon & Co. $1.50

THE AMERICAN ELECTORAL SYSTEM. By Charles A. O'Neill. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

MEMORIALS OF A HALF CENTURY. By Bela Hubbard. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

THE STORY OF ASSYRIA. By Lénafé A. Ragorin. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

Poetry.

THE POEMS OF GRACOMO LEOPARDI. Translated by Frederick Townsend. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

A BRANCH OF MAY. Poems by Lizette Woodworth Reese. Baltimore: Cushing & Bailey.

COLUMBUS AS A HERO OF THE NEW WORLD. An Historical Play. By D. S. Preston. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

THE SAILING OF KING OLAF, AND OTHER POEMS. By Alice Williams Brotherton. Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00

THE NEW BIRTH. With a Chapter on Mind Cure. By L. P. Mercer. Charles H. Kerr & Co. 50c.
THE STORY OF THE EARTH AND MAN. By Sir J. W. Dawson. New Edition. Harper & Bros.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate
(Showing Curtain drawn).

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.
A. Handle for dumping.
B. Lever for shaking.
C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY
MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

THIS HAMMOCK CHAIR
May be detached instantly from the hammock fixtures, and then becomes a combined automatic floor chair, adjustable to many reclining positions, and desirable for Library, Steamer and Invalid Use.
Has no equal. Used in hospitals, colleges and families. Folded compactly and shipped anywhere. Circulars, testimonials and photographs for 2-cent stamp. Price $7 and upwards. LIBERAL DISCOUNTS to agents and dealers.
BLAISDELL CHAIR CO., 96 High St., Boston.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND
Lever needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to
R. C. HARTMAN, 709 SANBORN STREET,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.,
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books. Send for Catalogue of Americans.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

Dr. Mark R. Woodbury

HAS prepared and prescribed for more than thirty years his D. K.'s. They never fail to cure Dyspepsia, to promote digestion, to relieve constipation, to cure heartburn, to neutralize acid stomach.

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS

Cost only 50 cents a box (trial boxes 25 cents), will be mailed to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

China:

TRAVELS AND INVESTIGATIONS IN THE "MIDDLE KINGDOM"; A STUDY OF ITS CIVILIZATION AND POSSIBILITIES. WITH A GLANCE AT JAPAN. By JAMES HARRISON WILSON, Brevet Major-General U. S. Army. 12mo, cloth, with map, price $1.75.

"Notwithstanding the great number of books on China, there is at this time room for another, which should briefly tell what China and the Chinese were before foreign influences had materially changed them, what foreigners have done for or forced them to do, and what remains for foreigners to do, with the prospect of their doing it. In other words, it should make progress in China its burden and text, and in the narrative which follows I have kept that text constantly in mind, and aimed to give the reader the materials for forming an intelligent opinion in reference to it."—From the Preface.

II.

A Game of Chance.

A NOVEL. By ANNE SHELDON COOMBS, author of "As Common Mortals." 12mo, cloth, price $1.00.

"A Game of Chance," by Mrs. Coombs, will, in its fresh and vigorous character-drawing, and its fidelity to American life, fully justify the expectations awakened by her first novel, "As Common Mortals."

III.

Appletons' General Guide to the United States and Canada.

With numerous maps and illustrations. Revised for the season of 1887. In three separate forms:

ONE VOLUME COMPLETE, pocket-book form, roan, price $2.50.

NEW ENGLAND AND MIDDLE STATES AND CANADA, one volume, cloth, price $1.25.

SOUTHERN AND WESTERN STATES, one volume, cloth, price $1.25.

IV.

Appletons' Hand-Book of Summer Resorts.

Revised for the season of 1887. With maps and numerous illustrations. Large 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

V.

A Dateless Bargain.

A NOVEL. By C. L. PIRAKIS, author of "Judith Wynne," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 30 cents.

"A clever and interesting novel."—London Literary World.

"Mrs. Pirakis has supplied fresh proof of her skill in turning out very good and workmanlike fiction."—Academy.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 2, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 and 29 West 23d Street,
NEW YORK,

HAVE NOW READY:

THE MARGIN OF PROFIT; HOW PROFITS ARE NOW DIVIDED; WHAT PART OF THE PRESENT HOURS OF LABOR CAN NOW BE SPARED. By EDWARD ATKINSON, author of "The Distribution of Products," etc., together with the reply of Mr. E. M. Chamberlain, representing the Labor Union, and Mr. Atkinson's rejoinder to the reply. Paper, 40 cts.; cloth, 75 cts.

*This important contribution to "The Questions of the Day" has been received with so much interest that already the larger part of the first edition has been exhausted by advance orders.

THE CURABILITY OF INSANITY AND INDIVIDUALIZED TREATMENT OF THE INSANE. By JOHN S. BUTLER, M. D., late Physician and Superintendent of the Connecticut Retreat for the Insane, Member of the Connecticut State Board of Health, etc. 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

THE STORY OF ASSYRIA. By Z. A. RAGOZIN, continuing the narrative of "The Story of Chaldea." Being No. XVI of "The Story of the Nations." Profusely illustrated. $1.50.

"An extensive, exhaustive, and exhausting research. . . . She has put within a few hundred pages as much special historic knowledge as can be rendered fluent and picturesque in so small a scope."—New York Telegram.

HOW TO TRAVEL. Hints, Advice, and Suggestions to Travellers by Land and Sea, all over the Globe. By THOMAS W. KNOX. Revised edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Every one who contemplates making an extended journey will do well to master the contents of 'How to Travel'; it will be dollars in his pockets, and peace and comfort to his mind."—Literary World.

7 TO 12. By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, author of "The Leavenworth Case," "A Strange Disappearance," "Hand and Ring," etc. 16mo, paper, 25 cts.

"The most melodramatic and intensely interesting of the stories by Anna Katharine Green."—Public Opinion.

*Putnam's New Catalogue sent upon application.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, withal the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 15 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOPLACH, 160 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property, and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. THOMAS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 64th Street, New York City.

FRESH SUMMER BOOKS.

Norway Nights and Russian Days.

The Record of a Pleasant Summer Tour. By Mrs. S. M. HENRY DAVIS. With many illustrations. Decorated cloth, $1.25; half calf, gilt top, uncut, $2.50.

Dainty in form, charming in style, accurate and interesting in information, covering the trip through Denmark, Norway (to the North Cape and the Midnight Sun), Sweden, Finland, and Russia. A delightful and valuable book of travel.

A Summer in England with Henry Ward Beecher.

Giving the Popular Lectures, Occasional Addresses and Sermons delivered by him in Great Britain last Summer, with an Account of the Trip, by JAMES B. POND. Illustrated with a photo-artotype portrait of Mr. Beecher, and seven pages MS. Fac-simile notes. Extra cloth, gilt top, $2.00.

"They have almost the solemnity and value of 'last words.' It was the gathering of strength and eloquence before the days of silence."—Philadelphia Ledger.

BEECHER'S WORKS.

Send for our List, also Circular with titles of "Plymouth Pulpit" back numbers; special terms for assorted lots, while they last. They are fast thinning out.

Norwood: A Tale of Village Life in New England.

By HENRY WARD BEECHER. New popular Edition. Cloth, $1.25.

"Norwood" will never be called a 'hurtful fiction'—unless somebody should hurt himself laughing. Neither will the critics pronounce it a 'novel' in the technical sense; though it is something fresher, as well as better. Beecher and nothing else all over, and we rather think more Beecher than anything else yet printed; in short, one of the best as well as most delightful of books."—New York Times.

*All Booksellers.

FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT,
27 Park Place, New York.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

IVAN ILYTCH.

By Count LYOF N. TOLSTOI. Translated from the Russian by Nathan Haskell Dole. Cloth, 12mo, $1.25.

The popular interest awakened in the works of this famous author will be quickened and intensified by this volume, in which Count Tolstoy's whole system of philosophy is concretely revealed—and the latest phase in the evolution of the author's peculiar views is presented under the guise of short allegorical tales or tracts for the common people of Russia.

THE CONQUERING CROSS (The Church.)

By Rev. H. R. HAWES, M. A. 12mo, $1.25. The fifth volume of the "Christ and Christianity" series, by the same author.

The Spectator of January 22, 1887, says: "We gladly say at once that there is much in Mr. Hawes's treatment of his subject which we admire, and that with his general aim to give a living, personal interest to the records of Christianity, and the words and acts of Christ, we heartily sympathize. There is much freshness and vitality, much 'unction'—to use a word now happily rescued from the mockery with which it was once used—in the application of his subject to the personal spiritual life."

For Sale by all Booksellers.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO.,
18 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1887) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. C., "Literary World" Office, Boston.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lascelles Wrixall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30;
Half Morocco, $33.50; Full Morocco,
Gilt Edges, $45.

.....Sold only by subscription.....

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

McDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.
Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

4

THE
JUL 23 1887
LIBRARY
LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 15. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 328. Publishers.

BOSTON, JULY 23, 1887.

{ Office, 2 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

WORKS OF HONORÉ DE BALZAC.

TRANSLATED BY KATHARINE PRESCOTT WORMELEY.

"But the time should now be ripe for the introduction of English-speaking people to an author who by right of genius stands alone among his contemporaries, and whose marvelous knowledge of human nature, subtle analytic power, encyclopedic learning, and brilliant descriptive talent justify the daring comparison of his productive force with that of Shakespeare."—NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

Handsome 12mo volumes. Uniform in size and style. Half Russia. Price $1.50 each.

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

PÈRE GORIOT.

DUCHESSE DE LANGEAIS.

RISE AND FALL OF CÉSAR BIROTTEAU.

EUGÉNIE GRANDET.

COUSIN PONS.

THE COUNTRY DOCTOR.

THE TWO BROTHERS.

THE ALKAHEST.

"The 'Alkahest' is a strong story, and all through it is to be felt that sub-current of vitalizing energy which in so many of Balzac's books seems to propel the principal characters as in a special atmosphere, hurrying them with a kind of fiery, yet restrained, impatience toward the doom assigned them. . . . The scientific and mystical features of the story are cleverly handled. Balzac made deep inquiries before writing his philosophical studies, as he called them, and he was always rather ahead than abreast of the thoughts of his time. The central problem dealt with here is, of course, as complete a mystery today as when the 'Recherche de l'Absolu' was written. . . . Miss Wormeley has made a characteristically excellent translation of a book which presents many unusual difficulties and abstruse points. It is rarely possible to assert with any truth that an English version of a French book may be read by the public with nearly as much profit and apprehension as the original; but it is the simple fact in this instance, and it is certainly remarkable enough to deserve emphasis."—New York Tribune.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S WORKS.

"Mr. George Meredith is the greatest English novelist living; he is probably the greatest novelist of our time. He is a man of genius, a literary artist, and truly a great writer."—The Beacon.

"Since the days of Thackeray, Dickens and George Eliot, there has not appeared in the world of English fiction so commanding a figure as the author of this volume, and all lovers of good literature ought to make his acquaintance."—Chicago Journal.

A new complete Uniform Edition of this great novelist's writings is now ready.

TITLES.

THE ORDEAL OF RICHARD FEVEREL.

EVAN HARRINGTON.

HARRY RICHMOND.

SANDRA BELLONI.

VITTORIA.

RHODA FLEMING.

BEAUCHAMP'S CAREER.

THE EGOIST.

DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.

THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT AND FARINA.

10 volumes. 12mo, cloth, price $2.00 per volume.
10 volumes. 12mo, half calf, extra, $25.00 the set.

SOME RECENT NEW BOOKS.

A Lad's Love, by Arlo Bates, $1.00; Ourselves and Our Neighbors, by Mrs. Moulton, $1.00; A Year in Eden, by Miss Preston, paper covers, 50 cents; To Rome on a Tricycle, or Two Pilgrims' Progress, by Mrs. and Mr. Pennell, paper covers, 50 cents; A Week Away from Time, $1.25; Cracker Joe, $1.00; Balzac's The Alkahest and The Two Brothers, $1.50 each; George Meredith's The Shaving of Shagpat, $2.00; Mrs. Dodd's Cathedral Days, third edition, $2.00; Mrs. Campbell's Prisoners of Poverty, $1.00; Mrs. Helen Jackson's Between Whiles, $1.25; Mrs. Ward's Life of Dante, $1.25; Mrs. Kennard's Life of Mrs. Siddons, $1.00; A Question of Identity, No Name Novel, $1.00; Agatha and the Shadow, Old Colony series of novels, $1.50; Some Chinese Ghosts, by Lafadio Hearn, $1.00; Miss O'Meara's Mabel Stanhope, $1.25; Through the Gates of Gold, a Fragment of Thought, 50 cents; Miss Robinson's Life of Margaret of Angoulême, $1.00; Sonnets in Shadow, by Arlo Bates, $1.00; Dante and His Circle, by D. G. Rossetti, $2.00; London of Today, by C. E. Pascoe, $1.50; Carving and Serving, by Mrs. Lincoln, 60 cents; Mr. Hale's Franklin in France, $2.00.

Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, BOSTON.

D. APPLETON & CO.

PUBLISH THIS WEEK:

I.

RED SPIDER.

A Novel. By S. BARING GOULD, author of "Little Tu'penny," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

"A well-told and neatly contrived story, with several excellent figures, exhibiting broad traits of human character with vivacity and distinctness."—London Athenæum.

II.

THE BAG OF DIAMONDS.

A Romance. By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN, author of "The Master of the Ceremonies," "Double Cunning," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

"It is full of incident, the mystery is well guarded and quite unguessable."—London Athenæum.

NEW FICTION.A GAME OF CHANCE.

By ANNE SHELDON COOMBS, author of "As Common Mortals." 12mo, cloth, price $1.00.

"A Game of Chance" is a strong novel."—N. Y. Tribune.

A TERRIBLE LEGACY.

A Tale of the South Downs. By G. W. APPLETON, author of "Frozen Hearts," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

MISS GASCOIGNE.

A Tale. By Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL, author of "Susan Drummond," etc. "The Gainsborough Series." 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

THE GREAT HESPER.

A Romance. By FRANK BARRETT. 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

A DATELESS BARGAIN.

A Novel. By C. L. PIRKIS, author of "Judith Wynne," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 30 cents.

"A clever and interesting novel."—London Literary World.

DICK'S WANDERING.

By JULIAN STURGIS, author of "John Maidment," "An Accomplished Gentleman," etc.

A new edition. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

"Dick's Wandering" is a brilliant novel, and an honest and thorough piece of work."—N. Y. Tribune.

TEMPEST DRIVEN.

A Romance. By RICHARD DOWLING. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

THE OLD HOUSE AT SANDWICH.

By JOSEPH HATTON. 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

"The Old House at Sandwich" is thoroughly interesting, and may be heartily recommended."—London Globe.

DAWN.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD, author of "She," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,
1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

August Atlantic.

Personal Characteristics of Charles Reade.
E. H. House.

The Growth of Materialism.
George Frederic Parsons.

The Second Son. XXV-XXVII.

M. O. W. Oliphant and T. B. Aldrich.

Jean Francois Millet.

Graham E. Tomson.

Two Years with Old Hickory.

Thomas H. Clay.

The Spell of the Russian Writers.

Harriet Waters Preston.

Our Hundred Days in Europe. VI.

Oliver Wendell Holmes.

The Mummy.

Paul Patoff. XIV, XV.

F. Marion Crawford.

The Alkestis of Euripides. II.

William Cranston Lawton.

The Goophered Grapevine.

Charles W. Chesnut.

To E. M. T.

Alice Williams Brotherton.

A Mad Englishman.

Margaret Crosby.

Anne Gilchrist.

The Contributors' Club.

35 cents a number; $4.00 a year.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,

BOSTON.

Horsford's
ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.

Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.

Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.

It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.

It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Beware of Imitations.

SIDNEY LUSKA'S

Last and Best Romance,

"A LAND OF LOVE,"

Appears complete in Lippincott's Magazine for August. Also "Is the base-ball player a chattel?" an attack by John M. Ward (New York Ball Club), on the methods of the League and the Association; and articles by Edgar Fawcett, Edith M. Thomas, Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, H. H. Boyesen, etc. For sale by all newsdealers. Price 25 cts.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—

VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lascelles Wrixall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30; Half Morocco, $32.50; Full Morocco, Gilt Edges, $45.

...Sold only by subscription....

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,

185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

Fresh Summer Books.

NORWAY NIGHTS AND RUSSIAN DAYS.

The Record of a Pleasant Summer Tour. By Mrs. S. M. HENRY DAVIS. With Many Illustrations. Decorated cloth, $1.25; half calf, gilt top, uncut, $2.50.

Dainty in form, charming in style, accurate and interesting in information, covering the trip through Denmark, Norway (to the North Cape and the Midnight Sun), Sweden, Finland and Russia. A delightful and valuable book of travel.

BEECHER'S WORKS.

Send for our List, also Circular with titles of "Plymouth Pulpit" Back Numbers (Sermons). Special terms for assorted lots, while they last. They are fast thinning out.

FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT,

27 Park Place, New York.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1888. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, JULY 23, 1887. No. 15.

CONTENTS.

THE SHAYBACKS IN CAMP	227
WILHELMINE'S MEMOIRS	227
CELEBRITIES OF THE CENTURY	228
ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY	229
TOLSTOI'S IVAN ILVITCH, AND OTHER STORIES	229
NORWAY NIGHTS AND RUSSIAN DAYS	230
YESTERDAYS WITH ACTORS	231
SCHURZ'S LIFE OF CLAY	234
TOLSTOI'S SEBASTOPOL	234
JAPAN IN THE LIGHT OF AINO STUDIES	235
A TRAGIC MYSTERY	235
MINOR FICTION:
The House of the Musician	236
The Crusade of the Excelsior	236
Allan Quatermain	236
The Monk's Wedding	236
Har Harbor Days	236
PASSING MENTION	236
MINOR NOTICES:
Yachts and Yachting	237
PERIODICALS	237
PARAGRAPHS	232
COMPOSITE PORTRAITS	232
TWO OPINIONS OF TOLSTOI	233
AMERICAN DIALECT	233
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Mr. John Bartlett's New "Concordance"	237
Curtis in "The Taming of the Shrew"	238
The "Victoria" Edition of Shakespeare	238
The Seventh Edition of Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps's "Outlines"	238
Mr. Morgan on Dr. Furnivall's Metrical Tests	238
NOTES AND QUERIES. 827-828	238
BOSWELL	231
NEWS AND NOTES	238
THE OFFICE OF A LIBRARY	239
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	239

THE SHAYBACKS IN CAMP.*

MR. AND MRS. SHAYBACK (né Barrows) were once the united minister of a Unitarian society near Boston. They are now, we believe, the joint editor of a Unitarian journal in Boston. They are likewise — to divide into two what God hath made one — periodical excursionists to a point on the eastern shore of the Canadian half of Lake Memphremagog, where for ten years past, with a troop of young Shaybacks, and now and then a friend for guest, they have camped out in August or thereabouts, and made merry under several tents to the sound of much tin ware, with plenty to eat, a fleet of boats, and a steam launch. Mr. Shayback has also camped upon the martial field of a Massachusetts militia muster, and Mrs. Shayback in the valley of the Godavery, India. Thus bravery and experience have been added to their outfit for the Canadian wilderness; and out of all this varied conversance with nature in two hemispheres is this book written. India and the muster field, however, it is but fair to say, get only a single chapter each; Memphremagog monopolizes the other fifteen, and these fifteen in their way leave little to desire.

To two classes of people this book can safely be commended: first, to those who prefer to take their camp life in books, while remaining comfortably at home, or exiling themselves to partial comforts in the summer hotels; second, to those who desire to try camp life for themselves, and want to know where to go and how to do it. From the frontispiece map of the Memphremagog region on through the lists of camp equipment and the chapters of directive description, the book is as good as a manual of arms for the raw recruit; while in its lively relation of haps and mishaps, its jolly anecdote, and the mock pathos with which it softens the colors of risk and hardship, it furnishes amusement of good quality for any more wary reader who prefers to laugh over the predicaments of others rather than to put his foot in it himself.

The Shayback requisites for a good time camping out are a suitable place, an ample equipment, an abundant larder, equable tempers, obliging dispositions, readiness all round "to take hold and help," and plenty of children in the party. With the Shaybacks, certainly, one could be happy. With them to troll for "lunge" in the deep waters of Lake Memphremagog, or to bathe on one of its sunny beaches, or to cruise in the saucy "Nymph" along its indented shores, or to climb the rugged slopes of Owl's Head, or to picnic at Brome Lake; to build a log cabin, indeed, or even to wash dishes, would make up enjoyment enough for one summer. May the lines of the Literary World some day fall in some such pleasant places!

WILHELMINE'S MEMOIRS.*

THESE Memoirs of the Margravine of Baireuth, who is best to be introduced to us as a sister of Frederick the Great of Prussia, are not new to American readers, having been laid before us as long as ten years ago by Mr. Howells in the first two volumes of his edited "Choice Autobiographies." But the present form of them is new and improved, and the octavo of 450 pages, emblematically bound in black and white, with the royal insignia stamped in gilt, is an imposing volume. The Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, whom we know better as Princess Helena of England, is an entirely competent translator and editor. She has slightly expurgated the original text, which, after the manner of its times, touched more freely than modern taste allows upon some incidents of court life, and also has supplied an introduction and an index. There is an autotype portrait of the Margravine, but not a good one.

Wilhelmine, who became the Margravine of Baireuth by marriage in 1731, was the eldest daughter of Frederick William I, the second King of Prussia, and was born at Berlin in 1709. Her brother Frederick, afterwards known as Frederick the Great, was some three years her junior. She lived nearly fifty years, and her life thus covered the first half of the Eighteenth Century. Her Memoirs, she says, she wrote for her "own special satisfaction," taking "pleasure in mentioning every circumstance that happened to me, as well as in recording all my thoughts." They fully bear out this description, and are to an extraordinary degree an interior picture of royal life in Germany at the time. Such a narrative is better than any formal history possibly can be for imparting a full and accurate idea of "the other side" of public affairs. It is the artist's shading pencil with which the outlines are filled in. Take, for example, this reminiscence of a visit from Peter the Great of Russia and the Czarina, who were entertained by Frederick William for a little while at the villa of Monbijou, near Berlin:

As soon as the Emperor saw me he recognized me — having seen me five years ago — took me up in his arms and kissed me all over my face. I boxed his ears, and made frantic efforts to get away from him, saying he had insulted me. This delighted him, and made him laugh heartily. . . . The Czarina too made much of me. The Queen and the Czarina sat in arm-chairs under a canopy, and I stood near my mother, the Princesses of the blood standing opposite. The Czarina was small, broad, and brown-looking, without the slightest dignity of appearance. You had only to look at her to detect her low origin. She might have passed for a German actress, she had decked herself out in such a manner. Her dress had been bought second-hand, and was trimmed with some dirty-looking silver embroidery; the bodice was covered with precious stones, arranged in such a manner as to represent the double eagle. She wore a dozen orders; and round the bottom of her dress hung quantities of relics and pictures of saints, which rattled when she walked, and reminded one of a smartly-dressed mule. The orders too made a great noise, knocking against each other. The Czar, on the other hand, was tall and well grown, with a handsome face, but his expression was coarse, and impressed me with fear. He wore a simple sailor's dress. . . . At last we sat down to dinner, the Czar sitting near the Queen. It is well known that this sovereign had, when a young man, been poisoned, and that his nerves had never recovered from it, so that he was constantly seized with convulsions, over which he had no control. He was suddenly seized with one of these attacks while he was dining, and frightened the Queen so much that she several times tried to get up and leave the table. After a while the Czar grew calmer, and begged the Queen to have no fear, as he would not hurt her. Then, taking one hand in his, he pressed it so tightly that she screamed for mercy, at which he laughed, saying that she had much more delicate bones than his Catherine.

But entertainment — except in a qualified sense — is not the ruling function of these Memoirs. Taken as a whole they furnish about as painful a story of personal experience as ever finds its way into print. Doubtless there have been girls and women who have suffered more than the Margravine of Baireuth did both before and after her marriage, but they have not commonly lived in kings' houses. Her father was a ferocious brute, her mother was hard-hearted, vindictive, and cruel. The parents quarreled with each other and abused their children by word and deed. The stories which Wilhelmine

* The Shaybacks in Camp. By Samuel J. Barrows and Isabel C. Barrows. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00.

* Memoirs of Wilhelmine, Margravine of Baireuth. Translated and Edited by Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. Scribner & Welford. $3.75.

tells of the treatment received at their hands seem incredible. Such scenes as the following were of daily occurrence;

"What is amiss with my dinner-table?" the King inquired, getting very red in the face. "You ask what is the matter with it," my sister replied; "there is not enough on it for us to eat, and what there is is cabbage and carrots, which we detest." Her first answer had angered my father, but now he gave vent to his fury. But instead of punishing my sister he poured it all on my mother, my brother, and myself. To begin with he threw his plate at my brother's head, who would have been struck had he not got out of the way; a second one he threw at me, which I also happily escaped; then torrents of abuse followed these first signs of hostility.

The main cause of trouble between Wilhelmine and this precious pair of royal parents was their determination to marry her off in a political bargain against her will. Before she was in her teens her old reprobate of a father was negotiating here and there for the bestowal of her hand. His preferred plan was to betroth her to the English Prince of Wales, and angered by a failure in this direction, he gave his child her choice between two hateful German princes, to have married either of whom would have been a sacrifice of Beauty to the Beast. In combating these unnatural schemes Wilhelmine's whole youth was spent, standing almost alone against father, mother, and all of the court who had access to her. Her life was one unbroken chapter of misery. Her brother shared in her father's wrath. Repeated sicknesses, treacheries on the right hand and on the left, incessant abuse of every conceivable kind, wore upon both mind and body, month after month and year after year, and it is a wonder that her strength survived the ordeal. Finally, after all manner of threats and punishments had been visited upon her, her father proposed a third suitor, the hereditary Prince of Baireuth, whom she had never even seen; and in utter despair, thinking that to marry him in the dark would be better than marrying either of the others in the light, she consented. On this her father relented a little, but her mother reproached and tortured her to the end. This marriage took place, and Wilhelmine found a worthy and loving husband.

Her troubles, however, were by no means over. Nobody was pleased with her marriage. Her father and mother hated her for it. Her father-in-law was furious over it. The treatment which her brother continued to experience at the King's hands was iron in her soul. She lived in an atmosphere of perpetual domestic dissension and violence. Gossips, backbiters, and false witnesses attempted to make a breach between her and her husband. Her father's promises of dowry and allowance were broken, and an empty purse was added to her other trials. At the table the King would do his best to make her husband drunk so as to shame him in her presence. Her brother was forced to witness the execution of Hatt, his best friend, before his very eyes. Half of every day was filled with soreness over what had actually happened yesterday, and the other half with forebodings over what was to follow tomorrow. And the Margravine writes down the story of it all with a calm precision and an unflinching circumstantiality which produce the effect of an instantaneous photograph.

A more contradictory and despicable character than that of Frederick William I, as represented in these pages, it would be hard to conceive. Passionate, of ungovernable temper, parsimonious as to the necessities of life and extravagant as to its luxuries, covering his daughter with kisses one day and menacing her with blows the next, hitting right and left with his crutch, using falsehood and intrigue unhesitatingly when such means served his purposes, and bursting into rage when he encountered them in others, he was little less than a monster, a human monster. His wife mated him. Their famous son Frederick, afterwards the Great, appears distinctly in these pages, but in the background, a secondary figure. The German court is a scene of petty quarrels, silly displays, selfish intrigues, and corrupt morals. The German country is a land of romantic castles and bad roads. There is little of European politics in the volume, and of war nothing to speak of, except as related to the domestic life of the royal family. The simple effect of it is to show how a princess could live a hundred and fifty years ago, and to leave one impressed with a new sense of the good honest republican truth that the right of kings is not always divine.

CELEBRITIES OF THE CENTURY.*

THE editor of this new biographical dictionary has attempted to make good what he considers to have been a real deficiency, at least in England. "A fairly adequate and exhaustive Dictionary of Recent and Contemporary Biography, including foreign as well as national celebrities," did not seem to exist in English. Accordingly, with the aid of a well-selected corps of contributors, he has compiled this large, yet not bulky, volume which covers the lives of the eminent personages who can be said to belong at all to the century in which we live. Those who merely lived into the nineteenth century without making any particular mark upon it, have been shut out or noticed very briefly; the characters whose career lay to a considerable extent in the eighteenth century have received more attention in their later life. Beginning thus, the new dictionary comes down to January of this year, everything of consequence in the lives of the famous men and women included being recorded to the time of going to press. Living persons have an asterisk prefixed to the sketch of their lives.

In its external aspects this dictionary of recent biography impresses one very favorably. It is printed in double columns, from new type, the paper is opaque, and the binding strong. As a specimen of book-making it does credit to its publishers. The editor's assistants include such well-known men of letters as H. Buxton Forman, F. J. Furnivall, J. C. Morrison, S. Lane Poole, G. Barnett Smith and T. Hall Caine, Profs. S. J. Lord, A. F. Murison, Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, T. F. Tout, and Andrew Seth; but we have found, as is often the case in such works, that much of the best matter has been contributed by writers less known to fame than those just mentioned. Mr. Sanders has evidently chosen his co-laborers with judgment, and has himself given the volume a uniform tone, and a proportion in its treatment of widely varying celebrities which is generally just.

The strength of the compilation, of course, lies in its exhibition of the lives which belong to England. Here it is comprehensive and impartial, but the interest of the volume is much heightened by the fact that something in the way of judicial appreciation of deceased notabilities has been attempted, so that the book is more than a mere list of names and dates. Omitting the warm praise of Macaulay, for instance, we will quote Prof. Tout's adverse criticism:

With all Macaulay's quickness of intellect, however, he never could be said really to think. Tradition, impression, lively sympathies and quick feelings led him to his opinions. But when he had made up his mind no power on earth could move him. . . . He wrote of what he knew nothing about, of Bacon's philosophy, of utilitarianism, of theories of population, with the same serene self-confidence as he had laid down the law in the fields of history and politics, which he had made his own. A profound belief in the commonplace ideals of his age, a glorification of success and material prosperity, is at once the explanation of Macaulay's extraordinary popularity, and the explanation of the limitations of his character and intellect.

English statesmen have an amount of space allotted to them in these pages which naturally seems to an American somewhat disproportionate, but this will not seem a fault in England.

The work is remarkable for the fullness and general accuracy with which it treats American characters. Our leading men of state, of letters, and of industry, receive quite generous notice. English judgment of our generals of the Civil War is probably more impartial than our own can yet be. It is well to note then that MacClellan persistently overrated the enemy's resources. . . . Through this fault he retreated from fields he had won in the day, and missed more opportunities than any other man ever hoped for.

Gen. Grant "was an ideal commander for a government possessed of overwhelming resources," while Gen. Lee was a thoroughly instructed, capable and skillful

Celebrities of the Century. Being a Dictionary of Men and Women of the Nineteenth Century.* Edited by Lloyd C. Sanders. pp. vi, 1077. Cassell & Co. $5.00.

commander. That his cause was not ultimately successful was simply because in the nature of the case the means at his command were inadequate.

American men of science have evidently been attended to by a specialist, but American theologians receive scant space. Rev. Dr. J. F. Clarke, F. H. Hedge, R. S. Storrs, and A. A. Hodge, for example, are not mentioned, but, abroad, Rosmini is equally neglected. It is easy to discover omissions in a work of this kind, but we have been surprised rather by the inclusiveness of this than by its failures. We recommend to Mr. Sanders, in the future editions which are sure to be called for, to engage two or three American experts to revise and supplement the part of the work treating of Americans. Our men of letters are well dealt with, although we should scarcely have given Mark Twain twice as much space as Howells and James together! But Mr. Clemens is properly rated, however, as a low comedian, who "has compelled us to laugh in spite of ourselves, and sometimes, it is to be feared, in spite of our better selves."

ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.*

IN these two substantial volumes Mr. Lecky concludes the history of England in that eighteenth century to which he would give, as the later students in general do, a much higher rank than used to be assigned to it:

A century was certainly not without the elements of greatness which witnessed the victories of Marlborough; the statesmanship of Chatham and his son; the political philosophy of Burke and Adam Smith; the religious movement of Wesley and Whitefield; the conquest of India; the discovery of Australia; the confirmation of the naval, and the establishment of the manufacturing, supremacy of England.

The political narrative is brought down to the outbreak of the war of 1793, which introduces a new period in the long ministry of William Pitt. Mr. Lecky's fifth volume opens with a brilliant but unbiased characterization of this great Parliamentary leader, who could defeat Fox, Burke, and the combined opposition at a time of life when thought and emotion are usually alike immature. Two long chapters recite the story of home and foreign affairs until the French Revolution looms up on conservative, order-loving England. The gradual contraction of the actual governing powers of the English sovereign is here, as in the earlier part of the century, the most prominent feature of the political development. But the excesses of the French Revolution produced a reaction which delayed for a generation the Reform Bill, Catholic emancipation, and many another notable reform which this century has beheld.

A chapter on the causes of the French

Revolution takes us, for the space of a hundred and fifty pages, into France, but the excursion is altogether agreeable when personally conducted by so philosophic a thinker and so humorous a writer as Mr. Lecky, despite its comparative irrelevancy, at such length, in a history of England. The author coincides with Mr. Stephens, the latest historian of the Revolution, in the importance which he attaches to the overthrow of the Parlements of Paris and the Provinces as a main cause of the destruction of the French monarchy. But while he assigns a minor share of influence to the men of letters in bringing about the great convulsion of French society, Mr. Lecky's pages on Voltaire and Rousseau are the most thoroughly enjoyable ones in this section of his work, and evidently written con amore.

Most readers, however, will probably receive with the highest pleasure the twenty-third chapter, which is devoted, somewhat after the style of Macaulay, to a picture of the dress, manners, amusements, art, science, agriculture, and manufactures of the latter part of the eighteenth century. The improvements wrought by the legislation and the reforming spirit of philanthropy are detailed, as well as the barbarities of the penal code and the slave trade, which would have been abolished sooner but for the absorbing nature of the struggle with France.

The second half of the sixth volume turns to Ireland and covers the years 1782-1793, and the final volume of the history will treat the closing years of the Irish Parliament, the great rebellion, and the act of union.

Mr. Lecky is one of the fairest and most dispassionate students of Ireland's troubled annals, and with his next volume he will probably give us the standard work on Irish history to the act of union. The whole history is a happy proof that the age of the great historians who have a distinct style and are something more than mere compilers of documents, like the so-called "modern school," is not yet passed: may it be long in passing!

TOLSTOY'S IVAN ILYTCH, AND OTHER STORIES.*

THIS volume contains sixteen short stories, all of which are curiosities, and some of which are gems. Their quality is always rare and their workmanship striking in an unusual degree. The strangeness of the characters which they introduce, and of the costumes and manners in which they appear, immediately engages the attention of the reader. The title-story, "Ivan Ilyitch," alone could be pronounced repulsive, and those who are able to discern the motive behind the outward form will probably not think of applying that epithet to it.

"The Death of Ivan Ilyitch" is a powerful piece of pathological analysis, both physical and spiritual. American taste is more fastidious than Russian, and M. Tolstoi pursues his description of the sensations and sufferings of a man slowly dying of an intestinal disease further into detail than some of us will find it pleasant to follow. Ilyitch is a prosperous but unhappy man, who has lived a selfish, ambitious, worldly life, until he sickens and finds himself slipping away. Conscience and his malady begin work together, and his descent to death and despair is pitiful in the extreme. All the private marks of the progress of his ailment, the daily and hourly proceedings between himself and his faithful nurse, his advancing pains, the rising tide of his forebodings and dismay, the well-intended but ineffectual sympathy of his wife and daughter, all the slow but steady steps by which he goes down through the sick room into the grave, are depicted with a realism which out-Zolas Zola. The method of this sketch will make one think at first of Balzac, and one turns from it at the end as when awakening from a nightmare.

It is a grateful relief to escape from the close atmosphere of this chamber of suffering, bodily and mental, into the sunlight and freshness and purity which invest such of the stories following as "Where Love is, there God is Also," "The Three Mendicants," and "Two Old Men." These with several others are explicitly founded upon New Testament texts, with the design of illustrating and enforcing the loving, self-sacrificing precepts of the Sermon on the Mount. They are an extension of the author's My Religion in the shape of parables. And very clever and lovely they are in form and spirit. In the first a little old shoemaker, who has got hold of a Testament, reads in it the parable of the house founded on a rock, and the story of the woman that was a sinner, with other wonders of the Gospels, and then dreams a dream in which he hears his Lord say: "Martuin! Martuin! look tomorrow on the street. I am coming." On the morrow he looks, as he is bidden, and first he sees a beggar, Stepán-uitch, shoveling away the snow. He calls him in and warms him and feeds him. Then a shivering woman and child approach; he brings them in and sets them down at his own table, and sends them away full and happy. After this comes a third visitor, the interview with whom is thus described:

Avdyéitch ate some shchi, washed some dishes, and sat down again to work. While he works he still remembers the window: when the window grew darker he immediately looked out to see who was passing by. Both acquaintances and strangers passed by, and there was nothing out of the ordinary. But here Avdyéitch sees that an old apple-woman has stopped right in front of his window. She carries a basket with apples. Only a few were left, as she had nearly sold them all out; and over her shoulder she had a bag full of chips. She must have gathered them up in some new building, and was on her way home. One could see that the bag was heavy on her shoulder: she wanted to shift it to the other shoulder. So she lowered the bag on the sidewalk, stood the basket with the apples on a little post, and began to shake down the splinters in the bag. And while she was shaking her bag a little boy in a torn cap came along, picked up an apple from the basket, and was about to make his escape; but the old woman noticed it, turned around, and caught the youngster by his sleeve. The little boy began to struggle, tried to tear himself away; but the old woman grasped him with both hands, knocked off his cap, and caught him by the hair. The little boy is screaming, the old woman is scolding. Avdyéitch lost no time in putting away hisawl; he threw it upon the floor, sprang to the door—he even stumbled on the stairs and dropped his eye-glasses—and rushed out into the street. The old woman is pulling the youngster by his hair, and is scolding, and threatening to take him to the policeman: the youngster defends himself and denies the charge. "I did not take it," he says: "what are you licking me for? let me go!" Avdyéitch tried to separate them. He took the boy by his arm and says, "Let him go, bábuskha; forgive him, for Christ's sake." "I will forgive him so that he won't forget till the new broom grows. I am going to take the little villain to the police." Avdyéitch began to entreat the old woman: "Let him go, bábuskha," he said: "he will never do it again. Let him go, for Christ's sake." The old woman let him loose: the boy tried to run, but Avdyéitch kept him back. "Ask the bábuskha's forgiveness," he said, "and don't you ever do it again: I saw you taking the apple." With tears in his eyes the boy began to ask forgiveness. "Nul that's right; and now, here's an apple for you." Avdyéitch got an apple from the basket and gave it to the boy. "I will pay you for it, bábuskha," he said to the old woman. "You ruin them that way, the good-for-nothings," said the old woman. "He ought to be treated so that he would remember it for a whole week." "Eh, bábuskha, bábuskha," said Avdyéitch, "that is right according to our judgment, but not according to God's. If he is to be whipped for an apple, then what do we deserve for our sins?" The old woman was silent. Avdyéitch told her the parable of the khozyáin who forgave a debtor all that he owed him, and how the debtor went and began to choke one who owed him. The old woman listened and the boy stood listening. "God has commanded us to forgive," said Avdyéitch, "else we, too, may not be forgiven. All should be forgiven, and the thoughtless especially." The old woman shook her head and sighed. "That's so," said she; "but the trouble is that they are very much spoiled." "Then we, who are older, must teach them," said Avdyéitch. "That's just what I say," remarked the old woman. "I myself had seven of them—only one daughter is left." And the old woman began to relate where and how she lived with her daughter, and how many grandchildren she had. "Here," she says, "my strength is only so-so, and yet I have to work. I pity the youngsters—my grandchildren—how nice they are! No one gives me such a welcome as they do. Aks'intka won't go to any one but me. (Bábuskha, dear bábuskha, loveliest!)"—and the old woman grew quite sentimental. "Of course it is a childish trick. God be with him," said she, pointing to the boy. The woman was just about to lift the bag upon her shoulder, when the boy ran up and says, "Let me carry it, bábuskha: it is on my way." The old woman nodded her head and put the bag on the boy's back. Side by side they both passed along the street. And the old woman even forgot to ask Avdyéitch to pay for the apple.

* A History of England in the Eighteenth Century. By W. E. H. Lecky. Volumes V and VI. D. Appleton & Co. $2.25 each.

* Ivan Ilyitch, and Other Stories, by Count Lyof N. Tolstoi. Translated from the Russian by Nathan Haskell Dole. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.

Still more effective is the tale of the "Two Old Men," who start on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. One of them gets engaged in an act of charity on the way, and spending all he has, is obliged to give up his pilgrimage and turn back to his home. The other old man proceeds to his destination, and sees in a vision there his companion arrived before him. It is a beautiful version in fable form of the truth that mercy is better than sacrifice.

Four very short stories, grouped under the heading "Texts for Wood-cuts," variously suggest such lessons as the following:

The old woman went on, "I am speaking the truth, not jesting. We sought for happiness for half a century, and as long as we were rich we did not find it; but now that we have nothing left, and have to go out to service, we have found such happiness that we ask for nothing better." "But wherein consists your happiness now?" "Well, in this: while we were rich, my old man and I never had an hour's rest. We never had time to talk, nor to think about our souls, nor to pray to God. There was nothing for us but care. When we had guests, it was a bother how to treat them, what to give them, so that they might not talk ill about us. Then, when guests went away, we had to look after our work-people: they must have rest, they must have enough to eat, and we must see to it that nothing that is ours gets lost. So we sinned. Then again, care lest the wolf should kill a colt or a calf, or lest thieves should drive off our horses. You lay down to sleep, you can't sleep for fear the sheep trample the lambs. You go out, you walk in the night: you just get yourself calmed down—again, care how to get food for the winter. Besides this, my old man and I never agreed. He says we must do so, and I say we must do so; and we begin to quarrel—we sin. So we lived in worry and care, in worry and care, and never knew the happiness of life." "Well, and now?" "Now when my old man and I get up in the morning we always have a talk, in love and sympathy; we have nothing to quarrel about, nothing to worry about; our only care is to serve our khozyáin. We work according to our strength, we work willingly, so that our khozyáin may not lose, but gain. When we come in we have dinner, we have supper, we have kumys. If it is cold we have our kizydá to warm us, and a sheepskin shuba. And we have time to talk and think about our souls, and to pray to God. For fifty years we sought for happiness, and only now we have found it!"

Another group of four "Popular Legends" do similar service with the foregoing, inculcating by means of fragments of what might be called folk-lore the soundest principles of Christian philosophy.

The closing story, or "Skazka," "Ivan the Fool," is in some respects the best of the set, as it also is the sharpest and most telling in its reflections upon Russian history and life. Three brothers figure in it, one who gathers vast armies and lives by their conquests, one who amasses great sums of gold and lives by the glitter of it, and one Ivan, who is "a fool" without either power or wealth. And this is the moral:

Ivan is still living, and all the people are thronging to his dominions: and his brothers have come to him, and he supports them. Whoever comes and says, "Give us food,"—"All right," says he; "you're welcome! we have plenty of everything." There is only one regulation in his tsardom: Whoever has callous hands comes to the table; and who has not, gets the scraps!

In this last story, as in several of the others, a devil and devilkings play amusing parts, always to the discomfiture of the selfish and despotic and the benefit of the poor and worthy; and by this means M. Tolstoi's philosophy of human life gets reinforcement from the supernatural.

Mr. Dole's translation is literal to the degree of roughness; needlessly so at times. The Russian idiom is not displeasing, but is allowed more liberty than is necessary. A glossary is appended, and frequent footnotes elucidate the original words left in the text. Not a few of these tales would be good religious tracts for general circulation, and all ought to touch the conscience and quicken the spirit of brotherly love, while a few might act as sparks to a socialistic powder mine.

NORWAY NIGHTS AND RUSSIAN DAYS.*

THE cover of this book is pretentious and in poor taste. The contents are unpretentious and delightful. It is some time since we have lighted upon a pleasanter little book of travels. The field under description—Norway, Sweden, Finland, and parts of Russia—is comparatively fresh. The travelers—three cultivated and observant Englishwomen—are agreeable company. The narrator's style is that of a practical and self-possessed writer. The pretty wood-cuts sprinkled through the pages are always interesting, and sometimes, we fancy, based on original drawings. And in typography the book is dainty and captivating. About 200 pages are devoted to Norway, Sweden, and Finland; about 100 to Russia, but St. Petersburg and Moscow monopolize these. In the Scandinavian division of the book there is greater variety and more to entertain.

The tour described was taken as lately as last summer. Mrs. Davis and her two companions took the roundabout way through Germany to Copenhagen, and thence by steamer to Christiania, of which city there is a pleasant account; beginning with the dining-room of the Victoria Hotel, "a pretty pavilion in the garden, covered with striped red and white linen," and with a huge mass of sparkling ice rising like a glacier from the center of the table. Christiania is not a handsome town, has a plain but substantial palace, a small but flourishing university, and a good museum and picture-gallery. Two or three days suffice for Christiania, with its 150,000 people, and—to quote from a local guide-book in English—its "several establishments for informations, destined for boys and girls, together with many others establishments founded for more specially use." The most curious possession of the town is the remains of an old Viking ship which was found buried at Gokstad.

From Christiania our travelers journeyed 20 miles by railway through a fertile country, 20 miles by steamer over Lake Mjösen, and then mostly by post chaise the rest of the way over the Gudbrandsdal and Romsdal valleys to Molde on the western coast, whence they took the steamer for the conventional trip to Trondhjem, Hammerfest, and the North Cape. Posting in Norway is a novel and delightful mode of travel. If you are alone you ride in a "kariol," a long-shafted, two-wheeled chaise without any top, yourself driving, with your post-boy mounted in a seat behind. If there are two or three of you, with a driver, you have a more capacious vehicle called a "trille." The facilities are furnished by the farmers to government order. Says Mrs. Davis:

* Norway Nights and Russian Days. By S. M. Henry Davis. Illustrated. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25.

Throughout our six days of posting we had nothing to say but praise—of men, women, and accommodations; for this is one of the very best posting routes in the country. . . . The stations, which are all farm-houses and bear the names of their owners, are from seven to ten miles apart. As we drive into the inclosure we address the first person we see with "God morgen; var Saa god, Heste" ("Good morning; if you please, horses."). . . . While the farmer or his boys are changing horses at the stations and a new Skyds-gut, or post-boy, takes his place on each vehicle, we enter the sitting-room; a pleasant mannered woman shows us the Dag-bog, or visitors' day-book, where we inscribe our names in obedience to required custom, also stating our destination and the number of horses we require. . . . Throughout this valley, which is the most comfortable part of Norway for posting, the farm-houses are perfectly clean, the sitting-rooms cheerful with pots of growing flowers. . . . We found the beds comfortable as to linen and eider-down pillows and duvets for cool nights; but they are decidedly Procrustean for long-limbed sleepers. The food, served on coarse white table linen woven by hand-loom in the family, is wholesome and palatable. Beef and mutton are scarcely known; but fish, generally trout fresh from the river, veal, chickens, game, ptarmigan and wood-grouse, dried reindeer tongues—delicate and savory—good coffee, milk, eggs, and certain excellent sweets form a menu that ought to satisfy any modern Lucullus. . . . The bread is of several sorts . . . and invariably the national Fladbrod, a round, very thin and crisp cake about the size of a large dinner-plate, stamped with tracery, and generally made of oat or rye meal. . . . Their tea is not the beverage that cheers. . . . Pancakes form the usual sweet dish. . . . The butter is tasteless and untempting. . . . The prices are very low; never more than forty cents, American currency, for dinner or supper; twenty cents for morning coffee, eggs, and bread.

Taking scenery, accommodations, and rates together, Mrs. Davis presents traveling in Norway in a very attractive light. The grandeur of the fiords, the pastoral beauty of the valleys, the amiability of the natives, the singular charm of the late and early twilight, the picturesque costumes of the people and their simple and often quaint manners, make up an almost perfect surrounding. Expenses by the way will average about $5 a day.

We cannot accompany our excursionists step by step along the coast, nor pause with them at Trondhjem, or Tromsø, or Hammerfest, and can only indulge this glimpse over their shoulder of the swiftly passing scene at the North Cape, which they had come so far to see:

Standing there almost alone, with the silent helmsman at the unmoving wheel, and one or two spell-bound spectators, the poetry of the scene was irresistible. The sun, two and a half degrees above the northern horizon, with no pomp or panoply of cloud about him, cast a dazzling sheen over the smooth reflecting waves. Fountains of spray from disporting whales glistened against the pale primrose sky. A single snowy bird skimmed over the surface, its wings tipped with gold as it flew beyond the sight. Far behind us were the dreary islands untenanted by humanity, all Europe and Asia, the emotions and pursuits of busy life, receding into shadowy indistinctness; in front lay the immeasurable sea, quivering in light till lost in indefinite distance. The stillness was almost appalling; not even a ripple broke upon our anchored ship. The light upon the sky and water was not the light of day, nor yet of night, but an ineffably tender blending of both in some divine alembic.

Sweden Mrs. Davis aptly characterizes as a "parenthesis between Norway and Russia," and it gets but a single chapter at her hands, most of which is devoted to Stockholm. From Stockholm the party crossed by steamer to Abo in Finland, thence to Helsingfors, and so on to St. Petersburg, of which city, with its quays, palaces, churches, cupolas, and watch-towers, she gives a vivid and satisfying description, and the book closes in fascinating Moscow, to whose sights there is no end.

YESTERDAYS WITH ACTORS.*

THIS is the first book to bear the imprint of Cupples & Hurd, the new Boston publishing house, of which Mr. Cupples, late of Cupples, Upham & Co., is the head. Its general appearance does great credit to them. Kate Reingolds, its author, now Mrs. Erving Winslow, was once the leading lady at the Boston Museum, and as such is probably best known, though of late, having retired from the stage, she has attracted some attention by her readings in various cities.

Mrs. Winslow's debut was made at Mr. John Rice's Theatre, in Chicago, in a small part, and she says: "For the sake of encouragement to others, let me say that my novitiate was an utter failure, most awkward, unpromising, and uninspired." However, after years of struggles, she made a place for herself in the profession, and at various times belonged to the companies of some of the best-known actors of the last decade.

The book consists largely of sketches, anecdotes, and reminiscences of various people, such as Charlotte Cushman, Edwin Forrest, John Brougham, Laura Keane, E. A. Sothorn, Agnes Robertson, William Warren, and many others whom she met during her long career before the public. Many of these sketches have appeared at intervals in the Boston Sunday Herald. Of the book she says in the introduction:

These then are only a few way-side notes, culled from a public career, which, by reason of its hard work, knew but little pleasure save the blessed one which bread-winners, toiling for those they love, alone can understand. As they are written so must they be read, as one would listen to a voice in the gloaming—not in the spirit of criticism, for that they are beneath it no one knows better than the story-teller. Lacking even a spice of gossip, these trifles may be without flavor, but such as they are, Nil nisi bonum. Innocent and wholesome, it is hoped that they can be read by young eyes, and upon young ears fall harmless.

The illustrations consist of eight or ten full-page phototype plates, reproduced from old and unique photographs, and numerous vignettes interspersed throughout the text. The book is written in an easy, running style, and although there is nothing greatly valuable about it in the way of information, it will be found thoroughly readable by any one who ever goes to a theatre. A good index would add greatly to its usefulness.

A second edition has already been issued.

BOSWELL.

Boswell's early attempts in literature were not more foolish than his eccentricities in private life; and the most simple explanation of these absurdities is that they were the result of his passion for notoriety, and of his indifference, or blindness, to the ridiculous position in which this failing often placed him. It is, however, fair to state that there are other reasons which may account for some of the weak points in his character. His father and mother were cousins, and it is supposed that his mental peculiarities were partly due to the close relationship of his parents. But notwithstanding these peculiarities, or partly, perhaps, as Macaulay suggests, on account of them, he was the author of the biography on which the great essayists have exhausted all the language of eulogy; which has been reprinted in nearly every form and size; and of which the present is the third magnificent edition that has appeared within the last four years. But if, as Carlyle states, Boswell, "out of the fifteen millions that then lived and had bed and board in the British Islands, has provided us with a greater pleasure than any other individual," he himself found more pleasure in this world than most of his fifteen million contemporaries. His capacity for enjoyment was almost unbounded, and was increased by his exceeding good humor, which, Burke said, was so natural in him that he deserved no credit for it. There was hardly a desire in his life that was not fulfilled, or an ambition that was not realized. He managed even to find gratification from those sources which, to ordinary mortals, yield only pain and annoyance. He loved wine and he loved good fellowship, as he often confessed, and in those days there were many opportunities of indulging these tastes. On the morning after a night's carouse, when smarting from his over-indulgence, he felt immense pleasure in remorse and in his solemn vows of reformation; and a few hours later, after he had partly got over the effects of his debauch, he persuaded himself (to use his own words) that "his last night's riot was no more than such a social excess as may happen without much moral blame." When his health was seriously injured from a course of these drinking bouts he imagined himself the victim of hypochondria, and was conscious of a certain dignity in suffering from the same complaint as his "revered friend." Another strange feature of Boswell's character was his morbid love of being present at executions; and he probably attended at more of those disgusting scenes than any of his contemporaries, with the exception of the hangman and the ordinary of Newgate. He delighted in making the acquaintance of celebrated characters, and he had a keen appreciation of the charms of female society; and, in his intimacy with Mrs. Rudd, he was able to gratify both these desires at the same time. — F. Grant in the London Academy.

—The London Punch has reproduced its caricatures of political personages and events during Queen Victoria's reign in a form distinct by themselves. They make a diverting comment on this the last half-century of English history.

* Yesterdays with Actors. By Catherine Mary Reingolds-Winslow. Illustrated. Cupples & Hurd. $2.00.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, JULY 23, 1887.

Returned at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

I am bound by my own definition of criticism—a disinterested endeavor to learn and propagate the best that is known and thought in the world.
— MATTHEW ARNOLD.

. Mr. Howells, summering in a "long, low, rambling cottage on the sunset side" of Lake George, has received lately a visit from a correspondent of the New York Tribune, and has yielded to that inquisitor some particulars of his present employment, and of his current literary opinions. Mr. Howells, it seems, is now writing about four hours a day on a new novel which he has just begun, and which he hopes to have far enough along by October to be named. Its scene is a New England country town. Mr. Thomas Hardy, Mr. Howells thinks he may say, "is a great novelist;" Mr. Wm. Black he considers "able, skillful;" but "the Russian novelists lead the world." Tolstoi, he affirms, "occupies to all fiction the same relation that Shakespeare occupies to all drama." Next to Tolstoi in his estimate stands Turgénieff. These two men are enough to make Mr. Howells prepared to say that "the greatest writers of fiction that the world has produced are both Russians." Dickens was "a man of his times;" Zola is "natural and true, but he might better be more so;" Gogol comes "much closer to the high art of natural fiction than either Dickens or Balzac." And, finally:

A true arrangement of the literatures in which realism has obtained the supremacy over romance would place the Russian first; the French, by virtue of Zola's strength, second; the Spanish next; the Norwegian fourth, the Italian fifth, and the English last.

It is not to be supposed that Mr. Howells had any opportunity to revise the report of this interview, and it must therefore be read with caution; but there are in it some touches of manner and expression which those who know our brilliant American novelist himself will accept as internal evidence of its substantial truthfulness. Plainly enough Mr. Howells is a great admirer of his Russian co-laborers.

. Summer schools seem to be gaining in number, and therefore in popularity if not in usefulness. We have received the program of such a school of "History and Romance," at Deerfield, Mass., with sessions at intervals from July 13 to August 27. Among inviting instructors and subjects we notice that Mr. Cable reads on "Fiction as a Vehicle for Truth," Professor James K. Hosmer on "Sir Henry Vane," Mr. Winsor on "Benedict Arnold's Treason," Mr. N. H. Dole on "Russian Novelists and Count Tolstoi," Charles Dudley Warner on "Education," and Samuel A. Drake on "Folk-Lore." Four papers on Arthurian Romance by Miss E. L. Chase are promised for August. Deerfield is a delightful school-room for the studious consideration of such themes, and "romance" if not "history" will doubtless receive some practical illustrations between school hours.

. The Concord School of Philosophy opened its ninth year's sessions last week, with an attendance fully up to the highest mark in numbers and representing a wide stretch of the country outside of New England. The men are in a majority. Among the ladies present was Mrs. Emerson. Mr. W. T. Harris opened the consideration of Aristotle and his work with a paper on his "Doctrine of Reason," and Professor Davidson spoke the first evening on "The Poetics of Aristotle in its Application to the Drama." The general subject was continued on the following days, until it gave place to papers on "Greek Education up to Aristotle," by Professor Davidson, on "the Divine Nemesis in the Greek Drama and in Shakespeare," by Dr. Edward Montgomery of Texas, and on "Marlow and his Successors," by Mr. Sanborn. On Saturday Dr. A. P. Peabody led the assembly back to "The Ethics of Aristotle."

. There has recently died in England a gentleman of remarkable personal history for his combination of rare physical and intellectual powers. This was Mr. Theodore Walrond, whom the Spectator characterizes as the best "all-round" man of his time. At Rugby he carried away all honors, both of school-room and play-ground, and at sixteen he was "Captain of the school," the youngest boy who had ever held that proud post. He was in it when Arnold died. Whether at study or at sport he seemed to do everything with equal and astonishing ease. At Oxford it was the same story as at Rugby: first at his books, first at the oar, first among his comrades at every point. He was Stanley's and Clough's and Congreve's nearest friend. Having sailed in safety through the Tractarian seas, he first went back to Rugby as an assistant master, then returned to Balliol as fellow and tutor, and in 1856 was appointed examiner to the Civil Service Commission, with which he remained connected in one higher capacity after another until his death. He was an intimate companion all his life of Dean Stanley, and was engaged on his biography, for which he had collected all materials.

COMPOSITE PORTRAITS.

SINCE speaking briefly in its last issue of a volume of memorial tributes to Henry Ward Beecher, the Literary World happened to be lounging in the public square of one of our university towns, and saw in a shop window a picture which curiously enough brought that book back to mind, and in connection with it awakened a train of thought which we will venture to share with the reader. This picture was a "composite photograph," so called, of a recently graduated college class, combining into one physiognomy the lineaments of a hundred and fifty different young men. In making a "composite photograph," as we understand, separate negatives upon a uniform scale and in a uniform position are made of all the different sitters, and for printing are placed in a swinging frame something like a pendulum, which restricts the exposure of each negative of the set to its fractional proportion only of the time needed for the exposure of a single negative. The result of this process, which we fear we have not made wholly plain, is to impart to the sensitized paper a series of impressions which overlay and blend into each other, until a portrait is produced in which every individual countenance is subdued by the individuality of all the others, and a general average obtained which approaches almost to an ideal.

There is something extremely curious, even unreal, in such a composite portrait. It seems to be a representative portrait of humanity at large, rather than of a single person. There is a hazy indistinctness of outline, a softening of feature, an obliteration of physical idiosyncrasy, a conglomeration of many into one, a production of a typical face which gathers up into itself what is best and poorest, strongest and weakest, in many score of faces, and presents to you not a college class but a college man.

Is it not by an analogous process that we obtain the most ample and most nearly complete conception of any personal life and character? Take, for example, these hundred different impressions of Henry Ward Beecher—a good subject, certainly—as collected and arranged by Mr. Bok, and combine them so far as possible into a single portrait; the process may be somewhat mechanical, but after all there is a curious effect produced by it, and as, closing the eyes, we stand in imagination before this many-sided man, as his many sides are presented one after another by different people occupying different points of view, the image takes on an ideality which becomes really striking. To illustrate we cull at random and bring together below a few of those varying impressions of Mr. Beecher to which leading men here testify:

Murat Halstead: "One of the master workmen of the world."

Lyman Abbott: "Most Titanesque to those who knew him most intimately."

Dr. W. A. Hammond: "One of those few great men whose minds have no element of mysteriousness about them."

Dr. Bartol: "I call him phenomenal rather than great."

Professor Hitchcock: "An American through and through."

Dr. Gladden: "With him patriotism was religion."

O. B. Frothingham: "A forward-looking man, expectant, sanguine, believing."

Edward Eggleston: "A tree of vigorous growth and burst the bark on all sides."

Admiral Porter: "I could compare him only to the mighty falls of Niagara."

Robert Collyer: "His mind was like fine wheat."

Dr. Schaff: "His mind was a flower garden in perpetual bloom."

Charles Dudley Warner: "It seemed as if you could see his mind flash."

Dr. Holm es: "Sometimes uncomfortably hot to meddle with."

Gen. Sherman: "More like an army comrade than a minister of the Gospel."

Geo. Wm. Curtis: "Touching ordinary human life at every point."

Geo. W. Childs: "His abounding physical health and his joyousness of nature."

What an all-round figure emerges when these views have been fairly fused in the mind! The process is not, of course, precisely parallel to that by which the composite photograph is obtained; for that is the commingling of many individualities into one; and here we have only the commingling of many different respects of the same individuality. But this is and must be the condition of the surest and most faithful conceptions of personality.

The historical portrait, to be good and true, must be a composite portrait. No one painter can give us that adequate presentment of his subject which will be accepted as final. England has its point of view towards Napoleon, and the English impression of Napoleon has been forced into history as accurate and just, whereas it is but one impression, and needs supplementing or abridgment by union with others. What is true as to historical characters, strictly so called, is still more strikingly true with respect to great names and great works in literature. This is the final function and the widest field of literary criticism, to collect and fuse into unity a variety of judgments, any one of which alone would be partial, imperfect, and misleading. For this reason no one judgment of book or author can be adopted as conclusive, any more than any one critic can be accepted as infallible. Every individuality has limitations based on the finiteness of the human mind, the infirmity of the human powers. This is the use of individuality, that one combines with others into largeness and fullness of effect not otherwise attainable. It is good that we are made to differ in opinion, as well as in other ways, for out of these very differences grow a loftier unity and a more effective force than would otherwise be possible. He is the best critic who can receive and unify the largest number of impressions into one composite view, and he is the best user of critics who can dissolve and mix the views of the many into a comprehensive and homogeneous summary of all.

TWO OPINIONS OF TOLSTOI

From Mr. Maurice Thompson's Address before the American Association of Writers at Indianapolis.

Just the other day Mr. Howells informed the world that Tolstoi, a Russian socialistic "crank," is "incomparably the greatest novelist that ever lived." Now, Mr. Howells has the right to believe this and say so, but at the root of this astounding declaration lies the fact that Tolstoi is a rich man who prefers to live in brutal vulgarity; a man who pretends to hate riches, but who clings to all his cash; a heartless theorist, who sends his daughters to work in the harvest fields with brutal peasants, who pretends to believe that no evil should be forcibly resisted; who makes a pretense of shoemaking in order to attract attention to himself; who dresses like a clown for the same purpose, and who writes novels as dirty and obscene as the worst part of Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass,

*From Mr. Howells's Introduction to Tolstoi's Sebastopol. [Harper & Brothers.]*

I do not know how it is with others to whom these books of Tolstoi's have come, but for my own part I cannot think of them as literature in the artistic sense at all. Some people complain to me, when I praise them, that they are too long, too diffuse, too confused, that the characters' names are hard to pronounce, and that the life they portray is very sad and not amusing. In the presence of these criticisms I can only say that I find them nothing of the kind, but that each history of Tolstoi's is as clear, as orderly, as brief, as something I have lived through myself; as for the names, they are necessarily Russian. It is when some one tells me they are "pessimistic" that I reply despair. I have always supposed pessimism to be the doctrine of the prevalence of evil, and these books perpetually teach me that the good prevails, and always will prevail whenever men put self aside, and strive simply and humbly to be good. We are all so besotted with dreams and vanities that we have come to think that the right will accomplish itself spectacularly, splendidly; but Tolstoi makes us know that it never can do so. He teaches such of us as will hear him that the Right is the sum of each man's poor little personal effort to do right, and that the success of this effort means daily, hourly self-renunciation, self-abasement, the sinking of one's pride in absolute squalor before duty. This is not pleasant; the heroic ideal of righteousness is more picturesque, more attractive; but is this not the truth? Let any one try, and see! I cannot think of any service which imaginative literature has done the race so great as that which Tolstoi has done in his conception of Karenin at that crucial moment when the cruelly outraged man sees that he cannot be good with dignity. This leaves all tricks of fancy, all effects of art, immeasurably behind.

FROM some acquaintance with the writings of Count Tolstoi we are led to think that Mr. Howells's opinion of them comes much nearer to the truth than Mr. Maurice Thompson's, both above quoted. The obvious difference in temper of these two judges is not more clearly in Mr. Howells's favor than are the facts of the case. We should be very sorry to have Mr. Thompson's portrait of Tolstoi accepted as correct, or his version of Tolstoi's method and motive of life pass into currency as historical. Mr. Howells, it seems to us, is not only far more charitable in his interpretation of this great Russian novelist's character and the construction he puts upon his work; he is at the same time far more penetrating and sympathetic therein. Mr. Thompson stands outside of Tolstoi, and sees nothing but the externals of his life and performance; Mr. Howells has boldly, intuitively, entered within the man's soul and possessed himself of the mind that is in him. Mr. Howells has written nothing lately that we thank him more for than this swift, sure, settling statement of the secret of Tolstoi.

Nobody pretends that Tolstoi is American. If he were he would not be Tolstoi. He is Russian. Russian is not and never can be American. The standards that obtain in the land of cossacks and serfs cannot match the standards that have been established with us. In some respects it is well that they cannot. The natural is always better than the artificial.

We find it impossible to read Tolstoi without conviction of his utter sincerity; and the reality and meaning of his religious experience we have never seen any reason to question. How any one can turn the pages of his Sebastopol, or of his contemporaneous volume of sketches entitled Ivan Ilyitch, and not surrender totally to the intellectual power, the moral majesty, the thoroughly Christian feeling behind them, we do not understand. As Mr. Howells finely says in another part of this preface which we have not quoted: "If you have ears to hear or eyes to see, listen and look, and you will have the sense of inexhaustible significance."

AMERICAN DIALECT.

MR. MAURICE THOMPSON'S address at Indianapolis the other day, before the "American Association of Writers," from which we have made one quotation elsewhere in reference to Tolstoi, contained also the following remarks upon dialect literature:

Have you noted the fact that at least four fifths of the short stories published in our first-class magazines and periodicals are dialect stories? If you have not, go to the bound volumes of the magazines and to your newspaper files and you will note it, for it is a fact. Now, what is the meaning of this? Is it American taste making a constant and irresistible demand for such jargon, or is it a reflex of the foreign estimate of Americanism? If you will consult the Encyclopedia Britannica you will be informed in one breath how great a writer and how eminently American Mr. Lowell is, and in the next breath you will be told that a poem beginning "Under the yaller pines I house" is one of his poetical masterpieces. As an American I resent being told that we are a people whose classical literature is best represented by the "Biglow Papers" and "Major Jones's Courtship," because it is not true. As a Western man I deny with vehemence that Mr. Howe's "Story of a Country Town" truly represents Western life and character. As one reared in the South, I declare to you that the Southern people are not a set of Chilhowee dialect drivers, nor are the creoles the best representatives of American life in the Gulf States. You will understand—you shall understand—that I am not flinging stones at our dialect writers. I bear positive testimony to their great genius—I praise them sincerely; but I refuse to admit that so-called dialect literature is of a high order, no matter what genius may do for it, and I will not accept it as the true note, or as the highest reach of the American strain in literary art.

As regards an undue proportion of dialect literature in the magazines we are inclined to think that Mr. Thompson may be accurate in his statement, though at first it seems a little extravagant. We have not the files of all the magazines at hand at this moment of writing, but the last seven numbers of one of them happen to be on our table, and turning to these we find that of the seven "short stories" in these seven numbers, five are dialect stories. What is true in the case of this magazine is not unlikely to be true of others.

The fondness for dialect in fiction probably grows out of a taste for the picturesque in character and scenery and life with which dialect is associated, and out of a feeling that well-simulated dialect contributes to that "discovery of life" which Mr. Gilder defines realism as being; while at the same time it furnishes more "local color" to description and romance than almost anything else. No picture of representative American scenery can compare in power to arrest attention with a report of a representative American dialogue, and nobody can deny that the negroes and the "crackers" and the "Yanks" have furnished that dialogue in the past, whatever may prove to be the case in the future. This is owing to the fact that the average mind is always more intensely interested by the human element in nature than by nature itself—meaning here by nature the world of sea and land, of mountain and forest and river.

Nevertheless the foremost American authors, while they have made the most of the human element, have not found it necessary to import dialect into their pages. Lowell has, and as Mr. Thompson points out, famously so; Dr. Holmes has a little; but Hawthorne and Bryant, Emerson, Longfellow and Whittier not at all. The soundness of Mr. Thompson's criticism in the abstract may be discerned in the mental revolt which most of us would feel at any association of dialect with these great and shining names.

Who are, or have been, our leading American dialect writers, besides Lowell and Holmes? Mrs. Stowe would naturally be mentioned early, Rose Terry Cooke, Miss Phelps, Miss Murfree, and Sophie May; Bret Harte, John Hay, and Edward Eggleston; Wm. M. Baker, if we remember aright, and George W. Cable; Joel Chandler Harris and Richard M. Johnston; and in a lower group by themselves, "Artemus Ward," "Josh Billings," "Petroleum V. Nasby," "Orpheus C. Kerr," and "Mark Twain," all of whom we will name by their pseudonyms only, and whose proper place as dialect writers may not be conceded by every reader without a question.

Now we think that all candid students of American literature would say that to cut out of it the dialect contributions of Mrs. Stowe, Miss Murfree, Bret Harte, Mr. Cable, and Mr. Harris, not to mention others, would be to leave a wide vacancy. The thick-lipped negro, the oily creole, the nasal New Englander, the lanky mountaineer, have been integral factors in the development of American life; they are a part of the soil, and a true literature of the soil cannot do without them. The soil is changing, it is true, and as it changes the literature will change with it. But the dialect of these classes is as integral a part of our literature as the log cabin is of our landscape or the miner an indelible figure in our history.

SCHURZ'S LIFE OF CLAY.*

MR. CARL SCHURZ as a true German could not limit his biography of the famous Kentuckian to the one volume which has sufficed for the other American statesmen thus far treated in the series. German authors are nothing if not voluminous. But Mr. Schurz, with all the Teutonic virtues of thoroughness and comprehensiveness, is also master of an English style which few of our writers to the manner born can rival for strength and picturesqueness, and to which we know of no equal among his countrymen who write our language. This life of Henry Clay is really a narrative of the development of American politics during the fifty years covered by his career, and we should be sorry if a line of it had been left unwritten. Throughout the whole story we feel ourselves instructed and led by a mind of rare breadth of view and uncommon judicial spirit.

In comparison with even the best of the previous volumes of the series, we notice at once the advantage in dealing with public questions which Mr. Schurz's own experience in the Senate and the Cabinet has given him. Henry Clay's long public life was concerned with all the problems of our nation's destiny for half a century. His first effort as a politician was on the side of those endeavoring to rid Kentucky of slavery in the last years of the last century, and his final exertions went to renew the fruitless series of compromises which had recurred from time to time in the irrepressible conflict between slavery and free labor. In questions of internal improvements, banks, and tariffs, Clay was ever prominent. A perennial candidate for the Presidency, he learned the bitter lesson of defeat when his party was weak, and the still more bitter lesson of the availability of mediocrity when his party was strong. Through all these experiences of statesmanship and partisan politics Mr. Schurz traces the great Kentucky orator with an admiring but discerning eye, marking his defects of education and of mind, his defections from integrity under the fascination of the envied White House, but ever honoring his substantial truth, his sound American instincts, and his manly heart. Clay had "a larger share in national legislation than any other contemporary statesman," but he "might have avoided grave errors as a statesman had his early training been such as to form his mind for more thorough thinking.

Mr. Schurz never stands before his subject in a censorious spirit. Clay's winning personality has conquered him, as it has conquered all previous biographers, only we have here no blind eulogy, but a true portrait of the great man on all sides as he was. We should like to quote one or two of the admirable characterizations of the prominent Americans of the first half of this century with which these pages abound, but space forbids our more than mentioning those of J. Q. Adams, and President Jackson, Clay's implacable and too successful enemy, as especially felicitous. Clay himself was so various a man that several columns of Mr. Schurz's finely discriminating judgments would be needed to set him forth. "His oft-quoted word that he would 'rather be right than be President' was spoken at a time when he was more desirous of being President than sure of being right." But "whatever Clay's weaknesses of character and errors in statesmanship may have been, almost everything he said or did was illumined by a grand conception of the destinies of his country, a glowing national spirit, a lofty patriotism. . . . It was a just judgment which he pronounced on himself when he wrote, 'If any one desires to know the leading and paramount object of my public life, the preservation of the Union will furnish him the key.' " A better introduction to the knowledge of American history from 1800 to 1850 than these two fascinating volumes it has not been our fortune to have read.

TOLSTOI'S SEBASTOPOL.*

THE works of Tolstoi come thick and fast. This makes the second this week. Let them come, great, solid, masterful works that they are, alive with a tremendous vitality, aglow with the heat of a soul kindled by the divine fire!

On the whole we think we prefer that Tolstoi should come to us by way of France rather than direct from Russia. There is something Kamschatkan, jargon-like, about him in the latter case; in the former he is softened, polished, refined a little. Just a little; his native strength and vigor are unabated.

The history of the Crimean War has been written by Kinglake; what we have in Tolstoi's Sebastopol is a picture of it; a series of pictures, three, taken respectively in December, 1854, and in May and August, 1855; the first just after the bloody battles of Balaclava and Inkermann, the second just after the terrible first assault on the Malakoff and the Redan, the third at the time of the fall of the famous fortress by the capture of the Malakoff mamelon. Anybody who has visited one of those popular war cycloramas of the day which are planted in our large cities, "The Battle of Gettysburg" in Boston, for example, or "Lookout Mountain" in Kansas City, will understand what this book is like when we say that its words place the reader in the midst—in the very midst—of the Russian bomb-proofs at Sebastopol during the hottest days of siege. The first scene is a picture simply; in the second we follow the daily fortunes of an officer, and some dramatic action with dialogue is introduced; in the third we have the sensations of a youthful ensign, assigned to duty for the first time, receiving his baptism of fire, and falling tragically in the fight. The extract which follows is from the second of these divisions, and illustrates not only the vividness of the battle painting, but the wonderful analysis of human emotions which marks all Tolstoi's writings:

We left Praskoukine coming back with Mikhailoff. He reached a less exposed place and began to breathe again, when he perceived, on turning around, the sudden light of a flash. The sentinel shouted, "Mor—tar!" And one of the soldiers who followed added, "It is coming straight into the bastion!" Mikhailoff looked. The luminous point of the bomb-shell seemed to stop directly over his head, exactly the moment when it was impossible to tell what direction it was going to take. That was for the space of a second. Suddenly, redoubling its speed, the projectile came nearer and nearer. The sparks of the fuse could be seen flying out, the dismal hissing was plainly audible. It was going to drop right in the midst of the battalion. "To earth!" shouted a voice. Mikhailoff and Praskoukine obeyed. The latter, with shut eyes, heard the shell fall somewhere on the hard earth very near him. A second, which appeared to him an hour, passed, and the shell did not burst. Praskoukine was frightened; then he asked himself what cause he had for fear. Perhaps it had fallen farther away, and he wrongly imagined that he heard the fuse hissing near him. Opening his eyes, he was satisfied to see Mikhailoff stretched motionless at his feet; but at the same time he perceived, a yard off, the lighted fuse of the shell spinning around like a top. A glacial terror, which stifled every thought, every sentiment, took possession of his soul. He hid his face in his hands. Another second passed, during which a whole world of thoughts, of hopes, of sensations, and of souvenirs passed through his mind. "Whom will it kill? Me or Mikhailoff, or indeed both of us together? If it is I, where will it hit me? If in the head, it will be all over; if on the foot, they will cut it off; then I shall insist that they give me chloroform, and I may get well. Perhaps Mikhailoff alone will be killed, and later I will tell how we were close together, and how I was covered with his blood. No, no! it is nearer me—it will be I!" Then he remembered the twelve rubles he owed Mikhailoff, and another debt left at Petersburg, which ought to have been paid long ago. A Bohemian air that he sang the evening before came to his mind. He also saw in his imagination the lady he was in love with in her lilac trimmed bonnet; the man who had insulted him five years before, and whom he had never taken vengeance on. But in the midst of these and many other souvenirs the present feeling—the expectation of death—did not leave him. "Perhaps it isn't going to explode!" he thought, and was on the point of opening his eyes with desperate boldness. But at this instant a red fire struck his eyeballs through the closed lids, something hit him in the middle of the chest with a terrible crash. He ran forward at random, entangled his feet in his sword, stumbled, and fell on his side. "God be praised, I am only bruised." This was his first thought, and he wanted to feel of his breast, but his hands seemed as if they were tied. A vise gripped his head, soldiers ran before his eyes, and he mechanically counted them: "One, two, three soldiers, and, besides, an officer who is losing his cloak!" A new light flashed: he wondered what had fired. Was it a mortar or a cannon? Doubtless a cannon. Another shot, more soldiers—five, six, seven. They passed in front of him, and suddenly he became terribly afraid of being crushed by them. He wanted to cry out, to say that he was bruised, but his lips were dry, his tongue was glued to the roof of his mouth. He had a burning thirst. He felt that his breast was damp, and the sensation of this moisture made him think of water. . . . He would have liked to drink that which drenched him. "I must have knocked the skin off in falling," he said to himself, more and more frightened at the idea of being crushed by the soldiers who were running in crowds before him. He tried again to cry out, "Take me!" But instead of that he uttered a groan so terrible that he was frightened at it himself. Then red sparks danced before his eyes; it seemed as if the soldiers were piling stones on him. The sparks danced more rapidly, the stones piled on him stifled him more and more. He stretched himself out, he ceased to see, to hear, to think, to feel. He had been killed instantly by a piece of shell striking him full in the breast.

*American Statesmen. Life of Henry Clay, by Carl Schurz. In two volumes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.

*Sebastopol. By Count Leo Tolstoi. Tr. from the French by Frank D. Millet. With Introduction by W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers. 75c.

Tolstoï served in the Crimean War. He must have witnessed these scenes with his own eyes. The tenacity of his recollection of details is only equaled by the minuteness of his touch in delineation. His aim is manifest: to depict the horrors—the brutal, bloody, sickening, hardening horrors—of war. But he does it without one word of bitterness, without one gesture of reproach.

"Look! czars, premiers, diplomats, statesmen," he says in effect, "this is War! I simply draw the picture created by your ambitions, prides, jealousies, and selfishnesses, precisely as it is, and ask you just to pause still and look upon it. If you will do so deliberately, reflectively, I am content. I leave you to your own convictions."

JAPAN IN THE LIGHT OF AINO STUDIES.*

THE merit of novelty, at least in Western eyes, is prominent in a volume printed at the "Japan Mail" office, in Yokohama, published by the Imperial University of this wonderful land of the East, as No. 1 of the Memoirs of the Literature College, in the year 1887 (20th year of Meiji), and prefaced with words of thanks to Marquis Tokugana, Marquis Matsumae, and Mr. Nagata Hosei. But other and higher merits of solid interest, excellent arrangement, and literary ability in the presentation of the curious matter of the book, are at once perceived in the work of the Professor of Japanese and Philology, while the Grammar by Mr. Batchelor of the Church Missionary Society and the Bibliography are plainly the work of exact scholars.

"Ainu" (man) is the name by which the Ainos (in the English form of the word) denote themselves. They are the dying remnant of a hairy people who are now confined to the island of Yezo, just north of Nippon (or Japan proper). Prof. Chamberlain, from the evidence of Ainu place-names scattered over the Archipelago, concludes that the Ainos were everywhere the predecessors of the Japanese. Like our Indians, they are being pressed back by civilization, and will probably become extinct much sooner. It is high time, after all the works which have been written referring to this doomed race, that their language should be scientifically analyzed and their folk-lore recorded, "for soon there will be nothing left." To such an investigation of this "curio," for the philologist and the ethnologist, this handsome volume is devoted. The language Prof. Chamberlain, siding with Von Schrenck, regards as one altogether isolated at the present day, and as regards its possible relations to the Aryan family he is skeptical.

The folk-lore and the religious traditions of the Ainos are nowhere recorded in books; they have been gathered with due precaution from the mouths of the simple and comparatively stupid natives now living. The Japanese and the Aino myths are here printed in parallel columns for comparison, the juxtaposition making forcibly apparent the low grade of culture at which the Ainos stand. They account, for instance, for the fact that they are hairy but tailless, by tracing their origin as a race to a beautiful Japanese girl cast on their shore of Yezo, and wedded to a dog, which had assumed human shape. The child of the pair had a tail; after consultation this tail was cut off without pain to the child, and his descendants, the Ainos, owe their exemption from tails to this primitive surgery! Such is the naïve Darwinism of Aino-land. Our ubiquitous friend Rip Van Winkle reappears in the traditions of this curious people, as well as an Isle of Women; but the moral element is conspicuous for its absence. There is much in this scholarly volume of interest to the student of folk-lore and comparative religion, but the ideas veiled in the traditions and myths are extremely childlike. The Ainos have made no deep mark on the history of any other people, not even that of the Japanese. An isolated race, their existence "has been as aimless, as fruitless as is the perpetual dashing of the breakers on the shore of Horobetsu. It leaves behind it nothing save a few names."

*The Language, Mythology, and Geographical Nomenclature of Japan Viewed in the Light of Ainu Studies, by B. H. Chamberlain, including "An Ainu Grammar" by John Batchelor, and a Catalogue of Books relating to Yezo and the Ainos. Published by the Imperial University, Tôkyô.

A TRAGIC MYSTERY.*

THIS is the first of a series of stories of crime and detection in which it is understood that Mr. Julian Hawthorne will work up materials furnished by a New York Inspector of Police. This is the proper way to produce such stories. "Detective stories," so called, are too often concocted out of the imagination of the author, and as a result their parts do not always "hang well together." We have had some ambitious attempts of this kind within recent years, which by reason of clumsiness of plot or artificiality of style have approached perilously near failure. The secret of Poe's success in such a tale as "The Murder in the Rue Morgue," and of Gaboriau, his true yoke-fellow in the same field of composition, lies in the extreme naturalness of place and incident down to the minutest detail, in the clockwork-like precision with which the pieces fit into each other, in the art which conceals art, and in the general ability, that rarest of literary talents, of making the sheerest fiction sound like the baldest fact.

It would be too much to say that Mr. Hawthorne in his present story of A Tragic Mystery has equaled Gaboriau or neared Poe, but it is not too much to say that excepting in two respects he has written the best detective story which the American press has published, within our knowledge, for many years. Of these two exceptions one is the title, which is commonplace and feeble, whereas the title of a book of this character should be something concrete and startling in itself. The other exception is the episode introduced in the 15th and 16th chapters, particularly the 16th, which marks a decided drop in the dignity and otherwise good tone of the book, a moral sag, so to speak, which is a serious objection to the story's going into the hands of pure-minded young people. The reader is here introduced to and detained in the company of a very low set of both sexes, and is even obliged to spend some hours in the chamber of an abandoned woman and her would-be "pal," amidst surroundings and suggestions that are anything but pleasant or edifying.

*A Tragic Mystery. From the Diary of Inspector Byrnes. By Julian Hawthorne. Cassell & Co. $1.00.

With this exception, and it is of a sort that must modify our judgment materially, the book is capital, apparently founded on facts or on a study of facts, extremely ingenious in its management of a complicated mystery, and tracing the unraveling of it in a masterly way. The descriptive passages are vivid and thrilling; the dialogue has the accents of real life; scarcely ever is a false note struck in the language of either prisoner or police; the story begins quietly and moves easily and steadily forward, enchain- ing interest at once, soon becoming absorb- ing, and baffling the curiosity most success- fully until the sudden separation of what was supposed to be one strand into two strands, discloses the truth, the suspected are cleared and the guilty secured.

It would spoil the story for those who will read it to tell it here. We will only say that it turns on the murder of a Frenchman who kept a wine shop on East 26th street, in New York City, and involves a gentleman and his wife of good standing, who barely escape entanglement in a net of ugly circum- stantial evidence.

MINOR FICTION.

The House of the Musician. By Virginia W. Johnson. [Ticknor & Co. Paper series. 50c.] We cannot give so high a rank to The House of the Musician as to that other almost perfect story by the same author, The Neptune Vase, but it is entitled to praise. It may be described as a quietly powerful study of a Venetian interior. The "house of the musician," a typical old dwelling in the city of the lagoons, is finely de- scribed. Here live two beautiful sisters, Marina and Bianca, orphans, with their nurse Gesualda. Young Gerard Grootz, who has come to Venice from the North to study art, becomes a tenant of Marina and Bianca; Marina becomes his model, Bianca his sweetheart, and romance deepens into tragedy when Marina, maddened by dis- appointed love, first for a faithless captain and then for Gerard, takes her own life and attempts her sister's. The suicide of the father is an earlier incident of the story, lending to it some circumstantial features which have to do with the later development. The old Jew usurer, who lives opposite and becomes the creditor of Leonardo Bardi's daughters, is a picturesque accessory figure, and more so even is the quaint dwarf Pippo, who with his alacrity, sharpness, and performing birds, is per- haps the most striking character in the book. Its colorings are sadder, darker, and rich, like a paneled and wainscotted drawing-room of old time. The story moves by description more than by dialogue, is written out of free and familiar converse with Venetian history, scenery, and tradition, and is well written. Its warmth is carefully restrained from anything like sensuous- ness; its intellectual and artistic power is marked; its materials are highly dramatic; its lack is urgency and fire.

The Crusade of the Excelsior. By Bret Harte. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.] We should be glad to be able to say of a new story by Bret Harte that it was interesting in subject, entertain- ing by its novelty, striking in incident and char- acter, genuinely dramatic in action, charged with fine feeling, and shaped by a truly artistic design; but we cannot say all this of The Crusade of the Excelsior, which shines however with the luster of its author's name. The scene is Lower Califor- nia; the historic thread a filibustering expedition thirty years ago; the characters a ship's company of passengers involuntarily set ashore at an old mission and established there in temporary exile. The oily and grandiloquent Señor Per- kins, the drunken Captain Bunker, and a dis- reputable variety actress from San Francisco with many lovers lend melodramatic colors to the piece. The most picturesque and pleasing character is the Padre Esteban, one of those figures whom Mr. Harte can sketch with sin- gular truthfulness and effect. Acquaintance with him is a privilege.

Allan Quatermain. By H. Rider Haggard. [Harper & Brothers. Cloth, 75c. Do., Do., paper, 25c. Do., Do., Rand, McNally & Co., paper, 25c.] This is a "dime novel," pure and simple, if Mr. Haggard did write it, only it is written with more talent than the average blood- and-thunder romance of its class. Let loose a man of lively imagination in Central Africa and there is no telling what he will not produce, especially if he has had some previous practice in preparing literary extravaganzas. Anything more wildly improbable or absurdly grotesque than this story it would be hard to conceive of. Invention there is in it—nothing else, in fact, and incident of the most ghastly description. Quatermain is one of a party of Englishmen who set out for the interior of Africa to discover a fabulous tribe of whites who are said to inhabit an inaccessible region. They are piloted and championed on this expedition by a gigantic Zulu who performs prodigies of valor in the various situations in which the party are placed. At one time they have a battle with the terrible Masai, in order to recover a little daughter of a mission- ary whom the savages have captured, and having in due course slain their 250 victims, take a bath and sit down to tea and toast as if at home in Eng- land. At another time, while crossing a lake, their boat is sucked into an underground river, and after being nearly crushed to death by the overhanging rocks, the party are nearly burned to death by a jet of natural gas before which the flames of Pittsburg pale, and then are nearly gnawed to death by an army of monstrous crabs which attack them at lunch time. In course of time they find the mysterious white folks' coun- try and enter their capital city, Milosis, which is a marvel of splendor, and are duly presented to the sister queens, Nyleptha and Sorais. Nylep- tha and one of the English visitors, Sir Henry Curtis, proceed to fall in love, and after a proper term of courtship are married, first by the high priest of the country and then according to the Book of Common Prayer! Sorais, fired by jeal- ousy, heads an insurrection against her sister; civil war ensues, and a gory battle is fought, in which the giant Zulu performs new exploits but receives his death blow, and out of which Sir Henry and Lady Curtis—if it be proper to term her so—secure their throne in peace. These are the outlines of this precious successor to Jess, She, and King Solomon's Mines. It is a great pity that a flood of this sort of writing seems to have set in. There is no good in it for anybody, though we suppose the boys who get hold of it will devour it.

The Monk's Wedding. By Conrad Ferdinand Meyer. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.25.] There is nothing on the title-page of this book to indicate that it is a translation from the German by Miss Sarah Adams, which it is understood to be. The story is a bit of Paduan romance purport- ing to be told by Dante to a fireside group of com- panions. The monk, under dispensation from his vows, becomes betrothed to one lady whom he does not love, and marries another whom he does love. His bride is assassinated by her rival, and the monk is slain in an attempt to avenge her, and with this two-fold tragedy the tale ends. The stone beneath which the lovers sleep bears this inscription: "Hic jacet mona- chus Astorre cum uxore Antiope. Sepeliebat Azzolinus," meaning: "Here lies the monk Astorre with his wife Antiope. Ezzelin buried them."

Bar Harbor Days. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. Illustrations by Fenn and Hyde. [Harper & Brothers. $1.25.] The ingredients of this book are excellent; the form in which they are served up is fanciful. Mount Desert and the summer pleasure life there furnish a rich and juicy sub- ject; the fourteen wood-cuts which are employed to help illustrate it are dainty and delightful examples of the artist's and engraver's art; Mrs. Harrison's descriptions of this picturesque and popular island are effective; but the story, for it is a story, purports to be told by a pet dog! It is the dog who gives the account of what he saw and heard, the society, the fashion, the flirtations, the scenery, the excursions, the match- making, and the loving. This is unnatural, and throws an air of unreality over the whole. If the composition is intended to please children, that intention must modify the verdict to some extent; otherwise it seems to us that Mrs. Har- rison might have chosen a happier form in which to present her observations.

PASSING MENTION.

Funk & Wagnalls have taken hold of Dr. James M. Ludlow's last year's historical novel, The Captain of the Janisaries, and by means of a new impression will give its circulation a new impulse. A review of it in extenso may be found on p. 234 of our last volume.

Pocket Maps of Georgia and Kentucky, Wyo- ming, New Hampshire, and South Carolina, have been added to Rand, McNally & Co.'s "Shippers' Series" since our last issue.

The J. B. Lippincott Company are putting some of their works of standard fiction into a monthly serial of "Select Novels." Mrs. Wister's translation of E. Marlitt's The Old Mam'-selle's Secret appears under date of July 1. These editions are from the existing plates, in paper covers, at 25c. each.

Ticknor & Co. have published in an antique bijou sort of dress Mr. E. L. Bynner's story of Penelope's Suitors, written in colonial style, and already in favor through the magazines. [50c.]

The Extracts from Pepys's Diary published by Cassell & Co., as No. 74, Vol. II, of their paper-covered "National Library," relate to the years made memorable by the Great Plague and the Great Fire in London. [10c.]

MINOR NOTICES.

Yachts and Yachting. By Captain R. F. Coffin and others. Illustrated. [Cassell & Co. $1.50.]

Cassell & Co. here publish in handsome book form those interesting papers by Captain Coffin on the history of American yachting, which for the last year or so have been appearing in the magazine called Outing. The papers, with an article on the "Mayflower"—"Galatea" races, by Charles E. Clay, one on "American Steam Yachting," by Edward S. Jaffray, and one on "British Yachting," by C. J. C. McAlister, make a large 8vo volume of about 160 pages. The illustrations, and there are one or more on nearly every page, are by Fred. S. Cozzens, and are for the most part very spirited and remarkably correct, as well as beautifully drawn, views of the most famous yachts, from 1857, when the first real yacht club in this country was formed, to the end of the year 1885. We are surprised that but a very few lines are given to the "Puritan"—"Genesta" races, and that in his drawings Mr. Cozzens absolutely ignores the "Puritan." There is a very neat and original design on the cover, and the book should find its way into every yachtsman's library; for aside from the value and interest of the numerous illustrations, we believe it is the only source from which one can derive a complete account, and in almost every case, with the correct "time," of all the important matches and races in the history of American yachting. The book has a table of contents and an alphabetically arranged list of illustrations, but one misses a good index.

PERIODICALS.

Another Englishwoman—this time Mrs. Campbell-Praed—furnishes "Some American Impressions" in the July Temple Bar. They are superficial of course, and likewise of course not altogether favorable. She was tired out by the army of "interviewers" who waylaid her and her party on arrival—you would think from her account that nobody lived in New York but interviewers. New York she found "confusing at first." The hotel life at the "Hoffman" was life in public. Few cabs and ill-paved streets are other items in her bill of complaints. A visit to Mr. Cyrus W. Field's "charming country-house" at Irvington puts her into better humor. Here she is delighted with the Rhine-like beauties of the Hudson, the autumn foliage, and her host's "dreamy and poetic" romance of the laying of the Atlantic cable. (Tell it not in Wall Street—Mr. Cyrus W. Field's "dreamy and poetic" way!) From Irvington Mrs. Campbell-Praed skips to Northampton to get a glimpse of Mr. Cable for the sake of his Grandissimes, and delayed in that, leaves us in the deaf and dumb institution there.

The Overland Monthly grows steadily in interest and value as an expositor of Pacific Coast topics, and of other topics from the Pacific Coast standpoint; but the July number is not so inviting as the June, in which are three excellent articles. That on "Agriculture as an Occupation for Women in California" is one of practical suggestiveness and encouragement; Mr. Freeman's visit "Among the Irrigators of Fresno" gives no exaggerated idea of the wonderful response of the California soil to the touch of water; and the illustrations accompanying the opening paper on the beautiful "Santa Clara Valley" are truthful and satisfying to look upon. These three articles supply information of considerable value.

Deserving of special notice is the series of papers which Rev. S. L. Loomis, a Congregational clergyman, is publishing in The Andover Review upon "Christian Work in London." The facts for this survey were gathered in person and are set forth in a clear and candid way, calculated to enlighten Christian students of social science. Dr. E. A. Lawrence's pictures of "Mission Work in China" are not painted wholly in bright colors.

The birds have now an "organ" engaged in their defense, namely, The Audubon Magazine, devoted to the dissemination of intelligence and sentiment fitted to lessen the wanton killing of them. [New York: Forest and Stream Publishing Co.]

The old Brooklyn Magazine is now The American Magazine. In character it seems to be following after Scribner's. The July number has an excellent article on "Metlakahla," adding many facts to the story as told in book form by Mr. Wellcome. According to Mr. Moses P. Handy in the same number the "surface indications" of "literary life in Philadelphia" are very faint; nevertheless they are made the most of in his paper, which has portraits of Whitman, the Furnesses—father and son—Col. Geo. H. Boker, Prof. McMaster, and Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, the latter's profile being a reminder of Dickens.

The Popular Science Monthly for July reprints from the English Fortnightly Mr. Grant Allen's pleasant description of "The Thousand Islands" of the great St. Lawrence River.

The New Princeton for July holds a number of substantial articles. Mr. Gilder's consideration of "Certain Tendencies in Current Literature" is a dignified reply to those skeptics who (he says) have characterized the present realism in France as "a discovery of the unclean, and in America a discovery of the unimportant." This, he thinks, "is a petulant and shallow answer." Realism is really, he submits, "a discovery of life." And as such he goes on to defend it, but to instruct it. Mr. S. G. W. Benjamin traces the brief lines of the development of "American Art since the Centennial." Mr. S. H. Cobb, writing of "The Theory of Prohibition," discriminates between the civil and the moral functions of that measure; in the former he accepts it, in the latter he rejects it. Under the ambiguous if not misleading title of "The Vicissitudes of a Palace," Henry Van Dyke traces critically the interior history of Tennyson's well-known poem of that name, from its earliest to its latest form. Mr. T. W. Hunt's essay on "Literary Criticism" is to be commended to all who hold or aspire to hold the critic's pen. Some chapters of Tolstoi's "Sebastopol" appear for the feuilleton in a translation by Miss Hapgood.

There is an admirable article on "Some Barriers to Christian Union" in the Presbyterian Review for July, well-informed, sensible, candid, and suggestive. Its author is Professor C. A. Briggs of the Union Theological Seminary, New York.

Mr. Justin Winsor's Historical Association address, reprinted in the Magazine of American History, on the "Manuscript Sources of American History," leads up to the conclusion that we ought to have something in this country analogous to the Historical MSS. Commission in England.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Mr. John Bartlett's New "Concordance of Shakespeare." This forthcoming work, to which brief allusion was made in the last number of the World, will be a great improvement on all former concordances and phrase-books, combining the advantages of both in the most convenient form for either the student or the general reader. Mrs. Cowden-Clarke's Concordance is admirable as far as it goes, and a model of accuracy among a class of books in which perfect accuracy is peculiarly difficult to attain; but the limits within which it was thought advisable to keep the volume necessitated extreme brevity in the citations, so that in many cases one must look them up in an edition of Shakespeare in order to see just how the word under which they are given is used. Mr. Bartlett, in his sixteen hundred ample pages, will be able to give the passages at such length that only in exceptional instances will any reference to the context be needed. Another excellent feature in his plan, and possible only in a work on this larger scale, is the giving of groups of words as headings. For instance, under Better we find only the passages in which the word immediately modified is of no special importance. Then follow a hundred or more headings like Better accommodated, Better acquaintance, Better acquainted, Better act, Better answer, Better appetite, Better assurance, Better be thought, Better bettered, Better bit, Better born, and so on through the alphabet. Under each of these sub-headings from one to ten quotations is given. We were inclined to regret at first that the poems were not included with the plays; but Mrs. Furness's Concordance to the former, giving every word—even conjunctions and prepositions, and not excepting the article a—is more complete than a Concordance of the plays could be made without becoming too unwieldy for convenient use; and Mr. Bartlett discreetly refrained from covering the same ground in a less exhaustive manner. Mrs. Furness's work is one of those rare compilations—if, indeed, it be not absolutely unique in this respect—which are so perfect in their way that nothing better can be desired or is likely ever to be attempted.

Curtis in "The Taming of the Shrew."

A Boston correspondent inquires whether Curtis in the Shrew was meant by Shakespeare to be a female servant, as in Daly's recent presentation of the play, which professes to restore the original text, whereof the ordinary stage version is such a wretched caricature. A careful reading of the scenes in which Curtis appears will make it clear, we think, that the character is masculine. Why Mr. Daly follows his predecessors in making it feminine we cannot imagine; but this seems to us one of his more venial variations from the Shakespearian original.

The "Victoria" Edition of Shakespeare. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. do honor to the Queen's jubilee by the issue of a new edition of Shakespeare's complete works in three very neat post-octavo volumes, sold for five dollars. The text is that of the "Globe" edition, which, as our readers are aware, is essentially that of the "Cambridge" edition. There are no notes or comments, but the Glossary of the "Globe" edition has been enlarged to thrice its original dimensions, filling now more than seventy double-columned pages of moderately fine type. It is by far the best glossary of the kind that we have seen. In paper, type, and mechanical execution generally, this "Victoria" edition is admirable, and certainly very cheap at the price. It may be cordially commended to those who want a complete Shakespeare in compact form, with a good text in tasteful typography, and no more in the way of annotation than is needed to explain the archaic and peculiar words in the plays and poems.

The Seventh Edition of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's "Outlines." The sixth edition of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare was published in April, 1886, in two royal octavo volumes of four hundred pages each, much of the matter (the notes, documentary illustrations, etc.) being in fine print; and only a year later the seventh edition appears with some seventy pages of fresh matter, showing the same patient and scholarly research to which the accumulation of the vast amount of valuable matter in former editions was due. It may safely be said that no other living man could gather, sift, sort, and pass judgment upon these varied materials as this veteran investigator, critic, and commentator has done. It is the more honorable as being purely a labor of love, the rich results of which are given to the world at a nominal price—barely covering the actual cost of printing the books.

Mr. Morgan on Dr. Furnivall's Metrical Tests. Mr. Morgan sends us the following reply to Dr. Furnivall's communication printed in the World for July 9th.

As Mr. Furnivall's statement of the Verse Tests appears to be a frank and comprehensive one, will you allow me to attempt a frank and comprehensive reply?

I. Says Mr. Furnivall: "Treat Shakespeare's works as the geologist treats the earth's crust, as the comparative anatomist treats the animal creation, as the natural philosopher treats the world. Look on Shakespeare's plays and poems as the product of a mind working in successive periods. . . . Thus instructed, the Shakespeare student sets to work as Lyell did at the earth's crust." (p. 221.)

But how if the student decline to be "thus instructed"? to so set to work at the plays and poems of Shakespeare? Why should I? I cannot, for my part, find William Shakespeare anywhere brooding apart in solitary periods of incubation; his brain growing by cosmic laws through what Emerson calls and so to be studied as one studies the crust of the earth. I find him instead a man of like passions with ourselves, fond of his bout and his bottle, going in and out amid the many-colored life of Elizabeth's London; gathering everywhere, as Aubrey says, "humours of men daily;" taking "the humour of the constable at Grendon-in-Bucks," and of Kit Sly, and Marion Hackett, the fat ale-wife of Wincot, down Stratford way. The records of his jokes and his gallantries survive him, and he died in a frolic. I find him growing rich by mounting plays at his theatre which the people cared to see, and as fast as the people demanded them, and living and dying so utterly unsuspecting that he had done anything of which his children might care to hear, that he never even troubled himself to preserve the manuscript of or the literary property in a single one of the plays which had raised him to affluence. Why should I set to work at him "as Lyell did at the earth's crust?"

. . . tendency through endless ages
Of star-dust and star-pilgrimages,

II. Mr. Furnivall selects three plays: Love's Labour's Lost, Julius Caesar, and Winter's Tale, and asks if I cannot see at once "that Love's Labour's Lost is the earliest, most artificial, weakest, most rhyme and quip-loaded; that the Winter's Tale is far riper and later, and that Julius Caesar holds a middle place between" (the italics are mine). To this I answer: Yes and No. I can see that Love's Labour's Lost is the "most artificial, weakest, most rhyme and quip-loaded," and "that Winter's Tale is far "riper." But I cannot, from such evidence alone, predicate that Love's Labour's Lost was written first, Julius Caesar next, and the Winter's Tale last, simply because I am also able to see that Love's Labour's Lost is a farcical comedy, abounding in burlesque and travesty, a lampoon on the Euphuists, pedants, players with words, and logic-choppers whom the dramatist presumably had come in contact with (I believe somebody has suggested that Holofernes was a caricature of Francis Bacon); that Julius Caesar is a pure and stately tragedy; while over the Winter's Tale broods a grewsome atmosphere of sorrow, misunderstanding, injustice, and suffering, that only needs a tragic denouement to be itself pure tragedy. Is it not appropriate and to be expected that these three should be written in as many different veins and measures? Does Mr. Furnivall mean to insist that I am to read Love's Labour's Lost, Julius Caesar, and The Winter's Tale all together, with perfect indifference as to whether they are tragedy or travesty, but only when I see a "stopped ending" cry, That is prior to 1592! and when I come to a "run-on-line" exclaim, See, this is in the neighborhood of 1610?

There is a chapter of Thackeray in which Thomas Newcome says Adsum! And there are also lines by Thackeray, running—

There were three sailors of Bristol City
Who took a boat and went to sea,
But first with beef and captain's biscuit
And pickled pork they loaded she.

Am I to set down the rhyme to Thackeray's nursery period and the chapter to his last days, because no man who has once gone higher can ever again stoop to six-and-eight? Mr. Gilbert has written a pathetically beautiful play, Broken Hearts. He has also written Pinafore. Am I to shut my eyes to the character of these two as works of art, and cavalierly sort them to different periods in Mr. Gilbert's career, simply because they scan differently? Or if, perchance, Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Gilbert could write in more than one mood, could not great Shakespeare vary his metre with his theme? Or am I to make an affidavit that, once having composed tragedy, William Shakespeare could never again do light comedy; or that, if he had written Love's Labour's Lost after having produced Julius Caesar, Holofernes would have spouted in the icy periods of Brutus, and Armado in red-hot sentences like Cassius?

III. Mr. Furnivall gives the following figures:

Love's Labour's Lost: 1,028 rhyme to 579 blank, or 1 rhyme to .56 blank.

Julius Caesar: 32 rhyme to 2,181 blank, or 1 to 68 blank.

Winter's Tale: 0 rhyme to 1,825 blank, or 1 to infinity.

I do not verify these figures, but, accepting them, from my standpoint they prove nothing but themselves; while, from Mr. Furnivall's standpoint, they simply prove him out of court by proving entirely too much for his purpose. As well say, Sir Walter Scott wrote Ivanhoe and The Lay of the Last Minstrel: Ivanhoe has not a single rhyme; The Lay of the Last Minstrel is all rhyme; infinity to zero, or zero to infinity. To my old-fashioned way of thinking, Shakespeare wrote Love's Labour's Lost, being flippant, light, and comic, in flippant, light, and comic verse; in Julius Caesar he employed rhyme with the greatest possible effect by limiting it to the characters whose mouths it becomes; while rhyme not being artistically necessary at all in The Winter's Tale, that consummate master of fiction did not look at the year of our Lord to decide for him, but employed rhyme not at all therein.

To be as brief as possible, therefore, I adhere respectfully to what Mr. Furnivall is pleased to call my "astonishing dictum" and "astonishing nonsense" (viz.: that nothing can be proved by the Verse Test process which has not already been proved by other methods), because (a) Verse Tests are not a method in literary criticism at all, but a species of inductive criticism applied solely to the works of Shakespeare; because inductive criticism is nonsense, and because, since the works of Shakespeare are literature, they are entitled to be criticised—if at all—by methods which can be tested upon other literary matter as well; (b) the Verse Tests, like the Donnelly Cipher and the Baconian Parallelism, are not a Result, but a Process. And any Result whatever, reached by these or any of these, must be valuable or worthless precisely in so far as it can be corroborated or exploded by external, circumstantial, or historical evidence.

APPLETON MORGAN.

Glamorgan, Long Island, N. Y., July 13, 1887.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

827. W. C. L., of Providence, R. I., inquiring in No. 823 for "A History Burned," is advised to look up the life of Sir Walter Raleigh, to see if he were not the author referred to.

828. Quotations Wanted.

(a.) For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rocks the world.

(b.) Children are we, our airy bubbles blowing;
Laughing, we see them lightly float away.
Life's sterner side unheeding, or unknowing,
We clutch at pleasure while 'tis called today.

(c.) I wonder why this world's good things
Should fall in such unequal shares?
Why some should gather all the joys
And others all the pains and cares?

(d.) O weary woman, thine the weary work!

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Ticknor & Co. have ready newly revised editions of their series of incomparable guide-books to The White Mountains, New England, and The Maritime Provinces. The editor's name does not appear upon the title-pages of these works, but it might well do so, for Mr. M. F. Sweetser is known as an accurate and graceful writer and an enthusiast in the collection of antiquarian lore. The Ticknor guide-books prepared by him have no rivals in their own field, and are superior to any English guide-books while fully equal to the German; Baedeker can show no better work in the arrangement of exact data and the observance of literary form. The summer tourist who directs his course by one of these volumes is sure of profit and pleasure.

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have arranged to publish a very complete set of phototypes and photographs of the leading works of Elihu Vedder. A full catalogue of the productions in question is shortly to be issued.

—The name of Katherine Prescott Wormley is to appear on the title-pages of future editions of Roberts Brothers' series of translations from Balzac. Miss Wormley, now of New York and Newport, resided for twelve years in France.

—We are to have a new installment of Tolstói literature from T. Y. Crowell & Co., who announce translations of My Confession and What to Do? which are respectively the introduction and sequel to My Religion. Those who have been interested in Count Tolstói's conclusions as recorded in the last-named work will now be able to learn how the author was led to consider the social problem, and to examine more fully the solution he offers. The demand for Tolstói's writings seems to be persistent in spite of the ruthless attempts of Mr. Maurice Thompson to suppress them. Mr. Crowell says that he has still more forthcoming.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. are to publish Mrs. Shillaber's Cook-Book, by Lydia Shillaber, who has prepared the volume for "the housewife who has to do her own work." Mrs. Partington writes a preface, in which she says that "a book like this will come into a house like an oasis in the desert of the great Sarah, and be a quarantine of perpetual peace."

—Adam & Charles Black of Edinburgh are about to issue an elaborate illustrated work on Musical Instruments, by A. J. Hipkins, author of the article "Pianoforte" in the new Encyclopedia Britannica, member of the celebrated Broadwood firm in London, an accepted authority, and once a devoted friend of Chopin. The illustrations, fifty in number, are chromolithographs by Gibb. The Prince of Wales has accepted the dedication of the work. It will be a folio volume, and the edition will be limited to 1,040 copies and 50 artist's proof copies. The latter have all been taken at 15 guineas each. The price of the regular edition is £77.

—Rev. N. P. Gilman, now of West Newton, Mass., for many years a valued contributor to the Literary World and to other critical journals, is collecting materials for an exhaustive work on Profit Sharing. He will seek to cover the whole field, French, German, English, and American, and will be grateful for the communication of any facts suited to his purpose.

—Our Shakespearian editor, Dr. Rolfe, sailed this week on his annual European trip, to be absent about ten weeks.

—Ginn & Co. announce for August, in ample time for the opening of the fall schools, A Treatise on Plane Surveying, by Professor Daniel Carhart of the Western University, Alleghany, Pa. It is the result of twenty years' experience in field and class-room.

—Dr. J. C. Cutter of Warren, Mass., is revising for the J. B. Lippincott Co. a text-book by his father, Dr. Calvin Cutter, on Anatomy, Physiology, and Hygiene, first published in 1854, of which 300,000 copies have been sold in the United States and Canada, and which has had the honor of translation into Tamil, Hindostanee, Arabic, Armenian, Bulgarian, Choctaw, and Japanese.

—Ginn & Co. have ready a new edition of the first three books of Homer's Iliad, text and notes, prepared by Professor Symons of Yale College.

—Mr. William Cushing will have ready in the fall his supplement to his Dictionary of Initials and Pseudonyms. It will contain about 6,000 entries.

—Scribner's Magazine for August promises a further batch of Thackeray letters with fac-similes and drawings, a first magazine article by Mr. George Hitchcock on "The Picturesque Quality of Holland," a paper by Professor Shaler on "The Instability of the Atmosphere," and an essay on "Realism and the Art of Fiction" by Mr. Arlo Bates.

—C. A. Montgomery & Co., New York, announce a series of handy little books for housewives under the general title of "Good Housekeeping." Catherine Owen will furnish the first two volumes, A Key to Cooking and Perfect Bread, and succeeding volumes will be Six Cups of Coffee, Dainty Dishes for Dainty Dinners, and Lessons in Candy-Making.

—J. S. Ogilvie & Co. of New York and Chicago publish in paper covers a story of the Civil War by John R. Musick, entitled Brother against Brother.

—In laying together your books for summer reading remember Mr. F. Saunders's Salad for the Solitary and Pastime Papers. Mr. Saunders has browsed among the books of the Astor Library for thirty years, and gets together in these volumes a great deal of curious lore. Mr. Whitaker, who publishes them, has ready the Bishop of Ossory's Echoes of Bible History, a popularization of recent explorations in Egypt, Chaldaea, and Palestine, with 50 illustrations.

—Mr. Thomas Adolphus Trollope, an older brother of Anthony, the novelist, lately deceased, is about to return to England from Italy, where he has lived for more than 30 years.

—At the recent Crawford sale in London Mr. Quaritch bought a Mazarin Bible for £2,650, a Latin Bible of 1482 for £1,025, a Coverdale of 1535 for £226, a Tyndale's Pentateuch of 1530 for £255, his New Testament of 1534 for £230, and a first French Testament of Lyons of 1474 for £200.

—The London book trade subscribed in advance for 10,000 copies of Mr. Haggard's Allan Quatermain, said to be the largest number ever taken of a six-shilling novel.

—The endowment of two scholarships and a professorship in the Alexandra College at Dublin is proposed as a memorial to the late Archbishop Trench. This is an institution for the higher education of women.

—Sir John Lubbock has ready a new book entitled The Pleasures of Life, with chapters under the following titles: "The Duty of Happiness," "The Happiness of Duty," "A Song of Books," "The Choice of Books," "The Blessing of Friends," "The Value of Time," "The Pleasures of Travel," "The Happiness of Home," "Science," and "Education."

—The editing of the new Pickwick, shortly to be published by Messrs. Chapman & Hall, which it is proposed to call "The Victoria Edition," has been entrusted to Mr. C. P. Johnson, the author of Hints to Collectors of Dickens's Works. The book will be in octavo, as was the original edition, but will be issued in two volumes and on hand-made paper of special shape, so as to give a better lateral margin to the plates. The illustrations are being reproduced in exact fac-simile by Messrs. Annam & Swan from the original drawings, and will include several unpublished drawings by R. W. Buss, Hablôt K. Browne (Phiz), and John Leech. It is intended to print from the latest edition revised by the author, and to add all former announcements, prefaces, and notices, so as to make the text as complete as possible. The edition will be limited in number, probably to 2,000 copies, one half of which will be reserved for the American market. —London Athenæum.

The Office of a Library.

The office of a library is two fold. In Europe its main object is to collect and preserve that which is rare and curious. With us it is for the gathering in of literature so that it can be made acceptable to the whole people. The two things which we of this generation have gained, that most affect human happiness, are the open book and the photograph. Rapid locomotion and correspondence by electricity are conveniences, but they are not essential to happiness. We wear softer fabrics than did our fathers, but after all, it was the men of the homespun who made their mark in the world.

When I was a boy my library consisted of a Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, some volumes of Shakspeare, Scott, Mrs. Edgeworth and Robinson Crusoe. Washington had less books in his library than can be afforded now by any mechanic who desires to secure them. The speaker likened the library to an observatory on a housetop, lighted with glass of various colors, which imparts its own hues to the landscapes seen through it. You open a single shutter, and the field of Arctic explorations is open to view. Another shutter, and you get glimpses of life in Asia or India, or the eye runs back through pages of history or biography, or the realm of fiction is placed at your disposal.

The library influences the home, the common school, the academy, and the college. The worshippers in yonder church become more receptive because of it, and it helps our experiment in popular government. During the century of our national life we have not done much in art; we have done something in applied science, but our great work has been to show the world that for a people who are trained for it, popular government is a success. France has offered her royal jewels for sale, that they may be scattered over the earth. Institutions like these are our jewels; they will never be for sale; they will stand until the foundations of the earth crack and crumble to pieces.—Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs at the dedication of the Clapp Library at Belchertown, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Fiction.

- UNDER THE STORM, OR STRADFAST'S CHARGE. By Charlotte M. Yonge. Illus. T. Whittaker. $1.50
ST. PAUL'S PROBLEM AND ITS SOLUTION. By Faye Huntington. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25
IN THE GOLDEN DAYS. By Edna Lyall. D. Appleton & Co.
A TERRIBLE LEGACY. By G. W. Appleton. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.
MISS GASCOIGNE. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 25c.

Political Science.

- THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION. By G. F. Baker. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00
THE FISHERY QUESTION. By Charles Isham. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

Science and Philosophy.

- NINETEENTH CENTURY SENSE: THE PARADOX OF SPIRITUALISM. By John Darby. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00

PSYCHOLOGY. The Motive Powers. By James McCosh. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

TRADE ORGANIZATIONS IN POLITICS. Also Progress and Robbery. An Answer to Henry George. By J. Bleeker Miller. The Baker & Taylor Co.

PRELIMINARY REPORT OF THE COMMISSION APPOINTED BY THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA TO INVESTIGATE MODERN SPIRITUALISM, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE REQUEST OF THE LATE HENRY SKYBERT.

A FRIEND IN NEED: A HOUSEHOLD GUIDE IN HEALTH AND DISEASE. By "Doctor Frank." Boston: Thayer Publishing Co. $3.00

HEALTH IN OUR HOMES. By "Doctor Frank." Thayer Publishing Co. 75c.

HEALTH OF OUR CHILDREN. By "Doctor Frank." Thayer Publishing Co. 75c.

THE TREATMENT OF SEWAGE. By Dr. C. Meymott Tidy. Dr. Van Nostrand. 50c.

Theology and Religion.

METHODS OF CHURCH WORK. Religious, Social, and Financial. By Rev. Sylvanus Stall. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50

THE CONQUERING CROSS. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

Travel and Observation.

SARATOGA CHIPS AND CARLSBAD WAFERS. By Nathan Sheppard. Funk & Wagnalls. Paper 50c.

WINDSOR CASTLE. With a Description of the Park, Town, and Neighbourhood. By W. T. Loftie. London: Seelye & Co. New York: Macmillan & Co. $2.00

CHINA. Travel and Investigations in the "Middle Kingdom." A Study of Its Civilization and Possibilities. With a Glance at Japan. By James H. Wilson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.75

BAR HARBOR DAYS. By Mrs. Burton Harrison. Illustrated. Harper & Bros. $1.25

THE SHAYBACKS IN CAMP. Ten Summers Under Canvas. By Samuel J. Barrows and Isabel C. Barrows. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

The Best New Novels

Agnes Surriage. $1.50.
By E. L. BYRNES.

The Devil's Hat. $1.00.
By MELVILLE PHILIPS.

Confessions of Claud. $1.50.
By EDGAR FAWCETT.

Forced Acquaintances. $1.50.
By EDITH ROBINSON.

Sons and Daughters. $1.50.
By HENRY HATES.

Penelope's Suitors.
By E. L. BYRNES.

Two Gentlemen of Boston.
The Strike in the B— Mill.

Ticknor's Paper Series

The Great Success of the Year.
Each in 1 vol. 50 cts.
Now ready.

Story of Margaret Kent. Guenn.

Cruise of the Woman Hater. A Reverend Idol.

A Nameless Nobleman. The Prelate.

Eleanor Maitland. House of the Musician.

Geraldine. Duchess Emilia.

New Books. Guide Books

Prose Pastorals.
By H. M. SYLVESTER.

The Sunny Side of Shadow.
By Mrs. S. G. W. BENJAMIN.

Final Memorials of Longfellow.
By S. LONGFELLOW.

American Literature.
By E. P. WHIFFLE.

Due North.
By M. M. BALLOU.

Letters of H. Greenough.
Home Sanitation.

Newly Revised in '87.
500 pages each, with many maps and plans, history, description, poetry, legends, routes, distances, prices, statistics. The only American Guides worth buying. Most helpful and welcome to all summer tourists. $1.50 each.

New England.
White Mountains.
Maritime Provinces.

Sold everywhere. Sent postpaid by

TICKNOR & CO., - - Boston.

D MEANS DYSPEPSIA KILLERS. K

PREPARED BY DR. MARK E. WOODBURY: put up in lozenge form in little boxes convenient to carry. Agreeable to taste, perfectly harmless, and SURE TO CURE Dyspepsia and Indigestion. You should get a box. Only 50 cents (trial box, 25 cents), sent to any part of the United States, on receipt of price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

D MEANS DYSPEPSIA KILLERS. K

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

82 Equitable Building, Boston.

Sells at Sight. Useful Everywhere.

Every Family Needs One.

THIS HAMMOCK CHAIR

May be detached instantly from the hammock fixture, and then becomes a combined automatic floor chair, adjustable to many reclining positions, and desirable for Library, Steamer and Invalid Use. Has no equal. Used in hospitals, colleges and families. Folded compactly and shipped anywhere. Circulars, testimonials and photographs for 2-cent stamp. Price $7 and upwards. LIBERAL DISCOUNTS to agents and dealers. BLAISDELL CHAIR CO., 98 High St., Boston.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. C., "Literary World" Office, Boston.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

THE TRAVELERS INSURANCE COMPANY.

HARTFORD, CONN.

ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT POLICIES, Only $5.00 per year to Professional and Business Men, for each $1,000 with $15.00 Weekly Indemnity.

ACCIDENT TICKETS, 25 cents per day, $4.50 for 30 days; for sale at all Local Agencies and Leading Railroad Stations.

ALSO THE

BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,000,000.

Pays ALL CLAIMS Without Discount, and immediately upon receipt of satisfactory proofs.

Assets $9,111,000
Surplus $2,129,000

JAMES G. BATTERSON, President.
RODNEY DENNIS, Secretary.
JOHN E. MORRIS, Asst Sec'y.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

The Curtain Grate, with Messrs. patent Shaking and Dumping attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers. SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

A. Handle for dumping.
B. Lever for shaking.
C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY
MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND Lever needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to R. C. HARTRANFT, 709 SANBORN STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA., Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books. Send for Catalogue of Americans.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1887) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 181 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY. BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N.Y.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, with the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 15 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 30 cents.
Other advertising pages, 16 "
Or $20.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 16.
WHOLE No. 329.

{ E. H. HAMES & Co., }
Publishers.

BOSTON, AUGUST 6, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

THE GREAT SUCCESS IN SUMMER BOOKS.

TICKNOR'S PAPER SERIES.

The following numbers of this now well-known and highly successful series are ready for sale (50 cents each; subscription price, $4.50).

THE STORY OF MARGARET KENT.

By HENRY HAYES.

"The character of Margaret Kent is a masterpiece of its kind. It is a fresh creation. The type is Southern, and yet American, and its inner fiber is womanly to the core."—Boston Herald.

GUENN.

By BLANCHES W. HOWARD, author of "One Summer." The marvelous romance of the Breton coast, illustrated with French shore scenes, fisher-folk, etc.

"A thrillingly interesting story, whose lights and shadows are very skillfully drawn."—Golden Rule.

THE CRUISE OF A WOMAN-HATER.

By G. DE MONTAUBAN. A brilliant sea-story.

"It is just the book for a long afternoon; it interests, pleases, sometimes even fascinates, but never harrows. It has the rare quality of leaving a comfortable sense in the reader's mind."—New York Star.

A REVEREND IDOL.

A romance of a famous divine.

"The best novels are like a flash of lightning in a clear day. For example, 'A Reverend Idol.'—Christian Union.

A NAMELESS NOBLEMAN.

By JANE G. AUSTIN. Paris and Plymouth in Louis XIV's time.

"A rare and quaint romance of the old Colony of Massachusetts two hundred years ago. A fresher, sweeter, more delightful book we have not read for many a day."—Mr. E. H. STODDARD, in the New York Mail.

THE PRELATE.

By ISAAC HENDERSON.

"Two wonderful figures, worthy types of Rome and America, thrown into prominence against the sadder background of priestly intolerance under the brilliant light of an Italian sky."—Commercial Bulletin.

ELEANOR MAITLAND.

By CLARA ERSKINE CLEMENT.

"The heroine . . . is always lovely, gracious and strong, and in fact altogether a gentlewoman who is as guileless and sweet as she is steadfast."—New York Home Journal.

THE HOUSE OF THE MUSICIAN.

By VIRGINIA W. JOHNSON.

"Of all the many stories that have been written of Venice this is surely the most faithful if not the most inspired."—Golden Rule.

GERALDINE.

A metrical romance of the St. Lawrence.

The Durango Record believes it to be "all in all, the best work of the kind issued since Holland's 'Kathrina.'" The Canadian Independent says that "with but few characters and a simple plot, the interest is sustained to the end—nay, is intensified so as to make it impossible to lay down the book."

THE DUCHESS EMILIA.

By BARRETT WENDELL.

"One of the literary events of the season. One of the most striking features of this romance of metempsychosis is the delicate poetic feeling with which he has invested it. The plot is one Hawthorne would have chosen."—Springfield Republican.

DR. BREEN'S PRACTICE.

By W. D. HOWELLS.

Mr. Howells shows here a full measure of the traits ascribed by the Contemporary Review to his works—"a constant intellectual ripple which recalls the varying lights and the large, pure breeziness of a summer sea."

TALES OF THREE CITIES.

By HENRY JAMES. Three of the most brilliant and witty of HENRY JAMES's international stories, full of delicate analysis, high cultivation and amusing contrasts. Their titles are: "The Impressions of a Cousin," "Lady Barberina," "A New-England Winter."

"Full of cleverness and provokes comparison with some of the best things of Thackeray."—New York Star.

THE HOUSE AT HIGH BRIDGE.

By EDGAR FAWCETT.

"It is not often so good a novel appears in these days. We can commend it heartily to all those who enjoy Trollope's stories of English home life; and we are delighted to see an American who is treading in the old-fashioned footsteps of that pleasure-giving English novelist."—Transcript.

THE STORY OF A COUNTRY TOWN.

By E. W. HOWE. The pathetic and powerful romance of early days on the lonely prairies of Kansas.

PENELOPE'S SUITORS.

By EDWIN LASSETTER BYRNES. 1 vol., 32mo. Quaintly bound in antique paper board, with strings, 50 cents.

This captivating story of the old Colony days in Massachusetts was originally published serially, when it aroused wide attention and great admiration. "A subtly clever, original and remarkably well-told story. The way in which the Governor steals the heart of the young gentlewoman—just at a time when she is about to become engaged to a young friend of his—is sketched with exquisite grace and charm."—Boston Advertiser.

PROSE PASTORALS.

By HERBERT M. SYLVESTER. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

E. H. STODDARD says in the New York Mail and Express: "There are hundreds who will prefer these 'Prose Pastorals' to any and all of the poetic idylls of Lord Tennyson."

A series of very charming chapters on Nature and the manifold attractions of rural life, and rambling in the forests and meadows. It is the result of years of communion with Nature.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF BOSTON.

"A cross between Dickens and the minor key of 'The Story of a Country Town.'"—Press.

SONS AND DAUGHTERS.

By the author of "The Story of Margaret Kent." $1.50.

"The author's style is as clear cut as an intaglio, and the story is worth a whole wilderness of that fiction which analyzes and dissects and converts life into a vast clinic."—Philadelphia Record.

AGNES SURRIAGE.

By EDWIN LASSETTER BYRNES. $1.50.

This is a work of ye species called romance; and treateth sagaciously of ye long-past days of ye noble and much-lamented Royal Governors of ye Massachusetts Bay Province, what time ye soldiers did march away to withstand ye French array before Louisburg, and ye many fair maids of Boston town did spinne flax on ye Commow. She whose name ye booke doth b-are, and whose strange and wonderful adventures it doth set forth, was a comely lass of Marblehead, borne from her native rocks by a very gallant and debonaire knight of England. Nor shall we indite further as to what befell these love-lorn people, for whose doth take unto himself the booke, these events to determine and ascertain, shall have great content.

FINAL MEMORIALS OF HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

By SAMUEL LONGFELLOW, author of "Life of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow." 8vo, uniform with the "Life." With two new steel plates. In cloth, $3.00; half-calf or half-morocco, $3.50.

"At the appearance of the 'Life,' we remarked upon the loveliness of spirit, the tenderness of feeling, and the amiability of temper that always characterized the poet. One rises from the present volume of 'Memorials' with a sense of the same qualities in him of whom it treats, and with a feeling that it was good to have spent so much time in the company of so beautiful a spirit."—Advertiser.

THE SUNNY SIDE OF SHADOW

($1.00) is a collection of twelve delicate and lovely little essays and reveries of a convalescent, written by Mrs. S. G. W. BENJAMIN.

"The sketches of the Doctor, of Patsy Pringle, and of Mrs. Runabout, are delightful, and the Harpies are brought under inimitable contribution, and thoughts on Loving, Friendship, the Sea, etc., have a fascinating interest."—Boston Home Journal.

THE DEVIL'S HAT.

By MELVILLE PHILIPS.

"Its graphic sketches of life in the oil regions, with exciting recitals of the operations of scouts, prospectors, wildcaters, torpedists, speculators, etc. The story is bright and stirring throughout."—Home Journal.

Sold everywhere. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & COMPANY, BOSTON.

Macmillan & Co.'s New Books.

NEW BOOK BY HENRY T. FINCK. A BOOK FOR LOVERS—PAST AND PRESENT.

Romantic Love and Personal Beauty,

Their Development, Causal Relations, Historic and National Peculiarities.

By HENRY T. FINCK, 12mo, $2.00. This Day.

THE VICTORIA SHAKESPEARE.

The Works of William Shakespeare.

In Three Volumes, 12mo, each $1.75; or the Three Volumes, in paper box, $5.00. Vol. 1, Comedies. Vol. 2, Histories. Vol. 3, Tragedies.

This edition, dedicated by permission to Her Majesty the Queen, is from the text of the Globe Edition, and is printed by R. & R. Clark of Edinburgh. No pains have been spared to produce an edition at once convenient and beautiful. A new glossary, more complete than in any other popular edition of Shakespeare, has been specially prepared by Mr. Aldis Wright.

"We have said that this is a beautiful edition, but it is more that: it is the most perfect of the kind that we have seen—the whiteness of the paper, the sharpness of the type, and the color of the ink, not only leaving nothing to be desired, but satisfying the most exacting taste."—New York Mail and Express.

BOSWELL'S JOHNSON—OXFORD EDITION.

Boswell's Life of Samuel Johnson, LL. D.

And Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, including Johnson's Diary of a Journey into North Wales. Edited, with Notes, by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D. C. L. 6 Volumes, 8vo, $16.00.

"Of the labors of the editor himself the critic can have little to say but praise. The amount of new information given in the notes, of which the greater part is original, is varied and extensive and ranges over nearly every topic which it is possible to imagine. The patient and intelligent research displayed in these notes shows great industry, and such results could only be obtained by years of devotion to the subject. . . . The editor is peculiarly happy in explaining the literary allusions in the text, and these are often illustrated by apposite quotations, which show an intimate acquaintance with every class of literature."—Athenæum.

Imaginary Portraits.

By WALTER PATER, Author of "Marius the Epicurean," etc. Globe 8vo, $1.50.

"It is because on this point, as on many others, we find in these pages the reflection of one of the most intellectual phases of the modern mind, that Mr. Pater's 'Imaginary Portraits' should be read by all lovers of psychological problems, and not only by those who value him for the pleasantness and choiceness of his language."—Athenæum.

The Pleasures of Life.

By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M. P., F. R. S., D. C. L.

English copyright edition, 50 cents; an edition in paper, 25 cents, in a few days.

CONTENTS:

THE DUTY OF HAPPINESS.
THE HAPPINESS OF DUTY.
A SONG OF BOOKS.
THE CHOICE OF BOOKS.
THE BLESSING OF FRIENDS.

THE VALUE OF TIME.
THE PLEASURES OF TRAVEL.
THE PLEASURES OF HOME.
SCIENCE.
EDUCATION.

WINDSOR CASTLE—JUBILEE EDITION.

Windsor Castle.

With a Description of the Park, Town and Neighborhood. By W. J. LOFTIE, B. A., F. S. A.
With numerous illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

"A spirited and remarkably attractive history of the interesting spot to which it is devoted."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.
"It is not often that so large a collection of pretty engravings is found in a book of this character. The accompanying text by Mr. Loftie is by no means subordinate in interest to the pictures, though we have attended to the latter first, but is a careful and exact historical and descriptive narrative."—Literary World.

Macmillan & Co., 112 Fourth Ave.,
New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Republic of the Future;

OR, SOCIALISM A REALITY. By ANNA BOWMAN DODD, author of "Old Cathedral Days," etc. 1 vol. New style of binding. Price 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

This little book is in the form of a brilliant and highly original series of letters supposed to be written by a Swedish Nobleman, on a visit to America in the 21st Century. In these letters the writer has depicted what the social, civil and political aspect of America would be under Socialistic rule, after Socialism had become a fixed and stable form of government.

Calamity Jane.

A STORY OF THE BLACK HILLS. By Mrs. GEORGE E. SPENCER, author of "A Plucky One," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, paper, price 25 cents.

The Three Tetons.

A STORY OF THE YELLOWSTONE. By ALICE WELLINGTON ROLLINS, author of "Story of a Ranch," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, paper, price 50 cents.

For Sale by all Booksellers.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,
739 & 741 Broadway, New York.

Horsford's

ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The Literary World.

Vol. XVIII. BOSTON, AUGUST 6, 1887. No. 16.

CONTENTS.

SOME OF BROWNING'S DRAMAS	243
GENERAL WILSON IN CHINA	243
STORIES OF THE FAR WEST	244
THINGS SEEN BY VICTOR HUGO	245
A HISTORY OF VICTORIA'S REIGN	250
A TERRIBLE LEGACY	251
THE VAN GELDER PAPERS	251
MINOR NOTICES:
A Friend in Need	247
Health in Our Homes	247
Health of Our Children	247
The Conquering Cross	247
The Appeal to Life	247
Horsemanship for Women	253
Dictionary of National Biography	253
The Life of Rev. George C. Haddock	253
Ourselves and Our Neighbors	253
By the Way	253
People and Pastor	253
The Treatment of Sewage	254
Educational Mosaics	254
The New Birth	254
Home Sanitation	254
MINOR FICTION:
A Summer in Oldport Harbor	252
Dick's Wandering	252
Mistaken Paths	252
The Russian Refugee	253
The Flamingo Feather	253
PERIODICALS	249
PARAGRAPHS	248
JOURNAL OF THE CONCORD SCHOOL	248
READINGS IN THE ENGLISH PAPERS	248
NEWS AND NOTES	254
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	254
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	255

SOME OF BROWNING'S DRAMAS.*

"COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY" and "A Soul's Tragedy" are the two dramas by Mr. Browning included by his American editors in this volume with "A Blot on the 'Scutcheon.'" The editors' plan, after the model of Dr. Rolfe's well-known Shakespearean and other classic series, is to present the author's text in full and with the utmost accuracy, prefacing it with some pages of introductory matter and supplementing it with critical, descriptive, and expository notes for the use of students. Browning's writings, more than those of any other English poet of this century, need such helps, and the growing number of his readers in this country, not to speak of England, will welcome such guidance as this little book affords.

"A Blot on the 'Scutcheon'" was the fifth of Mr. Browning's dramas, in the order of composition, and was produced in 1843; "Colombe's Birthday" followed in 1844, and "A Soul's Tragedy" completed the series of eight in 1845, and wound up the author's efforts in dramatic poetry. According to the notes "A Blot on the 'Scutcheon'" was written in five days, and has had three great presentations on the stage, twice in London, in 1843 and '48 respectively, and again in Washington by Lawrence Barrett in 1885. Mr. Barrett contributes several interesting pages to the introduction, describing the circumstances under which he was led to attempt this presentation, and paying high tribute to the dramatic qualities of the piece and of Browning as a writer. "Colombe's Birthday" too has been played, by Helen Faucit in London in 1853, again in London in 1885, and in Boston in 1854. But the plays as acted plays have not been popular, and have had short runs, though by no means the first, as the editors observe, that have "pleased not the million."

* A Blot on the 'Scutcheon, and Other Dramas, by Robert Browning. Edited by Wm. J. Rolfe and Heloise E. Hersey. Harper & Bros. 50c.

In the introduction before us attention is called to the lack of dramatic action in the plays, to their concentration of interest upon a single and supreme situation in which some one person is chief actor, to their lofty thought and steady poetic fire, and to a quality which the editors each call "remote-ness:"

As compared with the men and women of Shakespeare, these are removed from us by a perceptible distance. . . . The Tempest is much more remote than The Merchant of Venice, though both deal with situations unusual to our experience. . . . Browning is, even in his early career, more in love with this effect of remote-ness than Shakespeare, and it becomes finally his most noticeable characteristic. In A Soul's Tragedy the characters are so real as to be almost identified with our own selves, yet we see them at a distance so great that one feels the stage to be the clouds of heaven, over which the actors walk as on a pavement.

Alluding to "Pippa Passes," an earlier dramatic poem by Browning, attention is also called to his indifference to the ordinary requirement that the persons of a drama shall speak in character:

Pippa soliloquizes like a poet at whose feet Shelley might have sat; Colombe, a mere girl, talks like the wisest of philosophers; Tresham finds time and breath for a flight of the imagination when he has the news of Mertoun's death to impart to Mildred. But all this, which never could have been done by Shakespeare, is a part of Browning's method, and must be judged as such. . . . His analyses will not bear the glare of the footlights, but they bear the light of the soul.

One other point is well made in this introduction:

The fact that Shakespeare is the only name suggested as we try to deal with Browning's dramatic quality is itself a testimony to the grade of his work. If the first drama in this book does not convince the reader of Browning's right to be judged as seriously as Shakespeare, then we much overrate A Blot on the 'Scutcheon.

Such a remark as that, coming from so warm-hearted a Shakespearean as Dr. Rolfe, carries weight, and we commend it to the notice of those who are in the habit of sneering at the name of Browning.

What follows of the introduction consists of a series of extracts, critical of Browning and his works, by Mr. Lowell, Mr. Weiss, Mrs. Browning, Mr. Stoddard, M. Darmstetter, Mr. Symonds, Mr. John Forster, Mr. Chorley, Putnam's Magazine, the Christian Examiner, the North British Review, and the Contemporary. These authorities make a Browning Club worth joining for an hour.

GENERAL WILSON IN CHINA.*

BREVET-MAJOR-GENERAL JAMES H. WILSON, U. S. A., gives in this volume of about 375 pages an interesting and instructive account of a trip to China and Japan in 1885 and '86. He was absent within three weeks of an entire year, and traveled by sea and land nearly 30,000 miles. He spent a month in Japan and a week in Formosa, but the most of his time was given to China. Landing in the first instance at Shanghai and proceeding thence to the northern port of Tientsin, he penetrated the interior for a considerable distance, exploring the Yellow River, climbing Taishan, the sacred mountain of China, inspecting the Great Wall and the Grand Canal, visiting Kaifungfu and Chinanfu, the capitals of the provinces of Honan and Shantung, and ascending the Yang-tse-kiang to Chankiang and Nanking. He made a horseback journey in midwinter of over 1,500 miles through the provinces of Chihli, Honan, and Shantung, and a pilgrimage to Kifu, the home and burial place of Confucius. During this round of sight-seeing he met many distinguished officials, received abundant courtesies, and enjoyed unusual facilities for accomplishing his purpose. This purpose was not pleasure, but business; namely, the investigation of China as a field for the investment of American enterprise and capital in building railroads.

Great is Modern Civilization, and the Locomotive is its Prophet.

General Wilson is a good traveling companion, and many a reader will settle down with uncommon zest to his circumstantial narrative. His first chapter is devoted to Japan, where he was received by the Emperor, was entertained by a native gentleman of great wealth at a dinner party in the highest native style, and had excellent opportunities for observing the progress of schools, arts, manufactures, and commerce under the influence of Western ideas. The Japanese, General Wilson thinks, will build their own railroads, but Americans might equip them. Japan, he thinks, is the country of countries to travel in. "The climate is salubrious, the scenery beautiful and ever varying, the people cleanly, hospitable, and genuinely polite to strangers." Three months will suffice "for the young and vigorous" to make the trip from New York to Yokohama and back, and allow five or six weeks for inland travel; "but for such as have the time, whether young or old, six months will not prove to be too much."

In his next six chapters General Wilson

* China. Travels and Investigations in the "Middle Kingdom." With a Glance at Japan. By James Harrison Wilson. D. Appleton & Co. $1.75.

describes his arrival at Shanghai and his first sensations and impressions on entering the Land of the Celestials. The voyage from Yokohama requires about a week. Shanghai, with its separated populations of perhaps a million natives and eight thousand foreigners, furnishes a striking introduction to the Chinese landscape:

Nowhere else in the world can Chinese and foreign civilization be more easily compared and contrasted. Here they are seen side by side, separated only by an old city wall of burned brick, built in the middle ages, pierced with gates, surmounted by turrets and crenelated parapets, and surrounded by moats seething with fever and filth. On one side are struggling and sordid multitudes, living in low, tumble-down, and decaying mud or half-burned brick huts. The streets are teeming with dust, dirt, or slush, as the case may be, and crowded day and night with a ceaseless flow of indigent, but, so far as one can see, contented human beings, all busily engaged in the sordid struggle of life. There is nothing neat, or well-built, or permanent. Everything seems stricken by decrepitude and decay, and it is the same everywhere else in China. Nothing except city walls and river embankments is solid, or strong, or durable, and nothing seems ever to have been repaired or cleaned. Whatever is worn out or worthless is thrown into the street along with the offal of the household. Stagnant water stands in ponds and pools, until lapped up by the sun or blown away by drying winds. It is all inconceivably squalid and offensive to foreign eyes and nostrils, and fills the foreign soul with a sentiment of unutterable disgust. The river front is lined with junks in countless numbers, and the surface of the water is covered with sampans and house boats passing to and fro. On the hither side of the wall is a small, compact, and well-selected population of Europeans and Americans, surrounded by every luxury and comfort, and possessing all the elements of the highest civilization and refinement. They are well clad, well mounted, and well housed. Their warehouses, shops, banks, and residences would do credit to New York or Paris. Their streets are well paved and beautifully kept. Cleanliness, order, and propriety prevail, and everything shows that they have come to stay. They have clubs, race courses, tennis grounds, gardens, theaters, libraries, and churches. They ride across country, have dinner and dancing parties, and generally have carried with them to that remote river-side the industry, the thrift, and the enterprise, as well as the luxuries and the elegancies, of a higher and a better civilization. And, what is more to the purpose, they have paid for all their luxuries and comforts with the money they have earned out of the business of the country in which they have cast their lot.

From Shanghai General Wilson went by steamer along the coast to Tientsin, a three days' voyage. His first sight there was a pony race, run to the music of American popular airs played by a native band. Tientsin, although inferior to Shanghai in commercial importance, "is the center of all progressive movements which have shown themselves of late years in North China," and is the residence of the Viceroy Li, who gave our author a stately reception, and asked him how old he was almost in a first breath. Two chapters are devoted to the details of this picturesque interview, and to the position and influence of this Viceroy in the affairs of China.

Peking, the capital, eighty miles north of Tientsin, was General Wilson's next objective point, and he calls it "the unspeakably filthy place of the world." It stands "solitary and alone," without surrounding villas or pretty suburbs, always muddy or dusty according to the weather, with no pavements or sidewalks, and with no hotel open to foreigners, though with a charming foreign society. At Peking General Wilson pauses to describe the young Emperor, the Dowager Empress, and the court, the six great Boards by which the absolute monarchy is administered, and the general remoteness and inaccessibility of the central government; and then enters on a careful exposition of the financial system of the kingdom, its resources and its credit, as bearing upon any questions of great public improvements, such as railroads, mines, furnaces, rolling mills, and manufactures. The principal source of revenue is the land tax, but a salt monopoly affords a large income, and there is an onerous tax on commerce in transit. The funded debt of China is about £5,470,000, is mostly held in England, and has yielded 8 per cent.

From Peking General Wilson visited first the Great Wall, and then the Kai-ping coal mines, which are worked by a costly European plant and connected with canal navigation, seven miles distant, by the only railroad in China. Each of these topics has a chapter to itself. A more considerable expedition followed into the country to the southward, along the Grand Canal and the Hoang-ho or Yellow River, the party of sixteen persons traveling over vague and crooked roads in carts or on ponies, with a full commissariat, for sixty days. The stages were from twenty-five to forty miles a day, and inns were generally found at the larger towns:

They consist of a compound wall of sun-dried brick — rarely of fire-burned brick — the entrance to which is through a pair of large doors, which may be closed and barred. Sometimes there is an inner yard or court. The principal guest rooms are in a low, single-storied house opposite the entrance. We saw one, and only one, two-storied guest house on the trip. The house is divided in the better inns into two and sometimes three rooms, the middle one containing a square table and two chairs, or benches, and the end ones containing a kang, or two trestles, covered with coarse mats, upon which the guest's own bedding is spread by his own servants. The smaller houses have only a single room, in one end of which is the kang, or trestle, and in the other the table and chairs. The rooms are lighted from the front by square windows, with paper panes, and heated, if heat is required, by a pan of charcoal burning in the middle of the floor, which is sometimes of brick, but generally of clay. The kang is a raised platform across the end of the room, of the same kind of material that the house itself is built of, which, as before stated, is generally of sun-dried brick. In theory, it is supposed to be provided with a furnace and a flue connecting with the open air, for the purpose of burning millet stalks or grass, and thus heating the body of the kang; but in practice the furnace is rarely found, and when found it is generally impossible to use it. During all our travels south of the Yellow River we saw only one kang, trestles being used instead. On either side of the compound are the rooms for servants and carters, and also for guests who do not absolutely require the best. The carts are placed in front of the rooms, and the mules and horses are fed in movable troughs which stand in the open court, or under the sheds which are sometimes provided for shelter. The innkeeper furnishes hot water, charcoal, and Chinese meals for such guests as want them, and provides for the animals, and all at reasonable rates. During the night a watchman goes around the premises frequently, beating a piece of hollow wood with a small stick in a peculiar rhythmical manner, which is everywhere the same, and is sometimes quite annoying. The scene presented by an inn-yard full of carts, horses, and mules is quite animated, but by no means suggestive of extraordinary comfort or cleanliness. The inns themselves in the winter are generally dirty and cheerless, and always cold and damp, so that the traveler's only refuge is to go to bed as soon as he gets his supper. The best and neatest inns are everywhere kept by the Mohammedans; but as they do not serve pork in any form, the Chinese carters and mafoos will not patronize them if they can find any other inns open. As we had our own cook along, and ate no Chinese food except mutton, poultry, eggs, and vegetables, it made but little difference to us whether the inns at which we stopped were Mohammedan or Buddhist.

Our space is exhausted, and yet five more chapters of this interesting narrative remain. Mobs in the city of Kai-fung-fu, dust storms on the Great Plain, floods on the Hoang-ho, the opium traffic, and the whole of the Island of Formosa, we must pass over in this notice. The Christian missionaries, General Wilson thinks, have been less successful in making actual converts than in introducing the elements of western civilization. China as a whole moves slowly, and her people are not yet ready to accept modern improvements on any terms "which will increase European influence in China, or give European powers the slightest pretext for intermeddling with the internal affairs of the country or its government." They are "strong protectionists" without knowing it, and do not propose to send money out of the country for the purpose of paying interest. When they can build railroads with Chinese capital, Chinese labor, and Chinese materials, there is good reason to believe that they will begin.

STORIES OF THE FAR WEST.*

THE regions and the life over whose capabilities for use in fiction Bret Harte has established a sort of supremacy are here boldly invaded by an author whose name to us is new. Mr. Heermans is at home in the mining camp and on the cattle ranch, and depicts their rude scenes and incidents with sturdy strokes, and a realistic fidelity that flinches at no profaneness or other "local coloring." He is at his best, it seems to us, when some substratum of fact appears in sight under the layer of fiction; and yet in those very stories which profess most literally to be fact he sometimes draws pretty heavily upon our credulity, and leaves us rubbing our eyes and at a loss to know whether after all imagination has not taken the pen out of the hands of history, and is not making fools of us under pretense of giving information.

The ascent of Uncompahgre is a case in point. Two chapters are given to it. Uncompahgre is a Colorado peak, and the ascent of it here related was made in January—a winter feat that had never been accomplished before. There were four in the party, and we can follow them without a question along their steep and perilous climb until we reach the following incident, which we confess is a little too "steep" for us:

* Thirteen Stories of the Far West. By Forbes Heermans. Syracuse: C. W. Bardeen.

Taking the four lengths of rope we had brought, he carefully knotted them together again, and coiling up the slack loosely, stepped to the edge of the precipice, carrying the large noose in his right hand. With his eye he carefully estimated the distance to a small boulder that was perched upon the opposite side of the crevasse. Then he slowly swung the loop about his head, opening it into a circle by a peculiar twist of his hand. Again and again did the rope weave about his head, until at last he sent it flying through the air across the gulf. The first and second throws were failures—the noose missed the boulder; but the third time it settled down over the rock and held fast, our united weights being unable to move it. We then secured the end we held to a jagged spike of stone that stuck up near the edge, and our bridge was done. Over this frail pathway of a single rope, knotted and chafed, we must go. It certainly seemed like flying in the face of a previously beneficent Providence, but we had gone too far to turn back; besides, we were afraid to. Our knapsacks had become exceedingly annoying, and chafed our shoulders painfully; but we could not leave them, as we should certainly need our provisions and blankets, so we secured them again in place in such a way as to leave our arms tolerably free, and made ready for the crossing. Jim went first; he claimed this privilege, saying the bridge was his—and he was going—any how. We let him; it is always best to defer to others in little matters of this kind. Besides the rope might break. We watched him carefully let himself over the edge of the cliff, and then, grasping the cord over his head, saw him make his way across—hand over hand. It took less than a minute for him to reach the other side, yet it seemed an hour to us. Bob went next, and he went in good style, never looking down, but straight ahead. Midway in the passage he stopped to rest. It was a moment of great anxiety to all of us. The strain on the rope was tremendous; as he hung there in the middle his weight of 160 pounds stretched the cord dangerously. I momentarily expected to hear it snap, and to see him sent flying into the depths below. But it held and he reached the other side in safety. . . . I carefully wrapped my handkerchief about the rope where it was chafed, and started. Again I was surprised and pleased to find how cool I was; all my fears had been anticipatory; my nerves were firmer than when I stood on the rock. I took great pains not to jar or strain the rope unnecessarily, and I never felt lighter in my life. A third of the way across I stopped, and threw my left leg over the rope to remove the strain on my arms. The scene around me was a wild one. Below, many hundred feet, yawned the black chasm, its bottom only visible here and there, where the sunlight penetrated it. A moment sufficed to rest me and I went on. When I reached the middle the rope sagged perilously, and it seemed as if I could feel the strands parting. I shut my eyes and hurried over the dangerous spot. I passed it safely and then began the ascent. This was comparatively easy, for though it was up hill, I knew the worst was over and that I was secure. Another instant and I was standing by Dawson and Jim.

The most powerful of these thirteen stories is the account of a visit to Molokai, one of the Hawaiian Islands, and the seat of a colony of lepers. For the circumstances under which Mr. Heermans reached the island it is hard not to feel that he drew upon his imagination wholly, but his description of the colony itself, and especially of Father Damien, a devoted priest of the Roman Catholic Church, who has exiled himself to this dreadful home, has the sound of a sober statement of facts, hideous though the facts may be:

"You say this is Molokai," I said, "the asylum of the lepers. But how did I come here? I cannot remember." "You were upset in a canoe," said the priest, "and brought here by the crew, who swam ashore. They thought you were dead." The whole affair flashed through my mind. "But where is Kapana?" I asked. "Was he drowned?" "If Kapana is the alii who was with you, he is still alive," said the priest; "but did you know he was a leper? Just now he seems a little insane—lepers are sometimes afflicted in that way at certain stages of the disease. But let us go to my house—slowly—this way, M'sieu—voilà!" And off we started together at a very slow pace, towards a group of houses that stood a half-mile back from the sea. As my strength and confidence gradually returned to me, I was able to take note of my surroundings. I found myself upon a point of land of triangular shape, two sides being bounded by the sea; the other, or base, was formed by the wall of rock already spoken of. The triangle was a high plateau that stood straight up a hundred feet from the water, except at two places, where short strips of sand formed landing places. The area of the triangle was about ten square miles, I should say, and sloped gently upwards towards the center. Here rose a high, rocky mound, perhaps a quarter-mile in diameter, forming the extinct crater of the volcano of Kohukoo, its black rocks yet undraped in green. But the sloping plains about the crater were bright in the luxuriant vegetation of the orange, bread-fruit, banana, fig, and palm trees. The manie grass clothed the earth with a tight-fitting garment, while the flowers were everywhere. It was a truly noble sight, and made me forget for a moment where I was. But only for a moment. The very voice even of my companion told me that I was in the company of a leper, and reminded me that this spot was occupied only by the human outcasts of the world. As we walked towards a little group of white cottages the good priest, in a few words, gave me an account of himself and the place. He had landed on Molokai, he said, in September, 1873, having come from Belgium here.

A few rods beyond we entered the hospital inclosure. The hospital consisted of a dozen detached cottages, cleanly whitewashed outside and in. Within the buildings were forty-eight patients, twenty-eight males and twenty females, all momentarily expecting to die, yet dreading death most strangely. Never have I beheld such sights as I saw there. Of all the sickening and repulsive libels and hideous caricatures upon the human face and form that I had before looked upon, none compared with these new sights in the hospital. Here I saw those about to die; those whom the dreadful disease had at last almost conquered. If one can imagine the appearance of a corpse exhumed after being a week buried he may have an idea of some of the lepers slowly dying in the hospital at Kalawao. On every hand was Death in its most horrible shapes. There was nothing peaceful—nothing hopeful—everything was as dreadful as it could be; worse than I had before thought possible. It seemed like looking into some tomb, and throughout all the rooms there pervaded the peculiar sickening odor of the grave, that but added to this impression. Here was what had been a pretty child of ten; now a loathsome, rotting mass. There lay the putrefying yet breathing remains of what one time had been a young maiden. All ages were there in the hospital, from the child of a few years to the old man of seventy, yet all so dreadfully disfigured by the disease as to be indistinguishable one from the other.

The other portions of Mr. Heermans's book are rather livelier reading. In "Shingles" we have a romance of miner's life at Clay's Gulch, not an unfamiliar scene. "The Widow of the Late Smith" is an amusing account of a stage-coach robbery, in which one of the bandits, disguised as a widow, played a preliminary part as a passenger. "On Watch with the Night Herd" is again a graphic picture of real life—the life of a cowboy on the plains. "Don Quixote de Santa Rosa" and "The Wedding at Puerta da Luna" are New Mexican reminiscences, in which revolvers, frontier balls, and the tender passion play a part. Nobody will enjoy these pages more than the reader who has crossed the continent, and with whom the snowy peaks of Colorado and the vast plains of New Mexico are a vivid memory. Fiction produces the effects of reality when it employs such scenes as these, and Mr. Heermans certainly helps one to see and feel the peculiar character and experience which those scenes have occasioned and which will long be associated with them in our minds.

THINGS SEEN BY VICTOR HUGO.*

WHO is not interested to look at Things Seen by Victor Hugo? Who would not have liked to look at the world through his wonderful eyes, could they have been borrowed! Not the eyes of his imagination, but his physical eyes, the eyes with which he saw Paris and the Parisians, the events and the personages which composed French history during his time!

We are not told whence this collection of Choses Vues comes. The translator's name even is not given, and there is not a scrap of preface or introduction. The title appears nowhere in the list of Hugo's published works. We find no mention of any such portfolio of sketches in the list of the manuscripts remaining at his death. There are thirty-six of them, arranged chronologically, and running from 1838 to 1875. Some are historical, like the accounts of the Riot on the 12th of May, 1839, and the Flight of Louis Philippe in 1848. Some are descriptive, like the Funeral of Mlle. Mars, and the Notes taken at the Funeral of Napoleon in 1840, when his body was laid beneath the Dome of the Invalides. Some are personal sketches, like those of the meeting with Béranger and the Death of Balzac. Each is a fragment, to be read by itself. There is no connection between them, no continuity. They put us by the side of Hugo, and enable us to see what he saw and as he saw.

It is instructive to read these pages after reading Tolstoi's stories. Hugo looks at facts with his imagination; Tolstoi's imagination seems to create facts. Is it too much to say that when Tolstoi mounts upon actual facts, as in his book on Sebastopol, he is taller even than Victor Hugo? Hugo's stature has always seemed immense until these Russian figures began to loom up in the mist; now—

* Things Seen. By Victor Hugo. [Choses Vues.] Harper & Brothers. 75c. Paper, 25c.

On Thursday, January the 13th, 1847, Hugo dined at the house of M. de Salvandy, Minister of Public Instruction. He sat beside Lord Normandy, the British Ambassador, "a man of about fifty years of age, tall, fair, with a pronounced English look, elegant, graceful, high-bred, good-natured, and dandyish," wearing "a blue ribbon over his white tie, and a diamond star upon his breast;" and these were the people whom Hugo saw around him:

The Duke de Caraman, a young nobleman, intelligent and artless, much occupied in philosophical studies: Dupin, the elder, with his rough bourgeois air; M. de Rémusat, the eight-days-old Academician, a keen and well-balanced mind; M. Gay-Lussac, the chemist, whom fame has made a peer of France, and to whom nature has given the face of a worthy peasant; the other chemist, M. Dumas, a man of talent, his hair rather too elaborately curled, and displaying very prominently the ribbon of a Commander of the Legion of Honor; Sainte-Beuve, bald and little; Alfred de Musset, with his youthful hair, his fair beard, his equivocal opinions, and his intellectual countenance; M. Ponsard, a man of thirty-two years of age, with strange looking features, large dull eyes, rather narrow forehead, the whole in a framework of black beard and black hair, a hero of the shop girls, a great poet to the bourgeois; M. Michel Chevalier, with his close-cropped head, his receding forehead, his birdlike profile, and his spare figure; Alfred de Vigny, another fair man with a birdlike profile, but with long hair; Viennet, with his grimace; Scribe, with his peaceful air, rather anxious about a piece of his which was being played the same evening at the Gymnase, and which failed; Dupaty, sad after his fall of the 7th at the sitting of the Académie; Montalembert, with his long hair and English appearance, mild and disdainful; Philippe de Segur, a light and lively talker, with an aquiline nose, deep-sunk eyes, gray hair, combed in imitation of the Emperor; Generals Fabvier and Rapatel, in full uniform—Rapatel with his round, homely face, Fabvier with his flat-nosed lion's face; Mignet, smiling and cold; Gustave de Beaumont, with dark, firm, and energetic face; Halévy, always timid; the astronomer Leverrier, rather red-faced; Vitet, with his tall figure and his smile, which is amiable, although it lays bare his teeth; M. Victor Leclerc, the candidate for the Académie, who had that morning been rejected; Ingres, the table rising to his chin, so that his white tie and his Commander's ribbon seemed to come from under the table-cloth; Pradier, with his long hair, and his air of a man of forty at sixty years of age; Auber, with his head on one side, his polite manners, and his two crosses at his button-hole.

On the evening of the 6th of July in the same year M. Hugo attended a fête in the Parc des Minimes in the Forest of Vincennes, given by M. de Montpensier. The fête cost 200,000 francs, and was "splendid and delightful"—as at that price it ought to have been. Among the "things seen" here were a multitude of tents, borrowed from the government repository and the French Museum of Arms, some of which were historical. This alone cost ten thousand francs. There were the tent of the Emperor of Morocco, taken at the battle of Isly, and exhibited three years previously at the Tuileries upon a wooden platform constructed inside the big fountain; the tent of Abd-el-Kader, taken with the Smala, very handsome, with red and yellow arabesques embroidered in satin; another tent of the Bey of Constantine, of a wonderfully elegant shape; and, finally, the tent given to Napoleon by the Sultan Selim. The latter eclipsed all the others. From the outside it appeared like an ordinary tent, remarkable only for having—in the canvas little windows, of which the frames were of rope—three windows on each side. The inside was superb. The visitor found himself inside a great chest of gold brocade; upon this brocade were flowers and a thousand fancy devices. On looking closely into the cords of the windows, one discovered that they were of the most magnificent gold and silver lace; each window had its awning of gold brocade; the inner lining of the tent was of silk, with large red-and-blue stripes. If I had been Napoleon I should have liked to place my iron bed in this tent of gold and flowers, and to sleep in it on the eve of Wagram, Jena, and Friedland. These splendid tents were disfigured by fearful mahogany furniture rather sparingly placed in them.

On the 4th of November, 1847, the Normal School in the Rue d'Ulm was opened, and M. Hugo was present by request. He was now 45 years old. As he was coming out he saw approaching him in the corridor leading to the staircase a man whom at first he did not recognize:

His face was round and red, his eye clear and vivacious, long, grayish hair; sixty or more years old; a good smiling mouth; an old frock coat in very bad condition; a great Quaker hat with a broad brim; inclining to stoutness, and having some resemblance to my brother Abel. It was Béranger. "Ah! Good day, Hugo." "Ah! Good day, Béranger." He took my arm. We proceeded together. "I will go with you to the end of the street. Have you a carriage?" "My legs!" "Well, I have the same." We went by the Estrapade towards the Rue Saint-Jacques. Two men, dressed in black, approached us. "Diable!" cried Béranger, "here are two vulgar pedants—the one a head master of a school, the other a member of the Academy of Sciences. Do you know them?" "No." "Happy man. Hugo, you have always been in luck." The two pedants merely bade us good day. We proceeded by the Rue Saint-Hyacinthe. Béranger continued: "So you have been compelled during the last month to eulogize a great man of an hour, killed between his confessor, his mistress, and his cuckold." "Ah!" I said, "you do not deserve to be a Puritan. Do not speak thus of Frederic Soulié, who had real talent, and a heart without bitterness." "The fact is," replied Béranger, "I said a foolish thing for the sake of being clever. I am not a Puritan. I hate the breed. Whoever says Puritan says sinner." And above all "Fool." True virtue, true morality, and true greatness are intelligent and indulgent.

M. Hugo had eyes for things immaterial and to some persons invisible. On the 31st of December, 1875, writing in retrospect of the eminent men whom he had received in his home, he says:

I have had sometimes in my hands the gloved and white palm of the upper class and the heavy black hand of the lower class, and have recognized that both are but men. After all these have passed before me, I say that Humanity has a synonym—Equality; and that under Heaven there is but one thing we ought to bow to—Genius; and only one thing before which we ought to kneel—Goodness.

These are good words to put at the end of a book. We should like to quote further from it—from "The Flight of Louis Philippe," from "The Condemned Convicts' Prison," from "Hubert the Spy" and "Tapner," two Jersey and Guernsey pictures; but we must make room for "The Death of Balzac," which follows:

The Death of Balzac.

On the 18th of August, 1850, my wife, who had been during the day to see Mme. de Balzac, told me that Balzac was dying. I hurried to him. M. de Balzac had been suffering for eighteen months from hypertrophy of the heart. After the revolution of February he went to Russia, and there married. Some days before his departure I met him in the boulevard. He was then complaining, and breathing noisily. In May, 1850, he returned to France, married, rich, and dying! When he arrived his legs were already swollen. Four doctors held a consultation. One of them, M. Louis, told me on the 6th of July, "He has not six weeks to live." It is the same disease that killed Frederic Soulié. On August 18th my uncle, General Louis Hugo, was dining with me. As soon as the table was cleared I left, and took a cab to the Avenue Fortunée (No. 14), in the Quartier Beaujon, where M. de Balzac lived. He had purchased what remained of the mansion of M. de Beaujon, some portion having escaped demolition. He had furnished it magnificently, and made it a very pretty little house, having a carriage entrance in the Avenue Fortunée, and for garden a long and narrow court, in which the pavement was here and there cut into flower-beds. I rang. The moon was up, but obscured by clouds. The street was deserted. No one came. I rang again. The door opened. A servant appeared with a candle. "What do you want, sir?" she asked. She was crying. I told her my name. She ushered me into a room on the ground floor, in which, on a console opposite the chimney-piece, was a colossal bust of Balzac by David. A wax candle was burning upon a splendid table in the center of the salon, and which had for feet six statuettes, gilt with the purest gold. Another woman, who was also crying, came and said, "He is dying. Madame has gone to her own room. The doctors have not been here since yesterday. He has a wound in the left leg. Gangrene has set in. The doctors do not know what to do; they say that the dropsy is a couennous dropsy, an infiltration. That is what they call it; that the skin and the flesh are like lard, and that it is impossible to tap him. Last month, when going to bed, master ran against a decorated piece of furniture and tore the skin of his leg, and all the water in the body ran out. The doctors were much astonished, and since then they have made punctuations. They said, 'Imitate nature.' But an abscess of the limb has supervened. M. Roux operated. Yesterday they removed the dressing; the wound, instead of having suppurated, was red, dry, and burning. Then they said, 'He is lost,' and they have never returned. Four or five have been sent for in vain. Every one said, 'It is no use.' He had a bad night. This morning at nine Monsieur could not speak. Madame sent for the priest; he came and has given Monsieur extreme unction. One hour after he shook the hand of his sister, Madame de Surville. Since eleven o'clock the rattle has been in his throat, and he can see no longer. He will not live through the night. If you wish, sir, I will go and look for M. de Surville, who has not yet retired." The woman left me. I waited for some minutes. The candle scarcely lighted the room, its splendid furniture and fine pictures by Porbus and Holbein. The marble bust shows back vaguely in the gloom like the specter of the man who was dying. A corpse-like smell pervaded the house. M. de Surville entered and confirmed all that the servant had said. I requested to see M. de Balzac. We proceeded along a corridor, ascended a staircase covered with red carpet and laden with objects of art—vases, statues, pictures, credence tables—and then another corridor, and I perceived an open door. I heard a loud and sinister rattling noise. I was in the death chamber of Balzac. A bed stood in the middle of the room, a mahogany bedstead having a suspensory arrangement at the head and foot for the convenience of moving the invalid. M. de Balzac was in this bed, his head supported on a pile of pillows, to which had been added the red damask cushions from the sofa. His face was purple, almost black, and drawn to the right side; his beard untrimmed, his gray hair cut short, his eyes fixed and open. I saw him in profile, and thus he resembled the Emperor. An old woman, the nurse, and a man servant stood at each side of the bed; a candle was burning behind the head of the bed upon a table, another upon the drawers near the door. A silver vase was placed on the night table. This man and this woman stood silent in fear, and listened to the dying rattle of the invalid. The candle behind the bed lighted up brightly the portrait of a young man, ruddy and smiling, hanging near the fireplace. An unsupportable smell issued from the bed. I lifted the counterpane and took the hand of Balzac. It was clammy. I pressed it. He did not respond to the pressure. This was the same room in which I had come to see him a month previously. He was then cheerful, full of hope, having no doubt of his recovery, showing his swelled limb, and laughing. We had a long conversation and a political dispute. He called me his demagogue. He was a Legitimist. He said to me, "How have you so quietly renounced the title of peer of France, the best after that of King of France?" He also said, "I have the house of M. de Beaujon without the garden, but with the seat in the little church at the corner of the street. A door in my staircase opens into this church; one turn of the key and I can hear mass. I think more of the seat than of the garden." When I was about to leave him he conducted me to this staircase with difficulty and showed me the door, and then he called out to his wife, "Mind you show Hugo all my pictures." The nurse said to me, "He will die at daybreak." I came down stairs again, bearing in mind the livid face. Crossing the dining room, I found the bust immovable, impassible, haughty, vaguely radiant, and I compared death with immortality. When I reached home it was Sunday. I found many people awaiting me, among others Riza-Bey, the Turkish Chargé d'Affaires, Navarette, the Spanish poet, and the Count Arrivabene, the exiled Italian. I said to them, "Gentlemen, Europe is on the point of losing a great soul." He died in the night. He was fifty-one years old. They buried him on Wednesday. He lay first in the Beaujon Chapel, and he was carried thither by the door, the key of which was more precious to him than all the beautiful gardens of the former "Fermier Général." Giraud took his portrait on the very day of his death. They wished to mould his mask, but could not; decomposition was too rapid. The day after his death, in the morning, the modelers who came found his face deformed and the nose fallen upon the cheek. They put him in an oak and lead coffin. The service was performed at Saint-Philippe du Roule. As I stood by the coffin I remembered that there my second daughter had been baptized, and I had not been in the church since. In our memories death touches birth. The Minister of the Interior, Baroche, came to the funeral. He was seated by me in church, near the bier, and from time to time he spoke to me. He said, "He was a distinguished man." I replied, "He was a genius." The procession traversed Paris and went by way of the boulevards to Père la Chaise. A few drops of rain fell when we were leaving the church and when we reached the cemetery. It was one of those days on which it seems that the heavens must shed tears. We walked all the way. I proceeded in front of the coffin, holding one of the silver tassels of the pall; Alexander Dumas was on the other side. When we came to the grave, which was some distance up the hill, we found an immense crowd. The road was rough and narrow; the horses had some difficulty in pulling the hearse, which rolled back again. I found myself imprisoned between a wheel and a tomb, and was very nearly crushed. The spectators who were standing on the tomb helped me up. The coffin was lowered into the grave, which is close to those of Charles Nodier and of Casimir Delavigne. The priest said the last prayer and I spoke a few words. As I was speaking the sun set. All Paris appeared in the distance enveloped in the splendid haze of the setting orb. The earth began to fall into the grave almost at my feet, and I was interrupted by the dull sound of this earth dropping on the coffin.

— Benjamin & Bell of New York will shortly publish Sea Spray; or, Facts and Fancies of a Yachtsman, by the Hon. S. G. W. Benjamin.

MINOR NOTICES.

A Friend in Need. A Household Guide in Health and Disease. By "Doctor Frank." Boston: Thayer Publishing Co. $3.00.

Health in Our Homes. By "Doctor Frank." Do., do. 75c.

Health of our Children. By "Doctor Frank." Do., do. 75c.

Here are three books by the same author, all three at once, the first a large octavo of 460 pages, the others considerably smaller, and of 112 and 128 pages respectively. There is a prejudice against "popular" medical books; they have been too frequently the work of quacks, and regular physicians are for the most part shy of writing them. We do not know why they should be so. A skilled physician may render useful service by writing for the people upon the common topics of health and disease, especially upon the laws of sanitation and hygiene. And that is what the author of the three books before us seems to have been doing in a Boston paper. The two smaller of the books are made up of these letters; the larger appears to be a wholly original and independent work. It is a mistake, we think, for the author to hide himself under a pseudonym, and it is to be wished that his books bore the imprint of some well-known publishing house; they abundantly deserve both of these credentials, and fully substantiate private information to the effect that "Dr. Frank" is a reputable and regular practicing physician in Boston. Certainly he need not be ashamed to acknowledge his books, and the public need not be afraid to buy them.

The two lesser books are plain, straightforward, practical statements of the simple but inexorable conditions of domestic health, in the first as respects the construction, ventilating, heating, plumbing, and occupying houses; and the second as respects the feeding, bathing, dressing, and sleeping of infants, and the exercise of older children. Thorough scientific knowledge and sound common sense underlie both of these books, and if they would be widely circulated, read, and heeded, it would be a public blessing.

The first-named and largest book of the three, A Friend in Need, is the best family medical book we have seen this long time. Its five books relate successively to Practical Hygiene, Mental Hygiene, the Sick Room and its General Management, the Principles of Medicine, and the Practice of Medicine, this fifth division filling more than half the book. Throughout the treatise is one of principles rather than prescriptions, though not excluding the latter; it is severe on quacks and quackery and loyal to the practitioner, to whom it constantly refers the reader; it makes much of guarding against the causes of disease, it does not encourage the sick to doctor themselves, but it is fitted to be helpful in emergencies, to serve where no doctor can be had, and to train a household in ways that make for health. The author is conservative and cautious, modest and unpretending in offering his opinions, and while never dogmatic and imperious is always clear-headed, decided, and firm. A great many of his recommendations would gladly be followed by sufferers if they knew where to find them. He can see two sides of a question, and show them to his readers too, and his whole manner invites confidence. There is nothing in the book which should forbid it to the youngest member of the family; in fact it would be an admirable course of physiological and therapeutic reading for all young people, as well as their fathers and mothers.

The Conquering Cross. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] The subject of this fifth volume in Mr. Haweis's free-hand sketch of "Christ and Christianity" affords him less scope for the ventilation of his peculiar views, but abundance of material for his lively imagination to play with, and plenty of use for all his adjectives. He has left the New Testament times of tradition and illusion, and passing through the misty "legend" of Peter and Paul, now strikes out into the surely historical times of Nero, Hadrian, Marcus Aurelius, and Constantine. Besides upon these Roman figures there are chapters on Clement, Polycarp, and Justin Martyr, the Church of the Catacombs, the Martyrs of Lyons, and the interior life of the Church in the second and third centuries, with a prophetic chapter in conclusion on the Church of the Future. The strong points of Mr. Haweis's writings are not their judicial quality or their historical value. He is a scene painter, working with a broad brush and laying on the colors thick and fast. His contempt for forms and conventionalities in religion is undisguised and hearty. He uncopes the bishops and unstoles the priests with a ruthless hand. Of his honesty there can be no question, and his independence is worthy of praise. He fears nobody and measures no words. He hacks away right and left to hew out his own path. He hates cant and hypocrisy and loves sincerity and courage. There is a great deal in his spirit and method with which no earnest person can fail to sympathize, and readers who are informed, level-headed, and not likely to be swept off their feet by his exuberant flow of theological spirits, will find him always entertaining, often suggestive, and sometimes amusing.

The Appeal to Life. By Theodore T. Munger. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.] Rev. Dr. Munger's inspiring volume of sermons, with its preliminary exposition of the New Theology (so called, and miscalled, we must think), entitled The Freedom of Faith, cannot have been forgotten by any who had the good fortune to read the manly discourses. He presents in this volume, of the same external style, another series of pulpit utterances which aim to vindicate and illustrate the true inductive method in religion, by appealing to the human life which is actually being lived in this present generation. One does not need to coincide with the preacher's emphasis of the Incarnation to read with pleasure and profit his identification of pure religion with the truth of nature and the vital life of mankind. Whether one esteem himself more "orthodox" or less so than Dr. Munger, he must rejoice in the fact of such deep and earnest preaching. Four essays, which have appeared elsewhere, set forth the doctrine of evolution as conceived and interpreted by a man of the Spirit. We can very heartily commend the exposition to all who are disposed to treat the long and painful evolution of mankind as a simple problem in natural history.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, AUGUST 6, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

The flesh of animals who feed excessively is allowed to have a higher flavour than that of those who are cooped up. May there not be the same difference between men who read as their taste prompts and men who are confined in cells and colleges to stated tasks?—Boswell's Life of Johnson.

How long is it to be before the government of the United States will operate the telegraph system of the country as it operates the mails? That, surely, will be one of the improvements of the Twentieth Century. Then we shall have a uniform tariff of rates as we have uniform postage; and two grades of dispatches for which different colored blanks will be provided; the more expensive to be delivered by a special messenger service as now, but the cheaper through the mails by the regular carriers. The latter would answer the purpose of many dispatchers where the greatest haste is not required, and would be a great public convenience.

The best recent "skit" on the Baconian authorship of Shakespeare, suggested by Mr. Donnelly's Baconian cipher, is Mr. Robert J. Burdette's discovery, promulgated in the Brooklyn Eagle, that Mr. Charles A. Dana of the New York Sun wrote Webster's Dictionary. "The cipher in this work," says Mr. Burdette, is a marvel of ingenuity:

Note, if you please, the first illustration in this interesting and ingeniously-written romance; it is a picture of the "Aard-vark." Now, everybody knows that Aardvark has ever been one of Mr. Dana's hobbies. Even the writing of the "Life and Times of the English Language," which any ten other men would have called hard work, Mr. Dana esteemed as play. And so on for half a column.

If a story writer is to be measured by his number of readers, then doubtless Sylvanus Cobb, Jr., whose death is one of the entries since our last issue, is to be set down as one of the most successful. His contributions, backed by Mr. Bonner's advertising, were what made the New York Ledger in its palmy days a generation ago. He has had many imitators but few rivals in his peculiar path of fiction, and we have always believed that, taking the world for which he wrote into account, he did more good than harm.

In one of his talks at the Concord School of Philosophy Professor Harris, speaking of Shakespeare's Sonnets, alluded to some recent observations on these wonderful poems by Professor Palmer of Harvard College, which he thinks show a remarkable analytic and critical insight, and which he hopes will be published to the world. We join in this hope.

The strength of a chain is the strength of its weakest link, and when such a "link" as the gifted President of Wellesley College surrenders to the matrimonial suit of a brilliant Harvard College professor, what is to be said of the prospects of the Higher Education of Women? There are few, if any, higher professional positions open to woman than that of the President of Wellesley; but there seems to be one private position that is higher, at least more urgent, and that is wifehood. After all, blood is thicker than water and nature is stronger than art. Yet it is a pretty state of things that a chief New England institution of learning cannot raise such a fair consummate flower without having it plucked and carried off. But Professor Palmer now believes in the elective system.

There is sensation amounting to consternation in the English college world over the achievements of women at the Cambridge examinations. Miss Ramsay of Girton, in the Classical Tripos, came out the only one in the first division of the first class of the year, and Miss Hervey of Newnham reached the same distinction in the Modern Language Tripos, no young man having passed in the first class in either. Furthermore Miss Bateson gained a second place in the first class in the Historical Tripos, and Miss Kendall, formerly teacher of German at Wellesley College, a second class in modern history at Oxford. These are all most brilliant academic honors, and shine with added luster because of their feminine wearers.

JOURNAL OF THE CONCORD SCHOOL.

(Continued.)

Tuesday, July 19. Professor Davidson reads a paper by Brother Azarias of Rock Hill, Md., on "Aristotle and the Christian Church," and Mr. F. B. Sanborn one by Robert Nix on "The Aristotltian Doctrine of Substance."

Wednesday, 20th. Professor Davidson reads from Mrs. Campbell's translation an address on "Aristotle's Politics and Montesquieu's Esprit des Lois," by Professor Luigi Ferri of the University of Rome, Italy, prefacing the reading with a brief account of the writer, and accompanying it with running comments, in which Mr. Sanborn joins. Remarks by Professor Wm. T. Harris follow. Evening paper by Mr. Edwin D. Mead on "The Collision of Individuals with Institutions in the Greek Drama and in Shakespeare."

Thursday, 21st. Address by Dr. Fillmore More on "Aristotle's Physiological Doctrines," illustrated by citations. Paper by Mrs. Ednah D. Cheney on "Massinger the Dramatist."

Friday, 22d. A pouring rain, but attendance not much diminished. Lecture by Professor Harris on "Aristotle's Theory of the Syllogism Compared with that of Hegel." Address by Professor Davidson on Sappho, accompanied by citations from her writings; taking the place of an expected lecture on "Aristotle's Theory of Education" by Dr. F. S. Soldan of St. Louis, which was not forthcoming.

Saturday, 23d. Lecture by Rev. Dr. Bartol on "Shakespeare's Poetics," followed by a discussion in which Mr. Towne and Professor Harris participate.

Sunday, 24th. Deponent saith not.

Monday, 25th. Mr. F. B. Sanborn, in a paper on "Social Science in Plato and Aristotle," handles those philosophers without gloves, and tears their writings on this subject into tatters, scattering them to the winds. Evening lecture by Rev. Geo. W. Cooke of Dedham on "Browning's Dramatic Genius," appreciative, but not adulatory, and subjecting to discipline those critics who are fond of spelling Browning S-h-a-k-e-s-p-e-a-r-e.

Tuesday, 26th. Mrs. E. M. Mitchell of Denver, Col., lectures on "Friendship in Aristotle's Ethics." Mr. Molloy of Waltham gives readings from Robert Browning. From 4 to 7 the philosophers are entertained at a picnic by Mr. and Mrs. D. Lothrop on the old Hawthorne place. Music and readings intersperse the social exercises. Evening address by Professor Davidson on "Ontology."

Wednesday, 27th. Address by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe on Aristophanes, with special reference to "The Frogs" and "The Clouds," which she probably handled with gloves. Evening readings, with comments, from Shakespeare's "Julius Cæsar," by Mr. Wm. O. Partridge of Boston.

Thursday, 28th. Two closing lectures by Professor Harris on "Ontology." The Boston Advertiser thus sums up the session:

Fourteen lecturers have delivered 26 lectures. Aristotle has been the central topic on ten mornings and two evenings. Four speakers have treated with the Greek drama. Twice Shakespeare has been the sole theme for elucidation. On two other occasions the early English dramatists were discussed. Sappho and Browning have had an evening each. Three times the vast and vital problems of ontology have undergone attempted solution. The members regularly in attendance compare well with those of former years. Among so great a variety of speakers uniform excellence could not be expected. Yet, on the whole, it is merely just to say that the instruction has been a fair medium between the superficially popular and the unfathomably profound.

READINGS IN THE ENGLISH PAPERS.

— We find in the Spectator a highly characteristic article on "The Charm of Pomp," suggested by the brilliant and imposing scenes connected with the late Jubilee of Queen Victoria. "Where there is no order," says the Spectator, "there can be no pomp;" and this position gives it occasion to speak as follows concerning "pomp in language:"

Language is far too light and delicate an instrument to bear the strain of an ill-arranged or discordant procession of high-sounding phrases without getting its noblest and purest qualities destroyed. Yet, on the other hand, no really beautiful effect of style can be produced without attention to the very artifices which in inferior writers produce the pomposness we find so disgusting. People are apt enough to say "Pomp in language is hateful; nothing but what is simple and unadorned is tolerable;" and then to turn from this proposition to instance some passage of English prose as perfect, in which the writer can be seen, if we look below the surface, to have shown the most extreme solicitude for getting that well-ordered procession of sound and sense which is essential not only to dignified, but to all clear and lucid writing.

— The Spectator has a not very complimentary review of a new novel, My Own Love Story, by Mr. Henry M. Trollope, a son of the late Anthony Trollope, which it pronounces "common-place" and "humdrum," although "written after the pattern of his father's novels." The hero is "dull," the heroine "equally uninteresting," the book is one to "struggle through," with "no interest in the plot, no scenes possessing any dramatic power, and no jokes anywhere." A "good essay" the Spectator thinks Mr. Henry Trollope might write, and therefore admits that he has "missed his way as a writer, rather than mistaken his vocation altogether."

— Professor Veitch of the University of Glasgow has published through Blackwood & Sons two volumes on The Feeling for Nature in Scottish Poetry. The Spectator calls him, next to Professor Knight of St. Andrews, the "leading Scotch Wordsworthian," and speaks in general praise of his present work, saying:

Professor Veitch does no more than justice to Burns; he does ample justice to Scott, Leyden, and Hogg, and affectionate justice to Shairp. Nor need the space and the praise he accords to minor writers, like David Gray, Hugh Macdonald, and Janet Hamilton, be grudged. But how comes it that he gives but a bare reference to Thomas Aird, who was as sincere a lover of nature as Scott himself, and who was a true Wordsworthian in the sense that, in his verses, nature always led up to nature's God?

— Discussion of various topics suggested by the Queen's Jubilee continues. The Spectator, thoughtfully considering "The Victorian Age in Literature," compares it on the whole unfavorably with the Georgian age, which preceded it. The Georgian age, it holds, was great not only in the calmness, clearness, and confidence of its vision of the scenery of human life, but also in the originality and fervor of the revolutionary energy with which new paths of literature were struck out, [while] the Victorian age, hitherto at least, has been one much more marked by restlessness and transitional modes of feeling and thought than by either the self-confidence and comprehensiveness of the earlier Georgian age, or the eager and vivid originality of its last five-and-twenty years.

Carlyle's "French Revolution" the Spectator thinks to be "the greatest and most characteristic literary effort" of the Victorian age.

— The Athenaeum, which has hitherto published at the beginning of each year an elaborate review, by countries, of the Continental Literature of the year preceding, finds the material now so abundant that a division of the review into a semi-annual becomes necessary. Its issue for July 2 therefore contains the chronicle for the first six months of 1887—Emile de Laveleye and M. Paul Fredericq writing of Belgium, Viggo Petersen of Denmark, Gabriel Sarrazin of France, Robert Zimmermann of Germany, E. Van Campen of Holland, A. Vámbéry of Hungary, Serge Varsher of Russia, and J. F. Riaño of Spain.

— The Athenaeum has an interesting note on Mr. Thomas Fiott Hughes, an Oriental scholar who died in June, one of whose literary feats was a translation of the Arabian Nights from Arabic into Persian as a labor of love. Much of his life was spent in Constantinople.

— Mr. John Ball's Notes of a Naturalist in South America is reviewed at length in the Athenaeum of July 2 as "a handbook, posted up to date, of the coast of South America, with descriptions of several short excursions inland, flavored with science just enough to interest and not to bore average readers."

— Another Englishman's book about South America, Sir Horace Rumbold's The Great Silver River, is reviewed by Mr. A. H. Keane in the Academy of the same date. Its subject is furnished in part by a residence in Buenos Ayres in 1880 and '81, and in part by an ascent of the river Uruguay as far as the Brazilian and Argentine frontier.

— The Academy is publishing a minute serial "History of the Invention of Printing," by Mr. J. H. Hessels.

PERIODICALS.

Harper's for August is a number of this versatile magazine to make dog days endurable at least for one leisure hour. If one wishes for excitement it may be found in Howard Pyle's romantic chronicle of the buccaneers and marooners of the Spanish Main, or in Mr. Shields's account of hunting the grizzly bear. There is mental refreshment in the paper on the international park at Niagara by Jane Meade Welch, in Mrs. Davis's pleasant description of Mobile, in R. C. Leslie's "Sea Wings," and in Margaret Deland's exquisite picture of "Noon in a New England Pasture." Rev. John M. Hurst contributes a paper on a native publishing house in India, that, namely, of Munshi Neel Kishore in Lucknow, whose buildings cover much space on the Hazrat Gunge, who has perhaps a hundred presses in constant operation, whose catalogue enumerates 2,500 different works in all departments of literature, printed in English, Sanskrit, Persian, Arabic, Urdu, Brashé, and the subsidiary dialects, and whose busy agents traverse all Asia. "The passion for reading has struck every part of India," says Dr. Hurst. "The people will have books and newspapers. It is for the Western Christian world to say what their fiber shall be." There are now six hundred native newspapers in India, and all but six of these are opposed to Christianity. Mr. Warner concludes his Mexican notes with a note of despondency. Dr. Henry Lansdell writes in an entertaining way of the natives of Siberia, and Sidney Lawrence is learned and captivating in his discussion of the mosaics of Ravenna. "A Fisherman's Mate," by Barnet Phillips, is a capital story. The Rev. W. W. Newton has a note on "Hypnotic Moralization" that we wish had been made longer. Mr. Howells, in the "Editor's Study," argues that imaginative literature is supported by people of limited incomes, and argues that these people should venture upon public criticism. The country papers, he thinks, would be a good medium for the dissemination of their views. In this way "the field of criticism could be made commensurate with the map of the United States!"

The fifth installment of the Thackeray letters in Scribner's for August surpasses, if anything, the preceding numbers in interest. The burial of Arthur Henry Hallam, Dickens's writings, the great Exposition, and a tour of the Rhine and the Italian lakes all come into the perspective and are inimitably treated. George Hitchcock writes about the picturesque quality of Holland and supplies several illustrations in support of the theme. Mrs. Bowne's letters come to a somewhat melancholy conclusion with the illness and death of the writer; their illumination of the social life of 80 years ago is, however, vivid and fascinating. Prof. Shaler writes of the instability of the atmosphere, of the wonderful balance of forces that maintains the air in constant proportion, of the generation of aerial currents, and of the source and action of cyclones. Prof. Shaler does not spare full scientific treatment, and his style is very attractive. Arlo Bates takes issue with Mr. Howells on the question of realism in the art of fiction. Mr. Bates handles the subject well, employing as his definition of art that of Véron—"the manifestation of emotion obtaining external interpretation." The argument is thus summarized:

The artistic writer—for this word seems more truly applicable than the common and obvious terms "romantic" and "idealist"—never objects to the exact reproduction of nature, provided only that this be understood to be a means and not an end. The message of art he believes to be worthy of the most finished language. He believes thoroughly in having its conventions as perfect as possible, and he is keenly alive, moreover, to the delight to be found in technical excellence. He believes, in a word, that the more realistic a writer is the better, so long as he looks at his subject emotionally. This seems to me to contain the pith of the whole discussion. So long as is kept in sight the fact that the motive is emotion, the workmanship cannot be too good.

Lippincott's for August is chiefly noteworthy for a short story by Sidney Luska, "A Land of Love," and for an apology for Ouida by Edgar Fawcett. Mr. Harland has escaped from the sway of the pseudo-fantastic in this bright tale, and the result is very pleasing. Mademoiselle Personette is charmingly drawn and Ormizon and Palmer are cleverly individualized. Mr. Fawcett thinks that Ouida has been misunderstood, and begins his view with a denunciation of all that has been said on the other side. The poetic qualities of Ouida's best work are, we should think, manifest to most cultivated reader; but we cannot agree with a view that elevates her to the rank of a great ethical artist.

The August Atlantic finds Dr. Holmes not yet through with his "Hundred Days in Europe," and he talks this month with continued and delightful abandon about his walks and shopping, his social life and sight-seeing in London. Mr. E. H. House writes with severity of the recently published memoir of Charles Reade, and gives a clear and satisfying account of the much discussed relations between Reade and Mrs. Seymour, though one far more to her credit than to his. Mr. House knew them both and visited them in their home. A good example of the essay is that by Mr. Geo. Frederic Parsons on "The Growth of Materialism"—a capital lay sermon. "The Spell of the Russian Writers" is yielded to by Miss Harriet W. Preston in a very readable paper, half of biography and half of criticism. The dialect story this month is by Charles W. Chesnutt, from the plantations of North Carolina—"The Goophered Grapevine" is its title; and "Two Years with Old Hickory" are set forth in a chapter of printed correspondence.

Four articles respectively about Bishop Berkeley, Shelley, Molière, and Theocritus give a strong literary flavor to the July Macmillan's, always an intelligent and instructive magazine, and often a strong and brilliant one. Macmillan's may be described not inaptly as the English Atlantic. It has no pictures except in words, such as these, for example, in Mr. Murray's extremely well written sketch of Berkeley:

One Sunday evening in the following January he was sitting listening to a sermon of his friend Sherlock, which his wife was reading. His daughter rose to fetch him a dish of tea, but on presenting it she found that nothing but his mortal form now filled his chair.

Mr. Traill's "Chatter about Shelley," however, is not what its title would make it, but a covert criticism in the form of a dialogue on some recent changes in professorships at Oxford, and will better be understood there than here. Of Molière's humor Mr. Tilley finds that it was "true, and wise, and genial, and above all things . . .

perfectly natural and simple." This paper is a good critical survey of much of Molière's work.

The American Magazine for August has an article on Venezuela by Dr. W. F. Hutchinson, who portrays in glowing colors the charms of this tropical republic and eulogizes the genius of Guzman Blanco, the benign dictator. Caracas Dr. Hutchinson found to be a charming winter residence with its inspiring air, cool nights, princely hospitality, and picturesque Spanish customs. Mr. White's article on the Supreme Court of the United States deserves attention. Col. Edwards Clarke writes convincingly of the scope of industrial education. There is a capital short story, "The Ghost of Aaron's Prong," by Tobe Hodge.

There is more strictly original matter in the Popular Science Monthly for August than for July. Of first importance are the Hon. David A. Wells's second article on "Economic Disturbances Since 1873," and President Andrew D. White's concluding chapter in the "Warfare of Science." A paper of great novelty and interest for the people is Mr. Serviss's "Astronomy with an Opera Glass," which shows how effectively the sun, moon, and stars can be studied with a field glass of no more than six powers. Says Mr. Serviss:

Begin your observations with the appearance of the narrowest crescent of the new moon, and follow it as it gradually fills, and then you will see how beautifully the advancing line of lunar sunrise reveals the mountains, over whose slopes and peaks it is climbing, by its ragged and sinuous outline. The observer must keep in mind the fact that he is looking straight down upon the tops of the lunar mountains. It is like a view from a balloon, only at a vastly greater height than any balloon has ever attained. Even with a powerful telescope the observer sees the moon at her apparent distance of several hundred miles, while with a field glass, magnifying six diameters, the moon appears as if forty thousand miles off. The apparent distance with Galileo's telescope was eight thousand miles.

Mr. Charles A. Bates of Indianapolis has commenced the publication of The Tattler, a monthly magazine of miscellaneous reading in prose and verse. Margaret Holmes Bates is the editor.

We do not know when we have seen a finer portrait, by any of the modern photographic processes, than the "artotype" of Manning Leonard, which appears as the frontispiece of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register for July. Besides its self-evident striking fidelity to its subject, there is to it a combined sharpness, softness, and delicacy of light and shade, which produce a remarkable effect. "E. Bierstadt, N. Y.," is the signature to the plate.

The Princeton Review, in the course of some excellent comments on the very common misuse of the reflexive myself, remarks:

By Shakespeare's time the adjective use of self had died out. An occasional use of the noun may be discovered, as in Sonnet 10. 13: "Make thee another self."

The adjective self occurs a dozen or more times in Shakespeare: in (1) the sense of "pertaining to one's self;" as in Macbeth, v. 8. 70: "by self and violent hands;" and (2) meaning "same," as in the Merchant, i. 1. 148: "that self way." Other examples, which we will not take space to locate, are: "that self sovereignty," "that self mould," "that self bill," "in this self place," "of that self blood," "that self metal," "that self hand," "that self exhibition," "with one self king," "one self mate," etc. The noun self is very common in expressions like "self from self," "self against self," "a kind of self," "second self," "action's self;" and oftener with a possessive pronoun and adjective, as "my poor self," "my sinful self," "thy sweet self," "his great self," etc.

A HISTORY OF VICTORIA'S REIGN.*

THE publication of this work in England has been already noted in our columns. Its appearance here, in its original integrity with an added American imprint, is a gratifying instance of enterprise, and a favor for many American students of British affairs. The plan of the work and its importance are such as to justify our giving its table of contents in full:

VOL. I.		THE EDITOR.
Introduction.		" "
Legislation of the Reign.		" "
Foreign Policy.		" "
Constitutional Development.		" "
The Army.	SIR WILLIAM R. ANSON, Bart.
General Viscount Wolseley, G.C.B.
Note on the Ordnance Survey.
The Navy.	COLONEL SIR C. W. WILSON, K.C.B.,
The Administration of the Law.	Director-General of the Survey.
Finance.	LORD JUSTICE BROWN.
Religion and the Churches.	LEONARD H. COURTNEY, M.P.
Colonial Policy and Progress.	REV. EDWIN HATCH, D.D.
India.	SIR HENRY SUMNER MAINE, K.C.S.I.
Ireland.	SIR ROWLAND BLERNERHASSETT, Bart.
VOL. II.		THE EDITOR.
The Growth and Distribution of Wealth.	ROBERT GIFFEN.
Industrial Association.	Rt. Hon. A. J. MUNDELLA, M.P.,
Locomotion and Transport.	and G. HOWELL, M.P.
Agriculture.	SIR JAMES CAIRD, K.C.B.
The Cotton Trade and Industry.	JOHN SLAGO, M.P.
The Iron Trade and its Allied Industries.
Schools.	SIR LOWTHIAN BELL, Bart.
A Note on Scottish Education.	MATTHEW ARNOLD.
The Universities.	C. A. FRYFE.
Science.	PROFESSOR HUXLEY, F.R.S.
Medicine and Surgery.	ROBERT BRUDENELL CARTER, F.R.C.S.
Literature.	RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D.
Chronological Table.
Note on Newspaper Press.
Art.	THE EDITOR.
The Drama.	WILLIAM ARCHER.
Music.	WALTER PARRATT.

Mr. Ward's very substantial work is thus seen to be really a cyclopædia of English Progress for the half-century of Queen Victoria's reign, some of the most important contributions to which are by experts closely familiar with the facts and trained to the best expression of them. The Introduction emphasizes the momentous changes of the period in general terms. The population of the United Kingdom has increased from 25,650,000 to 37,000,000, and the distribution of growth and loss in population in different parts of the British Isles is illustrated by a series of colored maps. The greatest growth has been in the County of Durham, 262 per cent. The total population of the British colonial possessions outside of India is estimated at 16,000,000, against 4,000,000 fifty years ago; and British rule is believed now to reach over 200,000,000 in British India alone and 55,000,000 more in the native States dependent thereupon. Wages in Great Britain have increased 40, 50, and 60 per cent; the scale of living is every way more generous; the savings banks deposits have increased from 14,000,000/ to 90,000,000/. The foreign trade has risen from 120,000,000/ to nearly 650,000,000/. The manufacture of iron has increased eight fold; cotton imports have doubled; the wool trade shows corresponding figures.

Such are some of the material facts taken by these portly volumes as their starting point, and from which twenty or more learned and skillful writers follow out the broad and ever widening streams of national development in many different directions. Only a brief exposition of the contents of such a work can be expected in our narrow limits. The legislative, political, and constitutional history of the reign includes many important topics, such as the repeal of the Corn Laws and the Crimean War. A decadence of parliamentary debate is noted. General Wolseley's paper on the Army is less a sketch of military achievement than an account of improved methods of organization and administration from an interior point of view; though the wars in which England has engaged are not overlooked. The same is true of Lord Brassey's chapter on the Navy, which pays large attention to naval architecture and equipment as a scientific topic. Justice Brown's report on "The Administration of the Law" is noticeable for its full discussion of Chancery and its proceedings, and of the amelioration of the treatment of debtors. Mr. Courtney's chapter on Finance shows the substantial advance England has made in the path of free trade; its features are well summed up on p. 354. Mr. Hatch writes of "Religion and the Churches" with great clearness and fairness, giving especial place to the Tractarian and Broad Church movement, the controversies on ritualism, and the immense extension of missionary and charitable enterprise. Ireland, India, and the Colonies at large naturally occupy large space, nearly two hundred pages, in fact, of the first volume.

The first two subjects in the second volume have much in common with each other, and something in common with "Finance" in the first volume, and are extremely interesting from their relation to the social problems of the time; particularly Mr. Giffen's, which is as able as it is interesting, and from which a vastly improved condition of the British workingman can be easily argued. We have been also greatly interested in Mr. Ward's comparative view of "Locomotion and Transport" fifty years ago and now; the story of English railroad building is a romance, and in postal and telegraph service England has certainly outstripped us. Less is made of Agriculture than of the Cotton and Iron Trades and Industries; the latter are treated with the importance they deserve. Mr. Arnold, we must think, does better with Schools and Mr. Fyffe with the Universities than Professor Huxley with Science; the latter subject is handled in a view too philosophical and not enough practical for a work of this description, and the writer should have kept his theological prejudices more in the background. Of the chapters which remain we have found especial pleasure in Mr. Carter's Medicine and Surgery, which is admirably suited to the comprehension of the unprofessional reader, and in Mr. Garnett's masterly summary of the Literature of the Victorian age, the point of whose judgment is that in the future the reputation of his subject may possibly fall short of its desert. A very valuable pendant to this article is the Chronological Table, noting the chief literary events of each year from 1837 to 1886. "Art," "the Drama," and "Music" appropriately close the volume, leaving us where all mere materialistic growth should lead us to, namely, with the cultivation of the good, the true, and the beautiful.

* The Reign of Queen Victoria. A Survey of Fifty Years of Progress. Edited by Thomas Humphry Ward. In Two Volumes. London: Smith, Elder & Co. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co.

As a repository of statements of the most significant results of English thought and life during the last half-century this work is unique, authoritative, and final. It is to be regretted that if an index was out of the question, an analytic table of contents was not provided.

A TERRIBLE LEGACY.*

DIACLECT in fiction being just now a topic of special activity, we emphasize the attention which Mr. Appleton's story would otherwise deserve because of its introduction of the dialect of Sussex County, England. The scene of the story is laid in the South Downs village of "Selcombe," which might be Telscombe, in the neighborhood of Brighton and Lewes, and one group of actors in it is made up of several typical villagers, who meet on a stormy winter night in the bar-room of the little inn at Selcombe, known as "The Hand of Fellowship." This group consists of the landlord Steptoe and his scapegrace son Jerry, Israel Smock the parish clerk, Isaac Miller the blacksmith, Henry Pain the sexton, Uncle Larkworthy the social dignitary of the occasion, and Spink the gardener, from the hall, who has dropped in on his way after the doctor, accompanied by "Tummus" Swift, his master's son. A graphic and amusing picture this company of rustics make over their pipes and toddy, circulating in uncouth language the gossip and scandal of the village.

Spink, the gardener, is a first-class Sussex talker, and whether engaged in disputes with Angelina Pilbeam, the old indoor servant, or in telling yarns for the edification of Master "Tummus," is an amusing specimen of his class. Let us listen to him as he jogs along one day with "Tummus" on the way to Lewes:

"A fine day, Master Tom," said he, with the air of not having seen me for at least twenty-four hours, "though a storm be breeding fast I rackan from the smell of the wind." I replied in some confusion that "I thought that we should have more wind very soon," and then we both of us surveyed the sky with deep interest, while the donkey gently swished his tail. "You seem to have a donkey there," said I, at last. Spink reflected a moment. "Well, I wun't deny it, Master Tom; and this here jackass and me, we get on most uncommon, I do assure you. His name is Joseph. Do you hear me, Joseph?" Joseph cocked up his ears, and infused fresh energy into his tail, by way of answer. "Look now! Master Tom, and only known each other fower days, too. I never would hav' believed so much comfort could be got out of a mere small liddle jackass. You see, my rheumatics got that bad—though I carried taters in my pockets an' all manner—that I was quite eat up wud it; and so, at last, I says to myself, 'There have I money in the bank, and Master Tom's feather so liberal, and 'Gelina willin', why shoulde I buy a nice liddle jackass an' a cart, and goo about free and comfortable?' That's what I says, an' the nex marnin' I walks down to Rottingdean, and all the way to Brighton, and buys Joseph here and the cart from a dead costermonger's widow, just two hours afore the funeral was. 'And what's his name?' says I. 'Joe,' she says. And so I starts for home. Now look at his ears, Master Tom—he can't abear to be called Joe. If I was to say it half a dozen times he'd begin to kick, he would, and just as like break the cart into pieces. I soon found out that, for the more I coaxed and said 'Joe, Joe—poor Joe,' the more rampagious he got. He kicked, and rared, and backed, and went on at such a rate that, if it hadn' a been for interruptin' the funeral I'd a gone back and assisted upon my money. Then I thought, perhaps he'd be a donkey of a bettermost breed, an' too much familiarity be distasteful to him, for even a jackass, adessay, has his pride, Master Tom; so, respectful like as I would to any Christian, I says: 'Get up, Joseph!' (now look at his ears, Master Tom!), an' away he went like smoke, an' I ain't had no trouble wud him since. The Lord in heaven never meant him to go a-costering. I'm sure an't by his good manners when spoken to polite. Jump in, Master Tom; he'll take us home in ten minutes, I'll be bound."

"Why, Spink, I thought you told me Jerry Steptoe had the measles." "He had en—he wouldn't lie about it—he had en bad, and may the Lord above forgive me, I did wish as 'twould strike to his insides; but 'twas not to be. The feather of lies and the doctor 'atween 'em pulled him through, and today's work be some of the fruits a'nt." "At all events," I answered, "he had nothing to say—what could he say?" "Well," said Spink, "it's just this here, that there young villain has been an' cockered up a fine tale about your digging up summat in the spinney an' heaving it into the sea. It don't argify much what he ses; but then, Lackworthy is a belvering about an' making mountains out of dooles, an' he comes to me, an' Steptoe, an' Pain, an' adunnamany more, they all come to me an' ses, 'Spink, what's the meaning of all this here, anyhow?' For what Jerry did en say, that there Jan from Lewes did, a gurt hulking blobit, getting tosicated at th' 'Hand of Fellowship,' an' telling everybody how he hid you under the seat, an' lamed his horse, an' only got five shillin' for doing of it." "The scoundrel!" I said. "I gave him thirty shillings, and he promised to wait for me here." "I'm dannelled if I didn't think so," said Spink, with emphasis. "Well," he added, after a further burst of indignation, "well, I ses to 'em all, ses I, 'That there Lunnon air be enough to choke almost anybody,' I ses, 'an' adessay the lad wanted to come an' breathe free for an hour or two. Anyways,' I ses, 'it's no business of mine, an' what's more, I'm dannelled,' I ses, 'if I think it's no business o' yourn, an' I ain't afear'd to say it to your heads neither.'"

As for the story from which these extracts are made, taken as a whole, it has some striking merits but also serious defects, and we should prefer to invest in the author for future rather than for present values. The subject is the mysterious disappearance of a woman of position and property, under circumstances which involve her brother, a man of eccentricity amounting to madness, in the suspicion of having murdered her. Under an hallucination he actually leaves a dying confession that he has done so, accompanied by a direction that his house be impenetrably walled up after his death with brick and stone. The disclosure of the truth underlying this singular situation is the function of the story. Its plot is unnatural, its details are sensational, and its humor occasionally runs into coarseness. On the other hand much originality is displayed in the conception of character, and the style is vigorous. The story has more freshness than refinement and more force than delicacy, but is unobjectionable from a moral point of view. Its chief merit, as we have indicated above, lies in its delineation of local peculiarities of character and language.

THE VAN GELDER PAPERS.*

THIS is a collection of twelve short stories, the last four being of a miscellaneous character, and the first eight a series illustrative of life and character in Long Island and on the Hudson in old Dutch times. Of the miscellaneous four one is a Christmas story, one a pathetic little fragment for children, one a rather painful narrative of circumstantial evidence, in which a man is hanged for a murder he did not commit, and one a case of private vengeance, by which a profligate army officer paid the penalty of gross treachery to the daughter of his benefactor. All these are told in an easy and natural style; the last two, and the last one especially, with some touches of quiet dramatic power.

The eight Dutch stories, however, are what give individuality to the book. Their very titles, "Teunis Van Gelder," "Nick Wanzer's Adventure," "Derrick Van Dam," "Ralph Craft," "Zadoc Town," "Rulif Van Pelt," and "Obed Groot," are pleasantly suggestive of Knickerbocker days, and awaken expectations which the stories themselves very fairly fulfill. Of course on accepting an invitation to such a feast we do not now look for a Washington Irving to preside; but "J. T. I.," whoever these initials may stand for, is a good host, and entertains us skillfully and acceptably. It is some time since we have had a round of stories so fresh and quaint, so well conceived and cleverly wrought, so thoroughly American and lifelike as these. The "editor" professes that they are derived from the manuscript remains of Mr. John Quod,

* A Terrible Legacy. A Tale of the South Downs. By G. W. Appleton. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.

* The Van Gelder Papers, and Other Sketches. Edited by J. T. I. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

who had ransacked the whole of Long Island from Coney Island to Montauk Point in search of materials for a history. "About thirty miles from the city of New York," the chronicles begin, "is a headland jutting out from Long Island Sound, fortified against the wash of the sea by huge boulders of rock." Just where to locate the headland thus described is a geographical puzzle beyond our power to solve, but once landed on it in imagination we are in sight of a picturesque country and in the presence of some curious people. Captain Kidd haunts these parts, buried treasures invest them with problematic charms, phantom houses dot the landscape, specter horses, hounds, and horsemen flit through the forests and meadows, and ghosts and goblins intermingle with human kind in the strange narratives yielded by the scene.

As a good example of this pleasant reading, half fable and half fancy, with a possible sprinkling of fact, we will take the "authentic history" of Ralph Craft. Ralph was the vagabond of Mosquito Cove, with a contempt for work, a taste for drink, and a termagant wife, who kept him in order with her tongue and other weapons. Coming home one day from the tavern in a little too venturesome mood, and being worsted in a wordy duel with Mrs. Craft, he was condemned by her to go forth after some game with which to replenish the larder, stimulated by the threat that if he returned empty-handed he should find the doors closed against him. So off he sallied with his dog Grim, skirted the lake, explored the lane, and beat the swamps, and finding nothing, threw himself down at last by a brookside to meditate on the situation. Just then he saw a rabbit, raised his gun and fired, whereupon:

"Let that rabbit alone!" exclaimed a rough voice at his elbow. "What business have you poaching on my preserves?" Ralph turned round hot with anger; for, with the exception of his wife, he feared neither devil nor man. Upon the upper rail of a fence, within a few feet of him, sat a little squat figure in Dutch small clothes, of ample dimensions in the skirts, and gathered tightly at the knees, which were garnished with silver buckles. Ralph had been unaware of his presence; but there he sat, with his legs crossed, a gold-headed cane in his hand, and smoking a Dutch pipe as composedly as if he had been there an hour. "Let that rabbit alone, I say!" repeated he with more emphasis. Ralph was not a little startled at the outlandish rig of the little man; nor did he feel more easy when he encountered the fierce, positive eye which met his; but rallying his wits and assuming a look of bravado he tucked his arms akimbo and demanded of the other who he was and why he had interfered with his sport. For some time the person thus addressed kept on puffing out clouds of smoke, which, for volume and density, completely amazed Ralph. At length, gravely blowing in his face a puff of smoke that nearly strangled him, he answered in a more pacific tone: "I am a gentleman generally more talked of than known, Mr. Craft, and one who knows you better than you are aware of, and who, at a pinch, may aid you. But tell me," added he in a more insinuating tone, "what strange freak has sent you hither sporting by moonlight?"

Ralph explained his predicament, and the little man volunteered to help him. "Mr. Craft," said he, "I have some business to attend to at this time, but will return in half an hour. If you will wait for me I may do you a good turn that few others would."

In half an hour, punctual to his word, the stranger was seen coming across the field. He did not move with the alacrity with which he had set out; and upon his near approach Ralph observed that his coat was nearly torn from his shoulders, his cocked hat was battered and bent in, and there were sundry rents in the nether extremity of his small clothes. When he came up he panted violently, as if exhausted by great exertion; and as he turned his face in the moonlight, it appeared striped and seamed with scratches like the bark of a young plum tree. In his hand he held several partridges, which he flung towards Ralph. "I have reflected upon your situation, Mr. Craft," said he respectfully, "and find you are more to be pitied than blamed. Take these birds and make your peace with your wife—from my soul I pity you." "You seem to need that yourself," replied Ralph compassionately. "How came your clothes so tattered, and your face so terribly scratched?" "In the bushes," answered the other crabbedly.

When Ralph got back to his dwelling and entered his kitchen, this was what he saw:

In the center stood Mrs. Craft, with a face like a ripened tomato, and a broken broomstick in her hand. Tables, chairs, stools, plates, and dishes strewn the floor. Windows were broken, everything bore indication of the utmost confusion, and nearly all the furniture was in a state of dilapidation. Her story was soon told to her husband, and to a group of listening neighbors who had assembled at the noise of the fracas. About an hour before, a corpulent little gentleman in a cocked hat and loose breeches, with a cane in his hand and a pipe in his buttonhole, had walked into the kitchen. Seating himself in front of the fire, apparently as much at ease as if the house belonged to him, he lighted his pipe and with a few whiffs filled the room with smoke. Mrs. Craft was not the woman to put up with this, and accordingly the intruder was requested to desist. He replied that if the smoke was unpleasant to Mrs. Craft she was at liberty to quit the house, as he should not cease until his pipe was out. One word brought on another, until at length the matter came to blows, and a battle of that kind which, by way of distinction, is called "royal," ensued. It was carried on with great vigor on both sides, but ended in the expulsion of the intruder, although nearly all the household furniture was demolished in the struggle. Mrs. Craft was in a violent taking, and was resolutely bent on having the law of the fellow, but unfortunately for the success of her intention, he was never heard of from that day to this.

The gaps between the above extracts we leave the reader to supply.

The tales grouped with the foregoing are in much the same vein, with varying figures and incidents. In "Teunis Van Gelder" and "Nick Wanzer's Adventure" we are introduced to Captain Kidd; in "Derrick Van Dam" we have an amusing romance of blended Dutch and mediæval colors; "Zadoc Town" is a ghost story, pure and simple; in "Rulif Van Pelt" a goblin company come to the help of an honest lover trying to win a fair lady, and make the course of true love run smooth over golden ways; the moral of "Obed Groot" is the misery of miserliness, and the blessedness that comes of doing good and loving mercy. The naturalness with which all these tales of the unreal are told constitutes a large part of their charm, and a few half-hours can be spent over them agreeably.

MINOR FICTION.

A Summer in Oldport Harbor. By W. H. Metcalf. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] Mr. Metcalf relates with extreme minutiae the experiences of a dozen or so people who pass the summer on the shores of Long Island Sound. What they wore and ate, how they went sailing and fishing, what they said on this and that occasion, are all carefully set down. When they talk the men are prigs and the women idiots. The book is full of tedious commonplaces and silly twaddle about various matters, from the doctrine of free-will to a declaration of love. Except for five or six marriages which conclude the story the sole attempt at a plot is concerned with the career of a phenomenal villain, the son of a New England clergyman, who has perpetrated crimes in all parts of the world and continues to mingle with "the best society." After trying to read such a book as A Summer in Oldport Harbor one comes to believe with the late Anthony Trollope that literature is sometimes a trade—and a very detestable trade at that.

Dick's Wandering. By Julian Sturgis. [D. Appleton & Co. 50c.] Dick's Wandering is, we believe, not a new novel. But it is a very good novel, and worth reprinting at this late day. Dick is an English lad, a good fellow, a little slow, a little obtuse, but of generous impulses and given to quiet enthusiasms. At his majority he becomes a large land owner and he gives a great deal of thought to the land question. There is an American girl in the story, and a very attractive young creature she is. Mr. Holcroft, her father, is also fairly well done, and one must not forget to mention the pompous M.P., or Fabian Dean, the cranky Oxonian, or Ossie Langdon, a fine example of the youthful swell. Mr. Sturgis is inclined to poke fun at his characters sometimes, but he is always amusing, and his style is beyond reproach.

Mistaken Paths. By Herbert G. Dick. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] Irene Patton was the daughter of a skilled mechanic in a Western town, and a very beautiful girl. Her mother, a coarse and ignorant woman, will not tolerate novels or music, and insists that Irene shall wash dishes; so she agrees to marry wealthy Frank Raynor to escape from domestic martyrdom. Ad interim she goes to visit her aunt in New York, becomes the belle of the season at Long Branch, falls in love with her cousin, Robert Bostwick, and becomes the victim of insulting proposals from Count Beaurynski. She writes breaking the betrothal, but learning that her cousin is pledged to another, marries Raynor and falls ill with brain fever. Raynor believes that she loves Beaurynski and declares that he will be a husband to her only in name. She takes to art, becomes a painter of fashionable repute, and goes abroad to study. Raynor believes she has eloped with Beaurynski and obtains a divorce. She comes back after six years, meets again with her former husband, realizes that she has long loved him, the two are reconciled and remarried. The author has told the story well. His characters are well individualized, and the hard, unlovely life of a commercial community is forcibly depicted. The didactic purpose of the novel is made somewhat too prominent, and a good many will dislike it on that account.

The Russian Refugee. A Tale of the Blue Ridge. By Henry R. Wilson. [Thomas R. Knox & Co.] Mr. Wilson has tried hard to make a novel, but his success has not been great. He has given his imagination, or what doubtless he calls his imagination, free range, and he has grouped together a series of uninteresting impossibilities. The Russian refugee is a venerable soothsayer, who lives in a cavernous abode in Pennsylvania, and dies at the age of 150 after a lecture on the merits of "mind-cure." About seventy years before he had sold a fine estate to a certain Mr. Hastings, and when some scoundrels try to get possession the ancient Russian appears on the scene and sets matters right. There is a rustic in the story whose talk is the oddest linguistic compound ever invented by mortal man. Here is a specimen :

Jest thee fellars hist me deoun thar, an' be lively about it too, an' I'll maybe hev suthin' to tell yer on cooming up; leaswtue if the darned string doan't giv out or thee let go.

There is also a young woman, Elsie Hastings, who, on recovering consciousness after a fall to the bottom of a ravine, indulges in this soliloquy :

How like is my condition to that of some poor soul plunged in the darkness and bondage of ignorance, despair, or perplexity, which hears, not audibly in a physical sense, perhaps, but somehow, in the silences of the soul, the still small voice of guidance, at whose electric tones obscurity clears into brightness and noon of night becomes noon of day.

This is apparently a first offense and on that account may be pardoned. But we earnestly beseech Mr. Wilson not to do it again.

The Flamingo Feather. By Kirk Munroe. [Harper & Bros.] Mr. Munroe has made a charming story out of the romantic career of René de Veaux, that knightly young Huguenot of the sixteenth century, who, tradition says, accompanied his uncle, the Chevalier de Laudonnière, on the expedition which founded Fort Caroline on the coast of Florida, and later became chief of the Alachuas, a tribe of Indians, allies of the French. On the slender thread of tradition Mr. Munroe has strung a series of fascinating adventures. If he depicts the warlike deeds of those early days in a golden light and portrays the actors in them as possessed of almost superhuman sagacity, refinement, and chivalry, no one will complain. The story is certain to hold the attention of young readers, and it is wholesome from beginning to end.

MINOR NOTICES.

Horsemanship for Women. By Theodore H. Mead. With Illustrations by Gray Parker. [Harper & Bros. $1.25.] This is distinctively a manual for the instruction of women. It is in four parts, of which the first is on "Amateur Horse-Training," the second on "Etiquette in the Saddle," the third on "Leaping," and the fourth on "Buying a Saddle Horse." The first part is founded on the principles of Baucher's Méthode d'Equitation basé sur des Nouveaux Principes, and assumes degrees of intelligence and docility on the part of the horse and of kindness and patience on the part of his gentle rider which we fear will not be always realized. Still it is pleasant to be under the guidance of an instructor who believes so implicitly that a horse can be taught to do almost anything; and it makes one smile to read of the graceful exercises in which Mr. Mead would have the equine pupil perfected. There are seventeen lessons in these equestrian gymnastics, so to call them, and they fill more than half the book. The twenty or thirty pages on "Etiquette in the Saddle" show the lady who has first mastered her horse how to be mistress of herself when mounted on his back. The careful lesson on "Leaping" would be more needed in England than it is in this country; racing and hunting, we are thankful to say, are not likely to become feminine accomplishments here. The very practical closing part on "Buying a Saddle Horse" is enlivened by a telling picture of what kind of a horse not to buy; and the pictures throughout, of which there are more than forty, are admirably drawn and engraved, and greatly assist in understanding the directions in the text. Few women will ever become scientific equestriennes after the ideal exposed in this book, but it is good to have a high ideal, and the humaneness with which the horse is treated in it is a strong point in its favor.

Dictionary of National Biography. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vol. XI. Clater-Condell. [Macmillan & Co. $3.25.] This eleventh volume of Mr. Leslie Stephen's great Dictionary of British Biography is not so noticeable for important subjects or distinguished contributors as some volumes that have preceded it, but it is noticeable for the steady execution of its design along a high level of excellence. The leading biography in the book, and one of the longest, is that of Coleridge, which Mr. Stephen writes himself, and which places Coleridge "alone among English writers in the front rank at once as poet, as critic, and as philosopher." Mr. Stephen also furnishes a short sketch of Arthur Hugh Clough. Sir A. J. Arbuthnot writes of Lord Clive, Mr. John Morley of Cobden, Mr. Macdonell of Lord Coke, or Cooke as his name was spelled and pronounced by his contemporaries, the Rt. Rev. Sir George W. Cox of Bishop Colenso, S. L. Lee of Dean Colet, G. F. Warren of John Payne Collier, and Dr. Norman Moore of Columba, the Irish saint. What a fate in history to be written of as Mr. Warren writes of Mr. Collier :

The taint of suspicion rests upon all his work. None of his statements or quotations can be trusted without verifying, and no volume or document that has passed through his hands can be too carefully scrutinized.

Very pleasing are these touches in the portrait of Saint Columba, the whole account of whom is singularly interesting :

His solitary habits had not made him inconsiderate of the concerns of ordinary men, and he was passionately loved by his community. He was kind to animals as well as to men. When an exhausted heron fell upon the strand, he ordered it to be fed and tended until it was able to fly again, and on the last evening of his life he caressed an old horse, which rubbed its head against him, and blessed it.

The Claytons, the Cliffords, the Cochranes, the Cockburns, the Coles, and the Collinses are the more numerous families included in this volume.

The Life of Rev. George C. Haddock. By Frank C. Haddock. [Funk & Wagnalls. $2.00.] The publishers of this biography of the lamented Mr. Haddock, who was foully murdered in Sioux City, Iowa, last August, in pursuance of a conspiracy of enraged saloon keepers, have given it a sumptuous dress. Its externals, in binding, paper, typography, and illustrations, are worthy of a biography of the first rank. But with all respect and honor to the memory of Mr. Haddock, who appears from these pages to have been a devoted and noble-spirited man, and who met the death of a true martyr in the temperance cause, one cannot but feel that this elaborate Life is a mistake. The career of its subject was not so unusual in the Methodist ministry as to require such full chronicling, and for the interests of the temperance cause a briefer biography would have been more telling. The story of Mr. Haddock's taking off is a sad chapter in the annals of Iowa, and the failure to convict his murderer is a disgraceful revelation of the iniquity of a city whose Indian name should at least have reminded it to practice Indian justice.

Ourselves and Our Neighbors. Short Chats on Social Topics. By Louise Chandler Moulton. [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.] No American woman is better qualified than Mrs. Moulton to write upon such topics as make up this tasteful little volume. A bright woman, of wide experience, of catholic views and genial nature, not prejudiced or opinionated, she can take into account both the American and the English view of such a delicate matter as she treats in the graceful paper on "Rosebuds in Society." Three other papers worthy the consideration of girls are those on "Motives for Marriage," "Engagements," and "Young Girls and Marriage." Others, like "Courtesy at Home" and "Friendly Visiting," might be profitably pondered by all classes and conditions of women—gentle but pointed suggestions about hospitality, the relations of guest and hostess, social honor, good manners, consideration of others' rights, ostentation in dress, and the vulgarity that grows out of being ambitious of social distinction. In a word, this collection of papers, these "little chats," are full of kindly and wise hints on subjects too seldom given a thought to, the amenities and courtesies and gentle charities which make life, both at home and in society, sweeter and more beautiful.

The attention of pleasure travelers and summer idlers particularly is invited to By the Way, a little red-covered, yellow-edged book of quotations from a great number of authors, English and American, bearing upon the mountains, the sea, and the farm, leisure, pastime, and people, romance, books, and letters; with batches of blank pages interspersed here and there for the insertion of any manuscript notes at the pleasure of the owner. This is one of that class of books which grow out of the taste and fancy of the maker rather than in response to any expressed want of the public; but wherever a kindred mind to the compilers is found, there the little book may fit itself to use. [Clarke & Carruth. $1.00.]

The counsels embodied by Rev. Dr. Thomas Murphy, Presbyterian, in his very small book, People and Pastor, are addressed to the laity, and are intended to guide and quicken them in the recognition and discharge of their duties to the clergy. [Presbyterian Board. 40c.]

No. 94 of Van Nostrand's "Science Series" is an important essay on The Treatment of Sewage, by Dr. G. Meymott Tidy. It is founded on a thorough analysis of facts, and is scientific in the best sense. The mass of sewage produced daily in great centers of population is something enormous; and a question more pressing than how to dispose of it is how to utilize it. Europe is ahead of the United States in experiments and success in this direction, all of which are intelligently summarized and discussed by Dr. Tidy. Sanitary engineers will find this tract highly profitable and suggestive reading. [soc.]

Mr. Morgan's Educational Mosaics is an extensive collection of extracts from a long list of educational writers, ancient and modern, bearing on topics of educational science and practice; a sort of professional commonplace book for teachers. [Boston: Silver, Rogers & Co. $1.50.]

The idea of L. P. Mercer's "Chapter on Mind Cure" entitled The New Birth seems to be that all disease is directly or indirectly the result of sin, and the truly philosophical cure for the evils to which flesh is heir is a righteous and holy life, although the author admits that the cure may not always be immediate. In the long run, he means, and in the long run he is right. [C. H. Kerr & Co. soc.]

The subject of Home Sanitation is old, but its plan is somewhat new and its authorship is novel; and on the principle that ideas must be hammered into the heads of people, such books must follow each other, we presume, for a long time to come. The authors of this little book are eight ladies, a branch club of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae, organized in 1883 for the study of home sanitation. There are ten chapters on the usual divisions of the subject, drainage, ventilation, heating, etc., with a number of illustrations; and a peculiarity of each chapter is an appended list of questions intended to press its points home upon the consciences of the inattentive and the negligent. As a catechism for housekeepers this is at least as important as the Assembly's Shorter. [Ticknor & Co. soc.]

NEWS AND NOTES.

—Mr. Fox Bourne is writing a book on English newspapers.

—A Mr. and Mrs. Stone have been the first English people to accomplish a visit of all the Canary Islands, and they will publish a book about it this fall, illustrated with photographs and maps.

—Dr. Daniel G. Brinton, Professor of American Archaeology and Linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania, has in press a volume entitled Ancient Nahnatl Poetry, containing a number of songs in the Aztec or Nahnatl language, with translations and notes. Most of these were composed previous to the Spanish Conquest of Mexico and have never heretofore been published or translated.

—Cecil Hampden Cutts Howard, 256 Tompkins Avenue, Brooklyn, announces A History of the Cutts Family, ancestors and descendants of the brothers John, Richard, and Robert Cutts, who immigrated to Kittery Point and Portsmouth, N. H., prior to 1640. The work will contain early English pedigrees and many fac similes and portraits, and subscribers for it are solicited at $5 a copy.

—Mr. Frank Siller, formerly of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, is now living in Berlin, where he has a hand in the editorial management of the Gegenwart, a weekly paper of that city. Mr. Siller's brother-in-law, Mr. Charles Wilson, a son of the late Professor of Sanskrit at Oxford University, England, has just published a volume of Russian Lyrics. Mr. Siller is about making a summer's visit to the United States.

—George Routledge & Sons publish immediately La Belle Nivernaise, a volume of stories by Alphonse Daudet; Happy Home Stories for the Young and Wide-Awake Stories for the Young, two illustrated quartos of prose and verse; and Buffalo Bill, an English biography of the noted scout now giving his "Wild West" show in London.

—Readers of Mrs. A. L. Wister's translated German novels will hear with regret of the sudden death of Eugenie John, "E. Marlitt." Originally a singer, and then an actress at Vienna, she became a private companion and reader, and took up literature late in life. The Story of Giselda, Gold Elsie, and The Old Mam'selle's Secret are perhaps her most familiar writings in this country.

—The dedication of the new town hall and public library building in the Massachusetts town of Littleton adds another to those valuable benefactions which are becoming so frequent and are so gratifying. The building is the work of the town, for the accommodation of a $10,000 memorial gift for the purchase of a library to be known as the Reuben Hoar Library. The Hon. John D. Long, in his address on the occasion, well said:

A public library is to be regarded as a peculiarly American, indeed a New England, institution. It supplements the town meeting in the education of the citizen to a proper discharge of his political duties. In the future the free library will be held to be an indispensable element in our system of democratic government, of government by town meetings, and will be classed with free roads, free bridges, and free schools, all matters of universal and unquestionable benefit.

—Mr. Frank Vincent, the author of The Land of the White Elephant and other narratives of travel in strange lands, has recently returned to New York from an extended expedition through South America, on which he has been absent upwards of two years. To a reporter of the New York World he spoke of travel in South America in these terms:

It is laborious, expensive, and subject to privation, though generally without annoyance from man or beast. I do not speak now of the exploration of remote inland districts. That is a much more serious matter. The cost of traveling is considerably greater than in Europe, though not quite so great as in the United States. There are lines of large and comfortable steamers plying all around the sea coast and up the larger rivers, but on the land you are not always accommodated by rail or stage roads. As to railroads, Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and Chili are far in advance of the other States, where long journeys must still be undertaken upon horseback. Street railways have been very generally introduced in the larger cities, and Rio Janeiro justly claims possession of the smoothest and fastest line in the world. As to hotels, of course you must not look for what in New York are styled first-class houses. Your rooms will often be primitively furnished and not always clean. There will be enough to eat, though of but a limited variety. The native cookery cannot be commended. There are very fair French hotels in Lima and Valparaiso and a good English hotel in Rio Janeiro. But it is next to impossible to get imported wines and beers which are not both adulterated and sold at exorbitant prices. In a vast continent of such varying altitude and extending through so many degrees of latitude the traveler encounters all sorts of climates, and therefore needs to come provided with an extensive wardrobe. The best money for the traveler to carry is American gold for the northern and western coasts and British gold for the eastern coast. All native money matters are more or less crooked. Paper is usually the circulating medium and is certain to be very much depreciated in value. The paper money of Peru, the par value of which is 100 cents, passes current for four cents, so that it takes an armful of money to pay for a trifle. In Ecuador there are but two cities—the capital, Quito, and Guayaquil. In each there is a national bank, and the bills of one are at a discount of 25 per cent in the bank of the other. In making the grand tour you pass from one to another of nine republics, one empire, and three colonies—a wearying experience of thirteen baggage examinations in as many different custom houses.

—A writer in the Boston Advertiser gives this glimpse of Mr. T. B. Aldrich's summer house at Ponkapog, a little village in the outskirts of the Massachusetts town of Canton:

Mr. Aldrich's home is a plain old-fashioned mansion just like so many others that you see scattered everywhere throughout New England. It is two-story, painted brown, with a portico in front and concealed from the street by a belt of trees. Inside is the large old-fashioned hall, belonging to old colonial days, with two rooms opening on either side, and the dining room in the rear. The poet's study is on the second floor and a pleasant room it is, large, airy, with books lining the four walls and stuffed into every nook and corner. Choice art treasures and articles of bric-à-brac and vertu appear scattered about in a charming way. The views from the windows are fine, commanding meadow and pasture land, with old Blue Hill looming up in the distance. Just back of the house is an old mill-pond with the ruins of the mill on its bank. Within a stone's throw is a bubbling brook which goes splashing and dashing along its rocky bed. But for the noise of the brook and chirping of the birds, with the occasional passing of carriage or cart, nothing disturbs the exquisite quiet of the scene. Of late years Mr. Aldrich is not so much in Ponkapog as formerly, but he is still often seen about the old streets, and part of the family are always at home, winter as well as summer.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

July.

The Fortnightly Review. Kaiser Dead: a Poem. By Matthew Arnold—Letters from Central Africa. By Emin Pasha—Good and Bad Temper in English Families. By Francis Galton, F.R.S.—General Langievicz and the last Polish Rising. By Karl Blind—Our Working Women and their Earnings. By F. Mabel Robinson—Salvation by Torture at Kairuan. By the Hon. George Curzon, M.P.—The Vampire Gold. By the Duke of Marlborough—The Higher Theism. By W. S. Lilly—The Land Transfer Bill. By Arthur Arnold—The Georgian and Victorian Eras. By Prof. J. R. Seeley—Home Affairs: A National Party—Correspondence: Burma and the Burmese. By Florence Layard—The Women's Protective League. By Frederick Verney.

The London Quarterly Review. Louis the Fourteenth and his Court—Bishop Fraser—The Service of Man: Positivist and Christian—Some Comparative Statistics of Illiteracy in England, 1870 and 1884—Two Saxon Statesmen: Buest and Vitatum—Education in China—The Origin of the Bible: Christian Connexion—Miss Rossetti's Poetry—Short Reviews and Brief Notices—Summaries of Foreign Periodicals.

The Westminster Review. The Reorganization of the Liberal Party—A Flitting Ghost—American Education—Madame Mohl—Military and Naval Administration—Persia—Delle Sedie's Art of Singing—A Study in Religious Evolution—The Federation of the British Empire—Contemporary Literature: Science; Politics, Sociology, Voyages, and Travels; History and Biography; Belles-Lettres—Home Affairs.

The Nineteenth Century. After Six Years. By Sir Mountstuart E. Grant-Duff—The Catholic Church and Biblical Criticism. By St. George Mivart—Mr. Gladstone and the Income Tax. By W. E. H. Lecky—A Kitchen College. By Harriette Brooke Davies—Art Sales and Christie's. By George Redford—The Greater Gods of Olympus. III. Athens. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.—A Regiment of Infantry. By Colonel Hildyard—Artisan Atheism. By William Rooster—"The House was Still Sitting when we Went to Press." By the Right Hon. G. Osborne Morgan, M.P.—A First Visit to India. By Herbert J. Gladstone, M.P.

Blackwood's Magazine. Joyce. Chaps. 9-12—The Hittites—A Sketch from Ilfracombe. By Alex. Innes Shand—The Twins: from the Chinese of Wu Ming—Secondary Education in Scotland. By Prof. G. G. Ramsay—The War Office—The Old Saloon: Charles Reade; Anne Christie; Rosina, Lady Lytton; Correspondence Between Goethe and Carlyle, etc.—The Balance of Military Power in Europe. I. Russia and England.

The Contemporary Review. The Canadian Constitution. By Goldwin Smith—Painting "The Scapegoat." By W. Holman Hunt—Africa and the Drink Trade. By Archdeacon Farrar—The Sacredness of Ancient Buildings. By Frederic Harrison—Methodist Reunion. By the Rev. William Arthur—The Franco-German Frontier in its Military Aspects. By Major Otto Wachs—Small Nationalities and Modern Historians. By H. Morse Stephens—The English Workers as They are. By H. M. Hyndman—Contemporary Life and Thought: China. By a Resident in Peking.

The National Review. The True Lessons of the Jubilee—Alsace-Lorraine and the European Situation. By an Old German Resident—Art in the Public Schools—Leasehold Emancipation. By J. Wolfe Flanagan—Irish Dairy Farming. By H. Evershed—Burke and the French Revolution. By J. Rowley—Fifty Years of Women's Work. By Louisa Twining—Character and Ability in Politics. By Alfred Austin—Some Minor Worries. By a Member of Parliament—The Strength and Weakness of Russia. By Capt. Foster, R. E.—Postal Communication, Past and Present. Part I—The Separatist Attack on Fundamental Principles. By Leonard H. West, LL.B.—Politics at Home and Abroad—Correspondence.

American History, MSS. Sources of. Justin Winsor. Mag. of Am. History. Berkeley, the Revived Study of. Professor Clark Murray. Macmillan's Browning, Elizabeth Barrett. M. Henri Jacotet. Bibliothéque Universelle, July. Crabbe. Temple Bar. Hamlet, the Real Significance of. Temple Bar. Journalism Among the Cherokee Indians. Geo. E. Foster. Mag. of Am. History. Literary Criticism. T. W. Hunt. New Princeton. Literature, Certain Tendencies in Current. R. W. Gilder. New Princeton. Motives, the Humour of. Arthur Tilley. Macmillan's Rémusat, Madame de. Temple Bar. Shelley, Chatter about. H. D. Traill. Macmillan's. Theocritus in Sicily. Macmillan's.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY. Edited by Leslie Stephen. Vol. XI. Macmillan & Co. $3.25
BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON. Including Boswell's Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides and Johnson's Diary of a Journey into North Wales. Edited by George Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. Six volumes. Oxford: The Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan & Co. $16.00
MEMOIRS OF WILHELMINE, MARGRAVINE OF BAIRUTH. Translated and edited by Her Royal Highness Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess of Great Britain and Ireland. With Portrait. Scribner & Welford. $3.75

Essays and Sketches.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE. By Sir John Lubbock. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

Fiction.

THE BAG OF DIAMONDS. By George Manville Fenn. D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 25c.
THEKLA: A STORY OF VIENNESE MUSICAL LIFE. By William Armstrong. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00
THE THREE TETONS. A Story of the Yellowstone. By Alice Wellington Rollins. Cassell & Co. Paper. 50c.
RED SPIDER. By S. Baring-Gould. D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 50c.
CALAMITY JANE. A Story of the Black Hills. By Mrs. George E. Spencer. Cassell & Co. Paper. 25c.
THE CAPTAIN OF THE JANIZARIES. By James M. Ludlow. Funk & Wagnalls. 25c.
ALLAN QUATERMAIN. By H. Rider Haggard. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper. 25c.
The same. Harper & Bros. Paper. 25c.
The same. Harper & Bros. Cloth. 25c.

History.

KNICKERBOCKER'S HISTORY OF NEW YORK. By Washington Irving. 2 vols. Cassell's National Library. Paper, each 10c.
THE REIGN OF QUEEN VICTORIA. A Survey of Fifty Years of Progress. Edited by Thomas Humphrey Ward. 2 vols. London: Smith, Elder & Co. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co.

Juvenile.

TWILIGHT THOUGHTS. Stories for Children and Child Lovers. By Mary S. Claude. Edited by Mary L. Avery. With a Preface by Matthew Arnold. Ginn & Co. 50c.

Poetry.

SELECT POEMS. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Worthington & Co. $1.50
SOCIETY VERSE BY AMERICAN WRITERS. Selected by Ernest De Lancey Pierson. New York: Benjamin & Bell.
SONGS OF THE WAR FOR THE UNION. The Mystic Isle, etc. By Philip Bevan. Robert Clarke & Co.
CHILD'S WORLD BALLADS. Three Little Emigrants. A Romance of Cork Harbour, 1884, etc. By Sarah M. B. Platt. Robert Clarke & Co. $1.00
AT THE HOLY WELL WITH A HANDFUL OF NEW VERSES. By John James Platt. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son.

Science and Philosophy.

HOME SANITATION. A Manual for Housekeepers, by the Sanitary Science Club of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae. Ticknor & Co. 30c.
THE REPUBLIC OF THE FUTURE; OR, SOCIALISM A REALITY. By Anna Bowman Dodd. Cassell & Co. 50c.
THE CURABILITY OF INSANITY AND THE INDIVIDUALIZED TREATMENT OF THE INSANE. By John S. Butler, M.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 40c.
THE MARGIN OF PROFITS. By Edward Atkinson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.
HORSEMANSHIP FOR WOMEN. By Theodore H. Mead. Illustrations by Gray Parker. Harper & Brothers.

Theology and Religion.

GOD'S WORDS TO HIS CHILDREN: SERMONS SPOKEN AND UNSPOKEN. By George Macdonald, LL.D. Funk & Wagnalls.
A DAY IN CAPERNAUM. By Dr. Franz Delitzsch. Tr. by Rev. Geo. H. Schodde. Funk & Wagnalls.

Travel and Observation.

NORWAY NIGHTS AND RUSSIAN DAYS. By [Mrs.] S. M. Henry Davis. Illus. Ford, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25
SEBASTOPOL. By Count Leo Tolstol. Tr. from the French by Frank D. Millet. With Introduction by W. D. Howells. With Portrait. Harper & Brothers.

Miscellaneous.

THE EFFECT OF THE WAR OF 1812 UPON THE CONSOLIDATION OF THE UNION. By Nicholas Murray Butler. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University. 25c.
NOTES ON THE LITERATURE OF CHARITIES. By Herbert B. Adams. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University. 25c.
OLIVER GOLDSMITH: A SELECTION FROM HIS WORKS. With an Introduction by E. E. Hale. Boston: Chautauqua Press. 75c.
THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. The Victorian Edition. 3 vols. Macmillan & Co. $5.00
MELODO PRATICO E NATURALE PER LO STUDIO DELLA LINGUA ITALIANA. Da T. E. Comba. New York: W. R. Jenkins.
THUCYDIDES. Book I. Edited by C. D. Morris. The Same, Book VII. Edited by C. F. Swett. Ginn, Heath & Co.
LES MISÉRABLES PAR VICTOR HUGO. Deuxième Partie. Cosette. W. R. Jenkins.
ENGLISH COMPOSITION AND RHETORIC. Enlarged Edition. Part First. Intellectual Elements of Style. By Alexander Bain. D. Appleton & Co.
THE FITZ-BOODLE PAPERS, Etc., Etc. By William Makepeace Thackeray. London: Smith, Elder & Co.
THE OLD MAN'S SECRET. After the German of E. Marlitt. By Mrs. A. L. Wister. J. B. Lippincott Co. 25c.
BRECHER MEMORIAL: CONTEMPORANEOUS TRIBUTES TO THE MEMORY OF HENRY WARD BRECHER. Compiled and Edited by Edward W. Bok. Privately Printed.
REMINISCENCES. By Thomas Carlyle. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Macmillan & Co. $2.50
THE DIARY OF SAMUEL PEPYS. 1664-1665. Cassell & Co. 10c.
THINGS SEEN. (Choses Vues.) By Victor Hugo. Harper & Bros. Paper, 25c., cloth, 75c.
GILMAN'S HISTORICAL READERS. I. The Discovery and Exploration of America. II. The Colonization of America. III. The Making of the American Nation. By Arthur Gilman. Interstate Publishing Co. 36, 48, and 60c.
A TOUR IN IRELAND. 1776-1779. By Arthur Young. Cassell's National Library. 10c.
BY THE WAY. An Idler's Diary. By W. B. Clarke & Carruth. $1.00
A BLOT ON THE 'SCUTCHRON, AND OTHER DRAMAS. By Robert Browning. Edited by Wm. J. Rolfe and Heloise E. Hersey. Harper & Brothers. 50c.
EDUCATIONAL MOSAICS: A Collection from Many Writers (Chiefly Modern) of Thoughts Bearing on Educational Questions of the Day. By Thomas J. Morgan. Boston: Silver, Rogers & Co.
RICHARD THE THIRD AND THE PRIME ROSE CRITICISM. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

"No living author surpasses him, and only one or two approach him, in the power of picturing not merely places but persons—with minute, and fairly startling, fidelity."—Congregationalist.

IVAN ILYITCH,

By Count LYOF N. TOLSTOI. Translated from the Russian by Nathan Haskell Dole. Cloth, 12mo, $1.25.

"Both the personal character and the literary art of Tolstol are manifested with simpler and clearer power in these writings than in his novels, and the book becomes necessary to an adequate understanding of Tolstol's mission and work."—Globe.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

13 Astor Place, - - - New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 181 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

33 Equitable Building, Boston.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, withal the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.00. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1888. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 58th Street, New York City.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. C., "Literary World" Office, Boston.

Found in a Dictionary.

THE word tail. But it can't be found in Dr. MARK R. WOODBURY'S vocabulary. He has prepared and prescribed his Dyspepsia Killers, which we call D. K.'s, for 20 years, and they have never failed to cure the worst cases of Dyspepsia and Indigestion. Sold by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, General Wholesale Agents. They will send them by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of 60 cents for a large box, or 25 cents for a trial box.

New Volume - by - Sir John Lubbock.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE.

By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., F. R. S.

CONTENTS:

THE DUTY OF HAPPINESS.
THE HAPPINESS OF DUTY.
A SONG OF BOOKS.
THE CHOICE OF BOOKS.
THE BLESSING OF FRIENDS.

THE VALUE OF TIME.
THE PLEASURES OF TRAVEL.
THE PLEASURES OF HOME.
SCIENCE.
EDUCATION.

12MO, CLOTH, 50 CENTS; PAPER COVER, 25 CENTS.

Sir John Lubbock's Previous Books.

The Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man, Mental and Social Condition of Savages. Fourth edition, with numerous Additions. With Illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

Prehistoric Times, as illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. New revised edition. 8vo, cloth, $5.00.

Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. With Colored Plates. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

D. APPLETON & CO.,

PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

LES MISÉRABLES,

—BY—
VICTOR HUGO.

(Sir Lancelotti Wrayall's Translation.)

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated

Edition de Luxe.

In Five Large Octavo Volumes.

Prices, per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $30;
Half Morocco, $35.50; Full Morocco,
Gilt Edges, $45.

...Sold only by subscription....

THIS new edition of Les Misérables is the first to present to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly Four Hundred Illustrations from the designs of some of the most eminent French artists: De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; E. Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least, among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

Send for illustrated circular. Please mention this paper.

MCDONNELL BROS., Publishers,
185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who those who do. "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.

RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,

18 Beacon Street, Boston.

THIS HAMMOCK CHAIR

May be detached instantly from the hammock fixtures, and then becomes a combined automatic floor chair, adjustable to many reclining positions, and desirable for Library, Steamer and Invalid Use.

Has no equal. Used in hospitals, colleges and families. Folded compactly and shipped anywhere. Circulars, testimonials and photographs for 2-cent stamp. Price $7 and upwards. LIBERAL DISCOUNTS to agents and dealers.

BLAISDELL CHAIR CO., 96 High St., Boston.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1887) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N.Y.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 15
Or $50.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 17. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 330. Publishers.

BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

A VOLUME OF VERSE BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

UNDERWOODS.

Author's Edition. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Passages that everybody remembers in his romances, and that wonderful little book, "A Child's Garden of Verses," have already established Mr. Stevenson in the minds of a multitude of his readers as a poet in the highest meaning of the much-misused word, with a quality which defies description or analysis, and a simplicity and strength and beauty that are bracing air in a time of rondeaux and triolets. The present volume—his first collection of verse beyond "A Child's Garden"—is therefore likely to have a welcome of a very rare and cordial kind. Among the poems in its two divisions of English and Scots are some for which it is safe to prophesy the permanence of masterpieces; but many more, each one of which will have for its readers that indescribable touch and perfect expression of feeling which no one living can equal in its peculiar simplicity and directness.

By the same author:

A CHILD'S GARDEN OF VERSES.

12mo, gilt top, $1.00.

"The charm of the poems lies in their perfect blending of the folly and artlessness of childhood with quaint conceits and lively fancy. There is not a line that is not winsome with sweet, babyish sense."—The Chicago Herald.

"There is much that is airy, graceful, delicate, and fanciful in this volume. The author has realized the fun and fancy of childhood in some directions—especially the capacity to transform ordinary things for the moment into the fittings of fairy worlds."—The British Quarterly Review.

STRANGE CASE OF DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

THE MERRY MEN, AND OTHER TALES AND FABLES.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

KIDNAPPED.

12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

OBITER DICTA.

First Series. Second Series. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL. Elzevir 16mo, gilt top, $1.00 each.

"These charming papers are written by one who possesses a literary sense and judgment, and a delicacy, lightness, and grace of style too rare not to be duly prized."—New York Tribune.

"A second series of essays of this sort is a thing to congratulate one's self on."—New York Times.

IN OLE VIRGINIA,

Marse Chan and Other Stories. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE. 12mo, $1.25.

"The author belongs to the old Virginia 'quality'; he knows the life of the people; he knows the negro well; he has an eye for the picturesque, the poetic, and the humorous, and his style shows exquisite artistic taste and skill."—Nashville American.

"His stories are told in the simplest and most straightforward manner, and the negro dialect is found quite equal to all their turns of love, pride, anger, pathos, courage, heroism, and grief. They are quite competent to found a literature in their line. There is unmistakably the light of genius shining out of them."—Brooklyn Eagle.

* These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

Charles Scribner's Sons,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Naxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.50 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."
HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderny, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheik of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 8 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREPTE'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

Scribner & Welford's LIST OF BOOKS.

Suitable for Use in High-Class Schools, Colleges and Ladies' Schools.

AN ELEMENTARY HISTORY OF ART,

Architecture, Sculpture, Painting, Music. By N. D'ANVERS. With a Preface by Prof. Roger Smith. New Edition, with over 200 wood engravings. Large crown 8vo (800 pages), cloth, gilt top, $4.50.

For students who desire thus to train their own minds, for those who wish to prepare themselves for Continental travel, and, above all, for pupils in schools of a high class, no handbook of Art History could be more suitable than this volume.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT MUSICIANS.

Specially prepared for Schools, Amateurs, and Students of Music. Each volume strongly bound in decorated cloth. Price, per volume, $1.50. Including,

Haydn, Schubert, Bach, Wagner,
Mendel, Schumann, Weber, Rossini,
Mozart, Purcell, Mendelssohn,
English Church Composers.

A HISTORY OF MUSIC FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT.

By W. S. ROCKSTRO, author of "The Life of Handel," "The Life of Mendelssohn," etc. In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

ART HAND-BOOKS.

A new series of illustrated Text-Books of Art Education. Edited by E. J. POYNTER, R. A. Each volume contains numerous illustrations, and is strongly bound for the use of students. Price per volume, $2.00.

I. PAINTING. Classic and Italian. By E. J. POYNTER and P. E. HEAD.

II. — German, Flemish, and Dutch. By H. W. BUXTON.

III. — English and American. By H. W. BUXTON.

IV. — French and Spanish. By G. SMITH.

V. ARCHITECTURE. Classic and Early Christian. By T. R. SMITH.

VI. — Gothic and Renaissance. By T. R. SMITH.

VII. SCULPTURE. Antique, Egyptian, and Greek. By G. RUSFORD.

VIII. — Renaissance and Modern. By G. RUSFORD.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT ARTISTS.

Specially prepared for Schools, Amateurs, and Students of Art. Each volume contains about 16 illustrations, including a portrait of the master, and is strongly bound in decorated cloth. Price, per volume, $1.25, unless marked otherwise, viz.:

REYNOLDS—HOGARTH—GAINSBOROUGH AND CONSTABLE—LAWRENCE AND ROMNEY, $1.00
TURNER—WILKIE—LANDSEER—GIOTTO—FRA ANGELICO—FRA BARTOLOMEO—GHIRBerti AND DONATELLO, $1.00—MANTEGNA—LEONARDO DA VINCI—MICHEL ANGELO—RAPHAEL—TITIAN—TINTORETTO—CORREGGIO, $1.00—VELASQUEZ—MURILLO, $1.00—ALBRECHT DÜRER—THE LITTLE MASTERS—HOLBEIN—OVERBECK—REMBRANDT—RUBENS—VAN DYCK—DELLA ROBIA, $1.00—WATTEAU, $1.00—VERNET—FIGURE PAINTERS OF HOLLAND—MEISONIER, $1.00—CLAUDE.

Complete detailed list supplied.

* The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare, and Second-hand Books ready. New Catalogue of Educational Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

D. APPLETON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

The Romance of a Can- oness.

From the German of PAUL HEYSE, author of "In Paradise," etc. 12mo, paper cover, 50 cents; half bound, 75 cts. [Ready Aug. 20.]

The Pleasures of Life.

By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., F. R. S. 12mo, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

CONTENTS: The Duty of Happiness—The Happiness of Duty—A Song of Books—The Choice of Books—The Blessing of Friends—The Value of Time—The Pleasures of Travel—The Pleasures of Home—Science—Education.

"We hope this charming little volume will find many readers, for it will whet the appetite for wholesome reading."—London Academy.

Thralldom.

A STORY. By JULIAN STURGIS, author of "Diak's Wandering," "An Accomplished Gentleman," "John Maldment," etc. 12mo, paper, 50 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

"The tale contains two or three delightfully subtle and effective character-creations that give it an enduring value."—Scottish Leader.

The Autobiography of a Slander.

By EDNA LYALL, author of "Donovan," "We Two," etc. 12mo, paper, price 25 cents.

The author dedicates this suggestive little book "to all whom it may concern."

A Naturalist's Rambles About Home.

By Dr. CHARLES C. ABBOTT. A new edition, revised and issued in a new style. 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

"Ever since the days of Isaac Walton, books like this have been popular, but there never was before a time when they found so many intelligent readers as they do at present."—Boston Transcript.

Red Spider.

A NOVEL. By S. BARING-GOULD, author of "Little Tu'penny," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

"A well-told and neatly contrived story, with several excellent figures exhibiting broad traits of human character with vivacity and distinctness."—London Athenæum.

The Bag of Diamonds.

By GEORGE MANVILLE FENN, author of "The Master of the Ceremonies," "Double Cunning," etc. 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

"It is full of incident, the mystery is well guarded and quite unguessable."—London Athenæum.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3, & 5 Bond Street, New York.

On account of the success of Ticknor's Paper Series of the publication will be continued semi-monthly hereafter. The publication days will be the first and third Saturdays of each month. The same high standard of selection which has rendered this series noticeably superior to all others will be carefully maintained, and the series will contain none but The Best and Most Popular Works.

ORIGINAL COPYRIGHT NOVELS

NO. 15.

CONFESSIONS OF A FRIVOLOUS GIRL.

By ROBERT GRANT. Author of "Face to Face," "A Romantic Young Lady," etc.

"A screaming success."—Saturday Review (London). "Clever and piquant sketches, refreshing spirit and vivacity."—Harpers Magazine. "Amusing, wholesome, original."—Scribner's Magazine. "The greatest social literary hit of the year."—Chicago Times.

NO. 16.

CULTURE'S GARLAND:

Being Memoranda of the Gradual Rise of Literature, Art, Music and Society in Chicago and other Western Ganglia. By EUGENE FIELD. With Preface by Julian Hawthorne. 16mo, 50 cents.

"The name of Eugene Field of the Chicago Daily News, though heard for the first time only a few years ago, is already a famous and a favorite name in journalism. He bears the reputation of a humorist; but his humor is not of the conventional order; it has a wider and loftier scope. . . . The present little volume comprises mainly a bubbling forth of delightful badinage and mischievous rillery, directed at some of the follies and pretensions of his enterprising fellow-townsmen, who, however, can by no means be allowed to claim a monopoly of either the pretensions or the follies herein exploited. It is a book which should, and doubtless will, attain a national popularity; but admirable, and indeed irresistible, though it be in its way, it represents a very inconsiderable fraction of the author's real capacity."—Julian Hawthorne.

CULTURE'S GARLAND will also be issued in cloth binding. Price $1.00.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

Horsford's ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

A Companion Book to "My Religion." MY CONFESSION.

By Count LYOF N. TOLSTOI, author of "Anna Karenina," "Ivan Ilyitch," "Boyhood, Childhood and Youth," etc. 12mo, $1.00.

This volume gives an autobiographical account of the change in the author's religious opinions, and the various causes by which it was brought about; all of which is told in the most delightful manner, and will enable the reader to understand more clearly his "My Religion," which is the sequel to this volume.

(First and second editions sold before publication; third edition in press.)

Mrs Shillaber's Cook Book.

A practical guide for housekeepers. By LYDIA SHILLABER. With introduction by Mrs. Partington. 12mo, $1.25.

[Extract from Mrs. Partington's introduction.]

"Well, well," said Mrs. Partington, her spectacles beaming with delight as she turned over the leaves of the new cookery book, "I declare, it excites my salvation glands even to read the names of these good things! It seems as though the greatest epic might find something among all these meats and cosmetics to give a jest to appetite. . . . Now a book like this will come into a house like an oasis in the desert of the great Sarah, and be a quarantine of perpetual peace."

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

13 Astor Place, - - - New York.

THIRTEEN STORIES OF THE FAR WEST. BY FORBES HEERMANS.

12mo, pp. 363, $1.25.

"There is no art in his writing—no such art as we find in the California writings of Bret Harte—but if one doesn't miss that, when it is lacking, and is willing to put up with simple, straightforward language, for the sake of what is behind it—which in this instance happens to consist of sundry pathetic and humorous episodes of mountain life and adventure—he will be entertained, as we have been, by this volume of Mr. Heermans'."—RICHARD HENRY STODDARD, in the New York Mail and Express.

C. W. BARDEEN, Publisher,
SYRACUSE, N. Y.

September Atlantic,

Now ready, has Serial and Short Stories, Essays, and Poems, by

Dr. HOLMES,	Mr. CRAWFORD,
Mrs. OLIPHANT,	Professor McMASTER,
PERCIVAL LOWELL,	Mrs. MOULTON,
BRADFORD TORREY,	EDMUND NOBLE,
Mrs. PENNELL,	ANDREW HEDBROOKE, and others. 35 cents.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

82 Equitable Building, Boston.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and few in price. Johnson's (1887) is ten years later than either Appletons' or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

The Literary World.

Vol. XVIII. BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1887. No. 17.

CONTENTS.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS	259
BOSWELL'S JOHNSON IN A NEW EDITION	259
THE NEW EDITION OF BROWNING	261
A STORY OF THE YELLOWSTONE	261
THE STORY OF ASSYRIA	262
THE PLEASURES OF LIFE	262
MARY CLAUDE'S STORIES FOR CHILDREN	263
TOLSTOI'S CONFESSION AND CREED	266
A GAME OF CHANCE	267
MINOR NOTICES:
The Ruling Principle of Method Applied to Education	263
The New Education	263
Principles of Education Practically Applied	263
Was Shakespeare Shapleigh?	269
The Story of the Earth and Man	269
The Hidden Way Across the Threshold	269
Job and Solomon	269
MINOR FICTION:
To Call her Mine	268
Wallingford	268
Norwood	268
The Buchholz Family	268
Aunt Hepsey's Foundling	268
The Bag of Diamonds	268
Takes Before Supper	269
Four "Franklin Squares"	269
PERIODICALS	270
Is TOLSTOI A "CRANK"?	264
AMERICAN VS. EUROPEAN TRAVEL	264
THE NEWBERRY LIBRARY	264
TOLSTOI. Maurice Thompson	265
Dr. WM. J. ROEPE. Portrait	265
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	270
NEWS AND NOTES	271
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	271
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	271

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.*

"EDNA LYALL," who is understood to be Miss Ada Ellen Bayly, enters a new field in this admirably written novel, and shows that in the production of historical fiction her hand is no less true, discerning, sympathetic, and elevating than in detailing the characteristics of modern life. The date of the story is two hundred years ago, and it is chiefly concerned with the career of Hugo Wharnccliffe, who, made the tool of his wily elder brother, is involved in plots against the king and is cast into Newgate prison. Hugo is a warm friend of Algernon Sidney, who figures nobly in the narrative as patriot and martyr. The account of the escape of Hugo from prison, his meeting with his betrothed cousin Joyce, his flight to Amsterdam, and his presence at the death-bed of his brother is told with real fervor and a realistic force that carries the reader fully to the end.

Miss Bayly has succeeded in rendering the life of the times with skillful touches which relieve, but do not impede, the narrative. She is never archaic or needlessly erudite, yet she plainly has the history and characteristics of the England of the seventeenth century at ample command, and she draws upon a rich store of learning in the development of her theme.

In the delineation of individuals Miss

Bayly, in the book before us, has lost none of her earlier graceful power, while displaying a maturity of insight and a dignity of purpose not heretofore so fully manifested in her work. One may perhaps complain that Hugo is too perfect, that his brother is too deep-dyed a villain, and that Mary Denham's devotion is too self-sacrificing, too persistent, to be human. Undoubtedly the author has embodied ideals in these personages, but she has done so in an artistic way, and it is only as an afterthought that any questioning of her veracity arises. Very noble is the account of the death of Sidney; and the reported conversations with his young friend are in the spirit of his writings, while not mere echoes of his recorded words.

Certain scenes in the book remain in the memory, not soon to fade. The duel between Hugo and burly Sir Peregrine Blake, the warning of Sir Francis Wharnccliffe and his fellow Puritans, Hugo's midnight search for the papers, the interview with the king, the moment when the governor of the prison demands that Hugo's coffin shall be opened, the escape of Hugo from the inn when his brother suddenly appears—all these and many more critical moments are depicted with no attempt at sensationalism, but with a quiet assurance that never loses its impressiveness.

It is good to step aside from the contemporaneous deluge of trivial, ignoble, meretricious fiction to a story like this; a story inspired by high purposes, true to great motives, filled with fine thoughts, teaching lessons of manliness, gentleness, unselfishness, and showing how duty fearlessly performed brings something better than happiness. The novelist who does this, and does it naturally, without cant or affectation of any sort, has in these days a mission to perform of no little significance. Edna Lyall has never lost sight of the fact that art to be of more than passing value must have an ethical foundation, and in its ultimate meanings make for goodness, purity, and peace; that it must stir the emotions, but stir them on the nobler side, and thereby elevate while it gives warning or instruction. All of her novels are therefore worthy of being read by thoughtful people, who will find In the Golden Days one of the most finished of the works that have come from her pen.

BOSWELL'S JOHNSON IN A NEW EDITION.*

IN these six sumptuous volumes, 8vo, laid paper, tinted, uncalendered, uncut, one of the great books of the world receives an embodiment worthy of its fame. It now lacks four years of a century since it first appeared, and the work bids fair to be as truly immortal as its subject. As long as English history abides Dr. Johnson will hold his place as one of the most remarkable figures in its pages, and wherever English literature has found readers Boswell's Life of him has been regarded so far as on the whole its most entertaining biography.

The appearance of Mr. Birkbeck Hill's new and exhaustive edition calls for a few words of bibliographical introduction. The first edition of the Life appeared in London in 1791, in 2 vols., quarto, with Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait; the second in 1793, in 3 vols., octavo; the third, with additions, in 1799, in 4 vols., octavo; the fourth in 1804, the fifth in 1807, the sixth in 1811, all in 4 vols., 8vo. Boswell died in 1795, while preparing notes for his third edition, and that and the following three editions were carried through the press by Edmond Malone. Boswell's work on the third edition, however, was so far completed that the edition may be accepted as definitely his own—Malone, to whom he had read the whole of his original manuscript, and who had helped him in important ways in the preparation of the work, having scrupulously executed all Boswell's plans. This third edition, with its peculiarities of spelling and punctuation, is the basis of Mr. Hill's.

Since 1811 there have been innumerable editions, some with "additions" and "corrections," some with omissions and mistakes. The most recent of these, we believe, is A. Napier's, London, 1884, in 5 vols., 8vo, with notes and appendices, and numerous illustrations, republished in this country by the J. B. Lippincott Co.; the most familiar probably is J. W. Croker's, London, 1831, in 5 vols., 8vo, made famous if not notorious by Macaulay in a most scathing Essay [September, 1831], in which, while praising Boswell as "one of the best of biographers" and his book as "one of the best books in the world," he discriminated sharply between the book and the man, and scarified Boswell the man and poor Croker his editor almost beyond healing. "This edition," says Macaulay, "is ill compiled, ill arranged, ill written, and ill printed."

In very different terms from these, we may be sure, would Lord Macaulay speak of Mr. Birkbeck Hill's edition, could he have lived to examine it. It is a work to gratify the bibliophile's eye, to satisfy the scholar's exaction, and to delight the reader's heart. It has been born of a Boswellian passion which the editor in his preface takes no pains to conceal, and nurtured by a persistency of studious toil of which the particulars are interesting and stimulating. Mr. Hill first read Boswell's Life, he tells us, in his boyhood, when yet too young for it to lay hold upon him. When he entered Pembroke College, Oxford, he was pleased to think that Johnson had been there before him, though Boswell was forgotten. Meantime the college duty of translating passages from the Spectator into Latin deepened his reverence for Dr. Johnson and his contemporary masters of eighteenth century English; and one day, eighteen years ago, while loitering in an old book shop, "almost under the shadow of a great cathedral," he came upon a copy "of a somewhat early edition of the Life in five well-bound volumes." He bought it, and now, he says, cherishes none of his books more than these. The volumes became his "almost inseparable companions." He soon began instinctively a work of note and comment, not only in their pages as he read, but in other authors. When on one occasion it fell to his lot to review a new edition of the Life, he read it anew from beginning to end, without, he believes, "missing a single line of the text or a single note." Ambition budding out of his passion, more than twelve years ago he offered himself as the editor of a new edition, but this offer was "civilly declined." His purpose, however, he never abandoned, and he began to shape it into definite form. Ill health obstructed and delayed his scheme from year to year, but still the materials steadily gathered. In 1878 he published Dr. Johnson: His Friends and His Critics; in 1879 he edited Boswell's Journal of a Tour to Corsica; and in 1885 he was ready for the compositors to begin upon the undertaking whose achievement is witnessed by the six elegant volumes before us.

* In the Golden Days. By Edna Lyall. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

* Boswell's Life of Johnson. Including Boswell's Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides and Johnson's Diary of a Journey into North Wales. Edited by George Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L. Six Volumes. Oxford: the Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan & Co. $16.00.

These volumes we will now open to the reader. The first has for a frontispiece an etching of Sir Joshua Reynolds's portrait of Johnson in the National Gallery. The title-page is followed by a fac-simile of the title-page to the 3d edition; this by a grateful and complimentary dedication of the present edition to Professor Jowett of Oxford; and this in turn by a table of contents to Vol. I and a list of illustrations for the entire work. The preface of 17 pp. we are not yet done with. Next comes a table of 13 Errata for the six volumes; then Boswell's original dedication to Sir Joshua Reynolds; and after this the several "advertisements" to the first, second, and third editions. Boswell's "Chronological Catalogue of Johnson's Prose Works" fills the next 9 pp. At this point the text of the Life proper begins, and runs to p. 500, leaving 22 pp. of appendices. The text, which is printed in large type, and is accompanied by copious foot-notes in small type, the latter often crowding the former to a narrow space at the top of the page, has the work all to itself up to the close of the fourth volume. The fifth is occupied with the Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides, made by Johnson and Boswell in company, in August, September, October, and November, 1773, with a few fragments in appendices. The sixth volume opens with an alphabetical list of "Titles of Many of the Works Quoted in the Notes," 13 pp.; continues with a series of autograph letters by Johnson, now first published, 18 pp.; miscellaneous notes, 32 pp.; an index to the foregoing addenda, 3 pp.; an index to the whole work, 288 pp.; and closes with a "Concordance of Johnson's Sayings," 34 pp. The general index, which is the conspicuous feature of the volume and the crowning excellence of the whole work, is a marvel of thorough, accurate, patient industry. This alone, the editor says, cost him many months of "heavy work." Every entry, he tells us, he made himself, and every entry he verified in the proof sheets, not by comparing it with his manuscript, but by turning to the reference in the printed volumes. Such conscientious fidelity in an irksome task is as praiseworthy as it is rare, and a model for all editors to copy.

This painstaking habit of the true scholar seems to have characterized Mr. Hill's work throughout. His devotion as an index-maker is only one example of it. In revising his proofs, he tells us, he has very rarely indeed contented himself in verifying quotations by a reference to his own manuscript. "In almost all instances," he says, "I have once more examined the originals." Very many of the authors consulted could only be found in the Bodleian or the British Museum. Whenever a remark of Johnson's required illustration he has sought to find it, and has "read through many a book" in these incidental endeavors. He has made numerous extracts from the eleven volumes of Johnson's collected works, and has carefully examined all the minor writings attributed to him by Boswell, for the most part not included in these collections. Some errors of reference by Boswell, detected in the course of his microscopic scrutiny, Mr. Hill has corrected in his own notes. The numerous quotations in which both Johnson and Boswell indulged have been traced to their sources in every possible instance, a work often of the most baffling difficulty. "In one case," says Mr. Hill, "my long search was rewarded by the discovery that Boswell was quoting himself." A good deal of fresh material, not known to or overlooked by previous editors, has been discovered and inserted in the notes. Many obscure statements have been illuminated by later information or superior knowledge. Mr. Hill has truly done a hard work well, with the conscience and feeling of an accomplished scholar, and we can readily pardon the honest pride with which in his preface, with just a touch of the Boswellian nature itself, he says:

Johnson, I fondly believe, would have been pleased, perhaps would even have been proud, could he have foreseen this edition. . . . Of Boswell's pleasure I cannot doubt.

The illustrations are not numerous. They comprise, besides the frontispiece already mentioned, copies of two other Reynolds portraits of Johnson, painted in 1756 and 1770, a picture of the bust by Nollekens, Opie's portrait, Reynolds's portrait of Boswell, four fac-similes of Johnson's handwriting at different periods of his life, a fac-simile of the Round Robin addressed to him in regard to the epitaph on Goldsmith, a fac-simile of Boswell's handwriting, a map of the tour through Scotland and the Hebrides, and a curious chart of Johnson's contemporaries.

Are the notes too profuse and sometimes discursive if not irrelevant? It is hard to stay such an enthusiasm as that of Mr. Hill for his book, and nothing which in any way touches the narrative, or can in any wise be connected with it, seems too remote to be fetched in for that purpose. Doubtless such a multiplicity of notes are at first a distraction to the reader unless the narrative is somewhat familiar, but the amount of interesting and often curious information with which they furnish the text is very large. We think it is a mistake in the typography that Mr. Hill's notes were not distinguished to the eye more clearly than they are, and as easily they might have been by being printed in smaller type than Boswell's own and other notes, from which it is now sometimes a little difficult for the eye to separate them. On p. 15 of Vol. V there is, we think, a typographical error by which a letter to Dr. Beattie is mixed up with one from Dr. Robertson. But as a rule the printing is admirably as well as accurately done, and the binding is of that firm but easy style that allows the volumes to lie open with delightful docility.

In all this long article we have only touched the outside of this work, the shell of a nut whose meat is rich enough to detain us much longer, did our space allow. We cannot now do more with these six inviting octavos than to make them the motive power of an exhortation to everybody to read Boswell, and of advice to those who have already read him to read him again under Mr. Hill's minute and masterly guidance. Nor can we do better than to end this notice with the words with which Macaulay ended his review of the far less worthy Croker:

As we close it, the club-room is before us, and the table on which stands the omelet for Nugent, and the lemons for Johnson. There are assembled those heads which live forever on the canvas of Reynolds. There are the spectacles of Burke and the tall, thin form of Langton, the courtly sneer of Beauclerk and the beaming smile of Garrick, Gibbon tapping his snuff-box and Sir Joshua with his trumpet in his ear. In the foreground is that strange figure which is as familiar to us as the figures of those among whom we have been brought up, the gigantic body, the huge massy face, seamed with the scars of disease, the brown coat, the black worsted stockings, the gray wig with the scorched foretop, the dirty hands, the nails bitten and pared to the quick. We see the eyes and mouth moving with convulsive twitches; we see the heavy form rolling; we hear it puffing; and then comes the "Why, sir!" and the "What then, sir?" and the "No, sir!" and the "You don't see your way through the question, sir!"

—According to a writer in the Cincinnati Commercial the Ohio home of Senator John Sherman is the repository of an enormous and valuable working library. The whole house is described as running over with books. There is a full line of Congressional Debates, executive documents, public reports, and pamphlets, the latter carefully bound, labeled, and indexed. A safe in one corner of the library holds the Senator's correspondence, so systematically assorted and disposed that any one of 40,000 letters can be produced without delay. There is one volume of autograph letters of Presidents from Jackson down, another of the letters of famous men who have not held political office, and a collection of over a thousand letters from Gen. W. T. Sherman, the Senator's brother.

THE NEW EDITION OF BROWNING.*

THE new edition of Browning's poems is one of the many triumphs of the famous Riverside press; among them all we remember none more complete. The publishers have condensed the twenty or so volumes, in which Robert Browning's poems have previously appeared from time to time, here in America, into six most comely books. The former uniform editions of the poet have had but an external likeness, being made up from different sets of plates of various dates, some of them quite old and battered. This new edition, which will rejoice even the soul of a Philistine and cause unmeasured raptures in Browning clubs throughout the land, is printed from an entirely new set of electrotype plates. The type is of good size, the paper firm, the appearance of the page clear and prepossessing, the great gain in space by the omission of "leads" not having been made at any cost to the reader's eye or to his sense of beauty. Bound in light olive-green cloth, with flat backs and gilt tops, the set, once seen, will leave no disciple of the latest religion in peace until he can call it his own!

The order of the poems is that followed in the series of volumes which Mr. Browning issued before publishing The Ring and the Book; the subsequent poems are arranged chronologically. The latest revision made by the poet has been scrupulously copied throughout, so that the pious reader has here the "revised version." To the first volume is prefixed a fine steel portrait, engraved by J. A. J. Wilcox after a recent photograph; it is a speaking likeness.

From Pauline, the opening poem of these six crowded volumes, which Browning himself acknowledges and retains "with extreme repugnance, indeed purely of necessity," to the Parleyings in the last of the series, it is, indeed, a mighty range. Rail as we may, and as we have a right to do, at the harshness of Browning's style, at the repulsiveness of many of his subjects, at the tortuousness of his analysis of unworthy characters, at the willfulness, even, of his declarations of faith, he remains a great poet, to be admired, if not loved, by all English-speaking men. Let future generations balance more justly than the present is now inclined to do the merits of a Tennyson and those of a Browning, the latter can never fail of a place among the great prophets of our century, a teacher of faith, and an inspirer unto righteousness. But we must believe that Browning's fame will rest more securely upon the poems contained in the second and the fourth of these volumes than upon The Ring and the Book, and the other poems, a few only excepted. The Dramatic Lyrics, the Dramatic Romances, Men and Women, and Dramatis Personæ—these are the essential and abiding Browning! A fourth part of his work, at most, will endure, if enduring means to find readers who read from love and not from pedantry.

A STORY OF THE YELLOWSTONE.*

WE had last year from Miss Rollins The Story of a Ranch, of which this Story of the Yellowstone is a not distant connection. Some of the characters in that book figure in this under the same fanciful disguise of name. The plan of the two books is the same—a thin veneer of fiction applied to a solid body of description. It is a plan which is alluring to many literary workmen, but one not to be recommended. It does not produce the best results. Miss Rollins, it seems to us, would have made a much more satisfactory book out of her really interesting visit to the famed Yellowstone Park if she had written an honest and straightforward narrative, as she is capable of doing picturesquely, and left the framework of a story for another time and subject. So vivacious and bright a writer as she ought to succeed in such a narrative, and not feel driven to a device which is somewhat clumsy and in the way.

Miss Rollins also makes the mistake, we think, of disparaging the European tour in comparison with the American tour. There is no need of this. Few persons probably who have crossed both our continent and the Atlantic will hesitate to give the latter experience the preference. Say all that is to be said about the Rockies and the Sierras, and it remains that they are easily surpassed in grandeur and sublimity by the scenery of Switzerland; while to the rural charms of England and the antiquities of France and Germany and Italy there is nothing that can be compared in Colorado or California. The motives for a journey to the Pacific coast are quite different from those which prompt to the transatlantic journey, and each of these quarters of the globe is sufficient to stand upon its own merits.

Miss Rollins's comments seem to us much more to the purpose when she takes issue with the "coupon" system of pleasure travel, and writes herself down decidedly in favor of traveling independently as a private party. This latter was the course adopted by her and her friends in this visit to the Yellowstone, and she thinks they had the advantage of the "tourists" every time. They found a guide, whom she calls Phillips, who furnished an outfit of two four-horse teams, two saddle-horses, a cook, two wall tents with mattresses, and all utensils, for $25 a day. The supplies for ten days cost $75 more, or a total of $325 for the party of five, which was $6.50 a day for each individual. The "coupon" system cost $9 a day for transportation and hotels, and allowed only five days for a trip for which ten were none too many.

Miss Rollins—to borrow the language of the stock market—is a "bear" as to the general scenery of the Yellowstone Park, but a "bull" as to its curiosities. She complains severely of the dust and the glare and the lack of railroad facilities, and the tendency to magnify commonplace objects with grandiloquent names; but she is enthusiastic to the pitch of eloquence over the wonderful geysers, and the singular "paint-pot" pools of spouting mud, and the beautiful coralline formations, and the translucent air, and the refreshing frosty nights, and the streams and lakes and falls. For example:

What a magnificent sight it was! The whole snowy mass that had looked so cold and silent under the pale moon the night before, was now glowing, gleaming, pulsating with life under the morning sun. For perhaps a hundred acres the white surface was studded with brilliant pools, set like jewels, clear as diamonds, lovelier in color than opals, in rims of fretted frost, delicate as lace and firm as marble. Over these coralline edges trickles softly the gentle overflow of the lovely lakes—falling tremulously and without a sound over the fluted, reed-like columns of the terraces below, only to leave them harder than they were before.

And again:

It was a pretty scene where the camp had been pitched. Close by gleamed the dozen white tents that formed the hotel where the "coupons" dine; while the green expanse of pretty meadow, shut in by pines glowing with the rich, red light of sunset, was dotted with the tents of travelers camping out. Brightly gleamed the river past the tents; brightly gleamed the camp fires through the trees; brightly glowed the faces round the tempting dinner on the grass.

And once again:

They were on the brink of the Morning-Glory Pool, the most beautiful of all the pools, lovely enough to tempt one from New York, if nothing else were to be seen at the Yellowstone Park. It is exquisitely named, for it is precisely like a morning-glory flower. Its long and slender throat, like the tube of the blossom, reaching from unknown depths below, branches out in ever widening snowy walls—forming at last a perfectly symmetrical and exquisite chalice, which is filled with water of the loveliest, clearest, robin's-egg blue. The rim of the chalice is delicately and regularly scalloped, like the flower, and is edged with a tiny line of hard coral from the deposit.

* The Poetic and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning. In Six Volumes. Riverside Edition. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.75 per vol.

* The Three Tetons. A Story of the Yellowstone. By Alice Wellington Rollins. Cassell & Co. Paper, 50c.

These extracts are from the lower and better strata of Miss Rollins's book — the descriptive passages. The dialogue our readers would hardly care for, and the personages who figure under such names as "the Man of Sense," "the Romantic," and "the Extravagant," become somewhat tedious.

The book seems to be one chapter — 219 pages without a break, except into paragraphs, and the story returns eastward by way of Salt Lake City. Miss Rollins does justice to the capital of the Mormons, to handsome Denver, and to the fine scenery along the route of the Denver & Rio Grande Railway, by far the finest to be had on all this journey across the Continent; but the conversation which "the Maiden" held with the Mormon at Salt Lake City was hardly maidenly, and the substance of it would better have been presented in some other way.

Miss Rollins has made an enthusiastic book about the Yellowstone, and the locality deserves her enthusiasm. But we wonder if she has ever looked from Berne at the Bernese Oberland, climbed from Zermatt to the Riffel and the Gornergrat, surmounted the Wengern Alp, or descended the Valley of Rosenlauri? If not, and if she should live to have those experiences, she will arrange her perspectives somewhat differently.

Her little book would have been greatly improved for the reader by a map of the Yellowstone.

The "Three Tetons" appear only in the title.

THE STORY OF ASSYRIA.*

READERS of the admirably clear and instructive Story of Chaldea in the same series will naturally receive with especial interest the present work, in some sense a continuation of the former and by the same talented author.

The empire of Assyria should be distinguished from that of Chaldea as being later in time, and higher in the great basin of the Tigris and Euphrates in geographical position. The historical portion of the Story of Chaldea ended with the second invasion of eastern mountain tribes from Elam. That of Assyria, as here given, begins with the gradual colonization of the region about Nineveh by Semitic immigrants from the older kingdom, driven, probably, "by the discomfort and oppression consequent on the great Elamite invasion," at a time estimated at about 1800 B. C. — not far from that at which Abram, afterwards the Father of the Faithful, migrated from Ur in the same Chaldean territory. The narrative extends from this point to the overthrow of the national power and the capture of Ninevah after two years' siege by a coalition of Chaldeans and Medes, B. C. 606.

The principal sources of original knowledge in Assyrian history are the pictorial and cuneiform inscriptions on surfaces of prepared rocks, and on the cylindrical clay tablets which served as records. Their contents are usually boastful accounts by the kings of their own exploits. Collateral information in the historical books of the Old Testament is interesting, but scanty; that in Greek historians surprisingly fanciful and untrustworthy. Dates are known most accurately in the period B. C. 900-666, from the discovery of certain "tables of eponyms" containing a system of naming the years from various public functionaries — a plan suggestive of the similar use made at Rome of the names of the consuls.

From its small beginnings as a Chaldean colony the empire grew, in the course of centuries, till it extended in Asia from the Zagros Mountains, east of the Tigris valley, to the Mediterranean, and in Africa, at one time, held Egypt as a conquered province. There is much monotony in the successive kings' chronicles of conquest and suppression of rebellions; much also of revolting cruelty, relieved at times by accounts of the adornment of Assyrian cities with magnificent buildings, and of attention to the domestic needs of the people. Of the kings, the most remarkable were Tukulti-Palesharrā I, 1120-1100 B. C., a name corrupted into Tiglath-Pileser; Assurnazirpal; Shalmaneser II; Tiglath-Pileser II, under whom much territory was subjected, including Syria and the Hebrew kingdoms of Judah and Israel; Sennacherib, familiar to us from the Old Testament; and Assurbanipal, under whom Assyrian power began to totter towards its fall.

The author's fondness for ethnological and theological researches is shown by the introduction of interesting and instructive chapters — not strictly part of Assyrian history — on the migration from the Bahrein Islands, in the Persian Gulf, of the Hamitic race of Canaan and Phut, the latter the native name for the Phœnicians, its wonderful progress in commerce and wealth, and the state of its religious ideas and practices; and later by a chapter upon the early wanderings of the descendants of Japhet, the great Aryan or Indo-European race. From the word Aryan, it is suggested, come Iran, as a name of Persia, and the poetic Erin.

The biblical narrative of the journey of Jonah and his preaching at Nineveh our author thinks not easy of explanation; but it is suggested that the swallowing of the prophet by the "great fish" is, perhaps, a highly allegorical statement of his disappearance for three days in the vortex of the great city, as a fish stands as its pictorial emblem, and the Assyrian name Ninua seems related to nunu, fish.

It is, perhaps, in these philosophical researches in the domains of ethnology, religion, and philology, rather than in its strictly historical narration, that the chief interest of the present work will be found.

The illustrations constitute an extensive and graphic collection illustrative of the state of Assyrian and Hittite art.

THE PLEASURES OF LIFE.*

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK tells us, in the preface to this attractive little volume, that, being prone to suffer from low spirits, he has found it profitable to dwell upon "the privileges and blessings we enjoy," and in addressing meetings of schools and colleges and assemblies of working men he has naturally availed himself of the ideas thus gathered for purposes of self-instruction and self-counsel. Brought together in book form the addresses suffer somewhat from their lack of original observation and their heterogeneity of form, but the selections of which they are largely composed are wisely chosen, and no thoughtful person can turn over these pages without finding his attention arrested by some great saying or enlightening comment from a recognized teacher of mankind.

Sir John Lubbock sets forth with the duty of happiness and the happiness of duty. He draws freely from the Stoics — from Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius — while he does not hesitate to question some of their tenets. He urges upon us attention to the little duties, the cultivation of an equable temper, and of a taste for the beautiful things in nature. And with regard to general conduct he offers the wise remark that the result in the long run will depend, not so much on some single resolution, or on our action in a special case, but rather on the preparation of daily life. Great battles are really won before they are actually fought. To control our passions we must govern our habits.

On the subject of books Sir John Lubbock brings together a series of delightful reflections, most of them very familiar, but none of them trite or unprofitable. For his own part, Sir John Lubbock holds "to the charm of desultory reading."

The wider the field the more important that we should benefit by the very best books in each class. Not that we need confine ourselves to them, but that we should commence with them, and they will certainly lead us on to others. There are, of course, some books which we must read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest. But there are exceptions. As regards by far the larger number, it is probably better to read them quickly, dwelling only on the best and most important passages. In this way, no doubt, we shall lose much, but we gain more by ranging over a wider field. We may, in fact, I think, apply to reading Lord Brougham's wise dictum as regards education, and say that it is well to read everything of something and something of everything. In this way only can we ascertain the bent of our own tastes, for it is a general, though not of course an invariable rule, that we profit little by books which we do not enjoy.

* The Story of Assyria. From the Rise of the Empire to the Fall of Nineveh. By Zénaïde A. Ragozin. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Illustrated. $1.50.

* The Pleasures of Life. By Sir John Lubbock. Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

Then follows the much discussed address on the choice of books, with its list of the hundred best books. Here Sir John Lubbock has shown his liberality of spirit by carefully revising his list in conformity to the criticism it evoked. It is now as good a list as any general catalogue of the sort can be. To make an absolute enumeration of the hundred best books is like classifying a hundred best medicines — after all is done we must nullify our efforts by declaring the infinite variability of human needs. Still Sir John Lubbock's list has been of use, and contains valuable suggestions from which any systematic reader ought to derive profit.

Of the blessing of friends, the value of time, the pleasures of travel, and the pleasures of home, Sir John Lubbock borrows many pertinent observations from favorite authors, and adds here and there shrewd comments of his own. One may cull occasional apothegms such as these :

People can generally find time for what they choose to do; it is not really the time but the will that is wanting.

The advantage of leisure is mainly that we may have the power of choosing our own work.

On science and education, which Sir John Lubbock places by no means last among The Pleasures of Life, he may be expected to say something worth while. The study of science he glorifies as within the reach of all, and as a necessity to all who derive the most from life. Concerning education he has this to say, and his words have a decisive application on this side the Atlantic :

Our great mistake in education is, as it seems to me, the worship of book-learning — the confusion of instruction and education. We strain the memory instead of cultivating the mind. The children in our elementary schools are wearied by the mechanical act of writing and the interminable intricacies of spelling; they are oppressed by columns of dates, by lists of kings and places, which convey no definite idea to their minds and have no near relation to their daily wants and occupations; while in our public schools the same unfortunate results are produced by the weary monotony of Latin and Greek grammar. We ought to follow exactly the opposite course with children — to give them a wholesome variety of mental food and endeavor to cultivate their tastes, rather than to fill their minds with dry facts. The important thing is not so much that every child should be taught, as that every child should be given the wish to learn.

MARY CLAUDE'S STORIES FOR CHILDREN.*

THESE beautiful stories, or rather poems in prose, with their exquisite humor, their poetic realism, their forcible meanings, and their delicate expression of human emotion through the medium of animal life or the forms of inanimate nature, the whole backed by the enduring and ever varying charm of English fields and hills and skies, form one of the most fascinating volumes

"for children and child-lovers" that we have met with for many a day. As Mr. Arnold points out in his preface, it has the freshness and artlessness of the märchen of Northern Europe combined with English seriousness, or, as he expresses it, sadness, though "sadness" we think is hardly the word to apply to the noble if somewhat somber tone of most of the stories. Mr. Arnold says :

They carry me back to the fells and rills of Westmoreland, to long-past days when Westmoreland was the Westmoreland of Wordsworth and Hartley Coleridge, and when the authoress of these stories moved in her youth and spirit and grace through that beautiful region, herself a vision worthy of it.

The themes of the stories are very simple — the flight of a thistle-seed across the country and what it saw, a "notice to trespassers" set up in the green fields, a lamb that ran away from its mother, a plant in an old tool-house, a lap-dog's holiday. One of the most beautiful of all is called "The Meadow" and reflects a sylvan charm allied with human pathos that are irresistible. Perhaps we can give no better idea of what these stories are than by quoting one of the shortest of them almost entire :

The Winter Daisy.

In the winter, when the sun is cold and the earth benumbed with frost, the field-flowers are asleep; they undress themselves of nearly all their leaves, and sleep until the spring comes again; but one cold January (I cannot tell you how it happened, but so it was), a little Daisy had so sweet and vivid a dream of sunshine and soft air, that all unconscious of the season it put forth a flower-bud. . . . The poor little Daisy was frightened at finding herself alone in the midst of winter; she looked up at the pale sun that shone as it were through a vale of mist in the light blue sky; the air was so still, too, it made her feel quite strange. No singing of birds overhead, no humming of bees, no chirping of merry grasshoppers, and yet she had heard them all in her dream; but only the complaining croak of the hungry raven passing by, and every now and then a plaintive wail from the ice of the little lake beyond the fields, that sounded dismally to the poor disenchanted Daisy. . . . Her white petals were spread out around the tiny yellow flowerets, her green stalk was taper and downy, but she still did not look as the summer daisies do, for the cold had stunted her growth, and her leaflets were ragged and uneven, and the gold star within them was tarnished and spotted with black. The Daisy was too delicate to bear the winter's frost unharmed, and so she stood in silent grief and fear while the hours went slowly by. When it was near the time of the early sunset, some children came through the field, and when they saw her they cried, "Look! what an ugly little short Daisy! A Daisy in winter! How ridiculous!" and then they all laughed and ran on. The poor little Daisy was sadly hurt at this, and she wished they had rather trodden on her with their wooden clogs than laughed her sorrow to scorn. . . . So the little Daisy stood firmly waiting for the cold death; the sun was gone down, and she shuddered from head to foot in the foggy frost air. The cattle were all housed; the rook and the raven sheltered for the night; the children had thrown away their snowballs and ran in to the bright fireside. It was solemnly still in the white frozen field beneath the gray sky. Then a languid step made the snow rustle lightly, and a girl came slowly by, and seeing the little Daisy in the snow she stooped, and with a warm, ungloved hand gathered the dying blossom and laid it tenderly upon soft, breathing lips, that whispered, "Are we not sisters, thou and I, poor little dying flower? I also have had a dream of spring and life like thee; I also have been awakened by the winter." And the girl put the Daisy in her bosom and went away.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Ruling Principle of Method Applied to Education. By Antonio Rosmini Serbati. Translated by Mrs. William Grey. [D. C. Heath & Co. $1.75.]

The New Education. Three Papers by George H. Palmer, Professor of Philosophy in Harvard University. [Little, Brown & Co.]

Principles of Education Practically Applied. By J. M. Greenwood, A.M. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.]

The noted Italian saint and philosopher, Antonio Rosmini, planned an elaborate work on human education throughout life; but he lived to execute only that portion which treats of infant education. Mrs. Grey asserts that Froebel's kindergarten system is "the complete application, to every detail of infant education, of Rosmini's principles;" but the extremely scholastic manner in which the latter developed his principles makes his work far from easy or pleasant reading. His divisions of periods determined by the degrees of cognition reached by the child strikes one as often forced and doing violence to his general idea of natural development, by making distinctions where none exist. The teacher must have great patience and discernment who sits down to study Rosmini with a practical vein, and we judge that an abridgment of his treatise would have been more of a service to the teaching profession than the complete translation.

Passing from Rosmini to Prof. Palmer is changing from the old world to the new. The spheres treated in their books are, to be sure, very different, as Prof. Palmer's theme is the elective systems in American colleges; but the direct and simple treatment of the matter by the Harvard professor is a very agreeable contrast to the complex systematization of the Italian writer. Prof. Palmer's volume is substantially a reprint of three articles printed in the Andover Review for 1885, '86, and '87, which deservedly attracted wide notice. Himself for years a staunch opponent of the elective system, the author has become one of its most hearty champions, and his statement of the practical working of the system at Harvard is a strong argument to show that "it uplifts character as no other training can, and through influence on character it ennobles all methods of teaching and discipline." All parents, who have doubts about their sons sent or to be sent to Cambridge in this matter of election of studies, should reassure themselves by reading Prof. Palmer's forcible exposition.

The work of Mr. Greenwood, who is the Kansas City superintendent of schools, is a handbook "to help the teachers of this country to do better and more intelligent work in the school-room." It is full of very direct and sagacious suggestions concerning instruction in the various branches of study and the enforcement of proper discipline in the school-room.

— Mr. Horace Eaton Walker's volume of poems, lately published, has reached a sale of 500 copies.

* Twilight Thoughts. Stories for Children and Child-Lovers. By Mary S. Claude. Edited by Mary L. Avery. With a Preface by Matthew Arnold. Ginn & Co. soc.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

IS TOLSTOI A "CRANK"?

IN Mr. Maurice Thompson's communication, which, in courtesy to him, we print elsewhere, the controversy over Tolstói's art changes to a controversy over Tolstói's character. The question no longer seems to be whether Tolstói is a great novelist, or a sound philosopher, or a teacher of truth, but whether he is a dishonest socialist, a selfish visionary, and a parental brute. Upon this new issue we have something to say.

The important points which Mr. Thompson makes against Tolstói are three: first, that "he sent his daughter into the corn-field to plow beside his field hands;" second, that in defending the duty of non-resistance he went "to the extent even of saying that a man ought not to defend his wife or his daughter from the brutality of the vilest ruffian and under the worst stress of human danger;" and thirdly, that he has a "shoe-making hobby," which "is a device to attract notice to himself."

The "eye-witness," from whom Mr. Thompson says he derived the story of Tolstói's treatment of his daughter, he does not name, but he probably refers to Mr. George Kennan, whose account of "A Visit to Count Tolstói" was published in the Century for June, and this article, we take it, is Mr. Thompson's authority for the two other allegations named. The evidence of this is circumstantial and conclusive.

Now we have taken pains to read Mr. Kennan's article carefully a second time in the light of Mr. Thompson's communication, and we feel bound to say that, in our judgment, Mr. Thompson has not fairly represented either the form or the spirit of Mr. Kennan's article, and that the impression which Mr. Thompson's description gives of Tolstói and his way of life is very unjust to Tolstói, taking Mr. Kennan's authority as that of an "eye-witness." We think no person could read Mr. Kennan's article and name one single point at which the tenor of it is rightly conveyed by Mr. Thompson. We do not mean to say that Mr. Thompson has deliberately misrepresented Mr. Kennan, but he has read him with prejudice, and his prejudice has imparted to Mr. Kennan's picture a coloring which is totally foreign to it.

But whether Mr. Kennan is or is not the "eye-witness" particularly referred to, he is an eye-witness, and as his report covers precisely the points made by Mr. Thompson, it is entirely pertinent to the present purpose. His visit to Tolstói was made in June, 1886, at the count's estate in Central Russia. The narrative of it is as circumstantial as a photograph, and extremely interesting. To us it is fascinating. It sets Tolstói in a singular light, certainly, but in by no means a disagreeable one. The picture of his daughter in her gay peasant costume, going forth, apparently at her own pleasure, to join the hay-rakers in the fields, is a pretty one: many an American girl might well follow her example. There can be no question that the life betokened in that picture is far healthier and wholesomer than that pursued by the "girl of the period." In Tolstói's sitting down after dinner to cobble his shoes, as depicted by Mr. Kennan, there is nothing to justify the harsh construction put upon it by Mr. Thompson, nor in his going out to spread manure on the farm lands of a poor widow near by, a lowly service which seems to have escaped our critic's search for the undignified and the unworthy.

With regard to the third point, namely, the extreme to which Tolstói would carry the doctrine of non-resistance to evil, Mr. Thompson's reference is evidently to a girl whose case was discussed by Mr. Kennan and Tolstói in their interview. This girl had been exiled to Siberia. On arriving at her destination she was required to change her ordinary clothes for the convict garb. This she refused to do, on the ground that she had not been required to change them on her departure from home, and because the convict garb was dirty and repulsive. Whereupon she was ordered to be stripped by the soldiers, and change of clothing made by force. Unquestionably it was a brutal order, brutally executed; but we leave it to the dispassionate reader to decide whether it would not have been better for the girl, under the circumstances, had she been a pupil of Tolstói and acted accordingly. We think it would.

The whole impression of Tolstói obtained by means of the interview was that of "deep, earnest sincerity." "His theories of life and conduct," says Mr. Kennan, "seemed to me nobly, generously, and heroically wrong, but for the man himself I had, and could have, only the warmest respect and esteem." This is a very different judgment from that offered by Mr. Thompson, and we must repeat that it seems to us much the more reasonable of the two.

As for Tolstói's "theories of life and conduct," we make bold to say that it will be a bright and blessed day for human society when some of them are adopted.

AMERICAN VS. EUROPEAN TRAVEL.

THE question between American and European travel has been rather peremptorily settled in one of the new books reviewed this week, in favor of the American side. But it is not so easily to be settled to the satisfaction of all of us. There are some who will feel that making all allowance for patriotic sentiments and national pride, and for the real intrinsic values of American scenery, especially in the far West, the attractions of the old world still outweigh those of the new, and that while filial duty certainly requires us to know our own land, at least to survey it once, the quest of the truest profit and pleasure may amply justify us in making our remaining journeys to the lands beyond the sea.

Whether it is the geographical distance, or the intervening ocean, or the historical antiquity, or the quaintness and picturesqueness of what is merely foreign, or the associations of tradition and romance, or the venerable architecture of the cities, or the ancient treasures of art, or all of these put together, certain it is that Europe has attractions for the traveler which for many of us our own land can never equal.

There is one other consideration, homely enough, to be sure, but highly practical and pertinent, which must have great weight on the same side of the question, and that is the relative inexpensiveness of European travel as compared with American. With the wealthy this circumstance of course will have little or no account, but with professional men, with all whose intellectual life has kept their sensibilities sharpened to the utmost at the same time that it has (as in most cases) narrowed their portion of this world's goods, the difference between $400 and three months for Europe and $600 and two months for America must be the determining difference in favor of Europe. The Yellowstone Park is doubtless curious if not wonderful, but the money which the Yellowstone Park will cost will go twice as far if used the other side of the water. You can make the voyage to Antwerp and back, under the most comfortable conditions, for less than you can travel with equal comfort one way across the continent; and when you are once in Europe you can live at the same expenditure two days for every one in California or Colorado.

As long as these things are so, to say nothing of the loveliness of England, the wildness of Scotland, the gaieties of Paris, the glories of Switzerland, and the music of Vienna, the greater current of travel will roll in the latter direction.

THE NEWBERRY LIBRARY.

THE Newberry Library in Chicago, of whose prospects we find an interesting account in a late number of the Dial, is likely to give that city a new claim to distinction, and to become one of the leading libraries of the country. Mr. Walter L. Newberry, whose munificent bequest is the foundation of it, died at sea in 1868, leaving a fortune of upwards of $4,000,000 which he had accumulated by judicious investments in real estate, he having come to Chicago when it had a population of but about 10,000. Half of his property went to the descendants of his brothers and sisters; the other half, on the death of his two unmarried daughters and his widow, "to the founding of a free public library, to be located in that portion of the city of Chicago known as the North Division." The library fund, which is in the hands of trustees, amounted a year and a half ago to more than $2,000,000, and its present rate of increase can be easily calculated. After the purchase of the site, which has been already determined upon, the income only can be used for the building up of the library, but with an income, say, of five per cent on two millions of dollars, great things can be accomplished.

It is understood that the library will be made one of reference, thus avoiding competition with the present Public Library, and developing a special function which may become one of immense value. Mr. W. F. Poole is to be in charge, and has already entered on his duties. The Dial says that the plans for the building will be shaped with deliberation, but that "the work of accumulating and arranging the books will be begun at once in temporary quarters."

TOLSTOI.

AT the time that I uttered the address from which you quoted in the Literary World of the 23d July, I had not read Mr. Howells's introduction to Tolstoi's Sebastopol. You like Mr. Howells's temper and judgment better than mine. You may be right. I had the temper of my opinion, and this I put into my address. I do not know how it would be with you in Boston, but in Indiana if I should go to the home of a man whose estate is worth some hundreds of thousands, and should find that he had sent his daughter into the corn-field to plow beside his field-hands, and this rich man should meet me at the door clad like a hermit, should sit down with me and expound to me his doctrine of absolute non-resistance to evil, going to the extent even of saying that a man ought not to defend his wife or his daughter from the brutality of the vilest ruffian and under the worst stress of human danger; and if then, to cap the climax, this rich man should presently say to me, "Well, I must get to work," and should fetch out a shoemaker's kit and begin pegging away at a shoe, I should deem him a "crank" and should not be slow to say so. You and I know that such a man is just as much a "crank" in Russia as in America.

Now you say that I look at only the "externals of his (Tolstoi's) life and performance." I look at the externals of any man's life and performance in order to judge of his inner purposes and doings. If a man's external life and performance are those of a lunatic, I suspect him of lunacy. The description I gave of Tolstoi's treatment of his daughter was from the story of an eye-witness. I take it that what we teach our daughters we make them do, therefore it is brutal for a rich man to teach his spairs. Our kind and genial novelist uses despair in a Pickwickian sense. He will not wholly despair when I say that Tolstoi is a pessimist. The greatest enemy to the human race is the man of mighty influence who tries to drag the world back to that low level from which education, commerce, wealth and religion have lifted it up. Our wives and daughters mere machines, our men hermits and theorists! But Mr. Howells interprets Tolstoi's inner meaning to be: "Daily, hourly self-renunciation, self-abasement, the sinking of one's pride in absolute squalor before duty." That has a fine ring; but what is duty? Is it to have great wealth and keep it while you preach all this self-renunciation and stuff? I dream that the 19th century has a better religion than any realistic theory, better than any materialistic formula, the religion of progress, the religion of education, and the religion of faith in God and in the right of every man to own and to enjoy what is his, and then the religion of charity with money as well as with words. "Self-abasement, the sinking of one's pride in absolute squalor before duty," means nothing if it sends a man's daughter into the field when her father is rich, and keeps him in the house talking philosophy and playing at shoe-cobbling.

It has been said upon very good authority that "truth is mighty and will prevail." Tolstoi and Mr. Howells would modify the sentence to read: "Truth is little," etc.; they look at individuals instead of at society. But individuals make the world. Yes, but we do commerce on the ocean, not on a drop of water. The greatest good to the greatest number is the spirit of true life. All this hacking at wealth and all this apostrophizing of poverty is not in the spirit of Christ; it is in the spirit of communism, socialism and anarchy, under whose heels all Christianity would be ground into powder.

This realism, which is not the realism that Mr. Gilder calls the discovery of life, is a rediscovery of death. I believe in realism, I believe in truth in art, but all this conscious posing of this conscious posing of so-called realism in front of itself as before a looking-glass is a bit too realistic for a modest person.

As for Tolstoi's greatness I am inclined to measure it by the rule: greatness is as greatness does. That he has written some powerful but distempered pictures of life I admit. What I do not admit is that he is a great novelist or a great philosopher. He once contemplated suicide, a thing quite in keeping with the rest of his contemplations and acted upon about as faithfully. I shall not despair, however, even if many people conclude that Tolstoi is a great man. I am will-

FROM HARPER'S WEEKLY.

DR. WILLIAM J. ROLFE.

Copyright, 1887, by Harper & Brothers.

Taking advantage of the absence in Europe of our Shakespearian editor, Dr. Rolfe, we are enabled by the courtesy of Harper & Brothers to present our readers with an excellent portrait of that gentleman, as recently published in Harper's Weekly. It is a good likeness. And we are sure that all the many readers of our department of "Shakespeariana," now temporarily suspended, will find new interest and pleasure in it from the acquaintance thus afforded with the countenance of its accomplished manager.

daughter that it is her duty to work in the field and thus influence her to become a mere plow-boy.

I said that Tolstoi's shoemaking hobby is a device to attract notice to himself. The whole of the circumstances show that this is so. If he is really as much interested in making shoes for the poor as he lets on to be he has ample means to set up a factory. He might at least wait till a visitor goes away before getting out his cobbling tools.

Mr. Howells says that when some one tells him that Tolstoi's works are pessimistic he really de-ing to concede room in the world for several kinds of greatness; but I may be permitted to add the hope that America at least will not feel bound to remodel itself in accordance with the Tolstói plan in order to be up to the latest Russian discovery in art, morals, and Christianity. Let us have international copyright first.

MAURICE THOMPSON.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Aug. 6, 1887.

TOLSTOÏ'S CONFESSION AND CREED.*

TWO distinct writings are bound up in this 16mo of 242 pages, one supplementary to the other. To what we have already learned from Tolstói's My Religion of his views of Christianity they do not materially add, and they are less interesting, perhaps, than that remarkable book, because now no longer novel; while yet they follow out further some of the lines laid down therein. To those who are still strangers to the Russian author's way of thinking on religious matters they will furnish a sufficient introduction; for his intellectual acquaintances they will supply confirmation of the judgment previously formed. We find nothing in the book to justify the belief that Tolstói is either mad, a fanatic, or a fool; on the contrary he seems to us to be a sincere man, an earnest man, a man who has passed through a very real and singular spiritual experience, and a man who has grasped in an uncommon degree some secrets of Christ and Christianity. That to some extent he sees through a glass darkly we can readily admit. What else is to be expected of a man brought up as he has been and environed as he now is? That he should fall into some exaggerations and extravagances we are prepared to expect, but that he knows what he is talking about and has definite ideas and purposes as to truth and duty, no one can justly question.

The first portion of the book, "My Confession," occupies 142 of its pages, and is a strictly subjective narrative in sixteen chapters of the changes by which Tolstói reached his present position. So far as his outward life is concerned, to read it is like riding through the snow sheds over the Sierras, with only a rift here and there through which to catch a hasty glimpse of the external scenery along the way. Tolstói was brought up, he tells us, in the faith of the Orthodox Greek Church, but by the time he was eighteen, when he quitted the University, he had parted with all belief in what he had been taught from childhood. He relates how he learned in his twelfth year, from a pupil of the gymnasium, that "there was no God." Voltaire, whom he early read, amused without disgusting him. From the age of sixteen he abandoned both private and public religious duties. The current of life around him set steadily against all his better impulses and desires. He gave way to his passions:

I put men to death in war, I fought duels to slay others, I lost at cards, wasted my substance wrung from the sweat of peasants, punished the latter cruelly, rioted with loose women, and deceived men. Lying, robbery, adultery of all kinds, drunkenness, violence, and murder, all committed by me, not one crime omitted, and yet I was not the less considered by my equals a comparatively moral man. Such was my life during ten years.

During this time he had begun to write, and had "met with a hearty reception and much flattery." He went abroad, and returning with Western ideas, settled in the country and began to occupy himself with organizing schools for the peasantry. All this while his god was "progress." Then he married, and his life began to center in his family. Five years ago his mind entered on a strange passage:

I had moments of perplexity, of a stoppage, as it were, of life, as if I did not know how I was to live, what I was to do. I began to wander, and was a victim to low spirits. This, however, passed, and I continued to live as before. Later, these periods of perplexity grew more and more frequent, and invariably took the same form. During their continuance the same questions always presented themselves to me: "Why?" and "What after?"

This was the beginning of that long solicitous process of inquiry which has brought Tolstói out on the high level of the Sermon on the Mount, to a recognition of the Christ in Jesus of Nazareth, and to an acceptance of Christ's Christianity. We say "Christ's Christianity" with a distinct intention, for it is a fundamental point of the profound belief which has displeased Tolstói's former skepticism that the Christianity of Christ and the Christianity of the Church are two different systems. The lines of this difference are clearly brought out in the second of the writings in this book, "The Spirit of Christ's Teaching."

What follows of the "Confession" consists largely of Tolstói's intellectual struggle with the problem of life. What is life? How are we to meet it? What are we to do with it? What is it good for? Taking a broad survey (remember, his standpoint was Russia) it seemed to him—life—a terrible state to be in. There were four ways of escape—ignorance, pleasure, suicide, submission. For a long time these were all he could find, and he was sometimes so oppressed with the burden of his condition as to be tempted to kill himself.

In this trying situation of spiritual darkness he began to study: first Buddhism, and then Mahometanism, and then came back to Christianity, as he saw it in its writings and in the lives of its professors. Between these writings and these professors he found disagreements. But beginning to look more closely into the lives and the doctrines of the common people, he says, the more I studied the more I became convinced that a true faith was among them, that their faith was for them a necessary thing, and alone gave them a meaning in life and a possibility of living. . . . I looked more carefully and more widely around me, I studied the lives of the past and contemporary masses of humanity, and I saw that not two or three, not ten or a hundred, but thousands and millions had so understood the meaning of life that they were able both to live and die. . . . I began to grow attached to these men. . . . I lived in this way during two years, and then there came a change which had long been preparing in me, and the symptoms of which I had always dimly felt; the life of my own circle of rich and learned men not only became repulsive, but lost all meaning whatever.

This was the bottom rung of the ladder of faith on which Tolstói began to climb up into the light. And that he has found what to him is light must be perfectly plain to any one who will go on through the pages that follow. It may be all darkness to the reader, but it is light to Tolstói. He paused for a time amidst the formalities and the ceremonials of the Orthodox Church, and his experiences with them and final emergence are recounted in the last three chapters of the "Confession."

"The Spirit of Christ's Teaching," which follows, is a terse, epigrammatic exposition of the Gospel, as Tolstói has been led to understand it, "extracted from a larger work which cannot be published in Russia." This "larger work" is in four parts, of which the third furnishes the present extract. It is an attempt, independently of all previous interpretations, to set forth the teachings of Christ as given in the Gospels harmonized. The writing is in twelve chapters, and these are articulated to the several petitions of the Lord's Prayer, which the author feels to be "nothing less than the whole teaching of Christ, expressed in the most condensed form." The method of this interpretation, and the import and spirit of it, will best be indicated by extracts:

What I see in Christianity is not an exclusively divine revelation, nor a mere historical phenomenon, but a teaching which gives the meaning of life.

To me now the chief matter is, not whether Jesus Christ was God, upon whom descended the Holy Ghost, or where and by whom was a certain Gospel written, or if it may not even be attributed to Christ; but the light itself is of importance to me, that it still shines upon me after eighteen hundred years with undimmed brightness; but how to call it, or of what it consists, or who gave it existence, is immaterial to me.

In order to fulfill the will of the Father, which gives life and happiness to all men, we must fulfill five commandments. The first commandment—To offend no one, and by no act to excite evil in others, for out of evil comes evil. The second commandment—To be in all things chaste, and not to quit the wife whom we have taken; for the abandoning of wives and the changing of them is the cause of all loose living in the world. The third commandment—Never to take an oath, because we can promise nothing, for man is altogether in the hands of the Father, and oaths are imposed for wicked ends. The fourth commandment—Not to resist evil, to bear with offenses, and to do yet more than is demanded of us; neither to judge nor to go to law, for every man is himself full of faults and cannot teach. By seeking revenge men only teach others to do the same. The fifth commandment—To make no distinction between our own countrymen and foreigners, for all men are the children of one Father.

The only real business of life is the announcement of the will of the Father, attention to it, and fulfillment of it.

* My Confession and the Spirit of Christ's Teaching. By Count Lyof N. Tolstói. Translated from the Russian. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00.

It is impossible to fulfill the will of the Father if thou hast goods which thou givest not to others.

Every one may fulfill the will of the Father, but by doing so no one becomes superior to, or better than, another.

The kingdom of Heaven is only possible where there is forgiveness.

If the spirit of true religion, as taught by Jesus Christ, is not to be found in such words as these, so far as they go, we do not know where it is to be found. The Sermon on the Mount, if it means what it says, is translated in these pages. Tolstoi may yet only see men as trees walking, but his eyes have certainly been opened. A man can write as he writes in this book and be mistaken; but no man can so write and be insincere or demented, unless all religion is hypocrisy and dementia. We are more inclined than ever, after reading this book, to believe that "the Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," the "true Light," has fallen on this once misguided man buried in the shadows of the Russian night.

A GAME OF CHANCE.*

A REVIEWER endowed with an ordinary share of human nature is as likely to be elated over the discovery of a new and real novelist as an editor over a new contributor or an astronomer over a new star. Mrs. Coombs is not exactly new, since A Game of Chance is her second book; but if we have read it and its predecessor, As Common Mortals, aright, she is real, and we have in her a noticeable accession to the ranks of American story-writers. Her powers are only in training as yet, but they are there; she makes mistakes, but they are mistakes of detail. Her abilities are many and varied. Her style is strong, suggests reserved force, and at the same time displays great delicacy of touch. The book before us has throughout that atmosphere so hard to describe but so readily perceived the moment we enter it, which characterizes all higher ranges of composition.

A Game of Chance is a sad story. It is full of the unhappiness of misdirected human life. We are not sure whether the true interpretation of its title is furnished by the turn at stock speculation which proves to be Sidney Lothrop's ruin, or by that larger and remoter aspect which some lives take on when viewed apart from the light of faith. There is no religion in the book, no submission, patience, or courage, and little of love except of the brutal, passionate, and selfish order. The sun rises clearly and the day opens brightly, but the clouds soon gather, and when night falls it is without a ray of hope on the horizon. There are signs in this book of an authorship tempered by adverse experience; the power in it is either a power born of suffering or one that comes of rare endowment. With a cheerful subject, with upright hearts and noble lives, with prosperity and joy to deal with, what might not Mrs. Coombs accomplish for our pleasure!

The opening scenes of the novel are laid at Nineveh, a humble village on beautiful Long Island, changing later for a time to New York City. A pretty picture of Nineveh is set before the reader, and in the cottage described as follows the story begins:

The house was a two-story cottage, with a pointed roof, in color a dingy cream, with much scroll-saw ornamentation in brown about the doors and windows. The paint was peeling off in great flakes. A riot of untrimmed vines overran the crazy lattice of the forlorn piazza, some of them holding in their lusty grasp others brown, withered, dead long ago, but seized upon and held upright by the lavish growth of newer green. The grass on the small lawn before the house was tall, coarse, and rank. Some lofty spikes had pushed their way through the crevices in the crumbling seat of a pitiable rustic chair, still holding itself up in distorted jauntiness on its shambling legs, in a travesty of sylvan decoration. Shades, once white, now deeply yellow and streaked with brown, protected the curtainless windows of the house from within. The whole expression of the place was hopeless, ambitionless; inhabited, yet deserted by all the aspirations which make of a house a home.

This forlorn, run-down cottage is the home of the forlorn and run-down Melrose family, and Mr. and Mrs. Melrose, their daughter Barbara, Oswald Creagh, a Ninevite, and Sidney Lothrop, a visitor from the city, are the only characters of importance in the story. A minor place is filled by Wainwright, a young New York broker. It is seldom that the current of novels brings us a work whose characters are so skillfully and effectively individualized as these five or six. Not one of them is wholly to be admired or loved, most if not all of them are to be blamed and pitied; but they are extremely well done. Mr. Melrose is almost as good as Jefferson's "Rip Van Winkle"—an inebriate, an amiable, good-natured, good-for-nothing, weak, helpless creature, whose pet name, "Charley," used by daughter as well as wife, betokens the commiserate kindness with which everybody regards him. Mrs. Melrose is the disappointed, worn-out, heart-broken, hopeless wife and mother, embittered toward the world by her failure in it, yet loving her husband to the end. Barbara, the daughter, cool-headed, high-spirited, brave, and beautiful, shows to better advantage at the beginning than at the end, when, under the pressure of adversity, she hardens into coldness and cruelty. This degeneration in Barbara is one of the painful features of the story. Could she not have been chastened into a perfect loveliness? Oswald Creagh is a great, strong, coarse animal, who at first awakens our distrust, then rouses our dislike, and finally compels our disgust. Sidney Lothrop, with his noble English lineage, his aimlessness, his genuine love for Barbara, and his abuse of that love, has the reader's sympathy from the outset, and scarcely forfeits it, notwithstanding the faults and the errors which carry him to his grave. Wainwright, the young broker, with his happy-go-lucky manner, his talk of "the street," and his fondness for his old gray mother, is most cleverly sketched.

The story is a succession of striking scenes. There is the borrowing of Os Creagh's boat by Lothrop, when the two young men are made to stand over against each other in telling contrast; there is tipsy Charley coming home to be petted by wife and daughter; there are the first sweet interviews between Sidney and Barbara; there is Charley gambling away his few remaining pennies with the disreputable Bill Hancox, and the last sad scene when the poor old fellow "rose up from the great game of chance called life, and went away, beaten;" there are the first passages of disagreement and distrust between Sidney and Barbara, and Sidney's slow, furtive, but sure surrender to the fascinating perils of speculation in the hopes of mending his broken fortunes; there is the final rupture between the two who might have been so happy together; there is the closing saddest scene of all, in which Creagh scoops up his spoil.

No, there is no happiness in the book; everybody is cheated out of it or loses it, through his or her own fault or the fault of others; but the story of it all is told with a power whose impression it is hard to resist, and the lesson of it all cannot be easily mistaken.

With reference to a boating incident on p. 63 Mrs. Coombs should know in these yachting days that a skipper does not commonly "reef" his sails under conditions that allow him to "lay back in his boat, idly drifting over the dancing water;" also that, in actual fact, a wife could not be kept in ignorance, as Barbara is in Chapter XI, of her husband's sale of his real estate, inasmuch as a wife's signature is needed to the deeds executing such a sale, in surrender of her rights of dower. The book is disfigured by one or two bad misprints, such as "comprehension" for comprehension on p. 126. And what is the meaning of this sentence on p. 119? "his slower mind of laboring painfully after her."

People who want pleasant reading will not like A Game of Chance, because of its miseries; but for plan, for artistic form, for grace of composition, for analysis, for portraiture, for pathos, and for telling delineation of lives of selfishness and the sorrows they bring, it is a composition considerably above the average.

— In view of the centennial of the American Constitution in September, special interest attaches to an article which will appear in Scribner's Magazine for that month, relating to "An Unpublished Draft of a National Constitution by Edmund Randolph, Found among the Papers of George Mason," which recently came into the possession of Moncure D. Conway in the course of his extended researches while preparing a life of Randolph. An essay by Professor George T. Ladd on "The Development of the American University," in the same number, will present a more thorough discussion of that question than has yet appeared.

* A Game of Chance. By Anne Sheldon Coombs. D. Appleton & Co. $1.00.

MINOR FICTION.

To Call her Mine. By Walter Besant. [Harper & Bros. 20c.] Mr. Besant is always entertaining. His humor is unfailing; he knows life as it is and does not take it too seriously; his villains are always punished, his good people are invariably rewarded, his girl heroines never cease to charm, he has a masterly way at description, and he is overflowing with sage counsel. All these qualities are found in To Call her Mine. David Leighan, having been done out of his property by a miserly uncle, knocks that avaricious relative from his pony and leaves him for dead by the wayside. To elude suspicion he takes a box of papers and some money from the body, hides them, and sails for Australia. He is wrecked on the coast of New Ireland and rescued from the natives by a German entomologist, Baron Sergius van Holstein. David is haunted by his uncle's ghost, and his groans at night disturb the baron, who ships his comrade for England. When David gets home with the intention of confessing his crime and accepting his fate he finds his uncle alive, and learns that among the papers he has hidden are coupons payable to bearer to the amount of £3,000. So he devises the scheme of selling them back to his uncle piecemeal, and the daily torture thus inflicted is balm to his wicked soul. Meanwhile his uncle's ward, Mary Nethercote, and her lover, George Sidcote, are concerned in the story, which takes place for the most part among the secluded hills and picturesque scenery of a little Devonshire village. At the crucial moment the baron (to whom David has made full confession) appears as deus ex machina, and the heart of the reader is gladdened by the gloomy exit of David and the happiness of bonny Mary.

Wallingford. A Story of American Life. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25.] There is a youthfulness not always refreshing in Wallingford. One of the leading characters is Burt Sheldon, who gives up his clerkship in a Philadelphia suburb and goes to New York to study medicine. He is falsely accused of murder and only escapes hanging by a narrow chance. At Bellevue he encounters William Bellows, a fellow student, who chats in this wise:

There's lots of fun if you know how to get it. Last month ambulance brought in a case shot in leg at a river dive; faculty all out; boys had never amped anything but a stiff, and wanted to tackle the real thing. We anesthetized him and took off his leg in a jiffy. He came to—and wrong leg, bless your buttons! Had to be done over; so we had two amps instead of one. Course the man died, so we fired him up stairs quicker than lightning, as we were short of material anyhow.

Windom Travers, a young civil engineer, is another character. He is in love with Ruby Fuller, who constantly begs him to "get religion." When the two quarrel it is after this manner:

"You were most entertaining tonight. I never saw you so absolutely hateful in all my life before."

"You girls are infernal gabs; do nothing but gossip. . . . One thing certain, I won't see any such cattle as I did tonight. I don't know about you either. You are not particularly accomplished or brilliant."

"You had better go to your dear Helen—she's all you desire, and I am sure I won't suffer for your loss."

If Wallingford is, as it purports to be, "a story of American life," the author has enjoyed advantages for observation denied to most of us—a privilege which we are not disposed to envy.

Norwood; or, Village Life in New England. By Henry Ward Beecher. [Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25.] A new edition of Norwood was justified by the intrinsic merit of that admirable book. When Mr. Beecher first placed it in the hands of the original publishers, he remarked that he had tried to make it to be as good twenty years hence as it was then. The twenty years have gone by and the expectation has been fulfilled. Norwood is still a book to be read with interest, and it will always be referred to by those who would know what village life really was in New England in the middle of the nineteenth century. As a novel Norwood makes no special claim to attention. Its author was a shrewd observer of men, he knew them through and through, but he lacked the synthetic power by which alone a character is embodied and made permanent. Yet the men and women who figure in the narrative are not wholly lay figures. They are in the main consistent, and they say wise and witty things. Their sayings, the inimitable descriptions of scenery, and the sharp arrows shot at the follies of the time are enough to bring Norwood forth from the obscure shelf and afford enjoyment to an occasional reader when twenty years more are gone. As we run through the pages we come upon this capital hit:

There is one big fellow here whom I found sitting before a most charming view, busily at work painting a board fence, with a pig-weed growing by it, and talking about conscience, and painting only "what he sees." He has been working a week, and several knot-holes are yet to be painted in the fence. I looked over his sketches last night. He has one toad, a clump of plantain leaves, a pile of wood, and a heap of stones. I asked him why he selected such subjects. He said that "there could be no true success without humility. An artist must paint what he sees. Nothing in nature is to be despised. He should begin at the bottom and work his way up. It is man's arrogance and egotism that lead him to disdain these lower forms of existence. A conscientious artist, if humble, would not select only the garish things of nature, but stoop to her lowliest creatures." I replied, "Art is not, like science, to investigate and register all natural objects and phenomena. It attempts to work out its end solely by the use of the beautiful, and the artist is to select only such things as are beautiful." But he would not listen. And so I recommended him to try an ant-hill next, and if he succeeded, to advance to a potato field.

The Buchholz Family. Second Part. Sketches of Berlin Life. By Julius Stinde. Translated by L. Dora Schmitz. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.] This second part of the fictitious memoirs of the amiable Frau Wilhelmine Buchholz is perhaps not equal to the first in point of sustained humor, but it is a delightful volume, and like its predecessor a complete revelation of middle class German life. Frau Buchholz here discusses many topics—the education of her daughter, domestic art, fashionable society, her son-in-law—and of all she is made to speak with delicious artlessness. Now and then, it is true, Dr. Stinde sharpens his shafts of satire somewhat too keenly and destroys the illusion. Nothing could be better than the good frau's sayings that "we make most of our experiences without knowing it at the time, and it is only later we find out whether the occurrence was an experience or not;" or that "the essence of art consists in an artist always dipping into the right colors." But in her conversation with the poetaster Leuenfels the artlessness turns to very keen irony. However, it is all amusing reading and carries no ineradicable sting. Dr. Stinde laughs good-naturedly at the innocent follies of his characters and shows us the good that underlies their simplicity or conceit. There is no touch of coarseness in the book, which leaves behind it only an impression of decided pleasure; and each one of these sketches bears the manifest stamp of actuality. Nothing so genuine and so good has come to us from the German for many a day.

Aunt Hepry's Foundling. By Mrs. Leith Adams. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] The scene of this story is laid in a New Brunswick village, of which the author writes as an observer but not as one to the manner born. It is not possible, for instance, that after long continued freezing weather a thaw in midwinter should so weaken the ice on the river in two or three hours that a man should break through. The descriptions of scenery also strike us as unreal. The foundling is Jeva Reed, who in early womanhood is a beautiful creature with a "supple waist," "brown locks . . . coiled close on the nape of her neck," and "a pair of lustrous, dreamy eyes." Captain Christopher Glynn and Lieutenant Val Brabazon, two English officers, come to the little village on a fishing excursion. Captain Glynn is tall, dark, and handsome. He meets Jeva and soon declares his love for her, although he is already betrothed to another. The lieutenant acts as mentor and induces the captain to go away, thereby nearly breaking Jeva's heart. The captain marries after a time, is exceedingly unhappy, and dies on the battle field. Jeva, at the close of the book, is in a fair way to marry her child friend Walter Trevenick, who has taken a "first" at Oxford. There is a diversity of characters in the story and most of them are well done. The narrative style is affected and labored. The atmosphere is more English than American. Yet the book is, on the whole, elevated in tone and doubtless will please a good many readers.

The Bag of Diamonds. By George Manville Fenn. [D. Appleton & Co. 25c.] Mr. Fenn is not at his best in The Bag of Diamonds. The story is concerned with a London doctor, who has come to the verge of ruin by his search for the elixir of life. To his house one foggy night comes Mark Heath, who has been for two years in South Africa, and who tells a wild story of diamonds which he bears in a bag upon his person, and of his pursuit by robbers who are even then on his track. The doctor administers a soothing potion, and while Mark is sleeping three men arrive at the surgery, demanding help for one of their number. The doctor in the course of an examination is knocked senseless, one of the intruders drinks poisoned brandy and falls dead, and the other two take the half-conscious Mark away with them. Mark awakes to find himself in a hospital. The police can get no trace of the men or of the diamonds. One day the doctor's office boy discovers a leather bag stuffed into a jar of anatomical specimens. It is cut open, and behold the diamonds! "It had been the doctor's last act before he admitted his assailants." And yet, just before the account of the assault we are told that the doctor "hastily retied the bag and placed it back in the sleeping man's breast." The whole plot is a clumsy contrivance and unworthy the author's reputation.

Tales Before Supper. From Théophile Gautier and Prosper Mérimée. Told in English by Myndast Verelst, and delayed with a proem by Edgar Saltus. [Brentano. Paper, 50c. Cloth, $1.25.] These tales are two, one "Avatar" by Gautier, the other "The Venus of Ille" by Mérimée, both of which treat of the supernatural. In the first, by far the longer, the souls are made to change places in the bodies of a young man and the husband of the woman he loves, and among other curious complications resulting thereby they are left to fight a duel, each knowing that if he kills the other he kills his own body. It is an odd story and not at all in a humorous vein, as one might suppose from this taste of it. The Venus of Ille is a heathen goddess in copper. A young man, engaging in a game of some sort, is inconvenienced by his engagement ring, which he slips on the finger of this goddess, and when he tries to remove it, it will not come off. That night, his wedding night, he is found dead in his bed with a mark around his body as if he had been hugged to death. The proem or introduction is a critical sketch of both authors. Mr. Saltus says:

No one will in all probability be able to write so richly as Gautier, but in Mérimée's stories may be discerned the model of the modern novel. . . . Gautier was the torch of an epoch, Mérimée the rapier."

Four "Franklin Squares."

"V. R." [Franklin Square Library. Harper and Brothers. 15c.]

Amor Vincit. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. [Do. Do. 20c.]

A Lost Reputation. [Do. Do. 15c.]

Jacobi's Wife. By Adeline Sergeant. [Do. Do. 20c.]

"V. R." signifies Victoria Regent; it also stands for Viola Rydal, who with her father has just arrived at an inn in an out of the way town in England. The country people mistake her for the queen, who at that time (1837) had just assumed the throne. From this mistake complications arise. The literary result is a rather commonplace story without much point. It reminds one of the stories in New England country newspapers.

Amor Vincit relates the loves of Lois Stanley, who turns out to be a daughter of Lord Something-or-other, and Allan Moore, from the time when they met, aged five and six years respectively, and agree to marry later, till the two reach the more fitting ages of twenty-three or four, and become one. Nothing special happens in the course of these years, but everything works to the end in as satisfactory a manner as one might hope for.

The reputation in A Lost Reputation is that of Graham Murray, who is falsely accused of cheating at cards. His father sends him to America, where he wanders around, leads a reckless life under assumed names, finally goes on a scientific expedition to South America with a doctor who is preparing a book, is persuaded against his will to go to London on business connected with this book, is recognized by the daughter of one of his father's neighbors, with whom he falls in love, and a reconciliation with his father follows, whereby he takes his real name and goes to dwell on his estates in Scotland. He still considers his reputation irrevocably lost, however. The author of this book seems to have had an idea at first, but lost it before he finished. The main result is unsatisfactory, though some parts of the story are good, particularly that describing Graham's life in America.

In Miss Sergeant's story, Jacobi's Wife, Sir Wilfred Vanborough sends fifty pounds in a letter to a charitable society. Gilbert, his younger son, opens the letter, sends on five pounds, and keeps the rest. The guilt of this theft is fixed on Geoffrey, Gilbert's older brother, who says nothing in his defense, but allows himself to be banished from home because of his affection for Gilbert and his lovely young wife. Geoffrey has a sister who is engaged to one of his friends, and because this friend will not believe in his guilt, but goes to South America with him, Sir Wilfred breaks off the engagement and tries to marry her to Jacobi, a rascal who has wormed himself into the old man's favor. From this plot is evolved one of the most clever and interesting stories that we have read for some time. It is worked out in an original and refreshing manner, and will hold most readers' attention to the end.

MINOR NOTICES.

Was Shakespeare Shapleigh? A Correspondence in Two Entanglements. The whole edited by Mr. Justin Winsor, Librarian of Harvard College. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 75c.] This rather clever jeu d'esprit aims to show that William Shakespeare might have been Sir William Shapleigh of Northamptonshire. The means of identification are an old family portrait marked W. Sh., which is the very picture of Shakespeare himself, and the mask of Kesselstadt, which is interpreted to be the same as Kennelton. The fortunes and the travels of Shapleighs and Kenneltons are tracked out with much ingenuity, but we must confess that this sort of thing, however well done, is rather tiresome now. The game is hardly worth the candle.

The Story of the Earth and Man. By Sir J. W. Dawson, LL.D. [Harper & Bros. $1.50.] Principal Dawson's popular account of the origin of the earth and mankind was first published in 1873; it now appears in a ninth edition, with some corrections and additions and a few new notes. By his former general statements and conclusions the conservative author still abides, "having seen no valid reason to depart from any of them." In this respect Principal Dawson differs, and not to his credit, from many men of ripe age, who in the last fourteen years have quite seriously modified their unfavorable ideas of the doctrine of evolution. When thoroughly religious and highly able thinkers like Rev. Dr. Munger, for instance, to name but one out of many, welcome evolution and try to set forth a just interpretation of it from the spiritual standpoint, it seems rather late in the day for Principal Dawson to affirm that "evolution as a hypothesis has no basis in experience or in scientific fact," and to expound Genesis in a manner quite antiquated among serious students of the Old Testament. The Story of the Earth and Man is, then, mainly a curiosity so far as man is concerned; the larger portion concerning the earth has much more value as an excellent summary of geological history.

The Hidden Way Across the Threshold. Etc., etc., etc. By J. C. Street. [Lee & Shepard. $3.50.] Mr. Street bears the honorary title of "A. B. N.," and inscribes himself as "Fellow of the Order S. S. S. and of the Brotherhood 2. 2. R. R. 2. 2." His book is dedicated "To the Count A. de G., Hierophant of the Order S. S. S." There are eighteen lines of text on the title-page, besides a vignette of mysterious device, which may be the seal of the "Order S. S. S." For a frontispiece we have a picture of "The Oracle of Delphi," combining what looks like a circus tent, a Jewish altar, and a group of thirteen or fourteen Greek figures, in an impressive stage-like scene. The several other illustrations scattered through the book contain numerous sacred symbols and their interpretations. These are features of a solid octavo of nearly 600 pages, and it makes a pretty formidable object for a reviewer of ordinary capacity to grapple with. Mr. Street appears to be what is called a "spiritualist," who, while most of us are compelled to live in one world, has found the secret of living in two, who has passed on beyond all the problems and perplexities which attend human life and beset most minds, and who has grasped the key which unlocks the mystery of the universe. Those can follow him who like; for ourselves we prefer a guide of different countenance and behavior.

Job and Solomon. By the Rev. T. K. Cheyne. [Thomas Whittaker. $2.25.] Dr. Cheyne is Oriel Professor of Interpretation at Oxford. He is also a master in the "new school" of Biblical Criticism. In this volume he applies that criticism to the canonical books of Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes, and to the apocryphal book of Ecclesiasticus. The work is not a commentary, except incidentally, but rather of the nature of a body of prolegomena, or a critical introduction or review. With regard to the book of Job Dr. Cheyne's position is about midway between two extremes. He regards that writing as the poetical treatment of an historical theme, ascribes it to more than one author, and fixes its time somewhere near that of Isaiah. He thinks that William Blake, in his weird drawings, has been its truest interpreter. The Solomonic authorship of the books of Proverbs and Ecclesiastes he wholly rejects. The body of Proverbs is a collection—an anthology; and the first nine chapters are a prefatory addition by a different hand, while Ecclesiastes belongs to a period just before the Christian era, and its author, in calling himself "the son of David" and "King over Israel in Jerusalem," proved himself a fraud. Dr. Cheyne writes with the greatest reverence for the spirit of truth, and in a way to illuminate and illustrate the fact that the Bible is literature.

Taintor Brothers & Co. of New York are the publishers of an extended series of pocket-size paper-covered Guide Books, of which some ten numbers are before us, covering most of the routes of travel in New England, New York, and Pennsylvania, and as far south as Washington. The summer resorts along the coast from the Provinces to Cape May, and the White and Catskill Mountains, are treated with particular attention. These books are cheaply gotten up, but if the reader will not expect to get more out of them than he pays for he will find them worth their cost for railroad and steamboat use. They do not offer themselves for permanent installment on the library shelf, like Osgood's or Baedeker's incomparable volumes. Those are scientific encyclopædias of travel; these are handbooks. They are poorly printed but plentifully illustrated, to say nothing of the pictorial advertisements mixed in with the reading matter and sometimes almost swamping it; and some of the maps, which are very numerous, are really good. The traveling public will find them serviceable directories to the pleasure resorts in our northeastern country.

Mr. Fawcett's last novel, The House at High Bridge, can now be had in the neat covers of Ticknor's "Paper Series." [50c.]

C. H. Kerr & Co. have published a second edition of the Aphorisms of the Three Threes, the little collection of the sayings of a Chicago club, noticed by us some months since. [$1.00.]

The eleventh chapter of the second volume of Mr. Ruskin's Prætorita is a narrative of excursions about Sallanches, a town on the way to Chamouni, and in the valley of Chamouni itself, in 1849, made up of extracts from his diary of the time, with running comments by his present self. Ruskin was then a young man of thirty, just at the threshold of his work; and Mont Blanc was a less familiar object than now. The descriptions of Alpine scenery and sensation are in Mr. Ruskin's marked manner. [John Wiley & Sons.]

PERIODICALS.

A second batch of Mrs. Campbell-Praed's "American Impressions" appear in the August Temple Bar, and are devoted to an Indian summer day in Salem, rummaging around among the associations of Hawthorne and the earlier witches of that historic town, under the guidance of a "Professor" whose passion is for Japanese pottery [Professor Edward S. Morse?] and an "Antiquarian" whose personality we are not able to suggest. As pleasant a paragraph as any in the article is this:

We stopped in one of the old-fashioned streets and picked up the Antiquarian, a most courteous and kindly white-haired gentleman, with a fund of interesting information on matters quaint and out-of-the-way in New England history, and indeed the compiler of some volumes of curious records of Puritan punishments and forgotten crimes. He talked of the witchcraft epidemic, and took us to the house of Roger Williams—the oldest in Salem—where the witches underwent their preliminary examination. We went into the room itself, a dark old-world chamber, now a sort of lumber room behind a druggist's store, with a low ceiling, heavy oaken beams, and ghostlike corners, and with a low wide window and overhanging upper story which carried us back to the days of the Pilgrim fathers. He showed us also the house where Nathaniel Hawthorne was born, and that in which the Peabodys lived, and where the author of The Scarlet Letter wooed his wife—both of them straight-up-and-down wooden buildings, with venetian windows facing the street, and without the picturesque of the early wooden houses or the prettiness of the modern villas, which are gabled, verandahed, and red-shingled. The house in which Hawthorne was born once owned an old door with a knocker that took the fancy of an enterprising American lady in search of relics.

The Antiquarian related mournfully how the lady had laid siege to the proprietor, and had straightway concluded a bargain by virtue of which the old door, with its knocker, became her property, in exchange for a brand-new door manufactured in Salem, and bought for a dollar and a half.

The "books that have helped me," says Mr. Edward Eggleston to the readers of the August Forum, "may not help you," adding the timely caution that "specific directions in reading will hardly be found in such a series of articles as the present, except incidentally." The books particularized by Dr. Eggleston as the friendly helpers of his life are Lindley Murray's "Readers," "Robert Dawson," Miss Edgeworth's tales, especially "Waste Not, Want Not," Jacob Abbott's "Rollo Books" and "red-backed histories," a rambling essay on "The Human Mind," Locke on "The Human Understanding," Irving's "Sketch Book," Lamb's "Essays," Virgil's "Eclogues," "Paradise Lost" and "L'Allegro," Taine's "Art in the Netherlands," Chalmers's "Astronomical Discourses," and "Robert Falconer." The Forum this month has a "live" table of contents, with other articles by Gov. Foraker, Howard Crosby, Professor C. C. Everett, Mr. Mallock, Dr. E. E. Hale, Dr. Deems, Prof. R. T. Ely, et al.

The topics of literature proper treated in the always welcome Andover Review for August are Robert Browning, who is the subject of a thoughtful critical essay by Mr. H. W. Mabie of the Christian Union, and Carlyle, who is the provoking cause of Miss Anna L. Dawes's "Sober After-thoughts on Literature and Character." Miss Dawes believes that a man and his message are to be separated, and that we can receive the message without necessarily adopting the man; in other words that our prophets are not always saints. Mr. Mabie's view of Browning is exceedingly well put, as a mere statement, and in the main we account it judicious and sound. Of course it is appreciative. The theological positions of this magazine are always at the front, without, however, any important change of the historic base of Christian truth. The long editorial on the American Board and its missionary appointments is a cloud of pretty black smoke before the coming Springfield fire.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

BERLIN, August 1, 1887.

I INTENDED to devote the present letter to the ever-increasing movement in the field of new journals and other periodicals, but I must defer carrying out my intention on account of two new books of importance which have just made their appearance simultaneously. I prefer speaking of them, as they are very likely to be of interest to American readers. They ought, and are almost sure, to be translated into English.

A great many German books on China have seen the light in the course of the present century, more than half a dozen within the last eight years. (My humble self has alone contributed two to the number.) American, British, and French works on the Middle Kingdom are even much more numerous. Very few, however, of all this mass of publications deal with Chinese literature in general, and still fewer, almost none, with the Chinese drama and stage in particular. We cannot, therefore, do otherwise than bestow our highest praises on Dr. Rudolf von Gottschall, one of the most eminent poets of our time, for having filled an important gap in literary history and ethnography by writing a volume on The Chinese Stage and Dramatic Literature. Gottschall's "History of German National Literature in the 19th Century," and his comprehensive work on "Poetry," have long been recognized as standard works in their way, and his present book is quite certain to become one immediately wherever it becomes known. It is, in fact, the first and only book treating fully and exhaustively of the subject in question. The author of "Pitt and Fox," "Catherine Howard," and many other successful plays, is entirely at home in his matter, which he shows up in all its bearings. The subject would at first sight seem to be a somewhat dry one for the general reader to be interested in; Gottschall, however, knows how to make it attractive for even the "lightest" of readers. The history of the Chinese drama is given, its origins and sources, its relations to Chinese life are proved, it is grouped into four long and distinct epochs, and divided into half a dozen classes. Masterly analyses of a great many plays are embodied in the volume, and all the best available sources of ethnographical information extensively made use of. The notes on the usages of the contemporary stage are of especial interest.

The other book I have in view is a new volume by Max Nordau, that clever author of the Conventional Lies of Civilization and Paradoxes, now so well known in America. Any new work by this spirited writer is sure to be welcomed with interest, and the present one is far from disappointing the readers' expectations, i. e. those readers who are acquainted with Nordau's literary individuality, with his peculiar ways, his great merits and faults. Nay, in this collection of studies and sketches of life in the "Seine Babel," published under the too modest title of Selected Paris Letters, his most usual and conspicuous faults—unjustified generalization, exaggerated originality of characterization, and paradoxity of views—are less apparent than in any of his previous works. The most profound, at the same time the most exaggerated and attractive, chapter is that on "Franz Liszt and Women," written on the occasion of the celebrated pianist's and composer's last visit to Paris a few months before his death last summer. Full of vigorous invective against Liszt and the women who made an idol of him for several decades—as well as against the age which makes it possible for such an "insignificant" person to be fêted like a great hero—the paper is nevertheless a profound psychological-historical study of importance to every student of modern civilization. Next in interest stand the various chapters on Paris society, such as "Drawing-room Life," "Comedians and Paris Society" (two excellent pieces of biting sarcasm and full of indignation), "Psychology of the Cafés," "The Ragmen," etc. There are some chapters on political economy, a good many on literary topics and currents, etc., etc. Whether Nordau be satirical, or humorous, or descriptive, or indignant, or in any vein whatever, he writes attractively, mostly even engrossingly, and it makes no difference in this respect if the reader agrees with his views or not.

You will be interested to learn that Nordau, who has hitherto only been known as a successful writer on the life of nations, on the psychology of literature and civilization, and as a less successful dramatist, has finished a two-volume novel which will be "out" in September. It is his first venture in the field of longer fiction, he having previously written only a few short tales. It will be entitled The Age of Schopenhauer, is said to deal chiefly with pessimism and socialism, and to be of high merit. It is looked forward to with intense curiosity by our literary world, and will be sure to play a prominent part in your next annual review of German literature.

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—General Lew Wallace's novel, Ben Hur, is one of the steadily selling books of the time; so is Dr. Edward Eggleston's Hoosier Schoolmaster. Harper & Brothers, the publishers of the former, are obliged just now to protect themselves from the inroads of a Canadian edition of it.

—The Art Review, New York, has advanced its price to $10 a year, or $1 a number. Four etchings are to be given each year, and sixty photogravures, all of them being suitable for framing. [Geo. F. Kelly, 59 Carmine street.]

—Mr. Matthew Arnold is engaged on his autobiographical reminiscences.

—The American Bookseller at New York has published an illustrated Bulletin of Books for Summer Reading, which, by means of pictures, extracts, and descriptions, lays before the reader an account of a large assortment of current literature fitted for the season.

—The American Bookseller's "Educational Catalogue for 1886-7" may be found in its issue for July 15, 1887. A very comprehensive and valuable list it is of educational works of recent issue, with publishers and prices.

—Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, if his health permits, is expecting to come to America this fall, and to spend some time in California.

—Mr. Edward W. Bok of New York, editor of the Memorial Tributes to Henry Ward Beecher, has arranged with Mrs. Beecher for a series of articles from her pen chiefly on topics of domestic life, to be furnished simultaneously to public journals in different parts of the country. It is understood that their publication will be begun this fall.

—Poor's Manual of Railroads, corrected to July 15, is now ready. Likewise Poor's Directory of Railroad Officials for 1887, a royal octavo of 400 pages.

—Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton has three books in hand for the coming season: one, Some Successful Women, well expounded by its title; a second dealing with the lives of a score and a half of successful American authors; and a third a collection of poems by herself and her son, Charles K. Bolton, at present a student at Harvard.

—An interesting "find" in an old desk, recently, by the rector of the Heilbronn Gymnasium, was two letters from Luther to the Suabian reformer Brenz, dated 1524 and 1527, and five by Melancthon addressed to Lachmann between 1555 and 1557.

—The death was announced last week of Jean Victor Duruy, the French historian, who won the Cross of the Legion of Honor, and whose Histoire de la Grèce Ancienne [1852] was crowned by the French Academy. Among his other works are Géographie Politique de la République Romaine et de l'Empire, 1838; Géographie Historique du Moyen Age, 1839; Géographie de la France, 1840; Atlas de Géographie Historique, 1841; Histoire Romaine, 1840-4; Histoire Romaine, 1848; and Histoire de France, 1852.

—A new volume of poetry by Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, whose A Child's Garden of Verses is his only other essay in this branch of literature, will be published immediately by Charles Scribner's Sons, simultaneously with its appearance in England. The title of the book is Underwoods, and its contents reveal the author's remarkable versatility.

—Thomas Whittaker of New York has in press Living Voices of Living Men, a collection of practical sermons by representative bishops and clergy of the American Church. Among the bishops contributing to the twenty-six sermons in the volume are Dr. Williams, the Presiding Bishop, Bishops Wilmer, Clark, Potter, Randolph, etc., and among the clergy are Drs. Dyer, Huntington, Satterlee, Shipman, Mulchahay, Cushman, Cooke, and others, mostly of New York City.

—Lew Vanderpoole, author of Ruhainah, Ecbatana, and other novels, will contribute the complete novel to Lippincott's Monthly Magazine for September. It is entitled "The Red Mountain Mines," and is a sketch of life in California.

—D. C. Heath & Co. have just ready The English Language: Its Grammar, History, and Literature, by Professor J. M. D. Meiklejohn, of the University of St. Andrews, Scotland.

—The American Magazine will hereafter be published under the management of the American Magazine Company. In the September number "Our New Navy" will be described and illustrated by Lieut. W. S. Hughes, U. S. N., and J. Macdonald Oxley will write of the strength and efficiency of the military system of Canada.

—J. W. Bouton will issue in the autumn an American edition of A Bibliographical Account of English Theatrical Literature from the Earliest Times to the Present Day, by Robert W. Lowe. This is the first extended bibliography of the general literature of the stage. Plays have been catalogued many times, and some of our greatest bibliographers have directed their attention to Shakespearian literature; but no attempt has been made to give even the baldest catalogue of the large and curious mass of books relating to the history of the stage, the biography of actors and actresses, the controversy regarding the influence of the stage, the numerous curious theatrical trials, and the many scandalous attacks on the personal character of celebrated performers. Mr. Lowe's work consists of about 2,000 titles, the great majority of which are taken directly from the works described.

—Kate Greenaway's Queen Victoria's Jubilee Garland, a memento of the recent celebration in London, printed in colors by Edmund Evans, is announced by George Routledge & Sons.

—Among the books which Roberts Brothers have in press for publication during the coming autumn are Garden Secrets, by Philip Bourke Marston, with a sketch of his life by Louise Chandler Moulton; a complete edition in one volume of the Poems of Helen Jackson; Juvenila, a volume of æsthetical essays by Vernon Lee; South County Neighbors, a novel of rural life, by Esther Bernon Carpenter; A Short History of Philadelphia, by Susan Coolidge; Madame De Staël, by Bella Duffy; Some of Our Fellows, by Rev. T. S. Millington; The Little Flowers of St. Francis, translated by Abby Langdon Alger; and A Garland for Girls and Lulu's Library, by Louisa M. Alcott.

—In holiday books Roberts Brothers will issue an edition of Dr. Hale's In His Name, with over 100 illustrations by G. P. Jacobb-Hood, R.A.; The Sabine: A Summer Voyage, by P. G. Hamerton and Joseph Pennell; and The Procession of Flowers in Colorado, by Helen Jackson, illustrated in water colors by Alice Stewart, in a limited edition of 100 copies at $25.00 each.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

July.

The Quarterly Review. Lecky's History of England—Our Meat Supply—Coleridge and the Romantic School—Layard's Italian School of Painting—Great Men and Evolution—The Tithe Question—Earl of Peterborough—The Latest Attack on Christianity—The Ministry and the Country.

The Edinburgh Review. Ettrick Forest and the Yarrow—Political Assassination—Letters of Madame De Maintenon—The Education of Women—The Life and Works of Giordano Bruno—The International Law of the United States—Sorel's Europe and the French Revolution—The Brocas Book—Mr. Gladstone and the Liberal Party.

Church Quarterly Review. Recent Works on St. Augustine—An Irish Dominican in the Pulpit—A French Diocesan—An English Martyr Bishop—A Parson Poet—The Church in England from William III to Victoria—Substitutes for Christianity—Lectures on History at Oxford—Through Man to God—Recent Art Criticism—The Reform of Convocation—Short Notices.

Copyright, International.	G. W. Curtis.	Harper's.
Fiction, Realism and the Art of.	Arlo Bates.	Scribner's.
Fiction, The Success of.	W. D. Howells.	Harper's.
International Copyright with England, Do we Want?	Appleton Morgan.	Science.
Ouida, The Truth About.	Edgar Fawcett.	Lippincott's.
Publishing House, A Native, in India.
John F. Hurst.		Harper's.
Thackeray, Unpublished Letters of.	V.	Scribner's.

August.

Books that Have Helped Me.	Edward Eggleston.	The Forum.
Browning, Robert.	Hamilton W. Mabie.
Jeffrey, Francis.	George Saintsbury.	Andover Review.
Letters, The Profession of.		Macmillan's.
Literature and Character, Some Sober After-		Macmillan's.
thoughts on.	Anna L. Dawes.	Andover Review.
Newspaper, First, West of the Alleghanies.
Wm. H. Perrin.		Magazine of Am. Hist.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Compiled and Edited by John Bigelow. Vol. IV. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00

LIFE OF CHARLES DARWIN. By G. T. Bettany. London: Walter Scott. New York: T. Whittaker. 75c.

LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTE. By Augustine Birrell. Do., do. 75c.

PRÆTORIA. By John Ruskin. Vol. II. Chapter XI. L'Hotel du Mont Blanc. John Wiley & Sons.

PRISON LIFE IN SIBERIA. By Fedor Dostoieffsky. Tr. by H. Sutherland Edwards. Harper & Brothers. 20c.

Fiction.

THE DETECTIVE'S CRIME. By Charles Morris. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.

THE HOUSE AT HIGH BRIDGE. By Edgar Fawcett. Ticknor & Co. Paper, 50c.

FREDERICK HAZZLEDEN. By Hugh Westbury. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

THE HOLY ROSE. By Walter Besant. Harper & Brothers. 20c.

THE O'DONNELLS OF INCHFAWN. By L. T. Meade. Harper & Brothers. 20c.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A SLANDER. By Edna Lyall. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 25c.

THRALDOM. By Julian Sturgis. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.

MARK LOGAN, THE BOURGEOISE. By Mrs. John H. Kinzie. J. B. Lippincott Co. Paper, 50c.

A MODERN CIRCE. By the author of "Molly Bawn," etc. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.

Juvenile.

SCAPEGRACE DICK. By Frances Mary Peard. Illus. Thomas Whittaker. $1.25
 FIGHTING THE SEA. By Edward A. Rand. Thomas Whittaker. $1.25

Poetry.

RUSSIAN LYRICS IN ENGLISH VERSE. By Rev. C. T. Wilson. London: Trübner & Co.

Theology and Religion.

THE HIDDEN WAY ACROSS THE THRESHOLD, ETC., ETC. By J. C. Street. Lee & Shepard. $3.50
 MY CONFESSION AND THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST'S TEACHING. By Count Lyof N. Tolstoi. Tr. from the Russian. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

Travel and Observation.

PHILADELPHIA AND ITS ENVIRONS. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. Paper, 50c.
 DALMATIA, THE QUARNERO AND ISTRIA. With Cettigne in Montenegro and the Island of Grado. By T. G. Jackson, M.A., F.S.A. Three Volumes. Oxford: The Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan & Co. $10.50

Miscellaneous.

MRS. SHILLABER'S COOK-BOOK. By Lydia Shillaber. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25
 THE FORTUNES OF WORDS. Letters to a Lady. By Federico Garlanda, Ph.D. A. Lovell & Co.
 THE BANQUET OF PLATO. By Percy Bysahe Shelley. Cassell's National Library. 10c.
 TAINTOR'S GUIDE BOOKS. 10 vols. Seaside Resorts.—Northern Resorts.—City of New York.—New York to Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington.—Hudson River Route.—Newport and Fall River Route.—Connecticut River Route.—New York Central—Erie Railway.—Philadelphia and Reading. New York: Taintor Brothers & Co. Paper, Each 25c.
 THE ORDER OF WORDS IN THE ANCIENT LANGUAGES COMPARED WITH THAT OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES. By Henry Weil. Tr. with Notes and Additions by Charles W. Super. Ginn & Co. $1.25
 APHORISMS OF THE THREE THREES. By Edward Owings Towne. 2d ed. C. H. Kerr & Co. $1.00
 A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. By William Shakespeare. Cassell's National Library. 10c.
 BEECHER AS A HUMORIST. Selections from the Published Works of Henry Ward Beecher. Compiled by Eleanor Kuts. Fords, Howard & Hulbert.
 THE BOOK OF SNOBS, ETC., ETC. By Wm. Makepeace Thackeray. London: Smith, Elder & Co. 50c.
 ROMANTIC LOVE AND PERSONAL BEAUTY. Their Development, Casual Relations, Historic and National Peculiarities. By Henry T. Finck. Macmillan & Co. $2.00

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. Titus Munson Coan, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

FOR

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 P. M.
 Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.
 A. A. FOLSOM, Supt. P. & B. R.

WHEN YOU GO TO

TROY OR ALBANY

Take the EXPRESS TRAIN leaving Boston at 10.30 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted, via Hoosac Tunnel Route, arriving at Troy 6.55 A. M. and Albany 7.25 A. M., connecting with Morning Trains via D. & H. C. Co., West Shore and New York Central Railroads, for all points North and West. Palace Sleeping Cars, Passenger Coaches and Baggage Cars run through without change from Boston to Troy and Albany. For Tickets, Sleeping-Car accommodations and further information, apply at the Company's Office, 250 Washington St., Ticket Office Fitchburg Railroad, CAUSEWAY STREET STATION, Boston, or any authorized Ticket Agent in New England.
 J. N. WATSON, Gen. Pass. Agent. A. V. FISHER, Trav. Pass. Agent.

"THE WORLD WENT WELL WITH YOU THEN,"

AND it will now if you are wise and drive out DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION with

D. K.'s.
 They will do it every time, and will cure CONSTIPATION, neutralize the acidity of your stomach, and prevent HEARTBURN. DR. MARK R. WOODBURY'S DYSPEPSIA KILLERS will be sent by mail to any part of the United States on receipt of 50 cents for a large box, or 25 cents for a trial box, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

The Curtain Grate, with Warner's patent Shaking and Dumping attachment is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.
SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
 18 Beacon Street, Boston.

Patented January 22, 1877.

Granville Mosaic Floors
 Have never failed to give satisfaction. Tested eight years. Lately improved whereby laying is made simple and inexpensive. Adapted equally to old floors or new houses. Positive but hidden fastening. Shrinkage practically overcome. Send plan of room and have floor made to a design prepared expressly for it. Ask for information. O. S. Dickinson, Granville, Mass.

THE BLAISDELL CHAIR

IS A COMFORT AND NECESSITY which should be with every Family, Hospital, Student, Library and Pleasure Resort. Its CHANGES and COMBINATIONS, its DURABILITY and CHEAPNESS, its EASE and ELEGANCE, its adaptability for Hammock, Invalid, Library, Lawn, Steamer and general Reclining Use, have made it the

CHAMPION CHAIR OF THE WORLD

Catalogue, Photos and testimonials FREE.

AGENTS and DEALERS

WANTED.

Mention this Paper.

THE BLAISDELL CHAIR CO.,
 96 HIGH ST., BOSTON, MASS.

PRICE $6.00
 And Upwards.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, with the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who do not TRAVEL MUCH as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN

are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES covering injuries received
ACCIDENT TICKETS, in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY, in the Market. Indefensible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
 Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.

RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
 BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
 A. S. CLARK, 24 PARK ROW, N. Y.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11.

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 30 cents.
 Other advertising pages, 10 "
 Or $50.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Thos. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 18. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 331. Publishers.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

Scribner's Magazine

FOR SEPTEMBER.

A SUPERB AUTUMN NUMBER.
The magazine opens with Mr. Edward L. Wilson's finely illustrated article on The Modern Nile; the Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D.D., Rector of St. George's Church, New York, contributes an entertaining account of Camping and Hunting in the Shoshone, and the successful pursuit of large game, beautifully illustrated; there is the first part of a unique and charming Japanese story, entitled The Sacred Flame of Torin Ji, written by Mr. E. H. House (for many years a resident in Japan), and illustrated by Mr. George Foster Barnes; the Thackeray letters are continued, with some reminiscences by Miss Kate Perry, both illustrated. A timely and most important contribution is An Unpublished Draft of a National Constitution by Edmund Handolph (with facsimile), by Moncure D. Conway, which will attract great attention among all students of the American Constitution; two highly interesting and valuable papers are The Development of the American University, by Prof. George T. Ladd of Yale College, and English in Newspapers and Novels, by Prof. Adams Sherman Hill; there are poems by Mrs. James T. Fields, Julia C. R. Dorr, Louise Imogen Guiney and John Boyle O'Reilly; an exciting railroad story, entitled Flandree's Mogul, by A. C. Gordon; an out-of-door paper by Maurice Thompson, etc.

N. Y. EVENING POST.—SCRIBNER'S shows no sign of summer lassitude customary with the magazines at this season, and does not relax in its standard, or fall short of its remarkable excellence. It has carefully refrained from literary splatter hitherto, and it seems equally determined to give us no literary slops.

$3.00 A YEAR. 25 CENTS A NUMBER.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS.

THIS most useful and beautiful Paper and Magazine Cutter will be sent to any address on receipt of three two-cent stamps. Mention the Literary World.

A Sample Letter:—"I am much pleased with paper cutter just arrived. Inclosed you will find one dollar. Kindly send me paper cutters for amount. I wish to present them to my friends." Address

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,
745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
661 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."
HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderny, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.
GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JONES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.
WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.
"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.
PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLISTO, M.A. 2 vols.
HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.
HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Apennines. Translated by S. MENDEL.
GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.
FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.
CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.
TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.
HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.
BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.
BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.
CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.
COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.
FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.
HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.
MOEHLER'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 2 vols.
PRYDE'S DIARY. 4 vols.
RICHTER'S LEVANA.
RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.
SPIROZZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.
STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

* * * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised prices. New catalogue of Choice, Rare, and Second-hand Books ready. New Catalogue of Educational Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Scribner & Welford's LIST OF BOOKS.

Suitable for Use in High-Class Schools, Colleges and Ladies' Schools.

AN ELEMENTARY HISTORY OF ART,

Architecture, Sculpture, Painting, Music. By N. D'ARVASS. With a Preface by Prof. Roger Smith. New Edition, with over 200 wood engravings. Large crown 8vo (800 pages), cloth, gilt top, $4.50.

For students who desire thus to train their own minds, for those who wish to prepare themselves for Continental travel, and, above all, for pupils in schools of a high class, no handbook of Art History could be more suitable than this volume.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT MUSICIANS.

Specially prepared for Schools, Amateurs, and Students of Music. Each volume strongly bound in decorated cloth. Price, per volume, $1.00. Including,

Haydn,	Schubert,	Bach,	Wagner,
Handel,	Schumann,	Weber,	Rossini,
Mozart,	Farrell,	Mendelssohn,
English Church Composers.

A HISTORY OF MUSIC FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT.

By W. R. ROCKSTRO, author of "The Life of Handel," "The Life of Mendelssohn," etc. In 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $6 00.

ART HAND-BOOKS.

A new series of Illustrated Text-Books of Art Education. Edited by E. J. POYNTER, R.A. Each volume contains numerous illustrations, and is strongly bound for the use of students. Price per volume, $2.00.

- I. PAINTING. Classic and Italian. By E. J. POYNTER and F. R. HEAD.
- II. — German, Flemish, and Dutch. By H. W. BUXTON.
- III. — English and American. By H. W. BUXTON.
- IV. — French and Spanish. By G. SMITH.
- V. ARCHITECTURE. Classic and Early Christian. By T. R. SMITH.
- VI. — Gothic and Renaissance. By T. R. SMITH.
- VII. SCULPTURE. Antique, Egyptian, and Greek. By G. REDFORD.
- VIII. — Renaissance and Modern. By G. REDFORD.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE GREAT ARTISTS.

Specially prepared for Schools, Amateurs, and Students of Art. Each volume contains about 16 illustrations, including a portrait of the master, and is strongly bound in decorated cloth. Price, per volume, $1.25, unless marked otherwise, viz.:

REYNOLDS — HOGARTH — GAINSBOROUGH AND CONSTABLE — LAWRENCE AND ROMNEY. $1.00 — TURNER — WILKIE — LANDSEER — GIOTTO — FRA ANGELICO — FRA BARTOLOMEO — GHIFFERTI AND DONATELLO. $1.00 — MANTEGNA — LEONARDO DA VINCI — MICHEL ANGELO — RAPHAEL — TITIAN — TINTORETTO — CORREGGIO. $1.00 — VELASQUEZ — MURILLO. $1.00 — ALBRECHT DURER — THE LITTLE MASTERS — HOLBEIN — OVERBECK — REMBRANDT — EUBENS — VAN DYCK — DELLA ROBBIA. $1.00 — WATTEAU. $1.00 — VERNET — FIGURE PAINTERS OF HOLLAND — MEI-SONIER. $1.00 — CLAUDE.

Complete detailed list supplied.

A Great National Work.

A HISTORY OF OUR HEROES, OUR STATESMEN, OUR SCHOLARS, OUR MEN OF NOTE IN EVERY FIELD.

APPLETONS' CYCLOPÆDIA — OF — AMERICAN BIOGRAPHY

EDITED BY JAMES GRANT WILSON AND JOHN FISKE.

"APPLETONS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF AMERICAN BIOGRAPHY," now in course of publication, will contain a biographical sketch of every person eminent in American civil and military history, in law and politics, in divinity, literature and art, in science and in invention. Its plan includes distinguished persons born abroad that are related to our national history, and embraces all the countries of North and South America. When completed it will afford a history of the New World in every branch of human achievement.

Numerous flattering testimonials have been received from distinguished gentlemen highly praising the first volume, a few of which we here subjoin:

From the Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT.

"The most complete volume that exists on the subject."

From the Hon. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

"Surprisingly well done. . . . To any interested in American history or literature the book will be indispensable."

From NOAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D., ex-President of Yale College.

"It is with great pleasure that I certify to the excellence of the first volume of 'Appletons' Cyclopædia of American Biography.'"

From the Hon. M. R. WAITE, Chief-Justice of the United States.

"I have looked it over with considerable care, and find nothing to say except in praise."

Will be completed in six volumes, 8vo, containing nearly 800 pages each; illustrated with ten fine steel portraits and several hundred smaller vignette portraits and views of the birthplaces, residences, etc. The volumes will appear at intervals of four to six months.

Price $5.00 per volume. Volumes One and Two are now ready.

Sold only by subscription. Agents wanted for districts not yet assigned.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers, 1, 3 and 5 Bond St., New York.

A SEQUEL TO "MY CONFESSION" AND
"MY RELIGION."

WHAT TO DO?

THOUGHTS EVOKED BY THE CENSUS OF MOSCOW.

By Count LYOF N. TOLSTOI. Translated from the Russian.

EXTRACT FROM THE ABOVE WORK:

"I not only do not repudiate art and science, but in the name of that which is true art and true science, I say that which I do say, merely in order that mankind may emerge from that savage state into which it will speedily fall, thanks to the erroneous teaching of our time."

12mo, Cloth, - - $1.25.

By the Same Author:

ANNA KARENINA, - - - 12mo, $1.75
CHILDHOOD, BOYHOOD and YOUTH, - - - - - 12mo, $1.50
IVAN ILYTCH, - - - - 12mo, $1.35
MY CONFESSION, - - - 12mo, $1.00
MY RELIGION, - - - - 12mo, $1.00
THE INVADERS (in Press).
A RUSSIAN PROPRIETOR (in Press).

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

12 Astor Place, - - - New York.

Horsford's ACID PHOSPHATE

(LIQUID)

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

NOW READY.

The New Volume in the Byrnes-
Hawthorne Series,

The Great Bank Robbery.

From the Diary of INSPECTOR BYRNES,
By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

Extra Cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

This story describes with the thrilling touch of fact, and the magic pen of the romancer, the robbery of the Manhattan Savings Bank, one of the cleverest rascalities of modern times. It imparts a new interest to the "woman in the case," and gives us a story of crime and intrigue unequalled in modern literature.

20TH THOUSAND.

A Tragic Mystery.

From the Diary of INSPECTOR BYRNES,
By JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

Extra Cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

"The best selling book of the year."

The story is very interesting, and the language clear and succinct. The words "baffled" and "unravel" are, I think, not used at all; and I may state, as a tribute to the absorbing interest of the tale, that one reviewer, while reading it, quite forgot that he was going to review it.—George Parsons Lathrop in the N. Y. Star.

On the news-stands, in the hotel corridors, on the railway trains, the works of BYRNES-HAWTHORNE vie with those of STEVENSON and RIDER HAGGARD in popularity, and possess the unusual merit of truth.—N. Y. Sun.

More like a romance than the mere report of the detection of crime.—The World, N. Y.

A good story and well told.—N. Y. Tribune.
True to human nature.—Boston Journal.

The Republic of the Future;

OR, SOCIALISM A REALITY. By ANNA BOWMAN
DODD, author of "Old Cathedral Days," etc.
1 vol., new style of binding, price 50 cents.

This little book is in the form of a brilliant and highly original series of letters supposed to be written by a Swedish Nobleman, on a visit to America in the 21st Century. In these letters the writer has depicted what the social, civil and political aspect of America would be under Socialistic rule, after Socialism had become a fixed and stable form of government.

Calamity Jane.

A STORY OF THE BLACK HILLS. By Mrs.
GEORGE E. SPENCER, author of "A Plucky
One," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, paper, price 25 cents.

The Three Teton.

A STORY OF THE YELLOWSTONE. By ALICE
WELLINGTON ROLLINS, author of "Story of a Ranch," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, paper, price 50 cents.

For Sale by all Booksellers.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited,

739 and 741 Broadway, New York.

The Literary World.

Vol. XVIII. BOSTON, SEPT 3, 1887. No. 18.

CONTENTS.

IMAGINARY PORTRAITS	275
DALMATIA, THE QUARNERO, AND ISTRIA	275
THE EVOLUTION OF ROMANTIC LOVE	277
SPIRITISM	277
MINOR NOTICES:
An Encyclopedia of Living Divines	278
Vol. IV of Franklin's Works	278
Professor Colvin's Keats	279
The Brothers Grimm	279
Gilman's Historical Readers	279
Dr. Cox's Expositions	279
Etc., Etc., Etc.
RECENT POETRY:
Forewords	283
The Sailing of King Olaf, and Other Poems	283
Songs of the War for the Union	283
A Branch of May	283
A Handful of New Verses	284
Child's World Ballads	284
Columbus	284
Society Verses by American Writers	284
The Poems of Sir John Suckling	284
MINOR FICTION:
Calamity Jane	284
Red Spider	284
Tempest Driven	285
Drops of Blood	285
The Shaving of Shagpat, etc.	285
PERIODICALS	285
PARAGRAPHS	280
THE LONGFELLOW GARDEN	280
MR. MAURICE THOMPSON ON MR. HOWELLS	281
AN OLD BOOK AND ITS STORY	282
COUNT LEON TOLSTOI. A Portrait	281
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Henry T. Finck	283
READINGS IN THE ENGLISH PAPERS	285
NEWS AND NOTES	286
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	287

IMAGINARY PORTRAITS.*

THE four persons who have sat for their portraits to that consummate artist in words, Mr. Walter Pater, are Jean Antoine Watteau, "prince of court painters," Denys l'Auxerrois, a legendary French Dionysus, Sebastian Van Storck, a cold lover of intellectual beauty, and Duke Carl of Rosenmold, a royal predecessor of the German Aufklärung of the last century. The portraits are drawn and colored mainly from the artist's own consciousness, and belong to the kingdom of imagination. They do not equal, of course, the more sustained charm and power of the picture of Marius, the Epicurean, but we think of no other writer of today capable of such fine and subtle work.

The first portrait, that of Watteau, is the most pleasing and the one most pervaded by the warmth of full life. It is given in the form of extracts from an old French journal kept by a young woman of Valenciennes, whose father was a kind of patron of the young genius. She tells the story of his rise to fame, discovering at intervals her hidden love for him, and surviving him to say at last:

He has been a sick man all his life. He was always a secker after something in the world that is there in no satisfying measure or not at all.

* Imaginary Portraits. By Walter Pater, M.A. Macmillan & Co. $1.50.

Denys l'Auxerrois is an imagination, wrought out with singular force, of the pagan god of wine, a fair, triumphant being, whose lot was cast "with the creatures of an age later than his own, people of a larger spiritual capacity, and assuredly of a larger capacity for melancholy." This sketch is a curious revelation of the pagan and the Christian in Mr. Pater himself. The conflict would seem to account for the bias he displays for the tragedy of human incompleteness, which is the ground-note of all these "portraits." Sebastian Van Storck dies of the idea of a rose in aromatic pain, if we may so pervert the sensuous proverb to denote the morbid development of pure intellectualism which deprived life of all its warmth and vigor for him. Duke Carl, happy in projects for elevating the national taste and creating a national art and literature, happy in the arms of his bride, is trampled to death beneath the tread of horses and the roll of cannon wheels. Mr. Pater does not cry Vanitas vanitatum, but his unsurpassed literary art chooses to dwell on the sadnesses of the highest life.

DALMATIA, THE QUARNERO, AND ISTRIA.*

BY training Mr. T. G. Jackson is an Oxford Master of Arts, and by profession he is an architect; but by endowment and taste he is one third Freeman, one third Schliemann, and one third Ruskin. Give such a man the companionship of a wife as inquisitive, adventurous, and indefatigable as himself, equip him with ample resources of time and money, and land him on the eastern shore of the Adriatic, to explore its islands and its cities with the studious habits of the historian, the microscopic powers of the antiquary, and the cultivated gifts of the artist, and you have these three elegant, capacious, and instructive volumes fully accounted for.

The Dalmatia, Istria, and Montenegro of the title are familiar names. Cettigne is the Montenegrin capital. The Quarnero is the eastern and lesser of the two gulfs which indent the northern extremity of the Adriatic. Grado is an island at the head of the deeper western gulf. From Grado you look perhaps seventy-five miles a little south of west to Venice. Of the long stretch of rugged shore traversed by Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, fringed with islands and dotted with cities, Trieste marks the northern limit and Scutari the southern. The Croatian part of the narrow strip is Hungarian territory; the Dalmatian and Istrian is Austrian. The atmosphere of Italy lies over all. The hoary Byzantine Empire is in the background. The historical flavor and associations are mediæval. The unspeakable Turk is near at hand. In Montenegro we touch one of the memorable conflicts of recent times. On these wild shores lingers the older civilization of Eastern Europe in some of its most striking forms. The folding map of the region explored by Mr. Jackson is only a beginning of the many admirable traits with which his work is endowed.

* Dalmatia, the Quarnero, and Istria, with Cettigne in Montenegro, and the Island of Grado. By T. G. Jackson. Three volumes. Illustrated. Oxford: The Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan & Co. $10.50.

Mr. Jackson is not the pioneer in the country whose treasures it is his object to describe. George Wheler was here in 1675, Robert Adam in 1764, the Abbate Fortis a hundred years ago, Sir Gardner Wilkinson in 1848, and Dr. Freeman's Subject and Neighbour Lands of Venice [1881] deals with the borders of the field. Mr. Jackson has made three visits, in 1882, 1884, and 1885, accompanied in each instance by his wife. Note-book and pencil he has liberally employed. He sketches as well as writes, and as well as he writes, which is saying much. The mere list of the illustrations occupies nine pages.

Traveling in these Adriatic lands is not made either easy or comfortable by the facilities of the West. The steamers of the Austrian Lloyds and of obscurer lines ply between the more important seaports, but with infrequency and irregularity, and if belated or full sometimes give the passengers waiting at an unimportant station the go-by. The islands, which are numerous, are to be reached by sail boats, with sometimes perilous exposure to treacherous currents and boisterous winds. Inland the railroads are scant, and in remoter precincts and on some of the smaller islands foot paths take the place of highways and mules displace wagons, so that travel is laborious and difficult. Good inns, too, are the exception, and though excellent bread and the best of wine are to be found everywhere, experiences like the following, related by Mr. Jackson, are not uncommon:

There is nothing that can be called an inn at Knin, for the wretched osteria where one gets an apology for a dinner can hardly be dignified by that title; but our friends had written to Signor Fontana, the principal tradesman in the town, who we found had kindly arranged everything for us and secured us clean quarters in a private house. The approach was certainly not promising: from a dark passage we entered a back yard full of lumber and reeking with the sour smell of old wine casks, from which we climbed by a ladder to the first floor of the house, and then by a somewhat better stair to our rooms, which were very clean and tidy. In the daytime it was all very well, but the ascent and descent after dark by the light of a single wick floating in a pot of oil with which an old woman illumined one step after another was not so easy. Our lodging, however, was a palace compared to the osteria where we dined, or rather fed, on the best fare that Knin could afford. The dining-room was a vast Rembrandtesque apartment on the level of the street, with a low, blackened ceiling, and a wooden floor that sank under the tread, squelching into the oozy mud below. [II, 187.]

Istria and Dalmatia are lands of the vine and the olive, the fig and the mulberry.

The scenery is only sometimes fine. Stony deserts and mountains of arid whiteness occupy much of the surface, suggesting, in Dalmatia especially, the barrenness and sterility of Arabia. Here and there, however, are expanses, or at least touches, of fertility. Rains are frequent and violent. Miasma abounds. There are a few rivers but no brooks and springs, and a prevailing absence of running water. In the maritime towns life has an Italian aspect; inland the picturesque features of the Slavs appear. The islanders have a better reputation than the dwellers on the mainland; as one goes inland towards the old Turkish frontier the deterioration of both country and people becomes noticeable.

. . . The women are strange, half-savage looking creatures, with elf locks hanging over their weather-beaten faces, dressed in thick embroidered leggings that give them the appearance of Indian squaws, and among the men are to be seen rags and tatters, and sometimes half-naked figures, with nothing but a blanket to shield them from the weather as they tend their flocks on the bleak highland moors. Yet, poor as they are, most of them appear on festival days with silver coins, beads, and buttons hung so thickly over their wretched rags that as they journey on their little asses or ponies over the mountains to the fair, they blaze in the sunshine like a troop of cuirassiers. The contrast between this idle wealth and the misery of the tatters below serves but to give a deeper tinge to their barbarism. [I, 203.]

These further glimpses of the picturesque costumes of the people, the first being at Zara, will interest the reader:

The men wear trousers of blue cloth gaily worked at the pockets, tight to the leg and often fastened up the back of the calf by a row of silver hooks and eyes; and they are shod with the opanka, a kind of sandal well adapted to the sharp rocks they have to encounter, made of a sole of thick leather turned up and stitched to form a toe, and laced over the instep with knotted and twisted thongs of leather. [I, 234.]

. . . The women wear a smock of homespun linen fastened at the throat with a flagree button and embroidered in front and at the shoulders and wrists; a waistcoat of blue cloth open in front; a short petticoat of the same; and an apron worked in colored wools so solidly as to be as stiff as a piece of carpet; and they have opankas and embroidered spats like the men, the latter often continued as leggings half way to the knee, and having the effect of trousers. The unmarried girls wear a scarlet cap like that of the men, but covered with embroidery and spangles, and on festivals hung round with a fringe of pendent coins. Married women change this for a large, white handkerchief of homespun linen beautifully worked at the corners and edges, which covers the head, is tied under the chin, and hangs over the back and shoulders. [I, 235.]

But we must not lead the reader to suppose that the chief interest of Mr. Jackson's volumes lies in their picturesque description of scenery and people. Not at all so. The main object of our author is to present by pen and pencil as complete an idea as possible of the architectural remains which connect this country with a remote past. Landing at Zara, the capital of Dalmatia, he and his companion proceeded slowly in various directions, northward, inland, and southward, visiting in turn the towns of Nona and Vrana, Sebenico, Knin, Traù, Spalato, Ragusa, and Cattaro; from Cattaro climbed the mountains to Cettigné, the capital of Montenegro; then took in Segna, Fiume, Pola, Parenzo, Pirano, and Trieste; ending their tour with Aquileja and the island of Grado. The islands of Arbe, Cherso, Ossero, Ugliano, Veglia, Mezzo, Curzola, and Lesina, were also included. Every one of these localities has its churches and convents, many a one of them its cathedral or "duomo;" some of these edifices in partial ruins, but most of them in a good state of preservation. Here can be seen Byzantine architecture in its full strength or under its later influences. At Spalato, which by the way Mr. Jackson found to be an excellent point of departure for short excursions, are the remains of a magnificent palace of the Russian Emperor Diocletian, who here spent the closing period of his life. Its exterior walls, and the principal parts of the buildings within its walls, are still standing, covering nine and a half acres of ground. Its two temples, one of Jupiter, the other of Æsculapius, have been turned into churches. The edifice has been restored on paper by the English architect, Robert Adam, with "wonderful correctness." Mr. Jackson's full account of it, with the accompanying drawings, furnishes a good example of the patient thoroughness with which he fulfills the archaeological purpose of his work. At Ragusa, a point of equal if not superior interest, is an imposing "Rector's Palace;" at Novegrad, near Zara, a fine old castle; at Verboska on the island of Lesina, a curious old church and castle combined so as to be defended from the attacks of earth, and assail if not carry the heights of heaven at one and the same time; at Pola are the ruins of a spacious amphitheater; at Aquileja the site of one of the proudest of Roman cities, which had a population of half a million souls.

The thirty-six chapters of Mr. Jackson's work are evenly distributed among these several localities. On reaching the town or the island which furnishes the given subject we have first its history, in ample dimensions and minute detail; the whole of the first half of the first volume, in fact, is taken up with an elaborate history of Dalmatia, from the earliest times. These historical prolegomena, which are numerous and copious, and which are of great value to the close historical student, might easily have been abridged without loss to the general reader, and without greatly lessening the value of the work for architects or antiquaries. Historical outlines would have been useful and sufficient. The historical avenue traversed and the town fairly entered, Mr. Jackson makes his way straight to the "duomo," and sets to work on a prolonged and systematic study of it within and without; sometimes uncovering its foundations, always exploring its chapels, stairways, and appurtenances, and obtaining whenever possible a view of its relics and treasures. Of these curious old cathedrals the ground plans are always given, and sketches of the exterior are usually reproduced in tint by an "ink-photographic" process which gives a soft and pleasing result. The cathedral inspected, we are taken next to the other churches in the town, to the convents, which in the aggregate are numerous, and to any other public or private buildings of note. The curé or "parroco" is often Mr. Jackson's guide, and priest and people commonly afford him every facility for his studies. Antique church plate receives a large share of his attention; there are pictures of sumptuous pastoral staffs, quaint chalices of rare patterns, and caskets containing the bones of saints. At pillars, capitals, and arches Mr. Jackson looks with an architect's eye; over paintings he bends with the affection of a connoisseur but the caution and coolness of a critic; a bit of choice carving to him is like a fragrant and lovely flower; he grasps the wondrous products of the chisel, of delicate and graceful shapes, by handfuls. This paragraph, from the fascinating chapter in Vol. II on the Duomo at Traù, relating to one single detail of the noble west doorway, instances at once the wonderful richness of some of this old Dalmatian work, and the conscientious fidelity with which it is presented to the reader:

The next order has various scenes from rural life; a wood cutter, a leather worker, a man boiling a pot and perhaps making sausages, a string of which, resembling the "luganica," which travelers in Dalmatia know so well, hangs behind him, while he holds another sausage in a ladle over the pot with one hand and with the other raises a cup into which a servant pours water; a man killing a pig, while a kind of camel-monster seems attacking him in the rear; sheep-shearing; a pigeon with a scroll or label on which the inscription has been omitted; an armed warrior; and a naked wild man of the woods. The scroll work on the inner face of this order is magnificent and in its way unsurpassable, boldly designed, but yet finished like ivory carving. [II, 117.]

Few Dalmatian towns can be entered on wheels, the streets are so narrow. The country paths are lanes leading between stone walls. This necessity of foot travel favors a close and exhaustive inspection of objects, by all of which the reader is the gainer. The work is not without a spice of adventure, though to recite adventures is not its function. The "personal equation" in it is insignificant. It is a scholar's work for scholars, prepared with thorough editorial and literary skill, and equipped with all needed furniture for use. The illustrations, which are in great number and variety, lying sometimes outside the text, sometimes within it, are a conspicuous feature; but not more so than the excellent paper, type, and press-work, which are of the Clarendon Press's best. We notice in Vol. I, p. 7, the misprint of "dioeceses" for dioceses, and on p. 35 the apparent one of "hoarding" for boarding; the former, however, may be a scholar's affectation. The binding—half parchment with ornamented cloth sides—is novel and rich. The work altogether is notable and attractive, presenting valuable information on a really fascinating subject in a most agreeable and entertaining manner, and opening up a remote and largely neglected region with great distinctness. No architect can study its pages and plates without great pleasure and profit, and no intelligent person, while tempted perhaps to skip some of the historical passages, could fail to be charmed and delighted with its other—professional but hardly technical—portions.

THE EVOLUTION OF ROMANTIC LOVE.*

NO one but an unmitigated misanthrope could fail to be attracted by the subject of Mr. Finck's researches, and none but a professed cynic could fail to be impressed by the novel and original conclusions which are successively reached by the author. Mr. Finck is Cupid's cyclopædist, but he does not attempt to write a new Ars Amoris. His theme is mainly historical. Whence came romantic love, what are its characteristics among different nations, and how does it differ from love as understood by the ancients? How is it differentiated from forms of affection, how manifested in different individuals, how expressed, how won, and how cured? In what manner is love related to personal beauty and what are the tests of beauty, positive and negative? What are the modern standards of beauty in form and feature and how are they to be attained? What is to be the ultimate type of beauty as demanded by romantic love, and how nearly do the six leading Western nations approach to the desired ideal? These are the questions that Mr. Finck seeks to answer, and in the attainment of his object he traverses the whole range of literature and draws freely upon the resources of science. The book is not, however, merely a compilation. The author has ideas of his own; he adopts the American attitude; he does not hesitate to controvert traditional beliefs; and he is both witty and wise. That every lover will enjoy the book and make it his vade mecum "goes without saying." Those who have loved or ever expect to love will desire to refresh their memories or confirm their hopes by consulting its pages. It is gentle on the subject of flirtation but severe on coquetry; it has kind words for old maids but is unmerciful to bachelors; it declares that mental refinement counts for much among the sources of beauty; and it proclaims to ugly women how they may be handsome in their lovers' eyes.

Mr. Finck begins by denying the popular theory, fostered by novelists and poets, that romantic love has always existed among civilized nations. He shows it to be in reality

"a modern sentiment, less than a thousand years old." It is possible that the early Aryans possessed some of the leading features of the modern romantic passion, but they were certainly destroyed with the introduction of Brahminism. The ancient Egyptians regarded marriage primarily as a means of augmenting family and state influence and power, and therefore pre-matrimonial love was out of the question. The Greeks and Romans gave no opportunities for courtship. The Hebrews knew of love only as conjugal affection, fraternal regard, or religious veneration. In the Middle Ages women, in spite of chivalry, were kept in brutal subjection.

Not till Dante's Vita Nuova appeared was the gospel of modern Love—the romantic adoration of a maiden by a youth—revealed for the first time in definite language. Genius, however, is always in advance of its age, in emotions as well as in thoughts; and the feelings experienced by Dante were obviously not shared by his contemporaries, who found them too subtle and sublimated for their comprehension. . . . It remained for Shakespeare to combine the idealism with the realism of Love in proper proportions. The colors with which he painted the passion and sentiment of modern Love are as fresh and as true to life as on the day when they were first put on his canvas. Like Dante, however, he was emotionally ahead of his time, as an examination of contemporary literature in England and elsewhere shows. But within the last two centuries Love has gradually, if slowly, assumed among all educated people characteristics which formerly it possessed only in the minds of a few isolated men of genius.

Mr. Finck makes the distinction between flirtation and coquetry very clear:

A Coquette seeks to fascinate for the sake of fascinating. . . . The Flirt, on the other hand, displays her accomplishments, her wit, and personal charms, for the sake of enlarging the facilities of Courtship, the possibilities of rational choice. . . . Flirtation being the modern art of widening the field of amorous competition and prolonging the duration of Courtship, it follows that there cannot be too much of it—quantitatively speaking. Qualitatively it easily degenerates into frivolity, as in the case of those girls who get engaged repeatedly before marriage. . . . Refined flirtation, in truth, requires much more wit, more tact and culture, than Coyness, or than Prudery, which is the north pole of Coyness. . . . The coy Prude says No, even when she means Yes; the cold Coquette says Yes and always means No; the modest and refined Flirt says neither Yes nor No, but looks and smiles a sweet "Perhaps—if you can win my Love."

And so Mr. Finck goes on to show how the growth of love has been impeded by the inferior social and intellectual status of women and the system of absolute chaperonage; how conjugal affection was from the first independent of romantic love, and in fact long preceded it, and how conjugal love may retain the atmosphere of romance; how romantic love almost never lasts more than three years and that long engagements are therefore to be deprecated; and how the social freedom of England and America has fostered the development of romantic love and given the English-speaking race its world-wide supremacy. Mr. Finck's study of social conditions in various countries, more particularly in France and Germany, with the resulting conclusions regarding the influence of such conditions, physically and morally, are of the highest interest and deserve careful attention. The degeneracy of the French, the depravation of their literature, and the threatening decrease of population are ascribed, and rightly we think, to the evil effects of the mariage de convenance.

The conclusions which Mr. Finck lets drop concerning women are not of a sort to flatter feminine pride. He declares that although woman's love may last longer than man's, it is not so easily kindled nor so intense while it lasts; he disputes the theory that women have greater tenderness than men, because of women's cruel fashion of wearing the feathers or corpses of slaughtered birds on their bonnets; he does not believe that women's powers of discrimination are as delicate as those of men; and he is inclined to say with Heine that women get a new character every day. But this is all due to the superficial education to which they have been limited. Until the field of feminine culture is broadened, woman, as regards romantic love, must be the recipient of uncertain devotion.

We cannot here undertake to follow Mr. Finck in his discussion of the evolution of taste, the sources of beauty, and the application of the standards of romantic love to special features. He takes direct issue with "the Alison-Jeffrey school of Scotch æstheticians" when they declare that beauty is relative. Beauty, he declares, is positive, and a refined and cultivated taste is demanded to appreciate its finer qualities. Personal beauty is a fine art and its tendency is toward individualization. Most interesting and suggestive of all is the conclusion that romantic love, depending on beauty either natural or acquired, depends primarily upon health, and hence is today the leading factor in human development, the successor of natural selection, the irresistible power that insures the advance of the race toward physical and intellectual perfection.

SPIRITISM.

THE curious phenomenon known as "spiritualism," which should much more properly be entitled "spiritism," to distinguish it from the true spiritualism of philosophy and religion, is just now undergoing one of its periodical regenerations of interest. In Boston, at least, because of the recent exposure of certain "mediums," the object of whose gross frauds on the credulous was as material as were their pretended spirits, a lively curiosity will welcome the two books named below.

The Philadelphia doctor who writes under the nom de guerre of John Darby¹ (understood to be Dr. James E. Garretson, President of the Medico-Chirurgical College in that city) devotes his five prefatory chapters (about a third of the book) mainly to a recital of many puzzling events, slate writing, knot tying, and visions, which have happened in his own experience. But he goes on to show how sense deceptions, defects in the eye, incipient insanity and pure legerdemain sufficiently accounted for the phenomena. Written in a detestable style and with many indications of theosophic ideas (or rather lack of ideas), these prefatory chapters are yet the valuable portion of the work. The remainder, "introductory to the Rosicrucian way," is about as profitless reading as one can find in the literature of theosophy, that full-blown humbug which has at present such currency among a certain class of people, who, next year, will have another "fad" quite as senseless. The application of the Rosicrucian process of "exclusion" (knowing what a thing is by what it is not) would scarcely rank these persons among the most sensible of the day.

* Romantic Love and Personal Beauty: Their Development, Causal Relations, Historic and National Peculiarities. By Henry T. Finck. Macmillan & Co. $2.00.

¹ Nineteenth Century Sense: the Paradox of Spiritualism. By John Darby. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

Passing from John Darby to the Seybert Report¹ is passing from the obscure region of the ungrammatical and the nonsensical to the clear day of good English and rational thought. The late Henry Seybert, an enthusiastic believer in spiritism, endowed a chair of philosophy in the University of Pennsylvania on condition that a commission should be appointed to investigate "modern spiritualism." A very able committee was accordingly appointed, numbering, among others, Dr. Pepper, the Provost, Dr. Leidy, Profs. R. E. Thompson and G. S. Fullerton, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, and the distinguished Shakespearean, Dr. H. H. Furness. Science, philosophy, and literature were thus fully represented. The Commission makes, in this volume of a hundred and fifty pages, a preliminary report, with the request that the inquiry be continued. The chief subject of their investigation thus far has been independent slate writing, Dr. Henry Slade, the most noted slate writer of the day, sitting with them often. The detailed report of the séances fully bears out the judgment of the Commission:

We were forced to the conclusion that the character of those [manifestations] which passed under our observation was fraudulent throughout.

Two kinds of communications were written on the slates used: one, written legibly and carefully, was prepared beforehand and the slate containing it substituted by legerdemain for the clean slate; the other, clumsy and almost illegible, was written under the table.

Prof. Fullerton, who began his inquiry with no bias against spiritism, in a special report here appended shows how very faulty was the noted Slade-Zoellner investigation of which spiritualists have made so much; his own judgment is that spiritism, so far as he has observed it, presents the melancholy spectacle of gross fraud, perpetrated upon an uncritical portion of the community; that the testimony of such persons as to what they see is almost valueless, if they are habitually as inaccurate as they have been at the séances at which I have been present with them.

The closing sections of this candid and highly instructive report are written by Dr. Furness. They give in a very entertaining way an account of his experience touching mediumistic development, sealed letters, and materialization. He emphasizes the fact, highly flattering to the maker of books, that he found it just as easy to hold converse with the personages of fiction as with those of real life. With the Olivia of Tennyson's Talking Oak he had a delicious interview through an obliging medium!

It is to be hoped that this report of the Seybert Commission will go far and wide. The Commission has effectually disposed of slate writing. Materialization is now generally recognized by the community at large, and admitted by the more respectable spiritualists, to be a fraud. If the Commission will proceed to investigate as honestly and carefully the other phenomena of spiritism, it will earn the thanks of all lovers of the truth. Let it not hesitate until Mr. Seybert's ghost itself arises to give them pause!

MINOR NOTICES.

An Encyclopædia of Living Divines.

Encyclopædia of Living Divines and Christian Workers of all Denominations in Europe and America. Edited by Rev. Philip Schaff, D.D., and Rev. S. M. Jackson, M.A. [Funk & Wagnalls. $3.00.]

This volume of some three hundred double-columned pages is a supplement to the Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge, and is devoted to contemporary biography in the field of religion, theology, and charity at home and abroad. In noticing a recent excellent biographical dictionary we remarked upon its omission of some leading American theologians. Had the compiler had at hand this very thorough and comprehensive work of Dr. Schaff and Rev. Mr. Jackson there would have been no reason to notice such a deficiency. The material for the book has been largely obtained from the subjects of the articles themselves in response to a circular from Dr. Schaff. The "contemporary divines, celebrated preachers, Christian workers, theological professors, church dignitaries, and editors of prominent religious periodicals" have cheerfully responded to the inquiry made of them, and the book is thus singularly correct. Any one familiar with the personnel of one of the denominations will be surprised at the completeness and accuracy of the sketches relating to it. The articles are numerous, containing a great amount of condensed information, the bibliography of each writer of books being especially full. Beginning with Ezra Abbot, that great scholar (whom Dr. Schaff's affection will not call dead), and ending with Zunz, the compilation allows no distinguished name in any way connected with religion, of very recent time, to escape, and a supplement contains the latest items of fresh events or new books. The range of the work is wide enough to include the two Arnolds, Edwin and Matthew, it is strikingly free from prejudice, and we should deem it indispensable to every reference library.

Vol. IV of Franklin's Works.

The Complete Works of Benjamin Franklin. Compiled and Edited by John Bigelow. Vol. IV. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00.]

This fourth volume of Mr. Bigelow's handsome new library edition of Franklin's Works is made up of letters running from No. CCLXXXIX to No. CCCLXIX, and, in date, from April 11, 1767, to December 8, 1772. They are to a great variety of people, including his wife, Lord Kames, Joseph Galloway, Cadwallader Evans, M. Dubourg, Miss Mary Stevenson, Samuel Cooper, Ezra Styles, Dr. Priestly, and Thomas Cushing. There is a good deal of curious reading, instructive and entertaining by turns, in these old letters, which lack only the concomitants of yellow paper and faded ink to make them alive with the personality of their author. On the 22d of June, 1767, writing to his wife as "My dear child," he appears in the character of decorator of the "blue room":

I would have you finish it as soon as you can thus: paint the wainscot a dead white; paper the walls blue, and tack the gilt border round just above the surbase and under the cornice. If the paper is not equally colored when pasted on, let it be brushed over again with the same color, and let the papier maché musical figures be tacked to the middle of the ceiling.

Under date of September 14th, in the same year, there is an interesting letter to Miss Stevenson describing a journey to Paris, the appearance of Versailles, and his impressions of the French. Here is a sound piece of wisdom offered to Lord Kames:

Happiness consists more in small conveniences or pleasures that occur every day, than in great pieces of good fortune that happen but seldom to a man in the course of his life.

To which he adds the unphilosophical illustration:

Thus I reckon it among my felicities that I can set my own razor and shave myself perfectly well; in which I have a daily pleasure, and avoid the uneasiness one is sometimes obliged to suffer from the dirty fingers or bad breath of a slovenly barber.

There are two letters on swimming, several on smoky chimneys, and one to Mrs. Jane Meccom on the troubles over the appointment of American bishops, in which occurs this sage reflection:

When religious people quarrel about religion, or hungry people about their victuals, it looks as if they had not much of either among them.

The silk-worm culture Franklin believes is possible and would be profitable in America. About covering houses with copper he is doubtful. That houses should be built with greater attention to security from fire he is convinced, as we are now beginning to be. He commends the advice of "a wise old man" to "choose wives out of a bunch;" for a family of many daughters are not so apt to be "spoiled by parental fondness, as single children often are." He is glad to hear, in London, August, 1772, that "the disposition against keeping negroes grows more general in North America." He thinks office-seeking a poor business, though to the rule of some great man, with regard to offices, "never to ask for them and never to refuse them," he adds, from his own practice, "never to resign them." A letter to Mr. Alleyne in favor of early marriages puts the argument in this pleasant way:

¹ Preliminary Report of the Commission Appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to Investigate Modern Spiritualism, in Accordance with the Request of the late Henry Seybert. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.

With us in America marriages are generally in the morning of life; our children are therefore educated and settled in the world by noon; and thus, our business being done, we have an afternoon and evening of cheerful leisure to ourselves. A great, wise, kindly nature rises out of these letters, a sort of American Doctor Johnson, with the faults and foibles and disagreeable eccentricities of the latter left out.

Professor Colvin's Keats.

Keats. By Sidney Colvin. [Harper & Brothers. 75c.]

Professor Colvin's delay in producing his biography of Keats, long since announced to appear as one of the series of "English Men of Letters," is justified by the character of the work as we now have it; for it is a most painstaking account of Keats's life in accordance with the present state of knowledge, and a highly valuable appreciation of the different poems and of the genius of the poet.

Science [Professor Colvin says] may one day ascertain the laws of distribution and descent which govern the births of genius, but in the meantime a birth like that of Keats presents to the ordinary mind a striking instance of nature's inscrutability. . . . Paradoxically born in a dull and middling walk of English city life, his father a hostler, his mother a livery-stable keeper's daughter, Keats seems to have nothing in his environment or his ancestry to favor or to promise the development of his high poetic strain. A passionate, pugnacious boy, he was converted to reading in his fourteenth year, and through the Faerie Queen burst into that world of poetry to which he soon dedicated himself with lasting affection. Influenced in a high degree, later, by the cockney poet, Leigh Hunt, and the pseudo artist, Haydon, whose pictures "belong to the kingdom not of true heroic art, but of rodomontade," the young poet of 1817 could yet show in his first volume, with all its crudity, a "momentary felicity of touch for nature" which brought him near to Shakespeare, and "a charm of morning freshness" like unto Dan Chaucer's. As a man he was self-tormented by his often morbid mind derived from the consumptive diathesis which killed him; his passion for a woman went to weaken, not to strengthen, his poetic power, but he "loved the principle of beauty in all things," and he could so enter into the Greek spirit that his Hyperion is "indeed one of the grandest poems in our language, and in its grandeur seems one of the easiest and most spontaneous." This is Prof. Colvin's final word of judgment on Keats's genius:

I think it probable that by power, as well as by temperament and aim, he was the most Shakespearean spirit that has lived since Shakespeare; the true Marcellus, as his first biographer has called him, of the realm of English song; and that in his premature death our literature has sustained its greatest loss.

The Brothers Grimm.

Brüder Grimm, Kinder und Hausmärchen. School Edition. Selected and Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary, by Charles P. Otis, Ph.D. [Henry Holt & Co.]

Within the year two American editions of the famous Hausmärchen have appeared. One, published by Heath and edited by W. H. Van der Smitten, contains only eight selections, and is plainly designed simply for school work in elementary German. Prof. Otis's edition is more comprehensive, and is, moreover, a worthy contribution to American scholarship in the field of German letters. The present work gives forty-three selections, embracing of course such ever-welcome tales as the "Bremen Musicians," "Clever Elsie," and the "Dornröschen," and also many of the less known though fully as characteristic pieces. What chiefly impresses us in Prof. Otis's editing is his evident desire to be helpful to students. The text is clear even to the point of attractiveness, and we do not complain that Gothic type is adhered to. To have dressed the Brüder Grimm up in modern style would not be to our liking. The orthography, however, has been conformed to the lately approved rules, but without doing violence to the text, which is that of the earliest editions; nor has Prof. Otis felt called upon to "improve" in the least upon the simple homeliness of the originals. If the vocabulary were in somewhat fuller type it would be more in harmony with the rest of the book; otherwise it is excellent. Its frequent suggestions in etymology, the helpful English cognates, and its use of German synonyms combine to make this something more than a mere school or college text-book. Synonyms we do not remember to have seen introduced in any recent English or American elementary work on German. It is to be feared, if Prof. Otis's tribute to the Grimms and to his own high reputation is used as it deserves to be, that the light clean muslin in which it is delicately clad will not recognize itself ere long.

Gilman's Historical Readers.

Gilman's Historical Readers. By Arthur Gilman, M.A. I. The Discovery and Exploration of America. II. The Colonization of America. III. The Making of the American Nation. Three vols. [Interstate Publishing Co. 36, 48, and 60c.]

It has been the object of Mr. Gilman in these three volumes to present a clear and simple outline of the discovery and colonization of North America and its development down to the present time. He has aimed to set forth causes and results in as picturesque a manner as possible, not attempting to give details or reasons. The work is therefore a story rather than a history, but it depends for its facts upon the most authoritative sources and involves the conclusions reached by many specialists. The tone of the author is impartial and thoroughly optimistic. He believes in the future of the nation, and his patriotism glows constantly through his account of its genesis and growth. His style is graceful and lucid; and as the series is graded, the first volume is within the reach of very young readers, while not beneath the attention of adults. We believe that Mr. Gilman has solved a difficult problem and solved it well. A detailed history is often confusing to young minds; a bare chronicle of events is dry and uninteresting. Mr. Gilman has taken the romantic view of his great theme and has given to an outline something of the color if not the detail of a finished picture. His work is like a water-color sketch, not to be "filled in," but to be supplemented later on by more elaborate representations. The books have no illustrations, save frontispiece portraits of Frobisher and Samuel Adams and an engraving of the old capitol of Virginia. There are few dates and most of them are in brackets. Indexes suggest points for investigation and study. Typographically the volumes are attractive; we commend them heartily to all concerned in the education of children as worthy of careful attention.

Expositions by the Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D. Third Series. [Thomas Whittaker. $2.25.] In Rev. Dr. Cox's third volume of expository discourses there are three series of much value. The first is composed of four sermons on the Charter of Individualism, expounding the famous chapter in Ezekiel on the connection of father and son in evil and well doing; here Dr. Cox sets forth the inheritance of goodness and the importance of environment, as a needed counter-statement to the one-sided teaching which dwells on the inheritance of sinful tendencies only. The second series endeavors to reconstruct the characters of the Hebrew psalmist's Heman, Ethan, and Asaph from the indications left in the psalms bearing their names. The third and longest series is devoted to the Faithful Sayings of the Primitive Church. These utterances, introduced by the formula "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance," Dr. Cox traces to the prophets of the early church, considering them to be sayings of these teachers which had become proverbial. In this series, as in the other discourses of the volume, Dr. Cox invariably sheds genuine light upon his text, and draws forth its essential truth; no expository sermons of the day are of higher grade.

Mrs. Shillaber's Cook-Book. By Lydia Shillaber. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.] The first comment upon this cookery-book will be that it is elemental. To which the reply is ready and conclusive that in nine kitchens out of ten a cookery-book, to be really useful, must be elemental. The bulk of this book consists of receipts. The form of the receipts is novel and excellent: the ingredients and the measures are given first in parallel columns; the directions for making, cooking, and serving follow. Bridget could ask nothing plainer. The short chapters of general principles contain some sound sense, as for example:

A cooking receipt should be followed exactly the first time it is used.

A generous wholesome diet is less expensive than doctors' bills.

No service can be menial that is sweetened by love and duty.

The dishes are the most significant symbol of the housekeeping.

Beecher as a Humorist. Compiled by Eleanor Kirk. [Fords, Howard & Hulbert.] The compiler of this small volume, guided by sympathy, admiration, and good taste, has carefully gone through Mr. Beecher's sermons, addresses, and other published writings, collected out thereof, and arranged (with an index) such of his sayings as illustrate his wit and humor—the spice of pleasantry that flavored all his discourse both in public and private. Humor, no less than tenderness, was a strong element in Mr. Beecher's composition. Its best expression, however, needed the accompaniment of his peculiar smile and kindling eye, and any joke or facetiousness of his loses to some extent by being served up in cold print, and apart from its connections.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

"Go, Little Book."

From Mr. R. L. Stevenson's "Underwoods."

ENVOY.

Go, little book, and wish to all
Flowers in the garden, meat in the hall,
A bin of wine, a spice of wit,
A house with lawns inclosing it,
A living river by the door,
A nightingale in the sycamore!

They say that Tolstoï is a crank. Well, he is a crank that turns the right way!

Women who write books, and put their names on the title-pages, would do a favor to the public without loss to themselves by prefixing Miss or Mrs. to the name, according as the fact may be.

The American Hebrew is gratified to note that some passages marked by an anti-Jewish spirit in Charles Dudley Warner's Their Pilgrimage, as it first appeared in serial form, have disappeared from it on its later appearance in book form. This is as it should be, and our contemporary's acknowledgment of the author's act is generous and — Christian.

Mr. N. H. Dole, who, by the way, has severed his connection with the Epoch of New York, can be heard to advantage, we are sure, in his lectures on Russian subjects, two of which were given at Deerfield, Mass., a few weeks since. We understand that one large school in New York has secured a series of them for next winter, and that Portland is negotiating for a turn. Mr. Dole has four sets of these lectures, of four lectures each; one on Russian History, one on the Russian Drama, one on the Russian Novels, and one on Russian Poetry and Music.

Mr. Ralph Thomas, writing to the London Academy under date of August 2, arraigns Mr. Cushing's dictionary of Initials and Pseudonyms for making free use of his — Mr. Thomas's — labors in the same field without suitable acknowledgment. "The very first pseudonym in his prospectus," says Mr. Thomas, "is taken from my Handbook of Fictitious Names without acknowledgment." Undoubtedly one compiler, in making use of the researches and materials of another compiler in a work of this class, ought to give generous credit therefor, in general, but we should say particular credit would be largely out of the question. The key to a pseudonym is common property, and we should not think that any finder of it would claim exclusive use of it.

The Keely Motor is for the time being eclipsed by the Baconian Cipher, the full disclosure of which, by means of Mr. Ignatius Donnelly's book, is promised for December next, with the result of demonstrating that Shakespeare was not Shakespeare. Professor Davidson has been out to see Mr. Donnelly, has examined the manuscript of his forthcoming work, The Great Cryptogram, has had the mysteries of it fully explained, and has reported his reconnaissance in the New York World. The reader may as well be fortified in advance for the explosion of hereditary beliefs with which he is threatened by this huge cartridge of literary dynamite. It is to be proved to us, it seems, by a new mass and array of arguments, first, that Shakespeare could not have written the plays that bear his name and that Bacon must have done so; for Shakespeare was vicious, unprincipled, and a criminal, never owned a library, left not a shred of a manuscript, and was clearly almost illiterate, while Bacon was learned, cultivated, accomplished, and had reason for concealment of his authorship. It seems to be the old story retold, with the mysterious cipher argument thrown in. Well, we shall see what we shall see.

We have received another communication from Mr. Maurice Thompson, replying to the editorial article in our last issue, and reiterating in a somewhat different form the remarks made in his own accompanying article, which we printed in full. We regret that the limits of our space, to say nothing of the just proportions of discussion, prevent us from printing this second article. In it Mr. Thompson insists that the question over Tolstoï is the question whether Christianity or socialism shall prevail in America; he says that he did not depend wholly upon Mr. Kennan's article for his facts about Tolstoï; he asks what sort of a Christian Tolstoï is by his own confession; he argues that a really great man would do really great things; he declares that material poverty is no part of Christianity; he would like to know if we really think it would be well for our rich men to send their daughters into the fields to associate with farm hands; and he affirms again that realism is brutalism, and idealism purifying. All of which goes to show that there are more points of view than one to this question, but not that Mr. Thompson's is the right one. We see no occasion for modifying anything we have said, and we cannot continue the discussion of the subject further upon this particular line.

A London dispatch to the New York Sun, last week, brought some rather sensational particulars of Mr. Ruskin's present state of health, and will, if it proves to be erroneous or exaggerated, plunge that gentleman into a state of mind with which there will be found nothing in the history of his previous excitements to compare. What, according to this correspondent, has been for some time whispered, is here told out loud; namely, that Mr. Ruskin's mind is giving way and that his aberrations are running into insanity. His eccentricities, it is said, have developed into manias; he gives away money so largely that he is relatively poor; one by one his valuable pictures are being sold to satisfy his pecuniary needs; he has at last consented to a cheap edition of his books; he has deeded his house and all its treasures to his cousin ministrant, Mrs. Severn, in an instrument which explicitly deprives him of the right to revoke the gift; he has been irritable to the degree of almost uncontrollable violence, and is now moody almost to the point of settled melancholy. Mr. Ruskin is not yet quite seventy. Such a deplorable account of the great art critic's condition will require confirmation, and the hope will spring in the heart of every one who reads this paragraph that it will prove a mistake. P. S. His daughter denies it.

THE LONGFELLOW GARDEN.

A LONGFELLOW "Park" no longer, but a Longfellow "Garden." The change of title is a great improvement. It better suits the nature of the plot which is to be turned into a rural monument of our favorite American poet, a plot which is by no means a park-like expanse; and it better suits the character of him whose memory it is to perpetuate, of whom the garden and not the park is the true emblem. Longfellow was the poet of nature rather than of art; his work was spontaneous and not studied. The difference between park and garden is the difference between town and country, and the country landscape is the image of Longfellow's verse, which strays like foot paths through the fields, bubbles like springs by the wayside, and blooms like the wild flowers. The Longfellow Garden is just the title for the simple little inclosure of walks and flowers which is now to be laid out under the spell of his name.

The piece of ground itself, which it will be remembered was offered by Mr. Longfellow's sons and daughters for this purpose in aid of the proposed memorial, lies directly across the road from the poet's house, and runs through from Brattle Street to Mount Auburn Street, having an outlook towards the South, the River Charles, the Brighton meadows, and the hills beyond. It is a narrow strip, of somewhat irregular outlines, perhaps 650 feet in length by 250 in width, and containing in all about 18,000 square feet. The plans of the committee for the laying out of the Garden will call for $50,000, of which $30,000 is now in hand, and work upon the Brattle Street end has already been begun.

Dividing the area into three nearly equal parts, the two parts nearest Brattle Street will be occupied by a double driveway, leading to the intended bust or monument, which will stand at the farther end, approached also by walks on both sides of the driveway, with a grass plot between. Beyond the monument the land falls away for the third section of the lot, and this, which is to be laid out distinctively as the Garden, will be reached by a flight of steps, leading down the face of the terrace. The visitor, entering from Brattle Street, will pass down one of the long walks to the monument, two thirds of the way to Mount Auburn Street, and then can descend the steps into the Garden. Behind him, across Brattle Street, will be the Longfellow house, and in front of him, as he faces the south, and beyond the pastures and flowers, will lie the Charles and its meadows. On either side are residences. It is a quiet and sunny spot, and the design promises a pleasant use of it.

Of the $30,000 now in the hands of the committee, $10,000 is the result of the subscriptions of $1,000 each, headed by Mr. E. N. Horsford, who has taken an active interest in the enterprise from the start, and who offered that amount conditional upon nine similar subscriptions. We hope the remaining $20,000 needed will not long be lacking, so that the plans of the committee can be speedily completed. The form of memorial that has been adopted is not our preference, but it will be graceful and acceptable, and we hope to see it realized in full at an early day. May not the friends of Longfellow be depended upon, now that the undertaking is clearly defined, to carry it vigorously through?

We will with pleasure receive and account for any contributions for the object, large or small.

MR. MAURICE THOMPSON ON MR. HOWELLS.

SOME one has sent us, in the shape of a cutting from the Chicago Sunday Times, an article by Mr. Maurice Thompson on "Realism and Criticism." The date is not affixed, but we judge it to be about contemporaneous with his communication in the last number of the Literary World. It is written in much the same unfortunate temper. As the sender seems to solicit our opinion of it, we will state that opinion frankly.

Mr. Thompson's literary judgments we shall not criticise in detail, though from them we should often dissent. Some of his leading points, restated as far as possible in his own language, are that the short story, in its best form, "is especially neglected" by our writers; that because of Bret Harte's success with California life, "American short-story writers have all gone into the dialect business;" that in doing this they have been "applauded and cheered on by our critics;" that the American people "like patriotic fiction," and would "give it overwhelming welcome if the critics and publishers would permit it;" that Rev. E. E. Hale's "The Man without a Country" is "the one truly great American short story;" that that one story is "worth more to America than all that Tolstoi, Tourgenief, and Zola have ever written;" that he has "no ill thing to say of Mr. James's novels," which are "of one sort of fiction;" that there is a class of critics in America who "would have all our short stories mere bucolic sketches redolent of hay, dripping with buttermilk, and full of nasal and catarrhal dialect;" that realism, "no matter what turn it takes, ends in abject vulgarity;" that Ben Hur, "which is not realistic fiction, has sold more copies than all of Mr. Henry James's books put together;"

that Rider Haggard's "flimsy but vital stories are better relished than Tolstoi's books;" and that it is remarkable that "American criticism can see nothing in American life which may be pointed out to American novelists as fit for heroic treatment."

So far perhaps Mr. Thompson exposes himself to nothing more serious than differences of opinion, though we think that one or more items of his indictment are not borne out by the facts. But this is not all. A considerable part of his article is occupied with Mr. Howells, whom he calls "a bright, light, deliciously humorous novelist," who nevertheless "has written no great novel," but only dainty and pleasing "analytical studies of what he calls life;" who is "a failure as a novelist," because he sees no "great good in his own country and people;" who "repudiates originality," "laughs to scorn ideality," and "hugs to his bosom the belief that photography is the only art worth preserving." Here again we shall take no issue with Mr. Thompson. These are perhaps matters of opinion, and Mr. Thompson has a right to his deliverances. But reading on further we come to the following paragraph:

From Tolstoi's "Sebastopol."

By permission of Harper & Brothers.

COUNT LEON TOLSTOI.

Mr. Howells teaches that to abjectly copy life is the whole of worthy art, but he does not practice what he teaches, and it is only his criticism that one may criticise in this connection. A novelist may consistently practice, as Mr. Howells does, a system of rather monotonous photography, and he may light up his work, as Mr. Howells often does, with genial humor and harmless irony, until he makes for himself an enviable place in the public estimation; but he cannot enhance his influence or enlarge his power by continually and insistently belittling the writers of his country in order to praise the writers of Russia. For some six or eight months past Mr. Howells has rung the changes (in monthly installments) of praise upon Tolstoi and his works, until finally he has put that rugged and peculiar Russian upon a plane with Christ. He seems to argue that because Tolstoi dresses like a clown and lives in assumed poverty he is necessarily great. He states it as a fact, and approvingly, that Tolstoi, although very wealthy, seriously contemplated suicide because his riches had failed to make him happy—a contemplation which ended, however, in Tolstoi keeping all his land and money with the mild mortgage of occasionally pegging away at a shoe whenever anybody came to his house! It is this sort of criticism that is fastening itself upon American letters, especially American fiction, and dragging it down to a very low level. A critic who has fallen in love with Tolstoi and Zola is driven to argue ad hominem, and this is why Mr. Howells feels bound to apotheosize Tolstoi and uphold his theory of abject poverty and non-resistance of evil. Mr. Howells's whole doctrine is that mediocrity is all of human life that is interesting—that a mild sort of vulgarity is the one living truth in the character of men and women. His criticisms are written to insist upon the commonplace as the one desirable element in fiction. It is to clinch and illustrate this doctrine that he approves Tolstoi's course in putting his daughters out to work in the fields with peasants, and in putting himself at the shoemaker's bench in order, as he says, to be like Christ.

With the above paragraph we shall take issue. We pronounce it a grossly unfair representation both of Mr. Howells's philosophy of literature in general and of his criticism of Tolstoi in particular. To say that Mr. Howells teaches that "to abjectly copy life is the whole of worthy art," that he is "constantly and insistently belittling the writers of his country in order to praise the writers of Russia," that he has put Tolstoi "upon a plane with Christ," that he seems to make Tolstoi necessarily great because he "dresses like a clown and lives in assumed poverty," that he mentions Tolstoi's contemplated suicide "approvingly," that his "whole doctrine is that mediocrity is all of human life that is interesting—that a mild sort of vulgarity is the one living truth in the character of men and women," and that "his criticisms are written to insist upon the commonplace as the one desirable element in fiction"—to say all this of Mr. Howells is to say what is most ungenerous and untrue. What is Mr. Thompson thinking of that he can allow himself, in a public journal, to make such statements as these touching the spirit, not to say the language, of an author whose distinction is now second only to that of the older group of American writers, and whose work is before America and England to speak for itself in totally different terms from these?

We take it upon ourselves to warn the readers of the Chicago Sunday Times, so far as we can reach them, and so far as they have read Mr. Thompson and have not read Mr. Howells, that his representations of Mr. Howells, as of Tolstoi, are misrepresentations, and that they do Mr. Howells a grievous wrong. And to Mr. Thompson we beg leave to suggest that truthfulness is the first weapon of the critic, and that until he has learned the art of stating the case with which he is dealing in fair terms he would better leave it alone. It is no honor to American letters that a reputable and sincere author can be spoken of in the public press in a way at once so inaccurate, so intemperate, and so abusive.

AN OLD BOOK AND ITS STORY.

ON the 26th of July last there was a book auction at Sotheby's in London. The collection offered was the library of William Brice of Bristol. "Added" to the library for the purposes of sale was a book thus described in the catalogue—lot 104:

Evangelia iv. Generatio Jesu Christi. Manuscript on vellum, with intitulation in letters of gold and 4 Figures of the Evangelists, illuminated in gold and colours, from the Brent Ely Library, old calf, gilt edges, Saec. xiv.

This old "Evangelistarium" had a good many external points of interest, and was bought in for the Bodleian Library at Oxford, though not for an immoderate price. If only the bidders had detected its possible inner story! As they saw and handled it, it was simply a book of selections from the Four Gospels, in Latin, measuring seven by four and five-eighths inches, and containing thirty-eight leaves. As further described, the writing and illuminations appear to be of about the year 1000.

Of the latter the principal are four full-page pictures of the Evangelists, seated, writing in a book, of the general type so common in Byzantine MSS.; but the details are no doubt English. The outer border is of gold and orange, and the upper part, in the case of the two first Evangelists, is occupied by two curtains looped back; in the other two by a semicircular arch resting on pillars, with two figures of buildings in the upper corners between the arch and the border. St. Luke is writing on a roll; St. John is in a chair with high square back. The colours most used are gold, pale green, blue, orange, and red. . . . On fol. 4r there is a peculiar and characteristic capital L (in the word Liber), the corner being rounded and the ends spreading into interlaced work with four mouths of dragons; the whole is gold except the mouths of light red, and a band running lengthwise in the middle of the letter of light orange, edged with dark red, and bearing a series of dark red pellets surrounded by white circles. Many of the capitals are entirely of gold, and the rubrics in gold or red. . . . The binding is perhaps of the early part of the seventeenth century—ordinary brown calf or leather, with plain gilding and an oval stamped ornament on each side.

Well, the old book was put up and knocked down, and went into the hands of Mr. F. Madan of Oxford, to be suitably catalogued for the library. Of course it underwent a careful examination in his hands. The last leaf but one showed signs of the action of water. Several names and other obscure marks of different ownership appeared here and there. On the second folio of the manuscript Mr. Madan found the following Latin poem, written in a hand which he says might be as old as the eleventh century:

Christe tibi semper grates persoluimus omnes,
Tempore qui nostro nobis miracula pandis.
Hunc librum quidam inter se iurare uolentes
Sumpserunt nudum sine tegmine nonque ligatum.
5. Presbyter accipiens ponit sinuamine uestis:
Flumine transmissio codex est mersus in amnem:
Portitor ignorat librum penetrasse profun-
dum,
Sed miles quidam cernens post multa mo-
menta
Tollere iam uoluit librum de flumine mersum,
10. Sed titubabat subito librum dum uidit apertum,
Credens quod codex ex toto perditus esset.
At tamen inmittens undis corpus cum uertice
summo [sic hypermetrica]
Hoc euangelium profert de gurgite apertum.
O uirtus clara cunctis, O gloria magna!
15. Inuiolatus enim codex permansit ubique,
Exceptis foliis binis que cernis utrinque,
In quibus ex undis paret contractio quedam,
Que testantur opus Christi pro codice sancto.
Hoc opus ut nobis maius mirabile constet
20. De medio libri pannum lini abtulit unda.
Saluati semper sint Rex Reginaque santa,
Quorum codex erat nuper saluatus ab undis.
Gloria magna Deo, librum qui saluat eun-dem.

Miss Lucy Hill, the daughter of Dr. Birkbeck Hill, whose new edition of Boswell's Life of Johnson was reviewed in our last issue, happened to be near Mr. Madan as, on the 29th of July, he made this discovery, and to her he expressed his regret that there was no clue to the "Rex Reginaque" of line 26, mentioning at the same time the miraculous incident, related in the poem, of the dropping of the book into the flood and its preservation from injury by water. Instantly Miss Hill recalled a story of the same sort told of Queen Margaret of Scotland, in a life of her written as is supposed by Turgot, Bishop of St. Andrews. For the sake of our classical readers we quote this passage also as follows:

Habuerat librum Euangeliorum, gemmis & auro perornatum, in quo quatuor Euangelistarum imagines pictura auro admixta decorabat; sed & capitalis quaeque littera auro tota rutilabat. Hunc codicem, prae ceteris, in quibus legendo studere consueuerat, carius semper amplexata fuerat. Quem quidam deferens, dum forte per vadum transiret; liber, qui minus caute pannis fuerat obvolutus, in medias aquas cecidit; quod ignorans portitor, iter quod inceperat securus peregit: cum vero postea librum proferre uellet, tum primum quod perdiderat agnovit. Quaerebatur diu nec inueniebatur. Tandem in profundo fluminis apertus jacere reperitur, ita ut illius folia impetu aquae sine cessatione agitantur, & panniculi de serico violentia fluminis abstraherentur, qui litteras aureas, ne foliorum contactu obfuscarentur, contexerant. Quis ulterius librum valere putaret? Quis in eo vel unam litteram parere crederet? Certe integer, incorruptus, illaesus, de medio fluminis extrahitur, ita ut minime ab aqua tactus uideretur. Candor enim foliorum, & integra in omnibus formula litterarum ita permansit, sicut erat antequam in fluvium cecidisset; nisi quod in extremis foliis, in parte, vix aliquod humoris signum videri poterat. Liber simul & miraculum ad Regiam refertur: quae, reddita Christo gratiarum actione, multo carius quam ante codicem amplectitur. Quare alii videant, quid inde sentiant; ego propter Reginae venerabilis dilectionem, hoc signum à Domino (fuisse opinor). Vita S. Margarithae Reginae Scotiae, caput 3, § 25. (Acta Sanctorum, Jun., to m. ii., p. 333 (Antv. 1693.) Vitae Sanctorum Scotiae, ed. J. Pinkerton, p. 348 (Lond. 1786).)

Putting these two legends together, with the book between them, and assembling the other points of evidence in the case, all of which we have not space to rehearse, and some of which are too technical to be understood except by experts, Mr. Madan saw before him, in this manuscript bought at Sotheby's, the identical "Evangelistarium," or Gospel Book, which had belonged to good Queen Margaret, and which was the subject of this reputed miracle!

So interesting a conclusion may not be accepted by all the experts, and we leave it to them to establish as a fact the identity which Mr. Madan may be pardoned for accepting so confidently. Very likely his "find" will prove to be well founded. The story of it, as told by Mr. Madan in the London Academy, is a pretty story, in any event. Miracle or no miracle, and whether this actually is the very book which belonged to Queen Margaret or not, it is pleasant to be reminded by it of so true and lovely a woman as was that gracious personage, a "saint" indeed if ever saint there were.

Margaret was born in Hungary in 1046, the daughter of Edward, son of Edmund Ironside, and of Agatha, daughter of the Emperor Henry III. She was niece too of Edward the Confessor. With a brother and sister she was schooled in Hungary, until she came to England at the age of ten. Fleeing to Scotland with her brother Edgar, she found refuge with King Malcolm III at Dunfermline, and became his wife in 1070. The story of her pure and gentle character and her loving and pervasive influence upon her husband, his court, and the kingdom, is one of the bright pages in Scottish history. Her husband's nature she softened and subdued; the clergy she molded and guided to be better pastors of the flock; she proved a skillful housekeeper, a sagacious stateswoman, and a sister of charity and mercy in her own person. She struggled with the prevailing vice of drunkenness by the ingenious invention of a "grace cup," otherwise known as "St. Margaret's cup," which she would fill at the feast with her own hand with the choicest wine, and then pass to be partaken of by all the guests with the promise that they would drink no more. This pleasant custom became general in three kingdoms besides her own. She founded the Abbey of Dunfermline and a number of churches, and the chapel to her memory, built by her youngest son, David I, in Edinboro Castle, is one of the oldest and most honored buildings in all Scotland. She had nine children, whose education was her great concern; and died of grief over the death of her husband and oldest son, slain in battle in 1093. The Roman Church canonized her; of Scotland she was made the patron saint; the 10th of June is her feast day; and here (perhaps) is her "Evangelistarium"—symbol of her beautiful and shining life and of the perpetuity of a pious example and consecrated service. What a precious acquisition this relic, if genuine, would have been for the "Sisters of St. Margaret," of England and America!

World Biographies.

Henry T. Finck. Henry Theophilus, or as he was first named, Henry Gottlieb, Finck, was born September 22, 1854, in Bethel, Missouri. When he was about eight years old his family removed to Oregon, where he lived until he entered Harvard College in 1872. He inherited unusual musical gifts from his father, who was so fortunate as to possess a good collection of classical music. An uncle was the translator of Fredrika Bremer's works into German. It is not the least remarkable of Mr. Finck's youthful achievements that he should have been able on occasional evenings in his Freshman and Sophomore years to have played the violoncello in the once famous Globe Theater orchestra, in the place of Wulf Fries. He might have earned distinction as a musician if not as a composer, had he not early turned his attention to philosophy. At the end of his Sophomore year he gained second class honors in the classics, and graduated in 1876 with highest honors in philosophy, and was entitled to the rank of a dissertation at Commencement. In 1876-77 he was abroad in Munich, the Tyrol, and Bayreuth; at the last place he had the happiness of meeting Wagner, to whose musical and other theories he has been and is devotedly attached. He was at Harvard again in 1877-78, studying sociology as a resident graduate. In 1878 he went abroad again as holder of the Harris Traveling Fellowship, and studied physiological and comparative psychology at Berlin, Heidelberg, and Vienna until 1881. Since then, with the exception of yearly trips to Europe, he has remained in or near New York city, where he is at present as musical editor on the staffs of the Evening Post and Nation. He is the author of "The Wagner Handbook," published in 1884, for the festival concerts given that year by Theodore Thomas. It is not now in print. He has written much for the New York, Chicago, and London papers, and has published articles in the Atlantic, Macmillan's, Lippincott's, and even one charming paper in Babyhood, in which he displayed much unusual knowledge for a bachelor. While his philosophical theories are those of an original mind, his early studies were influenced by Schopenhauer and von Hartmann. His Romantic Love and Personal Beauty is reviewed elsewhere.

RECENT POETRY.

Forewords.

THE tradition that any one who takes upon himself or herself the sacred name of "poet" must not under any circumstances he "scorned," is one of the interesting survivals from the middle ages, when a poet was really a poet and had something to say and was properly honored. Now, the laurel wreath, self-assumed by many, has become the badge of intellectual mendicancy. "Please do not scorn me; I am a poet," is the stereotyped introduction to many a volume of verse whose authors, like Teukros behind the shield of Aias, seek the shelter of the ægis of universal genius that they may shoot their petty arrows forth without molestation. They invite criticism but they insist that it shall be in the form of praise, and they are hurt if their demands for literary backshish are not complied with. This traditional exemption of the rhyming class has no counterpart in any other field of human activity. If a man writes a poor play or novel, or paints an execrable picture, or fails as an actor, or attempts to sing in public although devoid of vocal powers, he is not surprised to hear the facts set forth without circumlocution. But if one thrusts upon the public a volume of mediocre or trashy verses and a critic in the fulfillment of duty speaks of them as they really are, then the critic is "brutal," the "poet" is "scorned," and for this blasphemy against Parnassus there is no forgiveness! And yet the difference between bad verse and good verse is as the difference between a vile chromo and a beautiful painting—every judge of art can distinguish between them at a glance, and there is no more possibility of mistake than there is that an epicure shall fail to detect the distinction between a barn-yard fowl and canvas back duck. But the cook insists that the barn-yard fowl is duck, and is hurt if any one suggests that it is not as good as canvas back! Still, however much he may sympathize with the sensitive nature of the cook, we know that the epicure will continue to declare that all ducks are not of the canvas back species. A great deal of "brutal" criticism would be saved if authors would be content to offer their productions for what they really are. If many volumes of so-called "poetry," for instance, were classed with household "embroidery" or painting "plaques," or making "crazy quilts," or whatever else occupies the feminine or effeminate mind in moments of leisure, how much better it would be for the mutual relations of author and critic. It is not the thing itself, but the solemn pretense that it is worth the attention of any reasonable being, which arouses critical "brutality." Let the inditer of rhymes, who knows in his inner consciousness that he is not and never can be a poet, declare in a prefatory note: "This is a collection of metrical nonsense; I don't know why I wrote it; it has no meaning; please pass it by"—and the critic shall roar as gently as any sucking dove; his only comment shall be a murmured assent; and for that "poet," at least, brutal scorn shall not be his portion!

No prefatory apology for The Sailing of King Olaf, and Other Poems (Charles H. Kerr & Co. $1.00), is made by Alice Williams Brotherton, and we are not sure that any is needed. Mrs. Brotherton's theory is that a poem must be lived if it would be anything more than "an empty rhyme," and with this faith she could not go far wrong. "The Sailing of King Olaf" is a stirring ballad, although sometimes confused in expression toward the close. Mrs. Brotherton succeeds best in narrative or descriptive verse. Her "quatrains" are not clear cut enough, and there is a good deal of sameness about her verses on religious themes. One of the best things in the volume is "The Cardinal's Saraband," relating how, at command of Anne of Austria, Cardinal Richelieu, in jester's garb, danced a saraband before her court, and the revenge that followed. The versification is easy, although the rhymes are not wholly unimpeachable. Perhaps the following will serve as well as anything to indicate Mrs. Brotherton's poetical capacity:

CAMPION.

I placed a scarlet campion flower
In the wreathed tresses of my head.
"No damsel in hall or bower
Is fairer than my love," he said.

Years after in a folded book
I found a withered campion flower;
And paled, with that swift backward look
That ghost-seers have at twilight hour.

O withered heart, O love long dead!
"Poor faded flower that shone so fair,
Well suits thy phantom bloom" (I said)
"With the white tresses of my hair."

Philip Bevan claims for his Songs of the War for the Union (Robert Clarke & Co.) that they are "sincere and expressive." They are not expressive in any artistic sense because the author has, like many others, mistaken the inclination to versify for a genuine poetic inspiration, and he deals in stock phrases, showing that he got his impressions and ideas at second hand, consequently his poems are not sincere. In one, called "The March to Battle," we have a "chieftain" with storm-tossed "plume" demanding that his "minstrel" shall "pipe" a "pibroch wild:"

Their names are dear — I could weep full well
Where Wolfe and Warren and Lyons fell.

This is certainly neither sincere nor expressive, nor is it by any possibility to be classed as poetry, as the concluding stanza will show:

And should we sink in the battle's flood,
May we rise to the land of the brave and good,
Where the lamp of life renews its fire,
And never shall flicker or expire.

"Delphon; The Mystic Isle," a production filling some seventy-five pages, we confess to finding quite incomprehensible. What earth-born critic could understand such conundrums as this?

New troubles rose, for Achmet came, in absence of the sage,
His hands surround with sword and flame, and fiercer lust and rage;
We beg one hour to robe and bathe, and pay our vows to heaven,
Spake through the fissured crag, then swathe, and where 'twas westward riven.

We are inclined to believe that even the thankless task of reviewing recent poetry has its compensations, when at rarest intervals we come upon a volume from an unknown writer with so much charm and radiant promise as is to be found in A Branch of May, by Lizette Woodworth Reese (Baltimore: Cushings & Bailey). A very thin volume it is, materially speaking, thin and long and clad in sober gray, but its less than fifty pages have the perfume of springtime in their modest contents, and one goes over them again and again trying to analyze the source of their gracious, unassuming beauty. We can only say that Miss Reese has the lyrical note, that she writes simply of what she has seen and known, and that her art is spontaneous and without pretense. These qualities are shown exquisitely in this sonnet:

A WET JUNE DAY.

Scents, sounds as of November fill the air;
Of myriad blossoms down wet pathways strown,
Of ragged leaves off steaming branches blown
And dropped into dark hollows here and there.
Keen little gusts go whirling through the hush,
Driving the mist before them up the lane.
And lo, the lovely world grows ours again!
The orchard fences, the one elder bush,
Ponds with its white face in the thick drenched grass,
The rows of apple trees, gnarled, dripping, sweet,
The highway with its pools as gleam like glass;
Then, as still speeds the mist on shining feet,
Meadow, and wood, peaked roofs — beyond them shows
A windy west, the color of a rose.

That is a harmonious picture and of unforgettable beauty. The following has a concentration of passionate expression very noteworthy:

BETRAYED.

She is false, O Death, she is fair!
Let me hide my head on thy knee;
Blind mine eyes, dull mine ears, O Death!
She hath broke my heart for me!

Give me a perfect dream;
Find me a rare, dim place;
But let not her voice come nigh,
And keep out her face — her face!

We should be glad to quote further from Miss Reese's volume did the space at command permit — to give at least "Anne," "The Old Path," "A December Rose," or "After the Rain." But we can now only commend the book as worthy the attention of all who look in the verse of the day for sincerity, felicity, and spontaneity. Such A Branch of May is indicative of noble fruit by and by.

Mr. Piatt in exile continues to poetize and now comes forward with A Handful of New Verses (Robert Clarke & Co.), which, slight and unpretentious as most of them are, do not fail to express the author's earnestness, sympathy, simplicity of perception, and sturdy good sense. These are all excellent qualities in verse or prose, and Mr. Piatt, while he retains the vision unimpaired, does not lose the faculty divine of giving his readers ideas as well as words. To the pilgrims "At the Holy Well" he says:

For your belief such wonder-works are wrought,
And common day grows quick with miracle.

Many of the productions in this volume are poems of occasions, including an unpretentious but eloquent lyric on the "Army of the Potomac" at the final review in Washington in 1865. Among the "songs, sonnets, and epigrams" we discover some beautiful lines on "The Chrysalis":

Deeper down than Science sees
In old wells of mysteries
(With her mirrored face below,
Like a wonderlug child's aglow);
Farther far than sagst seeks —
Far as stars that shine in creeks —
Lo, in this unlovely shell
Masked Miracle doth dwell.

The exquisite power of expressing the emotions and sentiments of childhood, which is the recognized endowment of Mrs. S. M. B. Piatt, has inspired another series of graceful, tender, and artless poems from her pen — Child's World Ballads (Robert Clarke & Co.). The story of the "Three Little Emigrants" is charmingly told. Nurse, beguiled by soldier-tongue, forsakes her charges, who stealthily arise from bed and start for America. All night the wee ones travel till they come to Queenstown Beach and demand refreshments. But the ship had sailed:

"We have to stay here now, that's all!"
The boy sobbed, and he hid his face;
"The tender's gone. I tried to call
The captain. It's a splendid place!" —

"America, that's what I mean.
It is a splendid place. Why not?
Indians and bears and snakes! — I've seen
The pictures. . . . But the ship forgot!"

Then through his great still tears and vain
The baby choked his sighs. . . .
Died the gray admiral from Spain
Look westward with such longing eyes?

In a different vein are "The Child Mozart and St. John of Bohemia," "The Little Cowherd," and "The Old King's Atonement" — all as delicate of perfume as freshly opened wild flowers and culled by a loving hand.

Mr. Daniel S. Preston has manifestly labored with well-meant zeal at his historical play of Columbus; or, A Hero of the New World (G. P. Putnam's Sons), and in some respects it is a noteworthy effort. The conception of the character of Columbus is fine and true, exalting his noble qualities and not shrinking from the manifestation of his faults. The action is generally easy and natural, though at times hurried and confusing; the versification (unrhymed decasyllables) is forcible, harmonious, and sufficiently varied; certain scenes are impressive through their dignity and restrained vigor. But the plot, with its employment of the supernatural, is strained and lacking in directness; the dramatic personae, aside from two or three leading personages, are not fully individualized; the speeches are often fragmentary or inconclusive; and there is a lack of dramatic unity which, with all his effort, the author has been unable to attain. We cannot see that the testimonials of "friendly interest" printed by Mr. Preston at the close of the book add anything to its weight with the public.

The collection of Society Verse by American Writers (Benjamin & Bell), selected by Ernest DeLancy Pierson, is gathered largely from the periodical literature of the last ten years, represents some forty writers, and contains some eighty specimens of that imitative pseudo-Gallic rhyming which it is now the fashion to call "the vers de société of the younger American school." It must be confessed that Mr. Pierson has fished with a close-meshed net and has brought a good many minnows to market. Not one in ten of these pretty versifiers has an original idea. The whole thing is imitative — the imagery, the turns of expression, the form — and if we are not very much mistaken, cultivated readers are growing weary of the hackneyed conceits, however prettily they may be served. The fact is, the matter has been vastly overdone. As Mr. Pierson says, "nearly every newspaper employs its professional verse writer," and like a host of grasshoppers they all chant in the same strain. Those who are not tired of rondeau, rondel, ballade, and triolet, triolet, ballade, rondel, and rondeau (all patterned, not after French types, but after the clever adaptations of the amiable Mr. Dobson), will no doubt welcome this excellently printed book, which after all probably has its purpose to fulfill, idle though that purpose be.

Mr. Frederick A. Stokes has done good service by collecting into a dainty volume of convenient compass The Poems of Sir John Suckling (White, Stokes & Allen), by weeding out the objectionable lines and productions that to modern readers mar the beauty of his work, by arranging the poems for the first time under well chosen headings, and by prefixing a carefully written preface embodying appreciatory remarks on Suckling's verse and giving briefly the facts in his career as courtier, soldier, and author. Every one who would know the capacity of English in the lighter forms of verse cannot neglect Suckling, whose fame rests upon foundations so meager and yet so secure; and this, the first American edition of his poetical works, is admirably calculated to enhance his fame among the multitude.

MINOR FICTION.

Calamity Jane. A Story of the Black Hills. By Mrs. George E. Spencer. [Cassell & Co. 25c.] The story of Calamity Jane is, we believe, of transatlantic origin, but it must have been written by one who has observed closely the superficial conditions of life in Western mining camps; its studies of character are original and striking if not always veracious; and its plot, although simple, is stirring enough to keep one's interest fairly aroused to the end. Charles De Pew, having married his rich uncle's amanuensis and thereby cut himself off from all prospects of inheritance, takes his girlish bride to the Black Hills, where he intends to pursue his career as a lawyer. At a supper station on the frontier they meet first with "Charley," a graceful, gentle, blue-eyed lad whom they find to be the best shot in the country. In their next interview "Charley" appears as the leader of a band of road agents and saves Mrs. De Pew from death. At Deadwood, De Pew becomes counsel for old Oliver, who is fighting his claim against the encroachments of a thieving corporation. A midnight assault, an explosion in the mine, the wounding of old Oliver, are dramatic occurrences. Meanwhile at a "ladies' picnic" Calamity Jane appears upon the scene and bears away locks of hair from twenty participants in the rural merry-making. How De Pew got back in time to measure the claim and make good the rights of old Oliver, thanks to "Charley's" assistance; how they sold out for a million and De Pew was elected "delegate to Congress;" who "Charley" was and what became of Calamity Jane, the reader will perhaps thank us for not revealing. Mrs. Spencer writes agreeably with no attempt at sensational effects, and the result is a gratifying story.

Red Spider. By S. Baring-Gould. [D. Appleton & Co. 50c.] Mr. Baring-Gould explains in a preface to Red Spider that he took the plot of the story from a German tale, "and has strung on it sundry pictures of what was beginning to fade half a century ago in Devon." The result is rather incongruous and not wholly pleasing. The tone is somber and foreign to the soil, and the pictures of manners and customs are fragmentary, however true they may be to actuality. The "village characters, incidents, and superstitions" may all be true, but they somehow fail to harmonize. The Red Spider is the name given to Honor Luxmore in accordance with a local tradition. She is a high-spirited, noble girl who to save her family from disgrace agrees to marry Taverner Langford, a morose and miserly farmer, although she loves young Hillary Nanspian, the son of Taverner's best-hated enemy. She agrees because Charles Luxmore, her good-for-nothing brother, is supposed to have stolen £5,000 from Taverner, who promises not to prosecute if Honor will consent to be his wife. But Charles returns and shows himself to have been weak but not wicked, and Mrs. Veale, the real culprit, is made to drink the bowl of poisoned broth she has prepared for her master, and perishes miserably; so Honor escapes from the toils and marries her Larry. The haying festival or haysel, a country fair, and a "hare hunt" are among the popular customs described.

Tempest Driven. By Richard Dowling. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.] Alfred Paulton, "twenty-eight years of age, of middle height, and fair complexion," had just left some friends in the city, and come out by train to his home in one of the suburbs of London. He had nearly reached his father's gate when he was startled by cries for assistance issuing from a house which till the day before had been unoccupied. The cries were those of a young woman who, with her husband, had moved in that day. She said that she had left her husband and gone up stairs to her room, and there had dozed a little, and on her return an hour later had found her husband dead, with a large quantity of chloroform sprinkled over his beard and face. Suspicion points to murder. From all this a rather clever story of nearly four hundred pages is evolved, semi-detective in style.

Drops of Blood. By Lily Curry. [J. S. Ogilvie & Co. Paper, 25c.] This is a collection of fourteen stories, and a more appropriate title we have not seen for a long time. In only four of the stories does the author spare the hero from a violent end. In the other ten, two die as the result of some mishap, three are killed outright, and five commit suicide. That is a good showing for only fourteen stories.

The Shaving of Shagpat, an Arabian Entertainment, and Farina. By George Meredith. [Roberts Brothers. $2.00.] Lovers of George Meredith—and their tribe increases—will be pleased to be able to add to the nine hitherto published volumes of his works a tenth, containing the now rare and probably otherwise inaccessible Shaving of Shagpat, and Farina. Thirty years ago the English mind was uncertain as to whether the brilliant Shaving of Shagpat was a joke. At all events it would have been safer then to have labeled it as such. Aside from its wit, it shows that Meredith at the age of thirty must have been an accomplished orientalist, but, like John Payne and several others of the ablest and least "popular" English men of letters, singularly modest about proclaiming his attainments. The Tragic Comedians alone now of Meredith's works of fiction still awaits republication. It would be a welcome service for Messrs. Roberts Brothers to gather into a volume uniform with this edition George Meredith's scattered poems.

PERIODICALS.

How well Scribner's Magazine maintains its high quality of attractiveness and how admirably it administers to refined and cultivated readers of current literature! The September number has nothing to lose by comparison with its predecessors. If one notices a little falling off in the marvelous Thackeray letters it is only to have one's expectations aroused concerning the next installment. Edward L. Wilson gives us a comprehensive survey of the modern Nile, losing sight neither of the antiquities nor the contemporary life along its shores; and the article is finely illustrated. W. S. Rainsford relates his adventures while camping and hunting in the Shoshone. "There is no land," he says, "where Nature recreates a man as she does there." But for hunting in the Rockies one must have a good foundation of muscle and lung power to start with.

Moncure D. Conway presents an unpublished draft of a national constitution by Edmund Randolph, and offers a glimpse "into the workshop of the framers of the Constitution." E. H. House begins an international romance in which a young American and a Japanese novice are leading characters. Prof. George T. Ladd explains the importance of secondary education in relation to the development of the university in this country. A. S. Hill, apropos of "English in Newspapers and Novels," utters strictures that are wholly just.

Dr. Holmes gets to the end of his chronicle of "Our Hundred Days in Europe" in the Atlantic for September, but promises some general conclusions by way of postscript. John Bach McMaster reviews the story of Franklin's career in France. Elizabeth Robins Pennell makes a study of early egotism, by which term she means the barbaric selfness of savage or barbarous man, and indicates wherein socialism is preferable. There is an instructive paper on "The Book of the Foundation of St. Bartholomew's Church in London." Edmund Noble describes winter travel by river and road in Russia in a journey from Astrakhan to Tsaritsyn. Percival Lowell begins what promises to be a valuable analysis of Far Eastern civilization, which, as he aptly puts it, "is not a negation, but an inversion of our own"—an abnegation of personality.

Harper's for September has a most attractive table of contents. Riding in New York is the subject of an interesting article, in which the rapid growth of equestrianism is pointed out and the various styles of riding aptly described. "In all, it seems safe to estimate that there are 1,200 saddle horses in New York, and it is not likely that there were a full dozen before the Park was opened." Richard Wheatley's article on home rule in the Isle of Man affords a valuable account of the government and social characteristics of "the dear little island" and is strongly applicable to the present Anglo-Irish contention. "Content with dependency on the empire, the Manx largely control all local matters, and leave national and international affairs to the management of the government at Westminster." Still another descriptive article of unusual interest is W. E. Curtis's on the republic of Chili. "The Chillano is the Yankee of South America," bold, aggressive, money-making, dreaming of conquest, the leader in Southern civilization. All of the articles mentioned are finely illustrated. A noteworthy story by Amélie Rives appears in this number. Mr. Howells again remarks that the best fiction is democratic in its aims and methods, and once more declares the futility of criticism.

Dr. W. F. Hutchinson continues his voyage along the Caribbean in the American Magazine for September, giving attractive accounts of Curaçoa and Maracaibo. Curaçoa, with its quaint Dutch architecture, its steady average temperature of 70°, its cool nights, and its freedom from epidemic diseases, would be, the doctor thinks, one of the most desirable health resorts in the world if there were a decent hotel on the island. Lieut. Hughes gives a gratifying report of our new navy, and shows that we have only made a beginning in naval armament if we would compete with other leading nations. J. Macdonald Oxley describes the military system of Canada, and maintains that our northern neighbor is in a good condition for defense with its citizen soldiery of 37,000 and its reserve force of 1,000,000 men. Dr. A. S. Isaacs writes of Jewish progress in the United States, and points to a possible fellowship of sects by which Judaism will attain a breadth and strength hitherto unknown.

In Lippincott's for September the complete novel is "The Red Mountain Mines," by Lew Vanderpool, a disagreeable, not to say offensive, story. Miss Holtzmeier tells how she tried to make a living in England and only succeeded by going on the stage. Moncure D. Conway brings to light a hidden chapter in history in his account of Edmund Randolph as "A Suppressed Statesman of Our Early Republic," to whom he thinks the world has not done justice. The train of events that brought about Randolph's overthrow is clearly traced, and the alleged intrigue with Fouchet is effectually disposed of. Mr. Conway has had access to new material and he makes out a good case.

Mr. George Saintsbury's critical paper on "Jeffrey" in the August Macmillan is a sober and well-balanced estimate of that famous reviewer, leaning on the whole to the appreciative and kindly side, and handling Jeffrey's faults of character and manner with a charitable tone. Jeffrey, he says, was neither "a critical Columbus nor a critical Socrates;" his strength lay "in the combination of a fairly wide range of sympathy with an extraordinary shrewdness and good sense in applying that sympathy." His characteristics were "decidedly French." A good idea of the Edinburgh Review and its work may be had from this article. The unsigned paper on "The Profession of Letters," further on in the number, is in the form of an uncle's letter to his nephew, and may about be summed up in Mr. Punch's advice to men about to marry—"Don't." The writer writes in full view of the difficulties in the way of a literary career, and among other good points draws the important distinction between literature and journalism, two fields which coalesce only in part and are often confounded with each other.

READINGS IN THE ENGLISH PAPERS.

—Mr. George Hooper has written a history of The Campaign of Sedan, or "the Downfall of the Second Empire," which by all accounts is one of the most substantial and brilliant performances in military history that we have had for a long time. It is published by Bell & Sons and we ask for its republication here.

—We read in the Athenaeum that Mr. Wm. Black has produced a new book somewhat after the plan of an old one, called The Strange Adventures of a Canal Boat; that Dr. Smiles's new book is called Life and Labour; or, Characteristics of Men of Culture, Industry, and Genius; that Miss Braddon has begun a new three-volume novel under the title of The Fatal Three; and that Archdeacon Farrar is writing the introduction for a new and handsome edition of Scott's Tales of a Grandfather.

—The Academy of July 16 had a discriminating but appreciative review of Dr. Francis E. Abbot's Scientific Theories, a remarkable philosophical work of 1885.

—The Athenaeum, reviewing the Memoirs of Wilhelmine, Margravine of Baireuth, expresses considerable and (it would seem) well-founded doubt of the entire trustworthiness of the author. In fact it goes so far as to say "that from the point of view of history the work is absolutely worthless." That is extreme language, and is not borne out by the statements which follow. Among these is the fact that there are eight MS. versions of the Memoirs, seven of them copies of the original, and all exhibiting wide differences; and that some of the author's statements are contradicted by her own letters and other documents.

—We read in the Academy that Mr. Darwin's life, by his sons, will be ready in October, and at about the same time M. du Chaillu's work on the Vikings; that Mr. W. Clark Russell has nearly ready a new Book for the Hammock; and that Prof. Thorold Rogers is steadily pushing forward his History of Agriculture and Prices in England.

—According to the Athenæum Mrs. Oliphant is the author of the serial, "Joyce," now running in Blackwood's Magazine. According to the same authority Macmillan & Co. are to publish two volumes of sermons by the late Bishop Frazer of Manchester; and the Contemporary Review is to begin this month a series of papers on the present depression of trade in England, by Hon. David A. Wells.

—The Athenæum says that Mr. R. L. Stevenson, now about coming to America to spend some time in Colorado, is preparing for the press a new edition, in two volumes, of his Virginibus Puerisque, which has been long out of print. The first volume will be a mere reprint; of the second, which has the sub-title "Memories and Portraits," the interest will be largely autobiographical, as it will contain the several sketches and reminiscences contributed to periodical literature by the author during the last five or six years—the "Talk and Talkers," the "Pastoral," and so forth. The two volumes, it is understood, may be vended separately, though they form but one book. Mr. Chatto is the publisher. They may be expected in the early part of next season, together with Mr. Stevenson's Underwoods, a volume of verse in Scotch and English, and his memoir of the late Fleming Jenkin.

—Marshal MacMahon's autobiography, the Athenæum says, lately announced in France, is for private circulation only.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The New York Shakespeare Society, which has been debating the problem of a line notation of the plays that should be adapted to any and all critical study of the text in any edition, has finally decided upon an entirely unique system of numbering the lines of the plays, and it will be first employed in the "Bankside Parallel Text Edition," the first number of which will be issued early in October from the Riverside Press.

—For Miss Alice Wellington Rollins in our last issue read Mrs. Alice Wellington Rollins. She lives in New York, under the same roof with Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. have in press a translation of Dostoevsky's account of his ten years' exile in Siberia.

—Advance orders for Judge Tourgee's new novel, Button's Inn, at Roberts Brothers', have necessitated the enlargement of the first edition.

—Mr. F. Marion Crawford is expecting to spend the coming winter in this country.

—Gen. Wallace's Ben Hur has reached its 185th thousand.

—The Curio is the name of a new illustrated monthly in New York devoted to bric-a-brac.

—Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, will publish shortly The Earth Trembled, a story of the Charleston earthquake, by E. P. Roe. Among the autumn announcements of this house are a new edition of Ormsby's translation of Don Quixote, in four volumes 12mo; Blue Jackets of 1812, by Willis J. Abbot, fully illustrated by W. C. Jackson and H. W. McVickar; two stories by Amelia E. Barr—Paul and Christina and A Border Shepherdess; Ran Away from the Dutch, a book for boys, by M. T. H. Perelear of the Dutch Indian Service; and The Life and Times of John Jay, by William Whitlock of Baltimore.

—John C. Buckbee & Co., Chicago, have just ready an English Masterpiece Course, by Prof. Alfred H. Walsh; A Complete German Manual, by Wesley C. Sawyer, Ph. D.; Modern Cities and their Religious Problems, by Rev. S. L. Loomis, with an introduction by Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D.; Evangelistic Work in Principle and Practice, by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D.; the 46th thousand of The Home Cook-Book; and a revised edition of The Pastor's Handbook, by W. W. Everts.

—The autumn announcements of G. P. Putnam's Sons include The Art of Conversation, by Prof. J. P. Mahaffy; Egyptian Archaeology, by Prof. Maspero, translated by Miss Amelia B. Edwards; The Student's History of the English Parliament, by Dr. Rudolf Gneist; Two Years in Europe, by Rodney Glisan, M.D.; a Life of Archbishop Pole, by F. G. Lee, D.D.; Slav or Saxon, a study of Russian development, by W. D. Faulke; A Study of American Finance, 1789-1835, by John Watts Kearney; Arcady: For Better for Worse, by Augustus Jessop, D.D.; The Count of the Saxon Shore, a tale of the departure of the Romans from Britain, by Prof. Alfred J. Church; and The History of the Revolutionary Movement of 1848-9 in Italy, Austria, Hungary, and Germany, by C. Edmund Maurice.

—The readers of the English Illustrated Magazine will be interested to learn that with the new volume, beginning in October, Mr. H. D. Traill will contribute a monthly article of criticism on matters literary, social, and artistic. A paper on "Personal Reminiscences of Charles Dickens" will also appear in an early number, and this will be followed by a series of letters of Charles Dickens, never before published. Fiction will be represented by Professor Minto, who contributes a historical novel under the title of "The Mediation of Ralph Hardelet," and there will be stories by Mrs. Molesworth, B. L. Farjeon, J. S. Winter, and others.

—Thomas Whittaker, New York, will publish Five Last Things, by Rev. Dr. J. A. Spencer, and The Vine Out of Egypt, a history of the growth of the Episcopal Church in America, by Rev. W. W. Newton.

—The édition de luxe of Randolph Caldecott's picture books, which the Routledges have in preparation, bids fair to become scarce almost before publication. The book will be printed in colors from the original blocks by Edmund Evans, and is priced at $25.00. The same publishers issue another collection of Caldecott's works under the title of Last Graphic Pictures, and, among other finely illustrated publications, a large paper edition of Mérimée's Carmen, Daudet's Tartarin of Tarascon, and a new edition of Planché's translation of the Countess d'Aulnoy's Fairy Tales, with numerous original illustrations by Gordon Browne and Lydia F. Emmet.

—Under the title of "Knickerbocker Classics," G. P. Putnam's Sons will issue in tastefully printed 32mo form a series of standard works from all literatures, including the Gesta Romanorum, Gulliver's Travels, The Book of British Ballads, The Travels of Baron Münchhausen, and The Vicar of Wakefield. The same house announces "The Tappan Zee Edition" of the belles lettres works of Irving in twelve volumes 32mo, printed from new type.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish a series of manuals on English history, of which the first will be The Misrule of Henry Third, by Rev. W. H. Hutton, M.A. Other volumes are Edward Third and his Wars, by W. J. Ashley; The Crusade of Richard I, by J. Archer; Simon de Montfort and his Cause, by Mr. Hutton; The Troublous Days of Richard II, by Miss Toulmin Smith; and Alfred and the Danes, by F. York Powell, the editor of the series.

—To the "Story of the Nations" series G. P. Putnam's Sons will add the following volumes: The Story of the Goths, by Henry Bradley; The Story of Ireland, by the Hon. Emily Lawless; The Story of Medieval France, by Prof. Gustav Masson; The Story of Turkey, by Stanley Lane-Poole; The Story of Holland, by Prof. J. E. Thorold Rogers; The Story of Mexico, by Susan Hale.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. will publish this autumn two more volumes of Tolstoy's works—The Invaders and A Russian Proprietor. They have nearly ready Hugo's Les Misérables, in five volumes, and a popular edition of the same work in one volume. Among other forthcoming publications of this house are Irving's works in six volumes; Tennyson's works in a beautiful eight-volume "Handy" edition; "Poems in Color," six little volumes of selections from various poets, with lithographed illustrations from designs by W. J. Whittemore; From Heart and Nature, poems by Sarah K. Bolton and Charles K. Bolton; Burnham Breaker, a story by Homer Greene; Boyhood of Living Authors, by William H. Rideing; The Giant Dwarf, by J. A. K.; French Folk Lore Stories, a collection of provincial legends; a new and cheaper edition of "The Rollo Books" in seven volumes; and St. Paul's Problem and its Solution, by Faye Huntington.

—To their series of "Red Line Poets" T. Y. Crowell & Co. add this season Keble's Christian Year, Palgrave's Golden Treasury, Percy's Reliques, Southey's Poems, Lockhart's Spanish Ballads, and Hugo's Poems. The series, now comprising 72 volumes, is prepared in a variety of bindings, such as "India Bamboo," "Embossed Calf," "American Russia," "Seal Russia," and "Wild Rose"—all designed with skill and taste.

—Lee & Shepard will publish two noteworthy holiday books: A Bunch of Violets, by Irene E. Jerome, whose drawings of New England scenery are favorably known; and Scott's poem, The Bridal of Triermain, in oblong quarto form, with fourteen full-page illustrations by Percy Macquoid, who prepared the original sketches for the Royal Institute.

—Among the announcements of new publications by Estes & Lauriat we notice Zigzag Journeys in India, by Hezekiah Butterworth; The Song of the River, by Charles Kingsley, with sixteen illustrations by the "photo-etching" process from drawings by St. John Harper, W. L. Taylor, and other American artists; a new edition of Starr King's White Hills, with several new photogravure illustrations; Flower Idyls, by Gertrude Strohm; Social Customs, a "manual of American etiquette," by Florence Howe Hall; The Boys of 1812, by Prof. J. Russell Soley; and a new translation, complete and unabridged, of the Fairy Tales of Hans Christian Andersen.

— The leading holiday book to be issued by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. for this season will be The Vision of Sir Launfal, by James Russell Lowell, with a new portrait of Mr. Lowell from a charcoal drawing by Alexander, and full-page mounted India print illustrations engraved on wood by Frederick Juengling after drawings by Bruce Crane, F. W. Freer, Swain Gifford, Alfred Kappes, H. S. Mowbray, Walter Shirlaw, and Hopkinson Smith; the cover has been designed by Mrs. S. W. Whitman. Other books by Mr. Lowell to appear this season are Agassiz and Other Poems, and the long-promised monograph on Nathaniel Hawthorne. This last volume is to be added to the "American Men of Letters" series, which is also to include Benjamin Franklin, by John Bach McMaster. To the "American Commonwealths" series are to be added Tennessee, by James Phelan, Ph.D., Ohio, by Rufus King, and Missouri, by Lucien Carr. The "American Statesman" series will be enlarged by the addition of monographs on Gouverneur Morris, by Theodore Roosevelt, Martin Van Buren, by Edward M. Shepard, and George Washington, by Henry Cabot Lodge.

— A Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson, by James Elliot Cabot, will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. this fall, and a limited large-paper edition of the biography will be prepared in two volumes. With the Houghton imprint will also appear Dr. Holmes's Atlantic papers on Our Hundred Days in Europe, and Longfellow's Evangeline "decorated with leaves from the Acadian forests." Other works to be published by this house include the Works of Edward Fitzgerald in two octavo volumes; Roman Excavations, by Prof. Rodolfo Lanciani; The Fighting Veres, lives of the two English generals of that name, by Clements R. Markham; a life of Mitchell, the astronomer, by his son F. A. Mitchell; In the Track of Ulysses, by William J. Stillman; History of Prussia During the Reign of Frederick the Great, by Prof. Herbert Tuttle; a memoir of Richardson, the architect, by Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer; The World to Come, sermons, by Rev. W. B. Wright; Lyrics, Idyls, and Romances selected from the poems of Robert Browning; the works of Bunyan in three volumes; an edition of the Coleorton letters from Coleridge, Wordsworth, Scott, and Southey, lately discovered in Leicestershire; Men and Letters, essays by Horace E. Scudder; Wit, Wisdom, and Beauty of Shakespeare, by C. S. Ward; a revised and enlarged edition of the Victorian Poets of E. C. Stedman; a volume of Winter Selections from the journals of Henry D. Thoreau; a "Riverside Edition" in four volumes of the Poetical Works of Mr. Whittier; and "Fireside Editions," each in six volumes, of De Quincey and Hawthorne.

— In fiction Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish Paul Patoff, by Marion Crawford; Frontier Stories, by Bret Harte; A Princess of Java, by Mrs. S. J. Higginson; The Second Son, by M. O. W. Oliphant and T. B. Aldrich; The Gates Between, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; and Knitters in the Sun, by Octave Thanet; and in poetry The Old Garden, by Margaret F. Deland; The Unseen King, by Caroline Leslie Field; and volumes by the late E. R. Sill and Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

— Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will be also the American publishers of William Anderson's sumptuous monograph on The Pictorial Arts of Japan, with its 80 chromo-lithographs and photogravure plates and 150 wood-cuts. The edition is limited to 1,000 copies at $50 per set; an artist's proof edition of 100 copies is offered to subscribers at $100 per set.

— Thomas Whittaker, New York, will publish A Village Maid, a novel by Helen Hays, and Inchfawn, a story of Irish life and character, by L. T. Mead. The warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y., will publish through Mr. Whittaker of New York a treatise on the Doctrine of Morality. Dr. Fairbairn is known by his College Sermons, issued here some two or three years since and afterwards reprinted in England.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

THE GIRLS' BOOK OF FAMOUS QUEENS. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

Fiction.

ONLY A FARMER'S DAUGHTER. By L. Herbert Andrews. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.

CULTURE'S GARLAND. By Eugene Field. Ticknor & Co. Paper, 50c.

IN BAD HANDS, AND OTHER STORIES. By F. W. Robinson. Harper & Bros. Paper, 20c.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

[Ready Sept. 10.]

A PRINCESS OF JAVA.

A Novel. By Mrs. S. J. HIGGINSON. 12mo, $1.50.

This story has special interest from its novel scenes and characters. It describes a princess of Java and her fortunes; also a prince of Java, an English gentleman, and a girl half English, half Javan. The incidents and adventures are thoroughly engaging, and the descriptions of life and nature in Java add peculiar attractions to the story.

THE UNSEEN KING AND OTHER POEMS.

By CAROLINE LESLIE FIELD, author of "High Lights." 16mo, parchment, $1.00.

Those who admired and enjoyed Mrs. Field's novel, "High Lights," will welcome this volume of her poems. It is marked by the same refinement, earnestness, and thoughtful tone, and has in addition a lyrical quality which will commend it to the lovers of verse.

FRONTIER STORIES.

By BRET HARTE. Volume VI. of his Collected Works. Riverside Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00; half calf, $3.00. The set, 6 vols., cloth, $12.00; half calf, $18.00.

This volume contains Flip: A California Romance; Found at Blazing Star; In the Carquinez Woods; At the Mission of San Carmel; A Blue Grass Penelope; Left out on Lone Star Mountain; A Ship of '49.

* * For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

Messrs. Roberts Brothers

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

JUDGE TOURGEE'S NEW STORY, BUTTON'S INN.

By ALBION W. TOURGEE, author of "A Fool's Errand," "Hot Plowshares," etc. One handsome 12mo volume, bound in cloth, 428 pages, price $1.25.

Judge Tourgee's new story is located in the region of Chautauqua Hills and Lake Erie Shore, at the time just before the stage-coach gave way to the locomotive—1815 to 1830. In the volume only the name and the situation of the original Button's Inn have been retained. He says: "The life of this region in which the story is located, during the later years of the Inn, was precisely that from which Mormonism sprang. Two of its early leaders—one an Apostle—went from this county. Without regard to what Mormonism now is, I have endeavored to depict it as it was then regarded, both by those who came in contact with it and the 'Saints' themselves."

II.

The New History of Sanford and Merton.

Being a True Account of the Adventures of "Masters Tommy and Harry," with their Beloved Tutor, "Mr. Barlow." By F. C. BURNAND, author of "Happy Thoughts," etc. With 75 illustrations by Linley Sambourne. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00; paper covers, 50 cents.

Recent New Books.

A LAD'S LOVE. By ARLO BATES. $1.00.
OURSELVES AND OUR NEIGHBORS. By LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. $1.00.

A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME. Third edition. $1.25.

CRACKER JOE. "No Name Novel." $1.00.

BETWEEN WHILES. By HELEN JACKSON (H. H.). $1.25.

LIFE OF MRS. SIDDON'S. Famous Women Series. $1.00.
DAVE, HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By MAY ALDEN WARD. $1.25.

For sale by all booksellers. Mailed by the publishers, postpaid, on receipt of the price. 3 Somerset Street, Boston.

CULTURE'S GARLAND:

Being Memoranda of the gradual rise of Literature, Art, Music and Society in Chicago and other Western Ganglia. By EUGENE FIELD "of the Chicago News." With Preface by Julian Hawthorne. No. 16 of Ticknor's Paper Series. 50 cents; in cloth, $1.00.

"The account of Mr. James Russell Lowell's visit to Chicago last winter, the comments on 'Colonel' Thomas Bailey Aldrich's 'Last Caesar,' and the estimate of the complete works of Sappho by members of the Literary Club, are quite as good as much of Mark Twain's work."—Boston Post.

"The Works of Sappho," "Dixey as a Nemesia," "A Spanish Romance," "More about Kate Field," "A Chicago Christmas Legend," and hosts of others, are inimitable in their comedy. Whatever else one has, or goes without, he will be sure to possess a copy of the funniest book on modern record."—Boston Traveller.

"The name of Eugene Field is a famous and a favorite name in journalism. He bears the reputation of a humorist, but his humor is not of the conventional order; it has a wider and a loftier scope. . . . The present little volume comprises a bubbling forth of delightful badinage and mischievous rallery. It is a book which doubtless will attain a national popularity; admirable, and indeed irresistible, in its way."—JULIAN HAWTHORNE.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

THE LEGEND of HAMLET
Gathered from original sources by GEORGE P. HAM-
SEX, late U.S. Consul to Denmark. A story of the real Hamlet as Shakespeare found him. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents, mailed. Catalogues free. CHARLES H. KERR & CO., Publishers, Chicago.

THE GENUINE ENGLISH WOODSTOCKS

Can be purchased only from
John H. Pray, Sons & Co.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE
UNITED STATES.

A very large line of patterns and colorings constantly in stock in the following sizes:

7.6x 9.0	10.6x12.0
7.6x10.6	9.0x13.6
9.0x 9.0	10.6x13.6
9.0x10.6	12.0x13.6
9.0x12.0	12.0x15.0

The most artistic and durable floor covering ever manufactured, for the price.

There are many imitations in the market; be sure and buy the genuine article, which can be procured only of us, as we are the sole American Agents.

John H. Pray, Sons & Co.

CARPETS AND UPHOLSTERY,

558 and 560 Washington Street,

30 to 34 Harrison Ave. Extension.

ESTABLISHED 1817.

John H. Pray, Sons & Co.

CARPETS

AND UPHOLSTERY.

OLDEST IN THE UNITED STATES.

SELL ONLY

RELIABLE GOODS

AT FAIR PRICES.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

558 & 560 Washington St.

30 to 34 Harrison Ave. Ext.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

Design Copyrighted, Grate Pat'd Aug. 17, 1886.

The Curtain Grate, with Weiser's patent Shaking and Jumping attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.

SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

Patented January 29th, 1877.

Granville Mosaic Floors

Have never failed to give satisfaction. Tested eight years. Lately improved whereby laying is made simple and inexpensive. Adapted equally to old floors or new houses. Positive but hidden fastening. Shrinkage practically overcome. Send plan of room and have floor made to a design prepared expressly for it. Ask for information. O. S. Dickinson, Granville, Mass.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equaled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's (1867) is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, withal the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

A YOUNG MAN (20) would like a position in a first-class publishing concern, Boston or New York preferred. Has had three years' experience in one of the leading Boston houses. Address A. B. C., "Literary World" Office.

A FAMOUS LETTER.

WE give you two famous letters, and they are "D. K." They mean Dr. MARK R. WOODBURY'S
DYSPEPSIA KILLERS,
A little lozenge, which cures
DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION,

HEARTBURN,
And all stomach troubles. Price 50 cents a box (trial box, 25 cents). Sent anywhere in the United States, by mail, on receipt of price, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engraving, Etc., Etc.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

23 Equitable Building, Boston.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. F. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MURSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN

are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.

RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 19. { E. H. HAMES & Co., } BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1887. { Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
WHOLE No. 332. Publishers. Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

JUST PUBLISHED:

THE BEE-MAN OF ORN,

And Other Fanciful Tales. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. 12mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Mr. Stockton's wholly exceptional genius for story telling appears in these nine tales for young readers as clearly as ever; and the quality of his humor is such that older readers will find much in them that is delightful. Even the titles of the stories are suggestive of the quaint and whimsical conceits that are made use of: The Bee-Man of Orn; The Griffin and the Minor Canon; Old Pipes and the Dryad; The Queen's Museum; Christmas before Last, or, The Fruit of the Fragile Palm; Prince Hassan's March; The Battle of the Third Cousins; The Banished King; and The Philopena.

THE LATE MRS. NULL.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON. A new and cheaper edition. 12mo, gilt top, $1.25.

"Mr. Stockton has written a book which you can't discuss without laughing; and that is proof enough of its quality."—The New York Tribune.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR:

Rudder Grange. New and cheaper edition. 12mo, gilt top, $1.25.
The Christmas Wreck, and Other Stories. 12mo, gilt top, 1.25.
The Lady or the Tiger? and Other Stories. 12mo, gilt top, 1.25.
THE ABOVE 5 VOLS. IN A SET, $6.25.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS:

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE:

Travels, Adventures and Discoveries in Central Africa. Including an Account of Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. By HENRY M. STANLEY. With Maps and Illustrations. 8vo, $3.50.

"The air of romance which has surrounded the discovery of Dr. Livingstone will be found upon the perusal of this volume to be surpassed by the marvelous energy with which it was accomplished. Mr. Stanley has presented a narrative of extraordinary interest."—New York Tribune.

MY KALULU.

Prince, King and Slave. A Story of Central Africa. By HENRY M. STANLEY. With many Illustrations. 12mo, $1.50.

"A fresh, breezy, stirring story for youths, interesting in itself and full of information regarding life in the interior of the continent in which its scenes are laid."—New York Times.

JULES VERNE'S GREATEST WORK.

THE EXPLOERATION OF THE WORLD.

"M. Verne's scheme in this work is to tell fully how man has made acquaintance with the world in which he lives, to combine into a single work in three volumes the wonderful stories of all the great explorers, navigators and travelers, who have sought out, one after another, the once uttermost parts of the earth."—New York Evening Post.

Famous Travels and Travelers. Illustrations, Maps, etc. 8vo, $2.50.

The Great Navigators of the XVIIIth Century. Illustrations, Maps, etc. 8vo, $2.50.

The Great Explorers of the XIXth Century. Illustrations, fac-similes, etc. 8vo, $2.50.

*. These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
742-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORM. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by E. R. BEILFETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of serious and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CELVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPIROZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

THE IDEAL SERIES.

"The volumes appearing under this title deserve the success which they already have achieved. Broadly speaking, they reintroduce us to some masterpieces of literature in a very attractive dress—to be more precise, in all the glory of clear antique printing, hand-made paper, and vellum cloth bindings. . . . In some cases, it should be added, additional value is conferred upon the work by new illustrative prefaces and notes."—TIMES.

Each volume in Elsevir 8vo. Cloth extra, gilt tops. Sold separately at $2.00; or in beautiful half levant, gilt top, $5.00; or in full calf, $5.00.

Ashby-Sterry (J.). The Lazy Minstrel.

Blunt (W. S.). The Love Sonnets of Proteus.

Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

De Quincey (Thos.). Confessions of an Opium Eater. With Notes by Richard Woodhouse.

Edited by RICHARD GARNET.

Dobson (Austin). At the Sign of the Lyre.

— Old World Idyls and other Verses.

Dutt (Tom). Ancient Ballads and Legends of Hindustan, with an Introductory Memoir by

E. W. GOSSE.

English Lyrics.

English Odes, selected by E. W. GOSSE.

Eighteenth Century Essays, selected and annotated by AUSTIN DOBSON.

French Lyrics, selected and annotated by GEO. SAINTSBURY.

Gay (John). Fables, with Memoir by AUSTIN DOBSON. Portrait.

Goldsmith (Oliver). The Vicar of Wakefield, with a Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON.

Gosse (E.). Firdausi in Exile, and other Poems.

Horati Flacci Opera. Edited by F. W. CORNISH.

Lang (Andrew). XXXII Ballads in Blue China.

— Rhymes à la Mode.

Locker (Frederick). London Lyrics.

Milton's Poetical Works. 2 vols.

— Sonnets. Edited by MARK PATTISON. Portrait.

Shakespeare's Sonnets. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN.

Shelley's Poems. A Selection. Edited with Preface by RICHARD GARNET.

Swift (Jonathan). Letters and Journals. Selected and edited with a Commentary and Notes by STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

Three Hundred English Sonnets. Chosen and edited by DAVID M. MAIN.

*. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice, Rare, and Second-hand Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson.
By JAMES ELLIOT CABOT. With a fine new steel portrait. 2 vols. 12mo, gilt top, $3.50; half calf, $6.00.

Mr. Cabot, who is Mr. Emerson's literary executor, is admirably equipped in every respect to write his biography. He has incorporated in it many letters and copious extracts from Mr. Emerson's journal, bringing out distinctly the nobility of Mr. Emerson's character, the depth and purity of his thought, the admiring loyalty of his friends, and the profound and gracious influence of his writings and of his life.

LARGE-PAPER EDITION. Limited to Five Hundred copies. Uniform with the Large-Paper Edition of the Riverside issue of Emerson's Works, printed in the most careful manner on the best paper. Price Ten Dollars for the two volumes.

The Gates Between.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, author of "The Gates Ajar," "Beyond the Gates," etc. 1 vol. 16mo, $1.25.

Like the two other stories named here, this relates to the Unseen. It is not a common "ghost" story, or a tale of the supernatural told merely to excite interest; but an exceedingly interesting narrative of the inevitable, giving the possible experience and remedial discipline of a hard and selfish nature in the life after death.

Patrick Henry.

Vol. XVII of American Statesmen. By MOSES COIT TYLER, author of "A History of American Literature," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

A thoroughly engaging account of a man who contributed to the American Revolution not only an eloquence which has made him immortal, but political counsel of a breadth and wisdom which entitle him to rank among American statesmen whom we do well to honor.

The Old Garden and Other Poems.

By MARGARET F. DELAND. New and enlarged edition. 16mo, fancy cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

This edition contains several new poems, and is no less attractive in typography and binding than the first edition, which was so popular. The tone of thought in Mrs. Deland's poems, their buoyant spirit and fine lyrical expression, give them a peculiar charm.

The Fireside Hawthorne.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. Fireside Edition. In six volumes. 16mo, $10.00; half calf, $20.00. (Sold in sets.)

A compact and inexpensive edition of Hawthorne's incomparable romances, novels, short stories and note books, printed on large type.

Henry Clay.

Vols. XV and XVI of American Statesmen. By CARL SCHURZ. 2 vols. 16mo, cloth, $2.50; half morocco, $5.00.

"A biography from which almost nothing could be taken without marring its completeness. . . . So many years of political life had to be traversed, the discussion of so many public questions to be examined, so many speeches to be read and analyzed and their core extracted, the parts that so many other public men played had to be viewed and their influence determined, that it is a literary wonder that these two volumes can and do contain all that is essential to a full knowledge of the political life of Mr. Clay, and of the political history of the country during that life."—The Overland Monthly.

"By far the best of the biographies which have been brought out in the American Statesmen series, if it be not the best work of this nature which has ever been produced in this country."—The Atlantic Monthly.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

J. B. Lippincott Company

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

ROSA N. CAREY'S NEW BOOK,

ESTHER.

A Story for Girls.

By the author of "Not Like Other Girls," "Wee Wife," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, extra cloth, gilt, $1.25.

MADÉLON LÉMOINE.

A Novel.

By Mrs. LEITH ADAMS (Mrs. Laffan), author of "Aunt Hepay's Foundling," "Geoffrey Stirling," etc. 16mo, half cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents. No. 77 of Lippincott's Series of Select Novels.

HALF-HOURS WITH AMERICAN HISTORY.

Selected and arranged by CHARLES MORRIS. Two volumes. Crown 8vo. Uniform with "Half-Hours with the Best American Authors." Cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half morocco, $5.00; three-quarters calf, $6.50.

UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

In four volumes. Extra cloth, gilt top, $5.75. Each volume sold separately.

Modern History. By ARTHUR ST. GEORGE PATTON, B.A. $1.50.

Ancient History. By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A. $1.50.

Medieval History. By GEORGE THOMAS STOKES, D.D. $1.50.

Geological History. By EDWARD HULL, M.A., LL.D. $1.25.

A NEW GUIDE TO THE QUAKER CITY.

PHILADELPHIA AND ITS ENVIRONS.

New Edition of 1897.

Entirely rewritten and handsomely illustrated with over one hundred and fifty Engravings. 8vo, paper cover, 50 cents.

CUTTER'S NEW PHYSIOLOGIES.

Beginner's Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, including Scientific Instruction on the Effects of Stimulants and Narcotics on the Growing Body. By JOHN C. CUTTER, B.Sc., M.D. 47 illustrations. Small 12mo, extra cloth, 30 cents.

Intermediate Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene, including Scientific Instruction upon the Effects of Narcotics and Stimulants upon the Human Body. A Revision of the "First Book on Anatomy, Physiology and Hygiene," prepared by CALVIN CUTTER, A.M., M.D., in 1854. 70 illustrations. 12mo, extra cloth, 50 cents.

CHAUVENET'S TREATISE ON ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY.

Revised and abridged by W. E. BIERLY, Professor of Mathematics in Harvard University. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.20.

If not obtainable at your booksellers', send direct to the publishers, who will forward the books, free of postage, promptly on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engraving, Etc., Etc.

JUDGE TOURGEE'S NEW BOOK.

Messrs. ROBERTS BROTHERS have just ready a new story by this popular author.

BUTTON'S INN

By ALBION W. TOURGEE, author of "A Fool's Errand," "Hot Plowshares," etc.

Judge Tourgee's new story is located in the region of Chautauque Hills and Lake Erie Shore, at the time just before the stage-coach gave way to the locomotive—1815 to 1830. In the volume only the name and situation of the original Button's Inn have been retained. He says: "The life of this region in which the story is located, during the later years of the inn, was precisely that from which Mormonism sprang. Two of its early leaders—one an Apostle—went from this country.

"Without regard to what Mormonism now is, I have endeavored to depict it as it was then regarded, both by those who came in contact with it and the 'Saints' themselves."

One Handsome 12mo Volume, bound in Cloth, 498 Pages, price $1.25.

This latest work of Judge Tourgee is receiving, not only wide commendation, but sharp and varied criticism.

"In picturesqueness, brilliancy and variety of color, this story excels all the author's previous novels."—New York Tribune.

"The most unreadable of all the author's works."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

"A thoroughly American novel."—Worcester Spy.

"Far in advance in point of style to the 'Fool's Errand.'"—Boston Advertiser.

"The story is written in Judge Tourgee's usual terse and vigorous style, but the rather labored introduction of the Mormon element considerably mars its symmetry while adding to it scarcely any strength."—Boston Commonwealth.

"The book is so evenly balanced that it would be hard to tell whether Mormonism was introduced to complete the harmony of the characters, or the characters delineated, in order to show the genesis of Mormonism."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The New History of Sanford and Merton.

Being a True Account of the Adventures of "Masters Tommy and Harry," with their Beloved Tutor, "Mr. Barlow." By F. C. BURNARD, author of "Happy Thoughts," etc. With 75 illustrations by Linley Sambourne. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00; paper cover, 50 cents.

Recent New Books.

A LAD'S LOVE. By ARLO BATES.

OURSELVES AND OUR NEIGHBORS. By LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. $1.00.

A WEEK AWAY FROM TIME. Third edition. $1.25.

CRACKER JOE. "No Name Novel." $1.00.

BETWEEN WHILES. By HALEN JACKSON (H. H.). $1.25.

LIFE OF MRS. SIDDONS. Famous Women Series. $1.00.

DANTE, HIS LIFE AND WORKS. By MAY ALDEN WARD. $1.25.

SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION Opens Oct. 6. Thorough training for Voice, Body and Mind. Literature studied through Expression. Authors' Recitals monthly. Courses for Speakers, Teachers, Professionals and for General Culture, 1 to 20 hours a week. Work adapted to individual needs. Degree of A. M. to A. B. S. Courses of Lectures on Expression by the Dean opens Sept. 22. Send for catalogue, lecture tickets, or call for personal interview 10 to 1.

S. S. CUREY, Ph. D.,
Freeman Place, 15½ Beacon Street, Boston.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, with the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all booksellers; sent post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 160 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, SEPT. 17, 1887. No. 19.

CONTENTS.

A CHAUTAUQUA ROMANCE	291
CHATS ABOUT WORDS	291
FUTURE RETRIBUTION	292
A NEW LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTË	292
PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY	293
THE WORKS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD	294
FRENCH EXPLORATIONS IN NORTH AMERICA	294
SOME RECENT THEOLOGY:
Delitzsch's Day in Capernaum	295
Kellogg's Abraham, Joseph, and Moses in Egypt	295
Hodge's Popular Lectures	295
Vincent's Word Studies in the New Testament	295
BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG:
Scraepgrace Dick	298
Fighting the Sea	298
MINOR FICTION:
The Great Bank Robbery	298
Thraldom	298
A Dateless Bargain	298
The Autobiography of a Slander	298
Miss Gascoigne	298
Forging the Fetters	298
MINOR NOTICES:
Order of Words in Ancient and Modern Languages	299
The Margin of Profits	299
The Russian Church and Dissent	299
A Life of Darwin	299
Etc., Etc., Etc.
THE SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES	301
PARAGRAPHS	296
THE LIBRARIES OF THE LAND	296
A FIELD FOR ROMANCE	296
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
George Willis Cooke	297
"THE POWER OF DARKNESS," BY COUNT TOLSTOI	297
John Heard, Jr.	297
NEWS AND NOTES	301
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	302
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	302

A CHAUTAUQUA ROMANCE.*

THE story of Button's Inn may be regarded as an ingenious synthesis of fragments of fact, fancy, and romance pertaining to the Chautauqua Hills region of northern New York, as that region was during the first fourth of the present century. Given a ruined wayside tavern with the reputation of being haunted; several obscure traditions of genealogy and nomenclature; the memory of the rise of Mormonism and the record that forth from this territory went a Mormon apostle under the shadow of a mysterious crime;—given these elements and a thorough knowledge of the social conditions during the era of which he treats, and Mr. Tourgee has been able to construct a novel at once remarkable for its brilliancy of coloring, its dramatic intensity, its able portrayal of character, and in spite of its romantic tone, its firm grasp of actuality. The men and women that figure in the narrative are, with all their strong peculiarities, real, and the account of their doings and sayings is instinct with life. Perhaps the transformation of the dashing, reckless Jack Button into the somber leader of Latter Day Saints is somewhat forced, but the reader will be inclined to grant to the author a certain amount of poetic license in view of the result. Button's Inn is a strong, vigorous, boldly-written novel, and one that is sure to attract the interest of many readers.

* Button's Inn. By Albion W. Tourgee. Roberts Bros. $1.25.

Mr. Tourgee, as we have intimated, has seized upon a number of authenticated types and made them live before us. Lonny Button is a natural product of circumstances from merry-hearted, hospitable youth to querulous, dissipated old age. Young Ozro Evans, the inventor, stands for a whole generation of Americans who ushered in the era of mechanical invention. Dorothy is a charming conception with her combined coquetry and good sense. And Dewstowe, the traveling merchant and potential millionaire, Abner Jackson, the Mormon, and all the minor personages gathered at intervals within the tavern walls, are drawn with fidelity and skill. Not less noteworthy is the management of incident. The threads of the story cross and recross at the very outset, but each one is kept distinct and the predestined pattern is wrought without confusion of outline or lack of harmonious color. The gathering of guests at the inn on an eventful Saturday night; the mysterious midnight death of the beautiful woman in the upper chamber; the sudden flight of Jack Button; the inexplicable self-isolation of Lonny Button's wife; the courtship of Dorothy by Dewstowe and Ozro; the scene in which Ozro subjugates the bulldog; the advent of Abner Jackson, his deeds of mercy and his confession—all these elements hold well together and often excite breathless attention. There is no manifest endeavor to secure sensational effects. Every incident, however extraordinary, is treated in a straightforward way which does not detract from but rather enhances its power.

Mr. Tourgee in bringing Mormonism into the story treats it as a product of the times, when, as he puts it, the American was orientalized by Christian tradition. The philosophy of its evolution as indicated is intelligible and no doubt valid. Joseph Smith is credited with a poetic mind, and an oriental warmth of fancy is shown in the description of the temple at Kirtland and the appearance of the prophet before the multitude. That Mormonism sprang from a peculiar Christian idealism, and in the hands of Joseph Smith was far different from the gross superstition it became under the direction of Brigham Young, Mr. Tourgee shows with no small degree of probability. At any rate he has made good use of his material, and he has brought within the range of current fiction an epoch and a region of vital importance, and thus indicated once more the unexplored resources still awaiting the hand of the intelligent explorer in the history of a still unremote past.

CHATS ABOUT WORDS.*

DR. GARLANDA is favorably known as the author of a readable and trustworthy popular introduction to the science of language called The Philosophy of Words.

* The Fortunes of Words. Letters to a Lady. By Federico Garlanda, Ph.D. A. Lovell & Co.

In the little book now before us he takes up the subject in a still less rigorous way, treats it in a new light, and adapts himself more to the demands of desultory students. His method is none the less scientific, nor are his researches less exhaustive or less rich in apt conclusions. He has an abundance of material to draw from and he uses it with admirable discretion. The style is familiar; perhaps two or three paragraphs extolling the charms of the real or imaginary recipient of the ostensible letters into which the text is divided might have been omitted with advantage. The science of language per se has sufficient attractions without a background of moonlight and feminine loveliness, and it is possible to pursue it without making it the basis of an intellectual flirtation.

The aim of the author seems to be to set forth the method of the historical growth of words, to explain the modern idea of roots, to indicate the application of language study to the history of primitive man, to show the influence of material and social progress on language, and finally to give his readers an inkling of the relation of language to the science of folk psychology—the analysis of distinctive national and racial traits. All this is fairly well accomplished, without pedantry and in a style that is very intelligible and attractive. Dr. Garlanda has a rare faculty—that of treating complex subjects in a way to gratify and instruct the unlearned. He at once takes a place among the foremost writers on language in its scientific aspect; of the scholarship in this particular department of a writer whom Prof. Max Müller commends, we may be reasonably sure.

Dr. Garlanda adopts the word glottologist to indicate the student of the science of language, as distinguished from the linguist, who does not necessarily take cognizance of grammatical structure or word-formation. The term is a good one and is worthy of general adoption. Philologist does not cover the ground, since it refers to the origin and combination of words and has no definite scientific limitation. In discussing the analysis and classification of roots Dr. Garlanda indicates what the dictionaries of the future are to be:

We should have dictionaries in which words are arranged not alphabetically, but by their roots. Think what a help it would be if we could take up a dictionary divided into four hundred and odd paragraphs, according to the number of roots from which the substance of the language has developed, and take in at one glance the filiation of each root! In forty or fifty days—ten roots a day—we could go over the whole field of any language. The study of dictionaries would become as systematic as the study of comparative anatomy, or botany, or geology, and in great part a matter of reasoning, rather than of memory. Besides, it would give us an insight into the true meaning of words, such as now scarcely one person in a thousand has. An alphabetical list at the end would help us to find every word the root of which we do not know or have forgotten.

As an example of Dr. Garlanda's method of exposition we select this paragraph from one of the chapters on the study of roots :

There are some changes in words which are as many indexes of other important changes, social, political, or religious. Take, for instance, the word "alms." This was once a noble word. Through the forms aelmaesse (Anglo-Saxon), almesse (Middle English), almes, alms comes from the Greek eleemosyne, from the verb eleo, to have pity, to have sympathy for the suffering of our fellow-men. It had then a meaning essentially moral; it meant the sharing with one's soul of other people's grief. By and by it was narrowed down to the present meaning. Do you not think that this change is very significant? It does not speak well for the rich indeed if, as the story of this word tells us, a few crumbs of bread or a little money have taken the place of that genuine heartfelt sympathy which is the first of our duties. And the poor must have been very poor and wretched to accept, without grudge or complaint, the present meaning of the word alms, forgetful entirely of its noble meaning of old. It is noteworthy that in Italy, among the lower people at least, the word carità (charity) has suffered from the same degradation of meaning.

Dr. Garlanda, of course, recognizes that language is a living expression of multifarious and constantly changing thought, and he is therefore no purist. With regard to slang he is lenient, and yet he does not bring out as clearly as he might the fact that the greater part of the vital accretions of the language come to us first in the guise of slang. Dr. Garlanda does, however, indicate the importance of the imaginative power in the development of popular speech, and his final rule is a good one, at least for colloquial purposes: "Whenever you hear a new word or idiom which is clear, forcible, apt, and decent, do not be afraid; use it and go ahead."

FUTURE RETRIBUTION.*

IN the multitude of minor works which of late years have treated, with more or less of scholarship, the question of human destiny in the unknown future, Prebendary Row's substantial treatise appears like the decision of an accomplished and impartial judge, who has reviewed the whole ground and reached a verdict which many of the unprejudiced will incline to accept.

"It is impossible," he says, in the opening chapter which sets forth the accepted theories of future punishment, "to put a greater stumbling block in the way of unbelievers than such representations of Christ's teaching" as Mr. Spurgeon and Roman Catholic tracts give. These representations Mr. Row decisively rejects as irrational and unchristian, and to the exposition of what he conceives to be the true doctrine of the Bible he proceeds, after showing first that reason and revelation agree in their primary notions of human responsibility. Reason alone, he thinks, has never succeeded in rendering probable anything more than that the human personality will survive the dissolution of the body, while absolute immortality is beyond its power of argument. But on the other hand :

Every theory which has been propounded by the finite intellect of man respecting a future state of retribution which is not based on the principles of eternal justice, and which is also not in conformity with any conception we can form of God's holiness, mercy, and love as they are revealed in the person, work, and teaching of Jesus Christ, is a misrepresentation of the principles on which He will execute judgment hereafter.

As for the Old Testament, the whole notion of immortality, and so of future retribution, lay beyond the view of its writers, what is called the "fall of man" being also, from this point of view, an allegory. The result of an elaborate investigation of the New Testament terminology on this subject is that none of the terms employed in their ordinary or material meaning convey even a hint that the suffering will be of endless duration.

All will be saved then but those who persist in evil.

No declaration can be found [in the New Testament] which affirms that evil beings will continue to exist forever, or that those in whom all good has become extinct are incapable of being destroyed by sin, in a manner analogous to that in which physical diseases in the course of God's ordinary providence destroy the body; nor has reason anything to say to the contrary.

Prebendary Row supports these positions of the continuance of probation beyond death, and of the annihilation of the desperately wicked, who will probably be few, by a thorough examination of the New Testament in all its aspects. His work seems to us to be the most important one of recent date upon the subject, and it deserves the attention of all students of theology. Speaking from an untheological standpoint we should say that the author has successfully escaped the irrational dogmatism of partialism and of universalism, and that, alike in affirming the probable salvation of the great majority of men and the possible destruction of a few, he is in accord with the deeper tendencies of thought in the world of today.

A NEW LIFE OF CHARLOTTE BRONTË.*

IT was to be expected that the author of Obiter Dicta would give us an entertaining book on any subject, and the reader of this new Life of Charlotte Brontë will not be surprised to find it a highly attractive volume. Avoiding the amiable prolixity of Mrs. Gaskell and the sententious dogmatism of Mr. Reid, Mr. Birrell has availed himself of all the material before the public, has brought to light a hitherto unpublished chapter in the career of Patrick Brontë, and has offered upon Charlotte Brontë's novels some critical remarks which are characterized by clearness of perception and sound common sense. The book is small in compass, but it covers the field thoroughly; and for its freshness of observation, admirable perspicacity, and charm of style, it is a contribution to critical biography of no slight importance.

The Rev. Patrick Brontë, to begin with, fares rather better at the hands of Mr. Birrell than he has with previous biographers. The unpublished episode in his life relates to the five years' residence as curate in Wethersfield, Essex. Here it seems he met with Mary Burder, who "had attained the far from unattractive age of eighteen," and "was a comely damsel, with her father's brown curls and her mother's blue eyes." Her father was a substantial farmer recently deceased, and her uncle, who was also her guardian, had no desire that she should marry a humble curate who refused to reveal his antecedents. So the poor girl was made a prisoner in her uncle's house; her lover's letters were intercepted and destroyed; her letters to him were without her knowledge demanded and returned; with them "she found a small card with her lover's face in profile, and under it the words, 'Mary, you have torn the heart; spare the face.' The lovers never met again." Mary Burder was still single when some fourteen years later she received a letter from Patrick Brontë asking her to be his wife and the mother of his six motherless children. She answered "No," and soon after married the Rev. Peter Sibree of Wethersfield; she lived till 1866. Mr. Birrell, after relating this bit of romance, to which, as he well says, the pen of Charlotte Brontë could alone have done justice, may perhaps be pardoned for speculating how it would have fared with the Brontës if Mary Burder had said "Yes." "The children would have lived wholly different lives, and have had very different tales to tell. Perhaps they would have told no tales and been happy instead."

Speaking generally, we should say that Mr. Birrell makes the picture of Charlotte Brontë's life as cheerful and untragic as possible. He relates all the essential facts, but he does not dwell upon the gloomy and morbid passages in the career of the woman or the novelist. Branwell Brontë he has, in what he calls an American phrase, "no use for," and he relegates that weakly vicious young man to a shadowy background whence he only emerges at fitful intervals, and at length to take himself away altogether.

Mr. Birrell thinks that Patrick Brontë is entitled to more credit for the education of his children than has commonly been ascribed to him. "The literary atmosphere of the house all proceeded from him."

What teaching the children got was from their father, and certainly no man ever succeeded better than he did in making his children hungry for the marrow and fatness of books. It is unfortunate we have no catalogue of the parsonage library. Mrs. Gaskell surmises that it contained no children's books, but proceeds cheerfully to endow it "with the wholesome pasturage of English literature," on which,

* Future Retribution Viewed in the Light of Reason and Revelation. By C. A. Row, M.A. Thomas Whittaker, 2s. 50.

* Life of Charlotte Brontë. By Augustine Birrell. ("Great Writers" series.) London: Walter Scott. New York: Thomas Whittaker.

quoting Charles Lamb, she fancies "their eager minds browsing." But the age of the Brontës' childhood was not the age of reprints or even of collected editions, and we may be certain that no such feast as Mrs. Gaskell hints at was ever spread before them.

Mr. Birrell does not attempt any elaborate criticism of Charlotte Brontë's writings. Of Jane Eyre he says "the crowning merit is its energy," though he objects to Miss Brontë's fondness for "putting on the black cap and sentencing herself to extermination." Shirley is aptly described as "a series of portraits and exteriors—all good, some superb; but . . . one walks through the book as through a picture gallery, always ready to go on, but never averse to turn back, since continuity of impression is of necessity impossible." Villette Mr. Birrell values highly, but in commenting upon it he takes occasion to animadvert upon the disposition of Miss Brontë's heroines to forswear Love and all his works.

To support them in this stern resolve, this self-denying ordinance, they are forever invoking the aid of a heartless philosophy peculiar to themselves, and pulling, most unflinchingly, the string of a veritable shower bath of unwelcome and half-frozen truths.

The treatment of Dr. John calls out this bit of enlivening criticism:

Upon this surgeon are lavished pages of gorgeous hue. Hardly before, and never since, has that featherless biped, that forked radish—man, been so shone upon. He positively glitters like the golden prince in Kensington Gardens when the sun is shining. He is quite unconscious of it and does not so much as blink. The magic spell of Miss Brontë's writing, here seen at its very best, is so strongly upon us whilst we read, we live so completely in Lucy's life, and so ardently share her feelings, are swept away by her impetuous rhetoric and dazzled by her splendid imagery—in which the author shows herself a true countrywoman of Burke's—that we are scarcely able to stop to cast so much as a glance of our own upon the causa causans of all this commotion and tossing of the mind.

Adhering, however, to his previously formulated assertion that the office of literature is to please, Mr. Birrell names Miss Austen, Miss Brontë, and George Eliot, and in scorn of consequence maintains that "the alphabetical order of their names is also the order of merit."

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.*

THE subject of this work, its distinguished composite authorship, and the profuse and fine illustrations with which it is furnished, take it out of the category of ordinary school books in which it nominally belongs, and invest it with many of the properties of elegant literature. The shape and size of the old quarto geography are familiar; but here is the old body with a new spirit, the spirit of the closing years of the Nineteenth Century, instructed with the facts of the latest scientific research and eloquent with the devices of the most advanced typography. It is a "geography," to be sure, such as one might see any school-boy carrying under his arm strapped together with grammar, arithmetic, and spelling-book; but there are thousands and thousands of busy yet intelligent people, past the days of schooling, eager to know but not able easily to learn what progress the physical sciences are making, who would find in these pages highly interesting reading, who would examine these beautiful maps and charts with genuine delight, and lay aside the work on completing its perusal with a keen sense of intellectual refreshment. Professor Quackenbos of Columbia College, New York, is the literary editor of the work. His nine collaborators are Professors Newberry and Britton, also of Columbia, Professor Hitchcock of Dartmouth, Professor Stevens of the Parker Collegiate Institute, Messrs. Henry Gannett, W. H. Dall, and C. H. Merriam, of the United States scientific service, Lt. G. M. Stovey of the navy, and Mr. G. F. Kunz of the firm of Tiffany & Co. The comprehensive domain of physical geography, embracing astronomical principles, geology, magnetism and electricity, mineralogy and zoölogy, the laws of earthquakes and volcanoes, currents of air and water, climate, glacial action, etc., etc., invites the best efforts of a varied scholarship, and the encyclopædic method employed in the preparation of the book argues for its thoroughly scientific basis and character.

Physical geography not only describes the earth we live on, but accounts for its history and condition. Our little planet has a circumference at the equator of 24,899 miles, and a surface of 197,000,000 square miles. The sun which lights us and heats us is 93,000,000 miles away, and its cubical contents are 1,300,000 times that of the earth. One of the remarkable properties of the earth is magnetism; the earth, in fact, is one great magnet, the cause of which is not known; but the outbreak of a spot on the sun has been followed by magnetic storms upon the earth. Three kinds of rocks or soils compose the earth's surface—igneous, or those formed by heat; sedimentary, or those deposited by water; and metamorphic, the result of changes by pressure, heat, or chemical action from earlier conditions. The different layers composing the earth's surface are arranged in chronological series, the oldest group being called the Archæan, the next the Palæozoic, the third the Mæozoic, the fourth the Neozoic. Each of these is divided into systems, corresponding to which have been arranged the geological ages. The fossils, or remains of extinct plants and animals found in these layers, help us to trace the earth's history.

The surface of the earth is always rising or sinking. Nearly three quarters of the globe is covered by water, the greatest depth of which is about 5 1-2 miles, while the mountains rise to an equal height. The sea is gradually gaining on the land. The largest island is Australia, with an area about the size of the United States, less Alaska. The most interesting group of coral islands, the Bermudas, are, gradually subsiding. The deepest fresh-water lake on the globe is probably Lake Baikal, in Siberia, which has a depth of more than two miles.

The sea is nothing but a vast and "inexhaustible mineral spring," but its saltness is not uniform. Its changing colors are largely due to changes in the sky. It supports animal life at a distance of a little over three miles. Its average temperature is about 35°. Its bottom is diversified with basins and plateaus, is usually sandy or chalky, and seldom rocky or pebbly. Two winding valleys, of variable width and having an average depth of about three miles, diversify the bed of the Atlantic Ocean. The Pacific is the deepest, the largest, and the most tranquil ocean of all. The "Tuscarora Deep" is the name given to a large area of the North Pacific, which has a depth of about four miles. A very slight decrease in the elevation of the sea level would join Great Britain to Continental Europe, empty the beds of the North, Baltic, Black, and Adriatic Seas, leave New York City a hundred miles from the coast, and upraise the southern end of Newfoundland in front of Boston; a corresponding increase would submerge nearly every large city in the world, nearly half of North America, fully a half of South America and Australia, a third of Asia, and three fourths of Europe.

Such, briefly, are examples of the facts, some of them of course very familiar, which constitute the science of physical geography, here presented in the full light of present knowledge, and illustrated by great fertility and ingenuity of design and admirable artistic and mechanical skill. The wood engravings are numerous and beautifully executed, and over some of them—the Cañon of the Yukon, for example, the Garden of the Gods, Diamond Mining, a Greenland Glacier, the Morteratsch Glaciers in the Grisons, the Pigeon Rocks at Beyrout, Syria, the Lake of Lucerne, the Skjæggedalfos (a Norwegian cataract), Mt. Everest, the Kilt Rock on the Isle of Skye, the pictures of marine animals, and the relief maps of the continents—the eye lingers with real pleasure. The pictorial feature of the work, however, is the series of colored maps and charts showing the world, on Mercator's projection, in its various scientific aspects. The first is a geological map indicating the formations and ages, with accompanying fossil specimens, from the Laurentian system in the Archæan group down to the Drift. A second is physiographic, displaying the graded elevations of the earth's surface above the level of the sea. A third lays out the volcanic regions, with a chart of comparative heights; a fourth shows the drainage of the continents and the currents of the oceans, with the iceberg drift; a fifth the frigid conditions of the Arctic and Antarctic regions; a sixth the Isothermal Lines or distribution of like temperatures; a seventh the currents of the air and the rainy seasons; an eighth and ninth the distribution of plant and animal life by zones; a tenth the distribution of races; an eleventh the mineralogical distribution; a twelfth is a finely elaborated physical map of the United States; and a thirteenth does generously after the same manner by our present obscure relation, Alaska. The scientific meaning of these maps, their intelligibility, and the clearness and brilliancy with which they are executed, make them extremely interesting under examination.

* Physical Geography. Prepared on a New and Original Plan. By John D. Quackenbos and others. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.90.

To many of our readers, of course, the ground covered by this work is well trodden and familiar; but to the majority of people much of it is new, and we are sure that we must reach thousands of readers who would do themselves a pleasing service by giving this handsome and instructive Physical Geography a careful perusal.

THE WORKS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD.*

THE name of Edward Fitzgerald has long been associated on this side the water with genius of a very rare kind. His translation, or rather transformation, of the Rubd'iydt of Omar Khayyám was at once accepted here as the work of a poet worthy to rank among the foremost who have written in the English tongue, and three years ago an American whose genius in pictorial art is in its way equally noteworthy wedded to the quatrains of Fitzgerald a series of graphic interpretations, henceforth forever inseparable from the text which they so wonderfully illuminate and from which they draw their inspiration. Americans, too, were quick to recognize the fine quality of Fitzgerald's renderings of Six Dramas of Calderon, first printed in 1853, some five years before the appearance of the Rubd'iydt, and the only volume of his that bore during his lifetime his name upon its title-page. It is therefore altogether fitting and proper that the handsomely printed volumes now before us should be thus dedicated:

To the American people, whose early appreciation of the genius of Edward Fitzgerald was the chief stimulant of that curiosity by which his name was drawn from its anonymous concealment and advanced to the position of honor which it now holds.

This edition, although hailing primarily from London, was printed at the De Vinne Press in New York. It contains a lithographic portrait of Fitzgerald, showing him in his later years with bald, dome-like head; sunken, introspective eyes; broad, strongly marked features. It is prefaced by a biographical sketch prepared by an appreciative hand. And it contains in two octavo volumes of 500 pages each the scanty productions upon which the fame of the author rests — the Rubd'iydt with comparative readings from the first and fourth editions; a version of the Saldmân and Absâl of Jâmî; a poetical paraphrase of the Agamemnon of Æschylus; Euphranor, a brief imaginary conversation of Cambridge undergraduates; Polonius, a collection of wise sayings from divers sources; a fragmentary and laudatory essay on Crabbe; the Six Dramas of Calderon; and a catalogue of "Suffolk Sea Phrases."

The sketch of the life of Fitzgerald is that of an earnest, retiring scholar. He was born, of Irish parentage, in 1809, at Bredfield in Suffolk; entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1826; was the associate of Alfred Tennyson, James Spedding, and William Makepeace Thackeray; was led to study Persian literature through the influence of Cowell; was married to Lucy, daughter of Bernard Wharton, the Quaker poet, but soon separated from her; was fond of coasting trips in his yacht with a friend or two and a few books in the cabin; was in personal conduct amiable and unselfish.

His entire career was marked by an unchanging goodness of heart and a genial kindliness; and no one could complain of having ever endured hurt or ill treatment at his hands. . . . He was very fond of Montaigne's essays and of Pascal's Pensées; but his Polonius reveals a sort of dislike and contempt for Voltaire. Amongst the Germans, Jean Paul, Goethe, Alexander von Humboldt, and August Wilhelm von Schlegel attracted him greatly; but he seems to have read little German, and probably only quoted translations. His favorite motto was "Plain Living and High Thinking," and he expresses great reverence for all things manly, simple, and true.

The name of Fitzgerald will of course be chiefly remembered because of the translation of the Rubd'iydt. That work, as it is represented in his weirdly majestic quatrains, is the ultimate expression of the Epicurean idea, of Oriental fatalism, of the philosophy which sees in this present life and its material uses the only means of enjoyment or duty.

Drink! for you know not whence you came, nor why:
Drink! for you know not why you go, nor where.

No poet has surpassed Omar in the imaginative lyrical expression of the questionings and final good-natured resignation of a mind confronted by the external phenomena of existence, and looking to them alone for the solution of its doubts and fears; and Fitzgerald, by his rare sympathetic insight and exquisite command of phraseology, transmuted the ideas of the Persian into alien forms of enduring beauty. It is commonly supposed that there is more of the translator's thought than that of the original author in the English version of the Rubd'iydt, but the writer of the biographical sketch from which we have been quoting says that the supposition is not at all true. Other translators, he tells us, supply a closer mechanical reflection of the sense in each separate stanza; but Mr. Fitzgerald has, in some instances, given a version equally close and exact; in others, rejoined scattered phrases from more than one stanza of his original, and thus accomplished a feat of marvelous poetical transfusion. He frequently turns literally into English the strange, outlandish imagery which Mr. Whinfield thought necessary to replace by more intelligible banalities, and in this way the magic of his genius has successfully transplanted into the garden of English poesy exotics that bloom like native flowers.

His treatment of Calderon and Æschylus was equally free and even audacious, and the results were no less satisfactory. The spirit, the flavor, of the originals is distilled into the translations; and the English form is perfect, with no trace of servile imitation or idiomatic perversion. From the higher literary point of view, therefore, the principal writings of Fitzgerald are not to be considered as translations, but as poetical work of a distinct and noble character, and as significant and enduring contributions to English literature. All who have the cultivated literary taste, who value not only the thing done but the way in which it is done, who have a zest for the delicate and potent attributes of spontaneous artistic utterance, cannot fail to cherish the productions of Edward Fitzgerald, which have the individual note, the aroma of originality, the grace of an untrammelled intellectual activity, the intrinsic charm that comes of a many-sided mind obtaining full, complete expression.

FRENCH EXPLORATIONS IN NORTH AMERICA.*

NOTHING but admiration can be felt for, and nothing but praise can be awarded to, this unique history as its volumes accumulate. The fourth relates chiefly to that fascinating branch of the general subject which may be called in brief the history of New France; a field distinguished by the names of Verrazano, Cartier, Champlain, Joliet, Marquette, La Salle, Hennepin, and Frontenac, a history depicted in the famous "Jesuit Relations," a theme which has been the inspiration of him who is on the whole the foremost of American historians, Mr. Francis Parkman. In the preparation of this volume, whose value and interest are second to none of its predecessors, Mr. Winsor has enjoyed generous and able coöperation. The introduction by Professor Shaler is a thoroughly scientific exposition of the physical geography of North America as related to its occupation by an overflow from Europe, a singularly lucid chapter of striking and suggestive generalizations; methodical, rapid, vigorous,

* Works of Edward Fitzgerald, Translator of Omar Khayyám. Reprinted from the Original Impressions, with some Corrections Derived from his own Annotated Copies. Two Vols. London: B. Quaritch. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin Co.

* Narrative and Critical History of America. Edited by Justin Winsor. Vol. IV. French Explorations and Settlements in North America and those of the Portuguese, Dutch, and Swedes. 1500-1700. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $5.00.

bringing out into clear relief those features of configuration, water, soil, and climate, which have made North America, and especially that part of it adopted by the English colonies, one of the favored abodes of man. Professor Shaler shows, for example, how the peculiar configuration of the continent, and the character of the two oceans on its east and west, tended to make it more accessible at first on the west; whence the first population doubtless arrived, by way of the tranquil Pacific, from the near Asiatic shores. But the snowy heights of mountains and the trackless wastes of deserts did not make ingress to the interior easy in this direction. On the other hand colonization by way of the east found the stormy Atlantic its first and most serious barrier, but that once surmounted, the gates of the continent lay widely open, arable soil was within immediate reach, and the great rivers, the St. Lawrence, Hudson, and Mississippi, opened into the interior an easy way. Thus it was that America came to be possessed by Europeans and not by Asiatics.

Of the nine chapters proper composing the body of the work, the first, on Cortereal, Verrazano, Gomez, and Thevet, is by the late George Dexter. Dr. De Costa of New York writes the second on Cartier, Mr. Slafter of Boston the third on Champlain, Mr. C. C. Smith of Boston the fourth on Acadia, Mr. E. D. Neill of St. Paul the fifth on the course of discovery along the Great Lakes, Mr. John Gilmary Shea the sixth on the Jesuit and Recollect missionaries and the Indians, and George Stewart, Jr., the seventh on Frontenac. The eighth and ninth chapters on Dutch and Swedish explorations, chiefly along the Hudson and the Delaware, are respectively by Mr. Berthold Fernow of New York and Mr. Gregory B. Kern of Pennsylvania. According to the general plan of the work each chapter is followed by a critical essay, which reviews the writer's sources of information.

As in previous volumes, so in this, Mr. Winsor's supplementary contributions are numerous and of first importance. It is easy in fact to see how he stands behind the whole work, reinforcing it at every point, and the completeness and detail of his historical and bibliographical learning are only equaled by the modesty and good taste with which it is presented, and the unflinching generosity and courtesy which he displays to his fellow workers. Mr. Winsor it is who furnishes the curious excursus on the early maps of the eastern coast of North America, the sketches of Joliet, Marquette, La Salle, Father Hennepin, and La Hontan, the very elaborate bibliographical account of the Jesuit Relations, and the description of various atlases and charts of the 16th and 17th centuries pertaining to Canada.

The conspicuous features of the book are, then, these two: the bibliographical and critical foundation of the history, wherein the whole apparatus of the scholar is disclosed to view, and the profuse fac-similes of ancient maps, by which the progress of geographical knowledge may be traced with great precision. We observe no separate list of these illustrations, but including the autographs it seems as if they must average nearly one to every page. All of them are interesting, many are very crude, some of them are amusingly quaint. The pictorial treasures of many an old folio are here collected, with the most valuable cartographical possessions of both public and private collections in this country and abroad. The patience and outlay involved in securing this element can hardly be appreciated without a personal examination of the result.

It is pleasant to notice the respect and honor paid throughout to Mr. Francis Parkman for his brilliant historical labors in this same field.

We doubt if any history in any language has ever been undertaken on anything like the scale or with anything like the thoroughness that have characterized this enterprise thus far. At the rate of publication Mr. Winsor's life-work (apart from the duties of his librarianship at Harvard University) is laid out for him; we earnestly hope his years may be prolonged to finish the prodigious task he has so well begun.

SOME RECENT THEOLOGY.

A Day in Capernaum. By Dr. Franz Delitzsch. [Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.]

Abraham, Joseph, and Moses in Egypt. By Rev. A. H. Kellogg, D.D. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50.]

Popular Lectures on Theological Themes. By the Rev. A. A. Hodge, D.D. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25.]

Word Studies in the New Testament. By Marvin R. Vincent, D.D. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.]

Professor Delitzsch in his small volume gives a detailed history of a day in the life of Jesus, spent in Capernaum. The Gospels furnish the historical data, but these are developed and illustrated from the author's great wealth of knowledge. The book is to be commended to all who would realize what was the course of an actual twenty-four hours in the Galilean activity of Christ, as a very liberal orthodoxy interprets the Scriptures.

Rev. Dr. Kellogg's work is a course of Stone lectures delivered before the Theological Seminary at Princeton. The aim is to demonstrate the probability of a perfect harmony between the chronology of Egyptian monuments and that of the Scriptures. The harmony he does not maintain to be fully apparent now; but he is confident that further finds "will tend in the same direction as the recent ones made by M. Naville." Dr. Kellogg's tone is not dogmatic, but some of his exegesis strikes us as forced in the interest of a preconceived theory; he would have Abraham, for example, in one crucial passage to mean Abraham and his seed. This is not quite scientific and does not prepare the reader's mind favorably for the criticism on such Egyptologists as M. Maspero.

The late Dr. Hodge's Popular Lectures were delivered to audiences of ladies in Princeton and Philadelphia. They cover the whole field of scientific theology as surveyed and plotted out by the Calvinists of today. Of great value as a clear and easily intelligible presentation of the Calvinistic scheme, the lectures have few points of contact with modern thought in science or in religion:

God put a deep sleep upon Adam, and, taking from him a rib, made out of it a woman. That is what the Bible says distinctly and clearly, and it cannot be got rid of. . . . Human reason is not qualified to judge of the absolute justice or of the governmental propriety of eternal suffering as the penalty of sin.

The stately volume of Dr. Vincent is a commentary on a new plan, on the Synoptic Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles of Peter, James, and Jude. He would occupy "a position midway between the exegetical commentary and the lexicon and grammar," in order to give the reader of the English Bible as much as is possible of the insight of a Greek scholar into all the force and beauty of the original words. Looking over several chapters, we have been surprised at the completeness with which Dr. Vincent has illustrated usually all the points that need explanation in the text, at the plain and clear way in which he exhibits the reasons for the renderings of the Revised Version, and the fullness with which he has often brought home to the simple English reader the history of Greek words and idioms, their metaphorical uses, and the fine shades of distinction in the renderings of the moods and tenses. The features make the work one of the best commentaries for general use now in existence. The student of our own language, too, will find minute study of the words of our Bible under the guidance of Dr. Vincent a most profitable labor.

—Dr. Caspar René Gregory writes to the Nation from Leipzig, Liebigstrasse, 9, iv, i, as follows:

I have been asked to prepare a course of lectures upon "Religion in America," or "Church History in the United States of America," and I hope in the course of a year or two to do so. A difficulty arises in the want of books. The library here, as well as the libraries in the other universities, have been and are more occupied with continental questions, and their slender resources do not permit them to keep up with the German books. They could not make extensive purchases in this American line. This question has arisen, whether, just as I, as an American, wish to put America duly on record here, so other Americans will not wish to put their literature, the material for the history of their religious organizations, in a foreign library where it will be appreciated, and where it will be at the service of every German professor who desires to approach these questions. The German university libraries send their books about at need, and Leipzig affords a good center for massing this American literature. Even if I should not succeed in carrying out my plan, which of course would culminate in a text-book for American church history, the collection of books here would be ready for another worker. I may add that I have already given the library all my own books which I could spare. Personally I should be indebted to any one who would give me a note of books for the earlier literature. But where churches or men could send the books and the pamphlets pertaining to their special societies, they would do a service. Everything historical, statistical, doctrinal, and practical would be wished for, from reports to single sermons. Many such pamphlets are destroyed in America because of the room they take up. Of course church newspapers in sets would be of peculiar value.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

Do you remember what Charles Lamb says about his wanting a grace before Shakespeare and Milton as well as a grace before meat? I am sure this is true if our books are not to choke us. Think of it, will you?—Life of F. D. Maurice: II. 397.

 Statistics are said to show a steady diminution in the percentage of fiction called for at the great college libraries of the country. This is extremely gratifying; we wish it might be followed by a similar showing at all the great public libraries.

 One good paper or series of papers by eminent publicists in favor of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain would be worth more than all the articles on naval armament and coast defenses put together, that have lately been published in the magazines. Peace, not war, is the line of national development for the future. What this country needs is not more ships, torpedos, and rifled guns, but conscience, forbearance, principle, and an overmastering sense of righteousness and truth. We should like to see Harper's, the Century, and Scribner's taking the lead in providing this literature of peace.

 We learn with deep regret of the death of Dr. John Avery, late Professor of Greek at Bowdoin College, which took place at North Bridgton, Me., September 1. Professor Avery was one of the most accomplished orientalists in the country, and had been for many years a valued contributor to the Literary World on topics related to eastern philology and religion. He was versed in not less than fifteen languages, his great learning was balanced by the modesty and candor of the true scholar, and his marked critical faculty was never distempered by dogmatism. Of late he had been particularly devoted to the study of Sanskrit.

A FIELD FOR ROMANCE.

TO any American romancer who may be casting about for a good field to enter with his pen we would suggest the Dominion of Canada and the adjacent British Provinces across our northeastern border. It is a matter for some surprise, we think, that so little use has been made of the abundant and rich materials for fiction afforded by the scenery and history of these neighbor lands. If we extend the view a little, so as to take in the great lakes, which we must not forget are Canadian or British-American lakes quite as logically if not quite as largely as they are our own, and if we widen it still further so as to include the great Hudson's Bay and the majestic Mackenzie River, with the chain of lakes tributary to the latter, there at once opens to us a prospect which, with its historical connections also in view, is extremely stimulating to the imagination. All the representative features of nature—forests, mountains, waters—are here combined into an aggregate of grandeur and beauty which scarcely has a parallel in the western hemisphere. Here is the land of Jacques Cartier, or Quartier, as his name was early written, and of Champlain and Frontenac, not to speak of La Salle and Hennepin who touched its borders, figures which for picturesque impressiveness are scarcely to be matched on any page of the history of North America. Here is the land of Jesuit and Recollect missionaries, of French and English and Indians, of settlers and voyageurs, of Hudson's Bay traders and St. Lawrence River seigneurs, of Calvinistic refugees from across the water and of royalist fugitives from the southern colonies. Here is a land whose history blends discovery and settlement, war and insurrection, earthquake and mob violence, religious controversy and political contention in strong colors. And yet this vast and crowded field, alive with incident and peopled with striking and memorable characters, has so far almost wholly escaped the use of imaginative writers.

Longfellow, indeed, in Evangeline, has sung the story of Acadian wrongs and sorrows. Alfred B. Street left a poem on Frontenac. Judge Haliburton's The Old Judge, Mr. James De Mille's The Lily and the Cross, and Mrs. Williams's The Neutral French, have touched some aspects of the French part of the subject. C. W. Hall, in Twice Taken, has dealt with the siege of Louisbourg; which is also treated in the Rev. David Hickey's William and Mary. George Cocking's The Conquest of Canada is a dramatic venture. An anonymous writer in 1777 versified The Death of General Montgomery in Storming Quebec; and Mr. Howells has made a trip to the Saguenay the motive of his pretty tale of Their Wedding Journey. Robert Lowell's New Priest in Conception Bay has its scene in Newfoundland, and A. A. Hayes's recent Jesuit's Ring uses the rich material for romance bequeathed by the French to the early history of Mount Desert. The Canadians have a respectable but not widely known local literature. A Miss Barry, under the pseudonym of Vera, has written Honor Edgeworth; or, Ottawa's Past and Present Tense. Mr. William Kirby, the author of The U. E., a poem in twelve cantos, dealing with the loyalists who founded Upper Canada, has also written Le Chien d'Or, which the late Prince Leopold said he meant to have the pleasure of reading in the Citadel of Quebec. Then recently we have had Constance of Acadia, an anonymous novel, the heroine of which was Constance La Tour. This, we believe, is about all. Stay: we must not forget Captain Marryat's Settlers in Canada, the delight of many a boyhood, and a fascinating book indeed, though not of the statelier and more dignified order of literature which we now have in view. With the exception of Longfellow's, Marryat's, and Howells's three, and one or two of the others, there is nothing in this list which is of importance as an entry of the field against new comers. And we wonder that the new comers do not appear.

Great possibilities attach themselves to this field, if taken hold of by a master hand, who should do with it and for it what Cooper did for the Indian and the sailor, Hawthorne for early New England life, and even John Esten Cooke for old Virginia. The essential ingredients of landscape, history, heroism, tragedy, and pathos are all here, in rare proportions and fascinating quality.

The land to the south of us, Mexico, has not been wholly neglected, as witness Gen. Lew Wallace's The Fair God, that singular composition out of the materials of the ancient Aztec civilization. But Canada, with its adjuncts, is a land of equal form and color with Mexico, its romance is of a healthier type, and our sympathy therewith would certainly be far stronger. The Prescott of Mexico, too, is fully matched by the Parkman of Canada; nothing is lacking but the skilled and glowing mind to fuse the mass and mold it into an image instinct with life. If any one of our readers has just returned from Quebec he will feel the truth of what we say; only perhaps he will add that the bald prose of Canadian history is so romantic that it is almost painting the rainbow to turn it into fiction.

Just now when there is a call for romance as against realism, and when our novelists are scouring the continent from the villages of New England to the cañons of the Sierras in search of a promising "claim," why does not some one of them, or more, turn the eye northward to this almost untrodden but inviting region of great forests, great waters, great heroes, great events, and great episodes, and adventure a literary effort in that direction? If Hawthorne could only have had Parkman to go before him! Who knows but the coming "American novel," for which we are all expectant, is to be a Canadian novel, and that it is to appear out of the North?

THE LIBRARIES OF THE LAND.

WHEN the history of intellectual and social life in America in the last quarter of the nineteenth century comes to be written, as it will be by some of the McMasters, Egglestons, or Scudders of the century to come, there will be one chapter in it on the evolution of the public library and of the librarian profession. Our esteemed friend, Mr. Henry Holt, of New York, may say what he believes upon the question "Will the coming man read books?" The fact that a list can now be given, as was the other day at the librarians' conference at the Thousand Islands, of thirty-four public libraries just completed in this country, or approaching completion, is good ground for something more than hope that books are to continue to be a factor in modern life. Undoubtedly the periodical is to be vested with some of the functions of the bound volume. Undoubtedly changes are to take place in the manufacture, distribution, and use of books; but the rapid increase of the library system cannot mean anything else than the multiplication of books, and of course the multiplication of readers.

The librarians' conference above referred to was an interesting sign of the times. Nearly two hundred members of the profession—as we must now call them—or twice the usual number, were present, half of them women. Almost all the Northern States, including Colorado and California, were represented. The enthusiasm was marked, and papers and discussions of great importance filled the four days of the conference.

The growth of the great public library idea was sketched by Dr. Poole of Chicago. Library architecture was treated by Mr. Larned of Buffalo. Methods of library study were considered by Professor H. B. Adams of Johns Hopkins University. Mrs. Sanders of Pawtucket, R. I., showed how the library could be made to reach the street. The function of the public library as related to the public school was forcibly pointed out by Mr. Green of Worcester, Mass.—a favorite topic with him. A St. Louis librarian animadverted with timely severity upon political interference with library management.

The country's investment in public libraries is beginning to be large, but it is an investment that will amply pay. Nobody can estimate the return which Mr. Newberry's millions, translated into books, are to make to the city of Chicago. When, in the quiet Massachusetts seaside village of Osterville the other day, we saw the pretty little library building suggested and stocked by Mr. Garrison, the true son of his father, we felt anew the value of the benefaction which he confers who puts good books within easy reach of the people. Free churches, free schools, free libraries, and a free press—these are the nation's defenses. With these, and their natural results, Mr. Secretary Whitney can shut up his shipyards, our forts may be dismantled, and the army and navy can scatter to their homes.

World Biographies.

George Willis Cooke. The preacher and lecturer who can find time to write important literary matter regularly is a rare character. One such, however, is George Willis Cooke, of West Dedham, Mass. Mr. Cooke was born in Comstock, Kalamazoo county, Mich., April 23d, 1843, and spent his childhood and youth in that town and its neighbor, Pavilion, his father being a farmer. His school-days until his sixteenth year occupied but three months of the year; thenceforward until eighteen he was deprived of school advantages, but after reaching that age was enabled, by the interest of an uncle, to attend Olivet College for a year, next attending, for two years, the Universalist College at Jefferson, Wis., after deciding to prepare for the ministry. His health failing at the close of his studies at Jefferson, he taught school while trying to recuperate. He then attended the Meadville, Pa., Theological School, after which he was ordained. He had early shown a strong appetite for literature, devouring every book he came across, and reading Chambers's Cyclopædia of English Literature entire; and although he had chosen the ministry as his profession, he was deeply interested in literary work, and set about writing for the press even during school-days at home, and continued it during his college course. His first book was Ralph Waldo Emerson: His Life, Writings, and Philosophy, published in the fall of 1881; his second, George Eliot: A Critical Study of Her Life, Writings, and Philosophy, published in 1883; and his third and latest, Poets and Problems, published in 1886. Besides these works, Mr. Cooke has prepared much matter suitable for book form in the way of lectures and addresses, and has written a long paper concerning The Dial, the organ of the Transcendental movement, which has been printed in The Journal of Speculative Philosophy, a biographical paper on George Eliot, which has appeared in an edition de luxe of that writer's complete works, and many newspaper articles; has written a lecture, "Emerson's View of Nationality," which appeared in Sanborn's "The Genius of Emerson," and has edited a volume of Minor American Poets in the "Canterbury Series" published by Walter Scott, London; and is now at work on a book to give a historical, biographical, and critical account of woman's authorship in England from the earliest years until now, together with much collateral information and discussion. In all his critical work Mr. Cooke aims to consider his subject from its author's standpoint, and is always successful to the extent of expressing appreciation of whatever is appreciable, if not always cognizant of defects; the result of which is that he has gained the reputation of a gracious and helpful critic, if less discriminating than the case demands, at times. As a preacher he has held positions in Sheboygan and Sharon, Wis., Grand Haven, Mich., Indianapolis, and West Dedham, Mass., where he now lives. In all these connections he has delivered lectures on social and literary subjects, and has been active in the lines of benevolent and reform work. Though formerly a radical Unitarian, he is now little interested in theological problems, and, while essentially Unitarian in belief, is inclined to leave doctrinal matters to themselves. He feels that book-making is the main business of his life, and is devoting himself more and more thereto, with the intention of producing something more original and imaginative than he has yet written.

—We find this pleasant paragraph in the Academy:

Two American girls—Miss Gertrude Baxter and Miss Hussey, of New Bedford, Massachusetts—have made an index to seventy-eight of the volumes of the Early English Text Society. They are willing to complete the society's other fifty volumes if the society will print the index.

This the committee will, of course, gladly do, if the specimen of the work to be sent meets with their approval. The index can then include the books of 1888, and thus comprise the society's first twenty-five years' work.

"THE POWER OF DARKNESS," BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

IT seems at first sight well-nigh impossible to vindicate the publication of such a work as Count Tolstoi's recent "peasant" drama, The Power of Darkness; nor can we wonder at the censor's action in interdicting, not only its representation on the stage, but also its reproduction in any form. As the curtain falls over the last scene we fling away the book with a shudder of disgust and loathing; for we have been among men and women more bestial even than beasts, whose ignorance is utter, whose vices are of the lowest animal order, and whose sole virtue is an unreasoning but profound trust in God, not as a guide but as a final refuge.

Count Tolstoi's answer to this would be a simple one: the book was not written for educated people, nor even for those half educated by the experience of town life; what manner of men and women they are he has told them in his previous works. Today he is working in the mud of the back yard among the unsavory companions whom he is striving to educate. "Until you become one of them yourself," he tells us in Que Faire, "it is useless to attempt to reason with them, or to find the arguments which really shall appeal to their rude minds." So he has gone among them, become one of them, learned to live their life, and at last, in their own language, drawn for them a portrait of themselves. If this portrait be a true one—and it unquestionably is—what a hideous animal the muzhik must be! We are told that he is good-natured enough when he is sober—but so is a hog, to whom he bears a strong resemblance, and we may be pardoned for lacking fellow feeling with him. Indeed, The Power of Darkness is a book about swine, an English version of which would hardly be attempted even by an enthusiastic disciple of Walt Whitman.

And yet we cannot look at it as were it one of the forced elucidations of M. Zola, whose types are dead morally without a possibility of regeneration. We feel that after all the Russian peasant is susceptible of education; ignorance rather than perversity is the cause of his depravity. He cannot deny because he never knew. He is still mainly governed by the same natural laws and appetites that govern brute animals, and indeed govern man in populous communities all over the world where education is unknown.

The logic of the action of this drama is implacable as the logic of the survival of the fittest: one necessity begets a second; one crime begets another crime. A woman cannot have two husbands, therefore the weaker must go to the wall; nor can there be two mistresses in the same house, so the one with lesser rights must go, and whatever evidence there may be that would interfere with her satisfactory disposal by marriage must be suppressed. Desertion, murder, seduction, infanticide, brutal treatment, deception, drunkenness, and so on until the day of retribution has come.

Like all the great Russian's works, this book is written with a distinct moral purpose, and the method is the same which he followed in his previous works. He begins by drawing a careful, exact portrait from life, and then points out to the sitter, who has recognized the wonderful likeness, the utter hideousness of his being. Yet it seems to us that here the work is beyond the understanding and appreciation of the peasant model. The advantages to be derived from successful crime appeal to his imagination more forcibly than do the danger of criminality, the anguish of remorse, and the weight of punishment. He does not understand, nor does he seek for, the cause of a depravity which he does not realize; hence the book is more likely to prove a source of evil rather than of good among the muzshik classes; and the censor's prohibitory action seems for once to be a commendable one. Indirectly it may serve a good cause by teaching those for whom it was not written where the evil really lies, and suggest a means of treating it, if so be it they are sufficiently brave and self-sacrificing to attempt the cure. Like a doctor's paper on some terrible disease, it is much more likely to prove useful in the hands of the physician than in those of the patient, where Tolstoi places it.

As a literary work The Power of Darkness stands alone, not only in dramatic, but in descriptive, prose writing. The logic of the drama is perfect; the action both close and vigorous. The bold brutality of its tone, equaled only by that of Rabelais or Swift, is more powerful than that of the latter because less cynical, and more real than that of the former because it lacks his forced jollity. Outside of those really interested in social problems, comparatively few are likely to read and appreciate this astonishing and powerful work; for those who read it for the story, or for the "revelations" it contains, will probably prefer the polished cynical frankness of Martial, the sentimental and morbid apologies of Rousseau, or the untruthful realism of Zola.

JOHN HEARD, JR.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

Scapegrace Dick. By Frances Mary Peard. With four full-page illustrations. [London: National Society's Depository. New York: Thomas Whitaker. $1.05.]

This is an English story of the times of contest between the royalist and parliamentary forces, when Colonel Blake's bravery was the admiration of all, even of those who were on the side of the king. Dick Ripton, belonging to a loyal family, becomes infatuated to go into the service of this hero, and having quarreled with his step-mother runs away to sea. He is fortunate enough to attract the attention of Blake, and in consequence sees a great deal of fighting, and is in some of the brilliant engagements which form a part of the naval history of that eventful period, coming into personal acquaintance with Tromp. He is taken by the Dutch, and while detained in Amsterdam, Antwerp, and elsewhere, is brought into intimate relations with the families of some of the great painters of the day, especially with that of Rembrandt, whose son Titus is a prominent figure in the narrative. Dutch homes, Dutch characters, Dutch manners are picturesquely treated, and there is a vividness and realism quite unusual in historic stories, while the boy element, the boy nature, is never lost sight of. It is full of stirring life; and those quaint old towns, and artists of renown, and burgomasters, and servants, are drawn with painstaking fidelity. It is bright and fresh and readable and wholesome, and ends happily.

Fighting the Sea; or, Winter at the Life-Saving Station. By Edward A. Rand. [Thomas Whitaker. $1.25.]

The author embodies in this volume his knowledge of the life-saving stations, embellished with a story. Many interesting facts and statistics are given in a manner calculated to attract the attention of the young readers for whom the book was written. The chapters descriptive of "the station" which Walter visited, and where he afterwards went into service, are graphic, and give many little incidents worth knowing, especially where the use of the "time detector" is explained, the Coston signals, the surf-boat, and various appliances for the life-saving work. There is an undue proportion of story, but no boy will complain of that, and every boy of honorable purpose will be absorbed in watching the course of the hero, to see if his Christian training and integrity will bring him safely through the trials to which he is exposed.

MINOR FICTION.

The Great Bank Robbery. From the Diary of Inspector Byrnes. By Julian Hawthorne. [Cassell & Co. $1.00.] This, Mr. Hawthorne's second detective story, is in general respects inferior to his first, A Tragic Mystery. Its construction is not so good, its interest is not so evenly sustained, and there is a recurrence, intensified, of the coarse streak of which we complained in the former story. The scenes in this book between Mrs. Nelson and John Grady are extremely disagreeable, and they do not bear any vital relation to the story; the thread seems interwoven with the fabric for its own sake. And because of this element, particularly because of the thinly-veiled suggestions in chap. xvii, the book is unfit for the reading of young people. The robbery which furnishes the subject was that of the Manhattan Savings Institution, on the corner of Bleecker Street and Broadway, New York; and the details of it are given by Mr. Hawthorne in effective terms. The account of the detection of the criminals is less effective, and is injured by the needless attention given to the relations between Mrs. Nelson and Grady. What most readers will call the best passage in the book is the car-ride to Washington, in which Mrs. Nelson is brought to terms by the police inspector. This, if pure invention, is cleverly done, while if it is merely descriptive of an actual occurrence it could hardly be improved. The introduction, which stretches through the first five chapters, is irrelevant and tedious. The book might as well begin with chap. vi, but then would have lacked body. Before finishing the first page of the book we should like to ask Mr. Hawthorne how "the sun" dropping toward the west, "can send its "broad luster up Fifth Avenue, casting before them the shadows of two men going up town." On p. 139 we should like to pause to ask him how a man can walk down Fifth Avenue "as far as Twenty-fifth Street," and then cross "Union Square in a diagonal direction as far as Madison Avenue." On p. 78 we read, "All their employes . . . had never been found untrustworthy;" on p. 62, "Wenkle" for Wenkle; and on p. 63, "Every one of them were," "their attire were devoid," and "they was all armed,"—blemishes which show that neither Mr. Hawthorne nor his printers were quite as careful as they ought to have been.

Thraldom. By Julian Sturgis. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 50c.] Mr. Sturgis is a painstaking and pleasant writer, as this story of Thraldom shows; but his present motive is inferior, and the end does not fulfill the expectations which the beginning awakens. The story depicts the workings of personal magnetism, or psychic force, or whatever else one may please to call it, as employed by a wily widow to compel her beautiful ward to marry her son. The opening pages, relating to Tom Fane, the true lover of Sybil Mervyn, are charming; the development, with its introduction of Mrs. Vere and her scheme, and the diabolical old negress, is less agreeable. However, all ends as it should; the treacherous governess is defeated, and the true lover and Sybil are left happy.

A Dateless Burgin. By C. L. Pirkis. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 30c.] Fenian accessories, socialist complications, a mysterious disappearance, and London detectives give Mr. Pirkis's story a sensational flavor, though not to a harmful degree. The feature of the book is plot, which is complicated and puzzling enough. Neither in characters nor in style does the story make a marked impression.

The Autobiography of a Slander. By Edna Lyall. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 25c.] This is a trifle, but an ingenious one. Its subject is the matrimonial history of Mr. Zaluski, a Russian; its object to show how much mischief may be caused in such connections by a baseless rumor like that of Mr. Zaluski's being a Nihilist. The story is short, clever, and profitable.

Miss Gascoigne. By Mrs. J. H. Riddell. [D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 25c.] Mrs. Riddell is a good English novelist, not one of the great ones. Her story of Miss Gascoigne is pleasant reading of a quiet sort, without marked traits of any kind. Miss Gascoigne had two lovers, one of whom was much too young for her, greatly to his disappointment. Tranquil scenes of English country life inclose this bit of heart history, like sunny meadows with a placid river flowing smoothly between.

Forging the Fetters. By Mrs. Alexander. [Henry Holt & Co. $1.00.] Mrs. Alexander's new volume is made up of three shortish stories, reprinted, apparently, from some magazine. They are not noteworthy tales in any respect. Two of them turn on a theme familiar both to their author and her readers, the fortunes, namely, of an attractive and penniless orphan living in a subordinate capacity in the household of coarse relatives. The third, which gives its name to the book, relates to a certain Mrs. Fane, occupying the position vulgarly known as that of a "grass widow," and her reunion with her husband, whom, singularly enough, she fails to recognize when she meets him, though their separation cannot have been longer than twelve or fifteen years. There is nothing in either of the three tales to claim especial attention beyond their readableness, a quality in which, it may be said, Mrs. Alexander is rarely found lacking.

—Mr. Frank R. Stockton's sequel to Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine will be called The Dusanies, and it is authoritatively announced that the new story will thoroughly and satisfactorily dispose of Mrs. Lecks, Mrs. Aleshine, and other old friends, and will moreover tell all about the famous, but so far invisible, family whose name it bears. The Dusanter will begin in the December Century and will be concluded in three numbers.

MINOR NOTICES.

Order of Words in Ancient and Modern Languages.

The Order of Words in the Ancient Languages Compared with that of the Modern Languages. By Henri Weil. Translated with Notes and Additions by Charles W. Super, Ph.D. [Ginn & Co. $1.25.]

The question of the arrangement of words in ancient and modern languages is one that has long perplexed students; and until the appearance of M. Weil's treatise, which has passed through three editions in the original, there has been no satisfactory attempt to reduce the knowledge of the subject to an exact system. M. Weil, to begin with, advances the theory that the syntactic march is not the march of ideas, but that the order of words does in all cases correspond with the order of ideas, and that if the order of words differs in ancient from that in modern languages it is because the order of ideas differs. With us the tendency is to make the syntactical movement correspond with the movement of ideas: the ancients simply chose the least artificial and most animated syntactical movement, and by the use of terminations were enabled to attain greater liberty of form. M. Weil defines clearly the relative values of the descending and ascending methods of construction, and decides that the perfection of a language consists not in following invariably an exclusive system of construction, or in adhering with immutable logic to the ultimate consequences of an adopted principle; but, on the contrary, it consists in a judicious improvement upon a too prominent and uniform characteristic, by the admission of an opposite system, and by balancing the shortcomings of one method over against the excellences of another.

The work is the product of refined scholarship, and is indispensable to students who would have a philosophical command of the ancient languages. Prof. Super's translation seems to have been carefully done.

The Margin of Profits.

The Margin of Profits. By Edward Atkinson. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.]

This volume, in the Putnam's series on "Questions of the Day," contains an address delivered by Mr. Atkinson before the Central Labor Lyceum of Boston on Sunday evening, May 1, 1887, with a reply made by Mr. E. M. Chamberlin, a prominent labor advocate, and Mr. Atkinson's rejoinder. Mr. Atkinson's favorite and telling method of illustrating economic discussions by diagrams and lines of various lengths is here brought into full play, to prove that the margin of profit in manufacturing cotton cloth is much lower than laboring men are wont to suppose, that it is divided equitably, and that no reduction of the hours of labor is at present feasible. Mr. Atkinson's style is exceedingly direct and pungent: what he sees he sees very clearly and sets forth very plainly. Mr. Chamberlin's rhetoric contrasts painfully with the sledge-hammer logic of his opponent, but the one point in his reply to which Mr. Atkinson carefully makes no rejoinder indicates the latter's weakness. In 1874 Mr. Atkinson declared that if the ten-hour law was passed, production would be obstructed and capital be driven out of the State. These misfortunes not having happened, the spirit of prophecy cannot be said to rest upon him, and such a spirit tested by time is the best one to bring to the discussion of the eight-hour question. We must confess, too, that Mr. Atkinson's figures do not always impress us as conveying the whole truth. "Nothing lies like figures," and Mr. Atkinson's mind is evidently not of the judicial cast which exposes the unveracity into which statistics easily fall. But there is so much sound sense and so much undeniable new light in this address that it deserves a wide reading, especially among working people.

The Russian Church and Dissent.

The Russian Church and Russian Dissent, comprising Orthodoxy, Dissent, and Erratic Sects. By Albert F. Heard. [Harper & Bros. $1.75.]

"Religious devotion," says Mr. Heard, is the "strongest and most general characteristic" of the people of Russia. Of the manifestations which this devotion has made he gives us in this compact and clearly written volume an account which makes no claims to theological erudition, but is based upon the best and latest authorities, and reinforced by the experiences of a long residence in Russia. The first eight chapters are devoted to a brief history of the origin and progress of the Greek church, its increasing dependence upon the Tsars, and its doctrinal development. Nikon, the famous patriarch of the seventeenth century, is the one great figure in these ecclesiastical annals, but the end of all his efforts to preserve the spiritual independence of the church was that Peter the Great could say of himself that he was superior to Louis of France "in one essential point: I have forced my clergy to obedience and peace, and Louis allowed himself to be subjugated by his." Mr. Heard describes the present condition of the two divisions of the clergy, the monks and the "popes," or secular parish clergy, the latter being forced by their miserable stipend to the most mercenary conduct in dispensing the offices of religion. He then goes on to describe the many dissenting sects which have sprung in the last two hundred years from the popular movement known as the "Raskol" or "Schism." Although tending in some of its sects toward a mystical interpretation of Scripture, the Raskol as a whole Mr. Heard pronounces "sectional, narrow-minded, bigoted, jealous, and pharisaical." The dissenting sects not belonging to the Raskol make a clean sweep of dogma and ritual, and teach "the most advanced, novel, and revolutionary ideas." The people in general, whether orthodox or heterodox, are very devout, but among the upper classes "Atheism is as general a doctrine as Christianity, and infidelity has supplanted faith."

Life of Charles Darwin. By G. T. Bettany. [London: Walter Scott. Imported by Thomas Whittaker.] This brief biography of Darwin is much the best life of him yet written, and will be displaced only by the elaborate work to be issued by his son and Mr. Romanes. Its eleven chapters contain a full account of Darwin's wonderful achievements as marked by his successive books; the exposition is sympathetic but not eulogistic, and the more personal details are given with good taste. Mr. Bettany's opening sentences give a fair idea of his skill and spirit.

If ever a man's ancestors transmitted to him ability to succeed in a particular field, Charles Darwin's did. If ever early surroundings were calculated to call out inherited ability, Charles Darwin's were. If ever a man grew up when a ferment of thought was disturbing old convictions in the domain of knowledge for which he was adapted, Charles Darwin did. If ever a man was fitted by worldly position to undertake unbiased and long-continued investigations, Charles Darwin was such a man; and he indisputably found realms waiting for a conqueror. Yet Darwin's achievements far transcend his advantage of ancestry, surroundings, previous suggestion, position. He stands magnificently conspicuous as a genius of rare simplicity of soul, of unwearied patience of observation, of striking fertility and ingenuity of method, of unflinching devotion to and belief in the efficacy of truth. He revolutionized not merely half a dozen sciences, but the whole current of thinking men's mental life.

A History of the Doctrine of Comets. By Andrew D. White. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 25c.] This instructive pamphlet by the learned ex-President of Cornell University recites in detail the history of the long passage from the conception of comets, "as fire-balls flung by an angry God for the purpose of scaring a wicked world, to their recognition as natural in origin and obedient to law in movement," and emphasizes the clearing away by science of "one more series of those dogmas which tend to debase rather than to develop man's whole moral and religious nature."

Psychology: The Motive Powers, Emotions, Conscience, Will. By James McCosh, D.D. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.] This is the second volume of Rev. Dr. McCosh's system of psychology for use in colleges and other schools. The first volume, on the Cognitive Powers, we noticed with due praise on its appearance a year back. The present work is, perhaps unavoidably, rather dry, the cataloguing of feelings never being an inspiring matter. Dr. McCosh has added to the interest of his full treatment of the emotions by numerous quotations from Darwin's work on their expression. His discussion of the conscience and the will is very condensed.

Trade Organizations in Politics: Also Progress and Robbery. By J. Bleeker Miller. [Baker & Taylor Co.] The papers and speeches making up this volume advocate with no little ability the ideas that a city should be a political unit in its relations to the State, that the inhabitants should not be arbitrarily subdivided into geographical election districts, and that trade, business, and professional organizations should take an active part in shaping legislation. This last suggestion seems to be the most immediately practical one, and we trust that the leaders of the reform movements of the day will carefully consider Mr. Bleeker Miller's arguments.

The Church and the Faith. By the Rev. W. B. Bolmer. [E. & J. B. Young & Co. $3.00.] This large and closely printed volume is subtitled "a philosophical history of the Catholic Church." Its author is a thorough-going English Churchman. He makes no account, of course, of other religions than Christianity, and in Christianity sees little outside the historic organization of which the Church of England is a branch. He defends the primitive origin of episcopacy. He reveres the authority of councils. He is "unable to discover one single argument to support the claims of the Lutheran body to be a real church." Such points as these indicate the general position of the work, which, touching more than one historical point, is not up with the best modern scholarship, and in respect of breadth and true catholicity is not impressed with the best Christian spirit. High churchmen of the English pattern, promoters of the scheme of an "American Catholic Church," and sectarians of the author's school, will receive the work with approbation and pleasure.

Theophilus Trent. Old Times in the Oak Openings. By Benj. F. Taylor. [S. C. Griggs & Co.] This semi-prose, semi-poetical story of early life in Michigan, by the late Mr. Taylor, bears numerous marks of autobiography. It is an entertaining picture of the more humorous aspects of a frontier settlement fifty years back, or more, in which young Theophilus teaches the young idea how to shoot. Bodkins is probably unrecognizable today, and Mr. Taylor's memories of it well deserved permanent record.

Memorials of a Half-Century. By Bela Hubbard. Illus. [G. P. Putnam's Sons.] A great deal of interesting reading touching topics of American nature and life as seen from the standpoint of Michigan is embodied in this handsome volume of nearly 600 pages. The author settled in the vicinity of Detroit in 1835, when that city had less than 5,000 inhabitants. There he has lived ever since. Something of a local historian, antiquary and archæologist, and scientific student in one, his life has been occupied with elevated pursuits and studious observations, and the papers here collected contain the results. Several times Mr. Hubbard was a member of exploring expeditions into the wilderness, and his accounts of voyaging on the great lakes forty or fifty years ago are full of novelty. The life of French habitants, Indians, and early settlers in Michigan is depicted in detail; there is a chapter on the mound builders; the fauna and flora of the peninsula are described in full; and the climatology of Detroit and the lake region occupies more than a hundred pages. The book is pleasantly written, in a vein of reminiscence, and furnishes much useful information as well as entertainment. The wood-cuts are numerous, good, and pertinent.

Methods of Church Work, Religious, Social, and Financial. By Rev. Sylvanus Stall. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50.] Christian ministers, earnest laymen, elders and deacons, wardens and vestrymen, all concerned with and anxious for the best life and activity of the churches, of every name, will find much to repay for reading in this book. Its seven parts traverse the whole ground of organization, the needs of young people, social religious meetings, revivals, lay help, finances, and benevolent agencies; following out the various divisions of these topics in great variety, and amassing a large assortment of methods, experiences, and suggestions of a highly practical nature. No minister, of course, can be made successful, and no church a power, simply by copying the plans proposed in a work of this kind; but as a record of what is being done with good effect, and a cyclopædia of details, there is much in it fitted to be stimulating and helpful.

The College and the Church. From the "Forum" Magazine. [D. Appleton & Co.] There are collected in this book the two series of articles originally published in the Forum of New York, in the first of which eleven public men of prominence told in turn the story of their education, and in the second of which nine representatives of as many religious denominations (including a "skeptic") presented their ecclesiastical "confessions." Seven college presidents, with Dr. J. H. Vincent, Professor Wm. T. Harris, Mr. Higginson, and Rev. E. E. Hale, are the contributors in the first series; the writers of the second are anonymous. These papers attracted a good deal of attention on their first appearance, and are worth preservation—those of the first series in particular. The second series are more entertaining than instructive, and indulge in some sharp reflections on the religious life of the times. Their value would have been increased had their authors felt it safe to sign their names.

Oliver Goldsmith. A Selection from his Works. With an Introduction by E. E. Hale. [Chautauqua Press. 75c.] The compiler of this little volume has done his work well. "The Traveller," "The Deserted Village," and "Retaliation" are given in full; then follow twenty-eight of Goldsmith's essays, chosen with discrimination, and tastefully arranged. Mr. Hale's introduction is heartily sympathetic and appreciative. It is Mr. Hale's opinion that for the important object of "making life pleasant and happy, of cheering homes otherwise sad, of driving out impure thoughts by pure, or making long hours short, or lonely days cheerful, few authors who have written in the English language have done so much" as Goldsmith; but Mr. Hale seems to think it the greatest glory of Goldsmith that he was the master of Washington Irving.

The Republic of the Future; or, Socialism a Reality. By Anna Bowman Dodd. [Cassell & Co. 50c.] In a series of letters by a Swedish nobleman of the 21st century, Mrs. Dodd sets forth the condition of New York under a fully-developed socialistic régime. Every house is like every other; all excellence is discouraged, and machinery has taken the place of personal service to an incredible degree. The result is monotony and universal ennui. While Mrs. Dodd makes an occasional good point, it is not clear that she understands socialism: she seems to confound it sometimes with anarchism and in general to have written from superficial notions of it. Her forte is evidently not satire of this kind.

Mr. James H. West's Uplifts of Heart and Will are a series of religious meditations and aspirations for the congregational or private use of devout men and women. Their peculiarity is their construction upon the theory that prayer is an "upward-looking of the soul towards the moral ideal," and that "petitional address" is not uplifting any more than begging. Accordingly no personal God is addressed in these reveries, and no supplication is offered for definite blessings. [C. H. Kerr & Co. 50c.]

An excellent text-book on The Practical Elements of Rhetoric has been prepared by Professor J. F. Genung of Amherst College. The strong points of the work are its method, its clearness, and its copious use of illustrations to depict both faults and merits of style. The treatment of the theme is elaborate and minute. A full knowledge of the "practical elements of rhetoric," as covered by this volume, would carry one well on in the art of good writing. [Ginn & Co.]

Under the title of The People's Bible Dr. Joseph Parker of London, now visiting this country, is pushing steadily forward the printing of his expository lectures on the Christian Scriptures. A sixth volume advances the work from the sixth chapter of the book of Judges to the eighteenth of the first book of Samuel. Between thirty and forty topics are covered by the exposition. Each exposition is accompanied by the prayer offered at the time the discourse was spoken, and a few critical and explanatory notes are appended on the text. Dr. Parker is a man of strong and original mind, stalwart religious faith of the "orthodox school," and great vigor and directness of expression, with uncommon gifts of illustration and application to the minds of the people. He is not always governed by the canons of the best taste. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50.]

The Journalist of New York, a successful paper now in its third year, has issued an attractive Souvenir, made up of a large number of contributions in prose and verse, including the biographies of several distinguished journalists and their portraits. We congratulate our contemporary on its prosperity.

To the Historical Series of Appleton's Reading Books have been added Ten Great Events in History and Stories of Heroic Deeds, both by James Johonnot. The design of both books, to instruct the young in the art of reading while at the same time instilling into their minds principles of patriotism, heroism, and self-sacrifice, is admirable, and is finely carried out by the author. These books, both in their spirit and in their comely form, are of the first class. [D. Appleton & Co.]

The J. B. Lippincott Co. have issued a new edition, for 1887, of their handsome illustrated pamphlet, Philadelphia and its Environs. Its features are a map, descriptive letter press, and numerous and excellent wood-cuts, the latter serving effectively to show the elegance of the city. No finer work of its kind can be seen in any pages than some of these engravings, particularly those depicting suburban villas and points of interest. [50c.]

Dr. John S. Butler, so long superintendent of the Insane Asylum at Hartford, Conn., has published a short essay on The Curability of Insanity and the Individualized Treatment of the Insane, in which are epitomized the results of his exceptional experience and success. His views, as set forth in these fewer than sixty pages, are both humane and sensible. Their importance to the profession may be concluded from the fact that there are in the United States nearly 150 lunatic hospitals with upwards of 50,000 patients, and that there are almost 100,000 insane persons in the United States, or 1 in about 550 of the population. The tone of Dr. Butler's opinions is hopeful and comforting, and should soothe the distress of those whose friends are afflicted with mental disease, as well as encourage them to resort to that scientific treatment which is sometimes dreaded. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 40c.]

—The Lithotype Printing and Publishing Co. have in preparation what promises to be one of the most valuable, as well as one of the most interesting yachting books now in the market, entitled American and English Yachts. It will contain a treatise on yachts and yachting by Mr.

Edward Burgess, will illustrate and describe the most famous yachts now sailing in English and American waters, giving records and other data, and will be embellished with fifty full-page plates reproduced from instantaneous negatives taken by Mr. N. L. Stebbins.

THE SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

In Temple Bar we find ourselves turning first to Mrs. Campbell-Praed's "Some American Impressions" continued, which are readable but not so readable as they ought to be. If anybody doubts the impossibility of a cultivated English person seeing American objects as we see them, let him read these pages. In the present paper Mrs. Campbell-Praed is struck with spiritual likenesses between America and Australia; she waxes rapturous over an autumnal sail up the Hudson; she drives through the suburbs of Boston under the guidance of an unnamed poet who was obviously John Boyle O'Reilly; she has a delightful visit at a summer house on the Massachusetts shore; she meets some rather coarse and vulgar women at a party in New York, and a pronounced and unconventional young Virginian lady whose conversation she professes to repeat verbatim; and she visits Niagara, where her attention seems to be more occupied with the silly honeymooners than with the cataract. Three other capital articles in this number of Temple Bar are "Mr. Twining's Letters," a bundle of old correspondence; "At a Moorish Window," a picture of Cadiz; and a chapter of "Clerical Reminiscences," abounding in good stories, of which one of the best is this:

The same clerk was told to give out the notice: "On Sunday next the service in this church will be held in the afternoon, and on the following Sunday it will be held in the morning, and so on alternately until further notice." What he actually did give out was as follows: "On Sunday next the morning service in this church will be held in the afternoon, and on the following Sunday the afternoon service will be held in the morning, and so on to all eternity."

The Century has two articles on Jefferson's home life at Monticello by J. J. Nicolay and Frank Stockton, and the two together give a good general idea of Jefferson as man and master of a household. There is a frontispiece portrait of Jefferson engraved by T. Johnson after the painting by Stuart, and Harry Fenn supplies illustrations of Monticello. The Abraham Lincoln history with its wealth of facts and its lamentable lack of synthesis has got to Lincoln's nomination and election. Two articles on amateur photography minister to the popular fancy. Prof. Atwater discusses the digestibility of food, and asserts that raw meat is more easily digested than cooked meat, and that a moderate amount of food taken at any given meal is digested more completely than a very large or a very small quantity. But what is a "moderate amount?" John Bach McMaster contributes a carefully written paper on the framers and the framing of the constitution. Harriet Lewis Bradley makes a bright story of the experiences of a modern feminine disciple of culture and philanthropy. The war articles are concerned with the tragic dash into the crater at Petersburg.

Senator J. J. Ingalls blows a fierce trumpet-blast against the proposed extension of the suffrage to women, in the Forum. Rev. Dr. A. Jessopp discourses pleasantly of the books that have helped him, ascribing great benefit to Lempriere's Classical Dictionary, and concluding with this remark, that, excepting the Bible, "there is no book in any language that, during the last twenty years of my life, has been so much to me . . . as the Biglow Papers." Andrew Lang deals amusingly with the manners of critics, and wittily indicates what would be the condition of affairs if we adopted Mr. Howells's advice and "approached criticism to the Continental attitude. 'Before a man of taste gives pain, think how much he has suffered,' says Lessing. The critic suffers a good deal." Mrs. Craik has something to say concerning men, and naturally says something also concerning women. Prof. E. D. Cope adopts the theory that happiness is the object of life and is to be attained by employment in one way and another. Bishop A. C. Coxe inveighs against the painful lack of originality and discrimination in the choice of American geographical names. President Bascom explains that the gist of the labor question is in the existence of "semi-specialized, half-occupied labor." Rev. N. P. Gilman expounds ably and conclusively the application of profit-sharing and its limitation, and cites a number of practical, convincing examples. Prof. Winchell demolishes the Hon Ignatius Donnelly's theory of cometary collision and evidently takes much delight in the performance—a delight which the reader will share.

The approaching centennial anniversary of the birth of Byron is made the excuse for a fragmentary critico-biographical review of Byron's career by R. H. Stoddard in the Princeton Review. Mr. Stoddard views the shortcomings of Byron with a kindly eye and regards him as a victim "sacrificed on the altar of public virtue." In this number of the Princeton, which has both weight and variety, H. W. Conn analyzes the materialistic theories of the origin of life, and finds that they are merely theories accepted or rejected according to temperament and training. A. H. Colquitt has some "plain words" on prohibition, but mixes with them a good deal of unnecessary rhetoric. Brander Matthews reveals a woeful chapter of British piracy of American authors, and thereby indicates that the sins against international copyright are not all on this side the ocean. The British pirate, it seems, not only kidnaps but mutilates his victim. Francis N. Zabriskie has a charming paper on the essay as a literary form and quality.

The essay is properly a collection of notes, indicating certain aspects of a subject, or suggesting thought concerning it, rather than the orderly or exhaustive treatment of it. It is not a formal siege, but a series of assaults—essays or attempts upon it. It does not pursue its theme like a pointer, but goes hither and thither, like a bird to find material for its nest, or a bee to get honey for its comb. It is, in point of fact, a honeycomb, a thing which has unity and proportion, but which has its thousand separate cups of sweet suggestion and full of the distillations of fancy.

In Macmillan's Magazine Matthew Arnold has a word about Amiel, questioning the value of his philosophic reflections and extolling his criticisms of literature and society. "Any one single page of this criticism," says Mr. Arnold, "is worth, in my opinion, a hundred of Amiel's pages about the Infinite Illusion and the Great Wheel." Mr. Crawford continues his spiritualistic séance "With the Immortals" and gets communications from Cæsar, Pascal, and Dr. Johnson—Heine still officiating as master of ceremonies. S. M. Burrows describes the remarkable explorations at Anuradhapura, Ceylon which he thinks will soon be a point in the itinerary of Cook's tourists. "The Appeasement of Demeter" is the title of a strongly individualized poem by George Meredith. The number closes with "An Idyl of Ischia"—one of those fascinating studies of scenery and people for which Macmillan's Magazine is justly noteworthy.

The Andover Review is strong and salient, representing a wide variety of interests with great intelligence and vigor, and speaking with refreshing independence and courage. Miss Vida D. Scudder, a daughter of the late Rev. David Scudder, in the opening paper, traces the signs of the "Scientific Temper in Modern Poetry" with much acuteness of sense and facility of illustration, arguing well for the gradual change which the poetic soul of the time is undergoing. Mr. Kernahan's London contribution on Frederick Robertson is perhaps a little boyish in tone, but it is infectious of enthusiasm for a great nature. Mr. Oberlin Smith's essay, "If Material, why Mortal?" is an ingenious, careful, but bold suggestion of the scientific possibilities of materialism. It will make some old-fashioned readers catch their breath, but there is nothing in it to be afraid of. Rev. E. A. Lawrence continues his expert testimony regarding foreign missionary problems, this time in India. The case of the American Board and its missionaries is ably discussed by Hamilton A. Hill, with a preference for the Andover side in the controversy. The editorial pages contain a feeling tribute to the memory of the late Alpheus Hardy. We do not see how any thoughtful American with religious interests can do without the regular reading of the Andover Review.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The Caledonia County Publishing Company of St Johnsbury, Vt., send us a few specimen pages of How Deacon Tubman and Parson Whitne Kept New Year's, and other stories, a new book, with illustrations, by W. H. H. Murray.

—Mr. William J. Bok, 7 Murray Street, New York, has arranged for a series of thirteen newspaper letters, on the syndicate plan, by Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, on a variety of social topics, such as flirting, dress, the temptations of girls, women in business, and the friendships of men and women. One other topic is Ingersoll at home.

—Mr. Denton J. Snider is about to publish a new edition of his book on Shakespeare, the first edition having been exhausted. The publishers will be, probably, Ticknor & Co. of Boston. It will be much enlarged.

—The Thackeray letters will be concluded in Scribner's for October, with letters written during his two American visits. They are said to be good-naturedly appreciative of Americans and American life. There is a brief closing word by Mrs. Brookfield.

—L. R. McCabe will contribute to Lippincott's for October "Literary and Social Recollections of W. D. Howells." Mr. McCabe was a friend, and what is more, a fellow-boarder, of the future novelist in the early days just before the latter's marriage.

—Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett will contribute a short serial to the coming volume of St. Nicholas. Joel Chandler Harris, John Burroughs, Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyesen, J. T. Trowbridge, Col. Richard M. Johnstone, and Louisa M. Alcott will contribute serial and short stories to St. Nicholas in 1888.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. announce for immediate publication a translation from the German, Uli the Servant, by Jeremias Gotthelf.

—After a careful examination of all current editions of Scott's poems, Dr. W. J. Rolfe finds that none of them is free from serious errors and misprints. He has therefore prepared what the publishers declare to be "the first and only correct edition in England or America" of The Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott, to be issued in one volume with notes, appendices, a preface, and many fine illustrations, by Ticknor & Co.

—The publication announcements of Ticknor & Co. for the autumn include Three Good Giants, a carefully edited selection from Rabelais, by John Dimitry, with illustrations after Doré and Robida; The Bhagavad Gita, translated with commentary and notes, by M. M. Chatterji; a dictionary of Sobriquets and Nicknames, by Albert R. Frey; The New Astronomy, by S. P. Langley; A History of the Secession War, by Rossiter Johnson; Music in the Eighteenth Century, by Henry M. Brooks; and a holiday illustrated edition of Geraldine: A Tale of the St. Lawrence.

—Ticknor & Co. announce that their "Paper

Series" of copyright novels has proved so successful that they will continue its publication for an indefinite period, new issues to appear on the first and third Saturdays of every month. Their list of fiction (not including the "Paper Series") enumerates Love and Theology, by Celia Parker Woolley; Fools of Nature, by an anonymous author; A Flock of Girls, by Nora Perry; Juan and Juanita, by Frances Courtenay Baylor; and The Story of an Enthusiast, by Mrs. C. V. Jamison (Mrs. Hamilton).

—J. B. Lippincott Company will publish Prof. Robert Ridgway's Manual of North American Birds, a quarto volume with 124 full-page plates, and an excellent portrait of Prof. Spencer F. Baird, who planned the book many years since and retained his interest in it until the time of his death a few days ago.

—Ginn & Co. will publish Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel, edited for the series of "Classics for Children" by Margaret Andrews Allen.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

[Titles in italics are those of foreign periodicals.]

August.

Blackwood's Magazine. Joyce. Chaps. 13-16—The Island of Sark: A Sermon in Stones—Eberhardt—The Protected Barbette; or, Moncrieff System—The Old Saloon. Earl of Idlesleigh's Lectures and Essays; The Pleasures of Life; Samuel Taylor Coleridge; Allan Quatermain, etc.—A Fall Hunt in the Rockies—Socrates. By J. S. B.—England's Strength in Case of War. By Lieut.-General V. Baker Pacha.
The Nineteenth Century.—The Coming Anarchy. By Prince Krapotkin—Europe Revisited. By H. E. the Nawab Sir Salar Jung, K.C.I.E.—Where are the Letters? By A. Taylor Innes—Dogs in Germany. By L. S. Guggenberger—Progress of "Thrift Among the Children." By Agnes Lambert—The English and the American Press. By Arnot Reid—The Memorials of the Dead. By Charles Milnes Gaskell, M.P.—The Creatures We Breathe. By Dr. Percy Frankland—

North Borneo. By Lord Brassey—The Trials of a Country Parson. By the Rev. Dr. Jessopp—Mr. Lecky and Political Morality. By the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P.—American Opinion on the Irish Question. By E. L. Godkin.

The Westminster Review.—John Bright and the Irish Question—Prehistoric Surgery—Young Australia—Technical Education and Foreign Competition. Part II.—Prince Czartoryski—Irish Diet and Irish Discontent—Port Hamilton—Independent Section: The Social Problem; European Aristocracy—Contemporary Literature: Science; Politics, Sociology, Voyages, and Travels; History and Biography; Belles-Lettres—Home Affairs. War, The Songs of. Brander Matthews. Century.

September.

American Impressions. III. Temple Bar.
Amiel. Matthew Arnold. Macmillan's.
Audubon, J. J., Sketch of, with Portrait. Popular Science M.
Authors (American) and British Pirates. Princeton.
Brander Matthews. Forum.
Books that have Helped Me. Rev. Dr. A. Jessopp. Atlantic.
Book, An Old. R. M. Princeton.
Byron, Lord. R. H. Stoddard; Forum.
Critics, The Manners of. Andrew Lang.
English in Newspapers and Novels. A. S. Scribner's.
Hill.
Essay (The) as a Literary Form and Quality. Princeton.
Francis N. Zabiskie. Temple Bar.
History, The Romance of. I. Masaniello. Harper's.
Literature, The Democracy of. W. D. Howells. Scribner's.
Modern Poetry, Effect of the Scientific Temper in. Andover R.
V. D. Scudder.
Realist, Richard (A Poet and his Verses). H. D. American Magazine.
Mason. Andover R.
Robertson of Brighton. C. Kernahan. Scribner's.
Thackeray, Unpublished Letters of. VI. George University, Development of the American. Scribner's.
T. Ladd.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Miscellaneous.

THE "JOURNALIST" SOUVENIR. Illustrated. The "Journalist" Publishing Co. Paper.
WORKS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD, TRANSLATOR OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Reprinted from the Original Impressions, with Some Corrections derived from his own annotated copies. 2 vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. London: Bernard Quaritch.
CULTURE'S GARLAND. By Eugene Field. Ticknor & Co. Paper Series, 50c.
THE PRACTICAL ELEMENTS OF RHETORIC, WITH ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLES. By John F. Genuag. Ginn & Co.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY

WILL ISSUE IN SEPTEMBER:

THE EARTH TREMBLED.

A Novel. By EDWARD P. ROE. Uniform with Mr. Roe's other works. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

ORIGINAL ETCHINGS.

By A. H. BICKNELL. Ten etchings now first published. With text by William Howe Downes.

1st. Vellum proofs signed, accompanied by Japan proofs signed, in portfolio with text. 5 copies, $125.

2d. Satin proofs signed, accompanied by Japan proofs signed, in portfolio with text. 5 copies, $75.

3d. Satin proofs signed, in portfolio with text. 10 copies, $50.

4th. Japan proofs signed, in portfolio with text. 70 copies, $25.

Also on etching paper, bound in cloth, full gold. Folio, $10.

THE INGENIOUS GENTLEMAN, DON QUIXOTE, OF LA MANCHA.

By MIGUEL DE SERVANTES SAAVEDRA. A translation, with introduction and notes, by John Ormsby. In 4 vols. Large paper edition, limited to 50 copies, printed by De Vinne, on hand-made paper, 4 vols., $25. Library edition, 4 vols., 12mo, full gold side and back. A beautiful design. $6.

"Ormsby's translation of 'Don Quixote' is not only the best English translation, but to ordinary readers it is the first which has made the book intelligible. The superiority of it to all its rivals will be immediately felt."—James Anthony Froude, in the Quarterly Review.

BLUE JACKETS OF 1812.

A History for Young People of the Navy in the War of 1812. By WILLIS J. ABBOT. With 32 illustrations by W. C. Jackson, and 50 by H. W. McVickar. A companion to "Blue Jackets of '61." 4to, white and blue canvas. new design, $3.

ALSO A NEW EDITION OF

BLUE JACKETS OF '61.

A History of the Navy in the War of Secession. By WILLIS J. ABBOT. With many illustrations. 4to, blue and white canvas, $3.

RAN AWAY FROM THE DUTCH; or, BORNEO FROM SOUTH TO NORTH.

A Book of Adventure for Boys. By M. T. H. PERKLAAR, late of the Dutch Indian Service. Translated by Maurice Blok, and adapted by A. P. Mendes. With 10 full-page illustrations by W. C. Jackson. 8vo, $2.25. Full gold side, with green ink.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JOHN JAY.

By WILLIAM WHITELOCK. 8vo, $1.75.

SERMONS PREACHED IN ST. GEORGE'S

By Rev. W. S. RAINSFORD, Rector of St. George's Church, Stuyvesant Square, New York. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

PAUL AND CHRISTINA.

A Novel. By AMELIA E. BARR, author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "A Daughter of Fife," "The Bow of Orange Ribbon," "The Squire of Sandal Slide," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.

A BORDER SHEPHERDESS.

A Novel. By AMELIA E. BARR, author of "Jan Vedder's Wife," "A Daughter of Fife," "The Bow of Orange Ribbon," etc. 12mo, cloth, $1.

WITH THE KING AT OXFORD.

By ALFRED J. CHURCH, Professor of Latin in University College, London, author of "Stories from Homer," "Virgil," "Two Thousand Years Ago," etc. With 16 illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

STORIES OF THE MAGICIANS.

By ALFRED J. CHURCH, Professor of Latin in University College, London, author of "Stories from Homer," "Virgil," "Two Thousand Years Ago," etc. With 16 illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

ELSIE'S FRIENDS AT WOODBURN.

A new volume in the popular Elsie Series. 12mo, cloth, $1.25. Sets of the Elsie Books, 13 vols., $16.25. Sets of the Mildred Books, 6 vols., $7.50.

THE YOUNG MAROONERS.

By E. R. GOULDING. A new edition of this classic juvenile, with introduction by Joel Chandler Harris (Uncle Remus). With eight double-page illustrations by W. C. Jackson. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

WILD TRIBES OF THE SOUDAN.

A Narrative of Travel in the Basé Country. By F. L. JAMES. With 40 illustrations. A new edition. 8vo, $2.25.

DODD, MEAD & COMPANY, NEW YORK.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
PUBLISHERS OF School and College Text-Books

AND DEALERS IN SCHOOL STATIONERY AND SUPPLIES.

OUR EDUCATIONAL PUBLICATIONS INCLUDE:

LIPPINCOTT'S POPULAR READERS.

FIRST READER, SECOND, THIRD, FOURTH, FIFTH, SIXTH (for advanced classes).

LIPPINCOTT'S POPULAR SPELLING-BOOK. Two Parts.

WORCESTER'S DICTIONARIES.

PRIMARY, NEW SCHOOL, COMPREHENSIVE, QUARTO AND POCKET.

SANFORD'S SERIES.

PRIMARY ARITHMETIC, INTERMEDIATE, COMMON SCHOOL, HIGHER, ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA.

CUTTER'S SERIES OF PHYSIOLOGIES.

BEGINNER'S ANATOMY, INTERMEDIATE, COMPREHENSIVE, ANATOMICAL CHARTS, Human and Comparative. Nine in a set, 8x8 feet, on rollers.

LIPPINCOTT'S NEW SCIENCE SERIES.

SHARPLESS AND PHILIPS'S ASTRONOMY, SHARPLESS AND PHILIPS'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, KEY TO SHARPLESS AND PHILIPS'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, GREENE'S CHEMISTRY.

FIRST STEPS IN SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE.

I. ANIMALS. II. PLANTS. III. CHEMISTRY. IV. ANATOMY. Complete in one volume. Also in four books.

CHAUVENET'S GEOMETRY.

CHAUVENET'S GEOMETRY, ABRIDGED, TRIGONOMETRY.

WICKERSHAM'S SCHOOL ECONOMY.

METHODS OF INSTRUCTION.

GREEK AND LATIN LEXICONS, SPANISH, FRENCH, AND GERMAN DICTIONARIES, AND STANDARD WORKS OF REFERENCE.

ALSO CONSTANTLY ON HAND ALL THE

LEADING SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS

PUBLISHED BY OTHER HOUSES, AND THE MOST COMPLETE ASSORTMENT OF SCHOOL STATIONERY IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

Descriptive circulars and general catalogue sent to any address on application. Liberal rates for examination and introduction.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,

715 and 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,

82 Equitable Building, Boston.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. Titus Munson Coan, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

HOW AVARICE WAS CURED.

IT wasn't by using D. K.'s. But D. K.'s will cure DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION, which cause more suffering than does avarice. They will neutralize acidity of the stomach, cure heartburn and all stomach troubles. Dr. Mark E. Woodbury's

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS

Do their work perfectly, completely and quickly. They cost only 50 cents (25 cents for a trial box). DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, will send them to you by mail, on receipt of price, to any part of the United States.

ROBERT BROWNING'S POETRY. Out line studies prepared by the Chicago Browning Society containing full classifications of Browning's poems, by subject and by date of writing, with shorter programmes for class use, explanatory notes, etc. Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 50 cents, mailed. Catalogues free. CHARLES H. KERR & CO., Publishers, Chicago.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO., Booksellers and Importers, 181 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

A New Novel by the author of "The House on the Marsh."

D. Appleton & Co. publish Sept. 15, from advance sheets, by arrangement with the author,

SCHEHERAZADE:

A London Night's Entertainment.

By FLORENCE WARDEN.

12mo, 348 pages, paper cover, price 25 cents.

SCHEHERAZADE (which, according to Webster, is pronounced Sha-ha'-ra-za'-du), it will be remembered, is the name of that famous Sultana of "The Arabian Nights," whose marvelous stories beguiled the Sultan and saved her own life. The present story is not an Oriental romance, but a novel of London life. The vivid picturesqueness of the story, and a certain Eastern glow which the author has given to its atmosphere, and especially to the creation of its half-Indian heroine, make the name of the fascinating Scheherazade peculiarly appropriate.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S PREVIOUS NOVELS.

THE HOUSE ON THE MARSH.
AT THE WORLD'S MERCY.
DELDEE; or, The Iron Hand.
A PRINCE OF DARKNESS.
A VAGRANT WIFE.
DORIS'S FORTUNE.

12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents each.

For sale by all booksellers; or will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,
1, 3 & 5 Bond Street, New York.

Horstford's
ACID PHOSPHATE
[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system. Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horstford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools. Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take. It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body. It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

Beware of Imitations,

W. M. M. MURRAY'S NEW BOOK.

How Deacon Tubman and Parson Whitney Kept New Year's, AND OTHER STORIES.

First fully illustrated by Thomas Worth, A. B. White, and J. H. Moore.

Read it at the author's richest humor and pathos.

16mo volume, cloth, $1.25.

For sale at the bookstores, or sent prepaid, on receipt of price, by Charles T. Walter, Pub'r,

St. Johnsbury, Vt.

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS

A series of graphic historical studies presenting the stories of the different nations which have attained prominence in history. The stories are printed in good readable type and in handsome 12mo form. They are fully illustrated, and are furnished with maps and indexes. Price per volume, $1.50.

"This series is one of the most noteworthy successes of the year in the field of literature and of history, and no recent undertaking deserves more praise."—Cinn. Commercial Gazette.

"Clearly written and thoroughly entertaining narratives."—N. Y. Tribune.

"A most admirable series."—Christian Advocate.

THE LATEST ISSUES ARE:

XVI. THE STORY OF ASSYRIA.

By Z. A. KAGGIN. Continuing the narrative of "The Story of Chaldea."

"A masterly history . . . and a most dramatic story. . . . The astonishing career of the Assyrian kings is told with much effect, the author never losing her fire, and holding the reader's interest to the end."—N. Y. Times.

"A work showing remarkable scholarly attainments. . . . This period of history is exceedingly fascinating, and . . . has been brought before us in a vivid manner. The book is also a valuable aid to our study of the Old Testament history."—Churchman.

XV. THE STORY OF ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE.

By JOHN P. MANNING, Professor of Ancient History in Trinity College, Dublin.

"Admirably written and copiously illustrated. The author's style is lucid and graphic, and the work is remarkable not less for its historic accuracy than for its philosophical discussion of influences and results."—Public Opinion.

XIV. THE STORY OF EGYPT.

By Prof. GEORGE RAWLINSON.

"The story is full of picturesque detail, and affords a clear and brilliant picture of the fluctuations of Egypt's fortunes."—Literary World.

Descriptive prospectus of the series, with list of volumes ready and announcements of volumes in preparation, sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, Publishers,
London and New York,
AND ALL DEALERS.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

Showing Curtain drawn.

The curtain grate, with Mervin's patent sliding and latching attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered to the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught shade.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

CYCLOPÆDIAS.

"Not equalled by any other."

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's Cyclopædia is ten years later than either Appleton's or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of

A. R. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who do. "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES

ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.

RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

LOVE AND THEOLOGY.

A Novel. By CELIA PARKER WOOLLEY. 1 vol., 12mo. $1.50.

"No work of fiction that Ticknor & Co. have published has had, to our thinking, the depth and value of this; and nowhere has the present study and questioning of theological subjects been more clearly and satisfactorily presented, for in all this presentation there is not a hint of irreverence or flippancy of any kind. There is, instead, a very beautiful presentation of the very best interpretation of the liberal thought of today—an interpretation that contains the highest spirituality. Herein is the work of such great value that it will be reckoned amongst the books that will be of service to all intelligent inquirers."

"A novel and brilliant story by a new and talented writer. It is not only entertaining as a story, but engrosses interest from the highest ethical standpoint. . . . It is most decidedly a book to own, and not merely to read for amusement and then throw aside."

AN OPERETTA IN PROFILE.

A Story. By CHERIE. $1.00.

"The story is simply a clothes-horse on which to hang brilliant epigrams, charming descriptions and cutting satires; and yet, one becomes interested in the story also, it is so fascinatingly told."

"It is exceedingly clever and entertaining—crammed with epigrammatic wit. The comparisons, too, are very brilliant and telling."

"This exceptionally bright little story tells the experiences of a knot of society people in a suburban town who attempt to bring out an operetta. Their efforts are narrated with spirit, and the book sparkles from one end to the other with shrewd social satire, humor and brilliant epigrammatic dialogue. No one who takes it up will care to lay it down till he learns the fate of the operetta in question."

THREE GOOD GIANTS.

From the French of François Rabelais. By JOHN DIMITRY. 1 vol., square 4to. With 175 illustrations by Gustave Doré and A. Robida. $1.50.

The peculiarities that have hitherto rendered Rabelais a sealed book for the young have been wholly eliminated in this work, but with so much skill as not to impair the continuity of the story. It will take its place at once beside the Arabian Nights and Gulliver's Travels—which both require similar editing—and will serve a good purpose in disarming much unreasoning prejudice against Rabelais, while opening to the delighted eyes of the young the true stories of Grandgousier, Gargantua and Pantagruel, the quaintest and most original of giants, and of Panurge, the funniest of jokers. The illustrations by Doré and Robida are a delight and wonder in themselves.

CARLYLE-EMERSON CORRESPONDENCE.

Hawthorne and His Wife.

New editions, each in two volumes. 12mo. With illustrations. Per set, $3.00; in half calf, $6.00.

JAPANESE HOMES.

By Prof. EDWARD S. MORSE.

CHŌSON: THE LAND OF THE MORNING CALM (Korea).

By PERCIVAL LOWELL. New editions, each in one volume. 8vo. Illustrated. Per volume, $3.00; in half calf, $6.00.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

HARVARD COLLEGE
OCT 3 1887
LIBRARY

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 20. { E. H. HAMES & Co., } BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 1887.
WHOLE No. 333. Publishers.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

A COLLECTION OF Letters of Thackeray.

1847-1855, with Portraits and Reproductions of Letters and Drawings.

1 Volume, Octavo, Cloth, Gilt Top, $3.50.

*Also, Limited Edition of 500 copies specially manufactured for collectors and bibliophiles.

"The letters are worthy to rank on purely literary grounds with the most famous letters in the English language, and are a precious revelation and record of the tender feelings, the true-heartedness, and the reverent nature of their great writer."—Richard Henry Stoddard, in the New York Mail and Express.

"Of their value and interest it is almost impossible to speak too highly."—The London Athenaeum.

"They are the most charming letters that ever were printed."—London Daily News.

"They are a literary treasure. . . . English literature has a new classic."—The Nation.

"The letters reflect every mood, from depression to exaltation, of the great writer's mind; they are full of humor, of oddities and whimsicalities; are crowded with characteristic pen-and-ink sketches and of allusions to his works."—Boston Advertiser.

THE MAKING OF THE GREAT WEST, 1512-1852.

By SAMUEL ADAMS DRAKE. With 145 illustrations and maps. 12mo, $1.75.

Mr. Drake's volume is similar in purpose to his other popular work, "The Making of New England," and, like that, presents in a clear and attractive form, most likely to hold the attention of the young readers for whom the book was written, as well as to interest adults, suggestive phases of historical research often overlooked. The volume is admirably arranged, is popular in style, and is fully illustrated.

THE SCIENCE OF THOUGHT.

By Prof. F. MAX MÜLLER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, $4.00.

A work in which the distinguished author has given the results of a life devoted to reflection and study touching the relation and significance of thought and language.

"Professor Müller need be under no apprehension for the success of these volumes. Any work signed by so illustrious a name is sure of a warm welcome; while such questions as the origin of language and the descent of man have assuredly not lost their interest, least of all when they are discussed in a style almost unique for its combined clearness, point and vigor."—The Academy.

THE RELIGION OF THE PRESENT AND OF THE FUTURE.

Sermons preached chiefly at Yale College. By THEODORE D. WOOLSEY, D.D., LL.D. With portrait. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

This new edition of more than a score of ex-President Woolsey's discourses will be welcomed by all who appreciate the qualities which make these sermons pre-eminent—the direct application of truth, severe logical simplicity, and that eloquence which springs from unaffected earnestness and single-hearted sincerity.

*These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Naxon, Latin and Greek.
657 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M.A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLES IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLITO, M.A. 4 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Shark of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

CROWTHER'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLM'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREYER'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PICTURES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

System of Christian Ethics

By Dr. I. A. DORNER, Ober consistorialrath and Professor of Theology, Berlin. Author of "System of Christian Doctrine," and "History of the Development of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ." Edited by Dr. I. A. Dorner, translated by Professor C. M. Mead, D.D., formerly Professor of Hebrew in Andover Theological Seminary, and Rev. R. T. Cunningham, M.A. 8vo, cloth, pp. xx., 616, $3.50.

*"This book will be welcomed by Dorner's many friends and admirers, not only as his last published treatise, but on account of its own intrinsic merits, for it was in the discussion of this theme that he treated what was nearest his own heart."

LECTURES ON THE ORIGIN AND

Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religion of the Ancient Babylonians. By A. H. SAYCE, Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology, Oxford. 8vo, cloth, $3.75.

*CONTENTS: Introductory — Bel-Merodach of Babylon — The Gods of Babylon — Tammuz and Ishtar; Prometheus and Totemism — The Sacred Books of Chaldaea — Cosmogonies and Astro-Theology, etc.

VOCABULARY OF PHILOSOPHY.

Psychological, Ethical, Metaphysical; with Quotations and References. By WILLIAM FLEMING, D.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of Glasgow. Fourth edition, revised and largely reconstructed by Henry Calderwood, LL.D., Professor of Moral Philosophy, University of Edinburgh. 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

SCIENTIFIC ILLUSTRATIONS and Symbols. Moral Truths Mirrored in Scientific Facts. Designed for the use of the Senate, the Bar, the Pulpit, the Orator and the Lover of Nature. 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

A COMTIST LOVER, AND OTHER

Studies. By ELIZABETH RACHEL CHAPMAN, author of "The New Godiva," "A Tourist Idyl," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"Of these miscellanies, the first and most important . . . is of singular value. Miss Chapman's mind is largely occupied with ethical and social questions, and to the consideration of them she brings a judgment always sympathetic and never harsh, a clear apprehension and a noble emotion. . . . The note of heartbreak which runs through the conversation deepens its sacredness to the point of tragedy."—Bradford Observer.

*The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. New catalogue of Choice Rare, and Second-hand Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

I.

THE ANCIENT CITIES OF THE NEW WORLD:

Being Voyages and Explorations in Mexico and Central America, from 1857 to 1882. By DESIRE CHARNAY. Translated from the French by J. Gonino and Helen S. Conant. Introduction by Allen Thorndike Rice. 209 Illustrations and a Map. pp. xlvii., 514. Royal 8vo, Ornamental Cloth, Uncut Edges, Gilt Top, $6.00.

II.

MODERN ITALIAN POETS.

Essays and Versions. By W. D. HOWELLS. With Portraits. pp. viii., 370. 12mo, Half Cloth, $2.00.

III.

AN UNKNOWN COUNTRY.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Richly Illustrated by FREDERICK NOEL PATON. pp. x., 238. Square 8vo, Ornamental Cloth, $2.50.

IV.

PHILOSOPHY OF THEISM.

By BORDEN P. BOWNE, Professor of Philosophy in Boston University, Author of "Metaphysics," "Introduction to Psychological Theory," etc. pp. x., 270. 8vo, Cloth, $1.75.

V.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS ON THE CONGO.

Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey with Henry M. Stanley "Through the Dark Continent." By THOMAS W. KNOX. Author of "Boy Travellers in the Far East," etc. Profusely Illustrated. pp. 464. Square 8vo, Ornamental Cloth, $3.00.

VI.

THE SCOTTISH PULPIT FROM THE REFORMATION TO THE PRESENT DAY.

By WILLIAM M. TAYLOR, D. D., LL. D., Author of "David the King," etc. pp. 288. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

VII.

MEMOIRS OF THE MARGRAVINE OF BAIREUTH.

Translated and edited by H. R. H. PRINCESS CHRISTIAN. With Portrait. pp. 454. 16mo, Cloth, $1.25.

VIII.

THE ROSE OF PARADISE.

Being a Detailed Account of Certain Adventures that happened to Captain John Mackra, in Connection with the Famous Pirate, Edward England, in the Year 1720, off the Island of Juanna, in the Mozambique Channel, writ by himself, and now for the first time published. By HOWARD PYLE. With Illustrations by the Author. pp. vi., 232. Post 8vo, Ornamental Cloth, $1.25.

IX.

DIALECT BALLADS.

By CHARLES FOLLEN ADAMS, Author of "Leedle Yawcob Strauss, and Other Poems." Illustrated by "Boz." pp. 136. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

X.

MINOR POEMS OF JOHN MILTON.

Edited, with Notes, by W. J. ROLFE, A. M. With Portrait. pp. 230. Square 16mo. Flexible Cloth, 56 cents; Paper, 40 cents.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postpaid, to any part of the United States on receipt of the price.

HARPER & BROTHERS' CATALOGUE sent on receipt of Ten Cents postage.

"Brimful of the Best Reading."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR OCTOBER, 1887

(Vol. 75, No. 449),

CONTAINS:

"As We Walked Home Together." Frontispiece. Illustration for Wither's Love Song. Drawn by EDWIN A. ABBEY;

Our Summer's Outing. By KATE FIELD. Illustrated by A. B. FROST;

The Smallest of American Republics (Costa Rica). By WILLIAM E. CURTIS. Fully illustrated;

John S. Sargent. By HENRY JAMES. With a portrait and engravings from Sargent's paintings;

A Dead Portuguese City in India. By Bishop JOHN F. HURST. Illustrated;

A Love Song. By GEORGE WITHER. With nine illustrations drawn by EDWIN A. ABBEY;

Here and There in the South. art IV. Among the Bayeux. By HERBOSA HARDING DAVIS. Richly illustrated by W. H. GIBSON;

Tony, the Maid (Concluded). By BLANCHER WILLIS HOWARD. Illustrated by C. S. REINHART;

At the Chateau of Oerlano. A Story. By CONSTANCE FENIMORE WOOLSON;

The Curative Uses of Water. By TITUS MURSON COAN, M. D.;

April Hopes. A Novel. Part IX. By W. D. HOWELLS;

Narka. A Story of Russian Life. Part X. By KATHLEEN O'MEARA;

Poems: AARON BURN'S WOOING. By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN. Illustrated by HOWARD PYLE; A MOOD. By ANNIE RIVES; TO A MOST COMELY LADY. By LOUISE IMBERT GUINNY;

Editor's Easy Chair. By GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS. De te Fabula Narratur—The Functions of Government; Wise Limitations; the Wisdom also of Occasional Excess—Self-respecting Courtesy—Buffalo Bill in England—A Trio of Good Women.

Editor's Study. By WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. Keats and his Critics—A New Book by the Author of "Mark Rutherford"—The Influence of English Fiction upon American Society—The Want of an International Copyright Law—The Difficulties in the Way of Such a Law—What is Read in Ward-rooms—A Correction.

Monthly Record of Current Events.

Editor's Drawer. Conducted by CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER. Conversation—Miss Lucy's Choice—Was he a Mormon?—Der Coming Man (CHARLES FOLLEN ADAMS, with Illustrations by M. J. SWENNER)—The Pleasures of the Telephone—A Solution—Sergeant Blank, concerning the Charge of Balaklava.

Nemesis. Full-page illustration by GEORGE DU MAURIER.

Literary Notes. By LAURENCE HUTTON.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Per Year:

Postage Free to Subscribers in the United States or Canada.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.....	$ 4.00
HARPER'S WEEKLY.....	4.00
HARPER'S BAZAR.....	4.00
HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE.....	2.00
HARPER'S FRANKLIN SQUARE LIBRARY (one number a week for 52 weeks).....	10.00

Remittances should be made by post-office money order or draft, to avoid chance of loss.

When no time is specified, subscriptions will begin with the current number.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

New Books and Recent Publications.

13 Astor Place, T. Y. CROWELL & CO., New York.

TOLSTOI'S WORKS.

Ivan Ilyitch. 12mo. Ready. $1.25.
The Invaders. 12mo. Ready. $1.25.
What to Do. 12mo. Ready. $1.25.
My Confession. 12mo. Ready. $1.00.
A Russian Proprietor. 12mo. (In Press.)

Translated from the Russian, and bound in uniform style with "Anna Karenina," "My Religion," "Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth."

"No living author surpasses him, and only one or two approach him, in the power of picturing not merely places but persons with minute and fairly startling fidelity."—Congregationalist.

IRVING'S WORKS.

From new plates. Cloth, 12mo, 6 vols., $7.50; Library Edition, gilt top, $9.00; half calf, marbled, $15.00.

EDWARD EVERETT advised a young writer: "If he wishes to study a style which possesses the characteristic beauties of Addison, its ease, simplicity, and elegance, with accuracy, point, and spirit, let him give his days and nights to the volumes of Irving."

LES MISERABLES.

By Victor Hugo.

Translated from the French by Miss ISABEL F. HAPGOOD. Illustrated Edition, with 100 full-page illustrations. Printed on fine calendered paper, and bound in a neat, attractive style. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, 5 vols., $7.50; 12mo, half calf, $15.00; Popular Edition, in one vol., 12mo, $1.50. Printed from New Plates and Large Type.

TENNYSON'S WORKS. 8 vols.

Handy Volume Edition. (Complete, Large Type.) From the latest text, including Earlier Poems.

Cloth, gilt top, ...	$5.00
Parochial, gilt top, ...	10.50
Half calf, gilt edges, ...	12.00
American seal rusia, gilt edge, round corners, 15.00
Full calf, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, 21.00
Full calf, gilt edges, padded, round corners, 25.00
Tree calf, gilt edges, ...	30.00

All of the above boxed in fancy leatherette or calf boxes, according to style of binding, and making a compact, elegant "Handy Volume" edition of this author's works.

MRS. SHILLABER'S COOK-BOOK

A Practical Guide for Housekeepers. By Mrs. LYDIA SHILLABER. With an Introduction by Mrs. Partington. 12mo, cloth, $1.25; Kitchen Edition, in oilcloth, $1.25. First and second edition sold before publication. Fourth edition now ready.

Extract from Mrs. Partington's Introduction.

"Well, well," said Mrs. Partington, her spectacles beaming with delight as she turned over the leaves of the new cookery book. "I declare it excites my salvation glands even to read the names of these good things. It seems as though the greatest epicure might find something among all these meats and cosmetics to give a zest to appetite. Now a book like this will come into a house like an oasis in the desert of the great Sarah, and be a quarantine of perpetual peace."

INITIALS AND PSEUDONYMS.

A Dictionary of Literary Disguises by WILLIAM CUSHING and ALBERT R. FREY. A new and revised edition. Royal 8vo, cloth, $5.00; half morocco, $7.50; interleaved, cloth, $7.50; interleaved, half morocco, $10.00.

"A work which no reference library, no librarian, no literary reporter, and no fully equipped bookseller, can afford not to possess."

POEMS IN COLOR.

With 56 illustrations lithographed by Armstrong & Co., from original designs by W. J. WHITMORE.

Sea Pictures, by TENNYSON. Sunrise on the Hills, by LONGFELLOW. The Worship of Nature, by WHITTIER. I Remember, by HOOD. To a Water-Fowl, by BRYANT. To a Mountain Daisy, by BURNS.

Six vols., fancy paper covers, each 50 cents; cloth covers, stamped in gold, each 75 cents; celluloid covers, lithographed, each $1.00.

CHRIST AND CHRISTIANITY SERIES.

By Rev. H. B. HAWKES. 5 vols., 12mo, each $1.25.

Story of the Four, Picture of Paul, Picture of Jesus, Conquering Cross, Light of the Ages.

FROM HEART AND NATURE.

Poems by SARAH K. BOLTON and CHARLES K. BOLTON. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

SIGRID.

An Icelandic Love Story. Translated from the Danish of JON THORSSON THORODSEN. 12mo, $1.25.

A charming picture of manners and customs in "Ultima Thule."

CUORE.

An Italian School-Boy's Journal. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Thirty-ninth Italian Edition, by Isabel F. Hapgood. 12mo, $1.25.

"It has remained for an Italian writer to give to English-speaking people the best book for boys that has yet been written. We say this with Tom Brown's delightful school days fresh in our recollection."—Portland Press.

FAMOUS AMERICAN AUTHORS.

By SARAH K. BOLTON, author of "Poor Boys Who Became Famous," "Girls Who Became Famous," etc. A series of short biographies, with portraits of Holmes, Longfellow, Emerson, Lowell, Aldrich, Mark Twain and other noted writers. 12mo, beveled boards, $1.50.

The constant and steady sale of Mrs. Bolton's previous volumes will insure a large demand for this, her latest and best work.

GIRLS' BOOK OF FAMOUS QUEENS

By LYDIA HOYT FARMER, author of "Boys' Book of Famous Rulers," "Lives of Cleopatra, Queen Elizabeth, Catherine de Medici, Josephine, Victoria, Eugenie, etc." 12mo, cloth, 85 illustrations, $1.50.

"Mrs. Farmer's style is crisp and entertaining, and she writes like a true hero worshiper, giving her story a color of enthusiasm and romance it would not otherwise possess. Such a book for young people is worth a score of 'blood and thunder' fictions. It is a volume worthy a place in the library of every boy and girl."—Washington Post.

THE BLIND BROTHER.

($1,500 Prize Volume.)

By HOMER GREENE. 12mo, illustrated, 90 cents.

BURNHAM BREAKER.

By HOMER GREENE. 12mo, $1.25.

"The recent prize competition for stories, held by the publishers of The Youth's Companion, called forth about 5,000 aspirants for literary honors, among that multitude Mr. Homer Greene of Honesdale, Pa., whose story, 'The Blind Brother,' took the first prize of $1,500, probably the largest sum ever paid for a story to a hitherto comparatively unknown writer. 'The Blind Brother' deals with life in the coal-mining region of the Wyoming Valley, and is remarkable for its dramatic intensity, power of characterization, humor and pathos. 'Burnham Breaker' will be found not less interesting than 'The Blind Brother,' and will be eagerly called for by those who have read his previous volume."

BOYHOOD OF LIVING AUTHORS.

By WILLIAM H. RIDING. Sketches of the Early Life of Howells, Aldrich, Whittier, Gladstone, Clark Russell, Frank Stockton, etc. 12mo, $1.25.

All the sketches in this volume have been prepared with the consent, and generally with the assistance, of the authors represented; and many errors of fact in other biographies have been corrected. Mr. Riding has aimed at completeness and absolute authenticity in all his chapters.

PROFESSOR JOHNNY.

By J. A. K., author of "Birchwood," "Fitch Club," and "Riverside Museum." 12mo, $1.25.

WHO SAVED THE SHIP?

By J. A. K. 12mo, $1.25.

THE GIANT DWARF.

By J. A. K. 12mo, $1.25.

J. A. K. is an author whose work is steadily growing in favor with young people, and these later volumes will be appreciated by readers of "Birchwood," "Fitch Club," etc.

FRENCH FOLK LORE STORIES.

A collection of charming Fairy Legends of the French Provinces, translated from the original. 12mo, $1.25.

ST. PAUL'S PROBLEM AND ITS SOLUTION.

Dedicated to the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, and setting forth under the guise of fiction the work of this Society. By FATE HUNTINGTON, author of "Transformed," "What Fide Remembers," etc. 12mo, $1.25.

THE ROLLO BOOKS.

By JACOB ABBOTT, "the Prince of Writers for the Young." A new and cheaper edition of this ever popular series for young people. 14 vols., bound in seven, cloth, 16mo, $3.75.

RED LINE POETS.

We add to this popular line this season six new volumes, as follows: Keble's Christian Year; Palgrave's Golden Treasury; Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry; Southey's Poems; Lockhart's Spanish Ballads; Victor Hugo's Poems, making in all 72 vols. 12mo, cloth, gilt edges, per vol., $1.25.

We have also made entirely new plates of several other volumes in the series besides new Cover Designs, and shall spare no pains or expense to maintain the superior excellence of this line, which has been recognized so generally by the book trade throughout the United States.

INDIA BAMBOO EDITION.

In new and elegant style of embossed leather bindings, padded flexible covers, round corners, gilt edges, 30 vols., 12mo, each vol. boxed. $3.00 per vol.

This line includes two of the Bamboo Pattern which proved so popular last season, together with four other new designs, making six patterns in all, and comprising the handsomest line of Stamped Poets ever offered. Our ability to supply this line is limited, and dealers will consult their interest by ordering promptly before our assortment of styles is exhausted.

EMBOSSSED CALF EDITION.

Padded covers, gilt edges. 40 vols., 12mo, each vol. boxed, $2.50 per vol.

A neat and attractive Leather Binding which will meet the wants of parties desiring an inexpensive book for holiday gifts.

WILD ROSE EDITION.

Printed on laid paper, bound in extra cloth, with gilt edges and Wild Rose design in red and gold on the cover, making a tasteful and appropriate Gift Book of new and unique style, and sure to take with the Christmas trade. Cloth, 12mo, gilt edges, laid paper, fancy cover, 27 vols., large 12mo, $2.00 per vol.

Library Edition of the above. 27 vols., plain cloth, gilt top, $1.50 per vol.; half calf, gilt top, $2.00 per vol.

AMERICAN HALF RUSSIA EDITION.

Russia backs, marble paper sides and edges. 51 vols., $1.00 per vol. Printed on tinted paper, bound in tasteful and durable style, and especially adapted for School and Family Libraries.

FAVORITE ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF POPULAR POETS.

We add to this series this season four volumes, viz.:

Jean Ingelow, George Eliot, Ingelby Legends, Red Letter Poems.

Making 24 volumes in this line, which is deservedly popular with the trade, and is printed on fine calendered paper, elegantly illustrated, and bound in attractive style for holiday gifts. 24 vols., square 8vo, cloth, full gilt, $2.50 per vol.; tree calf; full morocco; rusia calf; round corners; turkey morocco, round corners; padded covers, gilt edges, $6.00 per vol.

Dealers will take notice that we carry in stock eight different editions of the Poets, viz.:

Red Line Cloth, gilt edges.

India Bamboo, gilt edges, round corners, padded covers.

Embossed Calf, gilt edges, padded covers.

Wild Rose, cloth, gilt edges.

Library Edition, cloth and half calf, gilt top.

American Half Russia, marble edges.

Favorite Illustrated, cloth, gilt edges, tree calf, rusia calf and full morocco.

Seal Russia Edition, gilt edges, padded covers.

We are therefore able to supply the wants of all classes of trade, and our line will be found in all respects far superior to any other in the market.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO., 13 Astor Place, New York.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR THE AUTUMN, 1887.

Messrs. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY.

BIOGRAPHY.

A MEMOIR OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON. By JAMES ELLIOT CABOT. With a new steel portrait. In two vols., 12mo, gilt top, $3.50; half calf, $6.00. Large Paper Edition. Limited to 500 copies. Uniform with the large paper edition of the Riverside issue of Emerson's works, printed in the most careful manner on the best of paper. 2 vols., 8vo, boards, $10.00.

THE FIGHTING VERES. By CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, author of "Life of the Great Lord Fairfax," etc. With two portraits and many maps. 8vo.

ORMSBY McKNIGHT MITCHEL. Astronomer and General. By his son, F. A. MITCHEL. With portrait.

AMERICAN STATESMEN.

GOVERNEUR MORRIS. By THEODORE ROOSEVELT, author of "Thomas H. Benton," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

PATRIOT HENRY. By MOSES COIT TYLER, author of "A History of American Literature," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

MARTIN VAN BUREN. By EDWARD M. SHEPARD. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

GEORGE WASHINGTON. By HENRY CABOT LODGE, author of "Alexander Hamilton" and "Daniel Webster," etc. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50.

AMERICAN MEN OF LETTERS.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. By JAMES BACH McMASTER, author of "A History of the People of the United States." With a steel portrait. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. With steel portrait. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

HISTORY.

THE HISTORY OF PRUSSIA DURING THE REIGN OF FREDERICK THE GREAT. By HERBERT TUTTLE, Professor in Cornell University. With maps. 2 vols., crown octavo.

AMERICAN COMMONWEALTHS.

MISSOURI. By LUCIEN CARR. With map. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

TENNESSEE. By JAMES PHELAN. With map. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

OHIO. By RUFUS KING. With map. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

POETRY.

THE UNSEEN KING AND OTHER POEMS. By CAROLINE LESLIE FIELD, author of "High-Lights." 16mo, parchment, $1.00.

POEMS. By EDWARD ROWLAND SILL. In one volume.

BIRD TALK. A new volume of poetry by Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," "Daffodils," "Holy-Tides," etc. With illustrative designs. 16mo.

EARLY AND LATE POEMS OF ALICE AND PHOEBE CARY. 12mo, $2.00.

LYRICS, IDYLS AND ROMANCES. Selected from the poems of ROBERT BROWNING. 16mo.

AGASSIZ, AND OTHER POEMS. A new volume, by JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. 16mo, gilt top.

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL. By JAMES

RUSSELL LOWELL. A holiday volume, produced under the supervision of F. Hopkinson Smith. With a new portrait of Mr. Lowell, and nine full-page illustrations, engraved on wood by Frederick Juengling (India prints, mounted), and others in the text by J. W. Alexander, Bruce Crane, F. W. Freer, R. Swain Gifford, Alfred Kappes, H. S. Mowbray, Walter Shirlaw and F. Hopkinson Smith. Quarto, bound in half leather, the cover designed by Mrs. S. W. Whitman.

TANGLEWOOD TALES. By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. With fifteen full-page illustrations and many smaller ones, by George Wharton Edwards. Quarto, $2.50.

EVANGELINE. A Tale of Acadia. By HENRY W. LONGFELLOW. Decorated with leaves from the Acadian forests. Oblong vol., full gilt, $2.50.

FICTION.

A PRINCESS OF JAVA. A Novel. By Mrs. S. J. HIGGINSON. 12mo, $1.50.

THE GATES BETWEEN. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, author of "The Gates Ajar," "Beyond the Gates," etc. 16mo, $1.25.

JACK THE FISHERMAN. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With illustrations by C. W. Reed. Square 12mo, 50 cents.

AN OLD MAID'S PARADISE and BURG-LARS IN PARADISE. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. 16mo, $1.25.

THE SECOND SON. A Novel. By Mrs. M. O. W. OLIPHANT and THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH. 16mo.

KNITTERS IN THE SUN. Short Stories. By OCTAVE TRANET. 16mo, $1.25.

PAUL PATOFF. A Novel. By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "A Roman Singer," etc. 16mo.

FRONTIER STORIES. By BERT HART. Vol. VI of his Collected Works. Riverside Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00; half calf, $3.00. The set, 6 vols., $12.00; half calf, $18.00.

TRAVEL AND OBSERVATION.

THREE CRUISES OF THE BLAKE. By ALEXANDER AGASSIZ, Director of the Museum of Comparative Zoology at Cambridge. Fully illustrated. 2 vols., 8vo.

OUR HUNDRED DAYS IN EUROPE. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," etc. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

ROMAN EXCAVATIONS SINCE 1871. By RODOLFO LANGIARI, Professor of Topography in the University of Rome and Director of the Roman Museum. Fully illustrated. 12mo.

WELL-WORN ROADS OF SPAIN, HOLLAND AND ITALY. Traveled by a Painter in Search of the Picturesque. By F. HOPKINSON SMITH. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

IN THE TRACK OF ULYSSES. By WILLIAM J. STILLMAN. Fully illustrated. Royal 8vo.

WINTER. Selections from the Journals of HENRY D. THOREAU. 12mo, gilt top.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WORKS OF EDWARD FITZGERALD, the Translator of Omar Khayyám, with some Corrections derived from his own Annotated Copies. With a portrait of Mr. Fitzgerald, a sketch of Omar Khayyám's tomb, by William Simpson, and a frontispiece to "Salaman and Absal." A limited letter-press edition, 2 vols., 8vo, $10.00. Large paper edition, a few copies, $25.00.

THE WORLD TO COME. Sermons by WILLIAM BURNET WRIGHT, recently pastor of the Berkeley Street Church, Boston, and author of "Ancient Cities." 16mo, $1.25.

MEN AND LETTERS. Essays in Criticism and Characterization. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Noah Webster," "Stories and Romances," etc. 16mo, gilt top.

WIT, WISDOM, AND BEAUTY OF SHAKESPEARE. Selected by C. S. WARD. 16mo, full gilt, $1.25.

THE COLERTON LETTERS. Memories of Coleridge: Being Letters from Coleridge, Wordsworth and his Sister, Southey and Sir Walter Scott, to Sir George and Lady Beaumont of Coleridge, in Leicestershire, 1803 to 1833. Edited, with notes and introduction, by WILLIAM KNIGHT, professor at St. Andrews University. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

THE BOOK OF FOLK STORIES. Re-written by HORACE E. SCUDDER. 16mo, 60 cents.

NEW EDITIONS.

VICTORIAN POETS. By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN. Revised and enlarged. Crown 8vo, $2.25; half calf, $3.50. Large Paper Edition, limited to 250 copies. 8vo, printed in the most careful manner on the best paper, and containing fine portraits of several eminent English poets. 2 vols.

WORKS, including PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, THE HOLY WAR, GRACE ABOUNDING. By JOHN BUNYAN. Edited by the Rev. John Brown, author of the "Life of Bunyan." In 3 vols., 12mo, $1.50 each.

THE OLD GARDEN AND OTHER POEMS. By MARGARET DELAND. New and enlarged edition. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON. A new issue of the Little Classic Edition, in tasteful binding, making a very attractive, compact edition of Emerson's Essays, Lectures, Addresses and Poems. 11 vols., 18mo, $1.35 a vol.; the set, $13.75; half calf or half morocco, $25.00; tree calf, $35.00.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. New Fireside Edition. 6 vols., 16mo, $10.00; half calf, $20.00. (Sold only in sets.)

THE WORKS OF THOMAS DE QUINCEY. New Fireside Edition. 6 vols., 16mo, $10.00; half calf, $20.00. (Sold only in sets.)

LITTLE CLASSICS. A new issue of this collection of the best Short Stories, Sketches and Poems, in simple and tasteful binding. 18 vols., 18mo, $1.00 each; the set, $18.00; half calf or half morocco, $35.00.

THE BODLEY BOOKS. Including Deeds of the Bodley Family in Town and Country, The Bodleys Telling Stories, The Bodleys on Wheels, The Bodleys Afoot, Mr. Bodley Abroad, The Bodley Grandchildren and their Journey in Holland, The English Bodleys and The Viking Bodleys. By HORACE E. SCUDDER. A new edition, eight vols. in four, attractively bound in cloth. With numerous illustrations. Quarto, $2.00 a vol.; the set, $8.00.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER. New Riverside Edition, from new plates. With notes by Mr. Whittier, and steel portraits. 4 vols., crown 8vo, $1.50 each; the set, $6.00; half calf, $11.00; half levant, $16.00. Large Paper Edition. Limited to 500 copies, which will be numbered.

RECENT BOOKS & NEW EDITIONS.

Poetry and Philosophy of Goethe.

Edited by MARION V. DUDLEY. 12mo, price $1.50.

"We know of no other volume in English which compares so much information and such profound criticism of the greatest figure in German literature as this collection of essays and discussions."—The Christian Union.

"A more appreciative work than this could not be desired. Every essay is written by some one who has made a thorough study of the great poet, and looking at him as they do from different points of view, as a whole they present an exhaustive and almost invaluable treatise."—The Princetonian.

Solar Heat, Gravitation and Sun Spots.

By J. H. KEDZIE. 12mo, cloth, with 22 fine illustrations, $1.50.

"The reader will find that the whole subject is very clearly and forcibly put in this treatise, and in a style which makes it readable and interesting to persons of even moderate scientific attainments."—North American Review.

Third Edition Now Ready of Sparks from a Geologist's Hammer.

By ALEXANDER WINCHELL, LL. D., Professor of Geology and Paleontology in the University of Michigan. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

"We know of no more readable and instructive work on popular geology."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"A work to arrest immediate attention and captivate the imagination and fancy. It is clear and simple in expression and of wonderful skill in description."—Boston Commonwealth.

OTHER WORKS BY DR. WINCHELL.

Pre-Adamites; or, A Demonstration of the Existence of Men before Adam. With charts and illustrations. By ALEXANDER WINCHELL, LL. D., Professor of Geology and Paleontology in the University of Michigan. 8vo, $3.50.

World Life. A study of the formation, growth and decay of worlds, from their earliest existence as nebulous masses diffused through space to their development into sun and world systems, and their final dissolution. Illustrated. 12mo, $2.50.

Geological Excursions; or, The Rudiments of Geology for Young Learners. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Geological Studies, for High Schools, Normal Schools and Collegiate Classes. 12mo, cloth, 440 pages, with 367 illustrations. (Just Published.) Price $3.00.

Sixth Edition of Pre-Historic Races of United States.

By J. W. FOSTER, LL. D. Crown 8vo, illustrated, $3.00.

"It is full of interest from beginning to end . . . It contains just that kind of information, in clear, compressed and intelligible form, which is adapted to the mass of readers."—Popular Science Monthly.

Tenth Edition of Oratory and Orators.

By Prof. WILLIAM MATHEWS, LL. D. Handsome 12mo, 466 pages, price $2.00.

"One of the most comprehensive and thoughtful books we have read on this topic. He treats in a suggestive and fascinating strain of the great English, Irish and American orators, analyzing their respective styles with a subtlety of insight and a nicety of expression which evince profound research and well-balanced judgment."—Boston Traveller.

Second Edition of Masters of the Situation,

Or, Some Secrets of Success and Power. By WILLIAM J. FILLER, B. D. Handsome 12mo, 346 pages, price $1.25.

"Every page is full of virile thought and wise precept."—Boston Commonwealth.

"The essay on promptness is enough to give the most sluggish nature an impulse toward activity and decision. . . . No one who reads it with attention can fail to find in it a helper in all good and noble directions."—Chicago Tribune.

The Poetical Works of Benjamin F. Taylor, LL. D.

One handsome volume, containing portrait of the author. 12mo, 366 pages, price $1.75.

"These poems deserve a position by the side of the masterpieces of American poetry."—Boston Times.

Theophilus Trent;

Or, Old Times in the Oak Openings. A novel by the late BENJAMIN F. TAYLOR, LL. D. 1 vol., 12mo, price $1.00.

"The story is one long-drawn poem in prose."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

S. C. GRIGGS & CO.,

87 & 89 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Messrs. Roberts Brothers

WILL PUBLISH DURING OCTOBER:

For a Song's Sake, and Other Stories.

By PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON, author of "Wind-Voices," "All in All," "Garden Secrets," etc. With portrait. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, gilt, $1.75.

South-County Neighbors: Character Sketches of the Narragansett Country Fifty Years Ago.

By ESTHER BERNON CARPENTER. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Madame de Stael.

By BELLA DUFFY. (Famous Women Series.) 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

A Short History of the City of Philadelphia.

From the Foundation to the Present Time. By SUSAN COOLIDGE. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Juvenilia: Being a Second Series of Essays on Sundry Aesthetic Questions.

By VERNON LEE, author of "Euphorion," "Baldwin," etc. Small crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

Boston School Kitchen Text-Book.

Lessons in Cooking for the Use of Classes in Public and Industrial Schools. By Mrs. D. A. LINCOLN, author of "The Boston Cook-Book," "Carving and Serving," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00.

Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life.

By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Diana of the Crossways," etc. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

Songs of the Mexican Seas.

The Sea of Fire and the Rhyme of the Great River. By JOAQUIN MILLER, author of "Songs of the Sierras," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Garden Secrets: Poems.

By PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON. With a sketch of his life by Louise Chandler Moulton. With portrait. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Poetical Works of John Keats.

Chronologically arranged and edited, with a memoir, by Lord HOUGHTON. A new edition, printed on fine calendered paper. 16mo, cloth, $1.50.

The Complete Works of William Shakespeare.

From the text of the Rev. ALEXANDER DYCK's second edition. With portrait and memoir. 7 vols., 16mo, in neat box, half Russia, gilt top, $9.00 the set.

Helen Jackson's Complete Poems.

Including "Verses" and "Sonnets and Lyrics." In one vol., 16mo, cloth, $1.50; white cloth, gilt, $1.75.

NO. 8 SOMERSET STREET, BOSTON.

Frederick Warne & Co.'s LIST.

Our New Catalogue of Standard Literature is Now Ready. Mailed Free on Application.

In 12mo, cloth, new design, $1.00.

THE CRESCENT AND THE CROSS; or, Romance and Realities of Eastern Travel.

By ELIOT WARBURTON.

A delightful reprint of a journey up the Nile, through the Levant and the Holy Land.

By the author of "A Danish Parsonage," "An American in Norway," etc. In cloth, novel design, $1.50.

A STORK'S NEST; or, Pleasant Reading from the North.

Collected by J. FULFORD VICARY. A choice collection of old-fashioned Danish and Norwegian stories.

"It is the naturalness of them which is so delightful. They are such faithful copies of Scandinavian life that you believe all that happens is absolutely true."—N. Y. Times.

In cloth, gilt, $1.25. A Fourth Edition of FOOD AND FEEDING.

By Sir HENRY THOMPSON, F. R. C. S.

"It is, perhaps, the most useful, suggestive, and at the same time entertaining, work on gastronomy in the English language, if not in any language."—The Nation.

"Sir Henry Thompson is not a cook, but we should like to live where his rational directions ruled the kitchen."—Literary World, Boston.

In square 18mo, boards, novel style, 50 cents.

THE MODERN HOYLE; or, How to Play Whist, Chess, Draughts, Backgammon, Poker, Napoleon, Euchre, Dominoes, Bezique, etc.

New and revised edition, with additional sections by Professor Hoffman. With diagrams.

Uniform with the above in size and price.

MODERN ETIQUETTE IN PUBLIC AND PRIVATE.

Including Society at Large; Etiquette of Weddings; the Ball Room, including "The Cotillion," etc.; the Dinner Table—How to Carve, etc.; The Toilet.

"The little book is full of valuable hints."—The Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

"It seems to us to surpass in brevity, comprehensiveness, intelligibility and good taste any other book of the sort within our recollection."—The Congregationalist.

HEALTH, BEAUTY and the TOILET.

Letters to Ladies from a Lady Doctor. By ANNA KINGSFORD, M. D. (Paris). 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

CONTENTS—On Obesity; Leanness; Clothing; the Complexion; Superfluous Hair; Hands and Arms; on the Figure; Teeth; on the Culture of Beauty, Grace, Health, etc.

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE STORIES FOR CHILDREN.

In 12mo, cloth, new design, $1.50.

EDEN TO PATMOS: Scenes and Incidents in Bible History.

By the Rev. GORDON CALTHORP, M. A., of St. Augustine's, Highbury, London. With maps and illustrations.

"A good Sunday book for homes where there is yet some discrimination between secular and religious reading."—The Churchman.

Of all booksellers, or mailed free, on receipt of price, by

FREDERICK WARNE & CO.,

20 Lafayette Place, New York.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS,

9 Lafayette Place, New York.

• FALL ANNOUNCEMENTS, 1887 •

The Count of Monte-Cristo.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. With nearly 500 illustrations by Beaume, Staal and other eminent French artists. 5 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $15.00.
(Uniform with the superbly illustrated edition of "Les Misérables" published last year.)

Notre Dame.

By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations from designs by Victor Hugo, Bayard, Brion, Johannot, etc. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

The Tollers of the Sea.

By VICTOR HUGO. With 150 illustrations from designs by Chiffart, D. Vierge and Victor Hugo. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

(Uniform with "Les Misérables" and "The Count of Monte-Cristo"; each richly and profusely illustrated.)

Extract from private letter from Paul Meurice, Hugo's intimate and life-long friend and literary and family executor: "I wait no longer to tell you how delighted I am with your beautiful edition of 'Les Misérables,' so carefully printed, with the illustrations on hard, white paper. . . . The superior illustrations of 'Notre Dame' will make even a handsomer book."

The Lady with the Camellias.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS, Fils. A new translation with a new preface by the author, and with a sketch by Jules Janin of Marie Duplessis, whose history furnished the basis of the story. With 40 exquisite photo-gravures and etchings by Albert Lynch. Large 4to, cloth, gilt top, in a box, $20.00.

(Edition limited to 550 copies for both the English and American markets.)

Paul and Virginia.

By BERNARDIN DE ST. PIERRE. With 120 wood-cuts and 12 full-page engravings by Boulard, Huyot, Bellenger and Rousseau, from designs by Maurice Leloir. Large 8vo, cloth, $13.50; in a cloth portfolio, $12.00.

(Edition limited to 350 copies for America.)

The Iliad of Homer.

Translated by GEORGE CHAPMAN. With 24 full-page illustrations, designed by Henri Motte, printed in the best style of helio-gravure. With an introduction by Henry Morley. 4to, cloth, in a box, $15.00.

(Edition limited to 500 copies for both the English and American markets.)

Carmen.

By PROSPER MÉRIMÉE. With illustrations from designs by S. Arcois, engraved by A. Nargeot. 12mo, half levant gilt top, in a box, $5.00.

Pere Goriot: Scenes from Parisian Life.

By HONORE DE BALZAC. Translated by Katharine Prescott Wormley. With illustrations by Lynch, engraved by E. Abot. 8vo, boards, $4.00.

(Imported by permission of Messrs. Roberts Bros., who own the copyright of this translation of Balzac's Works.)

Alphonse Daudet's Writings.

Tartarin on the Alps.

Tartarin of Tarascon.

La Belle Nivernaise.

Sappho: Parisian Manners.

With exquisite illustrations by Rossi, Aranda de Myrbach, Montenard, de Beaumont, Montégut and Picard. Each, 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

Also uniform with the above.

Marriage de Loti.

With illustrations. 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

Last "Graphic" Pictures.

By RANDOLPH CALDECOTT. Printed in colors, oblong 4to, boards, $3.00.

(In similar style to his charming "Graphic Pictures" and "More Graphic Pictures" previously published.)

Our Darlings: at Home, in Town, at the Seaside, in the Country and at Play.

By MARS. Printed in colors and gold by Plon. Oblong 4to, cloth, $3.00; boards, $2.50.

(An original and very beautiful book for children. First published in France, where it met with wide popularity among the old as well as the young.)

Voices of the Flowers.

Illustrated and arranged by HARRIET STEWART MINER. Pictures of flowers with appropriate poetical quotations on opposite pages, selected from the writings of

LONGFELLOW, SHAKESPEARE,
WHITTIER, MOORE.

Printed in colors. Hand-painted and embossed covers. Each $1.00.

Wonderful Cities of the World.

By HELEN A. SMITH. With numerous illustrations, many of them full page. 4to, cloth, $3.00.

Comprises the "Ancient Cities of the World" and "Modern Cities of the World," bound together, at the request of many desiring the two in a more durable shape than in board covers.

Animals, Birds and Fishes.

By HELEN A. SMITH. Studies in Natural History in words of easy reading. Illustrated. Large folio, cloth, $3.00.

Comprises "Animals, Wild and Tame," and "Birds and Fishes," bound together, at the request of many desiring the two in a more durable shape than in board covers.

Routledge's Every Boy's Annual for 1888.

Edited by EDMUND ROUTLEDGE. Twenty-sixth year of publication. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

Little Wideawake for 1888.

Edited by MRS. SALE BARKER. With illustrations and colored frontispiece. Fourteenth year of publication. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, $1.50.

Kate Greenaway's Almanack for 1888.

With original designs by KATE GREENAWAY. Printed in colors by Edmund Evans. Hand-painted and embossed designs, 75 cents; calf, $1.00; boards, 25 cents.

Routledge's Cotillion Almanac for 1888.

An American Almanac of unique design and novel arrangement, illustrating the "German," and forming something entirely new. Printed in colors and gold. Torchon, 50 cents; boards, 25 cents.

Shakespeare's Works.

Handy volume edition. 13 vols., with glossary, in a box. New "Basket" binding, $15.00; imitation seal, $17.50; calf, $20.00.

Shakespeare's Works.

Routledge's Popular Edition. Edited by CHARLES KNIGHT. With 64 full-page illustrations by Sir John Gilbert, R. A. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

Macaulay's Essays.

A new and entirely complete edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

Imperial Natural History.

Comprising Wild and Domestic Animals. With 24 colored and many plain illustrations. Imperial 4to, cloth, $3.00.

One-Syllable History of Japan.

By HELEN A. SMITH. With map linings and numerous illustrations. 4to, boards, $1.00.

One Syllable History of Russia.

By HELEN A. SMITH. With map linings and numerous illustrations. 4to, boards, $1.00.

Stories of Persons and Places in Europe.

By E. L. BÉNÉDICT. Copiously illustrated. 4to, boards, lithographed cover, $1.50.

The Fairy Tales of the Countess D'Aulnoy.

Translated by J. R. PLANCHE. An entirely new edition. With numerous original illustrations by Gordon Browne and Lydia F. Emmet. 4to, boards, lithographed double cover, $1.50.

Mattie's Secret.

By EMILE DESBEAUX. With 100 illustrations. 4to, boards, lithographed double cover, $1.25.

Routledge's Picture Scrap-Book.

With numerous full-page and smaller illustrations. Imperial 4to, boards, lithographed cover, $1.25.

Youngsters' Yarns.

A new and captivating book for boys. By ASCOTT B. HOPE. With many illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

The Adventures of Herbert Massey in Eastern Africa.

By Commander V. LOVETT CAMERON. With many illustrations by A. W. Cooper. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

E. & J. B. Young & Company's New Publications.

A Delight Novelty in Calendars.

THE EWING CALENDAR, Being a Calendar for A. D., 1888.

Indicating the principal Holy-days, the Anniversary of the Birth and Death of Eminent People of Letters, Science and Art, Notable and Historical Events, etc., with Appropriate Selections from the writings of

Mrs. JULIANA HORATIA EWING.

This Calendar is made to use either in EASEL STYLE, or to HANG UP.

We commend this calendar as a novel and graceful production.

The popularity of the author from whose works the selections are made, the discernment and ability shown in the choice of passages that bring out the veins of pathos and humor with which her writings abound, the care and taste displayed in the make-up of the calendar, the perfect likeness of Mrs. Ewing given in the medallion, and the suggestiveness of the whole design, will appeal to the many readers and lovers of those stories, always pure, always bright, always interesting, in which Mrs. Ewing's pen was so prolific.

BUY THE ENGLISH EDITIONS

OF
MRS. EWING'S BOOKS.

The Peace Egg.

Dandelion Clocks.

Mary's Meadow.

Jackanapes.

Story of a Short Life.

Daddy Darwin's Dove-Cot.

Lob-Lie-by-the-Fire.

Mrs. Ewing and Her Books.

ALL IN PAPER BOARD BINDINGS.

33 cents each net; by mail, 33 cents.

SUNDAY. VOLUME FOR 1888 CONTAINS OVER 250 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, Gilt Edges, $2.00;
Illuminated Boards, $1.35.

No other volume of the same character gives a corresponding amount of new illustrations and letter-press.

PUBLICATIONS OF

Messrs. Castell & Brothers

IN COLOR AND MONOTINT.

HEAVENWARD.

A Scripture Text Book, with poetical extract for each day in the month. Beautiful designs and illustrations in color and monotint on opposite pages by ALICE and F. CORBYN PRICE. Square 32mo, illuminated paper boards, 50 cents; or in fine bindings, from 75 cents to $1.50.

The sale of this book has reached nearly 300,000 copies within a year of its publication.

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

By Mrs. HEMANS. An exquisite little book, illustrated in colors in the highest style of lithographic art. Illuminated paper boards, 50 cents; or in fine bindings, from $1.00 to $2.00.

ON THE WING.

Scripture Text for Each Day in the Month. Verses by LUCY A. BENNETT. Designs by Alice and F. Corbyn Price. Square 32mo. 17 pages of exquisite colored lithography and 18 pages in monotint. Illuminated paper boards, 50 cents; or in fine bindings, from $1.00 to $2.50.

GRAY'S ELEGY.

A beautifully illustrated edition of the "Elegy Written in a Country Church-yard," by THOMAS GRAY. Small 4to, with full page illustrations, lettering and ornaments in the finest style of monotint. Illuminated paper boards, $1.25; or in fine bindings, from $2.00 to $3.50.

FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS.

A Book of Scripture Texts and Poems for Children. By ERNEST C. PRICE. Designed and illustrated by Alice Price and F. Corbyn Price. Oblong 4to. 11 pages of exquisite colored chromo-lithography, and 21 pages artistically rendered in monotint. Illuminated boards, gilt edges, $2.50.

ARUNDEL SOCIETY;

Or, Society for Promoting the Knowledge of Art by Copying and Publishing Important Works of Ancient Masters.

The publications of this Society are mostly copies in facsimile, in colors, of Italian fresco-paintings, many of which are little known, and in danger of ruin, either from neglect or mis-called "restoration." The Flemish and German schools are represented, and some of the most remarkable monuments of Italian sculpture, both of the Middle Ages and Renaissance.

Examples after Fra Angelico, Gossoli, Chirlandolo, Veronese, Perugino, Raffaele, Bazzi and others are included in the Society's publications, which are for sale (at a reduced price to members) by the Society's agents, from whom catalogues may be obtained, and to whom members' subscriptions should be paid.

A history of the formation and work of the ARUNDEL SOCIETY will be sent free on application.

PICTORIAL ARCHITECTURE OF GREECE AND ITALY.

By the Rev. H. H. BISHOP, M. A. With over 100 wood-cut illustrations. Oblong 4to, cloth, $1.50.

THE VULGAR BOY;

Or, Misadventures at Margate. From the "Ingoldsby Legends." Humorously illustrated by E. M. JESSOP. Printed in colors. Imperial 4to.

BY REV. W. J. KNOX-LITTLE.

THE BROKEN VOW.

A Tale of Here and Hereafter. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"This is a story of pure affection, ripening by natural development into noble connubial and maternal love. It is a testimony of affection of a daughter to a mother in Paradise. It is vivid with its portrayal of old family life, and buildings about which cluster the memories of many generations."—Church Record.

"Beautiful story. . . Rich in tender, pathetic beauty."—Academy.

EIGHT EDITIONS.

Prices from $1.25 to $12.00.

LONDON TEACHERS' BIBLES.

The Best Teachers' Bible Made. No Part Anonymous.

After critical comparison with the competing Bibles of other publishers, this edition has been adopted exclusively by the two great English Societies, the

Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge
AND
The Religious Tract Society.

THE VARIORUM TEACHERS' BIBLE.

"The book is indeed a marvel, a library of learning, a book of books, concerning 'The Book of Books,' and deserves a wide circulation in Europe and America."—THE REV. J. H. VINCENT.

LOVE AND THEOLOGY.

By CELIA PARKER WOOLLEY. $1.50.

"This new and entertaining novel."—Christian Register.

"It is a book of very unusual power, and will prove itself one of that class of novels which we own and read over from time to time, rather than one of the many quickly swept from view and from memory down the tide of works and days. While the story in itself is of fascinating enjoyment, the speculative reader will find a deeper interest in tracing the action and reaction of heart and conscience between two young people whose love is as strong as life, but who have the peculiar New England heritage of tenacious beliefs."—Boston Traveller.

"It is a unique thing—perhaps one would almost say a daring thing—and has pre-empted for its theme the new faith, which is making itself felt as an appreciable feature of modern life. It is a great theme, and it is handled in this novel by Celia Parker Woolley with force, fire and fitness. Without any pre-Raphaelite attempts at realistic photography, this story is one of the most realistic presentations of conservative life in New England that I have ever seen."—Lithan Whiting, in Inter-Ocean.

AN OPERETTA IN PROFILE.

By CZEKA. $1.

"The book is so original in manner and in matter, so spicy in its epigram, so keen in its satire, and so faithful to suburban life in its general portrayal, as to be altogether charming."—Boston Courier.

"One of the most entertaining books of the season."—Gazette.

"But there is a freshness and candor about it that is delightful; its wit is keen-edged; while the sprinkling of small cynicisms is only such as to improve the flavor. The satire is directed against a certain small, typical, presumably New England town, where the operetta is devised for the benefit of 'the church.' . . . The crisp sentences in which a character is analyzed, the satiric turn that ridicules the foibles of weak man or woman kind, is deliciously enjoyable."—Boston Advertiser.

THREE GOOD GIANTS.

From the French of François Rabelais. By JOHN DIMITRY. Square 16mo. With 175 illustrations by Gustave Doré and A. Robida. $1.50.

What! giants and goodness? The two ideas are irreconcilable. There never were any good giants. Let us not be too confident of this, however, for here before us are the faithful biographies of three. And culled from the pages of Rabelais at that! Rabelais is not a name in high favor with the moralist, who has judged him usually by hearsay, but since Walter Besant has written his life, and the scrupulous Mrs. Oliphant has admitted him into the company of her "Foreign Classics for English Readers," the moralist is compelled to recognize the fact that the great French satirist is perhaps several shades lighter than he at first supposed. In the pretty volume called "Three Good Giants," Mr. John Dimitry has given a connected history of the adventures of Grandgousier, Gargantua and Pantagruel, and although it is all compiled from Rabelais, every page is clean and wholesome as the leaves in Alice in Wonderland. It is really no slight service both to Rabelais himself and to the reading public that Mr. Dimitry has performed. In these pages the delightful humorous extravagance of the old satirist can be appreciated at its full value, and the general reader, as well as the literary student, can now enjoy the wit and humor of the great Frenchman. No one need hesitate to place this book of Mr. Dimitry's in his children's hands, and as to the children themselves, the three good giants will soon become as valued companions as "Gulliver in Lilliput," or "Alice in Wonderland." The illustrations, over 150 in number, are by Doré and Robida.

THE LONGFELLOW PROSE BIRTHDAY BOOK; OR, LONGFELLOW'S DAYS.

Being extracts from his journals and letters, edited by Mrs. LAURA WINTEROP JOHNSON. $1; flexible calf or seal, $2.50.

THE BHAGAVAD-GITA;

Or, The Lord's Lay. With commentary and notes, as well as references to the Christian Scriptures. Translated from the Sanskrit for the benefit of those in search of spiritual light. By MOHINI M. CHATTERJI, M.A. 1 vol., 8vo, gilt top, $2.

AGNES SURRIAGE.

By EDWIN LASSETTER BYNNER. $1.50.

"Mr. Bynner has re-created for us the Boston of our ancestors with a fidelity and accuracy which makes his book, aside from its interest as a story, invaluable in an historical sense. He shows us the narrow streets and lanes of the old town, just as they were a hundred and fifty years ago; quaint wooden buildings, with their over-hanging stories and picturesque gables; the ancient inns and churches, and the elegant mansions of the colonial aristocracy. We catch the scent of flowers from old-fashioned gardens long ago lost under the growing acres of brick and mortar, and brush against people whose names are familiar to every reader of local history—Governor and Madam Shirley, the Vassals, the Royalls of Cambridge, Collector Frankland, the versatile Master Pelham, Smibert, the famous portrait painter, the young Singleton Copley, and others whose names are of constant occurrence in our colonial records."—Boston Transcript.

Free Pastoralia. By H. M. SYLVESTER. $1.50.

"Broad pictures of country ways drawn with loving touch."

Home Sanitation. For housekeepers. 50 cents.

Care of the cellar, plumbing and drainage, ventilation, heating, lighting, furnishing, clothing, food and drink, etc.

Letters of Horatio Greenough. $1.25.

The Sunny Side of Shadow. Mrs. BENJAMIN. $1.

Final Memorials of Henry W. Longfellow. By SAMUEL LONGFELLOW. 8vo, $3.

Due North. By MATHURIN M. BALLOU. $1.50.

Recent travels in Sweden, Norway, Russia, Poland, etc.

Sold by booksellers. Sent postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & CO., - - - Boston.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS

Of Popular Standard and Illustrated Books.

The Princess, Child Harold,
The Lady of the Lake, Luelle,
The Lay of the Last Minstrel, Marmion.

New Library Editions. Six volumes, elegantly bound, with all the original illustrations, beveled boards and full gilt. Each, in cloth, 8vo, $3.50; in tree calf, or flexible calf, extra, $7.50.

The most famous and popular editions of these great poems.

Sonnets from the Portuguese. By ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. Illustrated by L. S. IPSSEN. Oblong quarto, beautifully bound, full gilt, $3.

Poets and Etchers. Twenty full-page etchings, by SMILLIE, COLMAN, BELLOWS, FARRER and GIFFORD, illustrating poems by Longfellow, Whittier, Bryant, Aldrich, Lowell and Emerson. 4to, $5.

Japanese Homes. By Prof. E. S. MORSE.

Ososen (Korea). By PERCIVAL LOWELL.

Carlyle-Emerson Correspondence. 2 vols.

Nathaniel Hawthorne and His Wife. 2 vols.
New editions, illustrated, each $3; half calf, $4.

Tuscan Cities. By W. D. HOWELLS.

Red-Letter Days Abroad. By J. L. STODDARD.
Cheaper editions, richly illustrated, $3.50.

READY IN A FEW DAYS:

Geraldine. A sumptuous illustrated edition.

Scott's Poems. New holiday edition. 250 illustrations.

Swanee River. A beautiful illustrated book.

My Old Kentucky Home. Richly illustrated.

Jann and Jannita. By FRANCES C. BAYLOR.

Fools of Nature. An anti-spiritualist novel.

Under Pine and Palm. By FRANCES L. MAGE.

Sobriquets and Nicknames. A reference book.

A Fleck of Girls. By NOVA PERRY.

History of the Secession War. By R. JOHNSON.

The New Astronomy. By Prof. S. P. LANGLEY.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

"Struggle to restore a human soul to order and to righteousness by patience and by love, instead of crushing it by your inflexible vindictiveness, your savage justice! Such is the cry of the book. . . . The erudition, the talent, the brilliancy of execution shown in the book, are astonishing—bewildering almost. . . . His eruptions are like those of a volcano; and, fabulous workman that he is, he goes on forever raising, destroying, crushing, and rebuilding a world of his own creation."—From Amiel's Journal.

A NEW AND BEAUTIFUL LIBRARY EDITION OF

LES MISÉRABLES.

IN FIVE VOLUMES, 12MO, CLOTH, EXTRA GILT TOP,
PRICE $7.50.

MESSRS. LITTLE, BROWN AND COMPANY take pleasure in announcing that they have nearly ready for publication a choice library edition in English of VICTOR HUGO's great work "LES MISÉRABLES."

Cheap one-volume editions of this masterpiece exist almost without end; but every reader must have experienced the need of a good, handy library edition in large readable type. To supply this want the present edition, in five volumes, has been prepared. It has been printed by Messrs. John Wilson and Son, of the University Press, Cambridge, in their best manner, in clear and beautiful type, and is, in the main, a reprint of the English translation, in three volumes, by Sir Lascelles Wraxall, which was made with the author's sanction and advice, and has always been considered the best rendering. Chapters and passages omitted in the English edition have been specially translated for the present issue, numerous errors have been corrected, and the author's own arrangement of the work in five parts, and his subdivisions into books and chapters, have been restored.

No expense has been spared that would produce a really beautiful edition of Hugo's famous work in type which it is a pleasure to read, and in volumes which can easily and comfortably be held in the hand.

A limited large paper issue will also be printed, consisting of one hundred and fifty numbered copies, price $12.50 net, for which early orders are desirable.

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY, Publishers, 254 Washington St., Boston.

SOME OF CASSELL & COMPANY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS FOR THE SEASON OF 1887-'88.

Abbeys and Churches of England and Wales.

Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial. Edited by the Rev. T. G. BONNEY, Sc. Doc., F. R. S., Professor of Geology in University College, London. $5.00.

The Modern School of Art.

Edited by WILFRED METHELL. With 8 full-page plates and etchings, and over 125 illustrations, cloth, $6.00.

Pen Portraits of Literary Women.

By HELEN GRAY COHE and JEANNETTE L. GILDER. 2 vols., 12mo, gilt top. Per set, $3.00.

The Magazine of Art.

Bound vol. for 1887, with 12 exquisite etchings, photo-gra-vures, etc., and several hundred choice engravings. Cloth gilt, $5.00; full morocco extra, $10.00.

The Quiver.

Bound vol. for 1887, with hundreds of illustrations. Extra cloth, over 760 pages, $2.25.

In Realms of Gold.

By JAMES B. KENTON. 1 vol., 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Shakespeare's King Henry IV.

Illustrated by HERR EDWARD GRUTZNER. Photo-gravure illustrations. The text on Whatman's hand-made paper, tastefully printed in red and black. Edition limited. Price, per copy, $25.00.

Martin Luther.

The Man and His Work. By PETER BAYNE, LL.D. 1,040 pages. 8 vols. Extra cloth, 2 vols. Per set, $5.00.

English Writers.

An attempt towards a History of English Literature. By HENRY MORLEY, LL.D., Professor of English Literature at University College, London. Vol. II. Extra cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Other volumes to follow.

How Dante Climbed the Mountain.

By ROSE E. BELFE. With a preface by the Lord-Bishop of Ripon. Cloth extra, 75 cents.

Cassell's Family Magazine.

Bound vol. for 1887, nearly 300 illustrations. Complete stories, etc. Extra cloth, $2.25.

NEW EDITIONS.

American Art.

Illustrated by 25 plates, executed by the best American etchers and wood-engravers, from paintings selected from public and private collections, with text by S. R. KOEHLER. 1 vol., folio. New and unique style of binding. Cloth, gilt edges, $15.00; half morocco, $25.00; full morocco, $30.00.

Etching.

An Outline of its Technical Processes and its History, with some Remarks on Collections and Collecting. By S. R. KOEHLER. Illustrated by 30 plates, by old and modern etchers, and numerous reproductions in the text. "A sumptuous volume." Full gilt edges, extra cloth, $20.00; half morocco, gilt, $30.00; full morocco, gilt, $40.00; édition de luxe, 2 vols., 1/2 russia, $100.00.

Cathedral Churches of England and Wales.

Edition de luxe. Descriptive, historical, pictorial. With introduction by the Rev. Prof. BONNEY, F. R. S., and contributions by eminent authorities. With upwards of 150 illustrations. Printed on Imperial 4to paper, with 6 full-page illustrations, produced on India paper. Extra cloth, gilt top, $10.00.

Also a new edition now ready in quarto, extra cloth, bevelled boards, full gilt, $5.00.

Christmas in the Olden Time.

By SIR WALTER SCOTT. Illustrated from designs by Harry Fenn, Edmund H. Garrett, J. Stupio Davis, George A. Teal, Henry Sandham, Child Hassam, H. P. Barnes. Engraved and printed under the supervision of George

T. Andrew. Large 8vo, cloth, $4.00; full morocco, $7.50; full light calf, $7.50; full tree calf, $8.00.

Shakespearean Scenes and Characters.

Illustrative of 30 plays of Shakespeare. With 30 steel plates and 10 wood-engravings, after drawings by Dicksee, Hart, Barnard, Raiston, Selous, Watson, Green, Hopkins, Bromley, Fredericks, Edwards, etc. The text by AUSTIN BREASTON. Royal quarto, full gilt, $6.00; seal, $8.00; full morocco, $10.00.

A Mother's Song.

By MARY D. BRINE, author of "Merry-Go-Round," "Stories Grandma Told," etc., with elegant full-page illustrations from designs by Miss C. B. Northam. Engraved by Andrews. 1 vol., square quarto, extra cloth, full gilt, $2.50.

NEW JUVENILE BOOKS.

Dog Stories and Dog Lore.

Experiences of two boys in rearing and training dogs, with many anecdotes of canine intelligence. An elegant, illustrated, and exhaustive work on the Dog, by Col. THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "The Boy Travellers," "The Young Nimrods," "Marco Polo," etc. 1 vol., quarto, elegant double chromo cover, done in 12 colors, $1.75; extra cloth, gold and colored inks, $2.50.

A Brave Struggle; or, The Orphan's Inheritance.

By JOHN S. LOCKE. 1 vol., quarto, very fully illustrated, and bound in handsome double chromo cover, $1.25; extra cloth, gold and inks, $1.75.

Bright Hours for Our Little Ones.

Quarto, elegant lithographic cover, 50 cents.

Afloat in a Great City.

By FRANK A. MUNSEY, editor of the Golden Argosy. With six illustrations. 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

Daisy Blue Eyes.

Short stories by favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, double lithographic covers, 75 cents.

Happy-Go-Lucky.

By favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, elegant double lithographic covers, 75 cents.

Bo-Peep.

"The Juvenile Book of the Year." An elegant quarto volume, full of illustrations, with delightful stories, in large, clear type. Elegant lithographic cover, $1.00; extra cloth, new and elegant dies in gold and several colors of ink (new style), $1.50.

Little Folks.

Volume for Fall of 1887. Containing nearly 500 pictures. With chromo frontispiece and five full-page plates, printed in colors. Over 400 pages, with novel double lithographic cover, boards, $1.25; cloth, full gilt side, chromo on cover, $1.75.

Our Little Friends.

By favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, with double lithographic cover, 50 cents.

Jolly Little Stories.

By favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, elegant double lithographic cover, 50 cents.

Daisy Bell Stories.

By favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, double lithographic cover, 50 cents.

Little Toddlers.

By favorite American authors. 1 vol., large quarto, elegant double lithographic cover, 50 cents.

Bible Talks About Bible Pictures.

By JENNIE B. MERRILL and F. MCCREARY HARRIS. Illustrated by Gustave Doré and others. 1 vol., large quarto, with beautiful chromo cover, done in 10 colors, $1.25.

Cheerful Clatter for Little Folks.

Short stories and full-page illustrations on every leaf. Bound in double lithographic cover, colored frontispiece, $1.25.

Childhood's Pets.

Comprising stories and illustrations about cats, pigeons, sheep, dogs, rabbits, deer, ponies, canaries, etc. By OLIVER PATCH. Nearly 200 pictures, quarto, lithographic double cover and colored frontispiece, $1.25.

Royal Story-Books.

3 vols. Extra cloth. Illustrated. Per vol., $1.50.

UNDER BAYARD'S BANNER.

THE KING'S COMMAND.

THE ROMANCE OF INVENTION.

Trial to Triumph Library.

4 vols. Extra cloth. Per vol., $1.25.

THROUGH TRIAL TO TRIUMPH.

IN LETTERS OF FLAME.

STRONG TO SUFFER.

HEROES OF THE INDIAN EMPIRE.

NOW READY.

Complete Descriptive Catalogue of our Publications is now ready, and will be sent free to any address on application. SEND FOR IT NOW.

SENT FREE.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, - - 739 & 741 Broadway, New York.

Early Autumn Announcements.

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON.

REVISED BY THE QUEEN.

The Story of the Life of Queen Victoria. Told for Boys and Girls all over the World. By W. W. TULLOCH, son of the late Principal Tulloch, Private Chaplain to the Queen. 12mo vol., with portrait, neatly bound (gilt side), in cloth, $1.25. Now ready.

Besides the acquaintance with the private life of the Palace, the volume receives added interest from the fact that it has been revised by the Queen's own hand. It is appropriate that the story of a royal life, so singularly pure and beneficent, should be told in a form suited to youthful minds; and her Majesty's personal supervision is a guarantee no less of the accuracy of the history than of its fitness to describe the events of her home life.

New Fairy Tales. From Brentano. Told in English by KATE FREILIGRATH KROEKER, and pictured by F. Caruthers Gould. With full-page colored illustrations. Quarto volume, bound in cloth, $1.50; in cloth, full gilt side and back, $2.00; cloth, full gilt side and edges, $2.50. Now ready.

The success attained on both sides of the Atlantic by Mme. Kroeker's Fairy Tales from Brentano has led her to issue a new series of translations from the author. The volume opens with one of the most charming fairy tales ever told—the story of Gockel, Hinkel, and Gockeleia, which is marked by a happy combination of freshness and quaint humor, with true beauty and poetic grace. And the other tales are not inferior in interest.

A NEW EDITION, WITH NEW ILLUMINATED COVER.

Folk and Fairy Tales. By P. CHR. ASBJORNSEN. With 100 illustrations. Quarto volume, handsomely bound in illuminated covers, $1.50; in cloth, full gilt side, $2.00. Now ready.

"So admirably written, so richly illustrated a book for young people of all ages, we have not for a long time seen. It will make one of the best presents of the season, on account of its literary as well as its artistic merits."—London Athenæum.

New and Beautifully Illustrated Books for 1887-88. I. As Time Glides on. The Months in Picture and Poem. Arranged by G. THOMPSON HUTCHINSON. Illustrated in Monotype from original designs by Frank Hobden, George H. Edwards, H. F. Hobden, A. Woodruff, and Allan Barrard. Small quarto, very neatly bound, illuminated cover, price 50 cents; half morocco, $1.00; French morocco, $1.25. Ready Sept. 24.

ILLUSTRATED DAILY TEXT-BOOK, UNIFORM WITH "REST ON THE WAY."

II. Emmanuel. A Daily Text-Book. Superbly illustrated with colored engravings. Printed in 16 different colors. Illuminated cover and edges. Price 40 cents.

III. On Special Service: A Tale of Life at Sea. A new book by GEORGE STANLEY GRAHAM, R. N., author of "Cruise of the Snow-Bird." With full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth, full gilt side and back, $1.50. Uniform with "Snow-Bird," "Wild Adventures Round the Pole," "Stanley Graham," and "From Pole to Pole."

Is There Salvation After Death? By E. D. MORRIS, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Systematic Theology in Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25. Ready Sept. 24.

"The aim of this treatise is to consider mainly, in its more obvious and vital aspects, the important question now discussed with special interest in various quarters, whether there is, in fact, as is alleged, a proclamation of Christ and of Salvation through Him in the intermediate state," etc.

A Popular Edition of Poe's Works. Prices reduced from $7.50 to $5.00. Now Ready.

THE WORKS OF EDGAR ALLAN POE. With a memoir by John H. Ingram. Sketches of his life and character by George R. Graham, N. P. Whittier, and James Russell Lowell. Steel Portrait of Poe, with autograph; his Fordham Cottage, Monument, and Poems, and other illustrations. 4 vols., 12mo, bound, uniform with our "Standard Sets," in brown cloth (in a box), $5.00.

NEW EDITION, IN NEW STYLES OF FINE BINDINGS, OF THE SMALLEST COMPLETE SHAKESPEARE.

Illustrated Pocket Edition of Shakespeare's Dramatic Works and Poems. With glossary and life. By J. TALFOUR BLAIR. With 40 Line Block Reproductions of Westall and others. 8 vols., crown 32mo, 4,050 pages, from a new font of nonpareil type, and beautifully printed by the Glasgow University Press.

Though there are many editions of Shakespeare, the publishers feel confident that there is a real want for one smaller in size and price than any which has yet appeared. The "Illustrated Pocket Edition" adds to its other advantages as clear a letterpress as the other smaller editions, although these latter are almost twice as large and more costly.

Strongly bound in cloth, gilt back, in neat cloth box, $3.75; French morocco, in box to match, $6.00; alligator morocco, patent cabinet box with clasp, $7.50; light and russet calf, and full turkey morocco, box uniform with binding, $10.00; full tree calf, light calf box, $12.50.

PUBLISHED BY ARRANGEMENT WITH MESSRS. MACMILLAN OF LONDON.

Charles Lamb's Letters. With introduction and notes. By Rev. ALFRED AINGER, editor of "Lamb's Collected Works," with a steel portrait hitherto unpublished. 2 vols., crown 8vo, red smooth cloth, gilt top, $3.00.

The Letters of Charles Lamb are in themselves an autobiography. The "Essays of Elia" tell us of his childhood and youth, his school time and his holidays, his family and his home surroundings, and of the books which fostered his genius; but the Letters complete the story. There is hardly an incident in Lamb's life that the Letters do not deal with, and they are the more interesting because of the circle to which they were addressed. Coleridge, Southey, Wordsworth, Manning, Leigh Hunt and Hazlitt, not to mention Bernard Barton, Godwin, Barry Cornwall and Thomas Hood, were all in it, and to each Lamb wrote in a different strain, thus revealing to us points in the character of his friends, as well as much of his own nature.

A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, N.Y.

Standard Novels and Works of Reference

PUBLISHED BY

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

Sir Walter Scott's Waverley Novels.

New Library Edition. Complete in 25 Octavo volumes. Extra cloth, $1.75 per vol.; half morocco, gilt top, $2.25 per vol. For sale in sets. Cloth, gilt top, $43.75; half morocco, $56.25; half calf, gilt, marbled edges, $75.00; three-quarters calf, $87.50.

Special Edition, with 125 extra steel plates (in all 185 plates). Sets. In cloth boards, 25 vols., $62.50; three-quarters calf, extra, $112.50.

"We are glad to say of it that it is the most desirable set that we have ever seen. It is tastefully bound in coat of dark blue and elegantly lettered in gold, with gilt top. The type is large and beautiful, and is set in a margin at least an inch in width of clear white paper. Each volume contains a fine full-page steel engraving, either a portrait or copy of some famous picture illustrating the story, and a steel vignette. The edition needs but to be seen to be coveted by every lover of beautiful books."—Boston Advertiser.

Dickens's Works.

The Standard Edition of the Works of Charles Dickens. Profusely Illustrated with Steel Plates. 8vo, complete sets, 30 vols., cloth, $60.00.

Handy Edition. 30 vols., 16mo, half cloth, 50 cents per vol.; half morocco, $1.00 per vol.

The clear type, fine thin paper, with uncut edges, and neat binding, make these little books (Handy Edition) as elegant as one need wish, while the low price will enable all lovers of Dickens to possess, at a very small outlay, a good edition of his works.

Thackeray's Works.

Library Edition. Illustrations by the author, Richard Doyle and Frederick Walker. Complete in 24 vols. 8vo, price per set, English cloth, gilt, $48.00.

Popular Edition. Complete in 26 vols. 12mo, profusely illustrated, per set, cloth extra, $32.50.

Standard Edition. Complete in 26 vols. Profusely illustrated with Steel Plates and Wood Engravings. Large 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Also in English cloth style. $2.00 per vol.

Handy Edition. 27 vols. Half cloth, 50 cents per vol.; half morocco, $1.00 per vol.

"Lovely little books, with refined looking pages, rough edges all round, and extremely tasteful binding, half linen and half paper, is this Handy Edition."—Literary World.

VALUABLE WORKS OF REFERENCE.

Lippincott's Pronouncing Biographical Dictionary.

Containing Complete and Concise Biographical Sketches of the Eminent Persons of all Ages and Countries. New Edition, Thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. By J. THOMAS, M. D., LL. D. 1 vol., imperial 8vo, sheep, $12.00.

Allibone's Critical Dictionary of Authors.

A Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, Living and Deceased. By S. AUSTIN ALLIBONE, LL. D. 3 vols., imperial 8vo, extra cloth, $22.50; sheep, $25.50.

Lippincott's Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World.

A Complete Geographical Dictionary. New Edition of 1880. Thoroughly Revised. Containing Supplementary Tables, with the most recent Census Returns. Royal 8vo, sheep, $12.00.

Worcester's Dictionary.

Standard Royal Quarto Dictionary of the English Language. Unabridged. Profusely illustrated with Wood-cuts and Full-page Plates. Edition of 1857. Enlarged by the addition of a New Pronouncing Biographical Dictionary of nearly 12,000 personages, and a New Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World, noting and locating over 20,000 Places. Containing also over 12,500 New Words, recently added, together with a Table of 5,000 Words in General Use, with their Synonyms. Sheep, marbled edges, $10.00.

Chambers's Encyclopædia.

A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge for the People. Revised Popular Edition, and Household Edition revised. With Numerous Full-Page Illustrations, Wood Engravings and Maps. In Ten Volumes, royal octavo. Bound in various styles, at prices ranging from $15.00 to $40.00.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, PUBLISHERS,

715 & 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, OCT. 1, 1887.

No. 20.

CONTENTS.

AN OPERETTA IN PROFILE	315
A PRINCESS OF JAVA	315
TOLSTOI'S WHAT TO DO?	315
THE ANCIENT CITIES OF THE NEW WORLD	317
SHAKESPEARE'S CONFESSION	317
THE VINE OUT OF EGYPT. Edward Abbott	319
MINOR NOTICES:
Miss Brown on the Norse Discoverers of America	318
Dr. Walker's Health Lessons	318
Court Life in Egypt	318
PERIODICALS	329

COLORÉD CHILDREN IN BOSTON SCHOOLS	320
--	-----

MR. DONNELLY'S BACONIAN CIPHER. Appleton
Morgan	320
TOLSTOI'S WRITINGS	321
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Edna Lyall	321
PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS	321
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	330

AN OPERETTA IN PROFILE.*

THIS story of An Operetta in Profile is a fresh and girlish performance, having the brilliancy, wit, dash, and refined abandon of a cultivated, high-spirited, original young woman who knows things and knows how to put her knowledge into words. The story is, however, not much of a story. It undertakes to tell how a certain coterie in a certain little town undertook to get up an operetta, and what social disruptions, antagonisms, and cataclysms followed the endeavor; but the real purport of the narrative is to serve as a vehicle for satirical and humorous observations on town life, town circles, and town characters. A few extracts will best give an idea of the tone of the book:

Papa is on a salary; that means—it means what I should call a life of vulgar fractions. We never have anything whole and perfect of its sort. It is always one half or two thirds, so to speak, of something else. Thus, when the Peppertons, who are our leading family, give their two annual receptions, and I attend—as of course I must—I am not actually wearing a crêpe-de-chine gown, but one fourth of papa's new hat, one half of mamma's spring wrap, and all of Dick's bicycle stockings. . . . On the same principle our Christmas tree is really papa's new great-coat, and his name on a subscription list is simply eight pounds of our roast beef. We are as unreal as any astronomical appearance—sunrise, or the starry march of the constellations; no more what we seem than the great golden moon coming up out of a cleft of fire to poise one breathless instant on a sapphire sea. . . . Still, it is conceded that we are people of some distinction, because papa spent all mamma's money ten or twelve years ago, and because, if you substitute "ulph" for "le," the final "le" of our name, it becomes the same as that of a great English family dating from the Crusades, as it is spelled on their tombstones.

The town itself, with its "average standard of commonplace and inefficient action," its chronic suspicion of originality, its men divided into "derby wearers, taxpayers, voters," its petty aristocracy, its social Sahara, its gossips, its cliques, its denominational frictions, is admirably depicted.

Very clever, too, is the conception of Raya Yog with his difficulties concerning the distinctions between the Church of Christ and the Christian Church; and there is a capital description of the author of the operetta:

There was something in her very appearance different from others—an outward show, no doubt, of what was within (I mean her peculiar and original thinking), that imposed upon strangers as an air of distinction. They attributed it to a fine estate, an uncle in the Senate, or a grandfather, at least. And of course, when it was discovered that she was the mere nobody that she is, people resented their involuntary deference.

Concerning the comparative science of circles this book has a good deal of useful information:

There are, of course, circles and circles. In some it is thought desirable to give off impressions from certain books, and these are called "ideas." And the going over of these books and their contents constitutes a literary conversation or a literary person—just as the naming of tools in a chest would make a man a carpenter, and the handling and cataloguing of models and marble would constitute him a sculptor. In the Debatable Circle the talk was not of books, but of the relative weight of babies and virtues of sewing machines, the only correct recipe for certain preserves and confections, and the one infallible method of dealing with that arch-enemy of the human race, that incarnation of original sin, the servant girl. This constitutes housewifery, as the talking of books, culture.

Just what the operetta was and the parts played in it by the Portrait of Washington, the Ideal Young Man, the Three Presbyterian Burglars, the Girl who made the Diagram, and Mary McGinnis's Green Gown, we cannot undertake to reveal. Perhaps it is enough to say that the operetta as sketched would make a highly successful performance, and that every reader who gets interested in the narrative will keep on and find out how it all ends.

A PRINCESS OF JAVA.*

HERE is indeed an escape from the depressing influences of contemporaneous realism! Here are romance, passion, elemental traits of character; strange, luxurious surroundings; stately, picturesque manners; wild, magnificent scenery; the incomparable, fascinating, delusive flavor of the Orient—all transmitted to Western minds with graceful, unpretentious art. A Princess of Java is a novel well worth reading. It holds a spell within its covers to which one is glad to yield. It takes one out of the work-a-day atmosphere and yet keeps true to the qualities of universal humanity. Like a magic token it conjures up unknown and bewildering visions, and still blends the familiar with the unfamiliar till we confess that all is not a dream.

After the manner of any ordinary English or American tourist we are landed at the unnamed port on the Indian Ocean, and make our way through immense plantations and colossal forests up the steep slope of the Teng'gers to the kampong of Kali Chandi. There in his wide-spreading palace dwells the Bopati, or provincial governor, and we are just in time to be present at the christening of the little princess, Mattah-Djarri, the compound name being an ingenious device for winning the hearts of two rival grandmothers. The princess, carefully attended, grows up to womanhood, and then the romance begins. It is a double romance. The princess is by her father's decree betrothed to the ugly old Tumung'gung of Narawadi, and awaits her rescuer. Her beautiful cousin, Josephine Bardwell, the daughter of an aunt who had eloped with an English resident, is, in spite of paternal wishes, in love with the handsome, chivalrous patch, Serajio, who, with his intimate friend Edward Tracy, is visiting at the palace of the bopati. Family persecution on either side drives the two young women to desperation; and while the patch and his comrade are away on a mountain expedition, the princess and her cousin, accompanied by a faithful companion, make their escape from the kampong and seek refuge as pilgrims at the ruined temples near the Guwa Upas, the field of death. Their midnight journey through the beast-haunted forest, the pursuit of the Tumung'gung's spy, the arrival of the patch and Tracy and the not unforeseen conclusion are each in turn related with admirable verisimilitude.

It is assuredly a triumph of romantic love here recorded, and the story of A Princess of Java may be regarded as an important exposition of Mr. Finck's recently divulged philosophical theories. We have a lingering suspicion that life in Java is not altogether as poetical, luxurious, and entrancing, as Mrs. Higginson represents it to be, but we thank the author for giving us a thoroughly readable and entirely original story. Her style is clear and simple, only now and then tripping in syntax, as when we read that "Wagari insisted upon them both going back," or that "the whereabouts of Boorah troubled them no little." The use of Malay colloquialisms is perhaps too frequent; at any rate a glossary would be serviceable. The cover, not in general design but in detail, is, we have no hesitation in saying, unpardonably ugly.

TOLSTOI'S WHAT TO DO?*

THE contents of this book are five articles, in which Count Tolstoi applies his interpretation of the teachings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, first, to the actual problems of vice and poverty as presented in the slums of Moscow, and, second, to certain questions of economic and social science. They are by no means abstract discussions, but are copiously embellished with views from real life which display the author's

* An Operetta in Profile. By Czeika. Ticknor & Co. $1.00.

* A Princess of Java. A Tale of the Far East. By S. J. Higginson. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

* What To Do? By Count Lyof N. Tolstoi. Tr. from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.

marvelous power of description as effectively as anything he has written. His account of things seen and heard among the outcasts of Moscow is startling with vivid realities. And whatever judgment we may form of his political philosophy, there can be no unfavorable criticism of his spirit. We believe we shall best serve the needs of our readers as respects this collection of papers by giving a brief abstract of each in turn.

Article 1. "On the Census in Moscow." [1882.] 14 pp. A census differs from all other scientific processes in that it is a sociological investigation whose object is the happiness of the people. Eighty energetic men, with two thousand assistants under their orders, are to investigate the social condition of Moscow. Now let us understand, says the author, that the object of this step is the improvement of human life. The revolutionists maintain that inequality in the division of wealth is the root of all evil; the conservatives find that root in the decline of moral principle. Wherever the trouble lies, let us secure in addition to the mechanism of the census an affectionate interest on the part of the idle and cultivated rich towards the oppressed and unenlightened poor. It is of more moment to relieve actual and pressing need than to make all possible scientific investigations. Let not the census be resisted by those who are to be included in it, and when it has lifted the curtain on social misery let us who are looking on address ourselves to lessen the evils of separation between the rich and the poor, and to cure the indifference and carelessness of our own lives. What is wanted is not great public subscriptions of money for the poor, but doing good to them by personal contact. Money is an evil; good is to come by our entering into humane relations with the needy, by detaching ourselves for the time being from the conditions of our own life, by not being afraid of dirt or contagion. Self-sacrificing action is what is needed. When the census has elicited the facts, let the inhabitants of Moscow who are willing to help in this spirit organize into sections and go to work. All evil may not be exterminated in this way, but we shall have learned what the evil is, and sympathy will be touched.

Article 2. "Thoughts Evolved by the Census of Moscow." [1884-1885.] 154 pp. (Prefaced by 14 verses from the Gospels, chiefly from the Sermon on the Mount.) When the author was in Moscow in 1881, he tells us, he was painfully impressed with the number and pitifulness of the street beggars. Somebody said: "Why don't you go to the Khitroff market place and see the lodging houses there?" One wintry day he went. The mercury was 8° below zero (Réaumur). He joined himself to the half-clad hungry men who were hanging around the door of the lodging house, heard their melancholy stories of want, treated them to a hot drink of sbiten (honey, water, and laurel leaves), and then went back to his own comfortable house to dine on five courses, and to reflect on his luxury and their misery. Imparting his reflections to a friend, he was told that he was visionary and impractical; nevertheless out of his impressions of the lodging house he evolved substantially the benevolent scheme outlined in the previous article on the census. Afterwards he propounded the same plan at a gay evening party, where it was coolly received, except as regarded offers of the money which he did not want. Then he laid his plan before the officers of the census, of whom he was one, who applauded politely the kindness of the idea, but doubted if it could be made to work. He determined then to experiment with it himself, and began with the Rhanoff houses, or "Rhanoff fortress," as the precinct was called, one of the worst haunts of poverty and vice in Moscow. More studies follow of wretched interiors and their occupants, as graphic to the eye as so many photographs. We are in the depths of the degradation of Moscow, studying the wretchedness of perhaps a hundred thousand people. Drunken men and dissolute women abound. One of the last named is roughly addressed by a census taker. "It is not our place to abuse her," said Tolstói; "if all of us lived according to the laws of God there would be none of these women." He conversed kindly with one and another of these miserable creatures, elicited their histories, proposed reform. Especially was he interested in the children, the sad cases of a number of whom are related in full. The more he saw the more he was horrified, and the more he says he felt guilty of it all. The problem grew big and the difficulty of solving it greater than ever. He found that giving money would not do: what would? He set himself to thinking. He feared he was standing in the same swamp out of which he was trying to lift others. He saw how cities were congregations of the rich, collected for selfish gratification, and how the poor were drawn thither to profit by the rich. From this he passed to the separations between the poor and the rich, and to the impossibility of the rich really and wisely helping the poor because of these separations, and so came to the conclusion that really to help the poor the rich must destroy this wall of separation. To make the poor no longer poor we must not produce poor people. And therefore it seemed to him that in the possession of money there must be something immoral. There follows here a chapter on the economic and moral nature of wealth, the conclusion of which is that as money exempts us from the law of personal labor for the satisfaction of our wants, therefore the possession of it is wrong. Of this view confirmation is sought in the teachings of the Saviour.

Article 3. "On the Significance of Science and Art." 83 pp. Division of labor, the author holds, has been carried to an extreme and has resulted in abuse. Science and art in particular have arrogated the rights of idleness. It is true they have ministered in a way to human progress, but they have loaded down the poor. Because of this it was that Tolstói determined to abandon the strictly literary and intellectual life and undertake manual work. He therefore divides his day into four parts: one for hard manual labor, one for intellectual labor, one for artisan labor, one for intercourse with people. Thus he tries to harmonize his social relations and his individual obligations. Only when a man works all parts of himself is he truly a man. The economic sense of the "division of labor" is a fallacy; the division of labor should be personal, individual, every man should divide his own labor, and the intellectual life should be blended with the physical.

Article 4. "On Labor and Luxury." 14 pp. The wretchedness of human life grows out of the inconsistency of that life with conscience, and the reconciliations of the fearful contradictions under which we are living would be the grandest deed a man could do. But one piece of property exists for any man, and that is himself, and the man who tills the soil and makes shoes instead of smoking cigarettes and playing whist will show that the imaginary property for which men suffer is not necessary to happiness. Once a great popular delusion justified serfdom; the delusion which now justifies the power of money over men is also crumbling. Women have much to do with dissipating this delusion.

Article 5. "To Women." 9 pp. As the Biblical law for man is labor, so the Biblical law for woman is child-bearing, and the departure from either law entails penalty. From the twofold evasion springs "woman's rights," so called, which can only be woman's demand to share in the fictitious labors of the rich. Woman's highest function is maternity, and in the right discharge of that function she is the truest benefactor of society.

Such is an outline of the views advanced in these 273 pages. They will not be new to readers of My Religion and My Confession. They are bold and original coming from the quarter that they do. That they are revolutionary is not to be denied, but we insist that they are revolutionary only as the Gospel was; radically reconstructive as they are, they are not anarchical, nor is the presentation of them the handiwork of a fool, a madman, or a fanatic. They are the calm, deep-seated, philanthropic convictions of a very genuine soul, mistaken though he be in some of the reasoning which obeys his sentiments.

Tolstói's ethical and religious spirit is carefully to be distinguished from his theories of political economy. In the latter he is at fault. His argument as to money is fallacious, and his idea that the effect of scientific progress has been injurious to the poor is contrary to statistics. On the other hand his demand for a closer study of the condition of the poor is wholly reasonable, and his appeal for personal and sympathetic intercourse on the part of the rich with the poor is irresistible. In other words the scientific element in this book is not sound, but the religious temper of it is always admirable. We repeat that if Tolstoy is a "crank," he is a crank that "turns the right way," and that "it will be a blessed day for human society when some of his theories of life and conduct are adopted."

THE ANCIENT CITIES OF THE NEW WORLD.*

THIS is an imposing work on an interesting subject. The field is southeastern Mexico, and especially the province of Yucatan. The more than five hundred large octavo pages of the volume, and its more than two hundred wood engravings, add considerably to the materials for study of the ruined cities of that land. With the character of those ruins the researches of the late John L. Stephens in particular have familiarized us to some extent. The undertaking is not a new one. M. Charnay, directed by the French Minister of Public Instruction and supported by the munificence of Mr. Peter Lorillard, has gone over the ground anew and described it afresh, the many visible fruits of his explorations having been conveyed to the museums of New York and Paris. Of the thoroughly scientific quality of the work one cannot feel quite sure; but it presents much archaeological information, and this is backed by descriptions of the country and people; so that the reader may accompany the author with a good degree of pleasure. M. Charnay loses somewhat at the hands of his translators, and at the best he suffers by comparison with such an accomplished investigator, for example, as Mr. Jackson, the English architect, whom we have lately followed to the eastern shores of the Adriatic. The author of a work like this, furthermore, does not gain in public estimation by allowing to be inserted in it a portrait of himself. In following M. Charnay we are, therefore, a little on our guard; we should wish to examine some of his "finds" before assenting to his valuation of them, and to consider some of his conclusions before accepting them. Meanwhile we recognize his spirit, energy, and labor, and thank him for taking us in imagination where we should not care to go in person, and for bringing out into a strong light a great mass of curious structures and objects belonging to an ancient civilization. We may say here as well as anywhere that M. Charnay inclines to a comparatively modern rather than a very early date for these ruins in Mexico and Yucatan, and connects them generally with the Toltec age, say of the 12th century, A.D.

Of the ruined cities, those which in particular receive M. Charnay's attention are Tula, Teotihuacan, Comalcalco, Palenque, Aké, Izamal, Chichen-Itza, Kabah, and Uxmal; the first two in the vicinity of the City of Mexico, the others in Yucatan. A number of minor ruins are visited and described; there is an account of a partial ascent of Popocatepetl; and the modern cities of Mexico, and of Campeachy and Merida, are the subjects of entertaining chapters. The ascent of Popocatepetl M. Charnay describes as easy and delightful.

The air is crisp, the sun, though hot, is bearable, and when, after three hours' march, we reach the high mountain ridge, we pause to admire in silence the finest panorama in the world: the two great volcanoes to our right and left, the plain of Puebla on our rear, whilst before us stretches the marvelous plain of Mexico, every detail of which is distinctly visible in this clear atmosphere.

High up on these slopes are two ancient cemeteries, whose tombs yielded many curious examples of the potter's art, beads and other ornaments, and toys, not to speak of some human remains.

The ruined city of Tula was the Toltec capital. Here were found fragments of gigantic caryatides, massive columns, carved shells, ruins of dwellings, park inclosures, and a palace. At Teotihuacan are pyramidal mounds, which had connection with religious rites, and also interesting remains of royal and private residences, terra cotta masks, and votive stones. The ruins at Comalcalco, near the borders of Yucatan, are extensive, and abound in pyramidal formations, narrow pointed vaults, bricks, fragments of walls and towers. At Palenque, a little to the southeast, are ruins of a vast palace, with elaborate ornamentations of statues and medallions, and a great deal of carved work. Much of this ornament is rudely artistic, but the fantastic and the monstrous is by no means wanting. Palenque was a holy city, an important religious center; temples and tombs are numerous. The life of the explorer is not an easy one:

At night the walls, which are covered with greenish moss, trickle down on our weary heads and awake us out of our sleep; in the day time we are a prey to swarms of insects, rodadores, mosquitos, and garrapatas.

At Aké and Izamal, which, like Kabah and Uxmal, are well out on the Yucatan peninsula, an interesting feature is the cenotes, or natural reservoirs, utilized for the storage of water. Aké furnishes a collection of pyramidal mounds composed of cyclopean blocks, with ruined galleries, arches, and bas-reliefs of cement. At Izamal is a pyramid with a colossal human head in relief at one base, and a crouching tiger with a human head in similar relief at the other, rudely suggestive, one might say, of Thorwaldsen's celebrated sculpture at Lucerne. Chichen-Itza is remarkable for an immense pyramidal mound, with the ruins of a castellated edifice on its summit, approached by a flight of ninety steps. There is also here all that is left of a tennis court, and an important nuns' palace. Some of these structures are elaborate with cornices, friezes, entablatures, porticoes, and pillars. The serpent biting his own tail is a favorite design. Many of the human figures have a resemblance to Egyptian types. Very striking is this resemblance in the case of the door-post reliefs depicted on p. 345, and in the examples immediately following. The temptation to identify these objects with Egyptian and Chaldean forms is strong. The ruins of Kabah and Uxmal equal in their rough grandeur and impressiveness any that have been encountered in this survey, and are somewhat more advanced in style.

We have by no means completed the circuit of M. Charnay's explorations, but we have touched at the important points, and given a just idea of the scope and character of his book. The proportion of history mixed with its descriptions, and the slight flavor of personal adventure, make it generally readable, and the engravings decidedly reinforce the narrative. Granted that these remains do not take us back more than seven or eight hundred years, as the author is disposed to think, that is far enough to place us in the midst of a life which is almost pre-historic, and which, while yielding many materials for safe and legitimate generalization, leaves the fancy a good deal of room in which to roam.

The volume is provided with a map of Mexico which is not well proportioned to that part of it under view, and has a full table of contents and a list of illustrations, but no index.

SHAKESPEARE'S CONFESSION.*

THIS little quarto pamphlet, or tract, of only twenty pages proposes a new element of sensationalism in the present revived discussion of the Baconian authorship of Shakespeare's Plays. It may be described as an avant-courrière of Mr. Ignatius Donnelly's eagerly expected book; a stroke with his weapon in a new and entirely unlooked for direction. At a first glance one might think that Mr. Browne's essay was a burlesque, something like a letter which appeared in the New York Tribune of last week upon the question, "Did John Smith write Longfellow's Poems?" But one does not read far without discovering that the author means to be very serious and would have his readers believe that he has discovered a most startling piece of evidence, which, if accepted, must establish the Baconian theory beyond a question. This startling piece of evidence is nothing less than the alleged fact that the well-known epitaph on Shakespeare's tomb at Stratford contains a hidden sentence, which, when disclosed by a cryptogram, reads as follows :

*The Ancient Cities of the New World. By Désiré Charnay. Tr. by J. Gonino and Helen S. Conant. Harper & Brothers.

*Is it Shakespeare's Confession? By Hubert Janvrin Browne. Washington, D. C.: A. S. Witherbee & Co.

FRANCIS BACON WROTE SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS SHAXPEARE.

The epitaph, the authorship of which has never been known with absolute certainty, though generally ascribed to Shakespeare himself, and of which Mr. Browne gives a fac-simile photolithographed from a lamp-black transfer made directly from the stone by Professor Elliott Coues in 1884, is in these words :

GOOD FREND FOR IESVS SAKE FORBEARE TO DIGG THE DVST ENCLOSED HEARE:
BLESE BE YE MAN YT SPARES THES STONES
AND CVRST BE HE YT MOVES MY BONES.

In the original inscription the T and H in "THE" in line 2d, the S and E in "BLESE" in line 3d, and the T and H in "THES" in line 3d are run together monogram-like, the S and E in "BLESE" in such a way as to leave it uncertain whether the stone-cutter did not intend to insert a T between the S and the E. Mr. Browne thinks he did. The running together of these letters it is impossible to indicate in type.

After describing the epitaph and discussing the theories of its history, Mr. Browne proceeds to explain briefly the laws and principles of cryptography or cipher-writing, and then enters in detail upon his exposition of the cryptographic sentence which he professes to have found in this epitaph, a sentence, which if established, would produce the most extraordinary literary sensation of the century, if not of all time. Mr. Browne describes his discovery minutely and illustrates it with cryptographic tables. We must say that the description is not so clear to one who reads it as its author might be able to make it by personal explanation, and while the reader will perhaps be mystified by its ingenuity and astounded by the thought of any such thing as the possible truth of the revelation claimed for it, he will probably erect a barrier out of his incredulity until Mr. Browne makes his process plainer, or until some cleverer critic than the average sees through the sober-faced hoax. At any rate, for the time being it will answer the purpose of a good puzzle, and we commend it to our readers as an amusing trifle or a momentous discovery just as they choose to consider it.

—Lord Lytton's After Paradise, according to the Athenæum, is a book of parables and symbols. His dealings are mainly with another world than this; but his speech is fluent, if his aims are mysterious, and his verses, while difficult to remember, are quite easy to read. To those who know him only as the poet of duchesses, the heir of Byron, the continuator of Musset, the understudy of Heinrich Heine, it will be something of a surprise to find him wandering, as to the manner born, in

The starry wilderness of thought,
Where naught is everything, and everything is naught.

But the effect is by no means unpleasant; and if any have listened with interest to his remarks concerning Glenaveril and the Lady Lucile, and the Raphael-faced young priest, they will certainly consider with attention what he has to say of Adam and Eve, Prometheus, the Elephant, the Serpent, Aphrodite, and the Ass. They will find as much matter for reflection as heretofore, though the company to which they are introduced is less select, and the author's purpose more Miltonic and less "distinctly naughty" than of old.

MINOR NOTICES.

Miss Brown on the Norse Discoverers of America.

The Norse Discoverers of America. By Marie A. Brown. [London: Published by the Author.] One of the fascinating episodes in history is here made only an occasion of displaying the writer's intense personal feeling against Christianity in general and the Roman Catholic Church in particular. Instead of relating in due detail the romantic story of the voyages of Bjarni Herjulfson, A. D. 982, and Leif Eriksson, 985, in which, according to an old Icelandic manuscript record, the North American continent was discovered and even a strip of its coast colonized, the author gives these facts, in a brief and disconnected way, merely as a text for a vehement denunciation of the authorities of the Roman Church and of Christopher Columbus as their subservient tool, for concealing the facts that knowledge of the discovery from Iceland had reached Rome centuries before Columbus's day, and that he had personal knowledge of the discovery from having seen the record when in Iceland; this concealment and the subsequent unjustifiable claim that the Genoese navigator was the original European discoverer being designed to secure the dominion of the church in the western hemisphere. The Norsemen are proportionately extolled for their bravery and love of free institutions, and even their heathen religion, before their conversion, was, in the writer's opinion, better than Christianity. The objective point of the author's argument is to dissuade the people of the United States from taking official part in the proposed four hundredth anniversary of Columbus's discovery of 1492; which official action would in her opinion be in some way a full admission of all the claims of dominion in the new world put forth by the Church of Rome.

Dr. Walker's Health Lessons.

Health Lessons. By Jerome Walker, M.D. Illustrated. [D. Appleton & Co.]

An admirable little text-book this, for young beginners, from its remarkable simplicity and directness of language, largely due, doubtless, to the author's long experience in lecturing in schools, showing constantly a marked preference for familiar Saxon words over those from Latin or Greek, and avoiding all except strictly necessary use of technical terms; abounding also in illustrative references to matters of every-day life familiar to children. Of the sixteen chapters or "lessons" on the subjects usual in school physiologies, the key note to the whole treatment may be found in a statement in the introductory talk to teachers:

Anatomy is proverbially a dry subject and hard to be remembered even by adults, and surely only enough should be taught [to young children] to prepare the way for physiology, which is of greater interest, and even this should be subordinate to the study of hygiene, . . . which is the main object of our present instruction.

Only a part of the engravings show the construction of internal bodily organs, and of these some are so drawn as to insure the easy understanding of the organs' working rather than precise representation of their actual appearance. In meeting the important modern demand for school instruction in the evil effects of alcoholic drinks the author is clear and explicit, introducing such teaching in considering the various organs affected; yet he follows his own wise advice to the teachers never to ride hobbies, and to remember that in the present state of medical knowledge it is necessary for a strictly honest teacher to modify sweeping general statements by such qualifications as the phrases generally, as a rule, and the like, according to the counsel of a celebrated medical lecturer "to generalize the disease but to individualize the patient." The concluding lesson is on the immediate treatment of accidents, injuries, and poisons — when it is often necessary to "send for a physician but not wait for him;" and this is followed by a brief index.

Court Life in Egypt.

Court Life in Egypt. By Alfred J. Butler. [London: Chapman & Hall. New York: Scribner & Welford.]

Miss Amelia B. Edwards, whose name we have missed this long time, writes in the Academy interestingly and alluringly of a book on Court Life in Egypt, by Mr. A. J. Butler, which she says is not exactly a book for family reading, and gives the impression of having been hastily written, but which "contains much curious matter" and is "decidedly amusing." The author went out to Egypt in 1880 as private tutor to the sons of the Khedive, and though he resigned his post in about a year for reasons not stated, he "saw and learned much." He tells a great many extraordinary stories, and some astounding ones, of the luxury of ministers and the cruelty of pashas; and of the present Khedive, Tewfik, gives this pleasant picture:

The Khedive lives with his wife and family at the palace of Ismailia, near the Nile bridge. He is a strict monogamist, loyal in his married life as any European, and detests slavery as much as polygamy. All his attendants are paid servants. He rises at four or five o'clock every morning, eats no breakfast, but takes two hours' exercise, walking or driving, and between seven and eight o'clock drives in state to 'Abdin Palace, which is the usual place of reception and ceremonial. Here the Khedive spends the day transacting various business, seeing ministers, reading letters and telegrams, and talking with his courtiers. At five o'clock in the evening he drives out again, accompanied by his guards, and dines about sunset at Ismailia.

Since preparing the above paragraph the book has come to hand, by courtesy of Scribner & Welford, and we find it to be all that Miss Edwards has said of it. It certainly furnishes most vivid pictures of Egyptian life and manners, some of them highly entertaining, some of them, that of the Dôshah, for example, simply horrible. The Dôshah is a "religious" function in which devoted dervishes lie down on the ground and a horse is driven over their bodies. Mr. Butler's most difficult allusions are veiled from "the general reader" in Latin notes, an original and novel device. He is plain spoken throughout, and we should not think he would care to return to Egypt after telling these "tales out of school."

THE VINE OUT OF EGYPT.

The Vine Out of Egypt. By the Rev. Wm. Wilberforce Newton. [Thomas Whittaker. Paper, 50c.]

The writer of this notice of Mr. Newton's book feels it to be proper, under the circumstances, to lay aside editorial impersonality and say what he has to say over his own name. Mr. Newton is the minister of St. Stephen's Church, Pittsfield, Mass., and a brother of the Rev. Heber Newton of New York, but a more conservative Churchman than the latter. By "the Vine out of Egypt" he means the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and the ultimate point of his book is a protest against the proposed change of its name.

It is well known to all who watch religious movements in this country that there is a party in the Episcopal Church, not so large as it is aggressive, bent on "catholicizing" the Church by unprotestantizing it in character and name, so as to bring it into somewhat of an alignment with the Church of Rome in certain matters of doctrine, ritual, and usage. This movement has its center and strength in the Interior, though felt more or less at both the East and West. Resistance to this movement is the purpose of Mr. Newton's book, though that purpose is explicitly stated only in the closing chapter. In the chapters immediately preceding he sets forth at some length recommendations of certain practical methods in behalf of church unity, or what he calls "the United Churches of the United States," the basis of which is substantially the famous "Memorial" presented some years since by the Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg to the House of Bishops, of which nothing visible ever came, unless the Declaration on Church Unity made by that body at its last General Convention is some such logical result.

Mr. Newton's recommendations are catholic in the true sense of that word, simple and practical, and deserve consideration. Among the points that he makes are these: that unity is something different from union; that the unity called for today is not unity of dogma, nor unity of sentiment, but unity of effort for definite ethical ends; that the sect idea in American Christianity is running out; that church federation is the ideal to be realized; and that lines of reconstruction cannot be formulated in advance by theory, but must be evolved naturally out of the facts as they exist. More particularly Mr. Newton would do away with the "Evangelical Alliance," which he considers a "fictitious" form of unity; he calls upon all denominations of Christians to fall into line as respects the observance of the Christian year; he urges a concentration of all special religious efforts within the Forty Days of Lent; and he proposes an inter-ecclesiastical Church Congress, the experiment of which has already been tried, as a permanent factor.

This is a broad platform of definite proposal. It opens a wide and exhilarating prospect, which all of us should be interested to study. Nobody who calls himself by the name of Christian can plead indifference to it, whether he care to stay with Mr. Newton on the summit or not.

The steps by which Mr. Newton reaches his position are historical, and are no less interesting. With the Episcopal Church in this country, it will be remembered, Mr. Newton is especially concerned. He traces three agents in its development. The first is the Evangelical party, which it is the fashion to speak of now as "old" or "dead," whose marks are defined as the voluntary principle in worship and in giving, and the supremacy of canonical over personal authority in the episcopate. Second, the High Church position, whose affirmation is the value of ecclesiastical over theological uniformity and of objective sacraments over subjective emotions. Third, the Broad Church school, to which, the author thinks, "belong the present and the future."

These three parties or schools in the Church which Mr. Newton represents are of common recognition, though the present writer would characterize them in somewhat different language, and to the claim expressed for the Broad Church school he could not wholly assent. The Evangelical movement, he would rather say, stands for the simple doctrines of the primitive Gospel; the High Church party for institutionalism in Christianity; the Broad Church school for a true and proper rationalism in religion. The "present and the future," so far as the Episcopal Church's share of it in this country is concerned, belongs, we are inclined to think, more to an eclectic or comprehensive Churchmanship than to any one of these particular schools. This really is the Churchmanship of the Book of Common Prayer, combining the early faith in its early fervor, a reverent and sober respect for tradition and institutions, and the progressive spirit of a rational humanitarianism, into one orderly and sympathetic system, diverse but harmonious in its parts, and always true to itself while flexible towards others.

Of the Broad Church school in his church Mr. Newton gives an interesting sketch, beginning with Bishop Alonzo Potter of Philadelphia, whom he places at its head, reviewing in turn Dr. Muhlenberg its poet soul, Dr. Washburn its philosopher, and Dr. John Cotton Smith its statesman, and ending with Phillips Brooks its preacher.

So far as the underlying purpose of Mr. Newton's book is concerned, we thank him, as will many other readers, for his manly and dignified but earnest protest against the unwise and perilous movement now on foot to "catholicize" the Episcopal Church in the name of "catholicity." If a change of name is imperative, why would not "American Episcopal Church," as he incidentally suggests, be all that is needed? That designation would drop a word from the present title which is obnoxious to some, would exclude a word proposed which is obnoxious to others, would introduce a new word which all desire, and would save an old word which is historically fundamental. The "American Episcopal Church" is what it is.

We thank Mr. Newton further for his broad-minded and warm-hearted plea in behalf of a true confederation among American Christians of different names and lineage, to be manifested as far as is consistent in visible terms. Such a confederation in behalf of common interests and against common foes could certainly be effected without compromise of principle by those whose religion is based on principle. Anglicanism is good for England, and Romanism may be good for Rome, as Mediævalism doubtless was good for the Middle Ages; but neither Mediævalism, Romanism, nor Anglicanism can furnish the true vital power for American Christianity, which must be the genuine Tree of God, grown out of the native soil.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

Cambridge, Mass.

— From a circular issued by the Dante Society we learn that the Concordance of the Divina Commedia, which has been mentioned in recent annual reports as in course of preparation by Professor Edward Allen Fay, Ph.D., of the National Deaf-Mute College, Washington, D. C., is now completed and will be printed as rapidly as possible. The text followed in the Concordance is Witte's (Berlin, 1862), with the addition of such words of the edition of Niccolini, Capponi, Borghi, and Becchi (Florence, 1837) as differ from Witte's. Foot-notes in italics give the words of Witte's text when the Concordance follows the other, and foot-notes in Roman type introduce variants from various critical texts. The context and references are given for all the words of the Divina Commedia except the shorter and commoner pronouns, prepositions, adverbs, and conjunctions, and the more frequently recurring forms of the verbs avere and essere. All these words and forms, however, are inserted in their proper place in the alphabetical index, so that the work, in addition to the usual features of a concordance, will present a complete list of the words and word-forms of the Divina Commedia. Words or forms more or less unusual used by Dante (according to the best texts) only in the verse-ending are marked with an asterisk; and words used, so far as the author is aware, only by Dante are marked with an obelisk. Great pains have been taken to attain accuracy in the preparation of the manuscript, and the same care will be given to the work of printing. The subscription price is $10.00 per copy. The Concordance will make an octavo of between eight and nine hundred pages.

— The Spectator devotes two pages (an uncommonly generous allotment of space) to a novel in a new edition, by Ralph Ivan (Olive Schreiner) entitled The Story of an African Farm, which it calls a "very remarkable book." It is an "agnostic" novel, it seems, full of the pessimistic philosophy of life, but actuated by a hunger and thirst after righteousness and love. The book has been called "immoral" and "blasphemous," but the Spectator says it is not that; such language is "the exaggeration of prejudice." "No bad woman" could have written it, and "it contains no suggestion of evil."

The local coloring of the story is extremely vivid, and clearly bears the impress of painful personal experience. The scene is laid on a lonely farm in South Africa, and man and nature are alike painted in unattractive and depressing guise. The tendency of ordinary mountain scenery is to raise the spirits, to quicken the imagination, to inspire hope, to point to heaven. The mountains of South Africa, on the other hand, have a depressing influence. They have none of the mystery, the sublimity, the poetry, the aspiration of ordinary mountains. They have no peaks. Their gross bulk, and flat tops, and brown sides, are altogether of the earth, and seem to repel and to forbid man's yearning for something beyond the visible and temporal. And the vast plains consist of coarse grass and low scrub, lacking alike the grandeur of the desert and the forest loneliness of the equatorial regions of the Dark Continent. The farm which gives its name to the story is a Boer homestead, and the Boer of South Africa is a singularly unattractive being. Labor, too, is there presented in its hardest, lowest, most unimaginative form.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 1, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

COLORED CHILDREN IN BOSTON SCHOOLS.

THE copy of the Richmond Despatch of September 7, containing the article reprinted below, reached us only just as our last issue was going to press:

The Cat and the Mouse.

A gentleman writes us that having for years traveled from Bangor, Maine, to Denver, Colorado, and having lived in Boston for twelve months, he is confident that the Chicago News is mistaken when it says that in the North negroes are not welcomed into the public schools. He declares that they are welcomed into those schools; and that "whenever the courts have been called on to interfere they sustain the right of the colored children." Our correspondent lets the cat out of the bag when he uses the words we have italicized. Why should the courts ever be called on to interfere with the management of the Boston public schools or any other northern public schools? They would not be if negro children were welcomed into them. Our correspondent will admit, if he will only ponder the matter awhile, that our Chicago contemporary was exceedingly guarded in its language. It used the word "welcomed" because it well knew that under the laws in force in the northern States negro children are received into the same public schools with white children. But they are received not as white children are received—with a "welcome"—but with a suppressed feeling of regret that the law should require them to perform a task so unpleasant. Our correspondent tells us that the Boston Literary World declares that "the best civilization of the age has agreed to do away with race prejudice." That is easily said. But the declaration is not true. So long as there shall continue to be in Massachusetts, as there were in 1880, about one hundred whites to every negro, there can no occasion arise for indulgence in race prejudices. Uncle Toby said to the fly, "The world is wide enough for thee and me;" and the Massachusetts negro meets with the same sort of treatment. He is tolerated because he is alone. "Go," said Uncle Toby. "Keep out of my way," says the Massachusetts man to the negro. "Stay in Virginia. Don't come to Massachusetts." "The best civilization of the age" in Boston may have agreed to "do away with race prejudice," but the agreement would soon cease to be respected if the population of Boston should by any chance ever become anything like equally divided between the two races. The fair maiden in the fable who had been a cat before her transformation immediately resumed her original form when a mouse appeared in her presence. She found herself forthwith a cat again, claws and all. So these Bostonians, who have been transformed into angels of light, destitute of the prejudices which God has implanted in the bosoms of all other persons on the globe, would soon be restored by the presence of a large number of negroes amongst them to their normal condition, "claws and all."

As the Literary World is alluded to in this article we have referred its allegations to three witnesses whose testimony as to the facts in question will be accepted, we presume, as competent and sufficient. The three are the Superintendents of Public Schools of Boston, and of the chief suburban towns of Cambridge and Brookline; and having submitted the article to them, we print their replies in full:

To the Editor of the Literary World:

DEAR SIR: Since I have been acquainted with the Boston public schools—about twenty years—I have never known or heard of any trouble, friction, or unpleasantness arising from the presence of colored children in the school-rooms. In two of the school districts the colored children are numerous enough to attract attention; in the other fifty they are not at all numerous—only individuals scattered here and there. The children, colored and white, sit together, study, recite, play together, in short act in every way as if they were utterly unconscious of any differences of race or color. A generation or two ago there was, I believe, some unpleasantness among the adult citizens of different races; but the schools were not troubled. It was the parents, not the children, whose prejudices sometimes got aroused. Since the war at least we have heard little or nothing of the race prejudices amongst even the grown-up people.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN P. SEAVER,

Superintendent of Schools.

Boston, September 16, 1887.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

DEAR SIR: We have at present two colored pupils in our schools, and I have not known of more than two at any one time for the last eight years. So far as I am informed they have always been treated kindly and with respect by the other pupils.

Very truly yours,

D. H. DANIELS,

Superintendent of Schools.

Brookline, September 22, 1887.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

DEAR SIR: There are colored children in all the grades of the public schools of Cambridge, and their relation to the schools, in my opinion, is precisely the same as that of the other pupils. Neither their teachers nor their schoolmates look upon them as a separate class. No plan or arrangement is made either for the school-room or for the play ground which would indicate any difference in the feeling towards these children and the other members of the school.

For the past six years one of our primary classes has been under the instruction of a colored teacher; and during this time no parent has expressed to me, or to any member of the School Committee so far as I know, any dissatisfaction with the arrangement. This teacher is universally beloved by her pupils, and enjoys the respect and esteem both of the parents and her associate teachers.

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS COGSWELL.

Cambridge, September 22, 1887.

Perhaps the Richmond Despatch will publish the above letters, especially Mr. Seaver's and Mr. Cogswell's, which are full and explicit, and we have no doubt that abundant further testimony of the same sort could be had if desired.

—A collection of Pope MSS. was sold in London the other day at Sotheby's, and the prices obtained are thus enumerated in the Athenæum, odd shillings being omitted:

"The Essay on Man," 1736, with MS. notes and corrections in Pope's handwriting, brought 10*l.*; "The Dunciad," Dublin edition of 1728, large paper, filled with MS. notes and corrections by Pope from the first Broglie MS., 13*l.*;

"The Dunciad," another large-paper copy, with MS. corrections, copied from Pope's copy by Jonathan Richardson, Jr., 7*l.*; "The Dunciad," 1736, large paper, with numerous MS. notes and corrections from his second MS. by Pope himself, 8*l.*; "Sappho to Phaon," autograph MS., 17*l.*; "Essay on Criticism," autograph MS., 28*l.*; "Windsor Forest," autograph MS., wanting a few lines at end, 20*l.*; "Essay on Man," in four epistles, Epistles I to III autograph MS. of the poet, Epistle IV printed, with numerous MS. corrections by Pope, 50*l.*; "Epistle on Taste," autograph MS. of Pope, 25*l.*; "Ethic Epistles," I to III, autograph MS. of Pope, 20*l.*, with numerous alterations and corrections by himself; Epistle III to Lord Bathurst (the autograph MS. wanting eight lines at end; transcript of the same by Pope, with autograph corrections and alterations, and the printed edition of Epistles III to VII with MS. corrections and alterations by Pope himself), also Epistle II autograph MS. of Pope, 21*l.*

MR. DONNELLY'S BACONIAN CIPHER.

IN September, 1884, I visited St. Paul, Minnesota, on professional business, and had the pleasure of a call from Mr. Donnelly. He was kind enough to say that he had read my book, The Shakespearean Myth, and wanted to see me. The only fault he found with my book, he said, was that it was "on the fence"—left the question of the Shakespeare authorship open. "I shall prove the Baconian authorship beyond a doubt," he said, double-underscoring the last three words. I spent a Sunday with him at his country seat, and, at his request, examined his formula, and saw him apply it to a page of the Booth reprint of the 1623 edition (understanding from him that I was the first person outside of his own family to whom he had communicated his discovery).

Mr. Donnelly said to me, "I am not ready to demonstrate it: my work may take years yet. But I should not like to feel that somebody else was at work at it, who might get ahead of me. It seems so plain to me as I proceed that I should not like to have all my labor for nothing by being anticipated now."

I said to him, "Then file a caveat," meaning that he should announce the discovery and ask time to perfect his reading of the cipher before giving it to the world. He agreed with me and said, "Will you guarantee that I have found a cipher?" I said, "No. But I will cheerfully testify that on a certain day you claimed to have discovered one, which—as you state it to me—seems to me a wonderful thing."

Accordingly, the first public announcement was made in the Minneapolis Tribune of September 7, 1884, and I revised the manuscript of the article printed in that newspaper (in so far as it quoted me) before it went to press. I have no copy by me, but my memory is that I said that "Mr. Donnelly's 'cipher' was too wonderful for mere coincidence, and that it seemed to me no working of any known law of chance. At the same time that I wished to be understood as suspending judgment as to whether it was a 'cipher' written into the early texts of the plays or a cento worked out of the 1623 edition of them, in good faith, by Mr. Donnelly himself."

In the spring of 1886 I was working at the play of The Merry Wives of Windsor, paralleling the 1602 with the 1623 text for "the Bankside Edition" of Shakespeare which the New York Shakespeare Society publishes. I had always known that that play as printed in 1602 was only half as long as when it was printed in 1623, and been amazed at the wonderful immaturity of the 1602 as compared with the mature and refined wit and elaborate polish of the 1623. But, as I went over them both again, line by line, I saw that these changes could not be explained by the mere theory that the author had rewritten the play, but that the history of the years 1602-1612, the court records, the history of stage censorship under Elizabeth and James I, must be consulted. I wrote to ask Mr. Donnelly how he handled this particular play from his "cipher" standpoint. He answered me in a letter of 25 pages, which made such wonderful statements as to the story the cipher was revealing, that (with his permission) I circulated it, and finally sent it to London, where it was partially printed in the Nineteenth Century (London, May, 1886). This was the "Percy M. Wallace" article which opened the ball. Since then the newspapers and magazines have been full of it. I may remark, in passing, that during the circulation of this letter it was printed in full in three prominent American newspapers without attracting, as it seems, any attention. It was not until it got to England and into the Nineteenth Century that anybody remarked on its startling nature (and yet the Nineteenth Century did not print the whole of it, but only the extract about Percy's visit to Stratford and the dinner on over-ripe venison at Shakespeare's table), which seems to lead up to the suggestion that only by sending our literary news to England and getting it indorsed can we hope to enjoy it over here.

As to the merits of the cipher, I can only say what the rest of the world says, "important, if true." If the astute Bacon palmed off on the simple Shakespeare a set of ciphers, and the simple Shakespeare mounted them as plays; if, indeed, every time that Booth or Irving play Hamlet or Richard today (as did Burbage and Lowin then) they are saying to the audience: "Francis Bacon wrote this play and William Shakespeare was only the Baconian stage manager"—then Mr. Donnelly is entitled to all the advertisement he is securing on two continents; and although the world will not readily give up Shakespeare (and though it will hardly agree with Mr. Donnelly that he, Shakespeare, was a fraud, a rascal, a thief, etc., etc., even if the Donnelly cipher is proved), Mr. Donnelly will yet be entitled to the full glory of discovery. But I don't see how it can be true. For my part, I find it impossible, from what I know of the early printed texts of the Plays—from my study of the earliest quartos and the great First Folio of 1623 (when the plays were for the first time collected and paged); and from the mutations the plays underwent meanwhile, the interpolations of actors, the rough handling of the piratical printers of the Stationers' Company, and their careless compositors with broken and dirty fonts of type to set up from—especially from the ruthlessness of the royal stage censors (the Lord Chamberlain and his subordinate the Master of the Revels were held directly responsible by the throne for all stage plays)—I find it impossible, I say, in consideration of all this, to accept Mr. Donnelly's theory. I have so repeatedly told Mr. Donnelly, and he laughingly replies that he wouldn't have a moment's confidence in my sanity if I did believe it until it was revealed. But, all the same, he assures me that I will live to see the truth and believe. And I hope I will! APPLETON MORGAN.

New York, September 20.

TOLSTOI'S WRITINGS.

From the preface to the new edition of Mr. Schuyler's translation of Tolstoi's The Cossacks we take these titles of Tolstoi's principal writings, arranging them so far as possible in chronological order, though the dates are in some cases ambiguous, referring in one case to time of composition, in another to time of publication in Russia, and again to time of translation and republication in America. Even with its informality our readers may find it useful for reference.

A Landlord's Morning. (Fragment of an unfinished novel.)	1852
Childhood (1st part of Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth).	1852
The Incursion.	1852
Boyhood (2d part of Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth).	1854
Sebastopol (in the Russian Messenger).	1855
Wood-cutting.	1855
The Decembrists (a fragment of a few chapters only relating to the attempted revolution in December, 1825).	185-
Meeting a Moscow Acquaintance at the Front.	1856
Memoirs of a Billiard Marker.	1856
Two Hussars (tr. into French under title of Deux Générations).	1856
Youth (3d part of Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth).	1855-7
Albert.	1857
Luzerne.	1857
Three Deaths.	1859
Family Happiness (Katia).	1859
War and Peace.	1864-9
Polikushka.	1860
The Cossacks.	1861
Kholstomir (Story of a Horse).	1861
Anna Karénin (first appeared in Russian Messenger).	1875-8
By What People Live.	1881
In What is Happiness?	1882
My Religion.	1885
My Confession.	1885
The Power of Darkness.	1886
The Death of Ivan Ilyitch (republished here together with a number of short stories).	1886
What Then Can We Do? (What to Do?)	1886

Yasnaya Polyana (a little journal published by Tolstoi at his own expense). A complete file, presented by the author to Mr. Schuyler, is in the library of Cornell University.

World Biographies.

Edna Lyall. This English novelist, better known by this her pseudonym than by her real name of Ada Ellen Bayly, is exceedingly chary of those personal particulars which are always so interesting to a popular author's public. But we can tell our readers on the very highest authority that she was born and educated at Brighton, sometime during the present century, and that as her wish to write stories belongs with her childhood (ever since she was ten years old she has been trying to fit herself for her present work) and as her first published story, Won by Waiting, bears date of 1879, it is highly probable that her life falls wholly within the second half of the century. This tale of blended French and English coloring met with little success. Donovan, which followed it in 1882, though well received by the press, was at first a total failure, but after the fine success of We Too, which appeared in 1884, it suddenly sprang into favor. In 1885 followed In the Golden Days, an historical romance which we have just reviewed. The old Suffolk hall which is seen in this book is a verity, which belonged to relatives of the author, and with its surroundings is accurately described. Knight Errant, which was published in March last, and has not yet reached us, grew out of certain Italian tours. The author's latest is The Autobiography of a Slander.

PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Fall of 1887.

FOLLOWING our own good example of last year we proceed in the present place to enumerate, and to describe so far as we can do so without having the books themselves yet actually in hand, the works in press by the leading American publishers and to be issued during the next three months. A few of these announcements have already been made, but are repeated in order to give completeness to the review. Some of the advance couriers of the long, solid, and brilliant procession, indeed, are already here, and before these words fairly reach our distant readers more than a few of these announcements will have become accomplished facts. The more formal "review" of all these works will proceed in due order as the procession passes. We will only further add that no fall season for several years has found the guild of publishers in such good spirits as the present, and the autumn and winter trade in good literature promises to be largely in advance of that of 1886-7.

D. Appleton & Co.

One does not look to the Appletons for what are called "holiday books," but rather for solid and substantial works in science and philosophy. Their present announcements before us confirm this habit. "The Weather" is to be popularly expounded by the Hon. Ralph Abercromby; "Our Heredity from God," a chapter in evolution, by Rev. E. P. Powell; "Evolution and its Relation to Religious Thought," by Prof. Joseph Le Conte; "The Elements of Political Economy" by Prof. Laughlin of Harvard College; and "The Geological History of Plants" by Sir J. Wm. Dawson. "A History of the American Fossil Animals" has been written by Drs. Osborn and Scott of Princeton College; "A Guide to Southern California" by Dr. Windey and Walter Lindley; and a hand-book on "Good Form in England" by L. J. Ransom. "The Life and Letters of Darwin" by Francis Darwin, will be awaited with the greatest interest. To the "International Education" and "Scientific" series are to be added respectively Froebel's work on "The Education of Man" and Binet and Fere's "Animal Magnetism." The Appletons announce a single novel, "The Right Honorable," a composite work by Justin McCarthy and Mrs. Campbell Lee Praed; what we take to be a volume of sermons, "The Divine Man," by Rev. Dr. George Dana Boardman; and a new "Atlas of the United States," which we shall be very glad to see. Finally, what biography is concealed under the title of the Hon. Geo. S. Boutwell's work, "The Lawyer, the Statesman, and the Soldier"?

A. C. Armstrong & Son.

One new book about to proceed from the New York house of A. C. Armstrong, certain to attract wide attention, is by Prof. E. D. Morris of Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati, entitled "Is There Salvation After Death?" The author's answer to this question is No, and his standing ground is the Bible, historic Christianity, and a logical theology. Two other religious works of interest will be "Palestine in the Time of Christ," by Dr. Edmond Stapfer of the Protestant Theological Faculty of Paris, an important book, with maps and plans, and "Romanism and the Reformation," an elucidation of prophecy, by Rev. H. Grattan Guinness. In general literature we are to have Charles Lamb's "Collected Works" of the Rev. Alfred Ainger's editing, complete in 5 vols., and also Mr. Ainger's edition of "Lamb's Letters," in 2 vols., with a steel portrait hitherto unpublished. The firm's three juveniles, viz.: Mr. Tulloch's "Story of the Life of Queen Victoria," the "New Fairy Tales from Brentano," and Dr. Gordon Stables's sea story, "On Special Service," have all appeared, and will receive due attention from us later. For gift-books proper we are to have "Emmanuel," a daily text-book with pictures in color, and "As Time Glides On," an array of the months in picture and poem by G. T. Hutchinson, with several coöperating artists.

J. W. Bouton.

Mr. Bouton, who continues business at his old headquarters, 706 Broadway, New York, and thereto attracts book-lovers from all parts of the country by the fascinations of his rarities and curiosities, sends us the titles of four works which he will make a specialty of handling this fall. The first of these is a new (illustrated) edition of Dr. Doran's "Annals of the English Stage," revised by R. W. Lowe from the author's own annotated copy. The regular form is three vols. demy 8vo, with 50 copper-plate portraits and 80 wood engravings; but a limited number of copies have been printed on large paper, royal octavo, with plates in duplicate. The second work is by the same editor as the first, "A Bibliographical Account of English Theatrical Literature," with a similar large paper edition. The third is "A History of the Rosicrucians," by Arthur E. Waite, with symbolic and other illustrations. The fourth is an illustrated edition for 1887 of the now well-established and well-known "Paris Salon Catalogue," enriched in the present instance with a hundred colored photogravures after the Goupil process. The copies of this book will be numbered.

The Century Company.

The publishers of the Century are gradually enlarging their function from the conduct of a great magazine to include book production. It is a striking illustration of the changed perspective of periodicals and books, that book publication should spring as an offshoot from the side of a great magazine house. We observe no allusion to their new encyclopædic dictionary in the circulars of the Century Co., but it cannot be long now that we have to wait to see the first of this important work. The Company have in preparation a new Sunday-school hymn and tune book by Prof. Waldo S. Pratt, editor of the "St. Nicholas Songs," a new edition of Dr. C. S. Robinson's "Laudes Domini," and a new book of "Aids to Common Worship" by Rev. R. G. Greene, the description of which is that of a Congregationalist Book of Common Prayer. Mr. R. W. Gilder's poems and Mr. Palmer Cox's are both to be collected, the latter into one volume, the former into three. The famous war papers of the Century are already going into a "Century War Book" which is sold only by subscription, and Mr. Stockton's new stories "The Hundredth Man" and "The Dusanter," both of them features of the Century this year and next, will be gathered promptly into book form. The Century announces that it will continue the Nicolay-Hay "Life of Lincoln" with increased outlay, but will somewhat curtail the "War Papers" which have now been running so long; while Edward Eggleston will supply a serial novel, "The Graysons," a story of Illinois life, and Charles De Kay a number of papers on Ireland.

T. Y. Crowell & Co.

A fifth of Tolstoy's works, "A Landed Proprietor," is a leading title on Crowell's list, followed by the new and handsome edition of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," in an entirely fresh translation by Miss Hapgood. Of the volume of poems, "From Heart and Nature," by Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton and her son, Charles K., the latter a student in Harvard College, we have already spoken in advance. An Icelandic love story, "Sigrid," has been translated from the Danish of Jon Thorodsson Thoroddsen, and "Cuore," an Italian school-boy's journal, by the indefatigable Miss Hapgood from Edmondo de Amicis. "Burnham Breaker" is a promising story by Mr. Homer Greene, who took the $1,500 prize with his tale of "The Blind Brother," in the Youth's Companion's recent tournament of authorship. Mr. Rideing has collected a volume of sketches of the "Boyhood of Living Authors." Other juveniles are "Professor Johnny" and "Who Saved the Ship?" both by J. A. K., a translation of "French Folk Lore Stories," a story for members of the Christian Endeavor Societies, entitled "St. Paul's Problem and its Solution," and Jacob Abbott's undying "Rollo Books" in a new edition and a cheaper one than ever. Crowell & Co. are publishers, it will be remembered, of a long list of standard books in attractive forms, including many of the British poets, and such favorites as Keble's "Christian Year," Percy's "Reliques," and Lockhart's "Spanish Ballads."

Dodd, Mead & Co.

A leading art book which Dodd, Mead & Co. have had for some time in preparation is a volume of "Original Etchings" by A. H. Bicknell, with accompanying text by Wm. H. Downes, and this will be produced in a variety of styles at a range of prices. Mr. Ormsby's new and superior translation of "Don Quixote" is to appear in two forms of 4 vols. each, one in large paper, fifty copies only, the other an ordinary library edition. Mr. Willis J. Abbot follows his excellent "Blue Jackets of '61" of last year with a similar book on the "Blue Jackets of 1812." Books of adventure for boys are Mr. Perelaer's "Ran Away from the Dutch," F. L. James's "Wild Tribes of the Soudan," and E. R. Gould-ing's "Young Marooners." Rev. E. P. Roe's "The Earth Trembled," a story of the Charleston earthquake, will lead the novels of this firm, followed by "Paul and Christina" and "A Border Shepherdess," both by Mrs. A. E. Barr. Professor A. J. Church of University College, London, furnishes two new books to the list, "With the King at Oxford" and "Stories of the Magicians;" and the author of the "Elsie Books" an account of "Elsie's Friends at Woodburn." Last but not least important are a volume of sermons by Mr. Rainsford, the popular minister of St. George's Church, New York, and "The Life and Times of John Jay" by Wm. Whitelock.

Estes & Lauriat.

A number of standard authors are published by Estes & Lauriat in good editions, among them George Eliot, Carlyle, Thackeray, Dickens, Macaulay, Gibbon, Hume, Scott, Hans Andersen, and Shakespeare, the latter under Hudson's editing. The "Boston edition" of George Eliot's works is worthy of special attention. It is proceeding at the rate of one volume a month. Its illustrations are numerous and of distinguished authorship. New editions are also announced of Mr. Ober's "Travels in Mexico," of "Nature and Art," and of T. Starr King's famous book on "The White Hills," which latter seems destined to an unending popularity. Mrs. Champney's "Three Vassar Girls" will be "At Home" this season, the "Knockabout Club" will visit the everglades of Florida, and Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth will be found "Zigzagging" in India. "Oliver Optic" has edited a second volume of "Our Little Ones" and a sixth of the "Little Ones' Annual." A new "Chatterbox" of course is to be expected. "Young Folks' Histories" of the Queens of Scotland and of the Reformation have been prepared respectively by Rosalie Kaufman and Fred. H. Allen. "The Boys of 1812" is the title of a naval book by Prof. J. Russell Soley. The story of "Five Mice in a Mouse Trap" will be told by Laura E. Richards, a daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, author of that clever book, "Four Feet, Two Feet, and No Feet;" Kate Greenaway will be one of its illustrators. Other juveniles are to be "The Doll's Christmas Party," "A Queer Pin Box," by Mrs. D. P. Sanford and several other writers, "Santa Claus at Sea," with pictures by St. John Harper, "Polly Pickle," and "Selfish Sambo." Taylor, Merrill, and Miss Tucker are among the illustrators of "Ned's Elevator Ride." Gertrude Strohm has edited under the title of "Flower Idyls" an adaptation of flowers to people and their occupations, with photo-etchings. "Recent French Art" will collect sixteen photo-etchings of late paintings of the French school; "The Dusseldorf Gallery" is a similar collection on a larger and costlier scale illustrative of German art. In Miss Parloa's "Kitchen Companion" is promised an entirely new work. Estes & Lauriat will have 200 copies of Street-er's "Precious Stones and Gems," a London work of authority and beauty, strikingly illustrated, and an edition of the late John L. Hayro's translated "Latin Hymn."

Fords, Howard & Hulbert.

Fords, Howard & Hulbert are giving special attention this fall to Beecher books. Besides Major Pond's account of Mr. Beecher's last trip to England (1886) and collection of the sermons, lectures, and addresses delivered there, in "A Summer in England," they have just issued "Beecher as a Humorist," as our readers will remember. A new edition is soon to be published of "Royal Truths," a collection of brief passages from his sermons made anonymously in England, and sold widely there before Mr. Beecher ever knew of it. This is its fourth American edition. A volume that will review that portion of Mr. Beecher's career concerning which there has been a substantial unanimity of admiration, is "Patriotic Addresses in America and England on Slavery, Civil War, and the Development of Civil Liberty in the United States, Edited, with a Review of Mr. Beecher's Personality and Political Influence, by John R. Howard." Mr. Howard has been for the past twenty years closely associated with Mr. Beecher in literary and business matters, as his publisher. A volume of Mr. Beecher's "Sermons on the Bible" is also in preparation by this house—a series of discourses which have never been published. The firm will shortly issue a new work on Mexico, by a lady for some years resident there, entitled "Face to Face with the Mexicans;" it gives much information about domestic, business, and social customs, and will be illustrated. For the holiday season Fords, Howard & Hulbert put forth a fresh printing of Bryant's "Library of Poetry and Song," which, in spite of all the other good anthologies, still holds its place as a prime favorite.

Fowler & Wells.

The Fowler & Wells Co. now occupy their new stand, 775 Broadway, New York, and have in press a number of special publications for their peculiar list. Among them is "Physical Culture for Home and School," scientific and practical, by Prof. D. L. Dowd of this city. Under the title of "Gems of Literature" is published the "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" by Coleridge, "The Traveller," "The Deserted Village" and the "Hermit" by Goldsmith, "Pope's Essay on Man," "Comus" by Milton, and "Æsop's Fables," all illustrated and with original notes. "Nervousness, its Nature, Causes, Symptoms and Treatment, is a practical treatise by Dr. H. S. Drayton the editor of the Phrenological Journal. "The Sympathetic Nerve," a carefully prepared anatomical plate of that nerve, reprinted from the French, accompanied by a concise description, is pronounced the finest piece of work of the kind produced in this country. "Pope's Essay on Man, with Responding Essays" by Caleb S. Weeks, is rather a unique volume giving Pope's Essay, and on opposite pages parallel lines responding to Pope. "A Practical Plan of Instruction in Short-Hand" is a series of lessons in the form of detached lesson papers printed in type-writer type and phonography. "How to Succeed as a Stenographer and Type-Writer," appealing to a large constituency, has been prepared by Arthur M. Baker, a successful court reporter. The publishers announce the combination of Child-Culture with their old established periodical, the Phrenological Journal, of over 50 years' standing, and it will now have a special department for parents and teachers. The fifteenth thousand of "For Girls" is on the press, and the last of 35,000 copies of "Heads and Faces" is being sold.

Funk & Wagnalls.

Funk & Wagnalls make a special item of "Letters from Heaven," a companion volume to the "Letters from Hell" published a year or two ago. They have also "A Book of Poems," by Marietta Holley ("Josiah Allen's Wife"), the first poetry she has ever published. Mr. Benson J. Lossing's "History of the Empire State" is sold only by subscription. The final volume of "Meyer's Commentary on the New Testament" will soon be ready, and the sixth of Dr. Joseph Parker's "People's Bible" already is. The Rev. E. Paxton Hood's "Vocation of the Preacher" and "Throne of Eloquence" are to accompany these other foreign books. In "The Missing Sense, and the Hidden Things which it Might Reveal," Dr. C. W. Woodbridge offers a treatment of spiritual philosophy on a rational basis. Miss Mary B. Slight has "The Flag on the Mill," a novel.

Harper & Brothers.

It must be a little early, we think, for a glimpse of the richest fruit which is to drop from the great tree in Franklin Square, for all we can learn of now is perhaps a dozen of books, several of which have arrived in full dress even as we write these words. To the "New Classical Series" conducted by this firm, Mr. Stickney, formerly of Trinity College, has added Cicero's "Cato Major" and "Laelius," with introduction and notes, the latter occupying more than half the volume, which is clearly and handsomely printed, and presents these two famous philosophical writings of the great Roman in attractive form. Sarah Cooper's "Animal Life in the Sea and on the Land" is a profusely illustrated exposition of those fascinating recesses of animate nature, the forests and the waves. Beginning with sponges, jelly-fishes, corals, and other such of the lowest forms of life, the author works her way upward along the slowly but steadily ascending scale of organization through monkeys to man, though leaving any connection of the last two members of the series wholly to the imagination of the reader. The pictures of birds and bird life are particularly beautiful. Dr. Rolfe's edition of "Milton's Minor Poems" is noticed elsewhere in this paper, and Prof. Bowne's "Philosophy of Theism" is in the reviewers' hands for adequate treatment. The "Memoirs of the Margravine of Baireuth" are presented in a new and cheaper and snuggler shape. Army life in the United States and Europe is to be picturesquely described and graphically illustrated by R. F. Zogbaum in "Horse, Foot, and Dragoons." Mr. Charles Follen Adams is to give his amused readers—and they are many—a new batch of "Dialect Ballads." From Mrs. Craik, the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," is to come a most promising book depicting the north of Ireland, called "An Unknown Country," and illustrated by Frederick Noel Paton. Howard Pyle will have a new fairy book, whose title, "The Wonder Clock," and whose sub-title, "Four-and-Twenty Marvellous Tales," still more, will awaken the eager expectations of the young folks, and when they hear of its hundred and sixty drawings by the author of "Pepper and Salt" we do not see how they can possibly be made to wait till it comes. Mr. Howells is to furnish a volume of mingled essays and translations entitled "Modern Italian Poets," the ripened harvest of seed sown twenty years ago. M. Charnay's handsome octavo on "The Ancient Cities of the New World" receives due attention elsewhere.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce three holiday books—Lowell's exquisite "Vision of Sir Launfal," with a new portrait of Mr. Lowell, and nine full-page wood-cuts and smaller illustrations by several of the most famous American artists; Hawthorne's charming "Tanglewood Tales," illustrated by George Wharton Edwards; and Longfellow's "Evangeline," decorated with fac-simile representations of the leaves of the forests of Acadia, in their varied wealth of autumnal colors. The "Vision of Sir Launfal" is to be a book of great mechanical beauty, and it is said that Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, under whose supervision it is produced, declares it the most artistic illustrated book ever brought out in this country—a strong statement. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s list of fiction is not long, but Miss Phelps adds to her stories of the unseen world a new one, "The Gates Between," and "Jack the Fisherman," already out in a tasteful fifty-cent book, with good illustrations, a temperance story. Other works of fiction are "The Second Son," one of the serial stories recently printed in the Atlantic Monthly, as it should be with both Mrs. Oliphant's and Mr. Aldrich's names attached; Mr. Crawford's "Paul Patoff," which as it has appeared in the Atlantic has been pronounced the best story Mr. Crawford has yet written; "A Princess of Java," by Mrs. S. J. Higginson, reviewed elsewhere, and a book of short stories by Octave Thanet, named from a Shakespearian phrase, "Knitters in the Sun." Miss Phelps's witty East Gloucester stories, "An Old Maid's Paradise" and "Burglars in Paradise," will appear together in a bound volume; and two stories, "Not in the Prospectus" by Parke Danforth, and "The Man who was Guilty" by Flora Haines Loughhead, which have hitherto had but a paper-cover existence, will now be promoted to the dignity of cloth. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s three series in American history and biography will receive valuable additions; to "The Statesmen series," "Patrick Henry" by Prof. Moses Coit Tyler, "Gouverneur Morris" by Theodore Roosevelt, "Martin Van Buren" by Edward M. Shepard, and, later, "George Washington" by Henry Cabot Lodge; to the Men of Letters series, "Benjamin Franklin," by Prof. McMaster, and "Nathaniel Hawthorne" by James Russell Lowell, which is so good a promise that it hardly seems as if it could be realized; to the Commonwealths series "Missouri" by Lucien Carr, "Ohio" by Rufus King, "Tennessee," by Hon. James Phelan, all sons or residents of the States they write about. Other important biographies besides Mr. Cabot's "Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson" already published, are "The Fighting Veres" of England who won their renown in the Netherlands, by Clements R. Markham, and a life of Gen. Ormsby McKnight Mitchel, alike illustrious as astronomer and soldier, by his son, F. A. Mitchel. Prof. Herbert Tuttle continues with two more volumes his "History of Prussia during the Reign of Frederick the Great." Travel and observation are represented by Dr. Holmes's "Hundred Days in Europe," Professor Lanciani's lectures on "Roman Excavations since 1871," with many illustrations, "Three Cruises of the Blake," by Alexander Agassiz, giving in two volumes the results of three scientific ocean voyages, with maps and numerous illustrations; a book of archæological information and pictorial attraction, "In the Track of Ulysses," by William J. Stillman; "Winter," a new volume of selections from Thoreau's journals; and lastly, Hopkinson Smith's "Well-Worn Roads of Spain, Holland and Italy," the descriptive portions of his last year's notable holiday book reprinted in a tasteful little volume, with miniature reproductions of some of the pictures at the head of chapters. Other books to come are a volume of critical essays entitled "Men and Letters," by Mr. Scudder, who also rewrites a "Book of Folk Stories;" "The World to Come," a collection of sermons by Rev. William B. Wright, author of "Ancient Cities" of a year ago; "Memories of Coleorton," letters from Coleridge, Southey, Scott, Wordsworth and his sister, to Sir George and Lady Beaumont, letters never before published, in two volumes; a new edition of Mr. Stedman's important "Victorian Poets," revised and brought down to date; poems by Mrs. Margaret Deland, the late E. R. Sill, Mrs. Whitney, and Mrs. Whitney's daughter, Mrs. Caroline Leslie Field, author of the novel "High Lights," which appeared anonymously last year; "Agassiz and Other Poems," by Mr. Lowell; a selection of "Lyrics, Idyls and Romances," from Browning's works; a new volume of "Early and Late Poems" by Alice and Phœbe Cary, containing only poems not included in the Household Edition; a new issue of Mr. Scudder's eight famous Bodley books in four volumes; a promise of Whittier's Poetical Works by and by in a new edition like the Riverside Longfellow; and other new editions for which the world of readers has ample room, though the Literary World unfortunately has not.

W. R. Jenkins.

Mr. Jenkins's name has been conspicuously connected with the publication of French classics, for school use and for general readers; of which readers of the Literary World have been encouraged to form highly favorable opinions, and in which the new edition of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables" occupies a prominent place in its publisher's "Autumn Announcements." This edition is to make five volumes, in paper or cloth covers as the buyer prefers, electrotyped from new type, and carried through the press with the utmost care, as we have already taken occasion to remark. Either of the five volumes will be sold separately, and sample pages will be sent to any one asking for them. Mr. Jenkins's collected "Auteurs Célèbres" now include the following works of fiction: "Jettatura," by Theophile Gautier; "Lumen," by Camille Flammarion; "Thérèse Raquin," by Emile Zola; "Une Bonne Affaire," by Hector Malot; "Manon Lescaut," by L'Abbé Prévost; "La Belle Alliette," by Eugène Chavette; "Le Tonnelier," by G. Duval; "Histoire d'un Petit Homme," by M. Robert Hault (Ouvrage couronné par l'Académie); "Paul et Virginie," by B. de Saint-Pierre; 2e série—"Le Roman Rouge," by Catulle Mendès; "Colette," by Alexis Bouvier; "Voyage aux Pays Mystérieux," by Louis Jacolliot; "Deux Femmes," by A. Belot; "Madeleine," by Jules Sandeau; "Daphnis et Chloé," by Longus; "La Mansarde," by Jules Claretie;

"L'Auberge Maudite," by Louis Noir; "Le Château de la Rage," by Léopold Stapleaux. The attention of students of Italian will be invited to Prof. Bomba's "La Lingua Italiana," a new and natural method for acquiring the language, and to "Una Notte Bizzarra," by Antonio Barrili, a novelette with English notes. Mr. Jenkins also will have the "Paris Salon" for 1887, as well as the "Figaro Salon" in its five large folio numbers with upwards of fifty process illustrations; and he has brought back from Paris an assortment of "French Calendars for 1888," which present some novel attractions to the eye. Other products of French authorship are to follow—notably "Mine et Contre-Mine," by A. Guillet, a teacher in Cleveland, Ohio, a comedy in three acts, intended for class reading; a new edition of Alfred de Vigny's "Cinq-Mars," an historical novel, with or without English notes; and a new edition of Victor Hugo's "Hernani" with English notes by Gustave Masson. Several of the "French Primary Readers," designed for youngest readers, and of Cotte's "Contes Tirés de Molière," have (we believe) already found their way to American readers, and more of the last named are to come.

Lee & Shepard.

Miss Irene E. Jerome's art books of the three previous years, "Nature's Hallelujah," "One Year's Sketch Book," and "The Message of the Bluebird," are to be followed this year by "A Bunch of Violets," a volume of wood-engravings based upon out-of-door studies, in much the same style as the foregoing. It will be a royal quarto. Something of a companion to it in spirit will be "Meadow Melodies," a volume of poems by Hon. C. F. Gerry of Sudbury, Mass., a town in the midst of beautiful meadows. Mrs. Sara Louise Saunders has made a compilation of best things from Bailey's "Festus," a famous poem now in its 11th English and 30th American edition, which will be suitably classified and presented in "volumettes," in a novel style. Scott's poem, "The Bridal of Triermain," has been made into an oblong quarto with illustrations by Percy Macquoid after the manner of Fortuny. The "Plastic Sketches" by the Lows will appear in a new edition, portfolio style, and the well-known series of illustrated popular hymns will be brought out in fresh bindings. In general literature we notice Miss Douglas's new novel, "The Fortunes of the Faradays," the posthumous autobiography of the late Rev. Dr. William Hague, a widely known Baptist minister of Boston, just deceased, a new edition for the trade of Geo. L. Austin's "Life of Longfellow," and the same author's "Life of Wendell Phillips," new editions of the late Mrs. Horace Mann's "Reminiscences of Froebel" and of the late Rev. Henry Giles's lectures on "Human Life in Shakespeare," an appreciative study of "Danton in the French Revolution" by Lawrence Gronlund, "Faith's Festivals" by Mary Lakeman, "Miss West's Class in Geography," a series of imaginary conversations between a pupil and a teacher, a little work by General Carrington on "The Obelisk and its Voices," that is to say the Washington Monument, a treatise on "The Art of Projecting," or the use of magic lantern and porte lumière apparatus, by Prof. A. E. Dolbeare, and new stories by Sophie May, Oliver Optic, and J. T. Trowbridge. Lee & Shepard are publishers of many juveniles in series, and of George M. Baker's and other books of selections for readings and recitations.

The J. B. Lippincott Co.

Does the reader remember Keats's "Lamia" as illustrated by Will H. Low, and presented by the J. B. Lippincott Co. two years ago? A similar setting of Keats's "Odes and Sonnets," by the same artist, is the book of honor on the Lippincott's list this year. Mr. Low is said to have spent more than a year in Florence in the collection and study of the materials for his work upon this volume, which will have 16 full-page plates, and embellishments upon 100 pages of text beside. After this royal Keats comes an edition of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," with illustrations by M. M. Taylor, an 8vo in various styles of binding. Some etchings by Hermann Faber illustrative of "Faust," with text, will make another handsome 8vo. One of the popular novels of a quarter of a century ago was "The Wide, Wide World," by Elizabeth Wetherell. To a large circle of readers it must be entirely new. Mr. Dielman has illustrated it, and it is to be brought out anew in a single volume. "Eldora," an original poem by Mrs. M. B. M. Toland, will be the text of another illustrated book, the artists of which are Mowbray, Gibson, and Ipsen; and Gray's "Elegy," Goldsmith's "Hermit," and T. Buchanan Read's "The Closing Scene," are to be bound up with illustrations into a single volume. Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia, a successful physician and novelist in one, like Dr. Hammond of New York, has written a story book for children this year, called "Prince, Little Boy, and Other Tales out of Fairy-Land," which F. S. Church and Mowbray have illustrated, and which will make a children's quarto. "Ida Waugh's Alphabet Book," with its verses by Amy E. Blanchard, will be printed in two colors. Naturalists more than sportsmen, we hope, will be attracted to Robert Ridgway's "Manual of North American Birds," which is to appear in two forms. Among its numerous illustrations will be a portrait of the late Spencer F. Baird; while Dr. Watson's "The Sportsman's Paradise," with text and illustrations, will open to us the lake lands of Canada. Recent melancholy incidents of American railroad life should give importance to Mr. Claxton Fidler's "Construction of Bridges," with 230 illustrations in the text and 26 full-page plates; and Mr. Moberly Bell's "From Pharaoh to Fella" will make a large and handsomely illustrated work. Mr. Bell writes as correspondent of the London Times. In fiction the Lippincott Co. have in press new novels by S. Baring-Gould, "the Duchess," and Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron; "Country Luck," by John Habberton, "The Terra Cotta Bust," by Virginia W. Johnson, "Too Curious," by Edw. J. Goodman, and "Vendetta," by Marie Corelli; in poetry "Legends of the Susquehanna," by Truman H. Purdy, and "Over the Divide," by Marion Manville; and in science a "Botany" for academies and colleges by Annie Chambers-Ketchum, largely illustrated.

D. Lothrop Co.

An illustrated édition de luxe of Tennyson's "Holy Grail" heads the Messrs. Lothrop's list, followed by a volume of "Ballads about Authors," by Mrs. Spofford, in similar holiday style. "Waifs and their Authors," by A. A. Hopkins, ought to be a useful book. "Sunshine," by Katherine Lee Bates, illustrated by Taylor, we take to be a book of poems. "Ringing Ballads" will include Mrs. Thorpe's "Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight," and Cutter's translation of Schiller's "Song of the Bell" will be produced with 14 full-page illustrations. "Five Madonnas" in photogravure are accompanied with verses by Mrs. Stowe. Passing one or two minor items in the Messrs. Lothrop's list, we come to their new juveniles, and here we count a score or two of titles, to enumerate all of which is out of the question in the space at our command. We can only specify as the more important a "Boys and Girls' Annual" for 1888, a "Young Folks' Golden Treasury of Poems," the "Story of the American Indians" by Elbridge S. Brooks, "The Ignoramus," by Mrs. Schuyler Crowningshield, author of the capital book on the light-houses of last year, "Days and Nights in the Tropics," by Dr. F. L. Oswald, "Brisk Times," a collection of stories by Margaret Sidney, Miss A. B. Harris, and other writers, several books about animals, a number of large-print story books and picture books, "American Authors for Young Folks," by Miss Amanda B. Harris, "Character Building," an edited volume of selections from the books of Samuel Smiles, "Common Sense Science," by Grant Allen, "Eighty-Seven," by "Pansy," a "Life of James Russell Lowell," by Miss Emma E. Brown, and "Royal Girls and Royal Courts," by Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood. Returning to books for older readers, we find among many others, "Russian Novelists," by Jane Loring Edmonds, "Scythe and Sword," by O. C. Auringer, which we think must be a volume of poems, "Some Italian Authors," by Geo. E. Vincent, "Some Things Abroad," by Dr. Alexander McKenzie, and a book of selections from Ruskin. Even with all this we leave a large number of works unmentioned, showing that D. Lothrop & Co. do not believe that the days of books are over.

A. C. McClurg & Co.

A book by Mr. George P. Upton on "The Standard Cantatas" is to take its place by the side of the same author's "Standard Operas" and "Standard Oratorios," the three making a valuable series for all music lovers. Bishop Coxe's University of Michigan Lectures of last year will be brought out as a volume of "Institutes of Christian History." Augustus Jacobson's "Higher Ground" will offer hints toward settling the labor troubles. Dr. David S. Jordan's "Science Sketches" are a series of twelve popular papers on natural history. In "A Girdle Round the Earth" editor Richardson of the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat will tell the story of his travels over the globe, going westward from the Mississippi River. A book of capital promise is "Notes for Boys," on morals, mind, and manners, written by a father for his own son.

Nims & Knight.

Nims & Knight are a Troy, N. Y., house, whose name has been made familiar of late by their contributions to "calendar literature," but whose provision for the public this year will include other features. In addition to a new "Schiller Calendar" for 1888, the specialty of which is its fan-shape and its quotations for every day in German as well as English, they will have a "Sunshine Calendar" and a "Year in Thought Calendar," both for 1888, the former being arranged on the "silent comforter" plan, and the latter having a stamped and illuminated design for every month, with decorations in ivory, silver, and gilt. They have, further, two series of little books, compiled by Miss Rose Porter—one "The Round Year," consisting of poems of the months, by many authors, grouped by the four seasons, with illustrations by Ostreander; the other a trio of original sentiments in prose and verse, entitled respectively "Hidden Treasures," "Golden Days Fruitful of Golden Deeds," and "Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh," all three illustrated. They also have a quartette of little daily text-books, "His Loving Kindnesses," "His Testimonies," "His Covenants," and "His Good Promises," each with texts for one month. But Nims & Co.'s chief publication will be "Our Wedding Souvenir," which, as most people either are married or expect to be, ought to be in large request. This "Wedding Souvenir" consists of a number of flower designs, lithographed, and of sepia and tinted landscapes, affording intercalary spaces for signatures of parties interested, photographs, cards, and even those newspaper notices which are getting to be a frequent, perhaps a coveted, but we must say a rather vulgar accompaniment of fashionable weddings. Mistresses Bassett, Emmett, and Greatorix, and Mr. L. K. Harlow, are among the artists of this novelty, and Armstrong & Co. are the manufacturers of it. It is a quarto, and will be offered in several styles of binding.

Porter & Coates.

The 1st of October will witness the issue from the press of Porter & Coates of two new books, one of them Rev. Dr. James S. Stone's "The Heart of Merrie England," a narrative of travels in the mother country, the other Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Seiss's "The Children of Silence," an account of the deaf mutes. Porter & Coates's other books are juveniles: "Our Fellows," by Harry Castlemon, "The Store Boy," by Horatio Alger, Jr., "Hunters of the Ozark" and "The Camp in the Mountains," both by Edward S. Ellis, and a new edition from new plates of "Robinson Crusoe."

G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Two new series furnish important items on Putnam's list. One of these, "English History from Contemporary Writers," is to present each well-defined period of English history in a small volume of extracts from chronicles, state papers, memoirs, and letters of the time, and other contemporary literature, the whole so arranged as to make up a living picture of each generation in its political, religious, social, and intellectual aspects. The first issues in the series will be: I, "The Misrule of Henry III," 1236-1248, by Rev. W. H. Hutton, M. A.; II, "Edward III and his Wars," 1327-1360, by W. J. Ashley; III, "The Crusade of Richard I," 1189-1199, by J. Archer; IV, "Simon de Montfort and his Cause," 1249-1265, by Rev. W. H. Hutton; V, "The Troublous Days of Richard II," by Miss L. Toulmin Smith; VI, "Alfred and the Danes," 870-901, by F. York Powell. Most of these editors are Oxford men. The other series, "Knickerbocker Nuggets," will consist of 32mo books, illustrated as far as their subjects will allow, collecting some of the world's classics in tasteful typography. The first issues in this series will be the "Gesta Romanorum," edited by C. Swan; "Headlong Hall and Nightmare Abbey," by Thomas Love Peacock; "Gulliver's Travels," a reprint of the early complete edition, very fully illustrated, in 2 vols.; "Tales from Irving," first and second series; "The Book of British Ballads," edited by S. C. Hall, a fac-simile of the original edition, with illustrations by Creswick, Gilbert, and others; "The Travels of Baron Münchhausen," reprinted from the early complete edition; "Letters, Sentences, and Maxims," by Lord Chesterfield, with a critical essay by C. A. Sainte-Beuve; and "The Vicar of Wakefield," by Goldsmith, with the beautiful illustrations of Stothard. To the "Story of the Nations" series the Putnams will add "The Story of the Goths," by Henry Bradley; "The Story of Ireland," by the Hon. Emily Lawless; "The Story of Mediæval France," by Prof. Gustave Masson, of Harrow; "The Story of Turkey," by Stanley Lane-Poole, author of "The Moors in Spain;" "The Story of Holland," by Prof. J. E. Thorold Rogers; and "The Story of Mexico," by Susan Hale. Other forthcoming historical works with the same imprint are "The Revolutionary Movement of 1848-9 in Italy, Austria, Hungary, and Germany," by C. Edmund Maurice; "The Kentucky Resolutions of 1798," by E. D. Warfield; "Slav or Saxon," a study of Russian development, by Wm. Dudley Foulke; "La Société Française au Dix-Septième Siècle," an account edited from contemporary chronicles by Prof. F. F. Crane; and second editions of Simon Sterne's "Constitutional History of the United States" and of King's "The Gnostics and their Remains." Gneist's "Student's History of the English Parliament" is already out in a new edition, based upon an entirely new translation by Prof. A. H. Keane. Singular to say, this work, though by a German author, a professor in the University of Berlin, is by far the ablest exposition we have of the growth of English constitutional government. There is nothing to be compared with it. The new edition is brought down to date and indexed; of which these few words, as strong as we know how to make them, must suffice as notice, crowded as we are. The Putnams also announce a "Tappan Zee Edition" of Irving's "Sketch Book," "Knickerbocker," "Bracebridge Hall," "Traveller," "Alhambra," "Crayon," and "Wolfert's Roost," in twelve vols., 32mo; a life of Cardinal Pole, by Rev. F. G. Lee; a translation of Maspero's "Egyptian Archaeology," by Miss Amelia B. Edwards, with 299 illustrations; "Arcady," a study of rural life in England, by Rev. Dr. Augustus Jessopp; "A Vacation in a Buggy," by Maria L. Pool, who is evidently an admirer of Mr. William Black; "A Study of American Finance," 1789-1835, by John Watts Kearney; "Half-Hours with the Stars," by Richard A. Proctor; "A Selection from Lessing's Prose," by Prof. H. S. White; "The Count of the Saxon Shore," a tale of Roman Britain, by Prof. A. J. Church; and several additions to current poetry and to treatises in medicine.

Roberts Brothers.

Miss Alcott, still a prime favorite with most young readers, and with some older readers who once were young, heads the list of Roberts Brothers' "Fall Announcements" with two new story books, "A Garland for Girls" and a second volume in "Lulu's Library," the latter illustrated by Jessie McDermott. Next to these comes "Juvenilia," a second series of essays by Vernon Lee, the titles of which are full of Italian color. Narragansett County, R. I., as it was fifty years ago, is to be depicted by Esther B. Carpenter, in a collection of character sketches called "South-County Neighbors." An elegant volume may be expected in "The Procession of Flowers in Colorado," in which Helen Hunt Jackson will be illustrated with twelve water colors by Alice A. Stewart; but only a hundred copies will be made of this sumptuous quarto. Philip Bourke Marston's memory is to be preserved in two posthumous volumes bearing his name: "For a Song's Sake, and Other Stories," and "Garden Secrets," poems, the latter set off with a sketch of his life by Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, who knew him so well. There will be warm welcome for Mr. Hamerton's new book, "The Saône, a Summer Voyage," with its illustrations by the author and Joseph Pennell, and a measure of curiosity towards "The Little Flowers of Saint Francis of Assisi," a memorial of that holy father in the Church, translated from the Italian, with a brief account of his life by Abby L. Alger. Then there is to be a new school story by Rev. T. S. Millington, with the lifelike title "Some of Our Fellows." George Meredith's now collected novels will be followed by a volume of his "Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life," and Joaquin Miller, whose harp has been silent of late, is to sing us some "Songs of the Mexican Seas." Highly apropos to recent commemorative ceremonies in Philadelphia will be Susan Coolidge's "Short History" of that city. To the "Famous Women Series" will be added Bella Duffy's "Madame de Staël," and Mrs. D. A. Lincoln has put her cooking lessons into a "Boston School Kitchen Text-Book" [sic], though one would think that the title ought to read "Kitchen School" instead of "School Kitchen." Or is "School Kitchen" a new and improved name for cooking school? Among Roberts Brothers' new editions of former books we are happy to see Rev. E. E. Hale's "In His Name," which—to dissent again from Mr. Maurice Thompson—we should put above "The Man without a Country." Among other new editions promised we notice Mr. Burnand's funny "New History of Sandford and Merton;" Mr. Macgregor's three "Rob Roy Canoe" books bound up into a single volume; and "Heroic Ballads," selected by the author of "Quiet Hours."

George Routledge & Sons.

It is pleasant to be greeted on the first page of Routledge's circular with the announcement of two new books by Kate Greenaway, "Queen Victoria's Jubilee Garland," and an "Almanack for 1888;" for though Miss Greenaway has many imitators she has no equals, and holds her throne alone. The "Cotillion Almanac for 1888" is an American novelty. A superb illustrated edition of "The Count of Monte Cristo," in 5 vols., is to take its place by the side of that of "Les Misérables" of last year; with Hugo's "Notre Dame" and "Toilers of the Sea" to follow. In limited editions only will appear an illustrated translation of "The Lady with the Camellias," by Dumas, and of Bernardin de St. Pierre's "Paul and Virginia," the abundant illustrations in the latter after designs by Leloir. Next stands a fine reproduction of Chapman's "Homer's Iliad," also elegantly illustrated, and an édition de luxe of Randolph Caldecott's "Pictures and Songs" complete, printed in colors; both of these last also in limited editions. All of the foregoing are high up among the important announcements of the year. Of second importance only because these magnificent works stand before them, are Caldecott's "Last Graphic Pictures," printed in colors; a (limited) illustrated translation of Goriot's "Scenes from Parisian Life," on heavy paper and with broad margins; a dainty illustrated edition of Mérimée's "Carmen;" a first uniform edition of Victor Hugo's novels in English, with full-page illustrations by Mr. Luke Fields of London and other artists; and "Tartarin of Tarascon" and "Sappho" as additions to the exquisite series of Daudet's works, whose wood-cuts and typography are of a Parisian grace almost beyond anything of the kind that has ever been seen in this country. The "Handy Volume Shakespeare" is to be had in a new "Basket" edition, and Macaulay's "Essays" in one volume entirely new. "Voices of the Flowers" will present quotations from Longfellow, Whittier, Shakespeare, and Moore, with flower pictures to match. A handsome Christmas book may be looked for in "Our Darlings," the text by "Mars," the decorations in gold and color by Plon. Helen A. Smith's "Animals, Birds, and Fishes," once two volumes, have been bound up into one. Of some forty or fifty titles which remain, mostly of juveniles, we can mention only the more important, which seem to be two books on "Russia" and "Japan," both by Helen A. Smith; an entirely new edition of Mr. J. R. Planché's translation of "The Fairy Tales of the Countess D'Aulnoy;" Mrs. Sale Barker's "Little Wideawake" and Edmund Routledge's "Every Boy's Annual," both for 1888; "Our Home," "Our Friends," "Our Pets," and "Sunny Childhood," all juveniles by Mrs. Sale Barker; "The Shall Nots of the Bible," texts and illustrations; a new edition of Captain Marryatt's "Children of the New Forest," with plates by Sir John Gilbert; "The Funny Foxes and their Feats at the Fair," with illustrations by Grisct engraved and printed in color by Edmund Evans; "Stories of Persons and Places in Europe," by E. L. Benedict; and a large assortment of picture books, small juveniles, and other minor attractions of which we shall have something to say when we see them.

Charles Scribner's Sons.

As in the case of several other publishers in this company so in that of the Messrs. Scribner, only a partial statement can be made of their books in press or just now on the eve of publication. That the collected volume of the "Letters of Thackeray" heads their list everybody must know. Next to that the most striking item in their announcements is the number of theologians whom they will presently introduce to the public: Ex-President Porter of New Haven with "Fifteen Years in the Chapel of Yale College," Rev. Dr. H. Van Dyke with "The Story of the Psalms," Professor Geo. P. Fisher with a "History of the Christian Church," Dr. Newman Smyth with "Christian Facts and Forces," and Professor J. Henry Thayer with a memorial edition of Professor Sophocles's "Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods." Hard after the theologians follows Max Müller with "The Science of Thought," and close upon him Professor Schurman of Cornell with "The Ethical Import of Darwinism." An important work in contemporaneous history will be the 2 vols. of Mr. Washburne's "Recollections of a Minister to France, 1869-1877." Mr. Wm. T. Brigham has written an interesting book on "Guatemala," embodying observations during a long residence there, and Mr. A. T. Tuckerman "A Short History of Architecture." From Mr. C. F. Holder, author of "The Ivory King," we are to have "Living Lights," a book on phosphorescent plants and animals; from Mr. S. A. Drake "The Making of the Great West," to accompany his "Making of New England;" from Daniel C. Beard "The American Boy's Handy Book" and from Lina and Adelia B. Beard "The American Girl's Handy Book." Mr. Boyesen has in press "The Modern Vikings," stories of life and sport in Norway; Mr. E. I. Stevenson, of the New York Independent, "White Cockades," a Scotch story of the younger Pretender of 1745; and Mr. F. R. Stockton "The Bee-Man of Orn, and Other Fanciful Tales." We note also new editions, improved or at reduced prices, of Stanley's "How I Found Livingstone," of Hornaday's "Two Years in the Jungle," of Stevenson's "Kidnapped," of Jules Verne's "The Exploration of the World," and a 30th thousand of "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and one or two other old favorites in new forms. We must not overlook Mr. Baldwin's "Story of the Golden Age," illustrated by Howard Pyle, nor Harold Frederic's magazine story of "Seth's Brother's Wife" in book form, nor a library edition of Linton and Stoddard's collection of "English Verse," nor the inviting prospectus of Scribner's Magazine for 1888.

Frederick A. Stokes & Brother.

Stokes & Brother, successors to the firm of White, Stokes & Allen, whose imprint has been on some of the daintiest books of past years, send us an ingeniously rubricated circular, the red ink insertions embracing the new work of the present season. We notice in fiction "Señora Villena and Gray" by Marion Wilcox, and "Mrs. Hephæstus and Other Short Stories" by George A. Baker; in poetry, "Madrigals and Catches" by Frank Dempster Sherman, and "Thistle-Drift" by John Vance Cheney; in Christmas cards a large variety of new and striking designs; in the "Bird Songs Series," jointly the work of Fidelia Bridges and Susie B. Skelding, "Favorites in Feathers," "Harbingers of Spring," and "Winged Flower Lovers;" in calendars at least five different styles, one of them a new departure in photogravure; in art Mrs. Clement's three works on "Painting," "Sculpture," and "Architecture," bound up in one volume; and in games, hand-books for "Poker," "Whist" and "Euchre." The Messrs. Stokes now handle the large editions of Dante's "Inferno" and Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner," both with Doré's illustrations; they also have good editions of Burns's "Complete Poems" and of Keble's "Christian Year;" and their "Universal Cookery" and "Cookery for Invalids" appeal to practical tastes, and a large assortment of "Etchings" in several shapes to the æsthetical.

Ticknor & Co.

The most important probably of Ticknor's new books will be the new revised and corrected edition of "The Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott," in one volume, edited by Dr. Rolfe, with 350 illustrations; the editor proposing to give the English world what it has never had before, a correct text of Scott's poems. The anonymous poem of the St. Lawrence, "Geraldine," whose authorship has been cleverly concealed until it has become one of the mysteries of modern literature, is going into handsome illustrated form as a gift-book. The scenes depicted by the artist have been studied on the spot for the purpose. S. C. Foster's popular plantation songs, "The Swanee River" and "My Old Kentucky Home," have been illustrated for quarto style in various bindings, one of which is the novelty of "monkey grain." A "Longfellow Prose Birthday Book" has been wrought by Mrs. Laura Winthrop Johnson out of extracts from the poet's letters and journals. The new novels will be "Fools of Nature," an anonymous anti-spiritualistic effort, "Juan and Juanita," by Mrs. Frances Courtenay Baylor, and "The Story of an Enthusiast Told by Himself," by Mrs. C. V. Jamison. Nora Perry has written "A Flock of Girls," a girls' book; Professor S. P. Langley a "New Astronomy," and Rossiter Johnson a "History of the Secession War." Returning to illustrated books we note new electrotype editions of "Lucile" and "Enoch Arden" and Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel;" a newly bound impression of "Poets and Etchers," cheaper forms of the "Ticknor Series of Octavo Poets," and the magnificent "Sonnets from the Portuguese" at a reduced price.

Frederick Warne & Co.

We are glad to receive notice from Frederick Warne & Co. of a new edition of Captain Marryatt's "Poor Jack," one of the favorite books of many an "old boy," lost sight of this many a day; also new presentation editions of Grimm's "Fairy Tales" and "The Arabian Nights." These last will be uniform with their "Masterman Ready" and "Settlers in Canada," two classics that the boys will never let die. "A Long Delay" by Thomas Keyworth is new altogether. For the nursery is coming a colored book called "Young England's Nursery Rhymes," which ought to be pleasing to Young America as well; also a Japanese imitation, "Jappie Chappie, and How He Loved a Dollie." A series of humorous sketches by Harry Parkes is called "A Man who would Like to Marry;" and Professor Hoffman's "A Modern Hoyle," a hand-book of games, will be published uniform with "Modern Etiquette." We note also a translation of "Harlette," by the author of "Wanda," and a cheap edition of Eliot Warburton's "The Crescent and the Cross."

Thomas Whittaker.

Mr Whittaker of New York, though a church publisher, chiefly, does not neglect fiction, as witness his announcements of "Inchfawn," an Irish home story by L. T. Meade; "The Fiddler of Lugow," by the author of "Mademoiselle Mori;" "The Palace in the Garden," by Mrs. Molesworth; "A Village Maid," by Helen Hays; and "When We Were Girls Together," by Sarah Doudney. He has also a new edition of "Robinson Crusoe," reprinted from that of 1719, and illustrated by Gordon Browne; "The Child's Book of Poetry," classified poems, ballads, and hymns, with illustrations; "Our Pets and Companions," pictures and stories illustrating kindness to animals; and "Forget-me-Not," a floral album in tints with spaces for autographs or quotations. In "booklets," are nearly ready "Wayside Pearls," by Cecilia Havergal, in monotypes; "Crowning Mercies," also in colors; "Daily Meditations," for mornings and evenings for a month, in the words of the Bible, in white enameled cover; and the "Whatman Paper Series," five booklets in Whatman paper, rough edges, with embossed covers. For presentation books Mr. Whittaker has this year "Sonnets of Europe," "Sonnets of this Century," Herbert's "Poems," Bogatsky's "Golden Treasury," and "Hid in the Heart," bound in various neat styles. In new and beautiful bindings are "For Days and Years," "Daily Light," "The Imitation of Christ" in two sizes, "Five Minutes' Daily Readings of Poetry," the lovely little "Gold Dust," and "Our Marriage Vow." Mr. Whittaker's birthday-books are in leather bindings, new this season. The new juveniles are: "For Half-a-Crown," by Esmé Stuart; "Prentice Hugh," by Frances M. Peard; "Young Ishmael Conway," by E. A. B. D., author of "Us Three;" "Up the Nile," a book for boys and girls, by H. Major, with 40 illustrations; "From the Equator to Pole," by eminent travelers, with 45 illustrations; "Heroes and Martyrs of Science," by Henry C. Ewart, with 30 illustrations; "The Heroine of a Basket Van," and "Uncle Ivan," by M. Bramston. In theology literature will be published "Living Voices of Living Men," a collection of practical sermons by representative bishops and clergy of the American Church, among them Bishops Williams, Wilmer, Clark, Potter, Randolph, etc., and among the clergy are Drs. Dyer, Huntington, Satterlee, Shipman, Mulcahey, Cushman, Cooke, and others, mostly of New York City; "Sermons on Subjects from the Old Testament" by the English Bishop of Ely, and a companion, "Sermons on Subjects from the New Testament," by the same; "Sermons Preached to Harrow Boys in the Years 1885 and 1886," by Rev. J. E. C. Weldon, M.A., head master of Harrow School; "A Symposium on Evolution in Relation to Christian Doctrine;" "A Symposium on Non-Christian Religions;" "The Doctrine of Morality," lectures by Robert B. Fairbairn, D.D., warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y.; and "Five Last Things—Studies in Holy Scripture," by Jesse A. Spencer, S.T.D. "The Vine out of Egypt," by Rev. W. W. Newton, and "Sorrowing not Without Hope for those Sleeping in Jesus," have just been issued.

E. & J. B. Young & Co.

The Messrs Young are the American Agents for the London Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, whose publications are among the best of current contributions to popular religious literature, especially for the young. Their announcements for the present season are chiefly of importations from this source, and consist mainly of juveniles of excellent authorship and typography, many of them in fresh and novel bindings and all of them, we doubt not, to prove instinct with wisdom, piety, and love. One series, which, from the binding, may be called the "Peacock Feather Books," consists of four members, "Stories for Sunday Scholars," "Mrs. Barth's Girl," "With Hooks of Steel," and "Fox Holt." Another series, which for an analogous reason may be called "The Bird Books," runs to six volumes, namely, "Rex," "The Gold Makers," "A Treasure Lost," "All is Lost save Honour," "The Best Book," and "Nell's Bondage." These are all by different authors and are tastefully printed, with one illustration each. Of a smaller sort for younger readers are "A Minor Chord" and "Four Peas in a Pod;" for older readers "The Downward Course," "Three Stories for Working Girls," "Mère Suzanne" by Mrs. Macquoid, and "The Christmas Present." Approaching the proportions of novels are Mrs. Newman's "Her Will and Her Way," Frankfort Moore's "Tre, Pol and Pen," and "Adam Gorlake's Will." For youngest readers again will be "Sunday Reading for the Young," a handsome quarto picture book. The Messrs. Young will also have "Pictorial Architecture of Greece and Italy," an oblong folio handsomely illustrated, and a handful of beautifully illustrated miniature books decorated in colors by Cassell Bros. of London: "On the Wing," and "Heavenward," two day-books of Scripture and poetry, Mrs. Hemans's poem of "The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers" and Gray's "Elegy." They will also have a large line of Christmas cards of new design and a "Ewing Calendar for 1888." This latter is something entirely new. The Messrs. Young, we may add, are the American Agents for the publications of the Arundel Society.

POSTSCRIPT.

The announcements of the following publishers have reached us only as we go to press, too late for adequate statement or proper classification:

Cassell & Co.

New editions, new juveniles, and new miscellaneous books make up the list of Cassell & Co., the leading work under the latter head being an edition of "Shakespeare's Henry IV" with photogravure illustrations by Grutzner, a very handsome volume. The "Abbeys and Churches of England and Wales" are to be described by Rev. T. G. Bonney of London. Mr. W. Meynell's "Modern School of Art" will have over 125 engravings. Prof. Henry Morley continues his attempt towards a "History of English Literature" with a second volume. Mrs. Cone and Miss Gilder bring out two volumes of "Pen Portraits of Literary Women." Prominent among the new editions are Mr. Koehler's "Etching" and "American Art," Bonney's "Cathedral Churches of England" and Brereton's "Shakespearean Scenes and Characters," both beautifully illustrated; and among the more than twenty new juveniles a book of "Dog Stories" by Col. T. W. Knox, "Afloat in a Great City" by Frank A. Munsey, two series of story books, and several collections of short stories by favorite American writers.

Thomas Nelson & Sons.

From Nelson & Sons' long catalogue of autumn publications, mostly if not all of London make, we can select at this late moment only these items: three new "Color Books," one of them "Abiding in Thee," made up of selections from Miss Havergal and others; a handsomely illustrated volume of "Pictures from Holland," drawn with pen and pencil; an illustrated memorial edition of Newman's "Lead, Kindly Light;" "Jack Hooper," an adventure book by Verney Lovett Cameron; a new A. L. O. E. book, "Pictures of St. Peter in an English Home;" "Little Arthur at the Zoo," a book about animals by Mary Seymour; the "Casket Series," 18 vols. of small illustrated stories; the "Victory" and "Way to Win" series, 6 vols. each, both by Robina F. Hardy; three new books on geology and natural history by John Gibson of the Edinburgh Museum; stories of the "Early English Voyagers" and the "Spanish Armada;" Falconer's poem of "The Shipwreck" with illustrations by Birket Foster; "Souvenirs" of London, Glasgow, and the Clyde and West Highlands; six packets of new "Sunday School Cards," combining Bible texts and floral designs; four different kinds of "Daily Food" books; and new and improved editions of the famous "Oxford Teachers' Bible," in its various forms.

James Pott & Co.

October 25th will see the publication by Pott & Co. of Dr. Cunningham Geikie's "The Holy Land and the Bible," an important work of Scripture illustrations gathered in Palestine, in 2 vols. A few days earlier is promised "The Gospel Canticles and the Te Deum," by Rev. A. C. A. Hall, and the same author has in the same press "The Collects of the Prayer Book." Parkes's "Unfinished Worlds," an astronomical study by a prominent English scholar, will be ready in a few days. Archdeacon Farrar's "Books that have Influenced Me" and "Liddon's Sermons" in a new series will find many eager readers. Collingwood's "The Bible and the Age" and Dr. Egar's "Paddock Lectures" on "Christendom" are just ready. Lapide's Commentary on "The Holy Gospels" has been translated for the first time and will appear in 6 vols. There is a first American edition also of Greuber's "Holy Order," a collection of "Fragmentary Records of Jesus of Nazareth from the Letters of a Contemporary," and a volume of "Gospel Types and Shadows of the Old Testament" by Rev. Wm. Odom.

Miscellaneous.

Henry Holt & Co. have in preparation some school books and three or four novels which in these days of reprints they think are not of great importance; but nothing else which they consider of interest for this enumeration.

There appears to have been a slip of our pen in assigning to John C. Buckbee & Co. of Chicago, among recent announcements, Rev. S. L. Loomis's "Modern Cities and their Religious Problems" and Pierson's "Evangelistic Work in Principle and Practice." Both of these books are disclaimed by the Messrs. Buckbee, and we shall be glad to name the publishers correctly.

S. C. Griggs & Co. of Chicago, the publishers of Dr. William Mathews's books, announce a new collection of essays by him, entitled "Men, Places, and Things;" also as a sixth volume of their "German Philosophical Classics," Hegel's "Philosophy of the State and of History."

The New England Publishing Co. of Boston will shortly issue "Songs of History," a volume of poems and ballads upon important American events, collected and edited by Hezekiah Butterworth; also "Acts and Anecdotes of Authors," by Charles M. Barrows.

G. & C. Merriam & Co. of Springfield, Mass., are almost publishers of a single book, but that is in a sense the basis of all other books; and their editions of Webster's Dictionary furnish a standing announcement, probably, for all time to come. Besides the "Unabridged" they provide a "National Pictorial" dictionary, in smaller and cheaper form. Their imprint is also on two of Chitty's law works, his "Pleadings" and his treatise on "Bills."

The "Satires of Horace," edited by Prof. Greenough of Harvard College, the initial volume of the "College Series of Latin Authors," is now ready for the press of Ginn & Co. The "Epistles" will be issued in a few months and bound with the "Satires" in a single volume.

We very much regret that we have failed to receive from the New York house of E. P. Dutton & Co. any account of their forthcoming issues. Their books, often of English or Continental manufacture, are always a feature of the season. We presume we shall know more about them as the season advances.

The same as to Macmillan & Co.

C. A. Montgomery & Co., a young New York firm, are to make house and home books their specialty, and will shortly be ready with a number of tasteful and helpful little manuals instructive in the joint arts of house-keeping and home-making.

D. Van Nostrand, New York, confines himself to publications in theoretical and applied science, largely the latter, and all technological students have interest in his special catalogues, prominent items in the late issues of which are Haupt's "Manual of Engineering Specifications and Contracts," and Phillips's "Elements of Metallurgy," a large and important work.

The Baker & Taylor Co. of New York announce "Voice Culture and Elocution," by Wm. T. Ross, a practical work on the art of expression.

Rufus C. Hartranft of Philadelphia announces a volume of poems by Waldo Messaros of that city, a "poet-preacher," who is heralded as "master of the rhythmic sweetness of Longfellow, the weird beauty of Poe, and the subtle spirituality of Heine." We shall see.

Robert Clarke & Co. of Cincinnati announce for December the "Life of Rev. Manasseh Cutler, LL.D.," who was prominent in Massachusetts as a clergyman, scientist, and politician for fifty years prior to 1820. The work has been carefully prepared from his interleaved almanacs, journals, and correspondence, by his grandchildren, Miss Julia P. Cutler, and Hon. William P. Cutler, of Marietta, Ohio, and will be issued in two handsome octavo volumes. This firm has also in press for immediate publication a new work by Miss M. Louisa McLaughlin, entitled, "Painting in Oil, a Practical Manual for the Use of Students." All who are familiar with Miss McLaughlin's popular manuals on "China Painting" and "Pottery Decoration" will gladly welcome her new book.

Iverson, Blakeman & Co. have revised their "White's Industrial Drawings," a class book for schools, and will gladly send particulars of it and of their many other school publications to those wishing the same.

To Rand, McNally & Co.'s "Globe Library," in a series of paper-covered 25c. novels, will shortly be added Mr. John R. Musick's "Calamity Row" and F. C. Phillips's "A Lucky Young Woman," with others to follow.

The Christian Union of New York will publish immediately a full report of the Indian Conference at Lake Mohonk.

D. C. Heath & Co. have in press a translation of Compayre's "Lectures on Pedagogy," by Professor Payne of Michigan University.

Captain H. A. Ford of Detroit proposes to put into book form the series of chapters on Michigan geography which he is now carrying through the Michigan School Moderator.

Still another edition of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables" is announced, this time by Little, Brown & Co., mainly a reprint of Wrayall's translation, in 5 vols., printed at the Riverside Press.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Broken Vow. By the Rev. W. J. Knox Little. [London: Chapman & Hall, Limited. Sold in United States by E. & J. B. Young & Co. A short, unpretending story of the past and of the present; in which a broken vow of fidelity, in the plighting of troth by an ancestor in the days of Charles II, was held expiated by the faithfulness of his descendant the heroine who relates the story, and thereby the uneasy spirits of the actors in the tragedy of the past are permitted to enjoy rest. The interwoven thread of the supernatural is made to add a coloring to the work rather devotional and religious than sensational. There is but little plot, the greatest charm in the narrative being in its pure and elevated style — appropriately characteristic of the beautiful and almost saintly character of the heroine. The story may be commended for parish libraries.

The Growth of Church Institutions. By the Rev. Edwin Hatch, M.A., D.D. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.] These two hundred and fifty pages with broad margins give a popular summary of the views concerning the development of the diocese, the parish, the fixed tenure of the priest, the benefits, tithes, the metropolitan, national churches, the canonical rule, the cathedral chapter, and the chancel. Dr. Hatch has studied with great thoroughness the obscure field which lies between the fall of the Roman Empire and the political settlement of mediæval Europe. He has the true historical instinct, and is quite free from all theories which could hinder his tracing the natural origin and history of the institution with which he deals. Thus, while holding that the early church practiced the congregational system, he considers it a sufficient justification of the existing diocesan system that it grew up under the exigencies of a Christianity surviving from the old Roman world to convert the Teutonic nations. Dr. Hatch deals with the minor institutions of the church as compared with Dean Stanley's work in the same field, but his book is no unworthy supplement.

The Teaching of Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S. [Macmillan & Co. 60c.] Instead of burdening the learner's mind with lists of names and other details from textbooks, the proper way to teach geography, as this author conceives it, is to train young students in habits of personal observation, especially in the country or region nearest the school, and to develop their powers of thought — in brief what we might perhaps term the empirical method, so far as it may be applicable to geography. The suggestions given as to the best methods of so teaching seem to us to involve vast labor and no small analytic power in the mind of the teacher; enough to deter many from becoming Dr. Geikie's disciples. Yet the only decisive test is that of the class-room, and it may be that the author's great enthusiasm for his subject will inspire and benefit the teachers who study his hints and instructions.

The Girls' Book of Famous Queens. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer. [Illustrated. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.] Here are sixteen sketches illustrative of important periods in history, from the somewhat legendary story of Semiramis to the present wonderfully progressive era of Victoria. The writing is singularly unequal; with bright, vivacious style and powers of description, and full vocabulary, the author falls into numerous errors of language, and further is so deficient in the power of orderly chronological narration that some of the sketches present an absolute chaos of confused history, opinions (often quoted from other writers), and miscellaneous observations. The book is profusely illustrated with portraits and other appropriate engravings.

The Minor Poems of John Milton. Edited, with notes, by Wm. J. Rolfe. [Harper & Bros. 56c.] Dr. Rolfe adds to his series of text-books for the study of English poets a collection of Milton's Minor Poems, with notes, and with an introduction of some length, part of which is an original sketch of Milton's life and literary career, and part an extract from the elder Channing's essay on Milton, just published in the Christian Examiner in 1826. The text proper includes thirty poems, but in an appendix are added eight early or incomplete pieces which the editor did not at first intend to include. Among them the student of John Milton may find the famous "Hymn of Christ's Nativity," "L'Allegro" and "Il Penseroso," "Comus" and "Lycidas," eighteen sonnets, and other minor poetical writings of the great author of "Paradise Lost" and "Found" and the "Areopagitica." The notes are copious, filling nearly the second half of the book.

God's Words to His Children. Sermons Spoken and Unspoken, by George MacDonald, LL.D. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50.] The twenty-four sermons that make up this volume have been selected from a variety of sources. The Annals of a Quiet Neighborhood and the Seaboard Parish have contributed some of the discourses, while the Miracles of Our Lord and the Christian World Pulpit have supplied others, the larger number being taken from Unspoken Sermons. The latter have been abridged somewhat to make the book serviceable for lay readers. The union of the practical and the mystical elements in Dr. MacDonald's mind makes him a rare preacher of religion, his exhortations to righteousness being based upon the deepest foundation of a spiritual faith. The collection is excellently adapted to the purpose for which it has been made.

Just what principles actuated Mr. Swinburne in the preparation of his volume of Select Poems [Worthington & Co. $1.50] we have not been able to determine. The process of thorough elutriation to which he has subjected his work has cleared it of all offensive particles, but it has also weakened it. In place of the rich wine of genius heretofore proffered in gorgeous chalices we have transient draughts of a much less potent liquor in cups of common clay. It is evident that to Mr. Swinburne himself at least the sole quality for which he claims distinction is what Mr. Stedman has with perhaps pardonable exaggeration called a "miraculous gift of rhythm." Most—nearly all—of the selections here offered are merely studies in versification, magnificent specimens of word-mongering, with scarcely a discernible thought behind them to give them strength. A third of the volume is made up of sea poems, such as "On the Verge," "By the North Sea," "In the Salt Marshes," "Off Shore;" then comes "The Caves of Sark," exalting Victor Hugo to the rank of the Deity; after which "Hertha," "A Year's Burden," "A Sunset," two or three of the well-known poems of children, "Itylus," and uninspiring extracts from "Tristram," "Atalanta in Calydon," "Erectheus," "Marino Faliero," and "Mary Stuart." Surely, if Mr. Swinburne is remembered a hundred years hence it will not be because of this weak libation to the goddess of fame.

The Blood of Abel, by Wilbur F. Bryant, would appear by its exterior to be a poem by an amateur. It proves to be a political pamphlet, sketching first the history and condition of British North America, and then presenting a warm defense of the character and career of Louis Riel, who was hanged in Canada for high treason in November, 1885. A full biography of Riel can be found in these pages. Mr. Bryant claims that he was an American citizen and that his death was a martyrdom. It is a pity that this really important historical monograph should appear under such a misleading title. [Hastings, Neb.: Published for the author.]

The J. B. Lippincott Co. have put into paper covers, as No. 77 of their "Select Novels," Mrs. Leith Adams's Madelon Lemoine, first published here in 1879, one of the noblest and sweetest of modern novels. It belongs to the best class of English fiction, a lofty and uplifting story, full of varied charm, and certain to find new admirers in its new and cheaper form. [25c.]

We have received in handsomely printed pamphlet form Administrative Reform as an Issue in the Next Presidential Campaign, by Gen. C. C. Andrews of Saint Paul, Minn., a strong argument showing the need of reform politically, economically, and morally; one which should be a useful instrument towards molding the public sentiment which is a necessary condition of progress. President Cleveland receives somewhat unfavorable criticism for his imperfect adherence to reform principles. [Sold by news-dealers. Paper, 10c.]

Of Rand, McNally & Co's series of "indexed county, township, and sectional maps, and ship-owners' guides," we have recently received that of Ohio, Michigan, Ontario, and Maryland and Delaware, whose useful information for an office includes prominently the exhibition of railways in their main and branch lines, with the express company doing business on each; mail, telegraph and money-order stations; and population of towns. [Paper, 25c.] From the same publishers we have also a smaller indexed railroad and county map of New York. [25c.]

Harper & Brothers have republished the Memoirs of Wilhelmine, Margravine of Baireuth, reviewed on p. 227 of the present volume of the Literary World, making out of the sumptuous original octavo a small but neat 16mo of 454 broad pages. The Margravine's portrait is reproduced on wood.

PERIODICALS.

Of the Atlantic nowadays we find ourselves making with each number the mental comment, "better than the last." Surely no one understands better than the present editors of this magazine how to maintain the delicate crescendo of interest unbroken. In the October issue Dr. Holmes takes a final survey of England through those delightful rose-colored spectacles of his that have shown no dimness with the lapse of time. He thinks he foresees a period when Americans will desire to migrate to the old home, but at present he confesses that Boston is good enough for anybody. Miss Cooper affords us another glance at the life of her novelist father when he was in Italy in 1829-30. Theodore Child reviews the recent Millet exhibition at Paris, and finds that the chief interest of Millet's work is moral and literary rather than artistic. The "sufferings" of Millet, he thinks, have been exaggerated. Percival Lowell continues his examination of Oriental character, and makes some piquant revelations concerning the influence of impersonality on language. E. H. House contributes anecdotes of Charles Reade. There is a rather forced tale of transferred identity by Lucretia P. Hale and E. L. Bynner.

Harper's for October has that quality of general excellence which appeals to many and diverse tastes. Kate Field leads off with an account of a disastrous summer's outing, and A. B. Frost supplies illustrations therefor. W. E. Curtis has an account of the romantic history of Costa Rica; Henry James analyzes the artistic genius of John Sargent; Dr. J. F. Hurst describes the dead Portuguese city of Goa in India and Mrs. R. H. Davis continues her impressions of the South—all of these papers are fully and exquisitely illustrated. Also illustrated, and in the most charming manner imaginable, is "A Love Song" by Wither, from drawings by F. A. Abbey engraved by Mr. French. Dr. Titus Munson Coan discusses the curative uses of water with his accustomed perspicacity; and Miss Woolson unfolds a graceful romance from the chateau of Corinne. The poetry of the number includes a stirring love lyric, "Aaron Burr's Wooing," by E. C. Stedman.

The Thackeray letters come to an end in Scribner's for October with a batch of notes written during the American tour of 1852-3. They are kindly, but tinged with melancholy. Thackeray was evidently much impressed with the generous ardor of Americans:

There's something simple in the way these kind folks regard a man; they read our books as if we were Fielding, and so forth. The other night some men were talking of Dickens and Bulwer as if they were equal to Shakespeare, and I was pleased to find myself pleased at hearing them praised. The prettiest girl in Philadelphia, poor soul, has read Vanity Fair twelve times. I paid her a great big compliment yesterday, about her good looks of course, and she turned round delighted to her friend, and said, "Ai most tallut," that is something like the pronunciation. . . . There was a young quakeress at the lecture last night, listening about Fielding. Lord! Lord! how pretty she was!

Henry O. Avery writes of the Paris School of Fine Arts; W. C. Brownell, acutely, of French sense and sentiment; Prof. Shaler, learnedly and agreeably, of caverns and cavern life; Gamaliel Bradford, demanding greater executive power, of municipal government; and Louis Swinburne, with abundant examples, of the bucolic dialect of the plains. Scribner's is always refined and original, and its illustrations are a continual pleasure.

We notice in the American Magazine a constant improvement in literary quality and a mechanical excellence that is not put to shame by any rival. The October number has an account of an ascent of Popocatepetl by Arthur H. Noll; a good paper on China by C. B. Adams; an account of the building of the Washington Monument by Oscar Foote; and Anna B. McMahan argues that the young women of America are shortly to surpass their brothers in intellectual development, since the majority of girls, by means of clubs and other organizations, are now continually improving their minds, while their male rivals are expending their energies on billiards and base-ball!

There are some recollections of W. D. Howells in Lippincott's for October by L. R. McCabe, who knew the then future novelist in Columbus, O., in 1851, when he was a shy, awkward lad, an eager student, a persistent versifier, a writer of stories that were "deficient in plot and incident, and consequently failed to interest his auditors," and a newspaper compositor "at a salary of four dollars per week." Mr. McCabe repeats the story relating how Mr. Howells put money in a bank and did not know how to get it out; but we believe that Mr. Howells has denied the truth of that much-worn anecdote. Junius Henri Browne deplores the inadequate material rewards of manuscript-making. The experiences of a wood-engraver as related by J. H. E. Whitney form an interesting revelation of character. L. R. Haupt sets forth still another recipe for reforming the administration of public works. The complete novel is "Apple Seed and Brier Thorn," by Louise Stockton.

Numbering a good many clergymen among our readers, we have been intending for some time to direct their attention to The Homiletic Review, a monthly magazine intended especially for the use of preachers as a help to pulpit preparation. The September number affords an excellent opportunity. The seven leading articles are all distinctly related to the form and manner and matter of public discourse, and the opening one, "by an eminent professor of homiletics," whose name is not given, is the most searching and severe criticism of the literary merits of Rev. Phillips Brooks's published sermons that we have seen, while thoroughly kindly and appreciative in spirit. The "Sermonic Section" of the number contains a variety of specimen sermons of the day, in full or in brief. Following are some twenty or thirty pages of practical and illustrative matter, much of it suggestive in a wholesome way. Professor Alexander Winchell, Dr. Stuckenburg, Dr. R. L. Dabney, Dr. R. S. Storrs, Dr. J. A. Broadus, Dr. J. M. Sherwood, Dr. Wm. C. Wilkinson, Dr. J. M. Ludlow, and Professor Hoppin are among the contributors this month. In several respects clergymen will find this monthly a useful tool. [Funk & Wagnalls. $2.50 a year.]

— We read in the Athenæum or Academy that "Judge" Thomas Hughes is writing a life of

Dr. Livingstone for Macmillan's "Men of Action"; that Mr. R. H. Shepherd is revising his four-volume edition of Shelley's works published in 1872-5; and that Mr. F. S. Ellis has completed his Shelley Concordance so far as the poems are concerned.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

THE BLOOD OF ABEL. By Wilbur F. Bryant. Hastings, Nebraska: Gazette Journal Co.

A MEMOIR OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON. By James Elliot Cabot. 2 vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.50

MEMOIRS OF WILHELMINE, MARGRAVINE OF BALTIC. Tr. and edited by Her Royal Highness Princess Christian. Harper & Brothers.

THE STORY OF THE LIFE OF QUEEN VICTORIA TOLD FOR BOYS AND GIRLS ALL OVER THE WORLD. By W. W. Tullock. Revised by Her Majesty. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25

Essays and Sketches.

WHAT TO DO? Thoughts Evolved by the Census of Moscow. By Count Lyof N. Tolstol. Tr. from the Russian by Isabel F. Haggood. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

THE LOST WEDDING-RING. By Mrs. Winter and Mrs. Boy. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.

Fiction.

BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER; OR, THE TOMPKINS MYSTERY. By John R. Musick. J. S. Ogilvie & Co. $1.00

PATTY'S PERVERSITIES. By Arlo Bates. Ticknor & Co. Paper Series. 50c.

PHOSPHORUS HOLLUNDER. Nouvelle von Louise d'François. Explanatory Notes by Oscar Faulhaber, Ph.D. For school use. D. C. Heath & Co. Paper.

THE BROKEN VOW. A Story of Here and Hereafter. By W. J. Knox Little. London: Chapman & Hall. New York: E. & J. B. Young. 75c.

THE GREAT BANK ROBBERY. From the Diary of Inspector Byrnes. By Julian Hawthorne. Cassell & Co. $1.00

HIS HELPMATE. By Frank Bassett. D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 30c.

THE ROMANCE OF THE CANONESSE. From the German of Paul Heyse. D. Appleton & Co. Paper. 50c.

THE CONFESSIONS OF A FRIVOLOUS GIRL. By Robert Grant. Ticknor & Co. Paper Series. 50c.

A PRINCESS OF JAVA. A Tale of the Far East. By S. J. Higginson. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE. The Story of an Old Boat and her Crew. With 184 Illustrations. George Routledge & Sons. Paper.

TARTARIN OF TARASCON. Illustrated. George Routledge & Sons.

THE COSSACKS. A Tale of the Caucasus in 1852. By Count Leo Tolstoy. Tr. by Eugene Schuyler. Revised Edition. W. S. Gottsberger. 90c.

MIGNON'S HUSBAND. By John Strange Winter. Harper & Brothers. Handy Series. Paper. 25c.

GRETCHEN. By Mrs. Mary J. Holmes. New York: G. W. Dillingham.

A BOOK FOR THE HAMMOCK. By W. Clark Russell. Harper & Brothers. Franklin Square Library. 20c.

MADON LEMOINE. By Mrs. Seith Adams. J. B. Lippincott Co. Paper. 25c.

LES MISÉRABLES. Par Victor Hugo. Troisième partie. Marius. W. R. Jenkins.

LOVE AND THEOLOGY. By Celia Parker Woolley. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

THE GATES BETWEEN. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

A VILLAGE MAID. By Helen Hays. T. Whittaker. $1.25

WHO SAVED THE SHIP AND THE MAN OF THE FAMILY. By Jak. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

History.

NARRATIVE AND CRITICAL HISTORY OF AMERICA. Edited by Justin Winsor. Vol. IV. French Explorations and Settlements in North America and those of the Portuguese, Dutch, and Swedes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $5.00

THE SIEGE AND FALL OF CONSTANTINOPLE; OR, THE LAST ROMAN STRUGGLE IN THE EAST. By Felicio F. Canuti. Pittsburgh: J. N. Ludwig. 25c.

TRANS-ALLEGHENY PIONEERS. Historical Sketches of the First White Settlements West of the Alleghenies, 1748 and After. By John P. Hale. Cincinnati: S. C. Cox & Co.

THE STUDENT'S HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PARLIAMENT IN ITS TRANSFORMATIONS THROUGH A THOUSAND YEARS. By Rudolf Gneist. New English Edition, re-written, with a complete index. By Prof. A. H. Keane. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00

Juvenile.

ESTHER. A Book for Girls. By Rosa Nouchette Carey. Illus. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.25

MATTIE'S SECRET. By Émile Desbeaux. 100 illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons.

THREE GOOD GIANTS WHOSE FAMOUS DEEDS ARE RECORDED IN THE ANCIENT CHRONICLES OF FRANÇOIS RABELAIS. Compiled from the French by John Dimitry. Illustrated by G. Doré and O. Robida. Ticknor & Co. $1.50

NEW FAIRY TALES FROM BRENTANO. Told in English by Kate Freilgrath Kroeker, and pictured by F. Carruthers Gould. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $2.00

ON SPECIAL SERVICE. A Tale of Life at Sea. By Gordon Stables. Illus. A. C. Armstrong & Co.

Literature and Language.

LES MISÉRABLES BY VICTOR HUGO. Tr. from the French by Isabel F. Haggood. Illustrated edition. In Five Volumes. Vol. I. Fantine. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

Poetry.

MY BEAUTIFUL LADY, AND NELLY DALE. By Thomas Woolner, R.A. Cassell & Co. Paper. 10c.

LIEDER UND SPRÜCHE. Munich: Verlag von J. N. Finsterlin. Milwaukee: C. N. Caspar. $1.00

WIND FLOWERS. By J. Luella Dowd Smith. C. H. Kert & Co. $1.50

THE UNSEEN KING, AND OTHER VERSES. By Caroline Leslie Field. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

SONGS AND SONG LEGENDS. By Edward Lippett Fales, St. Paul, Minn. Published by the author. $1.00

THE TEMPLE. By George Herbert. Cassell & Co. National Library. 10c.

AN OPERETTA IN PROFILE. By Czeika. Ticknor & Co. $1.00

M. TULLI CICERONIS CATO MAIOR ET LÆLIUS. With an Introduction and Commentary by Austin Stickney. Harper & Brothers.

THE MINOR POEMS OF JOHN MILTON. Edited with Notes by Wm. J. Rolfe. Harper & Brothers. 50c.

THE OLD GARDEN AND OTHER VERSES. By Margaret Deland. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

Science and Philosophy.

THE TEACHING OF GEOGRAPHY. By Archibald Geikie. Macmillan & Co. $1.00

APPLETON'S PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. Illustrated. D. Appleton & Co. $1.90

POCKET MAP OF OHIO. Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.

HEALTH LESSONS. A Primary Book. By Jerome Walker, M.D. D. Appleton & Co.

STORIES OF HEROIC DEEDS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. Historical Series. Book II. By James Johnnot. D. Appleton & Co.

TEN GREAT EVENTS IN HISTORY. Historical Series. Book IV. Part II. By James Johnnot. D. Appleton & Co.

ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM AS AN ISSUE IN THE NEXT PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN. By General C. C. Andrews. Minnesota News Co. Paper. 10c.

STEAM YACHTS AND LAUNCHES: Their Machinery and Management, etc. By C. P. Kunhardt. New York: Forest and Stream Publishing Co. $3.00

PHILOSOPHY OF THEISM. By Borden P. Bowne. Harper & Brothers.

THE EARTH IN SPACE. A Manual of Astronomical Geography. By Edward P. Jackson. D. C. Heath & Co. 35c.

CHAUVENET'S TREATISE ON ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY. Revised and Abridged by W. E. Byerly. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.40

PART I. CONSCIOUS MOTHERHOOD. By Emma Masurdel. Supplemented by Part II. Extracts from Prof. Preyer's The Soul of the Child. Interstate Publishing Co.

ANIMAL LIFE IN THE SEA AND ON THE LAND. A Zoology for Young People. By Sarah Cooper. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers.

FEDERAL TAXES AND STATE EXPENSES. By Wm. H. Jones. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

SEA SPRAY; OR, FACTS AND FANCIES OF A YACHTSMAN. Benjamin & Bell. Paper. 50c.

Theology and Religion.

UPLIFTS OF HEART AND WILL. A Series of Religious Meditations, or Aspirations, Addressed to Earnest Men and Women. By James H. West. C. H. Kerr & Co. 50c.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE. By Joseph Parker. Vol. VI. Judges vi-1 Samuel xviii. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50

THE VINE OUT OF EGYPT. By the Rev. Wm. Wilberforce Newton. Thomas Whittaker. Paper. 50c.

ACCORDING TO PROMISE; OR, THE LORD'S METHOD OF DEALING WITH HIS CHOSEN PEOPLE. By C. H. Spurgeon. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.

Travel and Observation.

THE ICELANDIC DISCOVERERS OF AMERICA; OR, HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE. Illustrated. By Marie A. Brown. London: Marie E. Brown.

A VOYAGE TO LISBON. By Henry Fielding. Cassell & Co. Paper. 10c.

TRAVELS IN THE INTERIOR OF AFRICA. By Mungo Park. Vol. II. Cassell & Co. Popular Library. 10c.

COURT LIFE IN EGYPT. By Alfred J. Butler. Illus. Scribner & Welford.

TWO YEARS IN EUROPE. By Prof. Rodney Gilsan, M.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

THE ANCIENT CITIES OF THE NEW WORLD. By Désiré Charnay. Tr. from the French by J. Gonino and Helen S. Conant. Harper & Brothers.

A VALUABLE WORK.

The Reign of Queen Victoria

A Survey of Fifty Years of Progress.

Edited by J. Humphrey Ward. Two vols., 8vo., 1,250 Pages, extra cloth, $8.00.

"The book is the best survey of the progressive movements of its period; its period is the most instructive half-century in the history of civilization; the scene is the country which has moved furthest forward in those things which most concern mankind. With such a book, an intelligent mind cannot go amiss; and there is hardly a person who will not be strengthened and refreshed by pausing in his ordinary work or study, and reviewing here what the human race has done for itself in his own time."—The Nation.

"The volumes are a very concise and complete epitome of the nation's history during the period. The editor has been assisted in his work by several eminent literary men, and the accurate statistics and painstaking labor to make the book one of value is everywhere apparent. There could scarcely be a more admirable summing up of historical events more pleasingly told."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"All through, these volumes abound in well-written monographs. It is delightful, in days when cheap and careless literature is everywhere to be found, to come across intellectual work where men have not spared themselves to reach the best results. Here one may see as in a glass what England has achieved in half a century of progress, and the survey is one of the things which a thinking man cannot afford to ignore."—Boston Herald.

"It is well worth while for an American to buy the book, if only to read what Huxley says, or Dr. Garnett, or Mr. Arnold."—Philadelphia Press.

"The plan of the work involved the bringing together of a number of essays by special authorities upon leading topics. The merits of the work are manifold. All the articles, being written for the express purpose of showing how great the advance has been during the last fifty years, of course succeed in the demonstration. Lord Justice Bowen's paper on the Administration of Law is by no means dry. In nothing have the changes for the better been more numerous than in this branch of government, and this is strikingly illustrated by a review of the state of the law when Queen Victoria came to the throne. Nothing that Dickens ever wrote about Chancery is stronger than some of the statements here made, and made with unimpeachable authority."—New York Tribune.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 West 23d St., N. Y.

A Selection of Early Fall Publications.

KNICKERBOCKER NUGGETS.

A Selection of some of the World's Classics, uniquely and tastefully printed by the Knickerbocker Press, and offered as specimens, as well as of artistic typography as of the best literature. 32mo, cloth extra, gilt top, $1.00 per volume unless otherwise specified.

I.—Gesta Romanorum. Tales of the Old Monks. Edited by C. Swan. $1.00.

II.—Headlong Hall and Nightmare Abbey. By THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK. $1.00.

III.—Gulliver's Travels. By JONATHAN SWIFT. A reprint of the early complete edition, very fully illustrated. 2 vols. $2.50.

IV.—Tales from Irving. 2 vols. $2.00. With illustrations.

V.—The Book of British Ballads. Edited by S. C. HALL. A facsimile of the original edition, with illustrations by Creswick, Gilbert, and others. $1.50.

VI.—The Travels of Baron Munchausen. Reprinted from the early, complete edition. Very fully illustrated. $1.25.

VII.—Letters, Sentences and Maxims. By LORD CHESTERFIELD. With a critical essay by C. A. Sainte-Beuve.

VIII.—The Vicar of Wakefield. By GOLDSMITH. With the beautiful illustrations of Stothard.

IRVING'S BELLES-LETTRES WORKS.

THE TAPPAN-ZEE EDITION, comprising "S. etch-Book," "Knickerbocker," "Bracebridge," "Traveler," "Alhambra," "Crayon," and "Wolfert's Roost." Twelve volumes, 32mo, beautifully printed from new type, cloth extra, $12.00. The same in oak case, with bronze bust of Irving, prepared expressly for this edition, from a design by the eminent sculptor John Rogers, $16.00.

. An exquisite little set of books.

DECISIVE BATTLES SINCE WATERLOO

A Continuation of Cressey's "Decisive Battles of the World." By Colonel THOMAS W. KEOX, author of the "Life of Fulton," "Travels of Marco Polo," etc. Octavo, with 19 plans and illustrations, $2.50.

"The battles here described possess an interest for the student of military tactics and strategy. The book has, however, for its further purpose, the idea of presenting an outline survey of the history of the nineteenth century, considered from the point of view of its chief military events. It is the author's hope that the results of his labors may help to make clear the character and relative importance of these events, and to indicate their influence in shaping the history of our own times."—Author's Preface.

HISTORIC GIRLS.

Stories of Girls Who have Influenced the History of Their Times. By E. S. BROWN. Octavo, illustrated. Uniform with "Historic Boys" and "Chivalric Days" by the same author, $2.25.

CONTENTS:—I. Elizabeth of Tudor: The Girl of the Hertford Manor—II. Zenobia of Palmyra—III. Clothilda of Burgundy: The Girl of the French Vineyards—IV. Pulcheria of Constantinople: The Girl of the Golden Horn—V. Woo of Hwang-Ho: The Girl of the Yellow River—VI. Edith of Scotland: The Girl of the Norman Abbey—VII. Jacqueline of Holland: The Girl of the Land of Fogs—VIII. Catarina of Venice: The Girl of the Grand Canal.

KALOO LAH.

The Adventures of Jonathan Remer. By W. S. MAYO. The "Framasuga" edition. Reset and very fully illustrated by Alfred Fredericks, and handsomely printed in quarto, cloth extra, $3.00.

Of this celebrated work more than 25,000 copies have been sold in this country, exclusive of a number of unauthorized English editions, and it is justly entitled to enduring popularity.

"One of the most admirable pictures ever produced in this country."—Washington Irving.

"The most singular and captivating romance since 'Robinson Crusoe.'"—Home Journal.

LAND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW, THE

A Series of Photo-gravure Representations of Scenes about the Home of Washington Irving, with Descriptive Letter-Press and Notes. By J. L. WILLIAMS. Together with a reprint of Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and selections from the "Chronicles of Wolfert's Roost."

The volume has been prepared as a souvenir for those who have visited this charming region, as well as to present to those who have not been thus fortunate a realistic series of illustrations of such scenes mentioned in the text as can certainly be localized.

LIST OF FULL-PAGE PHOTO-GRAVURES:—I. Interior View of Irving's Study at Sunnyside—II. View of Sunnyside—III. Porch of Sunnyside—IV. Sunnyside from the River—V. Highlands of the Hudson—VI. Sunnyside Lane—VII. The Brook at Sunnyside—VIII. Cascade near Sunnyside—IX. X., XI., XII. Views on the Pocantico—XIII. XIV. The Old Mill and Manor House of Frederick Philipse—XV. The Old Dutch Church at Sleepy Hollow—XVI. Sleepy Hollow Cemetery—XVII. Carr's Mill—XVIII. View in Sleepy Hollow—XIX. "The Bridge Famous in Goblin Story"—XX. Sunset on the Hudson.

In addition to the above there are ten text illustrations and six full-page illustrations by F. O. C. Darley, originally designed and etched for the folio edition of the "Legend of Sleepy Hollow."

The volume is printed in large folio size, 11 x 14, and the edition is limited to 600 copies. The subscription price is $15.00. Full prospectus sent on receipt of stamp.

THE DAWN OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLAND.

A Social Sketch of the Times. By JOHN ASHTON. With many illustrations drawn by the author from contemporary engravings. Second and popular edition. Octavo, cloth extra, gilt top, $3.50.

"Suffice it to say that no more interesting work on the subject of these eventful times in English history has been published. . . . The illustrations are reproductions of many rare prints not found in any other book."—Keynote.

THE LIFE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Studied anew by EDWARD EVERETT HALE, author of "Man without a Country," "Ten Times One is Ten," etc. Large 12mo. Fully illustrated. In the Library of American Biography.

"I have been satisfied for some years that the time had come for a new view of the life and character of George Washington, a view to be taken after a careful study of his own memoranda prepared for the history of his own life. As the reader of this book will learn, Washington left, arranged in careful order, perhaps more materials for his biography than any man of his century; but a certain habit of deifying him has thus far prevented writers of his life from approaching the study of the man in the way in which writers would address themselves to most biographical subjects. . . . It has been my aim, using in my narrative chiefly the diaries and letters of the man himself, to present to the new generation of Americans the human Washington in such a way that they may have some conception of the man and of the advantages and the disadvantages with which he worked through his great career."—Extra from Author's Preface.

List of autumn publications, and separate circulars of the "Story of the Nations," and other series, sent on application.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

Horsford's
ACID PHOSPHATE
[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Just Out.
Some Things Abroad.

By ALEXANDER MCKENZIE, D. D.
12mo, $1.50.

A summer vacation in Europe and corners of Asia and Africa gone over again by lamp and fireside.

Just Out.
True Stories of American Wars.

By as many Authors as Stories.
12mo, $1.25.

If anything can awaken in boys and girls a desire to know the history of their country, it is such tales as these.

Just Out.
Eighty-Seven.

By "PANSY" (Mrs. G. R. ALDER).
12mo, $1.50.

A religious novel, setting forth the work of Chautauqua among the people.

Just Out.
Chautauqua Idyl.

By GRACE LIVINGSTONE.
12mo, 75 cents.

A poetic or allegorical setting forth of Chautauqua.

Just Out.
American Authors for Young Folks.

By AMANDA B. HARRIS.
12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Not exhaustive essays upon, but rather clews to, our writers, who need not be named for their eminence, and whom not to know is not to know the American part in English letters.

Just Out.
Royal Girls and Royal Courts.

By M. E. W. SHERWOOD.
12mo, $1.25.

Practical lessons in American courtesy as well as entertaining sketches of scenes where etiquette is made.

All at the bookstores everywhere.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY,
PUBLISHERS,
Franklin and Hawley Streets, Boston.

RUSSIA.

In Pursuit of Happiness is a book of four characteristic stories by Count Leo Tolstoi, all of them strong with a sort of strength refreshing to meet; just ready; 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Russian Novelists, from the French of Vte. E. M. Vogüé by J. L. Edmands, is the first accessible information on Russian writers and their works; 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

Midnight Sun: Tsar and Nihilist, recently published, is a brilliant sketch of travel in Northern Europe by one of the keenest Americans of our time, Dr. James M. Buckley; 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

What People Live By, a story by Count Tolstoi, published last year; 8vo, cloth, $1.00.

At the bookstores everywhere.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY,
Boston.

How to Cook Well is a book for the million American families that want to live well at small cost. Published by Lothrop, Boston. $1.50.
The bookstores have it.

Unexpected Help in picking out books for S. S. libraries.

Not a perfect guide—that is too much to expect—but excellent help.

Let no S. S. officer fail to see it.

Sent free.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY,
Publishers of S. S. books, Boston.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE IN PREPARATION:

WEATHER:

A POPULAR EXPOSITION OF THE NATURE OF WEATHER CHANGES FROM DAY TO DAY. By the Hon. RALPH ABERCROMBY, Fellow of the Royal Meteorological Society, London. "International Scientific Series."

THE LAWYER, THE STATESMAN, AND THE SOLDIER.

By the Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL.

OUR HEREDITY FROM GOD:

LECTURES ON EVOLUTION. By the Rev. E. P. POWELL. (Just ready.)

EVOLUTION AND ITS RELATION TO RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

By Prof. JOSEPH LE CONTE.

LIFE and LETTERS of CHARLES DARWIN.

With an Autobiographic Chapter. By FRANCIS DARWIN.

THE EDUCATION OF MAN.

By FRIEDRICH FROMBEL. "International Education Series."

THE ELEMENTS OF POLITICAL ECONOMY.

By Prof. J. LAURENCE LAUGHLIN.

ANIMAL MAGNETISM.

From the French of ALFRED BINET and CHARLES FERN. "International Scientific Series."

APPLETONS' ATLAS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Consisting of a Colored County Map of each of the States, and general maps of the United States, with full descriptive text.

A GUIDE TO SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

By Dr. J. P. WINDEY and Dr. WALTER LINDLEY.

THE DIVINE MAN.

By the Rev. GEORGE D. BOARDMAN, D. D.

GOOD FORM IN ENGLAND.

By L. J. RANSOM.

THE RIGHT HONORABLE.

A Novel. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY and Mrs. CAMPBELL H. PRAND.

THE GEOLOGICAL HISTORY OF PLANTS.

By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON.

A HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN FOSSIL MAMMALS.

By Dr. HENRY F. OSBORN, Professor of Comparative Anatomy, and Dr. W. B. SCOTT, Professor of Geology and Paleontology, in Princeton College.

1, 3 & 5 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

The Best Preparation for Housekeeping is a
WIRE GAUZE DOOR

As Used Exclusively in the

NEW HUB RANGE.

PERFECT COOKING

Is the most important item in the domestic economy. By using the Wire Gauze Oven Door with the New Hub Range, the skill of the cook is supplemented by the most perfect cooking apparatus ever made.

Three of the Hub Ranges with Wire Gauze Oven Doors are in constant use at the famous Boston Cooking School, and are endorsed by them as being better than all others. Insist on your dealer giving you the New Hub Range. It is the very highest grade of cooking apparatus made, and, when quality is considered, is the lowest in price of any in the market. Over 100,000 Hub Ranges in use. The Hub line of goods are world-renowned, and are sold by dealers everywhere. Special circulars sent on application.

SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO.,

Manufacturers of Hub Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces,
53 & 54 Union Street, Boston, Mass.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

FOR

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 P. M.

Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.
A. A. FOLSOM, Supt. P. & B. R. R.

WHEN YOU GO TO

TROY OR ALBANY

Take the EXPRESS TRAIN leaving Boston at 10.30 P. M. daily, Sundays excepted, via Heeac Tunnel Route, arriving at Troy 6.55 A. M. and Albany 7.35 A. M., connecting with Morning Trains via D. & H. C. Co., West Shore and New York Central Railroads, for all points North and West. Palace Sleeping Cars, Passenger Coaches and Baggage Cars run through without change from Boston to Troy and Albany. For Tickets, Sleeping-Car accommodations and further information, apply at the Company's Office, 250 Washington St., Ticket Office Fitchburg Railroad, CAUSEWAY STREET STATION, BOSTON, or any authorized Ticket Agent in New England.

J. E. WATSON,
Gen. Pass. Agent.

A. V. FISHER,
Trav. Pass. Agent.

The Literary World.

E. H. HAMES & CO., Boston.

OFFICE:

Congregational House, Beacon and Somerset Sts., Room 11,

Published every other Saturday, at $3.00 per year in advance.

ADVERTISING RATES:

First page, per line, 20 cents.
Other advertising pages, 10 "
Or $30.00 per column, each insertion.

All papers are continued until there is a specific order to stop; but such an order can be given at any time, to take effect at the expiration of the subscription.

EDWARD ABBOTT.

EDWARD H. HAMES.

Composition by Theo. Todd. Presswork by A. Mudge & Son.

Nims & Knight, Troy, N. Y.

FALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

An Illustrated Gift-Book.

Our Wedding Souvenir.

A novelty in book making that will find ready sale among all who are married, or who contemplate marriage. It consists of a series of beautiful lithographed floral designs by Annetta A. Bassett, Lydia F. Emmett, Eleanor E. Greston and other artists, pretty landscapes in sepia and tint by Louis K. Harlow, and is intended as a souvenir for the preservation of the signatures of the parties interested, relatives and guests. Spaces are left for photographs, wedding cards, newspaper notices, etc. The lithographic work is from the press of Armstrong & Co., and is of the finest kind—the whole making a quarto volume. Cloth binding, with photo-gravure design by W. St. John Harper, on side and back, each page mounted on guards, $5.00; full padded American seal, on guards, $8.00; full tree calf, on guards, $10.00.

Song of the Brook Calendars for 1888.

The Song of the Brook. By Alfred Tennyson.

A series of fifteen original and beautiful photo-gravure illustrations, after original drawings by William J. Mo-sart. The text of the poem will be interwoven with the illustrations, and all will be printed with the greatest care on paper of the finest quality. 1 vol., quarto, gilt edges, $5.00; 1 vol., quarto, full flexible seal, gilt edges, $8.00.

Sunshine Calendar for 1888.

A new and pretty calendar, comprising lithographed pages for each month, with appropriate poems by popular authors and a very attractive cover. Each leaf arranged to turn over, and all mounted on an oxidized metal rod with chain to suspend it by. Each one in a box, $1.25.

The Schiller Calendar for 1888.

With quotations for every day in German and English from the works of Schiller. Mounted with wood handle, tied with ribbon. Each calendar in box, $1.00.

The Year in Thought Calendar for 1888.

A new and novel calendar edited by Mrs. A. N. Bullens. Each month of the year will have a beautiful stamped and illuminated design. An appropriate poem will accompany each month's design, followed by a page of brief selections for each day in the month, and other poetical selections. The title on the cover will be stamped in gilt and silver, the decoration will be a Maltese cross in flexible ivory, on which will be engraved an appropriate design. 1 vol., small quarto, bound in antique hand-made board, ragged edges. Each book in a box, $1.50.

Holiday Booklets.

Echo and the Ferry.

By JEAN INGELow. Beautifully illustrated. Bound in Whatman's antique board, with ragged edge. Cover design stamped in variegated bronze, $1.00.

The Young Robin and the First Snow.

Written and illustrated by WILLIAM OSTRANDER. 1 vol., small quarto, illustrations on every page. Cover printed in colors, and title stamped in gold, $1.00.

The Round Year. Spring.

The Round Year. Summer.

The Round Year. Autumn.

The Round Year. Winter.

Poems of the months. Selected from many authors by ROSE FORTNA. Daintily illustrated by W. Ostrander. Covers of smokéd pearl-tinted board, ragged edges, title illuminated on side. Each 50 cents.

Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh.

Golden Days Fruitful of Golden Deeds.

Hidden Treasures, or Emblems.

Three original compilations in Prose and Poetry by ROSE FORTNA, author of "Summer Driftwood," etc., with dainty illustrations specially prepared. Bound in antique hand-made board, ragged edges, with titles embossed in gold and color. Each 50 cents.

His Loving Kindnesses.

His Testimonies.

His Covenants.

His Good Promises.

Four pretty little daily text-books, with texts for one month. Illustrated with colored lithographs of flowers. Bound in antique hand-made covers, ragged edges, and illuminated title on side. Each 30 cents.

Juvenile Books.

The Treasure Box.

A book of original and selected stories and poems for children, with forty illustrations printed in colors and a host of others in black. Handsome lithographed cover by Lillian J. Brigham, and cover linings printed in colors. 1 vol., 8vo, substantially bound in boards, $1.25.

Stories from the Treasure Box.

A, B, C, D, E. Five attractive juvenile books, made up from The Treasure Box. Bound in boards, with handsome lithographed covers. Each 30 cents.

Helps Over Hard Places for Boys.

Second series, new issue, by LYNDY PALMER, author of "The Magnet Stories." 1 vol., 18mo, 75 cents.

JAMES POTT & CO.

Have Ready, or will issue, the following New Books this Autumn:

A NEW WORK BY DR. GEIKIE.

The Holy Land and the Bible.

A Book of Scripture Illustrations Gathered in Palestine by CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D., author of "Life of Christ," "Hours with the Bible," etc. Ready Nov. 1. 2 vols., $5.00.

"In this fascinating work the author brings most vividly before the mind of the reader, in forcible and graphic language, the prominent places in the Holy Land that call up by their mention the associations of Bible History."—Notice from Advance Sheets.

DEDICATED TO SIR J. W. DAWSON, F.R.S.

Unfinished Worlds. A Study in Astronomy.

By S. H. PARKES, F.R.A.S., F.L.S. With numerous illustrations. Ready October 15. Intended for General Readers. The result of long observation and study. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

Books which have Influenced Me.

By ARCHDEACON FARRAR and other contributors. Among them Gladstone, John Ruskin, etc. 12 contributors in all. Choice binding. Just published, 25 cents.

Shows how great men and minds have been guided and influenced by a single book.

Liddon's Sermons.

A new series. Containing the 4 vols. in one. Just ready. Net, $3.00.

Here will be found some 165 Sermons on various subjects, all incomparable for ability, freshness of thought, and elegant style of language.

The Bible and the Age; or, An Elucidation of the Principles of a Consistent and Verifiable Interpretation of Scripture. By CURTIS COLINGWOOD, M.A. 8vo. Ready, $3.50.

"To find the basis of a reasonable mystical exegesis, thoughtful students of Holy Scriptures feel the want. It is a remarkable book. His style is brilliant, and the treatment is original and learned."—Review.

Christendom: Ecclesiastical and Political from Constantine to the Reformation. Being the Pad-dock Lectures for 1887. By Rev. JOHN H. EGAR, D.D. 12mo, cloth. In Press, $1.50.

There will be found in this volume many notable facts in history presented in their relations one to the other in such a way that many well-known occurrences may be viewed in new light. A complete study and survey of a period hitherto but slightly noticed.

Cornelius D. Lapide's Great Commentary, The Holy Gospels. A careful translation. First ever made. 6 vols. Net, $18.00.

"A mine of research and exegetical learning of the rarest kind."—Standard.

"It is our duty to call attention to work now being done for English readers."—Literary Churchman.

Gospel Types and Shadows of the Old Testament. By Rev. WILLIAM ODOR. 35 cents.

A Treatise of Dogmatic Theology. By Rev. ROBERT OWEN, B.D. Second edition. Just received. 8vo, cloth, $10.00.

The object of this work is to introduce the readers to the study of Positive or Dogmatic Theology. By Dogmas is meant the Teachings of the Church.

Enigma Vitæ; or, Christianity and Modern Thought. By JOHN WILSON, M.A. Ready, $1.50.

I. Self Knowledge the Key to Truth.

II. First Steps.

III. The Pathway to God.

IV. The Goal of the Finite Ego.

Geikie's Entering on Life. A Book for Young Men. Contents: Youth, Character, Companions, Success, Christianity, Helps, Reading, Dreams, Farewell. 296 pages. 12mo, cloth. New Edition, $1.00.

"Deserves to be read again and again. It is strong with argument and appeal, beautiful with fancy and figure, tender with pathos and piety."—Review.

"Almost a Revelation."

Natural Law in the Spiritual World. By Prof. HARRY DRUMMOND. 12mo, cloth. Duplicate of the Author's English Plates. Cheap Edition. 414 pp., $1.00.

Every Christian should read and study. "Fresh, clear and suggestive. Just the book for every minister and intelligent Christian."—Rev. Dr. Haigh, Chicago.

The Philosophy of Misal. Pro riliu by L. P. GRAT-AGAR, M.A. 12mo, cloth. Second Edition in Press. Net, $1.50.

"No theological library can be complete without some such work."—Church Press.

14 & 16 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

SPECIAL BOOKS.

Beecher as a Humorist.

Compiled by ELEANOR KIRK. Cloth, $1.00.

"Miss Kirk calls Beecher 'the most spontaneous humorist that America has known,' and we are not disposed to dispute the claim, large as it is. Let the objector to it name his superior."—The American Philadelpia.

Norway Nights and Russian Days.

By Mrs. S. M. HENRY DAVIS. Characteristic illustrations. Cloth, $1.25; half calf, $2.50.

"Simply and entirely delightful; fresh, breezy, picturesque, without a tint or trace of the guide-book. . . . Charming written."—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Principles of Art.

By JOHN C. VAN DYKE, Librarian, Sage Library, New Brunswick, N. J. Vellum cloth, $1.50.

"On the whole, admirable. Much has been written on art, but the subject has been treated by few with equal freshness and originality. . . . Mr. Van Dyke has added one more to the list of good books that have come to us from across the Atlantic."—The Spectator, London, Eng.

Southern California:

Its Valleys, Hills and Streams; its Birds, Animals and Fishes; its Gardens, Farms and Climate. By THEODORE S. VAN DYKE, author of "The Still Hunter." 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"Without question the best book which has been written on the southern counties of California. . . . May be commended without the usual reservations."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Epics and Romances

OF THE MIDDLE AGES. Adapted from the work of Dr. W. WAGNER; edited by W. S. W. ANSON, editor of "Asgard and the Gods," etc. With Numerous Illustrations. Fourth Thousand. 488 pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

"May be cordially recommended. . . . Well and copiously illustrated."—The Athenæum, London, Eng.

Beecher's Patriotic Addresses,

In America and England, from 1850 to 1885. By subscription. Send for descriptive circular.

Beecher's Miscellaneous Works.

EVOLUTION AND RELIGION, $1.50.

YALE LECTURES ON PREACHING (3 vols. in one), $2.00.

ROYAL TRUTHS (new edition), $1.25.

COMFORTING THOUGHTS, 75 cents; cloth, gilt, $1.00.

A SUMMER IN ENGLAND (1886), $2.00.

NORWOOD, A Tale of Village Life in New England (new, popular edition), $1.25.

SERMONS, 2 vols., $1.50 each.

Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song.

Edited by WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. 2,000 poems from 600 authors, English, Scottish, Irish and American, with translations. Well illustrated and well indexed. Fine holiday bindings.

The garnered wheat without the chaff. Illustrated by specimens of hand-writing, pictures of poets' homes, scenes of poems, and steel portrait of Bryant. A classic for the home; a gift of permanent value for birthdays, wedding days, holidays and any days.

"It has taken rank as the most complete and satisfactory work of the kind ever issued."—New York Tribune.

FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT,

27 Park Place, New York.

FUNK & WAGNALL'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

18 & 20 Astor Place, - New York City.

A PHOTOGRAPHIC FAC-SIMILE OF THE FAMOUS FOLIO EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE, A.D., 1623.

We have in press this most curious and famous edition of Shakespeare's Plays. This is the edition on which Ignatius Donnelly bases his claim of the discovery of a cipher, which, if he is right, proves the Baconian authorship of the plays. Our edition is a photographic fac-simile of the original, showing the curious arrangement of pages, the same punctuation, the same spelling, the same mysterious words and clauses that Mr. Donnelly says gave him his clues to the cipher. It would be impossible to follow the cipher in any other than with a fac-simile of the 1623 edition. It certainly is a most curious and important work. It should be in the library of every lover of Shakespeare. Crown 8vo, cloth, 928 pages, price $2.00.

A BOOK OF POEMS.

By MARIETTA HOLLEY ("Josiah Allen's Wife"). This is the first book of poems ever published by this distinguished writer, author of "Sweet Cloely," "Samantha at Saratoga," etc. 12mo, cloth, illustrated, $2.00.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN.

Companion volume to "Letters from Hell." Beautiful binding appropriate to the theme. Price of each book $1.00, postage free. If ordered together, $1.75, postage free for both books. "Letters from Hell" has a powerful introduction by George MacDonald.

HISTORY OF THE EMPIRE STATE.

By BENSON J. LOSSING, LL.D. The only complete and continuous History of New York, the Empire State, from the earliest times down to the present. Illustrated by fac-similes of 300 pen-and-ink drawings by H. Rosa. Elegant imperial 8vo, $5.00. Sold by subscription.

THE MISSING SENSE, AND THE HIDDEN THINGS WHICH IT MIGHT REVEAL.

Spiritual Philosophy Treated on a Rational Basis. By C. W. WOODBRIDGE, B.S., M.D. 12mo, cloth, 60 cents.

THE FLAG ON THE MILL.

A Novel. By MARY B. SLEIGHT. 12mo, cloth, beautifully bound and illustrated, $1.50. The interest is intense, even to the last page.

THE VOCATION OF THE PREACHER.

By Rev. E. PAXTON HOOD, author of "Throne of Eloquence," "Christmas Evans," "World of Proverb and Parable," etc. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

THE THRONE OF ELOQUENCE.

By Rev. E. PAXTON HOOD. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

"There is an amazing fund of interest, instruction and humor in all the chapters. Nothing that Mr. Hood writes is ever dull or dry. His writings sparkle with genius, and hold the reader's attention to the end."—Evangelical Magazine, London.

PARKER'S PEOPLE'S BIBLE. Twelfth Volume.

By JOSEPH PARKER, D.D., of London. Sixth volume on the Old Testament now ready, making twelve volumes thus far issued. To be complete in 25 volumes. Remaining volumes to be issued simultaneously with issue in London. Each is complete in itself. Price per vol., cloth 8vo, $1.50.

"On every page we have the results of powerful thinking and keen analysis."—British Quarterly Review, London.

MEYERS'S GREAT COMMENTARY on the NEW TESTAMENT. Tenth Volume.

Last volume will be ready soon. Ten volumes now ready. 8vo, cloth, price per vol., $3.00.

"The most valuable commentary on the New Testament ever offered to the American public."—Christian at Work, New York.

THIRTY THOUSAND THOUGHTS. Fifth Volume.

Authorized American Edition. Will be completed in seven volumes. Edited by Rev. Canon SPENCE, M.A., Rev. JOSEPH H. EXELL, M.A., and Rev. CHARLES NEIL, M.A. Introduction by Very Rev. Dean Howson, D.D. All subjects from all sources. Volume V now ready. Royal 8vo, cloth, price per vol., $3.50.

25c. THE GLOBE LIBRARY.

A Cheap Series of Attractively Bound
Novels by the Best Authors.
25 Cents Each.

LATEST ADDITIONS TO THE SERIES.

Allan Quatermain. By H. RIDER HAGGARD (whose other works are published in the same series). 12mo, 356 pages, paper.

Only a Farmer's Daughter. By L. H. ANDREWS. 12mo, 206 pages, paper.

A Modern Circe. By "THE DOCTOR." 12mo, 315 pages, paper.

A Puritan Lover. By Mrs. LAURA C. S. FARRINGTON. 12mo, 220 pages, paper.

For Her Daily Bread. By LITERE. With preface by Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL. 12mo, 328 pages, paper.

As In a Looking-Glass. By F. C. PHILLIPS. 12mo, 233 pages, paper.

WILL BE READY SOON.

Calamity How; or, The Sunken Records. By JOHN R. MUSICK, author of "A Banker of Bedford," etc. 12mo, paper.

A Lucky Young Woman. By F. C. PHILLIPS, author of "As In a Looking-Glass." 12mo, 340 pages, paper.

Other numbers will be added continually. Send for list of the series to

RAND, McNALLY & CO.,

148 to 154 Monroe Street, Chicago.

New York Store, 323 Broadway.

Price-lists of wall, pocket or school maps, of railway books, of guide books, etc., furnished on application.

FOWLER & WELLS CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Physical Culture. For Home and School. Scientific and Practical. By D. L. DOWD, Professor of Physical Culture. 322 12mo pages. 80 illustrations, fine binding, $1.50.

The best work on the building up of Health and Strength by systematic exercises ever published. It will be called for by professional and all sedentary people.

Gems of Literature. Comprising: "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," "The Traveller," "The Hermit," "The Deserted Village," "The Oemus," and "Æsop's Fables," all illustrated. 12mo, fine paper, extra cloth, $1.50.

These Gems will be sought for. Always popular, they will be especially acceptable in this form.

A Practical Plan of Instruction in Shorthand. By BATES TORREY. $1.00.

Consisting of a series of twenty lessons, in the form of lesson leaves. Every teacher of shorthand will prize this, and those attempting self-instruction should use it.

Nervousness: Its Nature, Causes, Symptoms and Treatment. By H. S. DRAYTON, M.D., Editor Phrenological Journal. 50 cents.

A practical treatise on this very rapidly increasing malady.

The Sympathetic Nerve. A new plate, 18 x 36, showing this nerve, with a concise description; the best plate of the kind ever produced. $5.00.

Pope's Essay on Man. With responding Essay by Dr. C. S. WELLS. Paper, 50 cents.

How to Succeed as a Stenographer or Typewriter. By A. M. BAKER. Paper, 25 cents.

Horace Mann: A View of His Life and Its Meaning. A memorial address by Rev. J. B. WESTON, D.D. Paper, 10 cents.

Self-Reliance or Self Esteem as an Element of Character. By NELSON SIZER. 10 cents.

Our complete descriptions sent on application. Address
FOWLER & WELLS CO., Publishers,
775 Broadway, New York.

1887 AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS OF W. R. JENKINS.

NEW EDITION OF LES MISÉRABLES.

By VICTOR HUGO.

SINCE the death of the distinguished author there has existed no convenient edition of his great masterpiece, "LES MISÉRABLES." The old duodecimo edition printed in Paris has been withdrawn from print entirely, and the only French edition to be obtained is large, cumbersome and costly. To supply this deficiency, and especially to supply American readers of French with an excellent, well-printed and convenient edition of this great work, at a very reasonable price, WILLIAM R. JENKINS of New York, whose French reprints already published are a guarantee of excellence in this case, has undertaken the republication of the work.

In order that the edition should be in every respect first class, the electrotypes have been made from new type, especially purchased for this purpose, and the greatest care has been taken in the arrangement and proof-reading of the work, so that it is a handsome, perfect and standard edition. Its publication is made in five duodecimo volumes approximating in all nearly two thousand pages. The Price fixed upon is $4.50 for the complete set of five volumes, in paper covers. The cloth edition, which is very tastefully bound in the best manner, is $6.50 per set; and in half calf, $13.50. The volumes will be sold separately—in paper, $1.00, and in cloth at $1.50, per volume. As this is the most important French literary work ever attempted in America, it is hoped that it will be liberally sustained, especially so as the edition will not only be far superior to the old Paris edition but very much cheaper.

SAMPLE PAGES SENT ON APPLICATION.

MINE ET CONTRE-MINE.

By A. GUILLET. A bright, simple and amusing comedy in three acts, thoroughly entertaining and excellently adapted for class reading. It is the production of a well-known professor of French in Cleveland, and is the first dramatic composition in French of any importance ever published in America. It forms No. 16 of Théâtre Contemporain. 12mo, paper, 25 cents.

CINQ-MARS.

By ALFRED DE VIGNY. A new and handsome edition of this well-known historical French novel has been published, and Mr. Jenkins has arranged for its issue here, with and without explanatory notes in English. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; with English notes, $1.25.

HERNANI.

By VICTOR HUGO. A new edition of this famous play, the dramatic masterpiece of the author, has been added to the Théâtre Contemporain, with English notes by Gustave Masson. 12mo, paper, 25 cents.

CONTES TIRÉS DE MOLIÈRE.

By A. M. COTTE. A series of stories based upon the plays of Molière similar in scope to Charles and Mary Lamb's well-known "Fables from Shakespeare." They will be published in pamphlet form separately for school use, and when the series is completed will be issued in one volume. Those now ready are "L'AVARE," and "LE BOURGEOIS GENTILHOMME." Each 20 cents.

FIGARO SALON 1887.

This year's issue of this splendidly illustrated work of the Paris Salon is now ready. It comprises five large folio numbers, each of which may be obtained separately for 70 cents; or it may be had, handsomely bound in cloth, for $4.50, making an exceedingly cheap and handsome gift-book, with upwards of fifty large process illustrations.

A few odd numbers of last year's issue may be had for 50 cents each.

PARIS-SALON 1887.

Two volumes, octavo, each containing about forty photographic engravings and forty wood engravings from the principal pictures of this year's exhibition, with critical and explanatory descriptions by Louis Enault. The volumes are sold separately at $1.75 each.

A few numbers of the volumes for 1884, 1885 and 1886 may be had for $1.00 each.

UNA NOTTE BIZARRA.

By ANTONIO BARRILI. A bright and amusing novelette in Italian by one of the foremost Italian novelists of today. To the story has been added a number of English notes by Professor Comba, which will be found serviceable to students and teachers using the story as a text-book. It is No. 2 of the series Novelle Italiane. 18mo, paper, 35 cents.

Any of these books will be forwarded, postpaid, on receipt of price, with special terms to teachers, by

WILLIAM R. JENKINS,
Publisher and Importer of Foreign Books,
850 Sixth Avenue, New York.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

The best practical English Dictionary extant.—Quarterly Review, London.

It has 3000 more Words than any other Am. Dict'y, and nearly 3 times the number of Engravings. "It is an ever-present and reliable School-master to the whole family."

Webster is Standard Authority in the Government Printing Office and with the U. S. Supreme Court, and is recommended by the State Sup'ts of Schools in 36 States, and by the leading College Presidents.

Published by G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Springfield, Mass.

With or without Patent Index.

The latest issue of this work comprises

A DICTIONARY
containing 118,000 Words, and 3000 Engravings,
A GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD
25,000 Titles, with pronunciation, &c., (recently added) and
A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY
nearly 10,000 Noted Persons; also various Tables,
ALL IN ONE BOOK.

TEACHERS are cordially invited to address us on any matter pertaining to textbooks. If an improved book or series is desired in school, write us for circulars, information, terms, etc. Sample copies sent at nominal prices, returnable if not adopted.

"The Alphabet of Manual Training."

White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.

For schools. The most important books of their class ever issued. Already adopted in many large cities. Write for particulars.

Swinton's Readers, Spellers, Geographies, and Histories.

Fish's Arithmetics.

Wells's Shorter Course Grammar and Composition.

Spencerian Copy Books.

Smith's Physiologies.

White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.

Webster's School Dictionaries.

Our BRIEF DESCRIPTIVE LIST sent free to any address.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & Co., Publ'rs,
149 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
753-755 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION Opens Oct. 6. Thorough training for Voice, Body and Mind. Literature studied through Expression. Authors' Recitals monthly. Courses for Speakers, Teachers, Professionals and for General Culture, 1 to 20 hours a week. Work adapted to individual needs. Degree of A. M. to A. B.'s. Courses of Lectures on Expression by the Dean opens Sept. 22. Send for catalogue, lecture tickets, or call for personal interview 10 to 1.
S. S. CUREY, P. D.,
Freeman Place, 15½ Beacon Street, Boston.

"It has the fascination of a novel, with the value of a grammar; is concise, complete, clear and methodical, with the best work of the kind extant."—Washington (Pa) Reporter.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

"The system is so clear and perfect that those who have but an ordinary English education may readily grasp the professor's ideas."—Toronto Mail.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25. For sale by all book-sellers; sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by PROF. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus, free.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

WHAT THE NEWSPAPERS DO

For the people.
The story told (in one inch of space) about
D. K.'s

SAVED in one day, by the records of sales, 864 people, from further torture and suffering from DYSPEPSIA and INDIGESTION.
DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont St., Boston, who furnish these statistics, will mail to sufferers in any part of the U. S. a large box of the D. K.'s for 50 cents, or a trial box on receipt of 25 cents.

THE PENNSYLVANIA Academy of the Fine Arts.

The Antique, Life and Portrait Classes of the Academy will reopen MONDAY, Oct. 5.

For circular of the Committee on Instruction, or information as to the Schools, address or apply to H. C. WHIPPLE, Curator, at the Academy Building, South-west corner BROAD and CHERRY Streets, Philadelphia.

HAVE you seen the new edition in French of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," being published by W. R. Jenkins, New York? It is the handsomest, cheapest, most convenient, and BEST. Three volumes are now ready. The other two will be before November. Send for circulars and sample pages.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest
PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL ACCIDENT COMPANY OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.

RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

Design Copyrighted, Grate Pat'd Aug. 17, 1886

The Curtain Grate, with Weaver's patent Shaking and Dumping attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.
SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems. Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila., 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauqua University, &c. Prospectus post FREE from PROF. LOISETTE, 237 Fifth Ave., New York.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engraving, Etc., Etc.

Library-Givers

—anybody having occasion to make collections of books—can sift the book world at home and abroad for its best, make money go its furthest, and be relieved of all detail, through the undersigned (of the late firm, Lockwood, Brooks & Co., Boston), 25 years in the trade with every advantage.

J. S. LOCKWOOD,
82 Equitable Building, Boston.

Lee & Shepard's Bulletin of New Books

THE BEAUTIFUL BOSTON LEADER A BUNCH OF VIOLETS

Gathered by IRENE E. JEROME, author of "Nature's Hallelujah," "One Year's Sketch Book," etc. Original designs engraved on wood and printed under the direction of George T. Andrew. 4to, cloth, $3.75; Turkey morocco, $9.00; tree calf, $9.00; English seal style, $7.00.

"The pretty 'Bunch of Violets' goes forth on its happy mission in a royal quarto, 10 x 12 inches, bound in English cloth, enriched with a beautiful emblematic design, chastely wrought in black and gold, from the pencil of Ipsen, renowned for his unsurpassed genius as a cover-designer. 'A Bunch of Violets' is a pleasing companion to the choice books which have preceded it in the much admired series."
—Boston Traveller.

NEW EDITIONS OF

NATURE'S HALLELUJAH

By IRENE E. JEROME, Author and artist of "One Year's Sketch Book," and "The Message of the Bluebird." Presented in a series of nearly fifty full-page original illustrations (9½ x 14 inches), engraved on wood by George T. Andrew. Elegantly bound in gold cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, $6.00; Turkey morocco, $12.00; tree calf, $12.00; English seal style, $10.00.

ONE YEAR'S SKETCH BOOK

By IRENE E. JEROME. Containing forty-six full-page original illustrations, engraved on wood by Andrew in same bindings and at same prices as "Nature's Hallelujah."

THE MESSAGE OF THE BLUEBIRD TOLD TO ME TO TELL TO OTHERS

By IRENE E. JEROME. Engraved on wood by Andrew. Original designs. New holiday edition in dainty binding. Cloth and gold, $2.00; palatine boards, ribbon ornaments, $1.00.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S POEM

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN

With fourteen full-page illustrations by PERCY MACQUOID, R. I. Oblong quarto, size 10½ x 14. Bound in gold cloth, price $3.00; in decorative wood (a new and effective binding), price $4.00 (about); Turkey morocco gilt, $9.00; tree calf, $9.00; seal style, $7.00.

NEW EDITION OF "THE TRIUMPH OF FICTILE ART"

PLASTIC SKETCHES

By J. G. and J. F. Low, the famous tile artists, being a series of forty-seven designs, 10 x 12 inches, in satin portfolios of unique design. Price $10.00.

FAITH'S FESTIVALS

By MARY LAKEMAN, author of "Pretty Lucy Merwin" and "Ruth Elliot's Dream." Price in cloth gilt, $1.00 (about); in palatine boards, with floss trimmings, 50 cents.

OTHER NEW BOOKS

THE ART OF PROJECTING

By Prof. A. E. DOLEBEAR, Inventor of the telephone. New edition. Illustrated. $1.50.

A FEW THOUGHTS FOR A YOUNG MAN

By HORACE MANN. Cloth, 50 cents. The famous Boston Mercantile Library Lecture.

HENRY WARDSWORTH LONG-FELLOW

His Life, His Works, His Friendships. By GEORGE LOWELL AUSTIN. Profusely illustrated. Cloth, $2.00; cloth, full gilt, $3.25; half morocco, $4.50; full morocco and gilt edges, $5.50. Formerly published by subscription.

LIFE AND TIMES OF WENDELL PHILLIPS

By GEORGE LOWELL AUSTIN. With steel portrait and illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. The only complete life of the great agitator issued.

The LATEST FASHION in ILLUSTRATED HYMNS AND POEMS

LEE AND SHEPARD'S "ORIGINAL IDEA" IN THE ALHAMBRA STYLE

Comprising fourteen of Lee and Shepard's favorites, printed on large paper, with decorated covers and "Alhambra" boards, "ragged edge" and ribboned. An original and attractive style. The poems represented are: Rock of Ages—It Was the Calm and Silent Night—Nearer, My God, to Thee—My Faith Looks up to Thee—He Giveth His Beloved Sleep—The Lord is My Shepherd—Home, Sweet Home—Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?—Come into the Garden, Maud—From Greenland's Icy Mountains—Abide with Me—The Breaking Waves Dashed High—The Mountain Anthem—That Glorious Song of Old. Price $1.00 each.

GOLDEN MINIATURES

A second series of the Illipituan beauties of last year, which achieved an instantaneous success. Six volumes: Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?—That Glorious Song of Old—It Was the Calm and Silent Night—Gray's Elegy—The Breaking Waves Dashed High—Ring Out, Wild Bells. In the following styles of binding: Cloth, full gilt and gilt edges, 50 cents; palatine boards, ribboned, 50 cents; French morocco, with gilt edges, $1.00; best calf, flexible, $2.00.

The first series of "Golden Miniatures" comprises: Curfew Must Not Ring To-Night—Rock of Ages—Home, Sweet Home—Abide with Me—Nearer, My God, to Thee—My Faith Looks up to Thee. Prices and styles as above.

MISS DOUGLAS'S NEW NOVEL

THE FORTUNES OF THE FARADAYS
Uniform with Lee and Shepard's Library Series of the Douglas Novels. 18 vols., cloth, $1.50 per vol.

A VETERAN'S HALF CENTURY

LIFE NOTES; or, Fifty Years' Outlook

By Rev. WILLIAM HAQUE, D. D., the eloquent and scholarly Baptist clergyman. Cloth, $1.50.

MISS WEST'S CLASS IN GEOGRAPHY

A Series of Instructive and Entertaining Geographical Conversations between Pupil and Teacher. By Miss FRANCES C. SPAREHAWK. Boards, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

GRASSES AND FORAGE PLANTS

A Practical Treatise comprising their Natural History, Comparative Nutritive Value, Methods of Cultivation, Cutting and Curing, and the Management of Grassland in the United States and British Provinces. By CHARLES L. FLINT. Cloth, illustrated, $2.00. Revised edition.

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE'S "RELIGIOUS ROMANCE"

LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS

As related by THOMAS DIDYMUS. New edition. Cloth, $1.50.

THE HIDDEN WAY ACROSS THE THRESHOLD

OR, THE MYSTERY WHICH HATH BEEN HIDDEN FOR AGES AND FROM GENERATIONS

An explanation of the concealed forces in every man to open the temples of the soul and to learn the guidance of the unseen hand. Illustrated and made plain with as few occult terms as possible. By J. C. STREET, A. B. N. Octavo, cloth, 600 pp., illustrated, $3.50.

DANTON IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

By LAWRENCE GRONLUND, author of "The Co-Operative Commonwealth," an Exposition of Modern Socialism. Price $1.00.

SOPHIE MAY'S ROMANCE

DRONES' HONEY

12mo, cloth, $1.50.

NEW JUVENILE BOOKS

OLIVER OPTIC'S LATEST

READY ABOUT: or, Sailing the Boat

Cloth, illustrated, $1.25. Completing the Boat Builders' Series. Now ready in 6 vols. (boxed), $1.25 per vol.

OLIVER OPTIC'S

OUR STANDARD BEARER

Or the Life of General Ulysses S. Grant, his youth, his manhood, his campaign and his eminent services in the reconstruction of the nation his sword has redeemed, as seen and related by Capt. Bernard Gallygasken, Cosmopolitan, and written out by Oliver Optic. A new edition with supplementary chapters, containing the political life of the General, his travels abroad, his sickness and death. Cloth, illustrated, elegantly bound, $1.50.

A NEW EDITION OF A GREAT FAVORITE

PERSEVERANCE ISLAND

By DOUGLAS FRAZER, author of "Practical Boat Sailing." Cloth, elegantly bound, illustrated, $1.50.

Old Robinson Crusoe, his campaign and his eminent services in the reconstruction of the nation his sword has redeemed, as seen and related by Capt. Bernard Gallygasken, Cosmopolitan, and written out by Oliver Optic. A new edition with supplementary chapters, containing the political life of the General, his travels abroad, his sickness and death. Cloth, illustrated, elegantly bound, $1.50.

J. T. TROWBRIDGE'S LATEST

PETER BUDSTONE, The Boy who was Hazed

Cloth, illustrated, $1.25. Completing THE TIDE MILL STORIES. Now ready, 6 vols. (boxed), $1.25 per vol.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "TEN BOYS"

ONLY A YEAR, AND WHAT IT BROUGHT

By JANE ANDREWS, author of "Ten Boys who Lived on the Road from Long Ago to Now," "Seven Little Sisters who Live on the Round Ball that Floats in the Air," "The Seven Little Sisters Prove their Sisterhood," etc. Illustrated, $1.00.

NEW SERIES OF LEE AND SHEPARD'S DOLLAR BOOKS

OLD ROUGH AND READY SERIES

6 vols., illustrated (boxed), per vol., $1.00.

Old Rough and Ready, The Hero of the Mexican War. Young Folks' Life of Gen. Zachary Taylor.

Old Hickory, The Hero of the Battle of New Orleans. Young Folks' Life of Gen. Andrew Jackson.

The Little Corporal, The Hero of France. Young Folks' Life of Napoleon Bonaparte.

The Swamp Fox, The Hero Guerilla of the Revolutionary War. Young Folks' Life of Gen. Francis Marion.

The Mill Boy of the Shashas. Young Folks' Life of Henry Clay of Kentucky, America's famous orator.

The Great Expounder. Young Folks' Life of Daniel Webster, America's famous statesman.

Sold by all booksellers and sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. A beautiful illustrated catalogue of our Holiday Books. Full catalogues of our publications mailed free on application.

LEE & SHEPARD, PUBLISHERS, BOSTON.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 21. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 334. Publishers.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 15, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A MINISTER TO FRANCE.

1869-1877. By the Hon. E. B. WASHBURN. Fully illustrated. 2 vols., cloth, 8vo, $8.00.

The importance and interest of this work, a foretaste of which was given in the papers published in Scribner's Magazine, cannot easily be overestimated. For Minister Washburn's unique position as the sole foreign representative in Paris during the greater part of the siege and the reign of the Commune, brought him in constant contact with the forces behind the scenes. In pleasant contrast to the events of these exciting times are his descriptions of the social life of Paris. The illustrations are numerous and spirited.

THE ETHICAL IMPORT OF DARWINISM

By Prof. J. G. SCHURMAN. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50.

The object of this volume is to distinguish between science and speculation in the application of Darwinism to morals. While the author accepts as proven the results of evolutionary science, where it deals with matter and life, he recognizes the evil which has been caused by the guesses that have been accepted along with facts, and subjects the ethical theories that are associated with Darwinism to the most searching scrutiny.

WHITE COCKADES.

A Story of the "Forty-Five." By EDWARD IRVING STEVENSON. With Frontispiece. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.00.

A spirited story for young people of the second rebellion of the Jacobites, the scene being laid in Inverness and the action centering around the young Pretender, who, after many adventures, escapes from the King's troops. The action is rapid, and the story is told with a nervous energy that holds the attention from the outset.

CHRISTIAN FACTS AND FORCES.

By NEWMAN SMYTH, D. D., LL. D. 12mo, $1.50.

These discourses are notable for the absence of doctrinal discussion, and for their strict adherence to a clear, simple, earnest exposition of the spirit of Christ's teaching, in its practical application to every-day life.

A SHORT HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE

By ARTHUR L. TUCKERMAN. Illustrated by the author. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

A clear, compact treatise, avoiding technical terms, and giving in a succinct form all the essential facts in the history of the various styles of architecture from the time of the Druids to the Renaissance. The author's illustrations are of much assistance to the reader.

LIVING LIGHTS.

A Popular Account of Phosphorescent Animals and Vegetables. By CHARLES F. HOLDER. Illustrated, square 8vo, $2.00.

Mr. Holder gives in this book a wonderful fund of popular and entertaining facts concerning the mysterious light-giving animals and plants of the sea and land. Most of his information is fresh, having been acquired by his personal investigation and observation, and the readers of the volume will be surprised to learn how fascinating is the story of these strange forms of life.

THE OLD-FASHIONED FAIRY BOOK.

By Mrs. BURTON HARRISON. With many illustrations by Miss Rosina Emmet. Cheaper edition. 1 vol., square 16mo, $1.25.

"The little ones who so willingly go back with us to 'Jack the Giant Killer,' 'Blue-Beard,' and the kindred stories of our childhood, will gladly welcome this book where the giant, the dwarf, the fairy, the wicked princess, the ogre, the metamorphosed prince, and all the heroes of that line come into play and action."—Frank R. Stockton.

. These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference.
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

BANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STOKES. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JONES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLM'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.

Lady Burton's Edition of Her Husband's "Arabian Nights," translated literally from the Arabic, prepared for household reading by Justin H. McCarthy. 6 vols., demy octavo, handsomely bound in white and gold. Net, $25.00.

. Lady Burton's object is to secure for the public, especially for her own sex and for scholars, the advantages of this Oriental masterpiece—the English reading, the knowledge of Eastern life, and perfect workmanship—which has been so heartily praised by the press and by scholars. She has been fortunate in securing the able assistance of a literary friend, Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, M. P., who has prepared it for family reading.

THROUGH THE WORDSWORTH COUNTRY.

Poems of Wordsworth which contain topographical allusions to the English Lake District, with fifty-six engravings from drawings expressly made for this work by Mr. Harry Goodwin, and letterpress by William Knight. Royal 8vo, cloth, $13.50.

. This book illustrates the scenes and localities most closely connected with Wordsworth's poetical work. Many of these scenes are undergoing changes that in a few years will render their connection with the poems obscure and difficult to trace; and it is with the hope of preserving some permanent record of what is still unchanged that the present work has been undertaken.

THE PRINTED BOOK.

Its History, Illustration and Adornment, from Gutenberg to the present time. By HENRI BOUCHOT of the National Library, Paris. Translated and enlarged by Edward C. Bigmore. With 118 illustrations of fac-similes of early typography, printers' marks, copies of book illustrations, and bindings of all ages. Square 12mo, cloth, $2.50.

"Into a space equally short it is not easy to crowd more valuable and trustworthy information. Beginning with the Block Books, which anticipated by a few decades the discovery of printing, this work gives a lucid account of the rise of printing, the dispersal over Europe of the German printers, the growth of book illustration, and all similar matter down to the present day. The chief difficulty of the task—the disposition of the immense mass of information that is in existence—is successfully combated."—Athenæum.

DOWN THE ROAD;

OR, REMINISCENCES OF A GENTLEMAN COACHMAN.

By C. T. S. BIRCH REYNARDSON. New edition, with colored illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, $4.50.

Alphonse Daudet.

NOW READY.

TARTARIN OF TABASCON: Traveller, "Turk" and Lion-Hunter. With 115 illustrations by Montegut, Myrbach, Picard and Rossi.

"The humors of this countryman of Daudet and of Gambetta are simply delicious, and they are in this new shape fitly illustrated by scores of delicate little pictures. . . . These pictures possess that lightness, elegance and grace which belong to French art, and are not attained by English or American illustrations."—Springfield Republican.

TARTARIN ON THE ALPS. With 150 illustrations by Rossi, Aranda, Myrbach, Montegut, De Beaumont.

"As might have been expected from the names of the author, illustrators and publishers, this book is a thing of beauty. The illustrations especially are of marvelous delicacy, and, though the range is necessarily limited, the variety of them is great. The book itself is a most amusing burlesque of the unvarnished gasconading to which their hot blood impels the natives of the South of France."—Glasgow Herald.

Each 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE: The Story of an Old Boat and Her Crew; and Other Stories. With 185 illustrations by Montegut.

"It is charmingly and gracefully wrought out, with a freshness of feeling that is more common among French than English writers, and a mingled pathos and heartiness that are delightful. The illustrations in these little stories are such as are possible only with French pencils and French printing."—R. H. Stoddard in N. Y. Mail and Express.

"These stories are excellent examples of the peculiar genius of Daudet, who must be conceded to be one of the greatest of living novelists. He has been called the legitimate successor of Balzac, yet his is a different kind of realism; it is a picture more lightly touched than he gives us, with less depth, it may well be, and less earnestness of conviction; but the graphic hand of the artist is felt in every line."—Boston Traveller.

SAPPHO: A Picture of Parisian Manners. With 70 illustrations by Rossi, Myrbach and other French Artists.

UNIFORM EDITIONS OF

Greatest Works of Dumas and Hugo.

NEARLY READY.

THE COUNT OF MONTE-CRISTO. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. With nearly 500 illustrations by Beauce, Staal and other eminent French artists. 5 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

Appended is a translation of the story on which Dumas founded his great romance.

NOTRE-DAME. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations by Hugo, Bayard, Brion, etc. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

THE TOILERS OF THE SEA. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations by Chiffart, D. Vierge and Hugo. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

Uniform with the superbly illustrated edition of "Les Misérables" published last season.

Morley's Universal Library.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

53. The Commonwealth of Oceana. By James Harrington.

52. Poems and Plays. By Geo. Peele.

51. Schiller's Poems and Ballads. Translated by Lytton.

Selected and edited by Prof. HENRY MORLEY, who has written an introduction for each volume. 16mo, each about 300 pages, cloth, cut or uncut edges, 40 cents; half parchment, with gilt top, 60 cents.

50. The Original. By Thomas Walker.

49. The Banquet of Dante. Translated by Elizabeth P. Sayer.

48. Advice to Young Men. By William Cobbett.

Routledge's Pocket Library.

2. Thackeray's Paris Sketch-Book.

3. Hood's Comic Poems.

4. Dickens's Christmas Carol.

7. Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome, etc.

8. Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield.

9. Hood's Serious Poems.

10. Bulwer's Coming Race.

12. Manon Lescaut. By the Abbe Prevost.

14. Sterne's Sentimental Journey.

15. Dickens's Chimes.

16. Moore's Irish Melodies.

17. Gilbert's Fifty "Bab" Ballads.

18. Poems by Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

21. Milton's Paradise Lost.

22. Scott's Lady of the Lake.

23. Campbell's Poetical Works.

24. Byron's Werner; or, The Inheritance.

25. Book of Humor, Wit and Wisdom.

Published in monthly volumes. Beautifully printed in clear type on good paper, and tastefully bound in the following styles: Half cloth, cut edges, 40 cents; half cloth, uncut edges, 50 cents; half cloth, uncut edges, gilt top, 60 cents; French morocco, gilt edges, $1.00.

Bulwer's Novels and Tales.

POCKET EDITION.

Messrs. George Routledge & Sons have begun the publication of a New Edition of Bulwer's Works in attractively bound and conveniently handy volumes of which the following are now ready:

Last Days of Pompeii.

Eugene Aram.

Ernest Maltravers.

Pelham.

Night and Morning.

Paul Clifford.

16mo, half cloth, per vol., 60 cents.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, 9 Lafayette Place, New York.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

The Elements of Political Economy.

WITH SOME APPLICATIONS TO QUESTIONS OF THE DAY. By J. LAURENCE LAUGHLIN, Assistant Professor of Political Economy in Harvard University; author of "The History of Bi-Metalism in the United States," "Mill's Principles of Political Economy, abridged," etc. With charts, 12mo, cloth, price, $1.50.

This work, although primarily intended for schools, gives so clear and compact a statement of the principles of political economy that it is eminently suitable for all persons taking up the study of the science.

II.

Claverhouse.

By MOWBRAY MORRIS. New volume in "English Worthies," edited by Andrew Lang. Small 12mo, cloth, price 75 cents.

"It is likely that when Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury have ceased to interest any but the learned, when the chief who commanded at the battle of the Alma and the chief who raised the siege of Lucknow are hovering dimly on the verge of forgetfulness, Graham of Claverhouse will yet be fresh and living for the school-boy and the general reader in Texas and Tasmania. There is some advantage, then, in having in a succinct form all the facts that can be discovered concerning a remarkable man whose life has been so powerfully and so variously depicted."—Pall Mall Gazette.

III.

Our Heredity from God.

CONSISTING OF LECTURES ON EVOLUTION. By E. P. POWELL. 12mo, cloth, price $1.75.

This is an attempt to reconcile the theory of evolution with religious thought, and to show that the universe, in exhibiting sustained progress in the past, pledges eternal betterment in the future.

IV.

Henry George vs. Henry George.

A REVIEW. By R. C. RUTHERFORD. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents.

This is a searching examination of the theories of Henry George, showing from Henry George's own writings how completely he answers himself. It is a suggestive and readable essay.

V.

Elementary Psychology and Education.

A Text-Book for High Schools, Normal Schools, Normal Institutes and Reading Circles, and a Manual for Teachers. By JOSEPH BALDWIN, author of "Art of School Management." New volume in "The International Education Series," edited by W. T. Harris, LL.D. 12mo, cloth, price $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3 & 5 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

STOCKTON'S new novel, "The Hundredth Man," which is completed in the October number of The Century, is issued in book form by THE CENTURY CO. The price in cloth binding is $1.50. Large advance orders have been received from the trade, and "The Hundredth Man" bids fair to rank high in popularity.

THE announcement of Mr. Stockton's new novelette, "The Dusantes," in the prospectus of the coming year of The Century, will attract renewed attention to that remarkably clever story, "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," which is issued in book form by THE CENTURY CO., at 75 cents in cloth, and 50 cents in paper.

THE paper edition of the above book is the first issue of "The Century Series," which will be added to from time to time. The second issue in the series is "The Pharaohs of the Bondage and the Exodus," by the Rev. Charles S. Robinson, D. D., LL. D., of which the fifth edition is now ready. It is published at $1.00 in cloth, 50 cents in paper.

THE Siberian Papers, by George Kennan, will be a great feature of The Century for the coming year. Mr. Kennan has just returned from a journey of 15,000 miles through European and Asiatic Russia, undertaken at the request of the editor of The Century. By means of a circular letter from the Russian Minister of the Interior, Mr. Kennan was enabled to visit nearly every important prison and mine in Siberia. He made the intimate personal acquaintance of more than three hundred exiled Liberals and Nihilists, and he will give a thorough account of the terrible convict system of Siberia. The series will be richly illustrated by Mr. Geo. A. Frost, who accompanied the author.

THE NOVEMBER CENTURY will contain the first installments of Eggleston's and Cable's Novels and of the Siberian series.

MOTHERS in search of a book of stories and pictures for little children from two to six years old will find just what they want in Baby World, edited by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge. It is a beautiful book of 300 pages, full of exquisite pictures, and stories and verses,—the best things for little ones that could be found in ten years of St. Nicholas. In cloth, $1.25; in illuminated boards, $1.00.

THE popular "Brownie" poems and pictures by Palmer Cox, which have been appearing in St. Nicholas during the past few years, have been collected into a handsome book, entitled "The Brownies: Their Book." New poems and pictures have been added, and quaint little Brownies are represented in nearly every possible attitude. This will be one of the most popular books of the season. The price is $1.50; and every one who has been attracted by the interesting adventures of these little people will want a copy.

ANOTHER popular book for young folks—but more especially for one sex—is "The Boys' Book of Sports." It is a beautifully illustrated volume, from which boys can learn how to enjoy themselves in all sorts of hearty ways, and in every season. It contains papers on Hunting, Fishing, Archery, Boats and Boating, Camps, Swimming, Walking, Riding, The Camera, Tobogganing, Ice-boating, Base-ball, etc. Price, $2.50.

MRS. FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT will contribute a short serial to the coming volume of St. Nicholas for Young Folks, which is said to be a worthy successor of that author's famous "Little Lord Fauntleroy," which appeared in St. Nicholas a year ago. Joel Chandler Harris, John Burroughs, Frank R. Stockton, H. H. Boyesen, J. T. Trowbridge, Col. Richard M. Johnstone, and Louisa M. Alcott are among the many distinguished writers who will contribute serial and short stories to this famous magazine for young people.

EVERY family where there are young people and where music is one of the home pleasures should have that delightful book, "St. Nicholas Songs." It is not a collection of songs which have appeared in St. Nicholas magazine, but it contains only new and original pieces of music which have appeared nowhere else—the words only being from St. Nicholas. The songs are suited to the concert-room, the parlor and the nursery. Many of them have already become standard. The best American composers and several foreign writers are represented. Price, $2.00, in beautiful cloth binding, or $3.50 in full leather, put up in a box.

ST. NICHOLAS for 1887-8 is to have a series of papers on Australia, by Mr. Joseph O'Brien, a writer of experience and a member of the editorial staff of a leading Australian journal. Another series in this magazine will be on "The Routine of the Republic," by Mr. Edmund M. Alton, author of "Among the Law-makers." It will describe for young folk the daily practical workings of the administrative department of our government. It will show how the President works at the White House, and will conduct its readers through the Treasury Department, the State and War Departments, the Custom-houses, etc. Mr. Alton's previous series described the workings of Congress.

EDWARD EGGLESTON, author of the famous "Hoosier Schoolmaster," will furnish a novel to The Century for 1887-8. It is a story of Western life, and depicts a trial in which Abraham Lincoln was a chief actor. It was written before any part of the Life of Lincoln had been published, and the appearance of Mr. Lincoln as an important auxiliary character in a work of fiction is a pure coincidence.

MR. CABLE'S novelette in The Century will contain characters already favorites with his readers. The date of the story is the year of the New Orleans Exposition.

THE poems of Richard Watson Gilder will be hereafter published by THE CENTURY CO. A new edition, in three books, is published today as follows: "The New Day," and "The Celestial Passion"; cloth, 75 cents each; paper, 35 cents; "Lyrics," cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

AIDS to Christian Worship, a volume with music, responsive readings, and suggestions of help for pastor and worker, and "Songs of Worship," a new collection of music for the Sunday School, are two new books, of which special circulars will be sent on request. "Laudes Domini," the choicest collection of religious music with hymns, has been issued in a new and perfected edition.

THE books and magazines mentioned here are from the list of THE CENTURY CO., New York, and may be obtained through any bookseller or from the publishers, who will send free to any one desiring it their illustrated descriptive catalogue, a neat pamphlet of literary news.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

Our Hundred Days in Europe.

By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Jack the Fisherman.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With illustrations by C. W. REED. 50 cents.

This little book presents in attractive form one of Miss Phelps's most powerful and pathetic stories, describing the life and temptations of a fisherman, and the pitiful desolation wrought by intemperance.

Works of Edward Fitzgerald.

The Translator of Omar Khayyám, with some Corrections derived from his own Annotated Copies. With a Portrait of Mr. Fitzgerald, a Sketch of Omar Khayyám's tomb, by WILLIAM SIMPSON, and a Frontispiece to "Salaman and Absal." A limited letter-press edition. In two volumes, octavo, cloth, $10.00.

Knitters in the Sun.

A Book of Short Stories. By OCTAVE THANET. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

CONTENTS: The Ogre of Ha Ha Bay — The Bishop's Vagabond — Mrs. Finlay's Elizabethan Chair — A Communist's Wife — Schopenhauer on Lake Pepin — Father Quinnall's Convert — "Ma' Bowlin'" — Half a Curse — Whitsun Harp, Regulator.

The World to Come.

A volume of thoughtful, vigorous, readable and devout Sermons by WILLIAM BURNET WRIGHT, recently pastor of the Berkeley Street Church, Boston, and author of "Ancient Cities." 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

Well-Worn Roads in Spain, Holland and Italy.

Or, The Travels of a Painter in Search of the Picturesque. By F. HOPKINSON SMITH. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

The descriptive chapters in Mr. Smith's striking holiday volume, published last year, are now reprinted in a tasteful little book. At the head of each chapter is an illustration reduced from the holiday volume.

Wit, Wisdom, and Beauty of Shakespeare.

Selected by C. S. WARD. 16mo, full gilt, $1.25.

These selections contain complete passages, embracing many of the wise, pungent, beautiful thoughts which abound in Shakespeare.

Pilgrim's Progress.

The Holy War.

By JOHN BUNYAN. Edited by the Rev. JOHN BROWN, author of the "Life of Bunyan." Two volumes, 12mo, $1.50 each.

It is a piece of rare good fortune that the author of the best Life of Bunyan should bring his exceptional qualifications to the work of editing these religious classics.

The Works of Thomas De Quincey.

New Fireside Edition. In six volumes, 16mo, $10.00; half calf, $20.00. (Sold only in sets.)

This puts in compact form De Quincey's remarkable biographical, historical, political, economical, religious, critical and social essays.

Gentleman's Magazine Library.

Vol. 8. ROMANO-BRITISH REMAINS. Part II. 8vo, $2.50; Roxburgh, printed on hand-made paper, $3.50; Large-Paper Edition, Roxburgh (50 copies), printed on hand made paper, $6.00.

. For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENT

OF THE

LIPPINCOTT PRESS.

ODES AND SONNETS OF KEATS. With Photogravures.

With Illustrative Designs by WILL H. LOW. Uniform with "Lamia." Folio, extra cloth, $15.00; Japanese silk, $25.00; morocco, $25.00.

Another superb volume by Will H. Low, who so successfully illustrated Keats's "Lamia" two years ago. The present work is treated in a similar style with "Lamia," the volume containing a choice selection of Keats's Odes and Sonnets. Mr. Low has spared no effort to surpass his former achievement, having given fifteen months' time and study in Florence, Italy, to the collection of the proper material and the thorough prosecution of his work. There will be 16 full-page drawings and 100 pages of text embellished with floral designs, the whole issued uniform in size with "Lamia," and bound with an elaborate design in gold.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE. With Etchings.

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. Illustrated by M. M. TAYLOR. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

This beautiful poem of rural life, written in Goldsmith's simple, easy and graceful style, is one of the most familiar and universally popular in the English language. It affords an excellent field for illustration, and the artist has shown the best taste in the selection of subjects, as well as rare talent in their treatment.

FAUST. With Etchings.

The Legend and the Poem. By W. S. WALSH. Illustrated by HERMANN FABER. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

Henry Irving's recent production of "Faust" has revived popular interest in Goethe's great poem, one of the masterpieces of all time, which has a perennial interest for all students of literature, all lovers of poetry and philosophy. The publishers have pleasure in presenting the poem in this interesting and popular way, the etchings being the outcome of much thought and study on the part of an artist in love with his subject.

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD. With Etchings.

By ELIZABETH WETHERELL. Complete in one volume. Illustrated by FREDERICK DIELMAN. Cabinet, 8vo, printed on laid paper, cloth extra, $2.50.

The interest of this story, its literary excellence, and pure, wholesome, moral tone have won for it a place in almost every home. Though first published more than a quarter of a century ago, it still remains a general favorite, and today very few, if any, American novels are more widely read or exert a better influence. Mr. Dielman has chosen some of the most characteristic and striking scenes, and his etchings add very materially to the attractiveness of the story.

EUDORA. Illustrated with Wood Engravings.

A Tale of Love. By M. B. M. TOLAND, author of "Egle and the Elf," "Iris," etc. A beautiful gift volume. With charming illustrations by H. SIDONS MOWBRAY and W. HAMILTON GIBSON. Also Decorations in the Text by L. S. IPSEN. Cloth extra, full gilt, $2.50; vellum, gilt top, rough edges, $2.50; alligator, $2.50; full morocco, $3.00.

"A tale of love" always has its charm for every human heart, and this one, narrated in Mrs. Toland's choicest verse, with illustrations by our best artists, ought to be one of the most popular gift books of the season.

THREE POEMS. Illustrated with Wood Engraving.

Royal 8vo, extra cloth, $6.00; ivory surface, $6.00; full tree calf, $10.00.

This volume contains "Gray's Elegy," "The Hermit," by Oliver Goldsmith, and "The Closing Scene," by T. Buchanan Read. All illustrated by the best artists; forming a collection of gems of poetry and art suitable for the holidays.

PRINCE LITTLE BOY, and Other Tales Out of Fairy-Land.

By S. WEIR MITCHELL, M. D. Illustrated by F. S. CHURCH and H. SIDONS MOWBRAY. 4to, cloth extra, $1.50.

Dr. Mitchell is not only gifted with the power of entertaining the mature and thoughtful by his novels, scientific works, etc., but has the rare faculty of pleasing the children by the stories his fancy so readily weaves. Several of the best and most familiar of these stories are collected in this volume, and a number of others equally interesting have been written especially for it. The illustrations are very appropriate, and no child will fail to appreciate and enjoy the work.

IDA WAUGH'S ALPHABET BOOK. Attractively Illustrated.

"For little ones, who, if they look,
Will find their letters in this book."

Verses by AMY E. BLANCHARD. Printed in two colors, on heavy plate paper. Large 4to, 9 x 11 inches. Bound in attractive Illuminated Cover. $1.00.

This beautiful volume will make that first task of childhood, "learning the letters," a joy to the mother who teaches, and a delight to the child who learns.

. For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, transportation free, on receipt of the price, by

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,

715 & 717 MARKET STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, OCT. 15, 1887.

No. 21.

CONTENTS.

FREDERICK HAZZLEDEN	341
SCHERHAZADE	341
CABOT'S LIFE OF EMERSON	341
THE PHILOSOPHY OF THEISM	342
INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION	343
THE GATES BETWEEN	343
MODERN ITALIAN POETS	344
MR. INCOUL'S MISADVENTURE	347
MR. STOCKTON'S FANCIFUL TALES	347
TWO DOCTORS ABROAD:
Dr. Holmes's Hundred Days	348
Dr. Glisan's Two Years	348
JUVENILES:
Under the Storm	349
Who Saved the Ship? etc.	349
MORE TALES FROM TOLSTOI:
The Invaders, and Other Stories	349
The Cossacks	349
MINOR FICTION:
A Village Maid	349
A Vacation in a Buggy	349
The Romance of the Canoness	350
Gretchen	350
MINOR NOTICES:
Prison Life in Siberia	350
An Astronomical Manual	350
Bishop Wilmer's Reminiscences	350
Famous American Authors	350
Sermons	351
Architecture	351
Roman Remains in Britain	351
Steam Yachts and Launches	351
Culture's Garland	352
Etc., Etc., Etc.
THE REFERENCE LIBRARY	346
"THE GREAT CRYPTOGRAM." Table of Contents	346
NOTES AND QUERIES. 829-830	346
THE PROFESSIONAL FOOL IN LITERATURE. J. Oliver Smith	347
WORLD BIOGRAPHIES:
Edgar Van Evertsen Saltus	347
PERIODICALS	352
NEWS AND NOTES	352
INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS	353
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	353

FREDERICK HAZZLEDEN.*

WHSOEVER "Hugh Westbury" may be, he has written in Frederick Hazzleden a novel of significant power; a novel dealing to a certain extent with familiar materials, but using them in new ways; a novel abounding in original views, in daring hypotheses concerning social matters, in clever satire on conventional persons, forms, and ceremonies, in a wide range of information with regard to the condition of Ireland, the seamy side of English politics, pagan vicars, ritualistic incumbents, Philistine dissenters, life in a great English manufacturing center, the schemes of dynamiters, voodooism, life about town in London, the workings of Parliament. Whether telling the story of an evicted tenant, or reporting a sermon, or describing the interior of a gin-palace, or laying bare the methods of winning an election, or sketching a debate in the House of Commons, or portraying an attempt to blow up Westminster Abbey, the author is always sure of himself and carries the reader with him. If we were to characterize "Hugh Westbury" from what we learn of him in this book, we should say that he is a man of the world, one who has traveled, thought, and read much; one who knows human nature thoroughly well, and in spite of a keen perception of its failings realizes also its capacity for love, and pity, and self-sacrifice; a journalist, possibly, but one accomplished in his calling, and not made cynical by it; a writer certainly of unusual force; a poet, if we may trust to the evidence of two dedicatory sonnets and two or three songs interpolated in the course of the story; a critic of art and literature; and, above all, one who possesses in some degree the creative faculty, the ability to depict personality in the dramatic form.

The story of Frederick Hazzleden is that of an average young Englishman endowed with a talent for affairs, not lacking in a wholesome conceit, who stands for Parliament, wins a seat in the House, marries his not-too-amiable cousin, and is left at the close of the volume in a fair way to become a ruling force in the affairs of state. The tragic elements are supplied by a dynamite conspiracy and the sacrifice of a beautiful and noble-hearted Irish girl, Mary O'Connor, who because of her patriotism is made the tool of brutal plotters of destruction and murder. The minor characters are all brought out clearly and firmly. Arnitte, the mysterious mind-reading American; the astronomical vicar of Lorton; pugnacious, impetuous, warm-hearted Kate; Mr. Hazzleden, the venerable disciple of Darwin; Calvinistic, grotesque, faithful Aunt Maria; O'Connor the dynamiter—these, as well as the Dockborough electors and the dramatis personæ of the Parliamentary lobbies, do not fail to impress us as consistent entities. Frederick Hazzleden, taken for all in all, is worth knowing, and the account of his joys and sorrows, his aspirations, failures, and successes, is a contribution to current fiction which discerning readers will be glad not to overlook.

SCHEHERAZADE.*

IT must be, as Mr. Higginson has lately pointed out, that the essential distinction between English and American literary ideals today is found in the fact that England takes its dime novels seriously. Americans have enough of such fiction, but it is relegated to its proper place and is not ranked as literature. In England productions of the same sort are published in handsome form, are reviewed in extenso by the leading periodicals, and are discussed in the drawing-rooms of fashion and culture. Imagine a country where Ned Buntline contests literary supremacy with Mr. James or Mr. Howells! Yet English readers of ostensible taste do not hesitate to place Mr. Rider Haggard and his innumerable prototypes, imitators, and rivals side by side with Mr. Blackmore or Mr. Hardy. One would say that the more sensational the plot, the more indecent the situations, the worse the grammar, and the more impossible the syntax, the surer are these literary fungi of consideration and favor.

Among the exalted dime novelists of England Miss Florence Warden has with her Scheherazade won a distinguished place. In this work, as in some of her former writings, the preposterous and the prurient are mingled in about equal proportions, but the results in this case quite surpass any of the author's previous efforts, and fairly entitle the book in question to be designated as typical of everything that a good novel should not be. It reeks with the fumes of a sickly and over-stimulated fancy, and no amount of hypocritical moralizing can atone for the debasing influences of such a tale. It is perhaps possible that the voluptuous daughter of a notorious strumpet, having inveigled a young lieutenant of hussars into a marriage and ruined him by her caprices, should become after years of suffering a noble, faithful, intellectual woman, and a fit wife for a sober, discreet, ambitious man; but such a conclusion is not probable, and we may be pardoned for thinking that the author has added the sugar-coating of a high moral purpose to justify the veiled salacity that permeates two thirds of this detestable book.

CABOT'S LIFE OF EMERSON.*

THE author of this long-expected biography of Ralph Waldo Emerson is probably known to but few persons outside of Boston literary circles as a Brookline gentleman of leisure who used to write able articles on philosophy for the North American Review in its best days. He was the intimate friend of Emerson, and prepared his lectures for publication when this labor had become too much for their writer. Thus Mr. Cabot, naturally, was intrusted by the family with Emerson's letters and journals as materials for the final biography. The task has been performed in a manner worthy of its subject. The biographer has kept himself modestly in the background; he has refrained from that extreme adulation or hero-worship so common with Emerson's admirers, and the few pages in which he drops the biographic vein to define the philosophic and religious currents of fifty years ago, only make one wish for more matter of the same kind from one who is so evidently qualified to judge that "ferment of thought" sympathetically and dispassionately.

Mr. Cabot has chosen to write, not a work on Emerson and his time, but a personal memoir which will remain the biography of the Concord sage henceforth. Mr. Cooke's introduction to the study of Emerson's writings and philosophy is not superseded by this Memoir, but nearly every other portrait is rendered superfluous. Emerson said of himself that "he was not born under epistolary stars;" so that in the numerous letters, here first printed, as in the full extracts from his journals, we are not surprised by revelations of qualities in the man which were not before fully visible in the writer. But, uncovering his heart in these intimate pages, Emerson shows in his life the same serene beauty which was conspicuous in his lectures and essays. His biographer, giving here as full details as are desirable of his personal fortunes, has in no least degree diminished the pureness of his fame. Rather, do we believe, will many learn for the first time from these finely tempered pages how wise and fair he was, how religious to the very core.

* Frederick Hazzleden. By Hugh Westbury. Macmillan & Co. $1.00.

* Scheherazade: A London Night's Entertainment. By Florence Warden. D. Appleton & Co. 25c.

* A Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson. By James Elliot Cabot. Two volumes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $3.50.

Emerson was not a playful, but an angelic boy, who lived too much apart from other boys for his best education, and was bound, with his gifted brothers, in an "iron band of poverty, of necessity, of austerity." The Emerson household was not gloomy, however, though the atmosphere was extremely intellectual, and Miss Mary Moody Emerson had too severe a moral oversight of her young and delicate nephews. At college Waldo was "president's freshman" (or page) and a waiter at commons; not until he had graduated was the family free from the stress of instant poverty. He was a successful teacher, failing to satisfy only himself; but the ministry was his obvious vocation. Yet the reluctance which he felt at entering upon it was derived from the fact that he was born to be the mouthpiece of ideas, not the advocate of a definite scheme. His theological course was brief and often interrupted. Emerson's first sermon was suggested to him by a Methodist laborer on his uncle's farm in Newton, where he was working for the benefit of his health. "Ignorant and rude," this man "had some deep thoughts."

He said to me that men were always praying and that all prayers were granted. I meditated much on this saying, and wrote my first sermon therefrom; of which the divisions were: (1) Men are always praying; (2) All their prayers are granted; (3) We must beware, then, what we ask.

The story of Emerson's connection with the Second Church in Boston is fully told here for the first time. The relation was severed, with the best of feeling on both sides, because of his unwillingness to administer the communion service in the usual form. Emerson seems to have been surprised that the church did not accede to his proposal that the elements should remain upon the table and the service thus be made purely commemorative. The parting would yet, in all probability, have been only postponed for a season had the church assented. His true place was not in the pulpit but on the platform. He was always a preacher, a constitutional believer, and by nature a worshiper. Mr. Cabot well says that what he wished to disturb was formalism; the stagnation of the spiritual life about the emblems of a faith that has departed; the gazing after past revelations until we are blind to the present.

Thoreau "exalted sauntering into a religion," but in Emerson the transcendental fervor was balanced by the Puritan genius for conduct; he believed the Christian religion to be profoundly true—true to an extent that they who are styled its most orthodox defenders have never, or but in rarest glimpses once or twice in a lifetime, reached. I am for the principles; they are for the men. They reckon me unbelieving; I, with better reason, them.

The Unitarianism of that time awakened no high spiritual enthusiasm; it was morally earnest, but worship had lost its significance, and "a new orthodoxy, narrower and more barefaced than the old, since the only ground of religious certitude had been expressly cut away" (says Mr. Cabot), resisted the new endeavor to make religion, not traditional, but spiritual. So Emerson did best to stand apart, and wait for time to justify the beauty of his faith, though it has not approved his individualism as the sole method for renewing the world.

Unable to preach from the pulpit, Emerson was obliged by his pecuniary circumstances "to go peddling with my literary pack of notions," though it seemed like a profanation. "I doubt not a course of mobs would do me much good," said the serene idealist, feeling once a stagnation coming on; and when a Cambridge audience disturbed one of his anti-slavery speeches with hisses, shouts, and cat-calls, "he stood with perfect quietness until the hubbub was over, and then went on with the next word" as if nothing had happened. Of Emerson as a reformer, Mr. Cabot finely says: "He liked the sun's way of making civilization cast off its disguises better than the storm's." He had too much breadth of view to denounce the slaveholder as wholly an evil being, and he imagined that a woman whom all men would feel to be the best would decline such privileges [the ballot] if offered, and feel them to be rather obstacles to her legitimate influence. . . . I have the same objection to dogmatism in Reform as to dogmatism in Conservatism.

Very delightful is the picture which Mr. Cabot gives of Emerson at home and his ways with his children, entering as he did with the keenest sympathy into every detail of their work and their play, and keeping a record of what they did and said, their "pretty oracles" chronicled like the anecdotes of Plutarch." In this connection are given extracts from Emerson's letters concerning that "hyacinthine boy," dead at five, scarcely less moving than the wonderful Threnody. Mr. Cabot scarcely does justice to the almost inspired quality of some of Emerson's poetry, remarking only that "how little he was willing to sacrifice to literary form is shown by the stumbling-blocks he constantly allowed to remain in his verse." Of Emerson as a reader and student his biographer thus speaks:

He would have been partly amused, partly vexed, to hear himself described as a profound student—of the New Platonists, or of anything to be learned from books. He was a profound student—of impressions, sentiments, experiences; and was ready to receive them from any source. But of the disengaged curiosity, the readiness to enter into and pursue the ideas of others, that makes the student, the man of letters, he had very little. He did not even pursue his own. . . . On the whole, what is most noteworthy in Emerson's relation to books is the slowness of his dependence on them.

We have left ourselves no space to speak of Emerson's visits to Europe, where, of course, Carlyle was the chief attraction for him, but where he also saw, through Carlyle, the best society of the time. His impressions of De Quincey, Wordsworth, Landor, Macaulay, and Tennyson are especially worthy of quotation, but we have room only for two sentences respecting his host in 1847:

Carlyle and his wife live on beautiful terms. Nothing can be more engaging than their ways, and in his bookcase all his books are inscribed to her, as they came from year to year, each with some significant lines.

Mr. Cabot's Memoir is the literary event of the year in the field of biography. All lovers of Emerson are to be congratulated on a biography which contains few quotations from his published writings, but is largely composed of extracts from his unpublished letters and journals. They reveal no new features, but they serve often as an admirable commentary by Emerson himself on the Essays in which, owing to his habit of writing, he expressed himself much less connectedly. But little, if any, abatement from Mr. Cabot's estimate is to be made, we must think, by the most judicial student of Emerson's life and works. It is a memoir which he who warned men against the superlative degree would have treasured.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THEISM.*

THIS admirable volume consists of seven chapters, with an introduction and a conclusion; so that it is, in effect, a treatise in nine divisions, averaging thirty pages each. The author goes very little into detail, but confines himself to the fundamental questions concerning the origin and validity of religious ideas; more particularly of the idea of God in its highest Christian form. These questions relate to the unity of the original Cause of the universe; to the evidence that that Cause is intelligent, self-conscious, and self-directed in rational activity; having in itself the grounds and origin of all the relations of parts to parts, the grounds and origin of truth and righteousness. They relate also to the evidence that the universe is not produced unconsciously, or of necessity, but that it is the product of an ever active, be-nificent Will, creating men free moral agents, and guiding the course of events in such wise as to indicate a moral government over man. The nature and validity of the arguments upon these points is discussed in a very strong and clear manner, showing at times originality as well as learning and ability; and from the review of the whole field Professor Bowne draws the conclusion that although the being of God is not susceptible of an a priori demonstration, it stands, in that matter, on the same footing as the being of our fellow-men; we can neither prove nor disprove His being; nor can we prove or disprove the existence of men around us. But all experience implies and demands the existence of a wise and holy God, just as distinctly and as strongly as it implies and demands the existence of other men. The conclusion is not new, it has been reached by thousands of Jewish and Christian thinkers; but it has never been shown by a more thorough and able review of the whole field of argument than in this latest work of Bowne.

* Philosophy of Theism. By Borden P. Bowne. Harper & Brothers. $1.75.

There are, nevertheless, some defects in the volume. The most serious blemish is the style; the frequent occurrence of unusual words, out of the way phrases and coinage of the moment. A less grave, but in our view real blemish, is the introduction of a discussion of the nature of time and space. When our author says that time "is only the form of change in general; the cosmic process is not in time, but by its incessant change it produces the form of time;" and adds that God, by creating, "gave time its existence"—he says that which not one of his readers can ever construe into actual thought. It is a mere jugglery of words, and will be more apt to make the reader distrust the author's reasoning in the remainder of the volume than to help him in solving the insoluble antinomies of infinite space and time. The reader may perhaps forget the candid confession of the author in the introduction, that he had "no expectation of clearing up all the puzzles of metaphysics."

A man is to be judged, however, by his best rather than by his worst; and in this case especially, since the best extends over so large a portion of the volume, and the worst is in such narrow limits. When we once overcome the repulsion arising from Professor Bowne's English, we become immediately interested in the clearness and sharpness of his thought and the binding force of his reasoning. He leads us to see the relation between faith and experience, and forces us to confess that our processes in regard to all ordinary experience rest on faith, just as distinctly as our processes in religion. The new-born child recognizes the difference between a human being and an inanimate object, and in a very few months imitates movements which it sees. This proves that it practically recognizes the likeness of nature in itself and in others. But it goes through no logical forms of proof in coming to the conclusion that the people around it are of like nature with itself. It would puzzle the most acute logician to give any reason, capable of being put into syllogistic form, to prove that other men are in existence. Yet his certainty that they exist is second only to the certainty of his own existence. To doubt the existence of men around us, intelligent moral agents, with heads and hearts like our own, would be supreme folly.

But we have the same sort of ground, if not stronger, for recognizing a Creator and Ruler of the universe, in whose image we have been created. That likeness of our minds and hearts to his is the ground on which we assume the presence and universality of physical law, and assume that righteousness and fair dealing must, in the long run, be better than wrong doing. It is that likeness to the Divine Creator which makes Herbert Spencer believe that "there is no vice in the constitution of things." We are no more illogical or weak-minded in believing in God than we are in believing in our fellow-men. The devout man looks up to his Heavenly Father in precisely the same way, and with as sound a logical basis for his faith, as the little child turns to his mother. The man who fails to hold theistic views of the First Cause, fails from one of three reasons—abnormal idiosyncrasy of intellect, error in the analysis of the grounds of belief, or unwillingness to accept the results of that analysis. He who fails from the first reason can scarcely be expected to appreciate the reasoning of this volume; and he who fails from the third reason is not in a position to be moved by purely intellectual appeals, however forcible. But the man who fails from the second cause may find great help from Professor Bowne; and those who do hold theistic views will find in his treatise a very cheering and strengthening confirmation of their faith.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.*

MR. LOVE is the superintendent of the public schools of Jamestown, N. Y. This book, both in the theories which it advances and in the practice which it illustrates, has grown out of his observation and experience in that position and in the steps leading to it. Twenty-one years ago he came to Jamestown to organize the Union School. Finding that the system then existing did not meet the wants of the public, he established at an early day new departments of vocal and instrumental music, book-keeping, physical culture, normal instruction, drawing and painting. The success of these changes led the way to experiments in more strictly industrial training. A private fund having been raised, a printing office was opened in an unoccupied school-room, and now in about a dozen years the attendance has grown from eight to twenty pupils, and instead of two hours' instruction a week, four are given.

From this beginning advance was easy. Advantage was taken of the well-known taste of children for collecting, and collections of woods and of snails were begun. Primary pupils were allowed to make pen-wipers and scrap-books, to string beads and to plait straw; a sewing-school was started, for boys as well as girls; presently a mechanical shop was opened, with tools and fixtures complete; and a cooking-school followed in due time.

Today [says Mr. Love], January 19, 1887, this much can be said of the department of manual training in the Jamestown public schools. All the pupils in the first six grades, about 1,400 in number, are given lessons daily, or at least three or four times a week, in some kind of manual training. One hundred and twenty-five of the girls and sixty-five of the boys receive lessons in the sewing-room or shop at least twice or three times a week, and twenty boys and girls set type in the printing-office an hour four days of the week.

To expound this interesting experiment in detail, with a view to encouraging and facilitating its imitation elsewhere, is the object of Mr. Love's book. The course of study in the Jamestown schools is scheduled in detail. The principles underlying it are analyzed, and the claims of the system set forth with much ingenuity and force. Manual training, Mr. Love believes, ranks with the study of numbers or language as an intellectual exercise. Further than this, it conduces to positive usefulness. It promotes independence of character. It furnishes intended employment for muscular powers. It ministers to children's natural love of activity. It helps and not hinders book work.

The third and fourth Parts of the book, constituting the bulk of it, pass from these general principles to the directions and illustrations offered in aid of the plan. A great variety of manual occupations are described, adapted to children of different ages and capacities—all sorts of wood and paper work, needlework, embroidery, artificial flowers, etc., etc., with particulars as to tools and materials, and minute practical instructions in processes. Wherever the book carries conviction as to the theory proposed, it will go far toward enabling those interested to put it into operation.

The reading matter is abundantly re-enforced by diagrams.

THE GATES BETWEEN.*

IT occasionally happens, as, notably, in the case of Robert Browning, that a man is so gifted with insight into the subtleties of a woman's nature that when he writes in the character of a woman he can be mistaken for one, but it would seem well nigh impossible for a woman thus to understand and personate a man. With all her trying, the petticoat peeps out beneath the doublet. There will be a hint of uncertainty, an unnecessary complexity of deduction, or a flavor of exaggeration—a something to betray the real sex; so that, as some one said of Phineas Fletcher, the gentle biographer of John Halifax, Gentleman: "Though he calls himself an uncle it is easy to perceive that he is only an aunt."

* Industrial Education. By Samuel G. Love. Assisted by Mary R. Willard. Illus. E. L. Kellogg & Co. $1.75.

* The Gates Between. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

So it is with the hero of Miss Phelps's third novel of a future state, The Gates Between. He calls himself Dr. Esmerald Thorne, an eminent medical practitioner of the homeopathic fraternity by "indications," but all the while we perceive that he is in reality a high-strung, fantastic, hysterical woman. Not only is his standpoint distinctly feminine, but the brain which conceived him is equally so. Who but a woman, with a woman's (some women's!) exaggerated ideas of a man's capacity and a man's endurance, could depict a being of ordinary flesh and blood as capable of such a day's work as is described:

I had been up for two nights with a dangerous case. I had another in the suburbs and a consultation in the town. There was a quarrel at the hospital and a panic in Stock Street. I had seen sixty patients that day.

Now, allowing sixteen hours for the day's work, a liberal estimate, and deducting one for the consultation and the quarrel at the hospital, this calculation involves a patient every fifteen minutes for fifteen consecutive hours, with no allowance for stops or meals—a feat which, even for a single day, is manifestly impossible. No wonder that Dr. Thorne went home in ill temper, to vent his wrath on the wife who awaited him in "a gown of white woolen material trimmed with ermine." (What a dreadful gown, by the way! How inevitably it suggests the idea of an ill-conditioned spotty sort of pussy cat!) No wonder, as we say, that Dr. Thorne was cross, but why need he have been so petulant, ill-bred, vulgar? Here is another feminine point. It is only in woman's novels that the impassioned lover of only three years ago can turn into such an abominable and unbearable "three-tailed bashaw." Husbands have their faults, no doubt, but a gentleman under provocation remains a gentleman from instinct so far as outward expression goes, and though he may break his wife's heart with an innuendo or a taunt, will inevitably do it in a manner more or less polished. Dr. Esmerald Thorne's outburst is an impossibility.

Then, within an hour, he is killed and turned into a most unhappy ghost. Here Miss Phelps's real power becomes apparent. The limbo between the boundaries of flesh and spirit, which she arranges for the reception of this erring and repentant soul, is far more real and suggestive than the material heaven to which she introduced her readers in The Gates Wide Open. A very desirable reserve characterizes her description, but there are hints of great beauty and tenderness as the worldly nature gradually awakens to a sense of its own deficiency, the proud heart learns humility, and the blossom of heavenly love plants itself in the arid soil which heretofore had borne but the barren fruitage of personal satisfactions and human ambitions. And when the end comes, and the disciplined spirit leads its own through the "long, sharp, dark way," and they recognize each other, no one who has sinned against love and been forgiven could read, we think, without a sense of coming tears:

And when we turned our footsteps toward the light, and came out together, hand in hand, there was our little boy, at play upon the bed of crimson moss and smiling like the face of joy eternal. So his mother held out her arms and the child ran into them. And when we came to ourselves we blessed Almighty God.

MODERN ITALIAN POETS.*

THE period of verse which Mr. Howells sketches in this interesting volume of critical essays is that which was the prelude to Italian liberty. In the selva selvaggia of political and moral disorder to which the times of the Renaissance had added their luxuriant, stifling growths, while there was yet darkness the birds began their songs. Here a hesitant note, and another that replied, a cry here and a voice of courage there; the singers took heart of mutual sympathy and hailed the sunrise to come. The old Roman spirit made no sign of life, while the humanists of the Renaissance were stirring to recall the early forms of art and bring back the golden age of letters. The tyrants of Italy lulled her sons with poppy and mandragora of classic ideals; and absorbed in narcotic visions they forgot the ruin of their country. The enchanted epics of Tasso and Ariosto, the golden languors of Petrarca and his flock of followers, the courtly pastorals of Sannazzaro and Poliziano—ineestimably precious as they are—were the result of conditions which we pray may never return upon Italy.

The poets of the period delineated by Mr. Howells felt a stress of patriotic duty to which their art must be secondary. Italy was gradually returning to consciousness, and beginning to move toward the liberty which was later to take the form of a constitutional monarchy that as nearly fulfills the scheme of government believed in and hoped for by Dante, as any practical, working institution can express an ideal theory.

Of the group of powerful poets who each had part in this patriotic struggle, Mr. Howells judiciously observes that they were inspired by, as well as were inspirers of, the popular longing for liberty, and that their times were not unready for them. His comment upon the duty of hatred to tyrants is amusing in its frank American quality; and if at times his genial irony strikes a note somewhat remote from the key of his theme, so pleasant a divergence calls for no stern criticism. And Mr. Howells has the good taste to treat seriously, for the most part, the details of the literary phase which implied a great patriotic purpose.

The first of the poets whom Mr. Howells recalls is Carlo Frugoni, an abbate of the gentle kind that assisted at the toilettes of literary great ladies, advised as to the position of a patch, or read verses before the goddess hidden in a cloud of hair-powder. People of fashion tried to restore Arcady then, parceling out its territory among the members of their fantastic academies; and comported themselves as much like shepherds and nymphs as they knew how, with the idyls of Theocritus for a text-book of behavior. These academies lingered long in undisturbed shadowy life—the poet Longfellow received a warrant of unsubstantial land and a sonnet to his Arcadian address.

Mr. Howells's clever picture of the neopastoral epoch serves as a background against which emerges the figure of the Lombard Parini, full of lively common sense and elegant satire, to whom that artificial society gave great opportunity. He wrote a poem upon the Day as spent by a Milanese young man of quality; and his mock-heroic verse, conforming to the best manner of Italian burlesque, often rises without effort to passages of serious and genuine poetry. Nothing more complete than the Milanese dandy can be imagined; manners make the man, whether bowing over the "warm ivory" of his lady's hand, admiring the Junonian anger with which she dismisses a footman inconsiderate of her lap-dog, or assisting at the feminine duel of a morning call. Ah, there was need of a revolution, and perhaps Citizen Parini foresaw it! In contrast to this gay satirist is the portrait of Vittorio Alfieri, somber and intense; taking himself most seriously, and likewise the world, because he was in it. A passionate student and reader, an ambitious writer, a fashionable lover, a sullen hater, and wrapped up in a manifold egotism which he came later to regret, Alfieri admired Ossian, and approved Shakespeare—with critical reservations. But his own tragedies were to come; and he steeped himself in the study of the great Italian models and of the pure Tuscan idiom in preparation for his task, the series of classic and historic tragedies which placed him among the first of Italian poets.

Milan was much changed between the times of Alfieri and those of Foscolo and Monti. The latter appears like a chameleon made vocal, taking the color and singing the praises of whatever topic or party was nearest him. Mr. Howells gives an extract from Monti's apotheosis of Louis XVI, of which the enthusiasm seems all its own, hardly suggested by the subject of the verses. And in another poem the same king is referred to as "the vile perjurer, Capet," with not much less enthusiasm for the art of poetry. Apropos, would not the line which Mr. Howells justly praises,

* Modern Italian Poets: Essays and Versions. By W. D. Howells. With Portraits. Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

Ivi queta il suo vol, ivi s'appunta
In tre sguardi beato, ivi il cor tace,
E tutta perde del desio la punta, be more closely rendered than in his translation, somewhat thus:

And there he stays his flight, there finds his aim,
Blest in the three-fold gaze; the heart is stilled,
And loses all the urgency of desire.

Ugo Foscolo is famous for his magnificent meditation, I Sepolcri; and is also to be credited with the first essays toward elucidation of the political allegories of the "Divina Commedia," and classical comments on Boccaccio and Petrarca. Recently published letters have somewhat renewed in Italy the interest in that phase of the life of Foscolo supposed to be depicted in his "Jacopo Ortis." And his courage and patriotism endear his name to his nation.

With Manzoni, Grossi, and D'Azeglio came in the romantic school of poetry, as distinguished from the classical. The noble and tender heart of Manzoni, which transmitted to his pen the story of the "Promessi Sposi," rose to superb heights of charity in the ode to Napoleon, "Il Cinque Maggio," and to the perfect lyric expression of large love for humanity in the great chorus which crowns his tragedy of the "Conte di Carmagnola."

Of Silvio Pellico, Mr. Howells thinks that his chief poem is the story of his long patience; and he considers Tommaso Grossi a man of one song—"The Pilgrim Swallow." Perhaps it is natural that the charming sirventesi, incidental in Grossi's novel of "Marco Visconti," should be found too romantic for the taste of the realist. Luigi Carrer, who had a touch of the North in his nature, is quoted and praised for his life-like lyrics; and Berchet is recognized by Mr. Howells as the most fervid and outspoken of the Italian poets, who, for the most part, had to sing to muted strings their hatred of the Austrians. Giambattista Nicolini wrote tragedies, conveying a passionate protest in his "Giovanni di Procida;" and, later, published "Arnaldo da Brescia," as a rebuke to those who placed their hopes in a liberal papacy. Of this tragedy Mr. Howells discourses finely, at length ending his résumé with some nobly sympathetic phrases.

The clever and effective sketch of Leopardi seems a little lacking in appreciation of its subject. It may be difficult for an Anglo-Saxon realist to enter intimately the circle of the charm of Leopardi's nature; and not less difficult, perhaps, to avoid a feeling that the poems of Leopardi play around their central idea of Death with a luxury of woe quite removed from the plain, unlovely facts of mortality. On the contrary, Leopardi was only too well acquainted with every detail of suffering, but his artistic conscience prohibited to his verse any jarring note of such realism as we rightly admire in the prose of Tolstoy's "Ivan Ilyitch." Mr. Howells translates several extracts from Leopardi's verse with much faithfulness and taste, deprecating the loss of the perfume of poetry in his versions more severely than his readers will find needful to do. In the poem addressed by Leopardi to himself a little inadvertence occurs in rendering the lines:

Peri l'inganno estremo
Ch'eterno io mi credei. Peri . . .

as "The last deceit is ended, for I believed myself immortal." The adjective eterno refers to inganno; the mi being used, according to a common Italian idiom, merely as an intensive. Hence we may read:

Dead is the last delusion
Which I believed eternal. Dead . . .

The repetition of the word peri is an effect worth trying to preserve in translation.

The delicate, bright wit of Giusti and his direct and telling genius appeal to Mr. Howells's liking—indeed, the pensive comicality of the Italian's consideration of a too late love affair is quite in his American commentator's own vein. In Francesco Dall' Ongaro, patriot and poet, Mr. Howells finds another subject for well-merited enthusiasm, and recognizes in his "Stornelli"—imitated from popular forms of verse—"the spirit of a race at once the most intellectual and most emotional in the world, whose poets write as passionately of politics as of love." The "Stornelli" chosen for illustration are excellently translated. Prati, native of a wild valley near the border of Germany, is represented by translations of a poem akin to the mystic ballads of that land, and by a grim arraignment of a spy. Alceardo Alceardi found time before and after his fierce experiences of prison and exile to write his "Primal Histories," "An Hour of My Youth," and various other poems, with such brilliance and beauty that Mr. Howells finds no comparison less than the changeful fires of an opal to express the glowing details of his verse. Giulio Carcano with lyric appeals to the sentiment of home, Fusinato with clever satire, Mercantini with simple dramatic truth, sought each in his own way to avail Italy; and with the names of these poets Mr. Howells terminates his volume of attractive and usually judicious essays. A little more of care and preparation would have been better than the winning confessions by which he disarms criticism. So efficient and favorite a writer as he is should never give less than his best attention to the work in hand, and should possess himself fully of the atmosphere and details of the subject which he is to render popular. This volume, however, will suffice to give a clear and intelligent summary of an important period of Italian verse. The translations are close and wholly free from affectation. At times the metre halts or lacks smoothness, and here and there a line ends with an unimportant word, or accents are too much crowded; but these technical blemishes take nothing from the honesty and force of the renderings. Certain Italian metres, for instance that of the chorus from the "Conte di Carmagnola," or of the "Cinque Maggio," are foreign to the spirit of English prosody, and Mr. Howells deserves praise for his translations of these lyrics. In the final verse of the chorus it was surely no lack of appreciation that allowed the English version to miss the significant lofty leap of the phrase,

Che contrista uno spirito immortal.

In conclusion it may be said that Mr. Howells, never more felicitous or artistic than when he writes of Italian things, deserves cordial thanks for a volume which fills a place hitherto empty in literature, introducing to liberty-loving American readers the singers who heralded and helped the dawn of freedom in Italy.

MINOR NOTICES.

Bodyke. By Henry Norman. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.] In this book of 78 pp., No. XLII of "Questions of the Day," are reprinted (with additions) a series of telegraphic dispatches to the Pall Mall Gazette, London, describing some recent evictions as the writer saw them. Bodyke is the name of a village in Ireland where they occurred. They are not, as they ought to be, judicial and impartial statements of fact free from bias either way, but indignant and partisan reports from the tenants' side, highly colored with sympathy therefor. We admit the roughness, hardness, and cruelty of evictions, but the landlords have at least a right to be heard, and their view of existing difficulties is not presented in these letters. Mr. Norman means to be fair, but he is not so in at least one or two conspicuous instances. We can readily understand how an observer of an eviction might be carried away by his feelings in reporting what he saw, but what is needed for consideration of difficulties in Ireland is a point of view sufficiently lofty and commanding to take in the whole case in all its bearings. Mr. Norman is not there; he is down in the scuffle with the constables, the soldiery, and Michael Davitt. Evictions as the evicted see them are forcibly pictured; nothing beyond that.

Sea Spray; or, Facts and Fancies of a Yachtsman. By S. G. W. Benjamin. [Benjamin & Bell. Paper, 50c.] This pretty book is a collection of ten short papers having marine facts and fancies for subjects. Among the most interesting is an article on "The Evolution of the American Yacht." "What Came of a Sea Picnic" and "A Cruise in a Pilot Boat" are also deserving of special mention. All the stories but two have appeared in various New York papers. Mr. Benjamin is well known by his more substantial and solid writings, but these pleasant pages show no deterioration therefrom.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 15, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

 Mr. John Heard, Jr., of Glenwood, Mass., has shown us a portrait of Tolstoi, done by the photogravure process, which is certainly vastly superior to the wood-cut lately published by us, and which Mr. Heard assures us is thoroughly truthful and far more characteristic. It displays a noble head, and an expression of great benignity and cultivation, closely akin in spirit to the best likenesses of Longfellow.

THE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

SOME books are written to be read, others to be referred to. Out of this distinction grows a class of reference books, and out of reference books, reference libraries, of which the new Newberry Library in Chicago is to be a grand and famous example. Reference libraries on a small scale are within the reach of every one; "no family should be without one;" wherever there is a dictionary there is a beginning; and a good assortment of reference books may well be the first aim of the young collector.

Books are either pictures to look at, voices to listen to, or tools to work with, and we advise all persons whose means are limited and who, wishing a library around them, must collect it little by little, to begin with the books that are tools.

First among these, doubtless, is a good English dictionary, and the best dictionary is almost a library in itself. Next to the dictionary comes an encyclopædia, and whether it be in few volumes or many, there is no work which on the whole will pay so large an interest on the investment. A good cyclopædia is history, biography, art, science, and philosophy, all in one; it is a directory to the whole world's knowledge and a map of the whole world's literature. After the cyclopædia should follow an excellent atlas, of ancient maps and modern, and then in turn those special dictionaries, lexicons, and hand-books, whose function it is to answer the hard questions which life is constantly raising, and furnish the varied information which daily experience is always requiring.

When one has filled the shelf with these, he may turn his attention to the standards in literature, the great masters of thought in good editions, books which having once been read take a permanent place for consultation, books to be "read, marked, learned, and inwardly digested," little by little, the solid works, the Plutarchs and the Platos, the Dantes and the Miltons, the poets, essayists, and historians, whose writings are our common heritage. Let the novels wait.

Within the compass of a hundred volumes, and the expense of a few hundreds of dollars, one can thus accumulate a little reference library which will answer all common purposes, which will illumine the path of labor, which will edify and entertain the mind, which will equip one's place in life without encumbering it, and which will keep one in communion with universal knowledge.

THE HON. IGNATIUS DONNELLY'S FORTHCOMING BOOK.

"The Great Cryptogram."

THE TABLE OF CONTENTS.

BOOK I. — THE ARGUMENT.

PART I.

William Shakspeare did not Write the Plays.

- I. The Learning of the Plays. — II. Shakspeare's Education. — III. Shakspeare's Real Character. — IV. The Lost Manuscripts and Library. — V. The Author of the Plays was a Lawyer.

PART II.

Francis Bacon the Real Author of the Plays.

- I. Francis Bacon a Poet. — II. The Author of the Plays a Philosopher. — III. The Geography of the Plays. — IV. The Politics of the Plays. — V. The Religion of the Plays. — VI. The Purposes of the Plays. — VII. The Reasons for Concealment. — VIII. Corroborating Circumstances.

PART III.

Parallelisms.

- I. Identical Expressions. — II. Identical Metaphors. — III. Identical Opinions. — IV. Identical Quotations. — V. Identical Studies. — VI. Identical Errors. — VII. Identical Use of Unusual Words. — VIII. Identities of Character. — IX. Identities of Style.

BOOK II. — THE DEMONSTRATION.

PART I.

The Cipher in the Plays.

- I. How I came to Look for a Cipher. — II. How I Became Certain there was a Cipher. — III. A Vain Search in the Common Editions. — IV. The Great Folio of 1623. — V. Lost in the Wilderness. — VI. The Cipher Found.

PART II.

The Cipher Narrative.

- I. The Treasonable Play of Richard II, published by Richard Field. — II. The Treasonable History of Henry IV, written by Dr. Hayward. — III. Robert Cecil's Suspicions Aroused. — IV. Hayward brought before the Queen. — V. Cecil declares Shakspeare to be but a Mask for Bacon. — VI. To prove it, he tells the story of Shakspeare's Youth; of his robbery of Sir Thomas Lucy's Park, and the destruction of his fish-pond. — VII. He describes Shakspeare's appearance when he first came to London, and declares him incapable of writing the Plays. — VIII. He asserts the purpose of the historical plays to be to dignify rebellion, and encourage treason, in the interest of the Scotch King. — IX. On hearing all this the Queen rises up, beats Hayward with her crutch and nearly kills him. — X. The Queen defends Bacon and rebukes Cecil. She sends out posts to find Shakspeare, with orders to arrest him on the old charge of robbery, and put him to the torture if he will not tell the author of the Plays. — XI. The Earl (Essex) sends Umfreville to St. Albans to warn Bacon to fly. He overtakes Harry Percy. — XII. Bacon hears the dreadful news. His brother, Anthony, urges him to go to the Continent. The discussion between the brothers. — XIII.

Bacon overwhelmed with the horrors of his position. — XIV. He resolves on suicide, and takes ratsbane. — XV. He falls in the orchard, cutting his head on the stones; he is found, and carried into the house. — XVI. His mother's grief and rage. He counterfeits death to give the poison time to work. His family think he has been slain in a duel, or been assaulted by robbers. His stomach rejects the arsenic. — XVII. The loquacious village doctor; his treatment of the case. He pronounces it an apoplectic fit caused by over-study. — XVIII. Anthony learns that Shakspeare is not with the players, but sick at Stratford. — XIX. Percy is sent to Stratford on a swift horse, to urge Shakspeare to fly the country. — XX. The sick Shakspeare at Stratford. — XXI. Shakspeare's beautiful daughter. — XXII. The supper at Stratford. — XXIII. Percy tells Shakspeare the news and urges him to fly. — XXIV. The uproar in the family — the brawl. — XXV. Shakspeare decides to fly. — XXVI.

BOOK III. — CONCLUSIONS.

- I. Delia Bacon. — II. William Henry Smith. — III. The Baconians. — IV. Other Masks of Bacon. — V. Francis Bacon. — VI. The Aftermath.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

829. Hazlitt. Will the editor of the Literary World kindly give in column of Notes and Queries as complete a bibliography of the writings of William Hazlitt as possible? F. S. M. New Bedford, Mass.

A List of Principal Writings of William Hazlitt, b. 1778, d. 1830.

1805. An Essay on the Principles of Human Action.
1806. Free Thoughts on Public Affairs.
1807. The Eloquence of the British Senate.
1807. A Reply to Malthus.
1807. An Abridgement of Tucker's "Light of Nature Pursued."
1810. A New Grammar of the English Tongue.
1816. Memoirs of Thomas Holcroft.
1817. Characters of Shakspeare's Plays.
1817. The Round Table. Essays on Literature, Men, and Manners.
1818. Lectures on the English Poets.
1818. A View of the English Stage.
1819. Political Essays.
1819. Lectures on the English Comic Writers.
1821. Lectures on the Dramatic Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.
1821. Table Talk. Essays on Men and Manners.
1823. Characteristics, in the Manner of Rochefoucauld's Maxims.
1823. Liber Amoris; or, The New Pygmalion.
1824. Sketches of the Principal Picture Galleries of England.
1825. The Spirit of the Age; or, Contemporary Portraits.
1825. Notes of a Journey through France and Italy.
1825. Select Poets of Great Britain.
1826. The Plain Speaker; or, Opinions on Books, Men, and Things.
1828. The Life of Napoleon Bonaparte.
1830. Conversations with James Northcote.
1830. A Life of Titian.

Hazlitt's Literary Remains were published in 1836, with introductory matter by the first Lord Lytton and Talfourd. His Memoirs by his grandson appeared in 1867. See Poole's Index for references to periodical literature.

830. The Wild Ride. Can you interpret a poetical contribution in the current number of the Century, entitled "The Wild Ride"? The first stanza is:

I hear in my heart, I hear in its ominous pulses,
All day, the commotion of sinewy, mane-tossing horses;
All night, from their cells, the importunate tramping and neighing!

What idea does the writer intend to convey by the phrase "sinewy, mane-tossing horses"? Wild steeds of the Ukraine breed are sinewy and mane-tossing, but they do not have "cells" from which their tramping and neighing may be heard. What horses do? There being no rhyme in the lines, is the rhythm sufficient to justify a repetition of the stanza? or does the justification lie in the hidden meaning of the words which duplication is expected to make more impressive? This stanza also enjoys the distinction of being italicized. Why is this thus? Wherein lies its superiority over its mysterious fellows that it should be made conspicuous by the compositor's handiwork? If there is an occult intent about this bit of poetry—and there must be to avoid the charge of rigmarole—ought not the key to be lodged in a foot-note or other convenient place, where those of us to whom life is short and time fleeting, could find it without much labor?

Aurora, Ind. *

THE PROFESSIONAL FOOL IN LITERATURE.

IT is well known that Americans are a laughing people, and that they have a faculty for discovering the "funny" element on all occasions. They will also find humor in a church steeple or a graveyard; and nothing in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth, escapes, when they look for fun-producing material. It is but little wonder then that our newspapers devote column after column to "wit," and that it is out of proportion to the "wisdom" of the hour. In some cases it seems to be forgotten that all idle jesting and repartee and buffoonery cannot come under the head of wit, and that it is lowering our standards at home and abroad to have so much type wasted in mere burlesque. Other nations may well wonder if we are capable of looking at any question of moment in a dignified, judicial way; for we are judged by our periodical literature, and one reason, possibly, why we today have so few great authors in proportion to the population, is that there is no time for earnest thought. Shallow wit and the straining to find something new in this line absorb nearly all the literary energies of a continent.

Our comic papers need not be all given over to the serio-comic. There is power in sharp contrasts, and a page of sense would make the nonsense brighter. Even Punch can teach us a lesson here, for there have been in the pages of that London Charivari some of the most touching and pathetic things as occasion demanded, some noble thought, some grave utterance that showed a depth of (magazine) soul which commanded respect and gave evidence of genuine heart power. There have also been exquisite poems that relieved the occasional doggerel, and gave a touch of dignity to the pages, which we might do well to follow in some of our own comic magazines.

As a nation we are rather proud, too, of our weapon of irony, and go flourishing it about on all occasions. How much better to use it only when it will tell the most and send the shafts of ridicule where they will do some execution, and not shower them down so promiscuously that they bury themselves in the mud.

There is in the soul of every real wit an element of the deepest and purest feeling, as keen susceptibility to pain as to pleasure. The sources of laughter lie near to tears, and he who can make others laugh can also make them weep, else he is a mere buffoon or spurious imitator; and an age that checks the deeper emotions by a species of ridicule, while ministering to the lighter, is not an age most conducive to mental growth.

Johnstown, N. Y. J. OLIVER SMITH.

World Biographies.

Edgar Van Evertsen Saltus. Mr. Saltus was born in New York in 1859. He is a descendant of Kornelis Van Evertsen the Dutch admiral, and of Rip Van Dam one of the early governors of New York. He was educated at St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., and studied later in France and Germany. In the latter country he obtained the degree of Ph.D., and on his return to this country the degree of LL.B. His first literary efforts were in poetry, but discovering that prose is more difficult than verse, he produced a biography of Balzac in 1884, which, being a work of the conventional order, was warmly applauded by the press. A year later he published a history of pessimism, entitled The Philosophy of Disenchantment, and later an analysis of unbelief, entitled The Anatomy of Negation. For the proper presentation of this subject, he ransacked the British Museum, the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, and the K. K. Hof Bibliothek at Berlin. In July of the present year appeared Mr. Incoul's Misadventure, reviewed below. Mr. Saltus now has in preparation a work of a metaphysical basis, in which he proposes to show that Spencer's Unknowable and Van Hartmann's Unconscious should be regarded as the Irrational. The title of this book is to be "Cimmeria." Mr. Saltus has also on the stocks a novel for a prominent magazine, the title of which is to be "The Truth about Tristram Varick." Mr. Saltus has been called the prose laureate of pessimism, and a pessimist he is, heart and soul, but not in any sense a "miserabilist." On the contrary, he holds that, if it is possible to find contentment, it is only through the principles of that philosophy that it is attainable. Mr. Saltus is said to prefer adverse criticism to praise, believing, perhaps with reason, that praise lulls the public to sleep. We shall therefore proceed to afford him some slight gratification.

MR. INCOUL'S MISADVENTURE.*

A Romance of Pessimism.

MR. SALTUS, who has heretofore distinguished himself as an amateur pessimist in two little books on The Philosophy of Disenchantment and The Anatomy of Negation, has lately made a theoretical application of his ideas to life by writing a novel wherein pessimism runs riot. Mr. Incoul's Misadventure, the production in question, is not an agreeable novel to read, and it leaves a bad taste in the mouth. Mr. Saltus, however, has bright ideas; he has a fair command of satire; he has a style of his own, and this style, while not free from affectations, is brilliant, subtle, abounding in color. Moreover, he can describe a landscape, a view in an old Spanish city, a scene in a gambling-den, a bull-fight, a love-meeting, a murder, and a suicide, with a great deal of spirit, a well-chosen variety of epithet, and a certain amount of refinement, the refinement being of that theatrical sort which depicts the unspeakable by calling attention to the fact that it is left unsaid.

When it comes to the portrayal of character, Mr. Saltus shows himself at once to be hopelessly wanting in creative power. The best thing we can say of the three leading personages in his story is that they are frankly and utterly impossible. The whole affair is like a performance of melodrama. The atmosphere is feverish and enervating; the actors come and go, and their epigrams and soliloquies afford passing entertainment; red and green lights are burned at intervals, and the consequent effects do not fail to impress the audience; finally, when one is a little fatigued with all this display of scenic art, the curtain rises on the last act, revealing the weak-brained hero of the performance in the course of delivering an impassioned address on the emptiness of existence, the malignity of fate, the cherished solitude of annihilation. To this sublime utterance he is inspired by the fact that he has been foiled in his attempt to carry on an intrigue with a married woman and has been publicly disgraced by the man he has wronged. When the address is concluded, the hero gazes into a mirror and finds that the once black locks upon his temple have turned white through the intensity of his emotion. He seizes a hypodermic syringe, injects a dose of morphia into his arm, and expires to slow music, in an ecstasy of gorgeous visions. The curtain falls, and we come out into the fresh air of heaven and look once more upon the fadeless stars. Then the absurdity of the affair becomes fully evident, and we realize that the mock heroics and pessimistic fustian of the stage have no place in earnest, sincere, every-day life. They may, perhaps, afford passing entertainment in moments of ennui, but they must not be taken too seriously. Pessimism, to the majority of humanity, is, and will always remain, theatrical, and no amount of brilliant rhetoric can make it anything else.

MR. STOCKTON'S FANCIFUL TALES.*

Contents.

THE BEE-MAN OF ORN.
THE GRIFFIN AND THE MINOR CANON.
OLD PIPES AND THE DRYAD.
THE QUEEN'S MUSEUM.
CHRISTMAS BEFORE LAST; OR, THE ISLAND OF THE FRAGILE PALM.
PRINCE HASSAK'S MARCH.
THE BATTLE OF THE THIRD COUSINS.
THE BANISHED KING.
THE PHILOPENA.

THESE nine tales make a curious collection. They are somewhat original and no two of them are alike. One of them may suggest the Arabian Nights and another Alice's Adventures; but there are suggestions only of anything else; they are sui generis, pure freaks of the wildest imagination. The author calls them "fanciful." They are more than fanciful. They are fantastic. They have almost the incoherence, the inconsequence, the incongruity of dreams. They might almost be called dreams photographed by an instantaneous process. Their realm has some of the aspects of fairy land, but it is always peopled by humanity, and yet a humanity in grotesque forms, under uncouth names, and with impossible personalities. Fancy seldom takes excursions into fields so remote, or brings back products so strange and incomparable. Mr. Edward Lear's nonsense tales are perhaps the inspiration of these.

* Mr. Incoul's Misadventure. By Edgar Saltus. Benjamin & Bell.

* The Bee-Man of Orn and Other Fanciful Tales. By Frank R. Stockton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.

"The Griffin and the Minor Canon," "The Queen's Museum," "Christmas Before Last," and "Prince Hassak's March" are the best of the series, and are typical of all. An epitome of the last named will indicate their common character. Prince Hassak of Itoby determines to visit his uncle the King of Yan. He will go by land, he says, in order to avoid the circuitous route by sea, and what is more he will go in a straight line. With a retinue which includes rock-splitters and bridge-builders, he sets out. Before long the route laid out by his course-marker comes plump up against a rocky hill on which lives a Jolly-cum-pop. The tunneling of the hill is ordered. The sappers and miners go to work, and the Jolly-cum-pop comes out to look on. After laughing at the idea of cutting a tunnel under his house, he proposes to the Prince to go a hunting in the woods, and off they go, attended by the courtiers, a party of seventeen in all. In the course of the day they approach a massive building, which belongs to a Potentate who lives at a great distance. The Potentate had seen this house, bought it because he thought it would make a good prison, fitted it up, and appointed a jailer and three myrmidons to the charge of it, but the jailer had never succeeded in getting any prisoners into it, and was now about to be dismissed from office. When the Prince's hunting party arrived, the jailer thought it was a good opportunity to make some prisoners, so he clapped the whole seventeen into as many cells, sent them bread and water, and assigned a suitable crime to each and every one, robbery, forgery, treason, and so on. When the Potentate came along next time, he was much gratified to find seventeen prisoners in his prison, continued the jailer in office, and directed that a report be sent him every month. The Jolly-cum-pop treated the captivity as a great joke, but one of the party, a boy, a Truant, "who never yet had been in any place from which he could not run away," resolved to effect a rescue. So he opened negotiations with some pigwidgeons which were sporting on the lawn in the moonlight. They agreed to get the prisoners out if the Truant would tell them how to divide five-sevenths by six. That was too hard a sum for the Truant to do, but another prisoner was found who could do it; the perplexity of the pigwidgeons was thus relieved, so that they could equitably divide a lot of butter which they had earned from a farmer's wife, and then they went to work on the bars of the prison windows and released the prisoners. All but Jolly-cum-pop, who had grown so fat with laughing that he could not squeeze through. The Prince and his party, having made their escape, were about to perish with hunger, when they met a man in an ox-cart, reading a book, who said he would give them food if they would help him "to form a nucleus." He was desirous to found a city, he said, and the first thing to do was to "form a nucleus." So the Prince and his retinue set to work to "form a nucleus." Meanwhile the Jolly-cum-pop had bargained for his release, and followed by the jailer and his myrmidons overtook the nucleus-makers. When the nucleus was finished the Prince and his party went on their way to Yan, the Jolly-cum-pop returned to his home on the rock, and the tunnel was abandoned.

"Silly," the reader exclaims. Yes, it may be responded, from one point of view. But in this synopsis we have hardly conveyed the really amusing flavor, the almost delicious nonsense, which characterize these fictions. Constructively they lack climax, leading nowhere, and leaving the mind unsupported by any definite conclusions. We cannot call them fables, for fabulous though they are in materials and spirit, they have no meaning, or none that we can discover. The reader will find himself searching beneath their surface for some furtive purpose, some cryptographic moral; but if he discover any he will be more discerning than we have been. If they have any such ulterior function it is most adroitly concealed. We deem their object to be simply harmless entertainment by means of an utter sacrifice of probability, a total disregard of logical connections, and a free license to a whimsical imagination; and in this they are abundantly successful.

— A book of novel travels lately published by the Longmans is Athos, or the Mountain of the Monks, in which Mr. Athelston Riley gives an account of an expedition by himself and his friend, the Rev. Arthur Owen, in the summer of 1883, to the peninsula of Athos, in the Ægean Sea, where are collected some twenty Greek convents, some of them extremely old. The visitors spent six weeks among them, sojourning at every one in turn, and being received in every case with unfailing kindness. The romantic beauty of Mount Athos is thus described:

The promontory, or rather the peninsula, of Athos (for not far from its base, at the spot where Xerxes cut his canal, it measures but a mile and a half across) is long and narrow, having an average breadth of about four miles, whilst its length is forty. A ridge of hills runs down the center of the peninsula, beginning from the narrowest part near its base and reaching some height where the monastic establishments commence, at a distance of fifteen to twenty miles from its extremity. From this point the ridge rises gradually from 1,000 to between 3,000 and 4,000 feet, when it suddenly shoots up into a mountain nearly 7,000 feet high and falls into the sea. There is but little level land on Athos. . . . The mountain is one vast mass of white or whitish-gray marble, clothed with trees to within a thousand feet of its summit, and then rising in a bare and conical peak. From the top can be seen the islands of Thasos, distant thirty miles; of Lemnos, forty (upon which the shadow of Athos is said to fall as the sun sets); of Samothraki, sixty; and on a clear day the Thessalian Olympus, distant ninety miles; whilst, on the other hand, it can itself be seen from the shores of Asia Minor on the plain of Troy. Round the shores of Athos stand the twenty ancient monasteries to which the whole peninsula belongs, and which form the monastic republic of the Holy Mountain. The origin of this ecclesiastical state is lost in the obscurity of centuries.

Mr. Riley's book is full of curious details like this:

After the soup, boiled eggs were served for our benefit. O., being very particular about their being well cooked, complained that they had not been long enough in the pot. Whereupon the serving monk insisted that that could not be; for, said he, "I said a Pater and a Pisteeo whilst they were boiling." It seems that on the Holy Mountain they boil eggs in this manner: They put them on the fire and commence the recitation of the Lord's Prayer; this being finished, they commence the Nicene Creed, at the end of which the eggs are taken out of the pot and are supposed to be properly boiled.

TWO DOCTORS ABROAD.

THE two books whose titles are coupled together at the foot of this column are not unsuited to companionship. Both authors are doctors, both doctors are "professors," and both books are about Europe. And though Doctor Oliver Wendell Holmes we do know and Doctor Rodney Glisan we do not know, we can yet testify that the latter is no awkward pupil in the literary school in which the former is a famous master.

The chapters of Dr. Holmes's book¹ have been read with great entertainment by thousands as they appeared in succession in the Atlantic Monthly, and we have re-read them with unabated zest in the solidified form now given them. There is nothing cold or stale or flat about them served up in this way for a second meal; they are the same brilliant, vivid, vivacious narrative of the New Englander in Old England, salted with a wit which is always noticeable and sometimes pungent. Their manner is delightful, the egotism of it winning; their pictures of English landscape and London society are alike clever and effective, and their good humor contagious, so that altogether it is a book to be made sure of in one's current literary indulgences. Very impressive is the Doctor's prefatory contrast between Europe fifty years ago, when he visited it as a student, and now.

Dr. Glisan,² who is an Oregonian, covers

¹ Our Hundred Days in Europe. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

² Two Years in Europe. By Prof. Rodney Glisan, M.D. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

a wider range of topics than Dr. Holmes, and detains his readers for a much longer period. He is sedate and sober, too, in comparison with Dr. Holmes, though his narrative is too intelligent and instructive to be called commonplace even when placed alongside the sparkling Hundred Days. Dr. Glisan, who traveled in a deliberate and rather generously American fashion all over England and the Continent, skips about in his story in a way that would be rather destructive to the order of time-tables and guide-books, but is observing and judicious, manly and sensible. He is more plain spoken as to the signs of the "social evil" in London and Paris, than some less strictly professional travelers would care to be in print; in particular he is emphatic in his opinion of the moral dangers to which young medical students are exposed in Paris, Berlin, and Vienna; he preserves his total abstinence habits throughout his trip, and ridicules the common caution not to drink water; he showed himself to be a bold man in inspecting the crater of Vesuvius, and a plucky one in handling a pickpocket at Amsterdam. While not dined and wined to anything like the same extent with Dr. Holmes, he received many attentions and saw something of society and inner life, and the pictures which embellish his handsome book are good engravings of photographs. The great centers of European life may be instructively and agreeably visited in his company.

But for vivacity, for perfect naturalness, for that total unconsciousness of self which is the fullest revelation of self, for the freedom of the most familiar talk, and for a flow of animal spirits which betokens a sound mind in a sound body, turn to Dr. Holmes's book of the Hundred Days. It is the Autocrat abroad.

JUVENILES.

Under the Storm. By Charlotte M. Yonge. [Illustrated. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.] This historical tale of the period immediately preceding and during the English Commonwealth of 1648-60 is written apparently with especial reference to juvenile readers, and characterized by the writer's well-known reverent and religious spirit and accurate acquaintance with the manners and customs, and even the forms of speech, of a past century. The plot is of the fidelity and patience of the hero, a simple farmer's boy, in a trust for which he had pledged his word; and, though the story is not as interesting as some of the author's earlier works, and is in some measure disappointing in its outcome, yet it is not without its exciting situations, including the introduction of the fugitive King, Charles II, and is on the whole well worth a place in private and Sunday-school libraries. Notwithstanding Miss Yonge's strong sympathies for the cause of the Church if not also for that of the King, there is great fairness shown in presenting the faults and the virtues of both sides in the struggle. In paper, type, illustrations and binding the book does credit to the publisher.

Who Saved the Ship and the Man of Destiny. By JAK. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] JAK always writes with a purpose, and the purpose is always a good one. The first of the two stories in this volume relates how a lad went to sea, and how his sister at home by her sagacity and industry insured the comfort and prosperity of the family. In the second story a boy of sixteen determines to make something of himself, goes West, takes up a claim, and makes a career as a worthy citizen of a growing town. It may be that the author exaggerates the undeviating common sense of her heroes and heroines, for she allows them to make no mistakes; but such books as she writes—natural and simple in style; full of every-day wisdom; inculcating the virtues of labor, forethought, generosity—must necessarily exercise a wholesome influence over young people and fit them better for their duties as men and women. The natural realism of these books, too, is of a sort to attract growing minds and to develop the faculties of observation and reason. No writings for the young now appearing surpass them in sound educational value.

MORE TALES FROM TOLSTOI.

The Invaders, and Other Stories. By Count Lyof N. Tolstoi. Tr. from the Russian by N. H. Dole. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.]

The Cossacks. By Count Leo Tolstoi. Tr. from the Russian by Eugene Schuyler. Revised edition. [Wm. S. Gottsberger.]

Six short tales by Tolstoi, in his earlier manner, are bound up in the first of the two volumes bracketed above. They are all, we believe, new in America. Three of them, "The Invaders" (The Incursion), "The Wood-Cutting Expedition," and "An Old Acquaintance" (of Moscow) are based upon Tolstoi's military experience in the Caucasus, and while in a much lighter vein than his Sebastopol, are like that in their cool, calm, unimpassioned delineation of the terrible romance of war. They belong to the years 1852-'56. The fourth story, "Lost on the Steppe," is an adventure of hardship and danger in a snow-storm. "Polikushka" has a more social or domestic interior, relating the melancholy suicide of a servant who had lost a valuable roll of money, and feared to face the consequences, which were averted by the recovery of the money by a later traveler over the same road, almost before the poor fellow's body was cold. "Kholstomir" is the autobiography of a horse, related with some humor and ending pathetically. All of these tales are admirable of their kind, but are wholly destitute of the spirit of Tolstoi's recent religious views. Their interest is purely literary, artistic, Russian. As such they will amply repay reading, while not so characteristic as others we have already presented to the reader.

Tolstoi's longer Caucasian tale, The Cossacks, is not new in America. What we have here is a new (revised) edition of the translation from the original Russian which Mr. Schuyler published through Charles Scribner's Sons in 1878, of which a review may be found in the Literary World, Vol. IX, p. 73. In that early form it was, we believe, the first of Tolstoi's works to be presented in English to American readers. It is not by several removes the first of his writings, having been written in 1861, at least six years after his Sebastopol, and being preceded in the order of composition by a number of tales which have not as yet found their way into English. Its selection as the first of Tolstoi's books to be Americanized was doubtless due to the recommendation of Tourgenief, by whom, says Mr. Schuyler, it was "considered to be the finest and most perfect product of Russian literature." But Tourgenief himself had not written Fathers and Sons, or Smoke, when he first read The Cossacks, nor had Tolstoi written Childhood, Boyhood and Youth, War and Peace, or Anna Karénin. The estimation then under which The Cossacks originally appeared, is now subject to modification for what may be called literary parallax. Nevertheless it is a striking and fine story. It has all the freshness and power of scenery and life in the Caucasus, where Tolstoi spent some of his early years in the military service. It blends military experience with social. It follows the fortunes of Olenin, a young nobleman and cadet from Moscow, who has fallen in love with Marianka, a majestic daughter of the Cossacks. The author's object is to depict the evolution of Olenin's character under the spell of Marianka. The strain of the book is somewhat psychological, the tone elevated, the manner masterly. Its strong and rugged style is to be expected. Mr. Schuyler's former translation, which in the preface to the present volume he tells us he began in Moscow in 1868, after spending a week with Tolstoi at his country house, and which he did not finish until 1878, was angular, often obscurely literal, and variously unsatisfactory. The present revision is only partial, as the old plates have been retained. Some improvement, however, is noticeable, and the story is more than ever an appeal to interest. Whoever reads anything of Tolstoi will want to read all of Tolstoi, and The Cossacks should be skipped by no means.

MINOR FICTION.

A Village Maid. By Helen Hays. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.25.] The village maid is Eleanor Pyne, daughter of a college professor—a cold, selfish, misanthropic man who leaves her to the care of her half-sister. There is no plot to speak of. Life in a college town is described with some degree of definiteness, and the interest chiefly centers in the different persons young and old who want to marry Eleanor. She, to gratify her father, pledges herself to marry Professor Petrea, an elderly but wealthy dryasdust. Her father's death releases her from this impending misfortune, and in the end she is won by the son of the Croesus who "runs" the college. The author has an agreeable style and a good knowledge of character. The interest which the book arouses will not be, however, of a very intense sort, and we can imagine ourselves putting it aside after the first chapter without feeling an irresistible inclination to resume the narrative.

A Vacation in a Buggy. By Maria Louise Pool. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c.] The author of this little book, with a companion of her own sex, took a midsummer drive through the Berkshire region from the Catskills to the Blue Hills of Milton, and has given an unpretentious account of what she saw and what happened by the way. What she saw except for the interspersions of well-selected adjectives is left largely to the imagination of the reader, for there are not attempts at detailed description, and nothing of any moment happened. The two explorers were caught in a shower; they grappled seriously with the problem of oiling "the off hind wheel;" they got a Newfoundland puppy to its destination by inquiring from house to house for the whereabouts of Hitty Jane's cousin; and when their noble steed, not being "a woman's horse," ran away, he was recaptured by masculine assistance without much trouble. The author has a quiet sense of humor that makes the story rather attractive; but those who are looking for an adequate guide to the beauties of Berkshire will appeal to her in vain.

The Romance of the Canoness. By Paul Heyse. Tr. from the German by J. M. Percival. [D. Appleton & Co. 50c.] The canoness or stiftsdame, so called because of her childhood connection with a religious community, is the niece of a provincial baron, and the story of her life is told by an ex-theological candidate. She is depicted as a noble character, gentle yet strong, inspired by ideal motives, and consecrating herself to the good of others. Her life at her uncle's having become unbearable, she marries a strolling actor and presides over the fortunes of the company till the conduct of her husband forces her to a separation. Then she becomes the good angel of the village where she takes refuge, and ends her career in the little almshouse that through her ministrations has been made a temple of love and peace. All this time she is the object of unselfish devotion on the part of the theologian, who surrenders his professional advancement in order to be near her and afford the friendship she so sorely needs. The story is told in a quiet way and appeals to the loftiest sentiments. The English of the translation is excellent.

Gretchen. A Novel. By Mrs. Mary J. Holmes. [G. W. Dillingham. $1.50.] This, if a list of her writings before us is correct, ranks in numerical order as the twenty-sixth of the novels which Mrs. Holmes has bestowed upon an appreciative public. We have read it carefully to ascertain if possible the sources of the author's popularity. Certainly the attraction is not in the style, or in depth of thought, or in power of characterization, or in brilliancy of wit, or in all-pervading humor, because none of these qualities is to be found. It must be then in the abundance of romantic melodrama, and the general tendency of nearly every one of any account in the story to acquire either by shrewdness, or natural inheritance, or marriage, the control of immense wealth. To have "a cool million" and to cut a figure in the American colony at Paris seems to be the ultimate goal of most of the young people in the story, who are children of grocers and canal-boatmen. To Mrs. Holmes, and no doubt to her admirers, all this seems to be perfectly natural, and, indeed, the highest aim of existence. There is not even any attempt at the old-fashioned method of rewarding the innocent and punishing the guilty. All share pretty much alike. Tom Tracy, a selfish, brutal scoundrel, when he finds that he is turned out of the luxurious home where he has passed his boyhood, makes up his mind that he cannot work, marries an heiress, and becomes an accomplished man of the world; and the pet heroine of the book, a marvel of goodness, is "glad to see him so happy" and "so much more of a man than she had ever supposed he could be." This may be after the way of the world, but it is not a good way. No doubt Mrs. Holmes would be astonished to hear her writings spoken of as immoral, and yet they are immoral in tendency if Gretchen is a fair specimen. They are simply crude glorifications of wealth and luxury, and must have, with many, a more debasing influence than an open portrayal of vice.

MINOR NOTICES.

Prison Life in Siberia.

Prison Life in Siberia. By Fedor Dostoïeffsky. Sole and authorized translation by H. Sutherland Edwards. [Harper & Brothers. Franklin Square Library. 20c.]

The Harpers here publish a new translation of Dostoïeffsky's Zapiski mért vava Doma, a work which has already appeared in French under the title of Souvenirs de la Maison des Morts, and has been translated at least once before into English in Marie Von Thilo's Buried Alive; or, Ten Years of Penal Servitude, published by Henry Holt & Co. in 1881. A review of it may be found in our Vol. XII, p. 176. The author writes under a disguise of fiction, professing that his story is that of one Alexander Petrovitch Goriantchikoff, a landed proprietor in Russia, who had been condemned to ten years of hard labor in Siberia for the assassination of his wife. But the book is really autobiographic. The crime for which Dostoïeffsky was himself actually exiled to Siberia was a political one, and his four years of confinement at hard labor in the convict prison, on which he entered in 1849, were to have been succeeded by enlistment for life in the ranks of the Siberian army, with forfeiture of all the rights of his nobility. But in 1859 he was released, under a general amnesty, and returned to Moscow, where he died in 1881. The story of these ten years is cast in a series of scenes, or tableaux, connected by a slender thread of personal experience, the whole forming a most vivid picture of Siberian convict life. The extraordinary quality of the book, however, is not its subject matter, novel and dramatic as that is, but the cool, calm, quiet way in which it is written. There is no anger in it, no hurling of epithets, no calling of hard names; there are no threats, recriminations, or cries for vengeance; nothing that could exasperate. The reserve, the literary self-control, with which the author has let his story tell itself is—well, thoroughly Russian. It is rhetorical and eloquent simply with the substance of fact and the coloring of nature. The present translation is generally good, but shows defects here and there—clumsy and obscure sentences which are neither good English nor fair to the original. But even in a really poor translation this would be a powerful and impressive composition.

An Astronomical Manual.

The Earth in Space. A Manual of Astronomical Geography. By Edward P. Jackson. [D. C. Heath & Co.]

This little book of 72 small pages is designed for grammar schools and for higher schools that make no provision for a more thorough teaching of the subject. Whether Mr. Jackson uses it in the Latin School or not does not appear. For an intelligent teacher the book would be a useful guide; but its usefulness might be greatly increased by a careful revision, making the statements more exact. There are at least fifteen or twenty sentences which might greatly mislead a student. He is told that north and south are fixed directions in space, p. 5, without explanation; that volcanic eruptions are the boiling of the fluid in the earth, p. 6; that a circle in the heavens nearly 3° in diameter is minute, p. 32; consequently North Star is used for North Pole, passim; and even in the Appendix, which professes to give things more exactly, a meridian is spoken of as a semicircle on a polar diameter. Other passages would perplex a student; such as the remarkable exercise at the head of p. 17, where a peak four miles high is visible only 178 miles out at sea, instead of 192, and no hint given as to the mode in which 178 miles is known to be 2.58°. Certain passages in the book are marked as being too difficult for grammar schools; but we have seen primary schools intelligently enthusiastic over precisely such passages. The difficulties thus marked are simply geometrical; and children in the primary grade are quicker in geometrical apprehension than those in higher grades. One of the greatest defects in the ordinary primary instruction is its neglect of geometry.

Bishop Wilmer's Reminiscences.

The Recent Past. By Richard H. Wilmer, Bishop of Alabama. 2d edition. [Thomas Whittaker. $2.00.]

We have no recollection of the first edition of this book and can find no record of it. The author writes as a father and a grandfather to his children and his children's children, for whom chiefly his "reminiscences" and moral reflections possess interest. The memorial sketches of John Stewart of Virginia and of the late Bishop J. P. B. Wilmer of Louisiana, of the late Bishop Stephen Elliott of Georgia, and of Dr. Cobb, first Bishop of Alabama, have a more general interest and some biographical value. Half a dozen papers in the earlier part of the volume are written in a tone of justification of the Civil War and of apology for slavery, and would better have been suppressed, even "from the Southern point of view." It is late in the day for a Christian bishop, even an Alabaman, who was consecrated under the shield of the Confederacy, and as it were in its name, to be writing in this strain. Half a dozen or more papers follow, discussing in turn "the Presbyterian Communion," "our Baptist Friends," and other religious denominations, generally to their disadvantage. With regard to the Methodists the author makes this extraordinary statement:

Unhappily, the Methodists have become in the Northern States too much of a political power, and candidates for the Presidency find it to their interest to play into their hands.

Taking it as a whole, we judge that this book was not prepared with the design of allaying either sectional prejudice or sectarian rivalry.

Famous American Authors.

Famous American Authors. By Sarah K. Bolton. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.]

Mrs. Bolton has gathered into this volume seventeen sketches of American authors, five—Irving, Prescott, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Emerson—dead, and twelve—Holmes, Lowell, Higginson, Stoddard, Stedman, Howells, Aldrich, Gilder, Carleton, Cable, Clemens, Warner—living. The list is rather miscellaneous, and the adjective famous has to be compressed a good deal to fit at least one of this galaxy—but for the large class of readers who like to know about the lives of their favorite authors Mrs. Bolton's book is happily conceived. She speaks for the most part from personal and special knowledge, and she is always ready to emphasize the fine qualities she discovers in the characters or writings of those whom she selects for comment. There is a personal flavor to Mrs. Bolton's books which elevates them above the usual range of popular biography. Mrs. Bolton does not hesitate to utter her own impressions, and these impressions we always find to be womanly, suggestive, and discerning. Perhaps the revelations she makes of the domestic and family affairs of some of her famous Americans are now and then a little too free, but they are certainly not discreditable. Abundant illustrative extracts enhance the value of the book from the literary point of view. The publishers supply with each sketch portraits which are fairly satisfactory specimens of process work.

Sermons.

The World to Come. By Wm. Burnett Wright. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

Christian Facts and Forces. By Newman Smyth. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.]

When two volumes of sermons, by two Congregationalist ministers, preached in representative city pulpits, come simultaneously to the reviewer's hand, it is difficult to avoid judgment by comparison. The sermons before us, however, are not exactly comparable, each collection having such marked individuality that the two stand in contrast rather than in likeness. Mr. Wright's sermons are quite as truly of the world that now is as of "the world to come." Their title, therefore, does not exactly fit them, but leads the reader to expect in them the treatment of certain topics which are not touched at all. There is no sermon in this book about heaven, or hell, or judgment, or any of the large topics of the hereafter; the themes are such as "To Parents," "Franklin Snow," "Flower Sunday," "Saul in the Witch's Cave," "Teach us to Pray." It is true, however, that Mr. Wright deals with the forces that lead to the world to come and that are to dominate it. He is largely an unconventional preacher. He is a man of feeling, of some poetic instinct, of warm sympathies with men, of a Christlike spirit, with a pictorial sense of truth. He is more an illustrative preacher than logical or philosophical. Is there a little tendency to say striking things simply because they are striking? His illustrations are sometimes strained. "The first Church was a ventilator opened by Christ." That is a striking remark; but is the picture in it truthful? Is it clear? Is it sensible? Yet we have no doubt that the hearers of these sermons were interested in them. Their emotions were doubtless stirred by them to some extent. The sermons would hardly set minds to thinking. Now men should first be set to think; then they will feel.

The title of Mr. Smyth's volume is exact and forcible. These sermons are not at all pictorial, though they are illustrative. They are decidedly intellectual, and deal with the underlying philosophy of religion and its logical issues. Doubtless they were designed for, as they were preached to, a thinking auditory in an academic atmosphere. Mr. Smyth is more a man of thought than a man of feeling, though by no means destitute of feeling. It is pleasant to note the general articulation of his discourses to the seasons of the Christian Year. One of the best of them is that on "Misunderstanding Christ" (Luke xviii: 34); one of the freshest and most practical that on "Zebedee's Absence" (Matt. xx: 20). Mr. Smyth has a broad and full mind, and a truly catholic spirit. His spelling, "medievalism," of a word which some of us spell "mediævalism," illustrates his tendency away from the archaic, his strong progressiveness and modernizing movement; a man who is advancing with the times, but carrying the Gospel with him. Taking Mr. Smyth and Mr. Munger together it is only just to say that some of the best American sermons now published come from New Haven.

Roman Remains in Britain.

The Gentleman's Magazine Library. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. Romano-British Remains: Part II. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.]

This volume of classified selections from the old Gentleman's Magazine is the second of two volumes devoted exclusively to the remains of the Roman occupation of Britain. These remains are scattered through more than fifteen counties of England, chiefly in the central and southern portions of the island, and extend limitedly into Wales and Scotland. They consist of wrought metals in various forms, tessellated pavements, pottery, ruins of buildings, human remains, baths, inscriptions, altars, bricks and cut stones, coins, sculptures, and roads. The scientific search for these curiosities runs back a hundred years and more, and the number of specimens unearthed and now collected in the museums is very large. New discoveries are constantly being made as excavations proceed with the growth of population. The Gentleman's Magazine made a business of keeping watch on all this upturning of relics of old Roman life, and these selections from its pages furnish a running history of results. Nearly a hundred pages are given to the details of discoveries in England, and scarcely less to the description of the old Roman roads, whose direction and construction are still easily to be traced in the English landscape. Elaborate studies follow on Caesar's campaigns in Britain, with a considerable body of notes and addenda covering various archæological points. The antiquarian interest of the book is marked, and its usefulness obvious to all who are concerned with the study of the subject from the point of view of a field-book.

Architecture.

Pictorial Architecture of Greece and Italy. Illus. By the Rev. H. H. Bishop. [London: S. P. C. K. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.50.]

A Short History of Architecture. By Arthur Lyman Tuckerman. Illustrated by the Author. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.]

The shape of the first of these books is a large oblong, three columns to a page, and is probably determined by the size of some of its illustrations, which require a generously broad space for display; but it is not a convenient book to handle for reading. Its numerous woodcuts make it almost a picture-book however, and engage the eye at once in spite of the incumbrance to the hands. The author is an English vicar, and has already published studies on church architecture in the British Isles. In the present work he roams through Greece and Italy, armed with pen and pencil, in search of the architecturally striking and picturesque, and describes in turn the ruins of palaces and temples, churches and cathedrals, ancient and modern, in the great communities of which Athens and Rome are the memorable centers. As a book of travel through these classic regions it has interest, but its value resides in its critical spirit, which is well informed, exact, and practical. A constant reference to English examples gives the book a modern and utilitarian effect, while its materials are largely of the antique. The attention paid to details in many of the engravings is a satisfaction to the student of styles and execution. The descriptions of such famous edifices as St. Peter's at Rome and the great Cathedral of Milan are full and circumstantial. There are upwards of a hundred illustrations.

Mr. Tuckerman's Short History of Architecture seems to us not quite true to a fundamental law of its subject, namely, perspective; for, considering its dimensions, it dwells too long on the ancient and too briefly on the modern field. The chapter on "Celtic or Druidical Remains" might have been spared, and the space given to current developments. So, too, the chapters on Egyptian and Asiatic architecture would better have been compressed into one, and the chapters on the Greek and Roman into one, with the resulting opportunity of enlarging the treatment of the Romanesque and the Gothic, the keys to all prevailing styles of public construction. The Gothic, in particular, is cramped at the author's hands. Barring this general criticism, the book sustains its modest and elementary purpose, is clear and scholarly, and its illustrations aid the text, having been drawn expressly to accompany it.

Steam Yachts and Launches.

Steam Yachts and Launches: Their Machinery and Management. By C. P. Kunhardt. [Forest and Stream Publishing Co. $3.00.]

Now that the yacht races are over and the yachting season is drawing to a close, the practical yachtsman, whether he owns a sailing vessel or belongs to the already large and rapidly growing class of steam yachtsmen, is beginning to make his plans for next season. The latter class particularly will be interested in this new book just published by the Forest and Stream Company. It is, to the best of our knowledge, the only practical work on steam yachts that will be comprehended by the beginner, and at the same time hold the attention and teach something new to the oldest veteran in the art of constructing and managing a marine engine, and of building a hull for it to propel. By far the larger portion of the book is devoted to the engine and boiler, commencing at the earliest stages with the theory of the steam engine. It details the construction of various engines from the days of James Watt to the modern engines of the Herreshoffs and others. Space is also given to naphtha and petroleum launches, which have lately sprung into great popularity, on account of the small expense and experience needed in running them. There are among other chapters one on boiler mountings, an important one on the screw, one on laws applicable to steam yachts or launches, which will settle many questions arising in the mind of a would-be owner of such a craft; there is also one of extracts from Lloyd's rules, one on racing steam yachts, and a careful series of articles on the principal types of yacht machinery. The volume is handsomely made and contains nearly one hundred excellent plates, many of them full-page. There is a very complete table of contents, but a good index would have added to the usefulness of the book.

Culture's Garland.

Culture's Garland. By Eugene Field. [Ticknor & Co. Paper. 50c.]

There is a good deal of fun in this collection of newspaper writings by a Chicago journalist, and it is all or mostly at the expense of Chicago. Mr. Field is not a dialect humorist, nor does he make his living by misspelling the English language; he depends for his effects, mainly, on legitimate uses of the principle of incongruity; in the present instance as applied to Chicago's profession of being a "literary center." He is merciless in his juxtapositions of hogs and autographs, horse-flesh and criticism, corn and culture. The Chicago Literary Circle and the West End Browning Club come in for hard hits, and local celebrities are satirized without compunction; but all in such a good-natured mood that offense could scarcely be taken. Here and there the humor is forced, much of it requires familiarity with Chicago to understand, but there is enough for all to relish to make the book worth its money as laughing stock. One of the best things in it is the description of Professor Andrew J. Thorpe's newly invented "library bedstead:"

... which will redound to the physical comfort and intellectual benefit of our fellow citizens. . . . Busts of Shakespeare and Wordsworth appear at the front upper corners of the bookcase, and these are used as pedestals to the machine when it is unfolded into a bedstead.

This style, we are told by Prof. Thorpe, has been officially indorsed by the poetry committee of the Chicago Literary Club.

Style No. 2 of this folding bed has not been issued, owing to some difficulty with eastern publishers, but when the matter of copyright has been adjusted the works of Plautus, Euripides, Thucydides, and other classic dramatists will be brought out for the delectation of appreciative Chicagoans. . . . Just the man to pander to the literary instincts of Chicago folk. . . . He is at work now upon a folding trundle bed for children, which will contain a library adapted to develop proper traits in the young—such standard books as Watts's Divine Poems, Cotton Mather's Spiritual Milk for Babies, etc.

A rich paper is one on the subject, "The Shakespeares Identified," in which there are caricatures of many of the noted men of that period, and the most ingenious arguments brought to prove that all these were one and the same person.

In short, the likeness which all the pictures of all the dramatists bear to each other is so marked that we think there is good reason for believing that Shakespeare, Jonson, Beaumont, Greene, Fletcher, Steele, and Bacon were not different individuals, but one man.

Chauvenet's Treatise on Elementary Geometry. Revised and Abridged by W. E. Byerly. [J. B. Lippincott Co. pp. 322. $1.20.] It would be superfluous at this date to speak of the peculiar mathematical genius of Chauvenet; his learning, his love of teaching, his aptness for the work, the clearness and fullness of his treatises. In this revised and abridged edition of the Elementary Geometry Professor Byerly has greatly improved what was before admirable. The copious exercises for original solutions and demonstrations carry this modern feature of elementary treatises farther than we have seen it in any other book, and give this treatise in that respect an advantage over all others. We would venture only one criticism. In giving practical examples care should be taken either to have them practical, or else to state that they are not so. A mountain 6,270 feet high (p. 180) would be visible, at sea level, 104 miles, in average states of a clear air; and by saying that it is only 87 miles we make geometry too negligent of refraction.

PERIODICALS.

The October Century has a frontispiece portrait of Mrs. Stowe which readers generally will be glad to see. It accompanies an article on "Mrs. Stowe's 'Uncle Tom' at Home in Kentucky," which has in it an undertone of regret for the days of the old régime. The author, James Lane Allen, seems to think that the negro is still best situated where the relations of slave days continue unbroken, and this, he says, is the condition in Kentucky. Mrs. Van Rensselaer writes with critical enthusiasm of Ely Cathedral, of which there are a number of exquisite illustrations, from drawings by Joseph Pennell. Mr. Stedman reviews the last twelve years of British song, and indicates clearly how little the rhymers of the day are keeping touch with aspiration and resolution of "an imperial and stalwart people." Meanwhile Tennyson stands as the exponent of a splendid past and Browning is hailed as the prophet of the immediate future. The war papers are concerned with Sherman's famous march and the battle of Bentonville. The Lincoln history throws new light on the genesis of the secession movement. It is pleasant to know that the inane "Notes of a Professional Exile" are at an end.

In the Forum for October John G. Carlisle explains why there should be a continuance of Democratic rule; Bishop F. D. Huntington makes a forcible plea for more discipline and firmer guidance in the education of the young; Prof. Thomas Davidson discusses the relations of aristocracy (meaning plutocracy) and humanity, concluding that "the human world will never stand solid until it rests upon the broad basis of simple humanity, whose apex is moral worth;" Rev. J. C. Adams writes optimistically of the assimilation of foreign elements by America; Prof. J. P. Lesley explains that the object of life is "to preserve order and practice good will;" Miss J. L. Gilder contributes a bit of rather unnecessary autobiography under the title of "Books that Have Helped Me;" Richard A. Proctor "comes down on" the Donnelly cryptogram business; and Mrs. Alice W. Rollins unveils as "The New Uncle Tom's Cabin" the tenement house of New York.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The supplement to Mr. William Cushing's Initials and Pseudonyms will be published early in January by T. Y. Crowell & Co. of New York.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. announce for immediate publication The Boyhood of Living Authors, by William H. Rideing, mainly designed for young readers. The book comprises about eighteen chapters and contains much fresh material, Mr. Rideing having had the assistance of T. B. Aldrich, Charles Dudley Warner, E. C. Stedman, J. T. Trowbridge, Edward Eggleston, H. H. Boyesen, F. R. Stockton, and others in preparing the work.

—Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Macquoid have just returned from an autumn holiday chiefly passed in Germany, and we are sure all our readers will be glad to hear that the rest and change have done Mrs. Macquoid a great deal of good. Among other places the Macquoids visited Hamelin, the scene of the Pied Piper's exploits. He is fully believed in there. It is a very ancient and interesting town. They were also at a charming town in Holland, Arnhem, the country around which, unlike other Dutch towns, is hilly and well wooded. The town is on the banks of the Rhine, is said to be extremely healthy, and its gardens are lovely.

—A new edition of At the Red Glove with Reinhart's illustrations will appear in London shortly, price 6s. In late autumn Arrowsmith will publish another story of Mrs. Macquoid's in one volume; and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge have several stories of hers in hand.

—The first number of a new girls' magazine, Atalanta, is just published in London. The staff of authors and artists is strong.

—The London publishing season promises to be a very interesting one.

—Cupples & Hurd have opened their new and attractive bookstore at 94 Boylston Street, Boston, near to the corner of Church Street and to the Providence depot.

—Miss Virginia Penny, author of Employments of Women, a useful book published as long ago as 1863, and afterwards republished successively as Five Hundred Occupations Adapted to Women and How Women Can Make Money; also of Think and Act, a collection of miscellaneous papers, is now in Chicago, where she has opened an office as a sort of woman-of-business of all sorts at the service of her sex.

—Ticknor & Co. publish this week Mr. S. C. Foster's My Old Kentucky Home and The Swanee River, in their promised holiday dress; Fools of Nature, a novel directed against "spiritualism," by Alice Brown, a work of originality and power; and Mrs. Frances Mace's volume of poems, Under Pine and Palm.

—The library of the late Henry Ward Beecher is to be sold the early part of next month. The collection is said to be singularly destitute of works on the Civil War, slavery, and some other strictly American topics.

—Fords, Howard & Hulbert are bringing out a new edition of Dr. Wagner's Epics and Romances of the Middle Ages, presenting the stirring legends of the Amelungs, the Dietrichs, the Niebelungs, the Carolingians, King Arthur, the Holy Grail, and all that rich, romantic realm from which Richard Wagner drew his potent inspiration. It makes a shapely octavo of nearly 500 pages with its spirited illustrations.

—Paul Meurice, the intimate and life-long friend of Victor Hugo, has written to George Routledge & Sons a letter highly commendatory of the beautiful editions of Hugo's works issued by that house. Messrs. Routledge will shortly issue a translation of the tale on which Dumas founded his Monte Cristo, and also a reproduction of the dainty Paris edition of Gérard de Nerval's Sylvie, with introduction by Ludovic Halévy and etchings by Rudaux. Other works to appear shortly will be Kate Greenaway's Almanack for 1888 in three different styles; James Harrington's Commonwealth of Oceana in "Mortley's Universal Library;" The Book of Humor, Wit, and Wisdom, in the attractive and convenient "Pocket Library;" and Paul Clifford in the tasteful pocket edition of Bulwer's works.

— Maurice Thompson will contribute to the American Magazine for November a biographical sketch of Paul Hamilton Hayne. The publishers of this enterprising periodical, by the way, deny the absurd report that the magazine is hereafter to be conducted as a joint-stock affair by its contributors.

— The Johns Hopkins University proposes to issue during the month of November a limited letter press edition of The Teaching of the Apostles, Διδαχὴ τῶν Ἀποστόλων, with a complete fac-simile text (from the MS. of the Holy Sepulchre, Convent of the Greek Church, Jerusalem), accompanied by a commentary by Prof. J. Rendel Harris.

— The popular "Bodley" books are to be brought out in a new edition in four volumes, thick, and full of good stories and pictures for young people. Mr. Horace E. Scudder, to whom the public is indebted for the "Bodley" books, has prepared a Book of Folk Stories containing Puss in Boots, Cinderella, Hans in Luck, and a dozen other old favorites. He has rewritten these so as to make them easily understood by children who have just learned to read.

— D. Lothrop Company will shortly issue a Life of Robert Southey, with numerous letters not before given to the public. The volume has been carefully prepared by John Dennis, the well-known English writer, author of "Studies in English Literature" and "Heroes of English Literature," and is first published in this country.

— Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales will soon be issued as a holiday volume, with illustrations by G. Wharton Edwards.

— George H. Ellis, Boston, has in press Science and Immortality, the discussion by many eminent scientists on "What Science Says about Immortality," which attracted wide attention in the Christian Register of April 7. The contributions have been revised by their authors, and the work has been enlarged by additional contributions.

— Walt Whitman will contribute to Lippincott's for November a series of short poems under the general heading of "November Boughs." Miss Virginia W. Johnson will contribute the complete novel, a romance of life in Italy.

— Scribner's Magazine will signalize the completion of its first year by the publication of a superb Christmas number. Its contents will be chiefly poetry and fiction, and literature appropriate to the season. The number of illustrations will be greatly increased, and will represent the best and most original work of American artists and engravers. The cover is to be enriched by a special border, printed in gold.

— The Lincoln Life in the forthcoming November Century has to do with the period after Lincoln's election and before his inauguration. In this installment will be given to the world for the first time fourteen letters of President Lincoln. These are written to men like General Scott, Mr. Seward, Mr. Raymond, Mr. Gilmer, and others. There are also important letters from W. H. Seward, and interesting letters and extracts from letters by Horace Greeley, E. B. Washburne, Simon Cameron, General Scott, Thurlow Weed, Thomas Corwin, W. C. Bryant, and John A. Dix.

— Mr. William Cushing has prepared a supplement to his Initials and Pseudonyms containing about 6,000 additions.

— Professor Joseph Le Conte will undertake to show in an article on "Agassiz and Evolution," in the November number of The Popular Science Monthly, that the whole inductive basis upon which was afterward built the modern theory of evolution was laid by Agassiz, although he himself persistently refused to build upon it any really scientific structure.

— Longmans, Green & Co., a leading London publishing house, have established an American house at 15 East Sixteenth Street, New York, and will be happy to send their announcements and catalogues to any address.

— A fac-simile of the 1623 folio edition of Shakespeare is announced for immediate publication by Funk & Wagnalls, who declare that by the use of this work alone can the "Donnelly cipher" be tested. The reproduction at a reasonable price will certainly be a boon to Shakespearian students.

— Scribner & Welford make a number of attractive announcements, including Faint, Yet Pursuing, and Other Sermons, by the author of How to be Happy Though Married; a translation of Professor Pünjer's History of the Christian Philosophy of Religion; a translation by Professor Mead of Andover of Dörner's System of Christian Ethics; a compendious volume on The Printed Book, its History, Illustration, and Adornment; and a new translation of the Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini, by John Addington Symonds.

— From a pleasant sketch of Thomas Nelson Page in the Book Buyer for October it appears that "Marse Chan" was inspired by a letter taken from the pocket of a dead private of a Georgia regiment. It was sent to Scribner's Monthly in the autumn of 1880, but did not appear till April, 1884, in the Century!

— Thomas Whittaker publishes this week two anthologies of the sonnet. One is from authors, English and American, edited with a critical introduction on the sonnet by William Sharp, the title being Sonnets of this Century, while the other is called Sonnets of Europe, being a volume of translations, selected and arranged with notes by Samuel Waddington. Mr. Whittaker also publishes Canon Farrar's new volume of sermons on Everyday Christian Life.

— At the suggestion of Messrs. Benjamin & Bell, the publishers, Mr. Appleton Morgan has added to his forthcoming volume, Shakespeare in Fact and in Criticism, a chapter dealing with the Donnelly cipher, so called, Mr. Morgan proposing to demonstrate that while the Donnelly method is a heroic treatment of the Baconian theory, yet it appears to be impossible from a structural analysis, as well as from the history of the Folio of 1623, that any inter-written matter should be therein included. Mr. Morgan writes from the point of view of his own growth theory of the text of 1623, and—to show that the printer's copy for the 1623 text was tampered with, not only by a whole generation of actors, but from time to time by the stage censors of Queen Elizabeth and King James—quotes at length a statute of Elizabeth's regulating stage plays which is not known to have appeared in print since 1559.

— Mr. George Willis Cooke will lecture the coming season on "Woman in Literature, or the Intellectual, Educational, and Literary Advancement of Women from the Time of Elizabeth to that of Victoria." He also has a course of three lectures on the life and poetry of Robert Browning, the special topics being "Browning as a Man and a Poet," "Browning's Dramatic Genius," and "The Religious Teachings of Robert Browning." Mr. Cooke's address is Dedham, Mass.

INDEX TO THE PERIODICALS.

October.

- | | |
|--|----------------------------------|
| Cooper, J. F. (A Second Glance Backward). | |
| S. F. Cooper. | Atlantic. |
| Dialect (The Bucolic) of the Plains. | Scribner's. |
| Emerson in New England Thought. | |
| Rev. Julius H. Ward. | Andover Review. |
| Fiction, English, Influence of upon American Society. | W. D. Howells. |
| Howells, W. D., Recollections of. | Harper's. |
| L. R. McCabe. | Lippincott's. |
| Journalism, Semi-Denominational. | Andover Review. |
| Longfellow's Method. | Paul Pastnor. |
| Modern Poetry, The Effect of the Scientific Temper in. | Concluded. Miss Vida D. Scudder. |
| Practicality, The Lesson of. | Junius Henri Brown. |
| Reade, Charles, Anecdotes of. | E. H. House. |
| Thackeray, Unpublished Letters of. | VII. Scribner's. |

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Art.

- PICTORIAL ARCHITECTURE OF GREECE AND ITALY. By the Rev. H. H. Bishop. London: S. P. C. K. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. $1.50
- A SHORT HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE. By Arthur Lyman Tuckerman. Illus. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

Biography.

- A COLLECTION OF LETTERS OF THACKERAY. 1847-1855. With Portraits and Reproductions of Letters and Drawings. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50
- THE SCOTTISH PULPIT FROM THE REFORMATION TO THE PRESENT DAY. By William M. Taylor. Harper & Brothers. $1.50
- MODERN ITALIAN POETS. By W. D. Howells. With Portraits. Harper & Brothers. $2.00
- MEMOIRALS OF A SOUTHERN PLANTER. By Susan Dabney Smiles. Baltimore: Cushings & Bailey. $1.50
- EMINENT AMERICANS. Brief Biographies of Nearly 400 Men and Women who have been Eminent in American History. By Benson J. Lossing, LL.D. John B. Alden. 75c.; half morocco, $1.00
- PLUTARCH'S LIVES OF TIMOLEON, PAULUS ÆMILIUS, LYSANDER, AND SYLLA. Cassell's National Library. Paper, 10c.
- THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JOHN JAY. By William Whitelock. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.75
- HENRY GEORGE VERSUS HENRY GEORGE. A Review. By R. C. Rutherford. D. Appleton & Co.

Essays and Sketches.

- THE RECENT PAST FROM A SOUTHERN STANDPOINT. Reminiscences of a Grandfather. By R. H. Wilmer, Bishop of Alabama. 2d edition. Thomas Whittaker. $2.00
- SANTA CROCE: A NICOTIAN TREATISE WITH ILLUSTRATIVE ANTITHESSES. Worcester: Franklin P. Rice.

Fiction.

- JACK THE FISHERMAN. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. With Illustrations by C. W. Reed. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 50c.
- TWOK: A NOVEL. By Watson Griffin. Part I. Hamilton, Ont.: Griffin & Kiehlmer.
- SCHENRAZADE. By Florence Warden. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 25c.
- ADAM GORLAKE'S WILL. By C. E. M. London: S. P. C. K. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co.
- ETHNE. Being a truthful Historie of the great and final Settlement of Ireland by Oliver Cromwell, and certain other noteworthy Events, from the Records of Ethne O'Connor and of Roger Standfast, Captain in the Army of the Commons of England. Edited by Mrs. E. M. Field. London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.
- THE INVADERS, AND OTHER STORIES. By Count Lyof N. Tolstol. Tr. from the Russian by N. H. Dole. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

A SPECULATOR IN PETTICOATS. By Hector Malot. T. B. Peterson & Bro. Paper, 75c.

UNCLE RUTHERFORD'S ATTIC. By Joanna H. Matthews. With original illustrations. Fred. A. Stokes. $1.25

THE BEE-MAN OF ORN, AND OTHER FANCIFUL TALES. By F. R. Stockton. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25

THE COUNT OF THE SAXON SHORE; OR, THE VILLA IN VICTIS. A Tale of the Departure of the Romans from Britain. By the Rev. Alfred J. Church. With the collaboration of Ruth Putnam. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50

THE REVOLUTION IN TANNER'S LANE. By Mark Ruth-erford. Edited by his friend, Reuben Shapcott. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

A VACATION IN A BUGGY. By Maria Louise Pool. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c

KNITTERS IN THE SUN. By Octave Thanet. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

A BORDER SHEPHERDESS. By Amelia E. Barr. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00

MISS LUDINGTON'S SISTER. By Edward Bellamy. New edition. Ticknor & Co. 50c

THE EARTH TREMBLED. By E. P. Roe. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

LRS MISERABLES. By Victor Hugo. Tr. from the French by Isabel F. Hapgood. Illus. 5 vols. Vols. II-V. T. Y. Crowell & Co. Each, $1.50

THE MEMOIRS OF BARRY LYNDON, ESQ., AND A LITTLE DINNER AT TIMMINS'S. By Wm. Makepeace Thackeray. London: Smith, Elder & Co.

LOVEL THE WIDOWER, THE WOLVES AND THE LAMB, AND NOTES OF A JOURNEY FROM CORNHILL TO GRAND CAIRO. By William Makepeace Thackeray. Do., Do.

A PURITAN LOVER. By Mrs. Laura C. S. Fessenden. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c

INCHFAWN. By L. T. Meade. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

VENDETTA! OR, THE STORY OF ONE FORGOTTEN. By Marie Corelli. New edition. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c

SOUTH-COUNTY NEIGHBORS. By Esther Bernon Carpenter. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

FIGHTING THE SEA; OR, WINTER AT THE LIFE-SAVING STATION. By Edward A. Rand. Thos. Whittaker. $1.25

FOOLS OF NATURE. By Alice Brown. Ticknor & Co.

STORIES OF THE MAGICIANS. By the Rev. Alfred J. Church, M.A. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50

CLAUVERHOUSE. By Mowbray Morris. English Worthies. D. Appleton & Co.

MADAME'S GRAND-DAUGHTER. By Frances Mary Peard. Harper & Brothers. Paper, 15c

DIANE DE BRETEVILLE. By Hubert E. H. Jerningham. Harper & Brothers. 15c

History.

BODYKE, A CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF IRISH LAND-LORDISM. By Henry Norman. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 75c

THE MAKING OF THE GREAT WEST. 1512-1883. By Samuel Adams Drake. Illus. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75

DECISIVE BATTLES SINCE WATERLOO. By Thomas W. Knox. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50

THE DAWN OF THE XIXTH CENTURY IN ENGLAND. A Social Sketch of the Times. By John Ashton. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50

BRIEF INSTITUTES OF GENERAL HISTORY. By E. Benjamin Andrews, D.D. Silver, Rogers & Co. $2.00

THE LEADING FACTS OF ENGLISH HISTORY. By D. H. Montgomery. Revised edition. Ginn & Co. $1.25

HALF-HOURS WITH AMERICAN HISTORY. Selected and Arranged by Charles Morris. 2 vols. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00

Holiday Books.

THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS. London: Castell Brothers. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 50c

HEAVENWARD. A Scripture Text-Book. Designed by Alice Price and E. Corbyn Price. Do., do. 50c

ON THE WING. Scripture Texts for Each Day in the Month. Verses by Lucy A. Bennett. Designs by A. and F. C. Price. Do., do. 50c

ELEGY WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCHYARD. By Thomas Gray. Do., do. $1.25

KNICKERBOCKER NUGGETS. Gulliver's Travels, 2 vols.—Tales from Irving, 1st and 2d series.—Gesta Romanorum.—Headlong Hall and Nightmare Abbey. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each vol., $1.00

THE LONGFELLOW PROSE BIRTHDAY BOOK. Edited by Laura Winthrop Johnson. Illus. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

THE EWING CALENDAR. 1888. E. & J. B. Young & Co. 75c

THE COTILLON ALMANAC. 1888. George Routledge & Sons. 25c

Juveniles.

THE CHRISTMAS PRESENT. By A. Eubule-Evans. Illus. London: S. P. C. K. E. & J. B. Young & Co.

THE GOLDMAKERS. By Esme Stuart. Illus. Do., do.

FOXHOLT, AND THE LIGHT THAT BURNED THERE. By the Rev. Edward N. Hoare. Illus. Do., do.

MRS. BARTH'S GIRL. By F. C. P. Illus. Do., do.

STORIES FOR SUNDAY SCHOLARS. By the authoress of "Helpful Sam." Do., do.

BONNIE PRINCE CHARLIE: A TALE OF FONTENAY AND CULLODEN. By G. A. Henty. Illus. Scribner & Well-ford.

SUNDAY READING FOR THE YOUNG. Illus. E. & J. B. Young & Co.

TRE, POL, AND PEN. By F. Frankfort Moore. Illus. Do., do.

D'AULNOY'S FAIRY TALES. Tr. by J. R. Planché. Illus. George Routledge & Sons. $1.50

EVERY BOY'S ANNUAL. Edited by Edmund Routledge. George Routledge & Sons. $2.50

ELSIE'S FRIENDS AT WOODBURN. By Martha Finley. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25

MERE SUZANNE, AND OTHER STORIES. By Katharine S. Macquoid. Illustrated by C. S. Reinhart. London: S. P. C. K. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co.

THE ROSE OF PARADISE. By Howard Pyle. Harper & Brothers.

THE BOY TRAVELLERS ON THE CONGO. By Thomas W. Knox. Illus. Harper & Brothers. $3.00

THE GIANT DWARF. By the author of "The Fitch Club," et c. T. Y. Crowell & Co.

WITH HOOKS OF STEEL. By Crona Temple. Illustrated by Justus Hill. Do., do.

THE BLACK COPPICKE. By Emily M. Lawson. Do., do.

TWO OF THEM. By the author of "Mike and his Brother Ben." Illus. Do., do.

THE DOWNWARD COURSE. By Mrs. Gotherman. Edited by Mrs. Carey Brock. Do., do.

THREE STORIES FOR WORKING GIRLS. Do., do.

A MINOR CHORD. By Niall Herne. Do., do.

FOUR PEAS IN A POD. By Cecilia Selby Lowndes. Do., do.

NELL'S BONDAGE. By the author of "Clary's Confirmation," etc. Illus. Do., do.

A TREASURE LOST. By Catharine E. Smith. Illus. Do., do.

THE BEST BOOK. By the author of "Higher and Higher." Do., do.

ALL IS LOST SAVE HONOUR. By Catherine Mary Phillimore. Illus. Do., do.

HER WILL AND HER WAY, AND OTHER STORIES. By Mrs. Newman. Illus. Do., do.

REX. By the author of "A Hero Poet," etc. Illus. Do., do.

FOR A SONG'S SAKE, AND OTHER STORIES. By Philip Bourke Marston. With a Memoir by William Sharp. London: Walter Scott. $1.75

Poetry.

SONGS OF HISTORY. Poems and Ballads upon Important Episodes in American History. By Hezekiah Butterworth. N. E. Publishing Co. $1.00

AGLAJA. Von Rud. Puchner. Milwaukee: C. R. Caspar.

UNDERWOODS. By R. L. Stevenson. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

DIALECT BALLADS. By Charles Follen Adams. Illus. Harper & Brothers.

INGLESIDE RHAIMS. Verses in the Dialect of Burns. By J. E. Rankin. John B. Alden. 50c

TENNISON'S COMPLETE WORKS. 8 vols. Handy Volume Edition. T. Y. Crowell & Co. Cloth, $6.00

THE CABIN IN THE CLEARING, AND OTHER POEMS. By Benjamin S. Parker. Charles H. Kerr & Co.

THE SONNETS OF EUROPE. A Volume of Translations Selected and Arranged, with Notes, by Samuel Waddington. Thomas Whittaker. 75c

SONNETS OF THIS CENTURY. Edited and Arranged with a Critical Introduction on the Sonnet. By William Sharp. Thomas Whittaker. 75c

SONGS OF THE MEXICAN SEAS. By Joaquin Miller. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

GARDEN SECRETS. By Philip Bourke Marston. With Biographical Sketch by Louise Chandler Moulton. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Science and Philosophy.

THE SCIENCE OF THOUGHT. By F. Max Muller. 2 vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION. A Guide to Manual Training. By Samuel G. Love, assisted by Mary R. Willard. Illus. E. L. Kellogg & Co. $1.75

LIVING LIGHTS. A Popular Account of Phosphorescent Animals and Vegetables. By Charles Frederick Holder. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00

THE RELATIVE PROPORTIONS OF THE STEAM ENGINE: Being a Rational and Practical Discussion of the Dimensions of Every Detail of the Steam Engine. By Wm. Dennis Marks. Illustrated. 3d edition. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00

A MANUAL OF NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS. By Robert Ridgway. Illustrated. J. B. Lippincott Co. $7.50

KEY TO NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS, etc., with which are Incorporated General Ornithology and Field Ornithology. 3d edition. By Elliott Coues. Illustrated. Estes & Lauriat. $7.50

ELEMENTARY PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATION. By Joseph Baldwin. (International Education Series.) D. Appleton & Co.

THE ELEMENTS OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, with Some Applications to Questions of the Day. By J. Laurence Laughlin, Ph.D. D. Appleton & Co.

Text-Books.

ENGLISH MASTERPIECE COURSE. By Alfred H. Welsh. Chicago: J. C. Buckbee & Co. 90c

CLASSIC GERMAN COURSE IN ENGLISH. By William Cleaver Wilkinson. Chautauqua Press.

ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSICS. By Professors Wm. A. Anthony and Cyrus F. Brackett. 3d ed. John Wiley & Sons.

HOMER'S ILIAD. Books I-III. Edited on the Basis of the Ameis-Hentze edition by T. D. Seymour. Ginn & Co. $1.35

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Its Grammar, History, and Literature, with Chapters on Composition, Versification, Paraphrasing, and Punctuation. By J. M. D. Meiklejohn. D. C. Heath & Co. $1.40

BEST THINGS FROM BEST AUTHORS. Vol. V. Comprising Nos. 13, 14, and 15 of the Elocutionist's Annual, Designed for Public and Social Entertainment and for Use in Schools and Colleges. Philadelphia: National School of Elocution and Oratory.

CHOICE DIALECT FOR READING AND RECITATION. Compiled by C. C. Shoemaker. Philadelphia: National School of Elocution and Oratory. Paper, 30c

HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENTS. Do., do. Paper, 30c

THE CHILD'S OWN SPEAKER. Do., do. Paper, 30c

THE ELOCUTIONIST'S ANNUAL, No. 15. Do., do. 30c.]

BOSTON SCHOOL KITCHEN TEXT-BOOK. Lessons in Cooking for the Use of Classes in Public and Industrial Schools. By Mrs. D. A. Lincoln. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

Theology and Religion.

IS THERE SALVATION AFTER DEATH? A Treatise on the Gospel in the Intermediate State. By E. D. Morris, D.D., etc. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25

THE BHAGAVAD GITA; OR, THE LORD'S DAY. With Commentary and Notes as well as Reference to the Christian Scriptures. Tr. from the Sanscrit for the benefit of those in search of spiritual light by Monini M. Chatterji. Ticknor & Co. $2.00

THE WORLD TO COME. By Wm. Burnett Wright. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

CHRISTIAN FACTS AND FORCES. By Newman Smyth. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

THE ANTHONY STEEL PLATE FURNACE.

A STRICTLY SANITARY HEATER.

Reproducing in the house all the purity of the external atmosphere at the proper temperature for respiration. Has heavy steel-plate radiator, Clinkerless Grate, Gas Tight Elevated Connections, and all the latest improvements. Does not heat the cellar. Easily regulated, burns less coal than any other furnace made, and, when quality is considered, is the lowest in price.

Indorsed by leading physicians and Sanitary authorities as being the best for dwelling-house use, and the most favorable to the health of the family.

The construction and Sanitary application of this furnace is fully described in our new 56-page book, entitled "Our Homes; How to Heat and Ventilate Them." This book will be mailed free to any one on receipt of 6 cents in stamps.

SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO.,

Manufacturers,

52 and 54 UNION STREET BOSTON, MASS.
New York Agency, 106 and 108 Beekman Street.

HOW ABOUT THAT?

DYSPEPSIA permanently cured,
INDIGESTION speedily corrected,
CHRONIC STOMACH TROUBLES quickly yield to the curative effects of DR. MARK R. WOODBURY'S

DYSPEPSIA KILLERS.

Mailed to any address on receipt of fifty cents (trial box twenty-five cents) by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston, or you can obtain them at any drugist.

FOOLS OF NATURE.

By ALICE BROWN. 12mo, $1.50.

"An exceedingly good thing. There are two admirable lessons worked up in this most interesting and attractive story, the dangers of spiritualism, and the impossibility of dissolving the marriage tie. The book has everything to recommend it."

"This is a strongly told story, dealing with some of the aspects of modern spiritualism. The shams of that system of belief are ruthlessly exposed, but the simple faith of some of its followers is sympathetically presented. The character of the innocent-hearted medium, Leonard, is a very finely drawn one."

"The story is deeply interesting, and sufficiently odd to rivet attention. Some of the scenes are very dramatic, some of the conversations spicy and telling."

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. THE SWANEE RIVER.

By STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER. Beautifully illustrated. Each in one volume, 4to, full gilt, cloth, ivory finish, imitation wood, or monkey grain, $1.50; seal, $2.50; flexible calf, or tree-calf, $5.00.

Stephen Foster was a poet with power to reach and touch every heart. He united to simple words, usually in dialect, music of a peculiar pathos and tenderness that appealed to all men, which has won for him a unique and special place not granted to the work of other composers. Millions of these his best two songs, have been circulated; but never before has the artist's pencil been enlisted to adorn the ballads that have pleased and softened so many hearts. The drawings have been made and engraved by the best artists with the utmost care, and will be found apt and worthy illustrations of these tender and beautiful songs.

LOVE AND THEOLOGY.

A Novel. By CELIA PARKER WOOLLEY. $1.50.

"A brave, thoughtful book, and one singularly catholic and impartial."—Boston Transcript.

"The book is not only bright and thoughtful, it is intellectual."—Boston Advertiser.

"It deals with what is an important phase of modern inner life, and thousands will find mirrored in it experiences which they have felt in their own breast."—Boston Courier.

"The story is well told, it is true, it entertains, and it is sure to be popular."—Beacon.

"To say that characters and action are selected admirably, and are handled with brilliant power, were to affirm what will be evident to every thoughtful reader."—Globe.

"There is hardly a critic who will lay the book aside without having read it from beginning to end, and his interest will be completely captivated. The characters introduced are from life, and they are drawn with remarkable force, while the liberality that is gradually permeating all Protestant sects is unmistakably illustrated, and that in a manner that can give offense to no reasonable reader. It is an intensely interesting love story, of the very best character."—Home Journal.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, post free, on receipt of price, by

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

THE PENNSYLVANIA Academy of the Fine Arts.

The Antique, Life and Portrait Classes of the Academy will reopen MONDAY, Oct. 3.
For circular of the Committee on Instruction, or information as to the Schools, address or apply to H. C. WHIPPLE, Curator, at the Academy Building, South-west corner BROAD and CHERRY Streets, Philadelphia.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate (Showing Curtain drawn).

Design Copyrighted, Grate Pat'd Aug. 17, 1886.

The Curtain Grate, with Weaver's patent Shaking and Dumping attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
16 Beacon Street, Boston.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of

A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

Horsford's ACID PHOSPHATE (LIQUID)

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Mental and Physical Exhaustion, NERVOUSNESS, Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening, Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hon. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila., 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauqua University, &c. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 131 Tremont Street, BOSTON, MASS.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 13 numbers, (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25.

Now ready, by the author of "German Simplified," and on the same plan,

Spanish Simplified.

To consist of 10 numbers. Nos. 1 and 2 were published October 15, 1887. A new number will appear on the first of every month, until completed. Price, 10 cents a number.

Both works are for sale by all booksellers; rent, post-paid on receipt of price, by Prof. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus free.

Patented January 2nd, 1877.

Granville Mosaic Floors
Have never failed to give satisfaction. Tested eight years. Lately improved whereby laying is made simple and inexpensive. Adapted equally to old floors or new houses. Positive but hidden fastening. Shrinkage practically overcome. Send plan of room and have floor made to a design prepared expressly for it. Ask for information.
O. S. Dickinson, Granville, Mass.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "Don't Travel Much" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

THE TRAVELERS
HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT
INSURANCE COMPANY.
ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT
COMPANY
OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES covering injuries received
ACCIDENT TICKETS, in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.
RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY:

A New Book by "Sunset" Cox.

THE ISLES OF THE PRINCES;
OR, THE PLEASURES OF PRINKIPO.
By Hon. SAM'L S. COX, author of "Arctic Sunbeams," "Orient Sunbeams," etc., late U. S.
Minister to Turkey. Octavo, fully illustrated,
$1.75.

CONTENTS.—Prinkipo: Its History, Government, People,
Home Life, Monasteries and Libraries—Halki—Plati—Ozia
—Beylerbey—Nicsa—Nicomedia—Bronssa—Olympus—San Stefano—A Princess—Diplomacy, etc.

A New Edition of a Famous Book.

KALOO LAH. THE ADVENTURES
OF JONATHAN ROMER. By W. S. MAYO.
The "Framazugda" edition. Reset and very fully illustrated by Alfred Fredericks, and handsomely printed in quarto, cloth extra,
$3.00.

Of this celebrated work more than 25,000 copies have been sold in this country, exclusive of a number of unauthorized English editions, and it is justly entitled to enduring popularity.

"One of the most admirable pictures ever produced in this country."—Washington Irving.

"The most singular and captivating romance since Rolinson Crusoe."—Horne Journal.

Country Life in England.

ARCADY: FOR BETTER FOR
WORSE. A study of rural life in England.
By AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D. D. With two illustrations. Cloth extra, $1.75.

CONTENTS: The Arcady of Our Grandfathers—The Faith of Arcady—Clouds Over Arcady—Peasants' Homes—A Swain of Arcady—The Little Ones and the Land—A Voice from the Wilderness.

"A delightful book . . . and will come as a revelation to many."—Athenaeum.

"One of the most charming books ever published in English. . . . Full of thought and fuller yet of a noble humor-ousness."—Spectator.

English History for Students.

ENGLISH HISTORY FROM CON-TEMPORARY WRITERS. Edited by F.
YORK POWELL, M. A., Fellow of Christ Church, Deputy Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. Clearly printed 16mo volumes of from 160 to 200 pages, with illustrations. Cloth extra, 60 cents.

To each well-defined period of English history is given a little volume made up of extracts from the chronicles, state papers, memoirs and letters of the time, as also from other contemporary literature, the whole chronologically arranged and chosen so as to give a living picture of the effect produced upon each generation by the political, religious, social and intellectual movements in which it took part.

I. THE MISRULE OF HENRY III., 1216-1248. By Rev.
W. H. HUTTON, M. A., St. John's College, Oxford.

II. EDWARD III. AND HIS WARS, 1327-1360. By W.
J. ASHLEY, M. A., Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford.

"Both plan and execution are admirable. I shall take pleasure in calling the attention of my classes to them."—
Prof. A. W. Wheeler, Yale University.

"Books to be cordially recommended."—Prof. C. I. Little, Syracuse University.

"These volumes will be for students both helpful and stimulating."—Prof. E. B. Andrews, Brown University.

SKETCHES IN SONG. By GEORGE L.
RAYMOND, author of "Poetry as a Representative Art," "Ballads of the Revolution," etc.
16mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

* * * Fall list sent on application.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS
MUNRO COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

A new and elegantly illustrated Edition of the Great French Classic,

LES MISÉRABLES.

By VICTOR HUGO. Translated from the French by Isabel F. Hapgood. With 160 full-page illustrations, printed on fine calendered paper, and bound in neat and attractive style. 5 vols., cloth, gilt top $7.50; half calf, $15.00. Popular edition in one volume, 12mo, $1.50.

"It is hardly undue praise to say that Miss Hapgood's flexible and sympathetic translation is the best one that has ever been made, and can hardly fail to be accepted by critical authorities as the permanent standard."—Traveller.

"Miss Hapgood is one of the best translators we have,
and in the translation of Les Misérables she surpasses all her predecessors."—The Beacon.

"The publishers have made this book very attractive.
They are to be commended not only for the edition before us, but more especially for a popular edition, which will make this great work accessible to a wider class of readers."—Advertiser.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

13 Astor Place, - - - New York.

Lights of Two Centuries. FIFTY BIOGRAPHIES

Of the Master Minds which have contributed to the world's progress in Art, Literature and Science.

By EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

Pp. 600, 8vo, illustrated, price, postpaid, $1.75.

For sale by booksellers, or sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
111 & 113 William Street, New York.

TEACHERS are cordially invited to address us on any matter pertaining to textbooks. If an improved book or series is desired in school, write us for circulars, information, terms, etc. Sample copies sent at nominal prices, returnable if not adopted.

"The Alphabet of Manual Training."

White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.

For schools. The most important books of their class ever issued. Already adopted in many large cities. Write for particulars.

Swinton's Readers, Spellers, Geographies, and Histories.

Fish's Arithmetics.

Wells's Shorter Course Grammar and Composition.

Spencerian Copy Books.

Smith's Physiologies.

White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.

Webster's School Dictionaries.

Our BRIEF DESCRIPTIVE LIST sent free to any address.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & Co., Pub's,

149 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

753-755 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION

Opens Oct. 6. Thorough training for Voice, Body and Mind. Literature studied through Expression. Authors' Recitals monthly. Courses for Speakers, Teachers, Professionals and for General Cal-ture, 1 to 20 hours a week. Work adapted to individual needs. Degree of A. M. to A. B.'s. Courses of Lectures on Expression by the Dean opens Sept. 22. Send for catalogue, lecture tickets, or call for personal interview 10 to 1.
S. CUREY, Ph. D.,
Freeman Place, 15½ Beacon Street, Boston.

PORTER & COATES'S New Publications.

THE HEART OF MERRIE ENGLAND.

By the Rev. JAMES S. STONE, D. D.
12mo, cloth extra, $1.50.

THE CHILDREN OF SILENCE; or, The Story of the Deaf.

By JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D., LL. D.
12mo, cloth extra, $1.

MY MOTHER'S ENEMY: A Book for Girls.

By LUCY C. LILLIE. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.50.

OUR FELLOWS; or, Skirmishes with the Swamp Dragons.

By HARRY CASTLEMON. Illustrated.
16mo, cloth extra, black and gold, $1.25

THE STORE BOY; or, The Fortunes of Ben Barclay.

By HORATIO ALGER, Jr. Illustrated.
16mo, cloth extra, black and gold, $1.25

HUNTERS OF THE OZARK.

By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Being the first volume of the "Deerfoot Series." Illustrated. 16mo, cloth extra, black and gold, $1.25.

THE CAMP IN THE WOODS.

By EDWARD S. ELLIS. Being the second volume of the "Deerfoot Series."
Illustrated. 16mo, cloth extra, black and gold, $1.25.

THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF ROB- INSON CRUSOE.

By DANIEL DE FOE. A beautiful edition from entirely new plates. Elegantly illustrated with 86 engravings.
Crown 8vo, beveled boards, cloth extra, gilt edges, $2.50.

HOLIDAYS AT THE GRANGE; or, A Week's Delight.

By EMILY MAYER HIGGINS. Illustrated.
12mo, cloth extra, brown and gold, $1.

Porter & Coates, Philadelphia, Pa.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want.
In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,

STANDARD BOOKS,

IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engraving, Etc., Etc.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND Lover needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to
R. C. HARTMAN, 709 SANSON STREET,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books.
Send for Catalogue of Americana.

OCT 29 1887
LIBRARY

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews

.FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 22. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 335. Publishers.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 29, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

JUST PUBLISHED:

GUATEMALA, THE LAND OF THE QUETZAL.

By WILLIAM T. BRIGHAM. With 26 full-page and numerous text illustrations. 8vo, $5.00.

Mr. Brigham's work on Guatemala is fresh, interesting, substantial and important. It covers a wide range—the people, with their habits and customs, the architecture of the present and the past, the climate, products, natural scenery, mineral resources, and the flora and fauna of this interesting but little-known country. The illustrations, made from photographs taken by the author, are numerous and excellent.

SETH'S BROTHER'S WIFE.

A Study of Life in the Greater New York. By HAROLD FREDERIC. 12mo, $1.25.

A rural community in Northern New York is the scene of Mr. Frederic's novel, which has attracted much favorable comment while appearing serially in Scribner's Magazine. The characters are drawn with vigor, and each has a decided and refreshing individuality. An ingenious plot and an abundance of incidents give the story movement and vitality.

FAMILIAR STUDIES OF MEN AND BOOKS.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. 12mo, $1.25.

These essays are on a variety of subjects—Hugo, Whitman, Thoreau, Burns, Pops, etc.—and are marked by the same incisiveness of style, and vigor and subtlety of thought, that characterize the author's other works.

THE LAST OF THE BUCHHOLZ SERIES. FRAU WILHELMINE.

The Concluding Part of the Buchholz Family. By JULIUS STINDE. Uniform with Parts One and Two. 12mo, $1.25.

Every one who has enjoyed the first two volumes of the "Buchholz Family" will want to possess this third part, in which the author concludes his inimitable studies of middle-class German life. New experiences and perplexities of Frau Buchholz and her entertaining friends are described with the same painstaking skill and delightful humor that made the previous volumes so popular.

A STORY OF THE GOLDEN AGE.

By Prof. JAMES BALDWIN. With 12 full-page illustrations by Howard Pyle. Square 12mo, $2.00.

The ancient Greek myths and legends are the material out of which Professor Baldwin has constructed a consecutive narrative, full of interest for young people, and of true literary value. As in his "Story of Siegfried," and "Story of Roland," the author has made his heroes and heroines live before the reader, whose interest in Greek literature, and especially in the Homeric poems, cannot fail to be stimulated. Mr. Pyle's illustrations are drawn with his accustomed spirit, and are in perfect harmony with the beauty of the story.

THE MODERN VIKINGS.

Stories of Life and Sport in the Norseland. By Prof. HJALMAR H. BOYESEN. With 10 full-page illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

Professor Boyesen's stories breathe a healthy, bracing atmosphere. They present interesting phases of adventurous life and sport among daring and hardy races, and will be welcomed by every boy. In the illustrations are depicted with much skill some of the more striking incidents of the tales.

* * These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.
687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norway, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGEO, M. A. THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JONES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; OR, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; OR, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGEO'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PRYDE'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWERS, FRUIT AND THORN PINCES.

SPINOKA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

* * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE LIFE OF BENVENUTO CELLINI.

Newly translated into English by JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. With engraved portrait and eight etchings by F. Lagullermie; also eighteen reproductions of the works of the master, printed in gold, silver and bronze. 500 copies of this edition printed for England and 250 for America. Small 4to, 2 vols., handsomely bound in cloth, $12.00; calf back, $13.50.

"One of the most interesting and valuable autobiographies ever written. . . . The variety of its incidents, the minuteness of its descriptions, the pictures of the people and of the manners of the time, and, above all, the view it affords of the life of one of the most powerful characters of the age, give it at once the charm of romance and the value of a record of contemporaneous events."—Prof. C. K. Adams, Manual of Historical Literature.

LOUISE DE KEROUALLE,

Duchess of Portsmouth,

In the Court of Charles II.; or, How the Duke of Richmond Gained His Pension. Compiled from state papers in the archives of the French foreign office, by H. FORTNERON. With a preface by Mrs. G. M. Crawford of Paris. With six engraved portraits of court beauties from the paintings at Hampton Court Palace. 8vo, cloth extra, $3.50.

"An interesting record of a very strange and humiliating period in English history. Even now, when two centuries are past, one burns with anger and shame to read how the French king kept his diplomacy steadily at work to secure his aim."—Pall Mall Gazette.

New Work by the Author of "How to be Happy though Married."

FAINT, YET PURSUING.

By the Rev. E. J. HARDY. Square, imperial 16mo, cloth, $1.75.

CONTENTS—Faint, yet Pursuing—Thorns in the Flesh—The Perfect Work of Patience—A Refuge for the Distressed—Mistakes about Happiness—A Wise Choice—The Day of Salvation—Sisera no Match for the Stars—The Babylonian Captivity—God's Method of Punishment—Our Father's Chastisement—Christian Friendship—Thoughts for Advent—Christmas Thoughts—The Divine Arithmetic of Life—Excuses—Secret Faults—"Is It Not a Little One?"—Forewarned, Forearmed—No Waste—Good Friday and Bad Friday—The Fall, Perfect and Sufficient Sacrifice—Volunteer for God—The Lord and the Giver of Life—Worldliness—Bid Christ to Your Wedding—Old Testament Heroes—Are Christian Principles Practical?—Christian Socialism—Seeing not Necessarily Believing.

POSTHUMOUS HUMANITY:

A Study of Phantoms.

By ADOLPHE D'ASSIER, Member of the Bordeaux Academy of Sciences. Translated and annotated by Henry S. Olcott, president of the Theosophical Society. To which is added an Appendix, showing the popular beliefs current in India respecting the post-mortem vicissitudes of the human entity. In crown 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

Victorian Poets.

By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN. Thirteenth Edition. Revised and extended by a Supplementary Chapter, to the Fiftieth Year of the Period under Review. Crown 8vo, $2.25; half calf, $3.50.

"Victorian Poets" has been recognized by both English and American critics as a work of the first order in its department. It discusses with full knowledge, fine discrimination, and admirable appreciation, the many British poets who have distinguished the Victorian era.

Memories of Coleorton.

Being Letters from COLERIDGE, WORDSWORTH and his Sister, SOUTHEY, and Sir WALTER SCOTT, to Sir GEORGE and Lady BEAUMONT of Coleorton, in Leicestershire, 1803 to 1833. Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by WILLIAM KNIGHT, Professor at St. Andrew's University. Beautifully printed and tastefully bound. In two volumes, crown 8vo, half parchment, uncut, $4.50.

An Old Maid's Paradise.

Burglars in Paradise.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

This book contains two stories which have already had a wide reading, but they are so full of good sense and humor that many will be glad to re-read them in the permanent form in which they now appear.

Tanglewood Tales.

By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. Holiday Edition. With 15 full-page illustrations and many smaller ones, by GEORGE WHEATON EDWARDS. 4to, cloth, handsomely stamped, $2.50.

This beautiful book is a companion volume to the popular Holiday Edition of the Wonder-Book published two years ago, with illustrations by Mr. F. S. Church.

The Book of Folk Stories.

Rewritten by HORACE E. SCUDDER. With a fine engraving of Cinderella. 1 vol., 16mo, 60 cents.

"The Book of Folk Stories" is a collection of old favorites, rewritten to bring them within the easy comprehension of children who have just learned to read.

Not in the Prospectus.

A Novel of a European Tour by PARKE DANTFORTH. New Edition. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

The Bodley Books.

Including Doings of the Bodley Family, The Bodleys Telling Stories, The Bodleys on Wheels, The Bodleys Afoot, Mr. Bodley Abroad, The Bodley Grandchildren and their Journey in Holland, The English Bodleys and The Viking Bodleys. By HORACE E. SCUDDER. A New Edition, eight volumes in four, attractively bound in cloth. With all the illustrations which appeared in the original volumes. $2.00 a volume; the set, $8.00.

CABOT'S Memoir of Emerson. $3.50.

HOLMES'S Our Hundred Days in Europe. $1.50.

MISS PHELPS'S The Gates Between. $1.25.

MISS PHELPS'S Jack the Fisherman. 50 cents.

TYLER'S Patrick Henry. $1.25.

MRS. HIGGINSON'S Princess of Java. $1.50.

WRIGHT'S The World to Come. $1.25.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.
11 East Seventeenth Street, New York.

Alphonse Daudet.

NOW READY.

TARTARIN OF TARASCON: Traveller, "Turk" and Lion-Hunter. With 115 illustrations by Montegut, Myrbach, Picard and Rossi.

"The humors of this countryman of Daudet and of Gambetta are simply delicious, and they are in this new shape fitly illustrated by scores of delicate little pictures. . . . These pictures possess that lightness, elegance and grace which belong to French art, and are not attained by English or American illustrations."—Springfield Republican.

TARTARIN ON THE ALPS. With 150 illustrations by Rossi, Aranda, Myrbach, Montegut, De Beaumont.

"The illustrations are full of delicate characterization, of sharp satire, of artistic grace and skill; the page is narrow and admirably broken up by a great variety of small cuts, and the typography leaves nothing to be desired. It is a long time since so complete and fascinating a work has come from the press."—The Book Buyer, New York.

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE: the Story of an Old Boat and Her Crew; and other Stories. With 185 illustrations by Montegut.

"It is charmingly and gracefully wrought out, with a freshness of feeling that is more common among French than English writers, and a mingled pathos and heartiness that are delightful. The illustrations in these little stories are such as are possible only with French pencils and French printing."—R. H. Stoddard, in N. Y. Mail and Express.

"These stories are excellent examples of the peculiar genius of Daudet, who must be conceded to be one of the greatest of living novelists. He has been called the legitimate successor of Balzac, yet his is a different kind of realism; it is a picture more lightly touched than he gives us, with less depth, it may well be, and less earnestness of conviction; but the graphic hand of the artist is felt in every line."—Boston Traveller.

SAPPHO: A Picture of Parisian Manners. With 70 illustrations by Rossi, Myrbach and other French artists.

Each 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

UNIFORM EDITIONS OF

Greatest Works of Dumas and Hugo.

NEARLY READY.

THE COUNT OF MONTE-CRISTO. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. With nearly 500 illustrations by Beaume, Staal and other eminent French artists. 5 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

Appended is a translation of the story on which Dumas founded his great romance.

NOTRE-DAME. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations by Hugo, Bayard, Brion, etc. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

THE TOILERS OF THE SEA. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations by Chiffart, D. Vierge and Hugo. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

Uniform with the superbly illustrated edition of "Les Misérables" published last season.

Morley's Universal Library.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

54. Alcestis and other Plays by Euripides. Translated into English Verse by Robert Potter.

53. The Commonwealth of Oceana. By James Harrington.

52. Poems and Plays. By Geo. Peele.

Selected and edited by Prof. HENRY MORLEY, who has written an introduction for each volume. 16mo, each about 300 pages, cloth, cut or uncut edges, 40 cents; half parchment, with gilt top, 60 cents.

51. Schiller's Poems and Ballads. Translated by Lytton.

50. The Original. By Thomas Walker.

49. The Banquet of Dante. Translated by Elizabeth P. Sayer.

Routledge's Pocket Library.

2. Thackeray's Paris Sketch-Book.

3. Hood's Comic Poems.

4. Dickens's Christmas Carol.

7. Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome, etc.

8. Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield.

9. Hood's Serious Poems.

10. Bulwer's Coming Race.

12. Manon Lescaut. By the Abbe Prevost.

14. Sterne's Sentimental Journey.

Published in monthly volumes. Beautifully printed in clear type on good paper, and tastefully bound in the following styles: Half cloth, cut edges, 40 cents; half cloth, uncut edges, 50 cents; half cloth, uncut edges, gilt top, 60 cents; French morocco, gilt edges, $1.00.

15. Dickens's Chimes.

16. Moore's Irish Melodies.

17. Gilbert's Fifty "Bab" Ballads.

18. Poems by Elizabeth Barrett Brown- ing.

21. Milton's Paradise Lost.

22. Scott's Lady of the Lake.

23. Cambell's Poetical Works.

24. Byron's Werner; or, The Inheritance.

25. Book of Humor, Wit and Wisdom.

A Library of Quotations.

Edited by C. T. RAMAGE, J. C. GROCOTT and Miss A. L. WARD. 5 vols., 12mo, cloth, $10.00; half calf, $17.50; levant morocco, $25.00; per vol., cloth, $2.00.

COMPRISING

Vol. I., Familiar Quotations (chiefly British and American); Vol. II., French and Italian authors (with English translations); Vol. III., German and Spanish authors (with English translations); Vol. IV., Greek authors (with English translations); Vol. V., Latin authors (with English translations).

For sale by all booksellers; or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, 9 Lafayette Place, NEW YORK.

Ready Next Week.

THE FAMOUS FIRST EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE

(1623.)

IN REDUCED FAC-SIMILE.

Printed from the Original London Plates Expressly Imported for the American Edition.

926 Crown Octavo Pages, Cloth, $9.50.

IGNATIUS DONNELLY bases upon this edition his claim of the discovery of a cipher, which, if he is right, proves the Baconian authorship of the plays. This book will enable any one to test his discovery.

Further, Mr. Donnelly claims that by the use of the cipher much secret political history can be translated out of the plays. This will make the need of a copy of the original Folio Edition (1623) or a fac-simile copy indispensable for such investigation.

Aside from the cipher feature in the use of this edition, it is the most interesting and valuable book in the whole range of English literature. There is no work in that literature at all approaching near to its critical value. When it is mentioned that this volume is the

SOLE AUTHORITY

For the texts of such masterpieces as the Tempest, Macbeth, Twelfth Night, Measure for Measure, Coriolanus, Julius Caesar, Timon of Athens, Antony and Cleopatra, Cymbeline, As You Like It, and The Winter's Tale—were the rest of the book waste paper—enough will have been said to confirm its unrivaled importance. * * *

Ready Next Week. Advance Orders Filled in Turn.

The Latest New Book by Josiah Allen's Wife.

MISS · HOLLEY'S · POEMS.

Illustrated by GIBSON and Others.

A companion volume to "Sweet Cicely." Ready next week. Large 12mo, square, elegantly bound and illustrated, $2.00.

FUNK & WAGNALLS, Publishers,

18 & 20 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

HAVE NOW READY:

The Gnostics and their Remains, Ancient and Mediæval. By C. W. KING, M. A. Second edition. Rewritten, with important additions, including a full bibliography prepared by Joseph Jacobs. 19 illustrations in the text, and 15 lithographic plates, containing 80 engraved figures from the original Gnostic Stones.

Limited letter-press edition, large octavo, $6.00.

CONTENTS: Gnosticism and its Sources—The Worship of Mithras and Serapis—Abraxas Abraxaster and Abraxoid Gems—The Figured Monuments of Gnosticism—Templars—Rosicrucians—and Freemasons.

The Revolutionary Movement of 1848-49 in Italy, Austria-Hungary and Germany, with some examination of the previous thirty-three years. By C. EDMUND MAURICE, author of "English Popular Leaders in the Middle Ages," with illustrations. Limited edition, octavo, cloth extra, $4.00.

CHIEF CONTENTS: The Triumphs of Despotism—First Efforts of Constitutionalism—Faith and Law against Despotism—Language and Learning against Despotism—Despotism Retires before Constitutionalism—First Mutterings of the Storm—The Downfall of Despotism—The Struggle of the Races—The Revolution breaks into Separate Parts—Last Efforts of Constitutionalism—The Death Struggle of Freedom.

List of Autumn Publications sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

New York and London.

TEACHERS are cordially invited to address us on any matter pertaining to textbooks. If an improved book or series is desired in school, write us for circulars, information, terms, etc. Sample copies sent at nominal prices, returnable if not adopted.

*"The Alphabet of Manual Training."White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.

For schools. The most important books of their class ever issued. Already adopted in many large cities. Write for particulars.

Swinton's Readers, Spellers, Geographics, and Histories.

Fish's Arithmetics.Wells's Shorter Course Grammar and Composition.*Spencerian Copy Books.*Smith's Physiologies.*White's Industrial Drawing—Revised.*Webster's School Dictionaries.

Our BRIEF DESCRIPTIVE LIST sent free to any address.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN & Co., Publ's,

149 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

753-755 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

THE PENNSYLVANIA Academy of the Fine Arts.

The Antique, Life and Portrait Classes of the Academy will reopen MONDAY, Oct. 2.

For circular of the Committee on Instruction, or information as to the Schools, address or apply to H. C. WHIFFLE, Curator, at the Academy Building, South-west corner BROAD and CHERRY Streets, Philadelphia.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 24 PARK ROW, N. Y.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST READY:

I.

"The Right Honourable."

A ROMANCE OF SOCIETY AND POLITICS. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M. P., and MRS. CAMPBELL-PRARD. 12mo, paper cover, price 50 cents; half bound, 75 cents.

II.

The Advance of Science in the Last Half-Century

By Prof. THOMAS H. HUXLEY. Reprinted from "The Reign of Queen Victoria: A Survey of Fifty Years of Progress." 12mo, paper cover, price 25 cents.

III.

The "How I was Educated" Papers.

From "The Forum" Magazine. 8vo, paper, price 30 cents.

In response to numerous requests, largely from teachers and others interested in education, the series of papers above designated, which formed the first part of the volume "The College and the Church," recently published, is here presented in a portable form at a low price.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY FOR NOVEMBER.

CONTENTS:

The Economic Disturbances since 1873. V. By Hon. DAVID A. WELLS, LL. D., D. C. L.

Agassiz and Evolution. By Prof. JOSEPH LE CONTE.

Specialization in Science. By Prof. G. H. THEODOR KIMER.

Food and Fiber Plants of the North American Indians. By J. S. NEWBERRY.

Science and Revelation. By Prof. G. G. STOKES, F. R. S.

Astronomy with an Opera-Glass. The Stars of Autumn. By GARRETT P. SERVIS. (Illustrated.)

About the Wedding-Ring. By D. E. MCANALLY.

The Chemistry of "Oyster-Fattening." By W. O. ATWATER.

Geikie on the Teaching of Geography. By FREDERICK A. FARNALD.

A Kitchen College. By H. BROOKE DAVIES.

What American Zoologists Have Done for Evolution. II. By Prof. EDWARD S. MORSE.

The Unhealthfulness of Basements. By W. O. STILLMAN, M. D.

Sketch of Chester S. Lyman. (With portrait.)

Correspondence.

Editor's Table: Science in Harness. A Further Advance.

Literary Notices. Popular Miscellany. Notes.

Price, 50 cents single number; $5.00 per annum.

1, 3 & 5 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

92 FRANKLIN STREET, BOSTON.

Sonnets of this Century.

Edited and arranged, with a Critical Introduction on the Sonnet, by WILLIAM SHARP. Square 24mo, red line, half cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

The Sonnets of Europe.

A volume of Translations, selected and arranged with notes by SAMUEL WADDINGTON. Square 24mo, red line, half cloth, gilt top, 75 cents.

"The selections have been made with good judgment, and represent each writer at his best, and the translations bear testimony to Mr. Waddington's diligent research and wide range of reading."—Boston Transcript.

HARROW SCHOOL SERMONS.

Sermons Preached to Harrow Boys in the years 1885 and 1886. By Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, M. A., Head Master of Harrow School. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

"These twenty sermons are singularly felicitous to their purpose—brief, graceful, direct, and in the highest sense practical."—Living Church.

FIVE LAST THINGS.

Death, Intermediate State and Place of Waiting of Souls, Resurrection, Judgment, Eternity.

STUDIES IN HOLY SCRIPTURES. By Rev. JESSE A. SPENCER, S.T.D. 12mo, cloth, 75 cts.; gilt edges, $1.00.

"The teaching of Holy Scripture is presented in full and with great clearness and force; numerous questions of deepest interest on the subject of the other world are carefully considered, and the volume is calculated to suit the needs of Christian people and to minister to their edification and comfort."—The Press.

THE RECENT PAST.

From a Southern Standpoint, being the Reminiscences of the Rt. Rev. Dr. WILMER, Bishop of Alabama. Second Edition now ready, handsome octavo volume, with portraits, $2.00.

"He is as candid as was old Dr. Johnson."—Richmond Dispatch.

LIVING VOICES OF LIVING MEN.

Practical sermons by Bishops and Clergy of the Church, intended for family and lay reading. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

A series of twenty-six sermons, by as many clergymen of the Episcopal Church, among whom are Bishops Williams, Clark, Potter and Randolph; Rev. Drs. Huntington, Cooke, Batterlee, Shipman, Sulvely, Parker Morgan, Dyer and Lemingwell.

THE DOCTRINE OF MORALITY.

By ROBERT B. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Warden of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

An extremely clear, fresh and scholarly work on Christian morals, from the standpoint of Anglican Orthodoxy.

✱ A fine edition for presentation.

ROBINSON CRUSOE.

By DANIEL DEFOE. Reprinted from the author's edition, 1719, with 103 illustrations by Gordon Browne. Printed from new plates. 595 pages, thick 12mo, bound in vellum cloth, with a very striking design in full gilt. Price $2.00.

✱ For sale by the trade generally.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

FROM THE

PRESS OF J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

A NEW NOVEL by the author of "HELEN'S BABIES." COUNTRY LUCK.

By JOHN HABBERTON, author of "Bruston's Bayou," etc. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.00.

A charming idyl of country life, and a satire upon the conventionalities and affectation of social life in New York, worked together with consummate tact and skill into a delightful love story.

"A very entertaining story."—Savannah Morning News.

THE DUCHESS.

Ask for the Lippincott's Edition.

(With Portrait.)

By the author of "Molly Bawn," "Phyllis," etc. 16mo, half cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents. No. 79 of Lippincott's Series of Select Novels.

The only edition of this book that contains the author's portrait.

"It is a charming book, absorbing the attention from the title-page to the end."—Wheeling Sunday Register.

ESTHER.

A Story for Girls.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY, author of "Not Like Other Girls," "Wee Wife," etc. Illustrated, 12mo, extra cloth, gilt, $1.25.

"The story is pure, bright, natural and entertaining. It is a love story in which the girls will delight."—Boston Evening Traveller.

BEHIND THE BLUE RIDGE.

A Homely Narrative.

By FRANCES COURTNEY BAYLOR, author of "On Both Sides," etc. 12mo, extra cloth, $1.25.

"A capital novel, strong, vivid, well written, and full of humor of a very gratifying kind."—Literary World.

"Intensely dramatic in construction, rich in color, picturesque in description and artistic in its setting. No more delightful picture of the every-day life of the Virginia mountaineers could well be imagined."—Philadelphia Record.

VENDETTA;

Or, The Story of One Forgotten.

By MARIE CORRELLI, author of "A Romance of Two Worlds," etc. 16mo, half cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents. No. 78 of Lippincott's Series of Select Novels.

UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

In 4 vols. Extra cloth, gilt top, $5.75. Each volume sold separately.

Modern History. By ARTHUR ST. GEORGE PATTON, B. A. $1.50.

Ancient History. By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M. A. $1.50.

Medieval History. By GEORGE THOMAS STOKES, D. D. $1.50.

Geological History. By EDWARD HULL, M. A., LL. D. $1.25.

A NEW GUIDE TO THE QUAKER CITY.

PHILADELPHIA AND ITS ENVIRONS.

New Edition of 1887.

Entirely rewritten, and handsomely illustrated with over 150 engravings. 8vo, paper cover, 50 cents.

If not obtainable at your booksellers', send direct to the publishers, who will forward the books free of postage, on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS,
715 & 717 Market Street, Philadelphia.

A MANUAL OF NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS.

For the Naturalist and Sportsman. Containing Concise Descriptions of every Species of Bird known in North America. By ROBERT RIDGWAY, Curator, Department of Birds, U. S. National Museum. Profusely illustrated with 464 outline cuts of the generic characters, and a portrait of the late Spencer F. Baird. Library Edition. Large 8vo, cloth, $7.50. Sportsman's Edition. Crown 8vo, bound in leather, $7.50.

"A work of extraordinary value."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

New, Revised and Enlarged Edition.

THE AMERICAN SPORTSMAN.

Containing Hints to Sportsmen, Notes on Shooting and the Habits of the Game Birds and Wild Fowl of America. By ELISHA J. LEWIS, M. D. With new chapters by Arnold Burges. With over 300 illustrations, extra cloth, $2.50.

READY EARLY THIS MONTH.

THE SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE;

Or, The Lake Lands of Canada.

By B. A. WATSON, A. M., M. D. Profusely illustrated and elegantly bound in cloth, 8vo, $3.50.

INVALUABLE BOOKS for the MECHANIC, ENGINEER and CHEMIST.

Revised to Date.

NYSTROM'S POCKET BOOK OF MECHANICS AND ENGINEERING.

Nineteenth Edition, Revised and Greatly Enlarged with Original Matter. By WILLIAM DENNIS MARKS, Ph. B., C. E. (Yale S. S. S.) Illustrated, 16mo, $3.50.

"A library in itself, giving a little of everything that the engineer and mechanic will need to know to aid them in every-day practice."—Industrial World, Chicago.

MARKS on THE STEAM ENGINE.

Third Edition, Revised, Enlarged and Interleaved. The Relative Proportions of the Steam Engine. By WILLIAM D. MARKS. With numerous illustrations, 12mo, extra cloth, $3.00.

"A work of inestimable value to every mechanic, containing, as it does, rules, tables and directions in regard to the steam engine which come into use in every-day practical life of the engineer."—San Francisco Wood and Iron.

ELEMENTS OF MODERN CHEMISTRY.

(WURTZ.)

New Edition, Thoroughly Revised. Translated by W. H. GREENE. 12mo, cloth, $2.50; sheep, $3.00.

"A valuable work as a class-book, and a most interesting and instructive volume for the general reader."—New York School Journal.

HALF-HOURS WITH AMERICAN HISTORY.

Selected and arranged by CHARLES MORRIS. 2 vols., crown 8vo. Uniform with "Half-Hours with the Best American authors." Cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half morocco, $3.00; three-quarters calf, $5.50.

A companion work of "Half-Hours with the Best American authors," which will be found to have a special value of its own.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, OCT. 29, 1887.

No. 22.

CONTENTS.

AN UNKNOWN COUNTRY	361
DECISIVE BATTLES SINCE WATERLOO	361
MARSTON AS STORY WRITER AND POET	362
INSTITUTES OF GENERAL HISTORY	363
THE ISLES OF THE PRINCES	363
ACTS AND ANECDOTES OF AUTHORS	364
THE HEART OF MERRIE ENGLAND	364
RECENT POETRY	367
MINOR FICTION:
Love and Theology	369
Mark Logan, the Bourgeois	369
A Border Shepherdess	369
A Speculator in Petticoats	369
The Rose of Paradise	369
Jack the Fisherman	369
The Revolution in Tanner's Lane	369
A Puritan Lover	369
Thetia	370
MINOR NOTICES:
Sundays at Balmoral	370
Mr. Morris's Claverhouse	370
The Children of Silence	370
The Leading Facts of English History	370
Etc., Etc., Etc.
MRS. MULOCK-CRAIK	366
A LETTER FROM GERMANY. Leopold Katscher	366
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Bacon and Shakespeare	372
Two New Volumes of the "Mermaid Series"	372
Mr. Clarence S. Ward's "Wit, Wisdom, and Beauties of Shakespeare"	372
Matters at Stratford-on-Avon	372
PERIODICALS	373
NEWS AND NOTES	373
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	374

AN UNKNOWN COUNTRY.*

BETWEEN the receiving of this book and the writing of this notice of it have come the sudden tidings of its author's death. She has entered "An Unknown Country" indeed! We open this story of her visit to Ireland with sadness and close it with affectionate remembrance. It is a typical book of her whole gentle character and all her literary career. Not a page has Mrs. Mulock-Craik ever written which is not, alone or in its connections, a guiding page to the "better country that is an heavenly." No longer an "unknown country" to her, would that she could send back to us from beyond its gates some rapt account of its scenes as they now unfold before her! This book is, as it were, her memorial; as we hold it we stand beside her fresh-made grave; it deepens the sorrow with which we mourn one of the gentlest, sweetest, purest spirits among the English authors of the century.

It was but a little while since (near the time of the Belfast riots) that Mrs. Craik and her three young companions, pleasantly disguised as "the Violet," "the Brown Bird," and "the Wild Irish Girl," with an artist for a body guard, made the excursion through the northern counties of Ireland so pleasantly described in this volume. It was rather an adventurous trip, from which many friends dissuaded them, partly because of the troubled condition of Ireland in general, and partly because of the uncertainties of a terra incognita. But Mrs. Craik and her young friends had good courage and powers of endurance, and on the whole got on easily, and, except for the constant and tempestuous rains, comfortably. The trip was made in August and September. Crossing to Larne, just to the north of Belfast, the party skirted the bold and rugged Irish coast as far as the Giant's Causeway, where they spent some days. Thence, still following the shore around Lough Foyle, they reached Derry, or Londonderry, their next stopping place. From Derry they plunged fearlessly into County Donegal, and struck across to the extreme western coast, where the waves of the Atlantic roll angrily in. Here, especially at Gweedore, they found much to interest them. Turning southward they then went on as far as the abrupt headlands of Donegal Bay, looking across which they could see the Sligo steamer on its way to Londonderry; and the tour ends, so far as the reader is concerned, with scenes in the vicinity of Teelin or Malin Head, one of which is Glen Columbkille, with its memorials of St. Columba.

The earlier stages of this circuitous trip were made by rail, in one case—from Derry to Portrush—over an electric railway; but Irish railroading is far from first-class. The coaches are poor, the trains slow, the stations wretched. The ride from Larne to Giant's Causeway was made in a car, and that across the wild moors of Donegal in a wagonette and waterproofs. The inns were always simple, but as a rule surprisingly neat, and the pictures which Mrs. Craik draws of hospitality at such points as Cushendall and Cushenden, on the east coast, where they could look across to the Scottish Mull of Cantyre, and at Letterkenny, Gweedore, and Carrick in Donegal, are highly inviting to the tourist. Out of the larger towns their way led through Irish villages and peasants' farms, crowded with poor people, many of them in squalid condition. The line of demarkation between Protestant and Roman Catholic was everywhere to be noted, though not always drawn with bitterness. Mrs. Craik passed with a kind word and soothing manner among the folk she met, and it is easy to see how she must have won the confidence and regard of all.

The chief interest of her book lies in its descriptions of the scenery of the north of Ireland, always wild, sometimes desolate, and often sublime. The grandeur of the surf-beaten cliffs, the jagged outlines of the headlands, the dreary expanses of uninhabited moors, the somber weight of stormy skies, the meanness of many a cottage, the fertility of the soil in places, the quaintness of old churches and older ruins, the tone of domesticity which is imparted to many of the pictures of Irish life and manners, and an added flavor of antiquity by reason of relics of past civilization, traditions of almost prehistoric times and remains of unknown occupants, make up a landscape and an experience which are indeed novel and striking. Over all lies the warm light of a genuine Christian sympathy and true catholic feeling; and the benignant figure of the revered and now sainted author is almost visible upon the page. The sweet and tender spirit of the book is the charm of it; the voice of it is intensely human, one of profound admiration for the works of God, and of yearning pity for the sufferings and sorrows of man.

Mrs. Craik was made by this pilgrimage to believe anew in the rugged north of Ireland as a haunt for the tourist, and her enthusiastic narrative will make converts.

More than a passing word is due to the illustrations, which are wood-engravings, Harper's best, after drawings made on the spot. They depict the strong and sullen features of the Irish coast with fidelity; all are good, but that of Malin Bay, facing p. 229, is extremely fine.

Perhaps this book is intended specifically for the holiday season, but in view of Mrs. Craik's death this notice of it must not be delayed.

DECISIVE BATTLES SINCE WATERLOO.*

NEARLY a half-century has gone by since the publication of Edward Creasy's Fifteen Decisive Battles, from Marathon to Waterloo, in which the author outlined great historical periods as resulting from a few conflicts of arms. At Marathon Greek valor rolled back the hosts of the Orient and preserved to the world the Greek language, literature, and art, which, like the beams of the morning streaming up from the horizon, have illumined the centuries between the years of Homer, Socrates, Pericles, and the present hour. Equally decisive, and conversely in result, was the battle of Plassey, where, one hundred and thirty-one years ago, the civilization of the Orient, the old empire of Tamerlane, went down before a handful of soldiers from far-off England.

In Professor Creasy's volume all history centers around a few turning points, and insignificant events become destructive for the tearing down of the old, and constructive for the building up of the new civilizations. In a philosophic survey extending over centuries, the historian cannot always map out historic periods with the precision of an engineer, who, with transit or compass, sets his stakes and establishes his bounds; for the great movements of the ages are not often the resultant of a single conflict of arms, but more frequently of a series of engagements, the gradual wearing out of the weaker party.

Waterloo was the fifteenth decisive battle in Professor Creasy's classification, when

* An Unknown Country. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Illustrated by Frederick Noel Paton. Harper & Brothers. $2.50.

* Decisive Battles Since Waterloo. The Most Important Military Events from 1815 to 1887. By Thomas W. Knox. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.

the reactionary powers reconstructed the map of Europe. The volume before us, as we infer from its title and preface, is intended by the author as supplementing that work. It treats of twenty-five distinct military events, the first the battle of Ayacucho, the final engagement in South America in the revolt against the Spanish crown, fought in 1824. The last movement is the fall of Khartoum in 1885. The volume is well illustrated by maps and plans. The narrative is clear and distinct, with no attempt at dramatic effect. One is somewhat at a loss, however, to know just what meaning the author would give to the term "decisive." It can hardly be as comprehensive as in the earlier volume by Prof. Creasy, who finds but fifteen such conflicts during a period of twenty-four centuries, whereas according to Col. Knox's volume there have been twenty-five during the last fifty years. The battle of Prome, a skirmish on the banks of the Irrawaddy, gave Burmah to Great Britain, but it can hardly be regarded as the beginning of a historical epoch. The same may be said of the fall of Antwerp, which made Belgium independent of Holland, but which beyond that result had limited influence.

The battles fought in Mexico by the army under General Scott are vividly narrated. The siege of Vera Cruz, Cherubusco, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec—the author probably would not claim that either of them was decisive of the final result, which came rather from the series of victories. More decisive than either of these, in the movement which ultimately gave a large part of the old Mexican empire to the United States, was the battle of San Jacinto, which secured the independence of Texas, followed by annexation to the United States, that in turn bringing about the war with Mexico.

Victories and battlefields are far from being the sole determining forces in human affairs. Was it the crushing out of the military power of Mexico in the final engagement beneath the palms of Chapultepec, followed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, thus transferring a vast domain to the United States, that has made California what it is, that has dotted Colorado and Arizona with towns and villages? Shall we not, rather, find that the starting point of the new civilization was on the banks of the Sacramento, where the shining particles of gold were thrown up to the sunlight by the workmen digging a millrace? Even if California had remained a Mexican State, would not the discovery of gold as surely have brought about in the end the domination of American ideas, American government, and the marvelous victories of peace?

Of the battles of the Rebellion the author has selected Gettysburg, the siege of Vicksburg, and the battle of Five Forks as preëminently decisive. Without question Gettysburg will go down to future generations as one of the great turning points of history, when it was decreed that the people of the United States were a nation and not a confederacy. Important as was the fall of Vicksburg, its surrender, seemingly, would have been of little avail had the Army of the Potomac suffered defeat on Cemetery Ridge. We are not to forget the situation of public affairs—resistance to the draft, riots in New York and Boston, the opposition of a great political party to the further prosecution of the war, the popular cry of "Peace at any price;" plotting of Confederates in Canada; preparation to release the Confederate prisoners on Johnson's Island off Sandusky, at Chicago, and Indianapolis; the attitude of England; the building of iron-clads at Birkenhead for the Confederate navy; the position of France; Maximilian on the Mexican throne; Louis Napoleon in correspondence with Confederate agents; the readiness of France to break the blockade. The Rebellion reached high-water mark, and its foam dashed highest around that little copse of oaks and alders east of Nicholas Cadver's house on the afternoon of July 3, 1863. When the shattered brigades of Pickett and Anderson drifted back over the blood-stained field it was the beginning of the ebb tide. A few moments before the veterans of the Confederacy confidently expected to sweep the men in blue from their path, to win a great victory by their mighty onset, to march on to Washington, fling out the stars and bars above the Capitol, and make the Confederacy thenceforth supreme in this western world. Fifteen minutes and all was changed. Five Forks was but the final going out of the tide, when the Confederacy disappeared forever.

It is to be regretted that the author has taken it for granted that the public are as well informed as himself upon the final outcome of the military movements of the world during the last half-century. With a narrative so clear and concise, a philosophic outline, a brief presentation of the meaning, the benefits accruing to the world, would have been a welcome feature. But aside from just what signification the author would give to the term "decisive," aside from any want of philosophic inquiry as to the results of battles, the volume will be accepted as a valuable contribution to military and historic literature covering the period from the close of the Napoleonic wars to the present time.

MARSTON AS STORY WRITER AND POET.

TWO volumes which have recently appeared on either side of the Atlantic afford fair material for examining the life and life-work of the late Philip Bourke Marston, and they may be fittingly studied together. Marston's fame as poet far surpassed, and justly, his fame as a writer of fiction, but in both fields he was a master, and his prose productions have in their passion and power many of the elements of poetry. The memoirs attached to each of the volumes in question cover the main events of a tragic career, Mr. Sharp¹ writing with circumstantial ardor, Mrs. Moulton² with tender womanly sympathy. Both bear witness to the winning personality, the gloomy experiences, and the refined genius of Marston in a way that does not fail to carry conviction and to move the heart of the reader almost to tears.

Surely there is no recorded life of any author comparable to that of Marston for dark persistency of woe. In early childhood he was stricken with blindness, and then, one after another, the friends he most dearly loved and upon whose ministering care he most depended were taken from him by death; while yet in the prime of years he succumbed to a prolonged illness and at length found the rest he so much craved. It seemed in his own phrase as if "the gods derided him." But he knew how to express what he learned through suffering in exquisite song; his memory, like that of some storm-buffed flower, is fragrant with purposes fulfilled in spite of unfriendly fate. There is, strange to say, nothing morbid about his published utterances. He kept to the last a cheery spirit with others, and did not allow the shadow of his grief to come between him and the face of men. Amid the black arcana of sorrow he dwelt alone, and when he came from the darkened chamber it was with a brave light in his eyes and a merry or loving word upon his lips.

The stories³ which Mr. Sharp has collected are no doubt representative of Marston's range in prose fiction. While they cannot claim recognition as classics they possess elements of decided interest, and the careful student of contemporary literature ought not to pass them unread. They deal almost entirely with love in romantic phases, and their intensity of passion, their swift perception of motives, their subtle, unwavering analysis of character, and their charm of style are all noteworthy. Marston knew men and women by the divining insight of genius, and no one better than he could depict the varying influences of love upon those of either sex. In the story bearing the title "Her Price" there is a concentration of emotion, a reserved energy which never exceeds the bounds of art and yet which expresses all that the author sought to convey. A beautiful woman, to avenge the death of her sister, wins the love of a young Russian and bids him do a murder to obtain her favor. Then she confesses proudly to her husband what she has done; he spurns her and she commits suicide, while her lover, for the murder he has done, is hanged. This is a bare outline of a plot which is worked out with consummate skill.

¹ For a Song's Sake, and Other Stories. By Philip Bourke Marston. With a Memoir by William Sharp. Roberts Brothers. $1.75.

² Garden Secrets. By Philip Bourke Marston. With Biographical Sketch by Louise Chandler Moulton. Roberts Brothers. $1.00.

But it is of course by his verse that Marston is chiefly to be judged as a literary artist. Here his imagination found unhampered utterance; all his poems are instinct with originality, fire, subtlety of thought, lyrical charm. His communion with nature, in spite of his blindness, was constant and complete. Mr. Sharp admirably says that his sympathy "amounted almost to a new sense." He by precognition was familiar with things that common mortals learn only by observation or experience. He possessed to a rare degree the inner vision, the faculty divine which transcended sight and touch and put him at once upon a footing of intimate familiarity with all the ever-changing aspects of life. These qualities the little volume of Garden Secrets makes amply evident. Flowers were to Marston the embodiments of human emotion; in his thought they are personified without losing the daintiness of their native grace. Perhaps we cannot better serve the reader of this notice than by quoting in full the first poem in the collection, "The Rose and the Wind," written before the completion of the author's twentieth year:

DAWN.

The Rose. — When think you comes the wind,
The wind that kisses me and is so kind?
Lo! how the lily sleeps; her sleep is light;
Would I were like the lily, pale and white;
Will the wind come?
The Beech. — Perchance for thee too soon.
The Rose. — If not, how could I live until the noon?
What, think you, Beech-tree, makes the wind delay?
Why comes he not at breaking of the day?
The Beech. — Hush, child, and like the lily, go to sleep.
The Rose. — You know I cannot.
The Beech. — Nay, then, do not weep. (After a pause.)
Thy lover comes, be happy now, O Rose,
And softly through my bending branches goes.
Soon he shall come, and you shall feel his kiss.
The Rose. — Already my flushed heart grows faint with bliss;
Love, I have longed for thee through all the night.
The Wind. — And I to kiss thy petals warm and bright.
The Rose. — Laugh round me, love, and kiss me; it is well.
Nay, have no fear, the lily will not tell.

MORNING.

'Twas dawn when first you came, and now the sun
Shines brightly, and the dews of dawn are done.
'Tis well you take me so in your embrace;
But lay me back again into my place,
For I am worn, perhaps with bliss extreme.
The Wind. — Nay, you must wake, love, from this childish dream.
The Rose. — 'Tis thou, love, seemest changed; thy laugh is loud,
And 'neath thy stormy kiss my head is bowed.
O love, O Wind, a space wilt thou not spare?
The Wind. — Not while thy petals are so soft and fair.
The Rose. — My buds are blind with leaves, they cannot see;
O love, O Wind, wilt thou not pity me?

EVENING.

The Beech. — O Wind, a word with you before you pass.
What didst thou to the Rose, that on the grass
Broken she lies and pale, who loved thee so?
The Wind. — Roses must live and love, and winds must blow.

INSTITUTES OF GENERAL HISTORY.*

THE study of history in its widest sense would take for its field all which man has achieved; not only in government and in war, but in the mechanic arts and in the fine arts, in science and in literature, in philosophy and theology, and in the general modes of life and of thought. In his Brief Insti- tutes of General History Dr. Andrews touches very lightly upon any other topics than politics and war, and upon religion and church government as affecting these. Beginning with the earliest dawn of civilization in Egypt and Babylon, and sweeping down, in four hundred pages, to the new Prussian Empire, he has barely space enough to indicate the more important topics of inquiry. He simply gives, in a few condensed sentences, the spirit of each of the great crises in the progress of the human race toward its present position. The history of England and of the American continent is, however, purposely omitted; and, after reaching the classic period, the attention of the reader is held upon the progress of continental Europe alone.

While the author by no means conceals his opinions, but allows them to be plainly visible at almost every point, the principal value of the book is not in aught that he directly teaches, but rather in his suggestion of topics and in his guide to the more accessible sources of fuller information. To each of his eleven chapters he prefixes a list of books, which may readily be obtained and consulted upon the period under discussion. This list is rendered more useful by a scheme of notation, which practically divides the books cited into three classes, in the order of their importance as aids in study. In addition to this general bibliography each section of the chapter has also its own notes referring to particular passages. A book of moderate size more useful to a student or a teacher of history could scarcely be devised. Even in itself, condensed as it is, it is a fascinating story of the progress of our race, well calculated to stimulate a reader to pursue the study further by help of its numerous references.

Education and culture almost invariably lead a man, as he grows older, to become more interested in historical studies; to feel, more and more, that man himself is the most valuable object of inquiry for man. Yet the mathematical and physical sciences are a necessary preparation for the study of history; we must understand the world before we can understand what men have done with it and in it. And not until we thus understand what they have done and what they have failed to do, can we see clearly what we can and what we ought to do. Every volume is, therefore, to be welcomed, which, like the one before us, can arouse new interest in history, and furnish new facilities for its investigation.

In future editions of these Institutes we hope that the author will suggest some lines of inquiry into the influence which, during the last four hundred years, physical science, including the extremes of geography and mathematics, may have had upon philosophy, theology, and politics. The influence which is so potent in our own day must certainly have shown itself to preceding generations; and it is a subject too important to be overlooked in any thorough review of the history of civilization. It is a commonplace of history that science and theology have mutually acted upon each other; and we are inclined to believe that this interaction has been an important factor in politics also; greater and more important than Dr. Andrews's silence would imply. The Reformation promoted science, and science promoted the further progress of liberty both in Church and State.

When Galle discovered Neptune, that planet was supposed to be the one whose position Leverrier had calculated. Jared Sparks, therefore, pronounced the discovery to be one of the most important events in human history; it would stimulate scientific research, give boldness to speculations in philosophy and religion, and greatly strengthen democratic tendencies in Europe. Within eighteen months after this remark the revolution of 1848 had begun, which, according to Dr. Andrews, "rocked to its base every throne of continental Europe." This remarkable fulfillment of President Sparks's prediction may have been, like Galle's fulfillment of Leverrier's, merely a curious coincidence. But that it was something more is indicated by the well-known fact that, in the stirring times of 1848, the observatories and laboratories of Europe were greatly embarrassed by the hurrying of so many of their teachers and pupils to take arms with the revolutionists. It would be an interesting and perhaps valuable inquiry to ask whether similar sequences of date might not be traced between other great scientific advances and political uprisings.

THE ISLES OF THE PRINCES.*

OUR late genial and witty Minister to Turkey, the Honorable S. S. Cox — Sunset Cox is the title by which we best know him — makes entertaining books, as Orient Sunbeams and Arctic Sunbeams testify, and the present volume is in the true succession. The Princes Isles are a group of nine in the Sea of Marmora, within an hour and a half's sail of Constantinople. Prinkipo is the largest of them; the chief of the others are Halki, Antigone, and Proti. To Prinkipo came Mr. Cox last summer, and established himself there for health and pleasure, within easy reach by steam launch of his official duties at the Turkish capital, and when off duty looking out over as fair a prospect as the globe affords.

This book of about 500 pages, 24 chapters, and 28 pictures, is all about it. We will not be so extravagant as to say that the reading of the book is as good as a visit would be, but it is a decided step towards such a pleasure.

* The Isles of the Princes; or, The Pleasures of Prinkipo. By Samuel S. Cox. Map and Illustrations. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

* Brief Institutes of General History. By E. Benjamin Andrews, D.D., LL.D. Silver, Rogers & Co. $2.00.

The Princes Isles are on the latitude of New York, with the climate and characteristics of Greece. The Asian shore is full in view. All around is the deep blue of one of the most beautiful of seas. The islands are bold, rocky, and somewhat wooded:

Once in a while, when sauntering over the heights of the island, or among the pines, there comes on you, unexpectedly, a strange-looking man, as if he were lost out of one of Ulysses's pinnacles in an erratic way, or just from Albania, or had been tossed out of the Cyllades by an earthquake, or swam ashore by some help of the Homeric gods and goddesses. He is in the old Greek costume, with embroidered vest, large red sash, and baggy pants. As a sign of his Turkish subjection, he wears the red fez. In his sash he has some Damascus pistols, silver-mounted. They are as handsome and as harmless as those of our cavass. There protrudes from the sash the jeweled handle of the Damascus dirk, or yataghan. There is a sword, or scimitar, by his side, and altogether he appears quite voluminous at his middle. He wears low shoes, adorned with silver buckles. He has them turned up at the toes, and high black silk stockings. His brow is corrugated with care. His hair and moustache are blonde. His frame is stalwart. Two dogs follow him about. What is his business? To protect the forest from goats, fire, and spoilers. The trees must not be disturbed. Fig and olive, pine and pomegranate, on the road or by-paths, or over the stone fences, each and all are precious. The world does move!

There are no robbers on Prinkipo. The population seem contented and happy. The fishermen are mending their nets on the shore, and the children plucking the fruit in the orchards. Greek songs are on the lips. The water carriers and donkey drivers are everywhere. There are no fountains, no running waters, only wells. There is abundant provision for picnic parties from the Sultan's city. The roads are numerous and admirable. Everything is sold by peddlers who come to your door. Hospitality, courtesy, cleanliness, kindness, are prevailing traits, and Mr. Cox's summer among the islands was, he says, "a revel in the heart of nature."

Prinkipo has a circuit of about ten miles, with a variety of mountains and intervals. The island contains three monasteries, and the town of Prinkipo two good hotels which are much resorted to in summer. Murray's guide-book is very negligent of the spot and wholly indifferent to its charms. Look, for instance, in Mr. Cox's pages, at the little city on the northwestern side of the island, whose villas are rare in elegance and architecture, whose gardens have a hesperidean fruitage and bloom, and whose red-tiled roofs over the white or yellow buildings add a refinement to the town and isle which the bath-houses at the water's edge, upon the jutting crags, themselves ornamental, in vain try to dispel. The rich Greek merchants and bankers, together with the English, French, American, Armenian, and Swiss families who summer here, have not only spent their money freely to decorate their own houses and grounds, but they have made winding roads, up hill and down, which cross and encircle the island. These roads are embowered most of the way by fig, olive, and stone-pine trees. The cultivated country is green at the opening of the season with the fig bearing its fresh fruit. The vines are putting forth their tender grapes. The pomegranates blaze with scarlet flowers.

Prinkipo has extensive restaurants, with tables and seats in the open air. Invalids from all parts of the East lie on rugs on the shady elevations, drinking in the delicious air and gazing out over the sea. Every breeze is laden with the resinous odor of the pines. As the visitor approaches the island lovely terraces and vine-clad hills greet the eye in every direction. When he has landed, arbors, fountains, rustic bridges, and cool grottoes tempt his feet. Even the tennis court is ready for its devotees. And a fortnight from New York, by way of Liverpool or Havre, London or Paris, and Vienna, Buda-Pesth, Varna, and Stamboul, will take the jaded American to this paradise.

We must pass with but a word of reference over Mr. Cox's chapters on home life in Prinkipo, on its villas, gardens, and monasteries, on excursions to the neighboring isles of Halki, Antigone, and Proti, on the dusty old libraries and precious old manuscripts, and on the pretty Princes Island women with their picturesque costumes. There are chapters also on the neighboring European and Asiatic shores, on Nicæa and Nicomedia, and on the petroleum traffic now setting in towards the Bosphorus from Baku on the Caspian Sea. But these last are incidental topics. The main interest of the book lies in its descriptions of Prinkipo, its people, and its life, and the delicious way of summering that its conditions make possible. The author's method is rambling; he is constantly picking up and inserting threads that have no close connection with his fabric; but he is generally entertaining, sometimes amusing, often extremely graphic, and always readable.

Among the illustrations that of the veiled lady facing p. 354 is a remarkable specimen of the engraver's art.

ACTS AND ANECDOTES OF AUTHORS.*

THE design of this book is novel, its plan excellent, and the execution of it so far good as to fit it to be extremely welcome to a great many people. Take Mr. Oscar Fay Adams's Handbooks of English and American authors, Mr. James T. Fields's Yesterdays with Authors, and Davenport Adams's Dictionary of English Literature, mix well, stir faithfully, and boil down patiently, and Mr. Barrows's book might result. Under a single alphabet, on a dictionary plan, are arranged concise statements or brief biographies relating to the great army of English and American writers and their more famous books, making a volume of ready reference for all important English literature. A citation of a few consecutive entries, with a measurement of space occupied, will indicate the character and serviceability of the book. We open twice at random:

* Acts and Anecdotes of Authors. Facts for Every Reader. By Charles M. Barrows. New England Publishing Co. $1.50.

Good for Nothing. Drama.	1 line.
Good-Natured Man, The.	2 "
Goodrich, Charles Augustus.	4 "
Goodrich, Chauncey Allen.	2 "
Goodrich, Frank Boott.	5 "
Goodrich, Samuel Griswold.	55 "
Goody Blake and Harry Gill.	1 "
Gosse, Edmund W.	2 "

Little, Brown & Co.	9 "
Little Dorrit.	35 "
Little Foxes.	2 "
Locke, David R.	18 "
Locusts and Wild Honey.	4 "
Lodge, Henry Cabot.	6 "
Lodviska.	1 "
"	1 "
Lohengrin.	1 "
Lombardi.	1 "

No book of this sort can be compiled without provoking some criticism of details. The perspective is not always just; Shakespeare, for example, apart from the notices of his several plays, has scarcely a page all told, but Mr. Aldrich over 6 pages, Lydia Maria Child 4 1-2, Mark Twain 1 1-2, "Fanny Fern" nearly 2. There are grave omissions; Delia Bacon has nearly 2 pages, but Lord Bacon, whom his namesake and others have endeavored to invest with the honors of Shakespeare, is not so much as mentioned. Some cataloguers would protest against the alphabetical system by which such works as David Copperfield and Adam Bede are entered under the first word of the title rather than the last.

On the other hand, titles of important works of leading authors are given in full, some of the said works are analyzed and their characters named, there are a few bibliographies of subjects, and interesting particulars are added in the case of authors about whom we like to know. The columns of the Literary World have been drawn upon sometimes to good purpose, as witness such bits of literary information as that of the way in which Mr. Browning wrote "How they Brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix."

Of course in such a mass of facts, titles, names, and dates as compose this volume it would be risky to vouch for absolute accuracy and difficult to question it. So far as we have been able to examine closely, it is remarkably free from errors, and its method and manner are clear and intelligible. A singularly ingenious, practical, and useful book, we repeat, and one that a great many people will want.

THE HEART OF MERRIE ENGLAND.*

IT would not be difficult to point out faults of method and construction in Dr. Stone's book, but they are easily overlooked in view of the excellence of its materials and the geniality of its mood. It is essentially a book of rambles, and of rambles not only in England geographical, but in historical and antiquarian England. Now, rambles we do not expect to be orderly. The Rambler goes as he chooses. He dwells on this and skips that. Now he is over the fence and away in a field, and again he is lying down under a tree in a doze and a dream, or hobnobbing with a carrier in a village inn. If he likes the village he will stay in it a week; if he doesn't he will be out of it in an hour. He has little to do with railroads—the rambler; his preference is for turnpikes and foot-paths; he lingers by the rustic, the picturesque, and the antiquated; he has a love for an old church which amounts to a passion; the stile is his trysting-place with nature; and everybody is his company.

* The Heart of Merrie England. By the Rev. James S. Stone, D.D. Porter & Coates. $1.50.

Our present rambler in "the Heart of Merrie England" is an Episcopal clergyman of Philadelphia, who is an Englishman to boot, and who has become a Philadelphian by way of Canada. This book seems to have grown out of a recent visit to the "old home," which vividly recalled the scenes and associations of his youth. To his foot the soil of England is like moist moss, every step making it to stream with memory and tradition. There can be no better guide through England than an Englishman, especially if he be an educated, cultivated, warm-hearted Englishman like Dr. Stone, who can cite history, wax eloquent over a cathedral, and tell a good story with equal ease. Topographically "the Heart of England" into which he takes the reader is the meeting-point of the counties of Worcester, Oxford, and Warwick; but there is a diversion into Kent for the purpose of a visit to Canterbury, and there is an introductory chapter on London. But a deeper "heart of England" is touched in these pages than any that can be traced upon the map; much is recounted concerning some of the lines of history that have made England what it is, and there is a constant looking below the surface for what is curious and strange as belonging to bygone days. Old England is peered into at the same time that modern England is described.

After leaving London Dr. Stone first makes for Shipston-on-Stour, a secluded and almost forgotten pre-Norman town in the extreme eastern point of Worcestershire, a few miles southward of Stratford-on-Avon. To this isolated spot and its surroundings two chapters are devoted. The town is off the railway, on the highway between Birmingham and Oxford. It is full of old buildings, old people, and old fashions, and is productive of good stories, as witness the following:

Some years ago a man and his wife belonging to a village close by Shipston resolved to go to America; but when at Liverpool they saw the great sea, the good fellow exclaimed, "Let's go back, Betty, till the flood's gone down." This was the contrary of the impression which was made upon another man when he took his sweetheart to spend a day at the seaside, and arrived just in time for the ebb tide. "Wy, Ann, danged if they bain't a' lettin' t' water off!" One of the sayings in the country is, "If you only wait, you may carry water in a sieve."—"How long?" you ask.—"Till it freezes," is the triumphant reply. Some one told us of a woman who had six children, the eldest only seven years old. She was very careful about the Saturday-night scrub, in accordance with the custom of this neighborhood, and we asked if she put them all in a big tub together. "Oh no," was the reply, "she washes them as she can catch them."

The chapter which follows, on "Love in ye Olden Time," is one of the antiquarian interludes which diversify the book, not without interest, but inferior in that respect to the descriptive portions.

The two next chapters are given to Oxford and its connections, geographical and historical, which the author knows "like a book;" and thence we are taken by pleasant walks through the lovely English landscape in turn to quaint Watlington, a town in the Chiltern Hills, and to Thame, another ancient and interesting town full of the flavor of England's past. Here are the house where John Hampden died and a noble and historic church which has escaped "restoration." The next two chapters make the pilgrimage to Canterbury, to the music of Chaucer's Tales, and visit with loving enthusiasm the cathedral and Beckett's shrine. There is a rich and eloquent passage here on the function of the cathedral in worship and the religious life, and the grand edifice of Canterbury and its services are described anew in detail. Then back we go to Stratford and to Shakespeare, reaching the town by carrier's stage over a delightful road from Oxford through pleasant villages and a fertile country:

To some of the travelers it was evidently a thirsty day and as the temperance movement has not to any great extent affected this part of the world, huge potions of bright foaming ale were consumed at every stopping place. The driver was happy and obliging, ready at all times to have a chat or to give information; three or four of the passengers were merry, and enlivened the journey with odd rhymes, humorous stories, and witty repartee. One old fellow, full of fun and beer, puzzled a boy who went riding awkwardly by on a horse by asking him "if he would not be safer riding inside." . . . The sun was high toward noon when we entered the remarkably clean and pretty town on the Avon.

Visits in similar mood to Edgehill, the famous scene of the battle of October, 1642, to the little old-fashioned town of Kineton, all alive with its annual flower show, and to Kenilworth, with a tucked-in chapter of romance, complete the book. It has the advantage of having been written by one "to the manner born;" is affectionately familiar with all that is best and most characteristic in English scenery and life; and while, as we intimated in beginning, somewhat discursive and disconnected, is always entertaining and sometimes amusing in a refined way, and is thoroughly penetrated with the charm of its subject.

—The Youth's Companion has added Mr. Gladstone to its list of contributors, and the great English statesman has written an article for that popular periodical on "The Future of the English-Speaking Races," of which he takes a most cheerful view. While the article is said to be full of suggestive thoughts, it is written in a simple style which will interest young readers as well as older ones, and indeed it was expressly written for youthful Americans.

MINOR NOTICES.

Lights of Two Centuries. Edited by Rev. E. E. Hale. Illustrated with fifty portraits. [A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.70.] The title-page of this book says "Edited by Rev. E. E. Hale;" the accompanying circular of the publishers says that its pen-portraits have been "drawn by the skillful hand" of Mr. Hale. We suspect the former statement is nearer the truth. There are fifty of the sketches, arranged in five groups, namely: "Artists and Sculptors," "Prose Writers," "Composers," "Poets," and "Inventors." Under the first head are Watteau, Hogarth, Reynolds, Canova, Thorwaldsen, Turner, Ingres, Barye, Millet, and Bastien-Lepage. The prose writers are Swift, Addison, Voltaire, Johnson, Rousseau, Scott, Carlyle, Macaulay, Emerson, Thackeray, and Dickens; the poets, Pope, Goethe, Burns, Schiller, Wordsworth, Byron, Hugo, Longfellow, Tennyson, and Browning; and so on. Six only out of the whole fifty are Americans, and four of these come under "Inventors." Emerson and Longfellow are the only other American "lights of two centuries." Proper names are accompanied with pronunciations, the latter often useful and as often useless. The portraits are of thumb-nail or tintype size, arranged in groups. The book is specially designed for reading circles, to whom special terms are offered by the publishers.

Ran Away from the Dutch; or, Borneo from South to North. By M. T. H. Perelaer. Tr. by Maurice Blok and adapted by A. P. Mendes. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.50.] This is a story of the ostensible adventures of four deserters from the Dutch service in the south of Borneo, who in a period of three months and through a continuous series of extraordinary experiences make their way northward by river and mountain to the Sarawak and ultimately to Singapore, where they arrive possessed of great wealth in gold dust and precious stones. The adventures include a chase by cruisers, a crocodile hunt, a fight with a boa-constrictor, battles innumerable with head-hunters, the marriage of one of the adventurers with a Dayak beauty, a hand-to-hand encounter with an orang outang, a month's residence in a native "kampong" and consequently ample knowledge of Dayak manners and customs, several sieges, and the slaughter of several hundreds of human beings. The deserters are brave men. They carry with them an abundant supply of repeating rifles and ammunition, they are always equal to every occasion, they put armies to flight and repel their pursuers whenever the latter venture to attack them. They are commanded by a half-breed, Johannes, who is a veritable Odysseus for expedients and an incomparable diplomatist. The book probably gives a good idea of the interior of Borneo, its scenery, products, inhabitants, and general conditions. It abounds, however, in details of native customs which are brutal and revolting to an almost incredible degree, and it is therefore not to be commended to all young readers; its influence upon the minds of sensitive or imaginative children is likely to be very bad. It contains several full-page illustrations, but no vestige of a map,

The Literary World.

BOSTON, OCTOBER 29, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

One of the chief reasons why there is so much foolish criticism about, so much foolish work generally, is that it has become the fashion to regard common sense as the mark of a barren and unimaginative mind. . . . The laws of right and wrong in art as in morals are fixed and eternal. The fashion of the hour may change: the pet of his own generation may be the pariah of the next; but the truth is not influenced by the number of little books written about it. . . . Hold fast to common sense.—"The Profession of Letters," Macmillan's Magazine for October.

MRS. MULOCK-CRAIK.

NOT every week could the cable bring us the tidings of the death of an English literary woman who would be more mourned than Mrs. Mulock-Craik. As she always signed herself in authorship "the author of 'John Halifax, Gentleman,'" so her maiden name, under which her first successes were won, always clung to her married name, and to many of her readers, as well as to no small part of the public, she was Miss Mulock still. That name is often inaccurately spelled Mulock. The final letter should be k.

Mrs. Craik was born in Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, in 1826, and was, therefore, a little past sixty at her death. But hers was one of the natures which grow young as they grow old. There is a remark to this effect, if we remember rightly, somewhere in her latest book, An Unknown Country, reviewed elsewhere in this paper. No one can read that graceful and tender story without feeling that its author was wholly one with the young people who went with her on this adventurous excursion into the North of Ireland. Her father, we have seen it said, was a clergyman of the Church of England, of a literary but eccentric turn of mind, the "mad Irishman" to whom Moore refers in his diary, and of whom Byron speaks as "mixed with a due leaven of absurdity." Her childhood was not a happy one, and her later life brought disappointments and sorrows which chastened her nature and tinged all her subsequent writing. Her literary gifts were in active exercise before she was twenty, and her first considerable work of fiction, The Ogilvies, appeared when she was twenty-three. Her first great success, the book which established her sure fame, John Halifax, Gentleman, was published in 1857, and none of her other works, all of which have been popular in the best sense, has ever displaced this from its position as favorite. Among these are Olive (1850), The Head of the Family (1851), Agatha's Husband (1852), A Life for a Life (1859), Mistress and Maid (1863), A Noble Life (1866), and Hannah (1871). No sweeter poems than Mrs. Craik's have been printed in England for many a day, collected in an American edition in 1881 under the name of Thirty Years. Her strain in some of its notes came nearer Longfellow's than any other English poet of the last twenty-five years. The list of all her writings—novels, juveniles, essays—is of good length, including some thirty-five titles, the record of an industrious and patient life, inspired by a clear and steadfast Christian faith, and devoted to the truest and purest ends. There must have been a gracious and lovely influence about this woman, a sort of concentrated essence of the best elements of the English intellectual and religious nature.

A pleasant romance, which of itself might dictate a novel, gave Mrs. Craik her husband in 1865, but that gentleman, though bearing the same name, must be distinguished, we think, from Professor George Lillie Craik of Belfast, who was his father. He lived scarcely a year after his marriage, and left no children to solace his widow. Mrs. Craik, however, subsequently adopted a daughter.

It was a touching scene—on Saturday two weeks ago—her burial from the old-fashioned church at Keston, a pretty suburb in the southern environs of London. The grave, dug in the white, chalky soil, was framed with flowers, some of which were sent by the Queen and others by Baron Tennyson, while others still were wild flowers brought by the children of the Sunday-school. The Macmillan brothers, Mrs. Craik's publishers, were among the mourners, as also were Mr. John Morley, Mr. Holman Hunt, Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, and Mary Anderson. As the body was lowered to its last resting-place the village choir sang one of Mrs. Craik's own hymns, one verse of which is as follows:

Earth to earth, and dust to dust,
Calmly now thy words we say;
Left behind, we wait in trust
For the Resurrection Day.
Father, in thy gracious keeping
Leave we now thy servant sleeping.

For these tender particulars of the last scene we are indebted to the cable despatches of the New York Herald. Mrs. Craik's death resulted from some affection of the heart, and was sudden. She was taken ill on Wednesday, the 12th, in her bedroom at about a quarter to five, and in a few minutes all was over.

Interest of a somewhat different tissue attaches to the death of Lady Brassey, the wife of Sir Thomas Brassey, and author of Around the World in the Yacht Sunbeam, and other narratives of amateur cruising. Lady Brassey had about become a famous voyager and author. It was fully in keeping with her tastes and career that she died on board the "Sunbeam" on the outward voyage to Australia, and was buried at sea. The completion of the trip by those in whose company she sailed, under these melancholy conditions, we leave to the imagination of our readers. Some of the more gifted of them ought at least to make a sonnet out of it. The picture of that white-winged ship of pleasure, skimming the Pacific on its distant way, pausing a moment to drop beneath the waves the body of her who had been the life of all its motion, and then heading on towards the eastern horizon, like a body without a soul, is an impressive one.

A LETTER FROM GERMANY.

BERLIN, October 5, 1887.

A YEAR ago I wrote to you about the state of literary associations in this country. I had then just returned from the authors' congress at Eisenach, where the amalgamation of the two great societies extant was decided upon. A committee was elected for the preparation of the requisite rules, regulations, legal informations, etc. A few days ago I returned from this year's literary congress, which met at Dresden last week. Its principal object was the carrying out of the Eisenach resolutions concerning the amalgamation scheme. First, the two societies met at a common sitting in order to agree upon the rules, etc., as prepared by the said committee, which they did under certain restrictions. Next, each of the two associations held its separate annual general meeting for the purpose of submitting reports, accounts, etc., and deciding upon the dissolution in order to become fused with each other. Lastly, both met again together and carried the fusion into effect, not, however, without a good deal of confusion, legal and otherwise. All present at once signed themselves as members of the amalgamated society, which will be entitled "German Authors' League," and then proceeded to elect a preliminary, or interimistic, board of directors.

The principal points in the organization of the new association are the following: The members of the two past societies are ex ipso members of the League, unless they choose not to be so. New candidates need to be introduced by two members, and become members after a month if no well-founded protest is raised against them. The League's center is Berlin. The League is somewhat in the position of the English universities with regard to their colleges: it superintends, directs, and binds together a number of writers' societies to be formed among German authors all over Europe, and later on probably also in America. For the beginning there are to be seven "district" societies in Germany, and three in Austria-Hungary, each of which will be represented by its president in the League's central board of directors. Gradually, the League will establish funds for aiding, pensioning, etc., aged or needy members or their families, and for advancing money on good manuscripts finished, but not sold as yet. For the present, however, its chief aims are to protect the legal rights of members against piracy and other wrongs, to bring about an improved copyright legislation, national and international, and to take in hand the better placing of MSS. and reprints of members' work. May the League prosper and flourish!

In my last letter but one I reported on new Goethe discoveries. At present I have again to speak of Goethe matters, but the discoveries I have to mention are not of such importance as the others. On the contrary, they are most unimportant, and I cannot refrain from once more denouncing to your readers the ridiculous efforts continually made by a number of "Goethe scholars" to unearth new but utterly superfluous details from the poet's life. Perhaps the most diligent, but also the most ridiculous laborer in this barren field of research is Herr Heinrich Düntzer, whom I have had occasion to mention in one of my letters to you last year. This old gentleman has written much that is noteworthy about Goethe—his Life, e. g., or the Studies from Goethe's Life—but much more that is far from noteworthy. His latest feat is a new edition of his hero's love-letters to Madame de Stein. There is a good deal in these well-known collections that is interesting in itself and important for the Goethe community; but then, the two older editions, "done" by Fielitz, ought to have sufficed. Düntzer pretends that another edition was called for on account of errors, mistakes, and false conceptions as well as arrangements in the two editions of Fielitz. But the differences between the latter and Düntzer are of an extremely trifling and indifferent description. I fancy it would be no loss at all to the world if the greater part of the correspondence in question had never been printed. What on earth can it matter to anybody nowadays to know that on a certain day a hundred years ago, Goethe's eyes were hurt by a stroke of the whip, during a sleighing tour, or that he caught a cold on Sept. 8, 1777, by dancing too much at Eisenach? Three letters are taken up by unattractive private communications concerning a roasted stag, and two others are notes on some chickens in preparation for dinner. Is it really necessary to preserve in print—and repeatedly too—every little slip of Goethe's handwriting? Is it really, as Düntzer remarks, a "rare luck" to be possessed of every private utterance, no matter of what description, ever penned by a great man, be it Goethe, or, for the matter of that, Shakespeare or Bismarck? No, no, and thrice no!

LEOPOLD KATSCHER.

RECENT POETRY.

An underlying ethical fervor, a penetrating insight to the primary motives that animate all the deeds of humanity, a calm appreciation of nature, an ever-alert but undemonstrative sense of humor, a delicate and original mastery of the resources of language—are not these the dominant qualities that characterize the writings of Robert Louis Stevenson? At any rate these are what we find fully evident in the author's Underwoods [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.] However much the verses collected under this title may lack in imaginative range, no one will deny that they are the product of a clear-seeing imagination which limits its horizon at its own will. Indeed, the charm of these poems is not easy to describe. It is found in such phrases as when the truant gull

Skims the green level of the lawn, his wing
Disparts roses.

It is found in the whole of the expressive lines on "The House Beautiful," culminating in the sentiment that

To make this earth, our hermitage,
A cheerful and a changeful page,
God's bright and intricate device
Of days and seasons doth suffice.

And there is surely felicity of form as well as ethical fervor in this little poem:

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON.

If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, thy most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!

The poems "in Scots" are full of a rollicking humor that appertains to the dialect and themes. Nothing could be better than "Conscience," "The Spaewife," "A Mile an' a Bittock," and "A London Sabbath Morn," from all of which we are tempted to quote, but must forbear. Mr. Stevenson has in this volume added perceptibly to the profit and pleasure of such cultivated readers as have a relish for the simple, unhackneyed, zestful fruits of a mind that seeks only to present natural ideas in a natural form. His verse, unsophisticated as it is in technical resources, has the spontaneity that comes of true inspiration.

There could be no greater contrast in poetical expression than that to be derived from a comparison of Mr. Stevenson's Underwoods with Joaquin Miller's Songs of the Mexican Seas [Roberts Brothers. $1.00]. The one is like the moor where all objects are visible in the light of day, where the winds are wholesome, the sunshine invigorating, the very lack of promiscuity a source of delight to the expanding senses. The other, like a tropical jungle, abounds in a wild luxuriance where gorgeous colors intermingle and dazzle the vision, where breath is stifled by rank perfumes, where one wanders in a maze, oppressed by the too-luxuriant manifestation of riotous nature. Mr. Miller's book is made up of two productions. The first, "The Sea of Fire," relates how a dusky maid of imperial beauty came to be on the Mexican coast somewhere, how a stalwart ship's captain found her, how the two loved, and how they were ultimately destroyed in a great fire that swept through the forest. They might have got away to "a small, white isle" near by, but after stripping off all their clothes and making ready for the plunge the captain "would not start or stir." If he had stirred without starting it would have been something, but

He would
Not bear her waveward though he could!
That height was heaven; the wave was hell.
He clasped her close,—what else had done
The manliest man beneath the sun?

Our impression is that it would have been a good deal manlier to get the beloved one to a place of safety rather than to subject her to cremation out of sheer obstinacy, but of course tastes differ about such matters. The second of the productions, "The Rhyme of the Great River," is concerned, as nearly as we can discover, with the federal occupation of New Orleans, and with another captain who married a beautiful lady but gave her up for two bags of gold. He went round the world with his gold, which he could not spend and which became a torment to him. All the time the lady prayed for him nightly in a ruined chapel, and at last she came and found him lying there. He tried to stand erect before her, but his gold held him down and he breathed out his life in a prolonged sigh. For the rest there are lines and even successive stanzas here and there which at first glance impress one by their splendor:

The azure curtain of God's house
Draws back, and hangs star-pinned to space;
I hear the low, large moon arouse,
I see her lift her languid face.

I see her shoulder up the east,
Low-necked, and large as womanhood—
Low-necked, as for some ample feast
Of gods, within yon orange wood.

Of course when one comes to think of it the idea of hearing the moon rise seems a trifle strained—but then a "low-necked" moon would be capable of almost anything, even of exciting the auditory nerves!

Frances L. Mace, in Under Pine and Palm [Ticknor & Co. $2.00], versifies among other things some of the Indian legends of Maine and celebrates California as "the New Italy." The versification is not without serious blemishes, particularly in the case of the hexameters, which are inharmonious and halting. Moreover, the author is capable of writing "lurid crimson" (p. 41), apparently ignorant of the fact that "lurid" means "pale yellow;" she is guilty of the solecism "in their midst" (p. 49); and she has the "century plant" blooming on the "breezy crag" of Mount Desert (p. 54). These are minor matters. She has descriptive power and her poems are lighted up with warm touches of fancy, as where she speaks of the oriole singing in the apple boughs

Like a flower that has found a soul.

The charm of the conception is not wholly destroyed by an effort to rhyme "boughs" with "glows." Perhaps the finest production in the volume is "Los Angeles," with its delicate intermingling of fact, tradition, and prophecy:

She sits amid her orange trees,
Our Lady of Los Angeles,
The smiling city of the sun,
And counts the seasons as they flee,
Like beads from off a rosary
That slip and sparkle one by one.

The sunrise song is of the past—
What mightier music shall at last
Be worthy of thy peerless prime?

I see thee like a vast, white rose
Expand, until the desert glows
A tawny captive at thy feet!
I see thy sunburnt mountains shine
With palaces, and at thy shrine
Of Summer all the nations meet.

Smile on amid thy orange trees,
O city of Los Angeles!
Yet in thy coming hour of prime
Keep thou thy ancient legends dear,
And through all loftier peaks hear
The echo of the Mission chime!

The boundless West finds also an oracle in the Letters from Colorado, by H. L. Wason, whose untrained but significant rhymes [Cupples & Hurd. $1.25] have caught inspiration from a new and broadening environment. Mr. Wason is capable of some pretty poor stuff, like his description of a coach ride across the San Luis Valley, for instance, the coach eight feet long by four feet wide,

With huge expansive power inside,
Embracing in its padded folds
The total sum of thirteen souls.

But let not the fastidious reader be discouraged. The book has substance and a little real poetry in it. Mr. Wason touches nearly all the predominant phases of a westward journey by an intending settler, and he picks a good deal of romance by the way. His accounts of the wooing of Donna Inez, of the legend of Bellows Falls, of the supper on the plains shared by "La Signorita," and his renderings of many Indian and Spanish traditions are all of interest if somewhat crude in form.

There is no question that the Scottish dialect, properly handled, has in it the elements of poetry, "like the dew or the song of the lark in the morning," as Dr. J. E. Rankin aptly expresses it in a note to his Ingleside Rhaims [John B. Alden. soc], and although not a native Scotchman Dr. Rankin uses the dialect of Burns like one to the manner born. His rhymes, chiefly on domestic themes, have pathos and wit, and one does not need a glossary to understand their meaning. Such pieces as "In Dumfries Kirkyard," "Forebodings," "The Harvest Lassie," and "Aboon the Stars," touch the heart at once by their tender charm.

There are some dainty trifles in the daintily printed Verses of Richard le Gallienne [Liverpool: W. & J. Arnold]—a few musical sonnets, a reckless "Ballade of Old Sweethearts," and three "Booklover's Songs" that will appeal to the bibliophile in no uncertain tones. Also to be classed as trifles—of a different sort—are the Poems of Henry C. Hayden [Rand-Avery Co.]. Mr. Hayden, however, prints at the close of the volume "Extracts from an Essay on the Character of Richard Third," which are not trifling, whatever else they may be. Of Richard we are told that His love for funerals was quite unique.

But some excuse is to be made for him on the ground that he age was murderous, and called for blood, en cared as little for their brothers' heads

As farmers do for antiquated fowls,
Which they decapitate for useful ends,
Anear Thanksgiving time.

Edward Lippitt Fales propagates romantic views of Indian courtship and marriage in his Songs and Song Legends [St. Paul: the Author]. His book doubtless pleases the author and his friends; it could not possibly interest anybody else. It requires a stronger imagination than that of Mr. Fales to idealize the noble red man.

Charles Follen Adams offers his Dialect Ballads [Harper & Bros.] as addressed "to the great heart of the people," and to that magnanimous and expansive receptacle of humorous verse we may safely commend them. Some of them are vulgar, to be sure, but "the great heart," etc., is rather fond of vulgarity. If Mr. Adams had spared us his "versified puns" we might have forgiven him the rest of the volume.

A sincere patriotism and a ready appreciation of the inspiring value of certain historical episodes connected with America are shown in the Songs of History of Hezekiah Butterworth [New England Publishing Co. $1.00.] The author recognizes a defect in our literature when he suggests in his preface that "it may be well to begin a more sympathetic study of what is poetic in our own national life. In other lands every episode of history, every mountain and river, every trade and occupation, every heroic act and every holiday, has its song; and we may well ask our own land for its meanings, and study together its poetic past." In this field Mr. Butterworth enters with the spirit of a pioneer, and he acquits himself with dignity of his worthy task. "The Thanksgiving for America" (Barcelona, April, 1893) is an impressive ode; and in "Champlain," "The Legend of Waukulla," "Galvez," and "The Death of Jefferson," we have poems lofty in theme, direct and harmonious in execution, and elevating in sentiment. The verse commemorative of holidays and festivals is above the average of occasional productions. That on "Labor Day" will hardly meet the ideal of the "walking delegate," but it is certainly a vigorous appeal to American manhood:

The world's best hands now drive the plough,
The soil-king's, freedom crowned,
And man's imperial chariots now
Are those that break the ground.
The rime, the rune, the saga old
May be the hermit's quest,
But man's best promise writes the bold
Brave ploughshare of the West.

The Wind Flowers of Luella Smith [Chas. H. Kerr & Co. $1.00] are largely made up of felicitous translations from the German of Geibel, Schnauffer, and other poets of the minor key. The original verses are in harmony with the translations in their almost deliberate sense of martyrdom, complacent melancholy, and persistent didacticism.

Two volumes of translations of more than ordinary pretension have recently reached our table—The Poems of Giacomo Leopardi, by Frederick Townsend [G. P. Putnam's Sons], and Russian Lyrics in English Verse, by Rev. C. T. Wilson, M.A., late chaplain, Bombay [London: Trübner & Co.]. Mr. O. B. Frothingham, who writes an introduction to the first-named volume in memory of the translator, says that Mr. Townsend's version "adheres as closely to the original as is compatible with elegance and the preservation of metrical grace." Doubtless this is true, but it is also true that the renderings in question are stiff and cold, and no one could possibly read them save through rigid determination. A great deal of the charm of Leopardi's verse lies in his magnificent control of language, and this is untranslatable. The attempt to give the ideas of the Italian philosopher in metrical form is almost surely doomed to failure; a literal prose version would be preferable, for it would be more readable and less misleading. As for Mr. Wilson's endeavors at Englishing Russian Lyrics, they may at once be set down as melancholy exhibitions of misplaced assiduity. The list of poets from whose works selections are made includes twenty-five leading names and the selections number more than a hundred. For each author there is a biographical note. The translations are for the most part mere doggerel. Mr. Wilson has evidently made a painful effort to be literal, but the exigencies of rhyme and metre push him to terrifying conclusions. After looking through the results of his labors, one devoid of other means of knowledge would be justified in comparing the brilliant galaxy of Russian bards with the "Sweet Singer of Michigan."

New to many on this side the Atlantic, but not new books, are the Sonnets of this Century, edited by William Sharp, and The Sonnets of Europe, a collection of translations selected by Samuel Waddington. [Thomas Whittaker. Each, 75 cts.] Both are handy little volumes for use and both will be welcomed by lovers of the best poetry. Mr. Sharp's anthology is not comparable to that of David Main for scope and uniform excellence, but it serves its purpose admirably—would have served it better, perhaps, if the editor had seen fit to include examples from American poets. Mr. Waddington, in his collection, draws freely from at least eight American authors—Mr. Lowell, Mr. T. W. Parsons, Prof. C. E. Norton, Mr. T. W. Higginson (six of whose fine versions from Petrarch are given), Margaret Fuller, Charles Brooks, Bryant, and Longfellow. The translations are classified as from the Italian, French, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Swedish,

Polish, Greek, Dutch, and Latin. Some of these, particularly a noteworthy series from the Portuguese by J. J. Aubertin, were written especially for this volume. Mr. Waddington is not unjust in praising highly this version by Mr. Aubertin of a sonnet by Boccage:

ON NELSON.

Entering Elysium, diademed with light,
Nelson, in blood-stained robe behold appear!
The shades are stricken with unwonted fear,
And round him crowd the ghosts of men of might.
Cries Alexander, rivetting his sight,
"What lustrous mortal thou, that enterest here?"
"Tis I who raised from thralldom to her sphere
Europe bowed down, half captive from the fight.
Incarnadined with blood I left the wave,
A bolt upon the furious Gaul I threw;
My country raises trophies o'er my grave."
On this the Macedonian weeps awed;
He to whom Victory vast regions gave;
Enviest the man who did one race subdue.

George Lansing Raymond with his Sketches in Song [G. P. Putnam's Sons] continues to exhibit the depth of feeling, quick sensibility, and elevated tone which have given character to his previous work. If we miss somewhat the lyrical touch in the present volume it is perhaps because A Life in Song gave us an ideal of poetical possibilities which the author has not since attained. But he is always thoughtful and a searcher after good. "Ideals Made Real," the most extended and ambitious poem in the Sketches in Song, has many profound philosophical truths in it, and bears directly upon problems encountered by every man and woman in the relations of love and marriage. "Unveiling the Monument" is a melodious expression of the loneliness of genius, and there is a grim forcefulness in "Nothing to Keep Under."

The Unseen King and Other Verses, by Caroline Leslie Field [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00], are formed of a graceful intermingling of familiar fancies inspired by conceptions of duty, faith, and love. The unseen king rules his people wisely and wins their love; and when they demand sight of him there issued forth, alone,

In simple raiment, one whom they had known
As their unfailing, faithful friend for years.

"Idlesse" and "Im Frühling" are delicate bits of rhyme, simple yet exquisite in imagery and not too heavily weighted by the inevitable moral. Mrs. Field will not let any phase of thought or passing impression go without extracting a "lesson" of some sort; but her didacticism is not wearisome.

The Ten Years of Song of Horatio Nelson Powers [D. Lothrop Co.] have produced a select sheaf of poetry which is to be reckoned among the better fruitage of our minor writers in verse. Mr. Powers has written, not of malice prepense, not in response to a prevalent mania for rhyme-making, not from a self-conscious desire to display his dexterity in the metrical art—but from the promptings of a truly poetic temperament. Sincerity, therefore, marks every line of his work; thought goes before the form; one finds here something more than painted surfaces. A far-seeing recognition of "the eternal order," a clear insight to the mystery of suffering, a firm and catholic belief in the divinity of manhood, an intuitive perception of beauty in its loftier forms—these combine to render the poems of Mr. Powers noteworthy among the productions of his contemporaries. One must look far to match the discernment and majestic phrasing of "Optimus" and "The Voice of Pain;" the rich, harmonious coloring of "Apple Blossoms," "The Hudson," "In the Orchard;" the rare and winning imagery of "A Maiden," "Fire-Flies," "Clematis," the stirring call of "Pro Patria;" the earnest devotion of "Cor Cordium" and "Reassurance." Mr. Powers is plainly one of those who give us of their best, and all that he produces in verse is worthy the careful attention of thoughtful readers.

MINOR FICTION.

Love and Theology. A Novel by Celia Parker Woolley. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] Mrs. Woolley's novel has a very large infusion of theology. The theology is of the "liberal" order, but the manner in which it is presented should not repel any one, for the author plainly knows very well that religion is more than theology, and the spirit in which she writes is one of candor and reverence for all faiths sincerely held. The hero, Arthur Forbes, has graduated from the divinity school and finds himself no longer able to preach the Calvinistic creed in which he was reared. If this is not exactly an uncommon experience now-a-days, it is hardly less common a thing that such a divinity student should be engaged to a deacon's daughter. But substance and character are given to Mrs. Woolley's story by the fact that Rachel Armstrong does not, as so many do in common life, accept her lover and tolerate his heresy until marriage shall have brought them into essential unity of belief. She considers him an apostate: shut in as she has been from the larger movements of thought, which have borne him away, she believes it her duty to harden her heart against him, and if nature and destiny had not been too strong for her resolution, neither she nor her lover would have married. This strenuous pair, who, though they cannot live apart, never come to think alike, find a more common counterpart in the genial Chase Howard, the rector of St. Andrew's, and the lively Miss Fairfax, whose "advanced" ideas on woman's lot find no difficulty in mingling with her Broad-Church liberality. The curious picture Mrs. Woolley gives of the western church over which Arthur Forbes is settled bears all the marks of life. The author perceives the deficiencies of crude "liberalism," as well as of strict Calvinism, and offers an expression of the vital faith to which both must come in the convictions to which Rachel at last adheres.

Mark Logan, the Bourgeois. By Mrs. John H. Kinzie. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] Mrs. Kinzie's story of Michigan frontier life of fifty years ago has numerous merits, but brevity is surely not one of them. Seven hundred pages which could easily be "boiled down" to three hundred might be, as Macaulay would say, light reading for Hilpa and Shallum, but not for creatures who have only three-score years and ten. The story is worthy of condensation.

A Border Shepherdess. A Romance of Eskdale. By Amelia E. Barr. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.] This is another of the strong, picturesque, and wholesome stories so characteristic of Mrs. Barr that we always feel sure of finding the qualities represented by these adjectives when we open a new book from her pen. She has rare skill in her portraits of such women as the Faith Harriber of this romance: we have met her kind in previous books by this author, but are none the less ready to welcome another of a nature so sweet and sincere, of such integrity and such strength in her adherence to what she feels to be right and true, although in the present case it leads to heart-sickness and disappointment. It is too bad in Mrs. Barr to have defrauded Faith of her love, when it was possible to have carried out the heroic purpose without doing so. Other fine characters are those of the two nephews and the old servant, Phemie. Equally successful when she tries her hand at landscape and interiors, she has given us more of those hill and moorland pictures which gave a charm to "Sandal Side," and many glimpses into the cosy "house-place," with its oaken rafters "full of goodly hams, and flitches, and of bunches of sweet herbs," whose very atmosphere had the peace and warmth and comfort of a home to rest in.

A Speculator in Petticoats. By Hector Malot. Tr. by Mary Neal Sherwood. [T. B. Peterson & Bros. 75c.] This is a story of the wife of a Parisian banker who indulges in a number of shameless intrigues to obtain the luxury that her soul covets. Her husband is an upright and devoted man, whom she hoodwinks by representing that the gifts of her lovers were acquired by her own successful speculations on the bourse. She is a beautiful vampire and continues to the end unrepentant and unconscious of wrong—altogether a most impossible character. The translation has a commercial flavor.

The Rose of Paradise. By Howard Pyle. Illus. [Harper & Brothers. $1.25.] Mr. Howard Pyle's studies of pirates and piracy, of which we have had some historical fruits in recent numbers of Harper's Magazine, are here turned to the account of romance in a lively tale, the scene of which is laid in the Mozambique Channel, a hundred and fifty years ago. The "Rose of Paradise" was a wondrous jewel, a ruby, valued at three hundred thousand pounds (a pretty stiff price even for a large ruby), which had been intrusted by an agent of the East India Company, on the island of Juanna, to one Captain Mackra of the "Cassandra," to be conveyed to the Governor of Bombay. The capture of the "Cassandra" and its precious gem by Captain Edward England, a notorious freebooter, and his gang, and the subsequent peaceable recovery of the stone by Captain Mackra, are the themes of Mr. Pyle's story. The author has met with a fair degree of success in catching the literary style of the time in which the narrative professes to be written, for it is autobiographic in form; but the inherent improbabilities of its plan detract from its constructive merit. It is extremely improbable, for example, that a man escaped from a gang of pirates would venture back among them as did Captain Mackra, or that he would preserve his life in doing so, or that on recovering his stolen dispatch box so easily he would take it for granted that the immensely valuable stone which it had contained remained in it undisturbed, or that Captain England should at last voluntarily have given it up to its lawful custodian. In such points as these the story is weak, but it is readable in its way, and lovers of such literature as Stevenson's Kidnapped and Treasure Island, of which it is an imitation in manner, may get entertainment out of it without any worse drawbacks than encountering some bad profaneness.

Jack the Fisherman. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Illustrated by C. W. Reed. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 50c.] This is not a child's story, though thoughtful children will read it with interest. Its moral, however, is for their elders, and it is sadly told. It is not written in a hysteric mood, like The Gates Between, and is in no way to be compared with that larger and broader work. It is a sketch, rather, for half an hour's reading. There was trouble between Jack and his wife, trouble born of misunderstanding and jealousy, aggravated by drink and ending in death and suicide. The story of it all is told with effective simulation of reality and in the rough, strong style of its materials, which Miss Phelps knows so well how to use; with many affecting touches, too, that will draw from some eyes a tear.

The Revolution in Tanner's Lane. By Mark Rutherford. Edited by his friend, Reuben Shapcott. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25.] Appreciative readers of that remarkable book, The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford, which appeared a couple of years ago, will need but the mention of this new novel by the same writer to induce them to purchase it. Neither Mark Rutherford nor his friend Mr. Shapcott appears here, but the story is of the same grim, unpromising sort. It reads like a transcript from the sternest reality, and we are not surprised that Mr. Howells should recommend it. Zachariah Coleman, a London printer of Calvinistic faith, takes part in the incipient republicanism of England in the distrustful days that followed the Napoleonic wars. By contact with his fellow-conspirators of a free-thinking town, his sympathies are widened while he still remains a faithful church member. But his shallow and small-natured wife cannot go with him. This ill-assorted marriage is the main theme of the first part of the story. After the pathetic march of the "Blanketeers," for taking part in which against his judgment Coleman is imprisoned for two years, the scene is shifted forward twenty years. A new set of characters, belonging to the Independent Church of Cowfold village, fifty miles north of London, come upon the stage, but slightly connected with those of the first part of the book. With a powerful touch, not free from cynicism, the author sets before us the contracted life of the people of Cowfold, with their narrow horizons, intellectual, social, and religious. In this part of the story, too, there is a central unhappy marriage of a thoughtful tradesman to the silly daughter of Rev. John Broad, the minister of Tanner's Lane. The revolution is a church revolution which results in the overthrow of the gross ministerial hypocrite. This is no romance of love and wedded bliss in the last chapter, but a moving tale of "martyrs without a cause" (the saddest sort), of visitation upon the good and true for the sins of others, a record drawn from "a world of incompleteness, sorrow swift, and consolation laggard," which the light-minded will shun, the cheerful dismiss with a sigh, and which others will read with the same mingled feelings with which they face the spectacle of life itself, in which romance plays so small a part, and where the best solution reaches us as it reached Maggie Fulliver in the Mill on the Floss, and George Allen in this novel, from the Imitation: He to whom the Eternal Word speaketh is delivered from a world of unnecessary conceptions.

A Puritan Lover. By Mrs. Laura C. S. Fessenden. [Rand, McNally & Co. 25c.] The scene of this story is laid at the settlement of West Haven in colonial days. Here dwelt Abner Joiner, a substantial citizen and a doer of good works, with his daughter Faith, a beautiful, high-spirited girl. Faith is loved by Penuel Morton, the parson's son, but his courtship is interrupted by the advent of a mysterious stranger, Adrienne, whose presence at the house of Abner Joiner is accounted a scandal by the local gossips. Moreover the machinations of the villainous man-of-all-work, Adam Apple, are for a time successful in arousing the jealousy and suspicion of Penuel and the wrath of the villagers. The evolution of the mystery involves the death of Adrienne, the discovery of a young English nobleman in hiding, the vindication of the fair name of Abner Joiner, and the final union of Penuel and Faith. The author has succeeded in giving a certain versimilitude to the tale, and her characters, if overdrawn at times, are not of the stereotyped sort.

Thekla: A Story of Viennese Musical Life. By William Armstrong. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] Thekla is a peasant girl of Bavaria, with a marvelous voice. She is sent to Vienna to study by her miserly father, who hopes one day to win a fortune from her prospective career as an opera singer. From the time of her first appearance in public her success is great; she becomes the intimate friend of the Princess Weissenberg and is loved by Count Larisch, but refuses to forsake her career to become his wife, because she feels bound to make good her father's demands. At a critical moment, however, she inherits a large estate, the half of which she makes over to her father, after which she marries the Count. The story is pleasantly written and has some humor in the portrayal of the minor characters. The descriptions of musical performances are admirably done and the wooing of Thekla is made a charming idyl.

MINOR NOTICES.

Sundays at Balmoral.

Sundays at Balmoral. Sermons preached before her Majesty the Queen in Scotland. By the late Very Rev. John Tullock, D.D., LL.D. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25.]

Balmoral is the summer residence of Queen Victoria in the Scottish highlands; an estate of over 100,000 acres, including a deer park of 30,000, much romantic scenery, and a castle planted on a natural platform, 900 feet above the sea, which is about forty miles away. The late Dr. John Tullock, senior principal in the University of St. Andrews, and one of her Majesty's chaplains in Scotland, here preached to the Queen on occasions of her residence. Twelve sermons so preached are collected by the author's son in this volume. A portrait of the author prefaces the collection; showing a robust figure seated sidewise in a chair, the massive head turned this way over the left shoulder, the physiognomy that of a sturdy, uncompromising Scotchman, the forehead high and protuberant, the hair brushed back as by the wind, and both hair and heavy whiskers white with but a touch of gray. The sermons of such a preacher to such a royal auditor have interest apart from any intrinsic qualities. Apart from these external associations they are not remarkable. Much of their effect would depend upon their delivery. They are spiritual sermons, addressed to the religious nature, strong, simple, granitic in their texture, almost destitute of illustration, very plain, enlivened with reference to passing events, outspoken in their Presbyterian views of theology and polity, liberal in spirit, and tender in their handling of sacred feelings and personal sorrows. There is a hearty Scotch grip about them betokening a sincerity of faith and genuineness of experience behind them. One on "Christian Agnosticism" marks out the limits of religious knowledge. One on "The Ideal of the Church" spiritualizes the Body of Christ out of all form. One on "Christ and the Higher Nature" the Queen particularly liked, and is printed from a copy she had of it. Dr. Tullock was an edifying preacher to listen to, but hard to read in manuscript; it took four of his friends to aid his son in deciphering his handwriting so as to prepare it for the press.

Mr. Morris's Claverhouse.

Claverhouse. By Mowbray Morris. (English Worthies.) [D. Appleton & Co. 75c.]

It strikes us as a little singular to find John Graham of Claverhouse figuring among an exalted company of "English Worthies" side by side with Latimer, Drake, Wellington, Steele, and Raleigh. Of no man in history can it more truly be said:

Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it.

Although later biographers have sought to make the best of his career, he does not rank with those whom the world delights to honor. Macaulay's portrait may have been, as Mr. Morris says it was, too darkly colored, but in the main outlines it still stands as substantially correct. Mr. Morris tells the somewhat tedious story of plot and counterplot, robbery, torture, and assassination, that make up the substance of the times, with a good deal of clearness and perspicacity. The part he assigns to Claverhouse is that of a devoted royalist, "in his own way as much a fanatic as the men whom he was empowered to crush."

He was no capricious and unlicensed oppressor of a God-fearing and inoffensive peasantry, but a soldier waging war against a turbulent population carrying arms and willing to use them. . . . I have not tried to find excuses for the men whose orders Claverhouse obeyed, nor arguments to show that in the circumstances such orders were inevitable. But I have tried to show that in no single instance, of which the record is complete, did he go beyond the record of his commission, and that in more than one instance he construed its spirit with a mildness for which he has never yet been given credit. (pp. 133-4.)

This passage gives the tenor of Mr. Morris's volume. The author depicts Claverhouse as the product of his age, and as one who, judged by the manners of his time, was not "cruel by nature nor careless of human life." The argument is, to a certain extent, reasonable, and yet when all is said in its favor there remains a residue of doubt which no amount of ingenious inference can wholly clear away.

The Children of Silence.

The Children of Silence; or, The Story of the Deaf. By J. A. Seiss. [Porter & Coates. $1.00.]

Contents.

The Blind and Deaf.—Who are Deaf Mutes?—Are the Deaf Numerous?—The Causes of Deafness.—Causes of Congenital Deafness.—Causes of Adventitious Deafness.—The Sad Condition of the Deaf.—What can be Done for the Deaf?—Early Efforts in Behalf of the Deaf.—Modern Institutions.—Table of Institutions in the World.—Synopsis of the Whole.

The deaf and dumb are a world by themselves. The total number in the United States, as ascertained by the last census, is about 34,000, or nearly one to every 1,400 inhabitants. Canada reports about 4,000, Great Britain 20,000. Returns from other European countries are neither recent nor complete. In fact statistics on the subject are hard to get, and only of late years have been got hold of at all. Such as are accessible Dr. Seiss presents in this book. Among the causes of congenital deafness the intermarriage of relatives is most effective; for example, in 59 cases of deafness reported by the Illinois asylum in 1873, the parents of 42 were first cousins. Hereditary considerations are also active in transmitting the infirmity, and a chapter of curious information in Dr. Seiss's book is that entitled "Impressions on Mothers," which traces the unhappy effects of pre-natal influence in a great number of cases. After these studies of the facts and figures and a gentle flow of sympathy for the unfortunate, the author reviews systems of cure and instruction. Congenital deafness seldom can be cured, but methods of alleviating the misfortune are sufficiently old and varied to have a history, which is traced with some detail. The names of Bonet, de Carion, Braidwood, Watson, and Gallaudet are the landmarks. Dr. Seiss registers 375 institutions for the deaf and dumb, with 25,797 pupils and 2,197 teachers, confined entirely to Christian nations.

The Leading Facts of English History.

The Leading Facts of English History. By D. H. Montgomery. Revised edition. [Ginn & Co.]

The United States in their social and political relations are so distinctly indebted to England that we always think of her as the mother country. Our inheritance in the civilization of the ages comes through her; and a knowledge of her history is, therefore, almost a necessary prerequisite to an understanding of our own. An intelligent fulfillment of political duties requires in the American citizen a knowledge of English history. Mr. Montgomery has given, under the modest title of The Leading Facts of English History, an excellent introduction to a more thorough study; containing not only the leading facts, but statements of what, in the author's judgment, were the causes through which one fact led to another. His view is not confined merely to political changes and to wars; he gives the reader interesting glimpses, also, of the changes in domestic life, manners, religion, art, science, literature, in each period of English history, from the times which antedate history down to the current year. The wholesome tone of impartial yet kindly judgment with which he surveys all the actors in the great drama in review before him will in itself be a valuable element in the book for the use of young people. At the end of the volume there is a full index; also a genealogical table of the sovereigns, and an extensive list of the dates of events. On one point only would we take issue with our author; he seems to us greatly to overestimate and overstate the position of the theory of evolution when he says that it has "virtually established the belief that all material forms, whether living or not, obey an equally universal law of development;" and in his list of dates marks the publication of The Origin of Species and Herbert Spencer's First Principles with a star, as "most important dates." Let us wait and see. Those who remember the laureate wreaths entwined by Cowper and other English poets for the grandfather Erasmus will not be over-confident of the amaranthine quality of those entwined about the bust of the grandson Charles Darwin.

The Light of the Ages. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] With this volume the Rev. Mr. Haweis completes his series on "Christ and Christianity." The volume, which is fifth in order of publication, is really first in order of thought, and takes its place in the series accordingly. It is in fact and effect a sketch of oriental religions as preliminary to the study of the Christian Religion. Mr. Haweis has the broadest possible mind and the most vigorous possible speech. He is an image-breaker indeed.

The old text-books are dead.

The old ecclesiastical theory of Church government seems going the same way as the old ecclesiastical theory of salvation.

In Religion as in Literature, Art, and everything else, we have to look for the survival of the fittest.

Jesus is the central religious Figure of the human race.

Christianity is not an isolated phenomenon.

In every religion there is something sacred.

Historically, Christianity is an offshoot of Judaism, as Buddhism was of Brahmanism, or as Mohametanism was of Christianity.

Mr. Haweis is always readable, but too impetuous for the greatest safety. They who ride with him need not be surprised to be run away with, while indisputably they will travel fast and see a good deal of the country. For sober information we should much prefer James Freeman Clarke's Ten Great Religions, but Mr. Haweis's book will interest some minds whom Dr. Clarke's will not.

Federal Taxes and State Expenses. By William H. Jones. [Questions of the Day, No. XXXIX. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00.] Mr. Jones, who writes from Fort Wayne, Indiana, contends here that the Federal Government should distribute among the State governments for the payment of State expenses the proceeds of excise taxes on spirits and tobacco. The constitutional argument by which he sustains this surprising proposal would make the hair of the authors of the Federalist stand on end. Their system of checks and balances is utterly overthrown by an exegesis which an allegorist of the Alexandrian school might envy. We might exhort Mr. Jones to a careful study of the effects of the division of the surplus under Jackson, as Mr. Schurz has recently narrated them in his biography of Clay; but we fear it would have as little effect on him as his constitutional argument would have upon a Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

Eminent Americans. By Penson J. Lossing. Illus. [John B. Alden.] This book is something of a descent, both in matter and manner, from the former and inspiring works which have made its author's name familiar and famous. In 514 large 16mo pages are collected about 400 brief biographies—very brief, it will be seen—of statesmen, orators, literarians, inventors, artists, philanthropists, and others who have helped to make American history. The author's statements are not always exact and not always careful, though they embody a great amount of biographical information; we cannot vouch for the book as absolutely accurate and trustworthy. It is not a new work, but runs back through a succession of copyrights as far as 1855. A few additions of recently ended lives have been made to the present edition.

Letters from Heaven. Translated from the fourth German edition. [Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00.] The cover of this volume indicates well the character of its contents. A cherub of remarkable proportions is represented as showering down from a cloud a number of letters, all duly inclosed in envelopes and sealed. The same inconsistencies which this design denotes appear throughout the work in its attempt to describe the unknown future of the blessed. The writer, for instance, retains her gray hair in heaven, "for the soul wears the appearance of the body," and "each soul wears the form in which its body appeared at death." But how this theory is reconciled with infirmity and disease resulting in death does not appear. Heaven would seem to many very undesirable if they were obliged to wear their old bodies, or the appearance of them, to all eternity! Again, in heaven, it appears there are no contrasts, and yet earthly happiness is conditioned by the changes and variations of our lot. The mere assertion, then, of the invariability of our future does not make such unchangeableness either reasonable or desirable. The book, in fact, is the product of a very conventional piety, and a free play of thought over the possibilities of the blessed state is conspicuous for its absence. The theology of the letters may be inferred from the way in which the question if any heathen are saved is dodged. The writer falls back upon the monstrous saying that the virtues of the heathen were only splendid vices, and informs us at the end of the book that she no longer feels any compassion for the lost! We greatly prefer the poems of an earthly Whittier to supposititious letters from heaven written in such an inhuman spirit.

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By W. A. Anthony and C. F. Brackett. Third Edition, revised and enlarged. [John Wiley & Sons.] Professors Anthony and Brackett have compressed into this volume much more than is usually found in elementary books; but the compression has been effected without any sacrifice of clearness. The fundamental truths of mechanics, heat, magnetism, and electricity, sound and light, are set forth in a remarkably clear and intelligible manner, and restated in mathematical formulæ and demonstrations so far as possible without the use of the higher calculus. The value of the book is increased by a good index, and by twenty-four tables of selected constants.

The Principles of Elocution. By Alexander Melville Bell. Fifth Edition, revised and enlarged. [Washington: John C. Parker; New York: Edgar S. Werner; Boston: James P. Burbank.] Those who have heard Professor Bell's public readings from Shakespeare have been delighted with the perfect concealment of art in a perfect sympathy with the characters of the play. A hearer who knew nothing of the reputation of the reader would simply be delighted with the play which he was reading. But one who knew that the reader was a celebrated teacher of elocution, who had for years given instruction in that art, would wonder at the perfect naturalness of his reading, at the entire absence of anything affected, precise, or formal. The truth is that with him the most perfect art has become a part of his very nature; and his articulation, pronunciation, emphasis, intonation, and gesture are all perfect, because he cannot help it. Obedience to true principles has made him free from all fetters of rule. Whether his Principles of Elocution, now issued in a fifth edition, can lead a student to the same triumph over obstacles, to the same attainment of artistic perfection, will depend much more upon the talent, industry, and perseverance of the student than upon Professor Bell. If any book whatever can be of use in teaching a man how to utter, audibly and with expressiveness, thoughts framed in words, this is the book.

Half-Hours with American History. Selected and Arranged by Charles Morris. [J. B. Lippincott Co. 2 vols. $3.00.] In the course of the thousand pages of these two volumes we have about one hundred selections from the best historians. The period covered by the whole extends from pre-historic times to the present day. In addition to the brief notes necessary for an introduction and explanation of each selection Mr. Morris has given four or five essays of his own in relation to events and periods concerning which he found no fitting passage in standard authors. The two volumes make an excellent condensed library of the history of the United States.

Elementary Psychology and Education. By Joseph Baldwin. [D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.] One would not expect a volume on Psychology and Education from Texas; but W. T. Harris looks with a keen eye in every direction for gems to set in his "International Education Series." He has found one of great value in this elementary treatise by Professor Baldwin; of value especially to younger students in normal schools and reading circles, and among the teachers of public and private schools. The volume is one eminently adapted to stimulate higher thought, and to lead from absorption in the letter of the book of nature to an appreciation of the deeper spirit and meaning of the world of appearances, as a reflex and expression of the world of realities.

The Life and Times of John Jay. By William Whitelock. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.75.] In this volume of 350 pages Mr. Whitelock has produced a summary of the history of the United States from the promulgation of the stamp act to the election of Jefferson. The material is drawn from good authorities, apparently, and the narrative, although dry and colorless, is trustworthy, and for that reason serviceable. But if the first two and last two chapters had been omitted, and the book printed with a different title, a very careful reading would have been required to detect in it a life of Jay. The fact is that Mr. Whitelock's idea of biography is all wrong. He thinks that "they would fail who should attempt to give to the world a view of the inner emotional life of such men as John Jay and George Washington." But the truth is that they who attempt this and they alone are sure of success. We are not contented with a mere objective record of political events and an enumeration of the parts publicly played by the men who took part in them. We want to know of Jay, for instance, not only what public papers he prepared as member of the Continental Congress, or how he conducted himself as Minister to Spain, as a negotiator of treaties, as secretary of foreign affairs, chief justice, or governor of New York—but also what sort of a man he was in private life, who were his friends and enemies, what were his guiding principles of conduct; in a word, we want flesh and blood and not a wooden image. Mr. Whitelock, in his estimate of Jay's character, confines himself to a few generalities. He is right in asserting the importance of the historical background, but his narrative is all background, and his principal figure is kept in a vague and uncertain light. A really good life of Jay is much needed; it is a pity that Mr. Whitelock has not better availed himself of his opportunity.

The Russian Novelists. By E. M. de Vogüé. Tr. by Jane Loring Edmands. [D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.] Those who wish to pursue the study of modern Russian fiction and to trace its evolution will welcome M. de Vogüé's book, now so admirably translated. M. de Vogüé is more philosophical than M. Dupuy, whose review of the Russian Masters we commended as an excellent introductory work. M. de Vogüé has the faculty of analysis, he is a trained critic, he examines the relations of things, he formulates theories and justifies them by careful demonstration. In the novels of Gogol, Turgenev, Dostoyevski, and Tolstoi, he looks for the elements of the Russian national character. Realism, as practiced by the Russian novelists, he finds to be the manifestation of an intense sympathy for human nature—the expression of a spirit akin to that of Buddhism in its efforts toward the extension of evangelical charity. And in fostering the growth of this spirit Gogol is seen bringing his terrible irony to bear upon popular abuses, Turgenev revealing with the impartiality of an artist the sources of good and evil, Dostoyevski proclaiming a morbid religion of endurance, and Tolstoi, the Nihilist and the mystic, appearing at length as the apostle of a new faith. One need not wholly agree with these views to recognize their value; certainly no one can follow M. de Vogüé without deriving benefit from his candid and apposite illustrations. He is without narrow prejudices and his opinions are derived directly from the subjects in hand. He enters fully into sympathy with the aims of the writers whose productions he studies, and his expositions are as clear and ample as his criticisms are reasonable and convincing. At the close of the volume is printed a list of English translations from the Russian.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Bacon and Shakespeare. A correspondent in Janesville, Wisconsin, writes as follows under date of Sept. 5, 1887:

In a recent conversation a prominent bookseller of this State asserted that nearly all the prominent Shakespearean scholars of late years, including Hudson and Rolfe, had accepted or were strongly inclined to accept the Baconian authorship of the plays. I did not suppose this to be true, nor that any considerable number of scholars accepted this theory. Can you give the exact facts in the case in a brief note in the Literary World?

The exact facts in the case, so far as we understand them, are that not a single Shakespeare scholar or critic of any note anywhere in the world accepts or is at all inclined to accept the Baconian theory. The late Dr. Hudson did not consider the theory worthy of any elaborate refutation, but disposed of it in three or four characteristically vigorous sentences, which were long ago reprinted in these columns with our hearty endorsement.

Another Western correspondent asks our opinion of the Donnelly cipher, which just now is getting a deal of gratuitous advertising in the newspapers, not excepting the World, which printed a fortnight ago the full table of contents of the forthcoming book on the subject. When that book is published "the great cryptogram" can be intelligently criticised—that is, if the discoverer gives us a full description of it. For ourselves, we do not expect that it will bear the ordeal of criticism; and for Bacon's sake we hope it will not. That he should have written the plays is simply impossible, and we do not like to think that he could have entered into a conspiracy with the editors and printers of the folio of 1623 to rob the dead dramatist of his laurels. The "meanest of mankind" was perhaps not incapable of doing this, but we shall nevertheless be sorry to have Mr. Donnelly convict him of it.

Two New Volumes of the "Mermaid Series." During our summer vacation two volumes of the "Mermaid Series" have come out—one devoted to Congreve, and the other to Beaumont and Fletcher. The former is edited by Mr. A. C. Ewald, F.S.A., and is prefaced with Macaulay's brilliant account of the dramatist's career. The plays selected are The Old Bachelor, The Double-Dealer, Love for Love, The Way of the World, and The Mourning Bride. The other volume is one of two to be devoted to Beaumont and Fletcher, edited, with an introduction and notes, by Mr. J. St. Loe Strachey. It includes The Maid's Tragedy, Philaster, The Wild-Goose Chase, Thierry and Theodoret, and The Knight of the Burning Pestle. All the plays are given without expurgation, according to the plan of the series. The notes are few and brief, but to the point, and the work in all respects sustains the high opinion we have before expressed of the series, which is as cheap as it is good, the volumes being sold in England for half a crown (62 cents) each. They could hardly be got up here for double the money. The publishers are Vizetelly & Co. of London, but the books may be obtained here of Scribner & Welford, New York, and other importing houses.

Mr. Clarence S. Ward's "Wit, Wisdom, and Beauties of Shakespeare." In a neat little volume of about two hundred pages, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. ($1.25), Mr. Ward has attempted to give "all the passages, long or short, which are of especial significance or distinguished by any inherent excellence—those which a speaker or writer might employ to lend grace or vigor to his theme." Whether all such passages could be packed into a book of the size may well be questioned; but Mr. Ward's selection, so far as it goes, is very good. The Tempest, with which he begins, is briefly and inadequately treated, getting only two pages to four for the Two Gentlemen of Verona, and omitting certain familiar passages better than some that are given; but he improves as he goes on.

We note but few misprints, and these are mostly in punctuation. In the Song from Cymbeline, ii. 3 (p. 186) the measure of the second line, "And Phœbus gins arise," is spoiled by the omission of the And. Occasionally a passage suffers from being cut down too much, and in one instance at least becomes nonsensical. Gonzalo's speech in Tempest, ii. 1. 16, is given thus:

When every grief that's entertain'd, that's offer'd,
Comes to the entertainer.

In the original, as the reader is aware, the speech is interrupted by Sebastian, who exclaims "A dollar;" whereupon Gonzalo retorts: "Dolour comes to him indeed; you have spoken truer than you purposed." There is wit and point in this, but what can we make of Gonzalo's former speech, printed by itself as if complete? Mr. Ward should strike it out of the next edition; and if he wants two lines to fill the space let him insert Prospero's question from i. 2. 49:

What seest thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?

which would come in properly a little above on the same page.

Matters at Stratford-on-Avon. We spent a day at Stratford this summer, and were glad to find the scaffolding which filled the old church a year ago cleared away, and the noble interior restored to something like its pristine beauty and impressiveness. The effect surpassed our highest expectations. The modern galleries in the side aisles were always an eyesore, but we did not realize how much they had marred the edifice until they had been removed. Further improvements are to be made as soon as the requisite funds are secured. The most important is the rebuilding of the old vestry which was demolished in the last century, since which time the south transept has been partially walled off as a vestry. The north transept is blocked by the organ, which will be removed when the other transept is cleared.

A recent description of the church refers to the fact that the chancel is not exactly in line with the nave, but inclines to the north; and the writer adds: "Various fanciful reasons are given for this, but it is probably only the result of being built at different times." The old builders could hardly have been so careless as this implies; and besides, this peculiarity in the alignment of the chancel or choir is found in many other ancient gothic churches. There must have been a design in it, and the theory that it was suggested by the inclination of the Saviour's head to one side when dying on the cross is as plausible as any.

At the Shakespeare Memorial we had a pleasant chat with Mr. Hawley, the librarian, and were gratified to learn that contributions of books are already beginning to come in from American as well as English publishers, in response to the appeal made some months ago. It is desirable, however, that the needs of the library should be kept before the public; and we would again remind publishers, authors, and lovers of Shakespeare generally, that copies of all books, pamphlets, and other printed matter pertaining to the dramatist or his contemporaries, will be gratefully received at the library. They should be addressed to Mr. F. Hawley, Librarian of Shakespeare Memorial, Stratford-on-Avon, England.

Our readers have just seen in the daily papers the full accounts of the dedication of the Shakespeare Memorial Fountain, presented to the town of Stratford by Mr. G. W. Childs of Philadelphia. When we were in Stratford the structure was in process of erection, but one could get some idea of its size and beauty through the scaffolding that surrounded it. The cut in the last number of Harper's Weekly may serve to show its general style, but is too small to do justice to the decorative details, which promised to be very appropriate and effective. The location is at some distance from the other Shakespeare monuments—the birth-place, New Place, the church, and the Memorial—but it is in the largest open space in the town, and on the whole as good as could have been chosen.

PERIODICALS.

The Atlantic for November opens with a delightful review of Mrs. Susan Lesley's Recollections of My Mother, by Harriet Waters Preston, who extracts the cream of that memorable book and adds reflections of her own, touching the primitive homes of New England and the pieties of the hearth. Mr. Hamerton, in his sixth paper on "French and English," examines the drinking habits of both nations and shows once more the futility of drawing up an indictment against a whole people. Mr. Hamerton resents the charge of wholesale immorality brought against the French on account of the depraved condition of their literature. "Works of fiction are not made to paint the world as it is, but only to sell, and it is found that the most exciting incidents sell best. . . . The plain truth is that people whose lives are rather monotonous like to read about anything that gives new sensations; and as vice is at least different from virtue, and in itself more changeful, it seems to supply the want." This, it seems to us, is begging the whole question. Immoral fiction must have its effect upon minds that habitually feed upon it: shall a man touch pitch and not be defiled? Percival Lowell continues his study of "The Soul of the Far East," this time in relation to art. Helen Thompson describes the work of the Red Cross societies; John Fiske brings his historical review of the origins of the United States down to the adoption of the Constitution; then Hon. S. G. W. Benjamin brings out some historic points at Fort George Island, Florida, that have hitherto escaped the attention of historians; and there is an anonymous review of "Girl Novelists of the Time," dealing with Wuthering Heights, Love's Martyr, and The Story of an African Farm—a curious similarity of methods being traced in all three.

The November Harper's opens with an enticing account of "A Santa Barbara Holiday," by Edward Roberts; W. E. Curtis takes us to "The Other End of the Hemisphere," and reveals the wonderful material prosperity of the Argentine Republic; and Mrs. R. H. Davis continues her account of the Louisiana Acadians—these articles are exquisitely illustrated, as is also Theodore Child's account of Chantilly and its treasures recently deeded to the French nation by the Duc d'Aumale. A very useful summary of trustworthy information regarding the winter climate resorts of three continents is given by W. S. Brown. Mr. Howells brings Dan and Alice together finally and ends his "April Hopes." Miss O'Meara's "Narka" is also ended. Rev. C. F. Thwing induces studious reflection by his presentation of the case of "The Young Criminal," and the possible evil effects of association in reform schools. Miss Amélie Rives continues her interesting essays in antiquarian fiction with "The Story of Arnou."

The American Magazine for November begins its seventh volume with a new and tasteful cover designed by G. R. Halm. The number opens with an illustrated account of an ascent of Mount Tacoma by Dr. C. D. Hendrickson; Gen. Lucius Fairchild explains the organization and charitable objects of the G. A. R.; and P. D. Nott writes picturesquely of the ruined iron furnaces of Pennsylvania. Mrs. A. S. Richardson has a suggestive article on the christening of America and the part played in that event by Vespucci, who, it seems, owes his fame to a group of enthusiasts and was himself ignorant of the use of his name as a designation for half the globe. Maurice Thompson has a biographical sketch of Paul Hayne, of whom he writes with appreciation.

In Lippincott's for November Miss Virginia W. Johnson supplies the complete novel, "The Terra-Cotta Bust." Dr. Felix L. Oswald gives an account of "A Modern Spartacus," the Mexican bandit Eracles Bernal, a sort of devout and superstitious Robin Hood. Walt Whitman contributes four reflective paragraphs under the title of "November Boughs." An interesting article is "The School-boy as a Microcosm," by John Johnson, Jr., who describes the gradual development of ideas of property and its division, protection, and apportionment, among the boys of a frontier settlement, deriving therefrom conclusions antagonistic to those of Henry George.

Macmillan's for October has to a high degree the literary aroma characteristic of this periodical. William Greswell writes with sympathetic motives of Coleridge among the Quantock Hills, and W. L. Courtney reviews at length the works of M. Anatole France, who is extolled for his lucid reasonableness, his mellow humor, and his freedom from Gallic coarseness and indelicacy. There is a pleasant article on Homer as a botanist, the author indentifying nepenthes with opium and moly with garlic. A sort of postscript to a former contribution deals wittily once more with "The Profession of Letters," more especially in its relation to journalism. The "Notes of a Rambler" take us to the borderland between France and Germany and discuss types of the day. A. H. Paterson relates his experience "Across the Divide on a Buck-board;" and Goldwin Smith enters a plea on behalf of the Peelites, whom he pictures as the stern opposers of a cowardly and servile faction, and therefore not without protest to be pilloried as "public nuisances."

NEWS AND NOTES.

—C. W. Bardeen of Syracuse will republish The Orbis Pictus of John Amos Comenius, the Ozech. This first pictorial school book was published at Nuremberg in 1658, and its copper cuts, which will be reproduced in fac-simile, are quaint enough.

—We are indebted to Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons for the opportunity of examining a file of the early proofs of a forthcoming book from their press by Professor Mahaffy, on The Art of Conversation. The book is not a large one, but is as meaty as a nut. In its anatomy of the art and its directions for practice it is a most complete and suggestive little treatise. After the introduction on the pleasures of good talk, it reviews the physical and mental conditions of success therein, and then the moral conditions, among which latter are modesty, simplicity, reserve, and unselfishness; in fact, the author makes a great deal of the moral conditions, and discriminatingly so, remarking, for example, that there is such a thing in conversation as "being over-scrupulous in truthfulness." Wit and humor as the spice of conversation are considered in due turn, and then the book passes from the person conversing to the persons conversed with, and the latter are measured in quantity and quality. Cautions are suggested in the case of superiors and inferiors, and in conclusion there is brief advice as to topics. The book is pleasantly written, though after the reading of it the fact will remain, we suspect, that good conversers, like poets, are largely born and not made.

—Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, issue A Catalogue of Rare and Choice Books Relating to America, which enumerates an astonishing number of bibliographical treasures, many of them collected by the late Henry Stevens. A fine copy of the first edition of Anne Bradstreet's Tenth Muse (London, 1650) is priced at $200.00; twenty-four volumes of the Hulsius Collection of Voyages (Frankfort and Nuremberg, 1603-1649) are offered for $2,000.00; for Edward Johnson's History of New England (London, 1654, one vol. 4to.) the price is $112.00; a "fine, clean, large paper copy" of Mather's Magnalia Christi (London, 1702) is thought to be worth $100.00; $275.00 is asked for a copy of the original edition of Nathaniel Morton's New-England Memoriall (Cambridge, 1669); Hamor's True Discourse of the Present State of Virginia (London, 1615) may be had for $450.00; while he who would possess a copy of the 1627 edition of Captain John Smith's General Historie must pay $112.00 for the privilege.

—Mr. Charles Carleton Coffin has begun the preparation of a series of books giving a history of the late civil war. The first of these, entitled The Drum-Beat of the Nation, will be published immediately by Harper & Brothers, who have also in preparation Horse, Foot, and Dragoons, profusely illustrated sketches of army life in France, Germany, England, and the United States, by the military artist, Mr. R. F. Zogbaum; Blanche Willis Howard's story, Tony the Maid, illustrated by Reinhart; a History of the Negro Troops in the War of the Rebellion, by Colonel G. W. Williams; and The Wonder Clock, a book of fairy stories for children, by Howard Pyle.

—President Barnard of Columbia College has prepared for the Forum for November a sharp article on the Knights of Labor, in which he charges them with "blockading industry" and "attempting to coerce society."

—Henry James will contribute to the Atlantic Monthly for 1888 a serial story entitled "The Aspen Papers," and Mr. Edward H. House, who has spent many years in Japan, will contribute a serial story entitled "Yone Santo, Child of Japan."

—Ticknor & Co. publish this week their illustrated edition of Geraldine; Mr. W. J.

Rolfe's revised edition of The Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott; Juan and Juanita, a story of two little Texans, by Frances Courtenay Baylor; and A Flock of Girls, stories by Nora Perry.

— Cassell & Co. are to publish Dead Man's Rock, a romance of adventure which they think "will arouse the novel-reading world to a pitch of excitement not even reached by the publication of King Solomon's Mines." Recent interest in aquatic sports has led Cassell & Co. to bring out a new edition of their Yachts and Yachting.

— Those interested in modern yacht-building will find in the article on "The Viking Ship," in Scribner's for November, a number of illustrations from photographs and drawings which show, in detail, the method of constructing the remarkable boats of the ancient Vikings. A striking similarity to the best modern models is exhibited.

— J. B. Lippincott Co. are to issue The Sportsman's Paradise, an elaborate description of the lake lands of Canada, by Dr. B. A. Watson, illustrated by D. C. and H. Beard.

— Estes & Lauriat announce that they have in preparation for publication next year, Keats's poem "Endymion," profusely illustrated with photo-etchings and wood engravings, from paintings by W. St. John Harper, the artist, who has entire supervision of the work.

— The volume of Fairy Legends of the French Provinces, translated by Mrs. M. Carey, which T. Y. Crowell & Co. are to publish, was prepared under the supervision of Prof. J. F. Jameson of Johns Hopkins University.

— Dr. George P. Fisher has completed his History of the Christian Church, and the work will be published at once by the Scribners. The same house have nearly ready Sermons for Children, by Dean Stanley; The Modern Vikings, by H. H. Boyesen; an American Girl's Handy Book, by Lina and Adelia Beard; and the Essays of Robert Louis Stevenson in two volumes. Messrs. Scribner, by special arrangement with Mr. Stevenson, will be hereafter the authorized publishers of three of his books not till now on their list: The New Arabian Nights, The Dynamiter, and Familiar Studies of Men and Books.

— The November Book Buyer will contain a portrait and sketch of Augustine Birrell, the English writer, whose two volumes of essays, entitled Obiter Dicta, have aroused so much interest and curiosity.

— In the series of symposiums on "Questions in Theology and Life," which Thomas Whittaker is issuing, there will appear immediately two new additions. One deals with Evolution and the relation of that doctrine to various theological dogmas, and the other is on Non-Christian Religions and their relation to Christianity. Both volumes are contributed to by leading minds in the various religious bodies of Great Britain.

— Miss Marie A. Brown, who has given so much time and study to the subject of the Icelandic discovery of this continent, will present the facts in the case as she understands them, in a lecture at Tremont Temple this evening. Miss Brown has the approval of distinguished scholars on both sides the Atlantic in support of her opinion that Leif Erikson landed on the shores of New England in the year 1000 A. D., and her demonstration will undoubtedly be of great interest.

— Lee & Shepard announce Pre-Glacial Man and the Aryan Race, by Lorenzo Burge; Britons and Muscovites, by Curtis Guild; Educational Topics of the Day, by R. L. Klemm, Ph.D.; First Steps in the English Classics, by Albert F. Blaisdell, A.M.; Robert Collyer's Lectures to Young Men; and a new and revised edition of Henry Wood's Natural Law in the Business World.

— Roberts Brothers will publish Lotus and Jewel, and Other Poems, by Edwin Arnold. Their edition of Mr. Hamerton's The Sabine will be a beautiful book, with its 143 illustrations by Joseph Pennell and the author, the collaboration permitting of copyright in this country. Roberts Bros. have also nearly ready their holiday edition of Mr. Hale's In His Name, the illustrations being after drawings by G. P. Jacob-Hood, R.A. Roberts Bros. also promise a Calendrier Français for 1888.

— Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells's novel, Mis, Curtis, a story of Boston life, is to be published by Ticknor & Co., probably in November, together with Sobriquets and Nicknames, a manual of literary information, by Albert R. Frey of the Astor Library; and Music in the Eighteenth Century, by Henry M. Brooks.

— A new edition of Mr. Howells's Their Wedding Journey, with an additional chapter detailing reminiscences of later years, will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in November. The holiday edition of Mr. Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal, with a new portrait of Mr. Lowell and nine full-page India prints; the revised and extended edition of Mr. Stedman's Victorian Poets; Men and Letters, by Horace E. Scudder; Early and Late Poems of Alice and Phoebe Cary; Lyrics, Idyls, and Romances, selected from the poems of Robert Browning; and Hymns of the Faith, edited by George Harris, D.D., W. J. Tucker, D.D., and E. K. Glezen—all appear today.

— T. Y. Crowell & Co., who have a second edition of Miss Hapgood's translation of Les Mistralles on the press, will issue immediately The Boyhood of Living Authors, by W. H. Rideing, and Prudence Winterburn, a story for girls, by Sarah Dowdney.

— Seidel's Industrial Instruction, translated by Miss Margaret K. Smith of the Oswego (N. Y.) Normal School, is to be published by D. C. Heath & Co. in a few days. This book presents a philosophical exposition of the principles underlying the claims of hand labor to a place on the school programme.

— Mr. Kennan in his first paper in the series on "Siberia," printed in the November Century, protests against the use of the word "Nihilist," which, he says, the Russian government and the Russian conservative class have made the world accept as descriptive of all their opponents, from the "terrorists" to the law-abiding members of provincial assemblies who respectfully ask leave to petition the Crown for the redress of grievances. He states that the word was first introduced in Russia by Turgenev in his novel Fathers and Children, and was there used appropriately.

— On Saturday mornings in November and December Mr. John Fiske is to deliver a course of six lectures on "The Beginnings of New England" at the Old South Meeting House. The subjects of the several discourses will be "The Roman Idea and the English Idea," "The Puritan Exodus," "The Planting of New England,"

"The New England Confederacy," "King Philip's War," and "The Tyranny of Andros."

— The parlors of Cupples & Hurd at 94 Boylston Street, with white-painted wood in colonial style, wide fireplace, carpets, pictures, and spacious window-seats, are of a nature to entice all bookish persons to frequent visits. All the choice books of the day, and many of former days, are on the tables, and among them the firm's already dignified list of its own publications. In November Cupples & Hurd will issue Grilli's Children, translated from the German of Johanna Spyri, by Mrs. Louise Brooks, and Our Party of Four, another Boston novel, by Mrs. H. B. Goodwin.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Travel and Observation.

PADDY AT HOME. ("Chez Paddy.") By the Baron E. de Mandat-Grany. Tr. by A. P. Morton. Harper & Brothers. Paper, 20c.

THE ISLES OF THE PRINCES; or, The Pleasures of Prinkipo. By S. S. Cox. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75

THE HEART OF MERRIE ENGLAND. By the Rev. James S. Stone, D.D. Porter & Coates. $1.75

RECOLLECTIONS OF A MINISTER TO FRANCE. 1869-1877. By E. B. Washburne, LL.D. With Illustrations. 2 vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $8.00

Miscellaneous.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY. Edited by George Laurence Gomme. Romano-British Remains. Part II. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50

JOURNAL OF MORPHOLOGY. Edited by C. O. Whitman, with the Coöperation of Edward Phelps Allis, Jr. Vol. I. Sept., 1887. No. 1.

AN ESSAY ON THE SUBLIME AND BEAUTIFUL. By Edmund Burke. Cassell's National Library. Paper, 10c.

WIT, WISDOM, AND BEAUTIES OF SHAKESPEARE. Edited by Clarence Stuart Ward. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25

THE GOOD THINGS OF "LIFE." Fourth Series. Fredrick A. Stokes.

REMINISCENCES OF FRIEDRICH FROEBEL. By Baroness B. Von Marenholz-Bülow. Tr. by Mrs. Horace Mann. With a sketch of the life of Friedrich Froebel by Emily Shirreff. Lee & Shepard. $1.50

THE CHILDREN OF SILENCE; or, The Story of the Deaf. By Joseph A. Seiss, D.D. Porter & Coates. $1.00

ACTS AND ANECDOTES OF AUTHORS. Facts for Every Reader about Prominent American Books, Authors, and Publishers. English Books and Authors; Popular Translations, Dramas, Operas, etc. By Charles M. Barrows. New England Publishing Company. $1.50

ANY BOOK noticed or advertised in the LITERARY WORLD will be supplied, on receipt of price, by
Messrs. LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & CO.,
Booksellers and Importers, 121 Tremont Street,
BOSTON, MASS.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness, a person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers, with keys, at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.50.

Now ready, by the author of "German Simplified," and on the same plan,

Spanish Simplified.

To consist of 10 numbers. Nos. 1 and 2 were published October 15, 1887. A new number will appear on the first of every month, until completed. Price, 10 cents a number.

Both works are for sale by all booksellers; sent post-paid on receipt of price, by Prof. A. KNOFLACH, 160 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus free.

"I HAD AN AUNT THAT WAY,"
But she was cured by a box of

D K's.

DR. MARK E. WOODBURY'S
DYSPEPSIA KILLER
Cure Dyspepsia, Relieve Indigestion,
Remove All Stomach Troubles, and cost only 50 cents for a large box, or 25 cents for a trial box. Sold by all Druggists or mailed to any address on receipt of price by the Wholesale Agents, DOULTON & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street.

What the Critics say of Crowell's Illustrated Edition of Les Misérables.

"This translation of Victor Hugo's masterpiece is the best one that has been made."—N. Y. Observer.

"Can hardly fail to be accepted by critical authorities as the permanent standard."—Boston Traveller.

"Has been many times translated into English, but never has the work been done by so clever and faithful a translator as Miss Hapgood."—Albany Press.

"The most spirited rendering of Hugo's masterpiece into English, and the illustrations and the letterpress are just as deserving of praise."—Phila. Press.

"The translation will no doubt supersede all others."—Cin. Times-Star.

"The publishers have made this book very attractive. They are to be commended not only for the edition before us, but more especially for a popular edition which will make this great work accessible to a wider class of readers."—Boston Advertiser.

"Deserves the highest praise."—Nation.

"Miss Hapgood is sympathetic. She becomes one with her author. Her rendering of 'Les Misérables' has not been equaled. It will not be surpassed. The standard is here—is attained."—National Republican.

ASK YOUR BOOKSELLER FOR Crowell's Illustrated Edition of LES MISÉRABLES.

By VICTOR HUGO. Translated from the French by Isabel F. Hapgood. With 160 full-page illustrations, printed on fine calendered paper, and bound in neat and attractive style. 5 vols., cloth, gilt top, $7.50; half calf, $15.00. Popular edition in one volume, 12mo, $1.50.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,
13 Astor Place, - - - New York.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, HUNTS, W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila., 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauqua University, &c. Prospectus post free from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND
Lover needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to
R. C. HARTRANFT, 709 Sanson Street,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books.
Send for Catalogue of Americana.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUMFORD COAN, 110 East 58th Street, New York City.

SCHOOL OF EXPRESSION
Opens Oct. 6. Thorough training for Voice, Body and Mind. Literature studied through Expression. Authors' Recitals monthly. Courses for Speakers, Teachers, Professionals and for General Culture, 1 to 20 hours a week. Work adapted to individual needs. Degree of A. M. to A. B.'s. Courses of Lectures on Expression by the Dean opens Sept. 22. Send for catalogue, lecture tickets, or call for personal interview 10 to 1.
S. S. O'NEIL, Ph. D.,
Freeman Place, 15½ Beacon Street, Boston.

Patented January 2nd, 1877.

Granville Mosaic Floors
Have never failed to give satisfaction. Tested eight years. Lately improved whereby laying is made simple and inexpensive. Adapted equally to old floors or new houses. Positive but hidden fastening. Shrinkage practically overcome. Send plan of room and have floor made to a design prepared expressly for it. Ask for information.
O. S. Dickinson, Granville, Mass.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate (Showing Curtain drawn).

Design Copyrighted, Grate Pat'd Aug. 17, 1886.

The Curtain Grate, with Weaver's patent Shaking and Dumping attachment is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Kept by all first-class dealers.
SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY
MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
18 Beacon Street, Boston.

Horsford's ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. F. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Bumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

THE HUB HEATER ART STOVE.

Made in three sizes — Nos. 20, 30, and 40, adapting it for small or large parlors.

The Hub Heater is a new creation, embodying the latest and best-known improvements, combined with the artistic features that make it worthy a place amid the most elaborate parlor surroundings. Its ornamentation is in exquisite taste, and shows how so common-place an article as a stove may be made artistic as well as useful. It is a powerful heater, and any size of it will warm as much space as the next larger size of any other stove made.

By our double walled ash pit, the cold air, which would otherwise remain at the bottom of the room, is drawn through the base of the stove and heated. This imparts a circulation to the air in the room, and secures an important sanitary result.

The Hub Heater is sold by all dealers throughout the country.

We shall be pleased to send descriptive circulars on application, together with prices, and name of nearest dealer selling the stove.

MANUFACTURED BY
Smith & Anthony Stove Co
SALESROOM,
52 & 54 Union Street, Boston.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

ORIGINAL
ACCIDENT
COMPANY
OF AMERICA.

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES covering injuries received
ACCIDENT TICKETS, in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.
RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

NEW BOOKS.

Lulu's Library. Vol. II.

A Collection of Stories. By LOUISA M. ALCOCK. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. Uniform with Vol. I. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

In His Name.

A Story of the Waldenses, Seven Hundred Years Ago. By EDWARD E. HALE. A new holiday edition, with 129 illustrations by G. F. Jacomb-Hood, R. A. Square 12mo, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

"In His Name" is the most artistic story Mr. Hale has ever written. It reads like an old troubadour song. — Helen Jackson ("H. H.").

Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life.

By GEORGE MEREDITH, author of "Richard Feverel," "Diana of the Crossways," etc. 1 vol., crown 8vo, $1.50.

Some of Our Fellows.

A School Story. By the Rev. T. S. MILLINGTON. With 16 illustrations. Square quarto, cloth, gilt edges, $2.00.

Heroic Ballads.

Selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours." A presentation edition, containing 21 illustrations, printed on fine calendered paper. Square 12mo, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

A Short History of the City of Philadelphia.

From the Foundation to the Present Time. By SUSAN COOLIDGE. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Madame de Stael.

By BELLA DUFFY. (Famous Women Series.) 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Helen Jackson's Complete Poems.

Including "Verses" and "Sonnets and Lyrics." In one volume, 16mo, cloth, $1.50; white cloth, gilt, $1.75.

Midsummer Night's Dream.

A new edition. With illustrations in silhouette, by PAUL KOREWKA. The book comprises the whole of Shakespeare's text, and is printed on heavy calendered paper, with red-line border. One superb royal octavo volume, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; full seal, padded, $5.00; new Venetian style, $5.00.

Calendrier Francals. 1888.

Entirely New Selections. Printed in the French language, and mounted on a card of appropriate design, $1.00.

Songs of the Mexican Seas:

The Sea of Fire and the Rhyme of the Great River. By JOAQUIN MILLER, author of "Songs of the Sierras," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

South-County Neighbors.

Character Sketches of the Narragansett Country fifty years ago. By ESTHER BEBON CARPENTER. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

Garden Secrets: Poems.

By PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON. With a Sketch of His Life. By LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON. With Portrait. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

For a Song's Sake, and Other Stories.

By PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON, author of "Wind-Voices," "All in All," "Garden Secrets," etc. With Portrait. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

Juvenilia:

Being a Second Series of Essays on Sundry Aesthetic Questions. By VERNON LEE, author of "Euphorion," "Baldwin," etc. Small crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

Boston School Kitchen Text-Book.

Lessons in Cooking, for the Use of Classes in Public and Industrial Schools. By MRS. D. A. LINCOLN, author of "The Boston Cook Book," "Carving and Serving," etc. 12mo, $1.00.

Sold everywhere. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

GERALDINE.

A tale of the St. Lawrence. 1 vol., 8vo, beautifully illustrated, full gilt, $3.50; in full morocco, tree calf or flexible calf, $7.50.

"It is a rhythmical romance, or love story in meter, of the greatest delicacy and beauty, and for several years it has enjoyed a phenomenal popularity and large circulation. Some critics have likened it to Dr. Holland's 'Kathrina,' and others to Owen Meredith's 'Lucile.' It is a strong and striking story of modern American life and social conditions, full also of heroism and passion, and rich in its descriptions of scenery among the Thousands Islands and the great mountains of Colorado. The scenes have been depicted by an artist who followed the route of the hero of the poem, and has produced a rare gallery of scenes drawn from nature. This beautiful romance of modern Christian life is appropriately and richly bound, and makes a charming keepsake."

THE POETICAL WORKS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

Revised, corrected and edited, with notes and commentaries, by WILLIAM J. ROFFE. 8vo, with 350 illustrations, beveled boards, full gilt, $10.00; half calf, $13.00; tree calf or full morocco, $16.00.

All existing editions of Sir Walter Scott's poetry, except those issued by Ticknor & Co., are disfigured by errors and misprints. Mr. W. J. Roffe, the accomplished editor of the "Students' Series of Poetry" and of Shakespeare, has undertaken the Herculean task of producing in one volume The First and Only Correct Edition in England and America of Scott's Poems. The edition contains full notes and appendices, with preface and comments by Mr. Roffe. It also contains all the original illustrations made for the separate poems at a cost of upwards of $25,000.

JUAN AND JUANITA.

By FRANCIS COURTHAY BAYLOR. Square quarto. With many illustrations by Henry Sandham. $1.50.

This story was published in "St. Nicholas," where it ran for a year; and the book includes also many more of the hitherto untold adventures of the hero and heroine and their wonderful dog. There are many new and attractive illustrations, which add very much to the interest of the narrative, and vividly show forth Indian and Mexican manners and customs, scenery and costume.

A FLOCK OF GIRLS.

By NORA PERRY. Illustrated, $1.50.

A charming and happy book for girls, written by Nora Perry, author of "A Book of Love Stories," etc., and so long famous as a writer of stories and poems for young folks, as well as for more strenuous work. The latest and best of her stories are included in this attractive little volume, which will be sought by all who love innocence and beauty and strength.

Sold everywhere. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,

STANDARD BOOKS,

IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,

Stationery, Engraving, Etc., Etc.

TOLSTOY'S WORKS. Ivan Ilyitch. 12mo, $1.25. The Invaders. 12mo, $1.25. What to Do. 12mo, $1.25. My Confession. 12mo, $1.00. A Russian Priest. 12mo, $1.25.

Translated from the Russian, and bound in uniform style with "Anna Karenina," "My Religion," "Childhood, Boyhood, and Youth."

IRVING'S WORKS. From new plates. Cloth, 12mo, 6 vols., $7.50; Library Edition, gilt top, $9.00; half calf, marbled, $15.00.

Edward Everett advised a young writer: "If he wishes to study a style which possesses the characteristic beauties of Addison, its ease, simplicity and elegance, with accuracy, point and spirit, let him give his days and nights to the volumes of Irving."

LES MISERABLES. By Victor Hugo. Translated from the French by Miss Isabel F. Hapgood. Illustrated edition, with 100 full-page illustrations. Printed on fine calendered paper, and bound in a neat, attractive style. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, 5 vols., $7.50; 12mo, half calf, $15.00; Popular Edition, in one vol., 12mo, $1.50.

Printed from new plates and large type.

TENNYSON'S WORKS. 8 vols. Handy Volume Edition. (Complete, large type.) From the latest text, including Earlier Poems.

Cloth, gilt top	$ 6.00
Parchment, gilt top	12.00
Half calf, gilt edges	12.00
American seal Russia, gilt edge, round corners	15.00
Full calf, flexible, gilt edge, round corners	21.00
Full calf, gilt edges, padded, round corners	25.00
Tree calf, gilt edges	30.00

All of the above bound in fancy leatherette or calf boxes, according to style of binding, and making a compact, elegant "Handy Volume" edition of this author's works.

MRS. SHILLABEE'S COOK-BOOK. A Practical Guide for Housekeepers. By MRS. LYDIA SHILLABEE. With an Introduction by Mrs. Partington. 12mo, cloth, $1.25; Kitchen Edition, in oilcloth, $1.25. First and second edition sold before publication. Fourth edition now ready.

BURNHAM BREAKER. By HOMER GREENE, author of the "Blind Brother." 12mo, $1.50.

Like the "Blind Brother," which has enjoyed such phenomenal success, "Burnham Breaker" is a story of the coal regions, and is constructed with remarkable skill, the plot being of thrilling but healthy interest. A better book for the young can scarcely be found.

THE GIANT DWARF. By J. A. K., author of "Who Saved the Ship," "Birchwood," "Fitch Club," "Prof. Johnny," "Riverside Museum," and other successful juveniles. 12mo, $1.25.

"The Giant Dwarf" is a simple and eminently sensible and wholesome story of German and American life, with a pleasant thread of romance running through it. The Giant Dwarf himself is an admirable character, rather unique in juvenile fiction.

FAIRY LEGENDS OF THE FRENCH PROVINCES. Translated by Mrs. M. Carey, with introductory note by J. F. Jameson, Ph. D., of Johns Hopkins University. 12mo, $1.25.

These new and delightful Fairy Tales have the same qualities that make "Mother Goose" and the "Arabian Nights" classics. Children of almost any age cannot fail to find perennial pleasure in their racy fancy, shrewd wit, and quaint simplicity of style, all admirably preserved in the translation. They are interesting, amusing, and instructive.

BOYHOOD OF LIVING AUTHORS. By WILLIAM H. RIDING. Sketches of the Early Life of Howells, Aldrich, Whittier, Gladstone, Clark Russell, Frank Stockton, etc. 12mo, $1.25.

All the sketches in this volume have been prepared with the consent, and generally with the assistance, of the authors represented; and many errors of fact in other biographies have been corrected. Mr. Riding has aimed at completeness and absolute authenticity in all his chapters.

POEMS IN COLOR. With 56 illustrations lithographed by Armstrong & Co., from original designs by W. J. WHITTEMORE. Sea Pictures, by TENNYSON. Sunrise on the Hills, by LONGFELLOW. The Worship of Nature, by WHITTIER. I Remember, by HOOD. To a Water-Fowl, by BRYANT. To a Mountain Daisy, by BURNS. Six vols., fancy paper covers, each 50 cents; cloth covers, stamped in gold, each 75 cents; celluloid covers, lithographed, each $1.00.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.,

18 Astor Place, New York.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 23. { E. H. HAMES & Co., }
WHOLE No. 336. Publishers.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 12, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St., }
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

THE LATE E. B. WASHBURN'S GREAT WORK. RECOLLECTIONS OF A MINISTER TO FRANCE.

1869-1877. By the Hon. E. B. WASHBURN. 2 vols., fully illustrated, 8vo, $8.00.

"It is the testimony of a cool-headed, unprejudiced spectator, set forth in most attractive style, with plenty of anecdotes, racy character sketches and humor, though these do not detract from the serious quality which predominates the narrative."—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

"The interest aroused by this book is profound. Not only is the period of history with which it deals a momentous one, but the manner in which Mr. Washburne has treated it is one that arrests attention, so full is it of simplicity and dignity. He concentrates our attention on the internal drama of that great tragedy of the nineteenth century. He makes us breathe the atmosphere of Paris, and we become absorbed in its destiny and disaster."—New York Star.

JUST PUBLISHED:

FIFTEEN YEARS IN YALE CHAPEL.

1871-1886. By NOAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D. With portrait. Crown 8vo, $2.50.

A collection of discourses, originally delivered in Yale Chapel, but more properly to be classed as philosophical essays, adapted for intelligent young men, on the most important themes and principles involved in the theistic and Christian faith.

SERMONS FOR CHILDREN.

Including the Beatitudes and the Faithful Servant. Preached in Westminster Abbey. By ARTHUR PENRYN STANLEY, late Dean of Westminster. 12mo, $1.00.

The sermons in this volume are all very brief, and are distinguished by the exquisite clearness, directness and beauty of Dean Stanley's style, which lends itself admirably to the task of presenting to youthful minds the great truths of the Bible in an attractive, yet dignified and impressive manner.

A REVISED EDITION. ENGLISH VERSE.

Collected and edited by W. J. LINTON and R. H. STODDARD. Special introduction by Mr. Stoddard to each volume, and notes by both editors. Library edition. 5 vols., 12mo, $1.00 each; $5.00 for the set.

TITLES OF THE VOLUMES: Chaucer and Burns—Lyrics of the 19th Century—Ballads and Romances—Dramatic Scenes and Characters—and Translations.

"This collection of English poetry will be one of enduring value. The selecting taste and the critical editing each belong to a remarkable and individual personality."—Springfield Republican.

BRIC-A-BRAC SERIES.

Personal Reminiscences of Famous Poets, Novelists, etc. Edited by R. H. STODDARD. New and cheaper edition. 10 vols., 12mo, $1.00 each; the set, $10.00.

TITLES OF THE VOLUMES: Chaucer—Planché and Young—Thackeray and Dickens—Mérimée, Lamartine and Sand—Barham, Harpess and Horder—The Græville Memoirs—Moore and Jordan—Cornelia Knight and Thomas Raikes—O'Keefe, Kelly and Taylor—Lamb, Hazlitt and others—and Constable and Gillies.

"The most compact, fresh and entertaining volumes of literary and artistic ana ever offered a public always eager for this precise variety of entertainment."—New York Times.

* * * These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, post-paid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
742-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.
681 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gieseler's "History of the English Constitution."
HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderny, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.
THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Scorpion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

THE COURT AND REIGN OF FRANCIS THE FIRST, KING OF FRANCE.

By JULIA PARDOE. With numerous portraits and illustrations on steel. A new edition. 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

LOUIS THE FOURTEENTH AND COURT OF FRANCE IN THE SEVEN- TEENTH CENTURY.

By JULIA PARDOE. Embellished with upwards of 50 wood-cuts, and with numerous portraits on steel. A new edition. 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

THE LIFE OF BENVENUTO CELLINI.

Newly translated into English by JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. With engraved portrait and eight etchings by F. Laguillermie; also eighteen reproductions of the works of the master, printed in gold, silver and bronze. 500 copies of this edition printed for England and 250 for America. Small 4to, 2 vols., handsomely bound in cloth, $12.00; calf back, $13.50.

"One of the most interesting and valuable autobiographies ever written. . . . The variety of its incidents, the minuteness of its descriptions, the pictures of the people and of the manners of the time, and, above all, the view it affords of the life of one of the most powerful characters of the age, give it at once the charm of romance and the value of a record of contemporaneous events."—Prof. C. E. Adams, Manual of Historical Literature.

LOUISE DE KEROUALLE,

Duchess of Portsmouth,

In the Court of Charles II.; or, How the Duke of Richmond Gained His Pension. Compiled from state papers in the archives of the French foreign office, by H. Forneron. With a preface by Mrs. G. M. Crawford of Paris. With six engraved portraits of court beauties from the paintings at Hampton Court Palace. 8vo, cloth extra, $3.50.

"An interesting record of a very strange and humiliating period in English history. Even now, when two centuries are past, one burns with anger and shame to read how the French king kept his diplomacy steadily at work to secure his aim."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CAMPAN'S MARIE ANTOINETTE.

The Private Life of Marie Antoinette, Queen of France and Navarre, with Sketches and Anecdotes of the Court of Louis XVI. By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN, First-Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. New edition, in one volume, with four portraits on steel. Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.25.

* * * The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 742-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

Myth, Ritual, and Religion.

By ANDREW LANG. 2 vols., crown 8vo, $7.00.

Johnny Nut and the Golden Goose.

Done into English by ANDREW LANG, from the French of Charles Deulin. Illustrated by Am. Lynen. 8vo, $3.50.

SOME OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF GEORGE CANNING.

Edited, with notes, by EDWARD J. STAPLETON. 2 vols., 8vo, $10.00.

THE MARRIAGE OF NEAR KIN,

Considered with respect to the Law of Nations, the Result of Experience, and the Teachings of Biology. By ALFRED H. HUTCH. New edition, royal 8vo, $7.50.

A SHORT MANUAL OF SURGICAL OPERATIONS,

Having special reference to many of the Newer Procedures. By ARTHUR E. J. BARKER, F.R.C.S., Surgeon to University College Hospital, Teacher of Practical Surgery at University College, Professor of Surgery and Pathology at the Royal College of Surgeons of England. With 61 woodcuts in the text. Crown 8vo, $3.25.

A HANDBOOK FOR STEAM USERS;

Being Notes on Steam Engine and Boiler Management and Steam Boiler Explosions. By M. POWIS BALE, M. I. M. E., A. M. I. C. E. Author of "Wood-Working Machinery," "Saw Mills," "Stone-Working Machinery," "Steam and Machinery Management," etc. 12mo, 80 cents.

STUDIES IN NAVAL HISTORY.

Biographies. By JOHN KNOX LAUGHTON, M. A., Professor of Modern History at King's College, London; Lecturer on Naval History at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. 8vo, $3.50.

FROM A GARRET.

By MAY KENDALL, one of the authors of "That Very Mab." Crown 8vo, $2.00.

BOYS AND MASTERS:

A Story of School Life. By A. H. GILKES, M. A., Head-Master of Dulwich College. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

"Nobody whose sympathy with boys was not deep and genuine could have written the pathetic episode of the illness and death of 'Coddies,' and many a reader who, like one of Mr. Gilkes's small boys, 'doesn't believe that any one can make him blub now,' may find, when he comes to this part of the book, that he is not quite so hardened to the melting mood as he imagined." — Saturday Review.

THE STORY OF OUR LORD told in Simple Language for Children.

By FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND. With 25 illustrations from pictures by the old masters, and numerous ornamental borders, etc., the whole being selected from Longmans's Illustrated New Testament. Crown 8vo, $1.00; cloth plain, $1.25; cloth extra, gilt edges.

"Just the kind of language is used in this book that teachers would do well to adopt in their Scripture lessons, and we desire to draw their attention to the attractiveness that would mark their Bible instruction if this were attempted and carried out. . . . An excellently planned and well-conceived little work." — Teacher's Aid.

WEATHER CHARTS AND STORM WARNINGS.

By ROBERT H. SCOTT, M. A., F. R. S., Secretary to the Meteorological Council. With numerous illustrations. Third edition. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

EDUCATIONAL ENDS; or, The Ideal of Personal Development.

By SOPHIE BRYANT, D.Sc. Lond., Mathematical Mistress in the North London Collegiate School for girls. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

FIRST STEPS IN GEOMETRY:

A Series of Hints for the Solution of Geometrical Problems, with Notes on Euclid, useful Working Propositions and many Examples. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR. 12mo, $1.25.

EASY LESSONS ON THE DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS:

Indicating from the Outset the Utility of the Processes called Differentiation and Integration. By RICHARD A. PROCTOR. 12mo, 90 cents.

ELECTRICITY FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

With numerous questions and examples, with answers, and 214 illustrations and diagrams. By W. LARDEN, M. A., author of "A School Course in Heat," in use at Rugby, Clifton, Cheltenham, Bedford, Birmingham, King's College, London, and in other schools and colleges. Crown 8vo, $1.75.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by the Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, M. A., LL. D.
No. 8, OCTOBER, royal 8vo, $1.50.

1. Articles.

THE MOVEMENTS OF THE ROMAN LEGIONS FROM AUGUSTUS TO SEVERUS. By E. G. HARDY.
THE LIFE OF JUSTINIAN BY THEOPHILUS. By JAMES BRYCE, D. C. L., M. P.
CHARLES THE FIRST AND THE EARL OF GLAMORGAN. By SAMUEL R. GARDINER, LL. D.
THE EMPLOYMENT OF INDIAN AUXILIARIES IN THE AMERICAN WAR. By ANDREW MCFARLAND DAVIS.

2. Notes and Documents.

3. Reviews of Books by EDWARD A. FREEMAN, D. C. L., F. YORK POWELL, W. H. STEVENSON, S. LANE-POOLE, E. ARMSTRONG, A. W. WARD, F. W. CORNISH, J. A. DOYLE, C. A. FIFE.

4. List of Historical Books recently published.

5. Contents of Periodical Publications.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,

15 EAST SIXTEENTH STREET, . . . NEW YORK.

PUBLISHED THIS DAY.

I.

A New and Standard Work on the Rosicrucians.

A HISTORY OF THE ROSICRUCIANS.

Founded on their own Manifestoes and on Facts and Documents collected from the Writings of Initiated Members. By ARTHUR EDWARD WARRE, author of "The Mysteries of Magic: A Digest of the Writings of Elias Levi." In crown 8vo, 464 pages, with illustrations, cloth, uncut, $2.50.

The facts and documents concerning the secret and mysterious Fraternity of the Rose-Cross, or of the Golden and Rosy Cross, are absolutely unknown to English readers. Even well-informed people will learn with astonishment the extent and variety of the Rosicrucian literature which hitherto has lain buried in rare pamphlets, written in the old German tongue, and in the Latin commentaries of the later alchemists.

In the present work every important and available fact has been carefully collected, and the manifestoes, and other documents of the Fraternity, are republished in revised versions. The Rosicrucians, as represented by themselves, are therefore offered to English readers for the first time in the literature of the subject. The task has been performed by a sympathetic but impartial writer, purged from the bias of any particular theory, and above all uncontaminated by the pretension to superior knowledge, which claimants have never been able to substantiate.

II.

Bibliography of Theatrical Literature.

A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL ACCOUNT OF ENGLISH THEATRICAL LITERATURE.

From the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By ROBERT W. LOWE. (Limited Edition only.) A handsomely printed volume, demy 8vo, 400 pages, cloth, uncut, $5.00. Large Paper, 100 only printed, on extra fine paper, royal 8vo, each copy numbered, $8.00.

This important contribution to the Bibliography of the Drama is now ready for publication.

The work presents the first extended bibliography of the general literature of the stage. Plays have been catalogued many times, but no attempt has been made to give even the baldest catalogue of the large and curious mass of books relating to the history of the stage, the biography of actors and actresses, the controversy regarding the influence of the stage, the numerous curious theatrical trials, and the many scandalous attacks on the personal character of celebrated performers.

The work will supply in some measure the want which has been felt by all writers on theatrical subjects, as well as by all collectors of theatrical books. It consists of about 2,000 titles, the great majority of which are taken directly from the works described. These will be arranged alphabetically, with exhaustive cross-references. Notes regarding each actor and actress will be given, and also as account of the occurrences to which particular works refer, special attention being paid to the less known and more curious pamphlets.

Quotations of prices at recent famous sales are given, and the rarity of scarce books pointed out.

Altogether, the work is one of historical as well as bibliographical value, and forms a history of the stage, especially on those details of which regular histories take little or no cognizance.

READY ABOUT DECEMBER 10.

THE SALON OF PARIS, 1887.

Illustrated by 100 photogravures, printed in various colors by Messrs. Goupil & Co. Price, Holland Paper Edition, each copy numbered, large 8vo (13 x 9 inches), crimson cloth, uncut edges, $20.00; Ordinary Edition, on thick vellum paper, large 8vo, crimson cloth, uncut edges, $17.50.

Paris today, shorn of the luster conferred by an imperial court, still retains her supremacy as the metropolis of the world of art. The SALON OF PARIS is a center to which all interested in art instinctively turn, for in it are found the best productions of the painters of all nations.

The volume which I have now the pleasure to offer to the public contains a carefully made selection of the best pictures exhibited in the SALON OF 1887, accurately reproduced in full-page plates by the beautiful photogravure process of Messrs. Goupil & Co. In addition to which a large number of photogravures are scattered through the text in the form of vignettes, charmingly executed, and printed in various tints, as well as a number of exquisite etchings as head and tail pieces.

The descriptive letterpress cover 200 pages, handsomely printed in large and clear-cut type on heavy Holland paper, the writing of which has been entrusted to Mr. GUSTAVE OLLIVANDOFF, who fills the position of General Superintendent of Exhibitions in France, and who is a gentleman eminently qualified to do justice to his subject.

The SALON OF 1887 has been an exceptionally rich one in fine paintings and sculptures, enabling the publisher to make a volume which will be found to surpass, both in interest and get-up, the preceding volumes of the series (which commenced in 1880). The volume is tastefully bound in crimson cloth, with richly ornamented side in colors and gold, and altogether forms a magnificent book, suitable alike for the table or for a gift-book for the holiday season.

Besides the copies printed on Holland paper, a number have been printed on thick vellum paper, which are offered at a price a trifle lower.

The Holland paper copies are limited, and each copy is numbered. Intending purchasers are advised to send in their names as early as possible, as but few copies of the Holland paper numbered edition remain unsubscribed for. The volume will be ready for delivery early in December.

J. W. BOUTON,

PUBLISHER, IMPORTER AND BOOKSELLER,
706 Broadway, New York.

* * The largest and best selected stock of rare and choice books ever seen in America. Catalogues gratis.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

The Vision of Sir Launfal.

By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. A Holiday Volume, produced under the supervision of F. Hopkinson Smith. With a new portrait of Mr. Lowell, and nine full-page illustrations designed by eminent American artists, and engraved on wood by Frederick Juengling (India prints, mounted), and others in the text. Quarto, bound in half leather in a very attractive style, the cover design by Mrs. S. W. Whitman. Price $10.00; a few copies in Persian levant, $20.00.

Men and Letters.

Essays in Criticism. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Noah Webster," "Stories and Romances," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

CONTENTS: Elisha Mulford—Longfellow and his Art—A Modern Prophet—Landor as a Classic—Dr. Muhlenberg—American History on the Stage—The Shaping of Exeelsior—Emerson's Self—Aspects of Historical Work—Anne Gilchrist—The Future of Shakespeare.

This is a welcome edition to American criticism. It is eminently readable, and the treatment of both writers and books is fresh, sympathetic and appreciative, while held to a high standard of thought and style.

Early and Late Poems of Alice and Phoebe Cary.

12mo, $1.50.

This book embraces the best portion of the poems of the Cary sisters not included in the Household Edition, and cannot fail to be very welcome to thousands.

Lyrics, Idyls and Romances.

Selected from the Poems of ROBERT BROWNING. 16mo, tastefully bound, $1.00.

This little book contains, in a convenient form and good type, sixty or more of the choicest of Browning's lyrical poems. For reading or for a gift it is peculiarly acceptable.

John Bunyan: His Life, Times and Work.

By JOHN BROWN, B. A., Minister of the Church at Bunyan Meeting, Bedford. With a fine steel portrait, and illustrations by Edward Whymper. Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, $2.50.

"Many as have been the sketches and lives of Bunyan, we must place this by Mr. Brown at their head, in respect of fullness, painstaking accuracy, and quiet enthusiasm."—British Quarterly Review.

The Andover Review

FOR NOVEMBER

Has five contributed articles, including a second paper on

The American Board; Is its Proper Relation to the Churches that of Domination or Dependence?

By HAMILTON A. HILL.

Paul's Theology.

By LYMAN ABBOTT, D. D.

The Open Door which None Can Shut.

A Missionary Sermon to Young Men in the Present Crisis. By Prof. W. J. TUCKER. Editorial Articles on

The Record at Springfield.

The Case of the Majority.

The Doctrinal Appeal to the Churches.

And other important papers.

25 CENTS; $4.00 A YEAR.

* For sale by booksellers and newsdealers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

For Children of all Ages.

Our Darlings: at Home, in Town, at the Seaside, in the Country and at Play. By MARS. Printed in colors and gold by Plon. Oblong 4to, cloth, $3.00; boards, $2.50.

First published in France, where it met with great success among both old and young. The children, laughing, dancing, romping, doing everything that children (and only children) can do—gracefully drawn and most charmingly colored—crowd every page with their happy faces, so that the text is obliged to wedge itself in as best it can.

Last "Graphic" Pictures. By RANDOLPH CALDECOTT. Printed in colors. Oblong 4to, boards, $3.00.

Similar to his "Graphic Pictures" and "More Graphic Pictures" previously published. Overflowing with humorous conceits, and provoking good-natured laughter at human follies and weaknesses.

The Fairy Tales of the COUNTESS D'AULNOY. Translated by J. R. Planché. New edition. With numerous illustrations by Gordon Browne and Lydia F. Emmet. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

"It is delightful to turn from the earlier mutilated paraphrases of these incomparable stories to the fresh, simple and accurate versions of this practiced man of letters, who was not vain enough to think he could better his author."—E. H. STODARD, in N. Y. Mail and Express.

Stories of Persons and Places in Europe. By E. L. BENEDICT. Copiously illustrated. 4to, boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

An entertaining description of such features of European scenery and places, and of such events in the history of the principal nations, as would most excite the interest of young readers.

Mattie's Secret. By EMILE DESBREAUX. With 100 illustrations. 4to, boards, with lithographed double covers, $1.25.

"A charming little child-story, combining, in the most delightful manner, instruction with amusement. . . . We cordially commend it to the notice of our readers in search of pleasant and profitable reading for their children."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

One Hundred Famous Americans With portraits and other illustrations. 4to, boards, $1.50.

"It is itself a library of biography for young people."—N. Y. Independent.

"The book is exceedingly useful. It is full of encouragement for the young, in showing them what great things can be done by hard, well-directed work."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Every Boy's Annual for 1888. Edited by EDMUND ROUTLEDGE. Twenty-sixth year of publication. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

"The stories of travel and adventure, biographies, notes on natural history, expositions of parlor magic, tales of the French retreat from Russia, of Arctic exploration, of adventures in the bush, and of earthquakes, combine to make the volume extremely interesting."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Little Wide Awake for 1888. Edited by MRS. SALE BARKER. Fourteenth year of publication. With illustrations and colored frontispiece. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, $1.50.

"There is always something useful or entertaining to be found."—London Times.

"It is impossible to add anything to the praise of past years."—Saturday Review.

Wonderful Cities of the World. By HELEN A. SMITH. With numerous illustrations, many full-page. 4to, about 700 pages, cloth, $3.00.

"A book which is calculated to give much pleasure and instruction. . . . To bright boys and girls the volume will be the next best thing to a trip round the world."—Boston Advertiser.

Youngsters' Yarns. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. With illustrations by C. O. Murray. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

Stories of the experiences of youthful adventurers of various countries, the scenes of which are laid in all parts of the world. By the author of "Boys' Own Stories," "Stories out of School-Time," etc.

The Children of the New Forest. By CAPTAIN MARRYAT. New edition. With 54 illustrations by Paul Hardy, and 8 full-page plates by Sir John Gilbert, R. A. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

An entirely new edition of one of the favorite books of the boys' favorite writer. The most attractive edition that this story of the English civil wars has ever appeared in.

History of Russia and Japan in Words of One Syllable. By HELEN A. SMITH. With map linings and numerous illustrations. Each 4to, 224 pages, boards, $1.00.

Additions to Routledge's Series of One-Syllable Histories, of which the other volumes are "United States," "England," "France," "Germany," "Ireland" and "Presidents of the United States."

"The broad pages and the beautiful illustrations make these books the best, on historical subjects, in the language."—New England Journal of Education.

The Adventures of Herbert Massey in Eastern Africa. By Commander V. LOVETT CAMERON. With illustrations by A. W. Cooper. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Recounts the unusual experiences and remarkable exploits of an English boy traveling in Africa with his father. His romantic career and hair-breadth escapes will arouse the envy of every lad of spirit.

Animals, Birds and Fishes. By HELEN A. SMITH. With numerous illustrations. Large 4to, cloth, $3.00.

Comprises "Animals, Wild and Tame," and "Birds and Fishes," more durably bound in one volume. Studies in natural history in words of easy reading.

Sports and Pastimes of American Boys. A Guide and Text-book of Games of the Playground, the Parlor, and the Field. Especially adapted for American Youth. With colored and plain illustrations. By HENRY CHADWICK, author of "American Hand-book of Games," etc. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, $1.50.

"A book that will captivate boys at once."—Cincinnati Commercial.

"A most acceptable present to any American boy of spirit."—N. Y. Christian Union.

"Though the book is intended for boys—the girls are not forgotten—many games being described in which they are expected to join. The illustrations are numerous, and most of them very good."—N. Y. Critic.

Routledge's Picture Scrap-Book. With numerous full-page and smaller illustrations. Imperial 4to, boards, with lithographed covers, $1.25.

An entertaining miscellany of stories and poems for younger children, printed on heavy paper and attractively bound.

Imperial Natural History. With 24 colored and many plain illustrations. Imperial 4to, cloth, $3.00.

Descriptions of wild and domestic animals, their native countries, their habits, uses, etc., graphically written, so as to arouse the interest of the young.

The Pirate's Treasure. By W. H. G. KINGSTON. New edition. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

A story of subterranean treasure, found on (or under) the Isthmus of Panama, and the fight for its possession between the pirate finders and government men-of-war.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS,

9 LAFAYETTE PLACE,

NEW YORK.

WILL BE PUBLISHED
NOV. 15.
ODES AND SONNETS.

By JOHN KEATS.
WITH ILLUSTRATIVE DESIGNS
By WILL H. LOW.

J. B. Lippincott Company

HAVE PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING THAT

"The handsomest book of the year is undoubtedly Will H. Low's illustrated edition of Keats's 'Sonnets and Lyrics,' which forms a worthy companion to the same artist's 'Lamia,' issued in 1885." Mr. Low has spared no effort to surpass his former achievement, having given fifteen months' time and study in Florence, Italy, to the collection of the proper material and the thorough prosecution of his work. There will be 16 full-page drawings and 100 pages of text embellished with floral designs, the whole issued uniform in size with "Lamia," and bound with an elaborate design in gold.

The drawings have been successfully reproduced by the photogravure process of the Forbes Company; the text throughout on plate paper. Price, extra cloth, $15.00; Japanese silk, $25.00; morocco, $25. Each style securely boxed.

HOLIDAY BOOKS NOW READY.

FAUST. WITH ETCHINGS.

The Legend and the Poem. By W. S. WALSH. Illustrated by Hermann Faber. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

Henry Irving's recent production of "Faust" has revived popular interest in Goethe's great poem, and the publishers have pleasure in presenting the poem in this interesting and popular way, the etching being the outcome of much thought and study on the part of an artist in love with his subject. To "Faust" Mr. Walsh has devoted many years of loving study.

PRINCE LITTLE BOY, AND OTHER TALES OUT of Fairy-Land. By S. WEIR MITCHELL, M. D. Illustrated by F. S. Church and H. Siddons Mowbray. 4to, cloth extra, $1.50.

Dr. Mitchell is not only gifted with the power of entertaining the mature and thoughtful by his novels, scientific works, etc., but has the rare faculty of pleasing children by his wonderful stories of fairy-land. The illustrations are very captivating, being designed under the special approval of the author.

IDA WAUGH'S ALPHABET BOOK.

"For little ones, who, if they look,
Will find their letters in this book."

Verses by AMY E. BLANCHARD. Attractively illustrated, and printed in two colors on heavy plate paper. Large 4to, 9 x 11 inches, bound in illuminated cover, $1.00.

This beautiful volume will make that first task of childhood, "learning the letters," a joy to the mother who teaches, and a delight to the child who learns.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE. WITH ETCHINGS.

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. Illustrated by M. M. Taylor. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

This beautiful poem of rural life, written in Goldsmith's simple and graceful style, affords an excellent field for illustration, and the artist has shown the best taste in the selection of subjects, as well as rare talent in their treatment.

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD. WITH ETCHINGS.

By ELIZABETH WETHERELL. Complete in one volume. Illustrated by Frederick Dielman. Cabinet 8vo, printed on laid paper, cloth extra, $2.50.

The interest of this story, its literary excellence, and pure, wholesome moral tone have won for it a place in almost every home. Mr. Dielman has chosen some of the most characteristic and striking scenes, and his etchings add greatly to the attractiveness of the story.

THREE POEMS. WITH WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

Royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00; ivory surface, $6.00; full tree calf, $10.00.

This volume contains "An Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," by Thomas Gray, "The Hermit," by Oliver Goldsmith, and "The Closing Scene," by T. Buchanan Read. All successful art publications, in separate forms, and offered this season in one complete volume, at reduced price. The illustrations are by the best artists and engravers, forming a collection of poetry and art most desirable for the holidays.

If not obtainable at your booksellers', send direct to the publishers, who will forward the books, free of postage, on receipt of the price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,
PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS
715 AND 717 MARKET STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, NOV. 12, 1887. No. 23.

CONTENTS.

JUVENILIA	381
THE NEW HONDURAS	381
THE BHAGAVAD GITA	381
THE HUNDRETH MAN	382
CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN'S NOVELS. Wieland	382
THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT IN ITALY	383
MR. STEDMAN'S VICTORIAN POETS	383
THACKERAY'S LETTERS	384
ENGLISH HISTORY BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS	385
BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG:
Bonnie Prince Charlie	386
The Giant Dwarf	386
The Soldier's Ward	386
MINOR FICTION:
Fools of Nature	387
Major and Minor	387
Jemmy's Children	387
Old New England Days	387
The Count of the Saxon Shore	387
White Cockades	387
MINOR NOTICES:
The Making of the Great West	387
Pen Portraits of Literary Women	388
The Good Things of Life	388
Etc., Etc., Etc.
THE RESCUE OF THE TELEGRAPH	386
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Shakespearean Rarities at Hollingbury Copse	389
The Tours of Shakespeare's Company	390
Henry Giles's "Human Life in Shakespeare"	390
Henry Irving at Stratford	390
Donnelly's Cipher in the New York Shakespeare Society	390
NOTES AND QUERIES. 831	390
PERIODICALS	390
NEWS AND NOTES	391
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	392

JUVENILIA.*

THE brilliant but diffuse writer who styles herself Vernon Lee has collected under the title of Juvenilia a number of essays, mostly on musical themes, which are pleasant reading for the æsthetically inclined. But they are not such, one fancies, because of their disagreement with Sheridan's line, that "easy writing's curst hard reading," for Miss Paget's essays have the charm of the high-bred converse of a finely cultivated lady; it is delightful to listen to, but the stream spreads wide its ample waters with a facile flow. She herself calls these papers Juvenilia because they were written at a time, though but recent, when the subjects of which they treat, such as "Apollo the Fiddler," Perigot, and Signor Curiazio were "the only, or very nearly the only questions which seem thoroughly engrossing." Now they seem, on the contrary, to be matters of intellectual boyhood; they still retain a charm and a value, but the serious interests of the soul have arisen. As the author looks on the Tyne at Newcastle — "one of the most impressive of all spectacles, short of hell" — she thinks of the humanity that has to toil there, far from the world of "Wagner and Swinburne, and Whistler and Venetian sunsets," and thinking of them, the sorrows of her brethren, for such they are, come home to her, and she confesses that we must look at many things that are not beautiful; we must think out many matters that are

* Juvenilia: Being a second series of Essays on Sundry Æsthetical Questions. By Vernon Lee. Roberts Brothers. $2.00.

bitter and uncertain; we must recognize that we are no longer children and that we have other interests besides those which I have called 'Juvenilia' It is not a question of our leading any one;

the number of leaders God-appointed is small; but it is a question of feeling and attitude.

The Epilogue would vindicate the abiding value of the beautiful in life lest the preface seem too austere; yet Juvenilia, the things of youth, is still the name for discussions of the sort this volume contains. We might put it otherwise by saying that the pagan in us has its rights and place, however little it can serve in this mingled life of ours as a substitute for the religion of sorrow or even the enthusiasm of humanity. When the pagan reigns in us for a time, careless of the bitter woes of suffering man by Tyne-side or in the East of London, we can lightly concern ourselves with Rococo, Lombard color studies, and Don Juan (con Stenterello); in such hours this volume charms. But the Christian, the philanthropist, emerges in his turn, and then by the side of social problems, these æsthetic discussions as to why Raphael chose to paint Apollo as a fiddler seem trivial and heartless. But still the natural man enamored of beauty must not be suppressed, nor life suffer from overstraining of sympathy with the suffering; the halt and the maimed must not have all our attention!

This notice is like Miss Paget's book: self-contradictory, earnest moralists will call both; "multiform with the many-sidedness of life," others may say. Let Rococo even have its due! When we are in that mood Juvenilia cannot fail to please and in some degree to instruct.

THE NEW HONDURAS.*

THIS book (a thin, handsomely-printed and illustrated quarto of about 100 pages) is written in the interest of the "Central American Syndicate Company" of New York (a "syndicate company" must be a doubly organized association). Aside, however, from a statement of the concessions granted to that company the volume is not directly an advertising medium, while it gives an interesting outline of the resources of Honduras and the sudden and promising energy infused into their development.

Those who fancy Honduras to be a tropical jungle inhabited by savages will have much to learn from Mr. Lombard's sober and straightforward description and convincing array of statistics. Honduras is a tableland, about the size of Ohio, with a belt of swamp along either coast, and its characteristics are largely those of a combination of the temperate and tropical zones. The population is depicted in general as docile, honest, and ingenious, but not particularly industrious. The government is now efficient and progressive; education is compulsory; there is a decided disposition to encourage the investment of foreign capital and the employment of foreign skilled labor. English, French, and Americans are settled in the country engaged in the exportation of wood from the mahogany belt, fruit-raising, and mining. The soil and climate are well adapted to the production of cotton, sugarcane, and coffee; there is an immense variety of native fruits and valuable woods; several native fibrous plants promise to be the source of remunerative industries, especially the pita, with its long, soft fiber, finer than raw silk, strong and durable. Cattle-raising is also a promising occupation. But the richest resources are in the gold and silver deposits, once worked by the Spaniards. These are now being developed, improved machinery is being introduced, and great results are declared to be certain. An agreeable account is given of the mining town of Yucaran. It is 3,250 feet above the sea, bounded on the east by fertile plains, and nestling at the foot of stately mountains. The average temperature for the year is 72°; the atmosphere is clear and bracing; the society of the place — largely American — is cultivated and hospitable. A thousand workmen are employed on the mines and other improvements.

* The New Honduras. Its Situation, Resources, Opportunities, and Prospects. By Thomas R. Lombard. Brentano.

Honduras invites the attention of travellers, but labors under a serious lack of facilities for travel. The mule is the only available means of locomotion excepting the Inter-oceanic Railway from Puerto Cortez to San Pedro Sula, a distance of 38 miles. A mule and a servant can be hired for $20 per week, and the cost of provisions for the two will not exceed 75 cents per diem. The country may be traversed from coast to coast in a fortnight or so, and a good idea of its condition would be obtained. The traveler could go by steamer from New Orleans to Truxillo or Puerto Cortez (fare $35), and return by Pacific Mail steamer from Ampala, via Panama. The best time to visit the country is during the dry season, from November to April. There need be no danger from malaria, for the low lands can be crossed in a single day's ride, and among the hills malaria is, according to Mr. Lombard, unknown.

THE BHAGAVAD GITA.*

EXTERNALLY this new translation of the noble, philosophical, and religious poem which is dear to the heart of India and has won just applause from every unprejudiced reader in other lands, is the most attractive of all the English versions. Bound strongly and simply in blue cloth, on heavy paper, and with broad margins, it is a favorable specimen of the best work of the

* The Bhagavad Gita; or, The Lord's Lay. With Commentary and Notes as well as References to the Christian Scriptures. Translated from the Sanskrit for the Benefit of Those in Search of Spiritual Light. By Mohini M. Chatterji, M.A. Ticknor & Co. $2.00.

University Press. Internally, we feel bound to say that this new translation in no respect justifies its existence, and it will be matter for regret if any at present unacquainted with this gem of the Mahabharata make their first acquaintance with it through Mr. Chatterji rather than through either one of the two admirable translations into English of recent date — Mr. Edwin Arnold's poetical rendering, The Song Celestial (1885), and Mr. John Davies's prose version (1882), which Mr. Arnold commends as "truly beyond praise for its fidelity and clearness." As compared with this last transcript Mr. Chatterji's is the work of a "prentice hand," his acquaintance with our tongue, though remarkably good, not being such as to qualify him to equal or to improve upon Mr. Davies's work. We say "improve upon," for a comparison of the two renderings often leads one to suppose that Mr. Chatterji has purposely deviated from Mr. Davies in word or phrase, simply to avoid the reproach of following him too closely.

Let us compare the two versions in a notable passage at the beginning of the Tenth Reading. It is thus given by Mr. Chatterji:

Whoever knows Me, the unborn, beginningless, supreme lord of the worlds, he among men, undeluded, becomes liberated from all sins. Subtle perception, spiritual knowledge, right judgment, forgiveness, truth, external and internal self-mastery, pleasure, pain, prosperity and adversity, fear and serenity, inoffensiveness, even-mindedness, satisfaction, restraint of body and mind, alms-giving, fame for righteousness, and ill fame for unrighteousness become from Me the various conditions of creatures.

No knowledge of Sanskrit is needed by an English reader for him to feel that this is very poor English; the language is bookish ("beginningless," for example), or vague and general ("satisfaction," and "external and internal self-mastery"), or positively awkward ("ill fame for unrighteousness"). The construction is hard, and the whole passage betrays one unacquainted by inheritance with the riches of our language. Turning to Mr. Davies, we read:

He who knows Me, as unborn and without beginning, the mighty Lord of the world, he of mortals is undeluded, he is freed from all sin. Mind, knowledge, absence of illusion, patience, truth, self-restraint, tranquillity, pleasure, pain, birth, death, fear and courage also; innocence, evenness of mind, contentment, religious austerity, beneficence, glory and shame, these are the qualities of beings severally appointed by Me.

The greater ease and felicity of this second rendering are apparent.

The Commentary and Notes have added greatly to the bulk of this volume; one cannot say that they have added very much to its value. The commentary interjected between the verses of the translation is often of an extremely elementary character, directed to passages which are entirely clear in themselves; the notes sin repeatedly in the same way, and cause us to wonder what kind of readers Mr. Chatterji had in mind. He thinks it necessary, for example, to explain that "subtle perception," above, is "the perception of things not comprehended by the ordinary mind," and that "spiritual knowledge" applies to the nature of "that which is beyond the reach of internal and external senses." Where the translator's matter is not thus adapted to babes and sucklings, it lies at the other extreme of unintelligibility. It would take too much of our space to substantiate this judgment by illustrations. Sufficient be it to say that the kind of introduction which the English reader needs is supplied by Mr. Davies in seventeen pages, which give the particulars concerning the contest from which Arjuna has withdrawn, and a very perspicuous statement of the doctrine developed by Krishna. Thus fortified with preliminary information, the reader, who has the happiness all before him of coming to know this masterpiece of religious literature, should read the Bhagavad Gita through consecutively; and if he finds in Mr. Davies or in Mr. Arnold some things hard to comprehend, let him read the poem again and again, until it becomes somewhat clearer. We are decidedly of the opinion that one who follows this course will arrive at a clearer comprehension than if he were to dwell upon Mr. Chatterji's commentary, derived as it is from commentators generally harder to understand than the poem itself. Of the translator's learning and his sincere religiousness we have a due sense, but his translation is superfluous, and his right to speak with authority in many matters which he treats is not self-evidencing.

THE HUNDRETH MAN.*

IF Plato's or Fourier's ideal republic had ever been realized, we imagine that among its officials would have been some competent authority or authorities to sit upon would-be authors when they first essayed to work, and decide, firstly, whether they should be allowed to write at all, and secondly, how they were to write and what; and if stories, whether they should be long stories or short ones. For some people can do short stories well and some can do long ones well, but very few can do both, and the man who succeeds in one often makes a manifest failure of the other.

Were we dwellers in such an ideal republic, and had such a committee been in session when Mr. Frank R. Stockton began his literary career, we think — more, we ardently hope — that he would have been peremptorily enjoined from ever trying his hand at any story that would make more than twelve pages in a magazine. In that line of minor fiction no one surpasses and few equal him. The originality and humor and grace and sparkle of his brief tales are inimitable. We never can have too many of them. They are so good, so very good, that we are always, like Oliver Twist, wishing for more; but it is a wish to be carefully formulated, for it is more short stories that we want, not more of the same short story to make it into a long one.

For when it comes to a continued fiction, Mr. Stockton's charm evaporates in the most curious manner. Nothing, as some think, could have been more disappointing than The Late Mrs. Null, but The Hundredth Man is worse. There is a lively dullness about it which oppresses like nightmare. The regular swing of the story is furthermore most fatiguing; and the attention, vibrating, as it does, like a pendulum between the boycotted restaurant, its mysterious proprietor, and the amatory John spelling out his pathos and his passion in lines from the poets arranged with clam shells, with the rather insipid young woman in the country oscillating between her three lovers, experiences a treadmill weariness.

We hope, though we do not dare to expect, that this will be the last sustained story which Mr. Stockton will ever attempt, and that henceforth he may be content to administer his delightful confections to us in morceaux. Nobody wants a pail full of soda-water!

THE NOVELS OF CHARLES BROCKDEN BROWN.

Wieland.*

Charles Brockden Brown, chronologically the first of American novelists, was born of English ancestors, Friends, in Philadelphia, January 17, 1771, and died October 22, 1810. The memorials of his childhood are scanty. His constitution was delicate. Severe study impaired his health. He prepared for the bar, but exchanged that profession for literature. From 1798 for a few years he lived in New York, but after his marriage in 1804 became a permanent resident of his native city, where he died. He was a man of lofty character, intellectual endowments, and great modesty, gentleness, and purity. His literary career may be outlined as follows:

- 1797-'8. Alcuin. A Dialogue on the Rights of Women.
- 1798. Wieland; or, The Transformation.
- 1799-1800. Monthly Magazine and American Review. (Edited.)
- 1799. Ormond; or, The Secret Witness.
- 1799—. Arthur Mervyn; or, Memoirs of the Year 1793. Vol. I.
- 1799—. Edgar Huntley; or, The Adventures of a Sleep-Walker.
- 1800. Arthur Mervyn. Vol. II.
- 1801. Clara Howard.
- 1801. Cession of Louisiana to France.
- 1801. Treaty with England Rejected by Mr. Jefferson. Pamphlets.
- 1803-'8. The Literary Magazine and American Register. (Edited.)
- 1804. Jane Talbot.
- 1806-'9. The Annual Register. An annual. 5 vols.
- 1804-9. General Geography. Unfinished.
- 1804-9. Rome During the Age of the An-

Collected Novels. 7 vols. Boston: 1827.
6 vols. Phil.: 1857.

PATRIOTIC American readers will thank Mr. McKay of Philadelphia for a new edition of Charles Brockden Brown's novels, to be completed in six volumes, of which the first is in our hands; and all lovers of elegant books will additionally thank him for

* The Hundredth Man. By Frank R. Stockton. The Century Co. $1.50.

* Wieland; or, The Transformation. Being Vol. I of Charles Brockden Brown's Novels. To be completed in 6 vols. Philadelphia: David McKay. The set, $18.00.

the form which has been selected for this new edition. The book is of generous size, crown 8vo, with ample margins and uncut edges; the type is delicate and clear; the paper is an all-linen laid, with the author's initials water-marked therein; the binding is half vellum, with cloth sides and gilt tops. The edition is limited to 500 sets, numbered, and the price certainly is extremely reasonable.

Charles Brockden Brown is a romancer worth reading. Besides he is an American. He was an Hawthornian before Hawthorne. There is about him not a little of Hawthorne's invention and imagination, with an added love of the unnatural and supernatural, and uncommon steadiness and directness of style. The following passage from the worthy introduction to Wieland is mainly just and true in its characterizations of the spirit and power of his novels:

They are indeed remarkable productions. Once read, the impression they make is never forgotten. They are original, in every sense—in the conception, the style, the execution; in the characters, sentiments, manners, incidents, altogether original. Full of energy and pathos, they abound with passages of genuine eloquence and irresistible force. Few works excite such breathless anxiety and awful apprehension. The tone of seriousness and solemnity that pervades them repels the ordinary reader of novels. One fond of mere love-tales must not look into them for enjoyment. They are calculated only for those who indulge in the deep and powerful emotions; for those who think and feel strongly; who delight patiently to trace every action to its appropriate motive; and to mark the ebb and flow of passion, and follow them out to their furthest consequences. To such readers they will always be welcome, notwithstanding the admission that the characters and incidents are too frequently in extreme and lie barely within the range of possibility.

The texture of Wieland amply bears out this general characterization of Brockden Brown's works as a whole. It is an original and powerful composition, totally unlike the novels of the present day, both in matter and manner, yet carefully and chastely written in a style that is a reminder not only of Hawthorne but of Poe. It is a tragedy, in which the supernatural, or rather a simulation of the supernatural, plays a leading part; the first half of it introducing the phenomena of what we now call spiritualism, in a way to make the reader's blood run cold if not his hair to stand on end. The story is told in autobiographic form. The opening horror, the mysterious death of the writer's father, in his arbor-temple, by a seemingly direct divine instrumentality, is novel and startling, but it is fully equalled in the exciting element by the subsequent incidents which befall Clara Wieland, and by the details of the disguised part taken by Carwin in the dramatic fate which overtakes her brother and his family. Fraud, madness, ghostly agencies, and murder are the strong ingredients of this tale, mixed by a truly master hand into a compound which surely holds no mean place in American literature.

Charles Brockden Brown has come to be almost a traditional name only; he is a living force; and this new and sumptuous edition of his books must go far towards recalling his memory to the position it deserves to occupy. Wieland, though a strange fiction and by no means altogether a pleasant one, is fully entitled to a reading by all who profess or aspire to an acquaintance with what is best in American fiction.

THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT IN ITALY.*

IN this important work upon the revolutions which, forty years since, created a new era in European history, Mr. Maurice shows remarkable command and sympathetic comprehension of his subject. He considers that the importance of the part which the French people took in the struggle of that time has been greatly overestimated; that Palermo, not Paris, struck the signal of revolt, and not Paris, but Presburg, annulled the political force of Metternich. He therefore purposely omits any but incidental consideration of the French revolution of those times.

It is not unnatural, indeed, that the rapid and concentrated dramatic quality of the uprising at Paris should have attracted men's eyes, as to a spectacle of the stage. But if Paris was the theater of revolution, Italy was one great temple where, with sacrifices and martyrdom, a patient and courageous people adored Liberty.

Mr. Maurice takes an extremely intelligent and original view of the close connection of the movements in Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Germany, as impelled by the need to overthrow the subtle and ruinous policy of Prince Metternich. The character of this diplomatist, as sketched by Mr. Maurice, gives the key to the entire situation. Under cover of apparent peacefulness, Metternich was binding closer and closer the bonds of a detestable tyranny. Here and there throughout Europe burned scattered sparks of the old fires of the French revolution; there were serious thinkers in Germany, Poles with their mystic passion for liberty, Lombards who felt the sacred strength of patriotic purpose, the Carbonari of Naples ready to kindle their coals into a consuming flame. Metternich's cold and cynical policy was opposed by ardent and faithful men in every part of Europe.

In Italy, the poets spoke the first words of revolution. Naples and Piedmont arose; and Confalonieri soon became the first martyr of the cause—the first of how noble an army! Young Italy had the good destiny to be led by the half-divine Mazzini; and its progress toward freedom, though amid darkness and storms, was direct and sure.

The Hungarian reformers profited by the error of Poland, and sought to unite the upper and lower classes of society. The earnest eloquence of Francis Deak and the brilliant statesmanship of Kossuth at the Diet of Presburg gave a shock to the diplomacy of Metternich. In Leipzig, Robert Blum heard the news of the revolution at Paris, and summoned the citizens to meet at the railway station the deputies returning from Dresden; and the town council demanded from the king of Saxony the dismissal of his ministry, the convocation of the assembly, and the freedom of the press. The revolutionary movement fairly begun in these countries spread itself in various directions, developing a drama of patriotism which lasted during the years 1848-9. Its changes of scene and action, its victories and defeats, surprises and triumphs, are reviewed in a masterly manner by Mr. Maurice, with fine historical temper and superb breadth of treatment. He notes that this heroic period was, of its very nature, not durable; that to the impulse of revolution, kindred and contemporaneous in the three countries, must follow a phase of hatred of foreigners which is the reverse of the medal of patriotism; that the spirit of revolution contains within itself both victory and failure. The next ten years were reactionary; Cavour and Napoleon were at work in Italy, Prussia absorbed Germany, the Magyars won only by slow gradations their desired liberty, while Austria-Hungary was not given to see the end of its difficulties.

Since that time it cannot indeed be claimed that the problems of 1848 have been yet wholly solved, and new developments have arisen to complicate still more the questions of the civilized world. But the likeness of Mazzini, looking forth from the frontispiece of Mr. Maurice's volume, seems to gather new light in its eyes, as if beholding the phenomenal advance—moral, political, and material—of free Italy.

MR. STEDMAN'S "VICTORIAN POETS."

With a Supplement.*

AFTER a lapse of twelve years Mr. Stedman brings out the thirteenth edition of his Victorian Poets with a supplementary chapter bringing the work down to the jubilee year. Few volumes of contemporary criticism have enjoyed greater favor, had a wider or more decisive influence, or are surer of permanent recognition as representing the literary characteristics of a memorable era. Mr. Stedman's review is indeed a model of scientific criticism. The spirit animating the author is that of a painstaking naturalist who classifies forms, and maps out genera and species, in conformity with exact standards. But Mr. Stedman not only classifies; he lays

* The Revolutionary Movement of 1848-9 in Italy, Austria-Hungary, and Germany. By C. Edmund Maurice. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.00.

* Victorian Poets: Revised and Extended, by a Supplementary Chapter, to the Fiftieth Year of the Period Under Review. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.25.

down "the true canons of imaginative art, as applied to the office of the poet;" his work is not only a record of production, it is the development of a method. It indicates a point of view, a disposition of mind, a manner of approach, a way of observation, a system of judgment. We do not mean to say that everything is brought down to hard and fast lines, to the criteria of the foot-rule and compass. Far from it; the method is elastic, self-adjusting, comprehensive. Its ideal is "simplicity and spontaneity refined by art, exalted by imagination, and sustained by intellectual power." It judges each production or group of productions as a separate entity, as a manifestation of individuality, yet it brings all to a fixed standard and indicates defects, not harshly, but firmly and clearly, with unflinching appreciation. A young critic who would fit himself for earnest work, who desires to be helpful to his fellows, could hardly do better than to give some hours of patient study to this book and its companion volume on the Poets of America. Such books as these, indeed, go far to advance that beneficent time predicted by Mr. Howells when we shall all be critics, and when even the country newspapers will teem with thoughtful essays upon the philosophical tendencies of the poems and novels of the day! No one certainly of average intellect and morals can follow Mr. Stedman without attaining a finer comprehension of the critic's mission or getting an idea of how that mission may best be discharged; without, moreover, acquiring, at least for the time being, the catholicity of temper which is indispensable to any man or woman who would formulate a trustworthy opinion concerning any work of art. If we cannot all be critics, we can at least have some idea of the critic's true function, and be able to derive benefit from it when it has been properly performed.

We are not surprised to find that Mr. Stedman in revising his conclusions discovers little demanding change. A change here and there in the comparative scale, an adjustment of relative values, he does occasionally regard as necessary, but in the main the book stands without serious modification. The added chapter is properly named. It is supplementary in every sense to what goes before. The author's views regarding some matters—more especially regarding the dramatic qualities of Browning—are here made more complete; and his analyses of the later work of leading poets never fail to point out a harmonious development from the ideas and methods of their earlier years.

This chapter is moreover studded with gleaming jewels of characterization that reflect the writer's thought in their polished facets, and throw new rays of light into the reader's mind. Admirable are the comments on Rossetti as "the child of astral light . . . the most unworldly and nervously exalted of modern poets"; the perception of "the notes of starlight and shadow" in Matthew Arnold's verse; the remark apropos of Edwin Arnold that "a distinct theme and motive skillfully followed are the next best things to inventive power"; the phrase likening Toru Dutt's poems to "the pressed leaves of a tropic flower that, striving to adapt itself to an atmosphere not its own, exhaled some fragrance ere it died"; or the defining of the light verse of the day as "Kensington-stitch rhyme."

In conclusion Mr. Stedman takes a hopeful view of the outlook for English poetry—although his hopefulness is tempered with regret for the unprofitableness of current verse. An heroic crisis, he thinks, must come before there is a return of poetic vigor. "Ireland is filling men's ears with her threats and appeals. In a season of jubilee, socialists crowd St. Paul, . . . the Marseillaise is chorused in London thoroughfares, and London poets sing—trioletts."

THACKERAY'S LETTERS.*

"THERE are gains for all our losses," sings the poet, and with some necessary allowances for the exceptional and the imprévu he may be said to sing wisely. Here, for example, are some of us who, during the past few years, have suffered untold things from a new and dreadful light thrown on possibility by the publication of certain modern memoirs and volumes of "Recollections." It has been made plain to us that neither friendship nor morals nor dying injunctions nor the wishes of survivors can avail, when once the thirst for book-making, more avid than that for blood, has possession of a man of letters. We have seen an English gentleman take advantage of the senile confidence reposed in him by a great man in his decadence, to unveil the treasured secrets of his home, and cast a permanent stigma over the hearts and tempers which belonged to it. And now, to us who have seen and deplored all this, comes the compensating spectacle of a man equally great, whose life held nothing that needed concealment, but whose preference for privacy has been respected by his family and friends with a thoroughness of delicate reserve which it is delightful to contemplate.

We refer to Mr. Thackeray. His wishes have debarred, and still debar, his daughter, Mrs. Ritchie, who is the natural depository of the great bulk of his correspondence, from giving any portion of it to the world, though she is undoubtedly aware of the value of the literary treasure thus withheld. It is with her sanction, however, that a selection from his letters to his friends the Brookfields now appears:

"I am of course unable myself by his expressed wish to do anything of the sort" [she writes to Mrs. Brookfield], "while I am glad to be spared the doubts and difficulties of such a work. I have often felt sorry that no one should ever know more of him. You know better than any one what we should like said and unsaid, and what he would have wished; so that I am very glad to think you have undertaken the work."

"More of him" is exactly what these letters reveal, a side of Thackeray's character in which the world has a deep interest, and to which it is a privilege to be admitted. The warmth of his friendships, the delicate play of humor in his every-day thought, the pluck and courage which fought their way through all discouragements and buckled resolutely to necessary tasks, the wonderful wealth of tenderness which underlay the fun and the satire, the deep, unfeigned reverence over which worldliness made but a thin crust, are shown by nothing in all Thackeray has written as distinctly as in these letters. He was a very lonely man when he first came into contact with the Brookfields. His young wife had lost her reason suddenly and hopelessly about three months after the birth of her youngest child; his fame as a writer was in its infancy, his income was small and precarious, the claims upon him heavy. We can well imagine how much the sympathy and regard of Mr. Brookfield and his sweet wife must have meant to him. Thackeray was eminently a man who needed women to look after him and be good to him, and how richly he repaid such goodness, what sympathy he gave in return, what quick gratitude and confidence, what exquisite affectionateness of feeling and expression!

There are scarcely any letters of the day comparable in delightfulness with these. They brim with individual touches and happy unexpectedness of phrase. Here and there where the humor seizes him, a droll little pen and ink sketch comes in, framed by the writing, or he relapses into antique French or the stately diction of the Middle Ages. The glimpses given now and again of his methods of work are especially curious and interesting:

"You know you are only a piece of Amelia" [he writes to Mrs. Brookfield in 1848]; my mother is another half, my poor little wife—est pour beaucoup."

And again from Paris in 1849:

"I have been to see the actress, who received us in a yellow satin drawing-room, and I am ashamed to say that I pitched in with still stronger compliments than before, and I dare say she thinks the enormous old Englishman is rapturously in love with her; but she will never see him again, that faithless giant. I am past the age when Fortheringays inflame, but I shall pop her and her boudoir into a book some day, and that will be the end of our transactions."

There are vivid bits of description as well, like that of the exhibition of 1857, which is mentioned as "a noble, awful, great, love-inspiring, gooseflesh-bringing sight." But best of all are the passages where the soul of Thackeray is bared to the friends whom he loved. There are limits to quotation, but two of these passages we must be allowed to give, before taking leave of a book which has perhaps given more pleasure to more people than any other published within the year, if not the decade. The first is in a letter to Mrs. Brookfield, dated November, 1848:

* A Collection of Letters of Thackeray. 1847-1855. With Portrait and Reproductions of Letters and Drawings. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50.

"Why should we?" [i. e., "hate, curse, and undervalue" the world we live in.] "What we see here is but an expression of God's will, so to speak—a beautiful earth, and sky, and sea—beautiful afflictions and sorrows, wonderful changes and developments of creation, suns rising, stars shining, birds singing, clouds and shadows changing and fading, people loving each other—and who is to say that we are to ignore all this or not value and love them, because there is another unknown world yet to come? why that unknown future world is but a manifestation of God Almighty's will, and a development of nature, neither more nor less than this in which we are, and an angel glorified, or a sparrow on a gutter, are equally parts of His creation. The light upon all the saints in Heaven is just as much and no more God's work, as the sun which shall shine tomorrow upon this infinitesimal speck of creation, and under which I shall read, please God, a letter from my kindest lady and friend. About my future state I don't know; I leave it to the disposal of the awful Father. Hallelujah may be greater in degree than this, but not in kind, and countless ages of stars may be blazing infinitely, but you and I have a right to rejoice and believe in our little part, and to trust in today as in tomorrow."

The second passage, still more beautiful, occurs in a letter written from Washington in 1853, to Miss Kate Perry:

"I don't pity any one who leaves the world, not even a fair young girl in her prime; I pity those remaining. On her journey, if it pleases God to send her, depend upon it there is no cause for grief; that's but an earthly condition. Out of our stormy life, and brought nearer the Divine light and warmth, there must be a serene climate. Can't you fancy sailing into the calm? Would you care about going on the voyage only for the dear souls left upon the other shore? But we shan't be parted from them, no doubt, though they are from us."

It is a matter for wonderment that these letters, which we believe have been for sale, for magazine purposes, for a considerable time, should have so long escaped publication. It was reserved for the enterprise of the editor of Scribner's Magazine to discover and secure for his opening numbers what may be called the main literary find of the year. In her choice of material for the volume, it is understood that Mrs. Brookfield has had the valuable advice and assistance of Mr. James Russell Lowell.

ENGLISH HISTORY BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS.*

PRETTY books are these, pioneers of the new series of "English History by Contemporary Writers," compact, trim, and every way attractive, bound in light brown linen stamped in black and red, ornamented without with Latin and St. Andrew's crosses blended, and enlivened within with fac-similes of old engravings, sometimes inserted in the

* Edward III and his Wars. 1327-1360. Extracts from the Chronicles of Froissart and others, arranged and edited by W. J. Ashley. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 60c.

The Misrule of Henry III. Extracts from the Writings of Matthew Paris and others, selected and arranged by the Rev. W. H. Hutton. Do., do.

text, but oftener printed on paper larger than the page and folded in as insertions. The plan of these books we have already described: it is to give history of noted periods in extracts from chronicles of the periods themselves. Thus, for the materials of Edward III and his Wars, of the age of chivalry, Mr. Ashley draws from Froissart and Jehan le Bel, Adam of Murimuth and Robert of Avesbury, the Chronicle of Lanercost and the State Papers. For the still earlier time of Henry III Mr. Hutton goes chiefly to Matthew Paris, Robert Grosseteste, and Adam of Marsh. The books are furnished with chronological tables of contents, in the case of Mr. Hutton's a little more carefully prepared; with genealogical charts, and accounts of the authorities used; and with dated sub-headings in heavy type. Very quaint even in their modern dress are some of these extracts of mediæval literature, deftly pieced together here by skillful hands so as to make a consecutive narrative. Henry's reign, it will be remembered, was one of weakness and indiscretion, with resulting disorders, but notable for the introduction of gold coinage and of coal as fuel; while Edward's was as brilliant as his great-grandfather's had been cloudy, with its subjection of Scotland, its invasion of France, its battles of Crecy and Poitiers, its heroic Black Prince and its dreadful Black Death, that pestilence which is estimated to have cost England more lives than all the King's wars. Then was it that royalty first occupied Windsor Castle as a residence, that cloth-weaving was introduced from Flanders, and that the Houses of Lords and Commons retired into separate chambers at Westminster.

Such are the familiar topics which are touched in these pages lightly, with the accent of their times. Thus at Crecy:

The King leapt on a palfrey with a white rod in his hand, one of his marshals on the one hand and the other on the other hand; he rode from rank to rank, desiring every man to take heed that day to his right and honor.

And at Poitiers:

They entered a-horseback into the way, where the great hedges were on both sides set full of archers. As soon as the men of arms entered, the archers began to shoot on both sides, and did slay and hurt horses and knights.

One of the seventeen rules for Bishop Grosseteste's household was as follows:

Command the pantler with your bread and the butler with wine, and all come together afore you at the table afore grace, and let be there three yeomen assigned to serve the high table and the two side tables on solemn days. And lay they, not the vessels deserving for wine or ale upon the table but afore you: but be they laid under the table.

The editors of the two books before us are both Oxford scholars, and these two initial volumes are to be followed immediately by five others, making a series which will be to the taste of many historical readers debarred from access to the original authorities.

MINOR NOTICES.

Mr. Ivan Panin has chosen to inflict upon the public a second series of what he calls his Thoughts. "My thoughts," he says, "do not form a system. But crumbs are as nourishing as a slice." Here are a few of the aforesaid "crumbs:"

8. Misery feeds more on doubt than on certainty.

9. The soul's greatest disease is anxiety; its greatest remedy is faith.

10. True health lives in the present; it is disease that worries o'er the future.

11. We are made more unhappy by the ills we fear than by those we suffer.

12. The surest way to increase enjoyment is to decrease expectations.

After a feast of "crumbs" like that one feels like taking up the multiplication table by way of intellectual recreation. [Cupples & Hurd. 50c.]

Prof. Huxley's comprehensive review of The Advance of Science in the Last Half-Century is reprinted from Mr. Hood's Reign of Queen Victoria in large-typed, pamphlet form. Prof. Huxley's outline has its defects, but is a striking contribution to "that conviction of the unbroken sequence of the order of natural phenomena," which he declares to be "the great, and perhaps the most important effect of the increase of natural knowledge." [D. Appleton & Co. 25c.]

Four volumes recently added to that interesting biographical series, "The World's Workers," demand attention. Phyllis Browne writes of Mrs. Somerville and Mary Carpenter, with noteworthy sagacity and frequent pauses to draw a moral by the way. E. M. Tomkinson relates the life-work of three contemporary "workers"—Sarah Robinson, founder of the "Soldiers' Institute;" Agnes Weston, founder of the "Sailors' Rest;" and Mrs. Meredith, founder of the "Discharged Prisoners' Aid." These sketches are all well written, although the style is somewhat high-flown. Thomas A. Edison and Samuel F. B. Morse are the subjects of the third volume, Van Buren Denslow writing with ardent enthusiasm of the first and Jane Marsh Parker dramatically and concisely of the second. Mr. Denslow's perspective is awry at times (where for instance he classes Schuyler Colfax with Dickens and Franklin as instances of town-bred boys who have attained eminence); but his sketch is in the main very readable. The fourth volume, by Henry Frith, is devoted to The Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury. Mr. Frith has a fine appreciation of Lord Shaftesbury's career, and in view of this we may pardon the occasional laxity of his syntax. Any one looking for wholesome reading for boys and girls could not go wrong in selecting these volumes from "The World's Workers." [Cassell & Co. Each, 50c.]

The ninety-first issue in "Cassell's National Library" is the Endymion and Other Poems of Keats, with an introductory note by Prof. Morley. The "other poems" are "The Eve of St. Agnes," the odes "to a Nightingale," "to Psyche," and "to a Grecian Urn," "Fancy," and the ode beginning "Bards of passion and of mirth." [Cassell & Co. 10c.]

A seventh edition of that ambitious example of undergraduate wit, Rollo's Journey to Cambridge, appears with the imprint of Cupples & Hurd. [75c.]

The Literary World.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 12, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

THE RESCUE OF THE TELEGRAPH.

THE extinction of the Baltimore & Ohio Telegraph Company by its absorption into the Western Union Company puts out of the way the only considerable rival of the latter, and very sensibly enlarges the scope and power of the Western Union as a monopoly in the most important field of public intercommunication in this country. From one point of view this is not a "literary" topic, but from several other points of view it is. The telegraph is now superseding the mails as an agent of intellectual intercourse; it is largely the medium of thought and communication, and is likely to be more and more so; and we believe it to be a legitimate part of our province to discuss the terms and conditions upon which the use of it is to be enjoyed by the people. We believe moreover that the time has come for the government of the United States to take hold of the telegraph system and administer it for the public good, as it does the mail system.

What would be said of a proposition to take the carriage of the mails out of the hands of the government and carry it back where it was fifty years ago, to express companies and private carriers? Everybody would rebel against such a proposition. It would mean a great increase in the expense of the system and a great reduction in the efficiency of it. For the letters of the country to be carried as the telegrams are now carried by a corporation would be to subject the country's correspondence to bondage. Government administration of the post-office means regularity, promptness, honesty, efficiency, and the lowest possible cost to the people.

Now every consideration which applies to the postal service applies to the telegraph service. The effect of leaving the latter in private hands is evident the moment competition is removed; tolls go up inordinately, and the public, to which electric communication has become a necessity, is left to the mercy of a stock company which has dividends to pay and a property to support in the market.

A vigorous effort was made some years ago to secure this change which we now advocate, and considerable pressure was brought to bear upon Congress in behalf of it, but the movement was distrusted at the time because of those who had charge of it. Under different auspices a different result might have been reached.

The present juncture is a good one to revive agitation and push it to a successful issue. Government management of the tel-graph is a success in other lands; why should it not be here? Of the practical details in effecting the change we are not competent to speak; but there can be no question as to the principle. There is no reason, except in practical details which are capable of adjustment, why a complete telegraph system should not be annexed to the postal system, with every post-office enlarged into a telegraph office, with delivery of telegrams by carriers in the same way as letters, or by "special delivery" where most urgent haste is needed, and with a great increase of efficiency and economy.

Government railroads may belong to the far future, but for a government telegraph there is a sure place in the present; and the reformer who can be the means of securing it in this country will entitle himself to gratitude and reward, as truly as did Rowland Hill for the introduction of penny postage.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

Bonnie Prince Charlie.

Bonnie Prince Charlie. By G. A. Henty. [Scribner & Welford.]

Bonnie Prince Charlie is another of Mr. G. H. Henty's long series of fictions based on history, for the entertainment of young readers. It relates the fortunes of Ronald Leslie, son to a Scotch gentleman of good family, who, after the Jacobite rising in 1715, escapes to France, enters the service of the king, and is made colonel of one of the Scotch regiments. Unhappily he falls in love with the heiress of a noble family and secretly weds her. When the marriage is discovered two years later, the lady is sent to a convent, and Colonel Leslie to prison on a lettre de cachet; but Malcolm Anderson, the latter's devoted servant, escapes to Scotland with their child, whom he places under the care of his brother, a respectable bailie of Glasgow. In this safe protection the boy grows up, passing with the public for an adopted son of the worthy bailie. But Malcolm, who has no idea of having his young eaglet turned into a sober barn-door fowl, has him secretly instructed in the use of arms, in true Jacobite principles, and in the knowledge of his true name and station. By the time that he arrives at man's stature, Ronald has become an expert swordsman, and a Jacobite fracas precipitating his action, he passes over to France, where he sets about the deliverance of his parents from their respective captivities. How he gets at the one in the convent and rescues the other from La Chatelet, by a mixture of prudence, daring, and good luck, and in course of doing so takes part in the disastrous campaign under Prince Charles Edward, which ended at Culloden, is well and happily told, and makes an interesting story, framed with care and accuracy, not only as to the broad facts of history, but also as to those minor points of custom, observances, language, and ideas which form the true picture of a time.

The Giant Dwarf. A Story for Young and Old. By the author of "The Fitch Club," "Birchwood," "Riverside Museum," "Prof. Johnny," etc. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.]

This pleasing and successful author, whose pseudonym is "Jak," has taken a new departure and introduced us to the dwellers of a mountain cottage in Germany, Frau Geisel and her grandson Kasper, who eke out a scanty living by making lace of a famous and beautiful kind. The boy rebels at doing "the double stint" at the lace, which is his punishment for offenses, and runs away. Happily he falls into the hands of a noble and benevolent man, Herr Mischel, who is known in all the region as "the giant dwarf," and who in a quiet way is a philanthropist and reformer worthy of being classed with Balzac's "country doctor." He is a wonderfully sweet and exalted character, and the story of his charities and his influence is helpful and uplifting. He has inventive genius, practical sense, and wisdom for emergencies, and is sympathetic and tender, with a pathetic little romance of his own, the sequel to which is just what the reader would have it. There are, in fact, several homely romances, and story and incidents enough to hold the attention. A wise and pleasant book it is, with a healthful atmosphere, hints for housekeepers and mechanics, teachings that are good for both young and old, and merits enough as a whole to entitle it to a favored shelf in the household library.

The Soldier's Ward; or, Saved from Martyrdom. A sequel to "Walter Harmsen." By E. Gerdes. Translated from the Dutch (with changes and additions) by Rev. Daniel Van Pelt. [Presbyterian Board of Publication. $1.25.] This is evidently intended for a Sunday-school book, and the translator is in earnest sympathy with his subject, which is to show some of the schemes of the Jesuits in Holland about 1600, the terrors of the Inquisition, and the sufferings which a Christian, Antoine Moreau, experiences for adhering to his faith. Interwoven with the narrative of his life, which is said to closely follow history, is a plot which concerns many other people in high estate and low. Walter Harmsen, the preacher, is a prominent and interesting character, and so is Joris, the dwarf; the changing fortunes of Antoine, the interest which centers about Lady Jacoba, the tragedy of the unjust steward, the conspiracy of the robbers, the wanderings of the evangelist, and the troublous events at Leyden and Wassenaar, give vitality to the story; the fundamental principles of the Christian religion are constantly kept in sight; and the scenes, locale, surroundings, personal traits and customs, are unmistakably those of Holland.

Precisely what form of Christian knowledge is "promoted" by Mère Suzanne, and Other Stories, published by the S. P. C. K., it would be hard to say. The tales are well told, as is usual in tales told by Mrs. Macquoid, and are more or less picturesque and pathetic, and less or more interesting; but we fail to see to what extent Christianity is benefited by hearing of the hard-hearted M. de la Rive, his insistence on his niece's marriage with a man she dislikes, and her consequent disappearance under the waters of the Seine; or of how the English artist trifles with the affections of Lillie, the miller's daughter, until she also vanishes, presumably into a watery grave. There is no special harm in any of the little stories, but why a grave and reverend society, especially one which bears such a criticism-compelling name, should go out of its way to print them, is not easy to be seen. [London: Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co.]

We are not quite sure that we agree with Mr. Horace E. Scudder as to the necessity of re-writing the well-known fairy tales so that "children of eight can read them for themselves." The children of eight whom we are best acquainted with have no difficulty in enjoying "Cinderella" and "Beauty and the Beast" in the old versions, which seem to us as intelligible and even more graceful than their re-arrangement in this Book of Folk Stories, and we have an old-fashioned prejudice against tampering with texts which bear the delightful stamp of old usage upon them, unless there exists a real necessity for doing so. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 60c.]

MINOR FICTION.

Fools of Nature. By Alice Brown. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] We seem to detect the work of a new hand in Fools of Nature. It is a story whose strong points are offset by some weaknesses, but is fresh and of unmistakable cleverness. The collocation of faith and credulity and arrant imposture in the spiritualistic trio; the simple-hearted old man so full of easy and joyful belief; the half developed boy manipulated into dishonesty by arts beyond his power of comprehension, while holding fast the while to his integral honesty of purpose; the charlatan who befools them both—all are interesting and are vigorously sketched. So are the loves of Stephen and Sarah, which in their earlier stages are full of charming and original touches. We confess that we fail to see the validity of Sarah's subsequent action, or why, having married Stephen with a full understanding that the previous wife, from whom he has been divorced for the best of reasons, is still living, she should feel that a new light is shed on the path of duty by the accidental circumstance that she meets her predecessor face to face in a railway station! The fact that by the act of marrying Stephen she took upon herself certain vows and obligations not to be abrogated without very weighty reasons, seems to have made no impression on either her mind or that of the writer of the story. It was too late for her to go back and debate the point whether any woman is justified in marrying any divorced man whose wife is still living; the fact was that she had done so, and having done so, with her eyes open, was bound to abide by her act. The other weak points in the tale are the exposure of the medium, which is hackneyed, and the method by which Stephen's highly inconvenient first wife is removed from the scene. The heroic woman who nurses the obstacle to her happiness through typhoid, has become a stock figure in fiction. Surely something better and newer could have been devised for restoring Sarah Mann to her lost happiness. So bright and fresh and dear a creature deserves to have a little more invention bestowed upon her.

Major and Minor. By W. E. Norris. 2 vols. [Henry Holt & Co. $2.00.] This is the story of two brothers, sons of a country baronet who possesses a small, unentailed estate and most unprogressive ideas. Under the mistaken impression that his eldest son, in case of inheritance, would be disposed to part with a portion of the ancestral acres for speculative building purposes, Sir Brian Legrave executes a will, making Gilbert, the second son, his heir. Of this will he subsequently repents, and he is on the point of altering it when sudden death cuts short the intention. Both his sons are aware of the true state of the case, but Gilbert elects to lie about the matter, denies that his father had the idea of changing his will, and "feels it his duty" to abide by the terms of the unjust testament. It would be unjust to forestall the author. So how Nemesis, skillfully invoked by a pretty young woman, overtakes the offender after a fashion most satisfactory to the bystander, can only be learned by reading the story, which is distinctly an entertaining one.

Ismay's Children. By the author of "Hogan, M. P." [Macmillan & Co. Paper, 50c.] There seems an irresistible tendency toward confusion in stories of Irish life, which, perhaps, is a concession to the somewhat vagrant and uncertain mental processes of the inhabitants of that island, and so may be pardoned as an attempt toward "local color." However this may be, Ismay's Children, by the author of "Hogan, M. P.," furnishes a good example of it. The characters, the sequence of the story, and the nominatives have a way of becoming badly mixed, and the reader is fain to turn back and puzzle and re-peruse with the hopeless hope of being able to disentangle the narrative, and fit the perplexing he and she to their proper belongings. Withal the story includes some vigorous pictures, one character of distinctly fresh type—we refer to Tighe O'Malley; and it does not end with a murder, which in an Irish story of these days must be counted as an original feature.

Old New England Days. A Story of True Life. By Sophie M. Damon. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.25.] The scene of this book is laid in Vermont, and the story opens in 1814, when the family of Gen. Allwoods receive a call from a regiment of soldiers on their way to fight the British. The general is one of the pioneers in the Winooski valley; his wife has received an education qualifying her to practice medicine; they are persons of distinguished character, refinement, and wide influence; they have seven daughters, and the "cutest of the crowd" is the latest comer, little Ruth, whose story it is which is made of chief importance, connected with a young lieutenant who was in that regiment and who carried off one of the tiny shoes she dropped in her fright. However, as nearly all the other sisters, and the cousins, and Miss Priscilla Pepper, have love episodes, there is a good deal of a mild sort of romance in the book (rather too much spun out), besides that which belongs to Ruth. The narrative is really family history, somewhat disguised, and the personal facts, scenes, and incidents pertaining to life in a new country are drawn from a "grandmother's memories of her girlhood in the Green Mountain State," and as such have a value; but the chronicler has a deeper purpose in depicting some of the womanly women of a by-gone generation as exemplified in the estimable Mrs. Allwoods and her seven daughters, who may be taken as types of the loveliest and the best of their time.

The Count of the Saxon Shore. By the Rev. Prof. Alfred J. Church, M.A., and Ruth Putnam. Illustrated. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.] What can better combine the two desirable objects, instruction and amusement, than a historical novel, provided only it is well executed and true to the times and scenes presented? The period and place here chosen, that of the withdrawal of the Roman military force from the province of Britain, about A.D. 408, have been seldom, if ever, selected for the purpose, and afford a stage not only for Roman and for British actors, but also for Saxon. The Saxon race had already begun predatory voyages against the commerce of the island in which it was to form in future times the leading population, and which it was to raise to the proud position of mistress of the seas. The title Count of the Saxon Shore, bestowed by the Emperor Maximian upon a Roman naval officer, is misleading, since the duty annexed to the dignity was to protect not Saxon but British shores, but against pirates of Saxon origin. There is enough of stirring adventure to please even the young folk and justify the name of a tale. The illustrations, done by chromo-lithography in a few modest shades of brown and yellow, are somewhat novel and show the costumes of the time. In the richness of the paper and beauty of the typography we recognize that the Putnams are maintaining their high standard.

White Cockades. By Edward Irenæus Stevenson. With frontispiece. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.] This book deals with an episode of that favorite time of the historical novelist, the Scottish insurrection of 1745 in behalf of the royal line of Stewart. We will not diminish our readers' pleasure in the narrative by giving here even an outline, but will assure them that it is of the kind which grows from the first in dramatic interest, until it becomes difficult to lay aside the book before all is read. There is in the style a combined clearness and vigor which denote an able writer. We hope the public will be favored with more work from the same skillful hand; and in such case we mistake much if the author does not win for himself an enviable place in literature.

MINOR NOTICES.

The Making of the Great West.

The Making of the Great West. By Samuel Adams Drake. With Illustrations and Maps. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.75.]

Here is a series of brief, spirited sketches of the planting and early history of the American communities west of the great river Mississippi, from the early part of the sixteenth century almost to our own day. The author's aim has been "to occupy a space between the larger and lesser histories" of the origins of our western settlements; to condense greatly, yet without sacrificing the interest of the narrative. Division is made under three heads, rather oddly called "groups:" (I.) "three rival civilizations," to wit, Spanish, French, and English and their respective efforts at exploration and colonization; (II.) "birth of the American idea," embracing explorations under the régime of the United States; (III.) "gold in California," in which we learn, not only of the vast Pacific State, but also of the national controversy over the extension of slavery, and have an admirable picture of "the Kansas-Nebraska struggle." The order followed is generally that of time; but this is strangely violated in the introduction of a sketch of the character of Queen Elizabeth immediately after the Pacific voyage, 1776-8, of Capt. Cook.

The sentences are short, intelligible, and vivacious, but disfigured by occasional slovenly colloquial expressions. The numerous illustrations and the maps and index add to the value of the work.

Pen Portraits of Literary Women.

Pen Portraits of Literary Women, by Themselves and Others. Edited by Helen Gray Cone and Jeannette L. Gilder. Two vols. [Cassell & Co. $3.00.]

These Pen Portraits of Literary Women are confessedly patterned after Mr. Mason's Personal Traits of British Authors, and in plan and arrangement do not differ materially from the last-named work. The method, as we took occasion to say when Mr. Mason's book appeared, is a good one, and carried out intelligently could not fail of interesting results. The two editors engaged upon the Pen Portraits show themselves to be excellent bookmakers, and they have discharged the not very difficult task of selecting extracts and compiling biographical data with discrimination. The women chosen as subjects are, in the first volume, Hannah More, Frances Burney, Mary Godwin, Mary Shelley, Mary Lamb, Maria Edgeworth, Jane Austen, Joanna Baillie, Lady Blessington, and Miss Mitford; and in the second volume, Harriet Martineau, George Sand, Mrs. Browning, Margaret Fuller, Charlotte and Emily Brontë, and George Eliot. In only one instance do we find any indication of unfair treatment, and that relates to Margaret Fuller. The well-known passage from Hawthorne's "Roman Journal" is given in full without justification or palliation. The passage in question is certainly worth more as a revelation of Hawthorne's character than it is as descriptive of Margaret Fuller, and it has no place in this book. Both volumes are provided with lists of works quoted from, but neither is provided with an index.

The Good Things of Life. 4th series. [Frederick A. Stokes. $2.50.] There are some clever hits in The Good Things of Life, fourth series, compiled from the enterprising little weekly of that name, and a good many not so clever—not an unusual disproportion in collections of this sort. American social life certainly furnishes salient points in plenty for the humorist. And Life takes advantage of them, happily enough at times; but we are struck always in glancing over its pages with the fact that our American comic artists too often fail to give the look of breeding and "good form" to their figures. Punch is rarely disappointing in this particular. Its pretty girls and matrons, and handsome young fellows, bear the unmistakable stamp of being ladies and gentlemen; while in Life the young men, when not manifestly "cads," are vacuous and inane to the point of idiocy; and the girls almost without exception have the bearing of the demi-monde about them. There is scarcely a female figure in this volume of its illustrations which looks like a lady; while many of them look so much worse that this negative dispraise seems insufficient.

Beyond the Stars; or, Human Life in Heaven. By Rev. Archibald McCullagh, D.D. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00.] Dr. McCullagh is the minister of a Presbyterian congregation in Brooklyn, L. I. A personal bereavement has led him to the preparation of this little book, the substance of which may have been preached in sermons. In the main it is a literal interpretation and unfolding of the scant teachings of the Christian Scriptures respecting the heavenly state. Dr. McCullagh believes that heaven is a definite place, that it may be in the vicinity of Alcyone, the principal star of the Pleiades and the hypothetical center of the stellar universe; that there are "spiritual bodies" and no "intermediate state," that there will be recognition and employment in heaven, and a general judgment "in the air." Some of Dr. McCullagh's views seem to us crude and childish, but his spirit is sweet and comforting.

Five Last Things. By J. A. Spencer, S.T.D. [Thomas Whittaker. 75c.] The "five last things" considered by Dr. Spencer (who is an Episcopal clergyman) are death, the intermediate state (in which he believes), the resurrection, the judgment, and eternity. Much of the book is parallel to Dr. McCullagh's, to which it is superior in scholarship, critical apparatus, and breadth, though not in spirit. Dr. Spencer, like Dr. McCullagh, proceeds upon the Scripture foundation, which he is careful not to leave. He cites chapter and verse, and his pages are in fact an assemblage of proof-texts. Our own opinion is that we do not know much about "the last things," but all that we do know is here presented, and as we think, some things that we do not know for certainty, but can only conjecture.

Trans-Allegheny Pioneers. By John P. Hall. [Cincinnati: S. C. Cox & Co.] There is considerable local value, not a little personal interest, and occasional picturesque and dramatic force in these historical sketches of the first white settlers west of the Alleghenies in 1748 and after. Of these pioneers the author is one of the oldest living descendants. Family records he has collated and vanishing traditions he has collected with care. He deserves praise and thanks for the labor. The book has little literary form, but is a series of unstudied and unpretending annals, following family lines and individual histories, and full of the domestic experience of the times that tried men's souls. It abounds in those striking little incidents and minute personal traits that escape the ordinary historian, and are only preserved by word of mouth handed down from eye witnesses.

The English Language. By J. M. D. Meiklejohn. [D. C. Heath & Co.] Mr. Meiklejohn is professor of the theory, history, and practice of education in the University of St. Andrews, Scotland. This his book on the English language "provides sufficient matter for the four years of study required, in England, of a pupil-teacher, and also for the first year at his training college." It is a study of the vernacular by the historical method. The analysis is extremely able, the style precise and decisive, the illustrative element copious, the scope comprehensive. The first part deals with orthography, etymology, syntax, word-building, and derivation, with ample sub-divisions; the second of composition, punctuation, figures, paraphrasing, and prosody; the third takes up the philological and historical connection; a fourth and extended part suffices really to give a critical history of English literature, with tables which are alone of great value. Altogether this is a complete, scholarly, and most capable treatise.

Part I. Conscious Motherhood. By Emma Marswedel. Supplemented by Part II. Extracts from Preyer's The Soul of the Child. [Interstate Publishing Co.] The author and editor of this awkwardly entitled book is a kindergarten teacher, a disciple of Froebel, an associate in thought of Miss Elizabeth Peabody and the late Mrs. Horace Mann. She has much more educational skill than literary. Her materials are excellent but poorly put together; her spirit is admirable but it struggles with limitations. The work begins with the science of parenthood and advances to the practical details of the intellectual and moral training of children. That every wife and mother should read this book would be most desirable, but is not to be hoped for. That every president and teacher of colleges for women should read it is a reasonable request. That request we make. No truly feminine nature can fail to be touched, stirred, molded by this sound statement of principles and faithful counsels.

The Life of Abraham Lincoln. By J. G. Holland. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00.] This is simply a new edition, published in the ordinary channels of trade, of a work which first appeared more than twenty years ago, and has heretofore been sold, we believe, only by subscription. The gifted Dr. Holland never had a finer subject, and the lamented Abraham Lincoln never a more sympathetic biographer. The later stories of his life will get more deeply into the secret sources of it, but none will tell it more simply, strongly, tenderly, or dramatically. The whole of Lincoln is in this book—the pioneer, the lawyer, the politician, the statesman, the prophet, the martyr, the man, "the first American," as Lowell calls him; and today no one can read the tale of his taking off without a tear.

A Short History of England. By Cyril Ransome, M.A. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.] Professor Ransome of the Yorkshire College, Leeds, has in this neat compendium of English history to the present day, avoided introducing what are common elements in most later textbooks, the history of manners and customs and the development of the literature. He has thus gained greater space for the working of economic causes, he says, but we have not found sufficient compensation for the omissions in the few brief paragraphs, which are all we can discover, that bear upon topics of political economy. The book distinctly lacks interest because of this return to the older fashion of political summaries, although as a handbook of this kind it is well proportioned and well written, in a simple but not childish style. As Prof. Ransome makes but seven English dynasties, his preface should not say that "the history is divided into nine books according to dynasties."

The J. B. Lippincott Co. have issued a third edition, revised and enlarged, of Professor William Dennis Marks's treatise on The Relative Proportions of the Steam Engine, first published in 1878, and passed to a second edition in 1883. The book is strictly scientific and technological, and has the value of authority for students of the theory and operation of steam engines. It is largely made up of mathematical computations of the requisite size and strength of the different parts of the engine, with abundant formulas for their construction. There is an important added chapter on the limitations of the expansion of steam, and one on the principles of "governors"—a series of tables. An excellent peculiarity of the book is its being interleaved in blank for the use of students of engineering science and practice. The diagrams are numerous. [$3.00.]

At the "private press" of Franklin P. Rice, Worcester, Mass., have been printed in truly excellent style 125 copies of a quaintly written tract on tobacco, entitled Santa Croce, "a Nicotian Treatise," copyrighted by the publisher and, we guess, written by him. The literary flavor of it, its shy humor, its old style type and large at that, its broad margins, its uncut leaves, and withal the numbering of the several copies in true bibliomaniacal fashion, invest the brochure with some of the elements of a curiosity and point to the time when it may be accounted a rarity. The quizzical frontispiece, showing the smoky interior of the new Lake Quinsigamond Boat Club house, "as seen from the lake," indicates that the shade of the late and lamented George Trask may be the responsible spirit of what is to follow; but the concluding words of the essay, "Perhaps, after all, the wisest course will be to give up smoking ourselves and encourage its practice by our friends," suggest the real leniency of the author's judgment. He is historical, however, as well as critical, and his citations attest the honor paid to the weed for many generations.

Trübner & Co. of London are the publishers, in its 10th edition, of The New Catholic Church, a small book of "Thoughts on Theism and Suggestions towards a Public Religious Service, in Harmony with Modern Science and Philosophy." The author is not named, but he might be the Rev. Charles Voysey, or Mr. M. D. Conway, or an own English cousin to the Chicago author of Uplifts of the Soul, lately noticed in our columns. The author believes in deity (with limitations), confesses the religious nature of man and the universality of law, complains of extravagances in present religious symbolism, catalogues the signs of progress in the churches, calls for aspiration rather than supplication, has a vision of a new church whose foundation is neither Calvinism nor atheism, and proposes a new religious service therefor. A peculiar principle of the latter is a recognition of the law of spiritual growth, so that "the services would undergo such changes as the intellectual, moral, and spiritual development of the congregation might require." The book is honest, serious, intelligent, mistaken, well-intended, unpractical; a sign of the times. [3s. 6d.]

Mr. Tulloch's Story of the Life of Queen Victoria, "told for boys and girls all over the world," is a faithful, picturesque, almost reverent outline of the career of the good Queen from childhood down to the jubilee. The book has been revised by the Queen's own hand and is very readable. It contains, of course, nothing new, but it is well adapted to the purpose for which it was designed. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25.]

Mr. Wm. O. Stoddard continues his carefully studied and well written "Lives of the Presidents" with a volume on Madison, Monroe, and Adams, not weaving the three biographies into a single strand, but treating each in completeness by itself and arranging the three consecutively into one book of 331 pages. Mr. Madison gets a little more space than either of his successors. These books are not written especially for children, though their picturesque style is fitted to arrest the attention of young or undisciplined minds, and they are excellent for popular use. The series if carried out as it has been begun will be a valuable addition to American biography. [Frederick A. Stokes. $1.25.]

The author of Elementary Flower Painting (with eight colored plates) says encouragingly that "a measure of success is possibly more easy of attainment" in this than in any other branch of art. This is guarded language. The words following, "there are fewer difficulties to contend with, and they are more easily overcome," are more positive. The plates are double, so to speak: one part in outline, to aid in the sketch, the other filled in with color. Each subject is accompanied with instructions. [Cassell & Co. $2.50.]

Well-Worn Roads Travelled by a Painter in Search of the Picturesque, is a presentation in little of the beautiful gift volume, by Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, issued last year under the same title. What a difference in bulk can be made by the omission of illustrations and a change of margin and letterpress, will be apparent to any one who glances at the two editions, since the smaller one holds all the readable contents of the larger, together with some of the vignettes, and head and tail pieces. It makes a pretty and dainty volume; and the author's touch with the pen is as light and finished and graphic, and his little word croquis as effective, as those made with the pencil and etching needle. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.]

The Gray Tigers of Smithville is an extravaganza intended to be acted by school or college boys, but it seems to us little suited to such a purpose. Its liveliness is heavy and its tone ill-bred, and we should not recommend it for the use of young actors in search of easy dialogue and a funny play. [Philadelphia: Edward Roth.]

A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago publish a Price-List of Blank Books, Stationery and Fancy Goods, for 1887-8, which is a curiosity in itself, and a striking index of the enterprise of the Interior, and of the trade of which Chicago is the center. It is a large quarto of nearly 300 pages, profusely illustrated with wood-cuts and some lithographs in colors, printed with rubricated headings on every page, and spreading before the eye of the reader samples of the immense stocks of goods carried by this house in the departments indicated. It is a vulgar question, we know, to be asked in Boston, but we wonder what it cost to get out this catalogue—a hundred thousand copies of it, we suppose.

We have No. I Vol. I of the Journal of Morphology, edited by C. O. Whitman and E. P. Ellis, Jr. "Morphology" is the science of the ideal forms of the structural parts of plants and animals. This, then, is a record of microscopic studies in cells, tissues, and the like. It is handsomely printed, capacious, and illustrated with finely-colored plates. [Ginn & Co. $6 a year.]

The Rev. Thomas Kelly's Pulpit Trees and Homiletic Undergrowth is a collection of sermons and sermon outlines, displaying really a good deal of originality, freshness, and power, and fitted to help by suggestion such preachers as can be trusted not to copy them. [Funk & Wagnalls.]

The Publishers' Trade List Annual, for 1887, issued from the office of the Publishers' Weekly, New York, is the fifteenth annual volume of its series, and is as portly as ever. It is the collection of the trade catalogues of all the publishers, and is an indispensable book of reference to all dealers, for all librarians, for many editors, and for all who require easy access to the world of current literature. It seems to us that its appearance is more prompt than usual.

C. N. Caspar of Milwaukee, Wis., sends us two little volumes of German verse, Lieder und Sprüche, by Frank Siller, in which the most attractive matter to an American eye is the section containing numerous translations into German from Longfellow, Bryant, Holmes, and Charles Kingsley; and Aglaja, by Rudolph Puchner, a story of a Greek maiden who, deserted by her Roman lover, takes refuge in the camp of Sparta-cus. His advances she rejects to fall by her own hand. Herr Puchner's verse is smooth, but we can hardly regret that the real crowds out the ideal in our country, as he says, if the ideal is worthily represented by poetry so remote from living interest as this tale; it has the artificial tone of a romanticism which has survived the days of its youth and vigor.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Shakespearean Rarities at Hollingbury Copse. We are indebted to Mr Halliwell-Phillipps for a volume printed by him this last July, "for special circulation and presents only," entitled A Calendar of the Shakespearean Rarities, Drawings, and Engravings, preserved at Hollingbury Copse, near Brighton, "that quaint wigwam on the Sussex Downs which has the honor of sheltering more record and artistic evidences connected with the personal history of the Great Dramatist than are to be found in any other of the world's libraries." The special departments in which the collection stands pre-eminent are "1. Early engraved portraits of Shakespeare.—2. Authentic personal relics.—3. Documentary evidences respecting his estates and individuals who are connected with his biography.—4. Artistic illustrations of localities connected with his personal history."

Under the first of these heads the most important item is the copy of the Droeshout portrait of Shakespeare, engraved for the folio of 1623, "in its original proof state before it was altered by an inferior hand into the vitiated form in which it has been so long familiar to the public." This is unquestionably the most reliable likeness of Shakespeare in existence, and the evidences of its genuineness are incontestable. As Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps says, "It is most unfortunate that the appliances of modern art are inadequate to its satisfactory reproduction." We shall refer to this interesting relic more at length hereafter.

Of articles that were at some time indubitably in the possession of Shakespeare, very few are known to be in existence—in fact, none whatever except his will and a small number of title-deeds. There is not a single other domestic memorial of any description the genuineness of which is not more or less doubtful. Of the title-deeds, Mr. Halliwell-Phillipps has six, to which should probably be added one more—the original conveyance of Shakespeare's Blackfriars Estate, 1613, "which was unquestionably on the table when the poet executed the concurrent mortgage, and, as it must have been formally passed over to him, it is altogether most unlikely that he did not touch it with his own hands."

These documents also belong under the third head, together with many others of remarkable interest—as, for example, two deeds bearing the autograph of Sir Thomas Lucy, one of them having a perfect impression of the seal with the three lucas upon it.

Pictorial illustrations of the life of Shakespeare that are at all ancient are extremely rare. Scarcely anything of the kind is to be found dating farther back than the present century; and even the British Museum, "that enormous literary warehouse," contains nothing of much interest. There are only two important collections of drawings and engravings, illustrative of Shakespearian biography. One of these is at the house in which the poet is supposed to have been born, and was made by the late Mr. W. O. Hunt, of Stratford, and Mr. Halliwell-Phillips; and the other is at Hollingbury Copse.

The catalogue of this latter collection includes 805 entries, the description of which fills about 150 octavo pages. Fac-similes and other reproductions of many of the documents and engravings enrich the pages of the monumental work which Mr. Halliwell-Phillips modestly terms Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare.

The Tours of Shakespeare's Company. Another of Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's recent privately printed books is The Visits of Shakespeare's Company of Actors to the Provincial Cities and Towns of England. It condenses the results of investigations made during some twenty summer tours in the course of which the author has examined the archives of more than seventy towns. It is curious that his researches have often been most successful in places of the least promise. He found little in Worcester or Gloucester, and still less in Warwick. Coventry was particularly disappointing, not a single allusion to the dramatist himself being discovered among its records. Here, however, was found an unexpected and amusing bit of evidence showing that "the puritanical Sir Thomas Lucy, the avenger of the Charlecote escapade, was the patron of a body of itinerant actors." The Chamberlain's Accounts for 1584 include the record of a payment of ten shillings "to Sir Thomas Lucy's players." Mention of the visits of Shakespeare's company occurs in the records of Barnstaple, Bath, Bristol, Coventry, Dover—where Shakespeare may have seen the cliff now known by his name, which he describes so graphically in Lea—Faversham, Folkestone, Hythe, Leicester, Maidstone, Marlborough, New Romney, Oxford (six visits between 1604 and 1613), Rye (in Sussex), Saffron-Walden, and Shrewsbury.

By "Shakespeare's company" is meant the theatrical company to which he belonged, and which he probably accompanied on its provincial tours. As Mr. Halliwell-Phillips reminds us, "the poet was never the manager either of a theatre or a company. As a dramatist he was the chief writer for the Lord Chamberlain's or the King's Servants, but as an actor he was never more than a sharer."

The Baconians sometimes assert that the plays show no minute acquaintance with Warwickshire; but, as Mr. Halliwell-Phillips casually remarks in a note, Will Squele of Cotswold and Stephen Sly of Stratford we know on indisputable evidence to have been "veritable contemporaries and neighbours of the great dramatist."

Where did Francis Bacon get acquainted with them?

Henry Giles's "Human Life in Shakespeare." Messrs. Lee & Shepard issue a new edition of this book, originally published in 1868, and reprinted in 1882 with an introduction by Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, who well says of it:

It is a book that brings us sensibly nearer to the great poet. It is filled with fine life as an organism; its parts wisely ordered and related. It prepares the reader gradually for the meaning of its splendid concluding sentence: "Let Athens have Aristophanes, but even all Greece shall not keep Homer; we give Calderon to Spain, but every nation owns Cervantes; Dante belongs to Italy, Milton to England; but Shakespeare belongs to MAN."

On reperusing the book now we are inclined to estimate it more highly than ever—perhaps as the very best contribution to the æsthetic criticism of Shakespeare that has come from an American pen—not even excepting Hudson's Life, Art, and Characters of Shakespeare, which it is hardly possible to praise sufficiently. No student of Shakespeare can afford to do without either of these admirable works.

Henry Irving at Stratford. A Stratford journal, sent us by a friend there, says that during Mr. Irving's recent visit to the town in connection with the dedication of the Childs fountain, the following conversation was overheard between two Irish laborers:

First Paddy.—Why, then, who's this Mither Erven that there's so much talk about? Is he for Gladstone?

Second Paddy.—Och, he's not in that way at all at all.

First P.—What countryman is he?

Second P.—He's a Yankee, I b'lieve. At layst he comes from thim parts.

First P.—What is he, thin?

Second P.—Why, he's a play-actor that plays the divil in the Musayum Thayather up there in the Sthrand in London, and I'm tould it's raal awful to see him with the fire shooting out of him and all round him.

First P.—Oh! and what's he goen for to do?

Second P.—To turn on the new wather-works, down there at Stratford.

First P.—Well, that'll be doing some good, anyhow.

And so the colloquy ended, and they turned to their work.

Donnelly's Cipher in the New York Shakespeare Society. At the next meeting of this Society (Nov. 24th) the Donnelly cipher is to be discussed. Mr. Frey will read a paper upon it; and the president will read a letter from Judge Holmes, who, we understand, says in substance that, while he is not disposed to assert that anything is impossible, he himself sees no drift to the various cipher theories except to make the Baconian hypothesis ridiculous. He wishes, however, to suspend judgment until Donnelly's book comes out.

By the by, the Critic for Oct. 29 has a capital reductio ad absurdum of the cipher business, from the pen of Mr. G. P. Lathrop, who finds in some common New England graveyard rhymes as good a Shakespeare cipher as certain writers fancy they have discovered in the doggerel on the Stratford tombstone.

—Lincolnshire, England, whose new Notes and Queries is advertised in another column, contains Boston and other points of interest to

New Englanders, and indeed to all studious Americans, and we doubt not that this projected journal of its antiquities would instruct and entertain many readers this side the sea.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

831. "We have Drunk from the Same Canteen." Who is the author of the poem "We have Drunk from the Same Canteen," beginning:

There are bonds of all sorts in this world of ours,
Fetters of friendship and ties of flowers,
And true-lovers' knots, I ween;
The girl and the boy are bound with a kiss,
But there's never a bond, old friend, like this—
We have drunk from the same canteen.

Toledo, O.

K. B. S.

PERIODICALS.

Two illustrated papers on the "Home and Haunts of Washington" and on "Mount Vernon as it is" afford agreeable reading in the November Century; a frontispiece portrait of Washington after Wright's painting is a strongly engraved piece of work by T. Johnson. Mrs. Burton Harrison writes the "Home and Haunts" paper and brings a deft capacity of description to the undertaking. Kenyon Cox devotes some pages of friendly criticism to the work of Augustus Saint Gaudens, and Mrs. S. van Rensselaer gives a brief characterization of that sculptor's Lincoln which she pronounces "not only our best likeness of Abraham Lincoln, but our finest work of monumental art." The illustrations representing Mr. Saint Gaudens's work are remarkable for their delicacy of expression. George Kennan rehearses the circumstances attending "The Last Appeal of the Russian Liberals," just prior to the assassination of Alexander II, and translates the appeal in full; it is a remarkable declaration of political principles. Two serial stories of unusual interest are begun: "The Graysons," a story of Illinois, by Edward Eggleston, and "Au Large," a story of the Louisiana Acadians, by Mr. Cable. Not the least valuable contribution to this issue of the Century is General Horace Porter's account of Grant's last campaign.

The November Scribner's opens with an article by W. F. Apthorp on "Wagner and Scenic Art," setting forth Wagner's theories of stage effects and explaining in detail how the theories were carried into practice. The illustrations from original designs by the artists who worked under Wagner's instructions are of great interest. The other illustrated papers in this number are by Prof. Sargent on the physical characteristics of the athlete; Rev. Henry M. Field on Grand Kabylia; and J. S. White on "The Viking Ship." The adopted daughter of ex-Secretary Seward relates how the diplomatic negotiations with Denmark for the purchase of the island of St. Thomas came to naught. It seems that the convention, signed and sealed seventeen years ago, still awaits the action of the Senate. Gen. Francis A. Walker finds the solution of the labor problem in the education of the working classes "in the duties of citizen ship, in ethics, in economics." A little education of that sort for capitalists wouldn't be out of the way! A tender lyric—"In Her Garden," the garden of H. H.—by Susan Coolidge, is among the verse of the number, the fiction including two stories of the intense sort by Mrs. R. H. Davis and Margaret Crosby.

President Barnard in the Forum for November discusses strikes as "Warfare against Society," pointing out that industrial value depends not alone on labor, but on capital, inventive genius, and administrative ability, and that if the representatives of labor make war on the other elements of society they must be repressed "by heroic measures." Edward T. Peters is rambling and inconclusive on the subject of the limitation of fortunes and monopolies; Hon. John D. Long explains how in his opinion President Cleveland has lowered the dignity of the veto power; Senator Colquitt denies that the negro vote is suppressed at the South; George C. Hurlbut says that the Panama Canal Company is ruined and the enterprise as now conducted a failure; George Ticknor Curtis argues that Utah ought to be made a State on the basis of the proposed constitution framed by the Mormon convention; Rev. Dr. H. Van Dyke, Jr., finds no excuse for communism in the teachings of Christianity; W. S. Lilly sums up the object of life in one word—"Duty;" James Lane Allen has a capital article on "Caterpillar Criticism;" Brander Matthews, writing of "Books that have Helped Me," illustrates how a good idea on the part of an editor of a progressive magazine may finally be run into the ground.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—A recent newspaper assertion that Mr. Bret Harte remains in England to secure the English copyright on his books is not justified by the facts. The truth is that any American author can practically obtain copyright on his books in England by publishing them first in that country. Fifteen years ago a case came up for decision before a bench of five judges, involving the question of residence on British soil as a requisite for obtaining copyright in England; and while three of the judges decided in the affirmative, two of them held strongly to the negative. Since then a copyright secured in London, by proper registration and priority of publication has never been interfered with by rival publishers, and copyrights on many American books are now obtained in this manner.

—America has no more devoted adherent to the cause of international copyright than Mr. Thomas Niles, of Roberts Bros. (stat nominis umbra), whose relations with leading English authors are of the most friendly character. Mr. Niles has for a long time had printed at the head of the note paper used in correspondence of the firm the following passage from a speech by Charles Dickens:

There must be an international copyright arrangement. England has done her part, and I am confident the time is not far distant when America will do hers. It becomes the character of a great country, firstly, because it is justice; secondly, because without it you never can have and keep a literature of your own.

—Acting Professor A. J. George of Boston University has prepared an annotated edition of Wordsworth's Prelude, which is in press by

D. C. Heath & Co. Mr. George is a graduate of Amherst College, and has taught successfully in Brookline and Newton, Mass. An ardent Wordsworthian, he has spent two vacations in the north of England, and has had special advantages in preparing this work.

—A new edition is out of Mr. Charles Lanman's Biographical Annals of the Civil Government of the United States, with additions bringing it down to date.

—The Art Age of New York publishes as a supplement to its November number a water-color print entitled "The Village Belle," a facsimile of an original drawing by Mr. Percy Moran.

—G. P. Putnam's Sons are to publish the complete works of Thomas Brower Peacock, under the title of Poems of the Plains and Songs of the Solitudes. Mr. Peacock is, judging by a sheet of printed comments on his works, the laureate of the Wild West.

—The ballad which Robert Louis Stevenson will contribute to the Christmas Scribner's is the first which he has ever published. It has an American title—"Ticonderoga." The fiction in the Christmas Scribner's will be by Bret Harte, H. C. Bunner, Sarah Orne Jewett, and T. R. Sullivan; the illustrations by Will H. Low, William Hole, A.R.S.A., R. Swain Gifford, Howard Pyle, E. H. Blashfield, J. W. Alexander, George Foster Barnes, F. Hopkinson Smith, and F. S. Church.

—George Ebers's biography of Richard Lepsius is published in translation by Z. D. Underhill, with the imprint of W. S. Gottsberger, today.

—Mrs. Whitney has nearly ready a little book entitled Bird-Talk, containing poems which purport to be spoken or sung by various familiar birds—the owl, the chickadee, the quail, etc. The fifteen or twenty poems of which the book consists are illustrated with various decorative designs.

—Miss Edith M. Thomas has collected a new volume of her poems which she entitles Lyrics and Sonnets, to be published immediately by Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

—The additions to be made to Ticknor's "Paper Series" of copyright fiction during November are A Woman's Reason, by W. D. Howells, Damen's Ghost, by E. L. Bynner, and Nights with Uncle Remus, by Joel Chandler Harris.

—A Life of Washington, by Miss Virginia F. Townsend, is announced by the Worthington Co., New York, who have also in press Twelve Times One, a collection of verses for children illustrated in colors by Miss M. A. Lathbury.

—Houghton, Mifflin & Co. of Boston have just brought out a new edition of the "Portrait Catalogue" of their publications. It contains a list of all the books they publish, and portraits of thirty-nine authors whose works are included in it.

—Mr. J. W. Bouton sends us the prospectuses of two new works of which he will have the handling in this country: The Salon of Paris, 1887, and A Bibliographical Account of English Theatrical Literature from the Earliest Times to the Present Day, by Robert W. Lowe. The former is a handsomely-printed collection of a hundred photogravures in colors, by Goupil, with abundant accompanying letter-press by Gustave Ollendorff, General Superintendent of Exhibitions in France. It will be ready in December in two forms, at $17.50 and $20.00, according to style. Mr. Lowe's work is the first in its field, and contains about 2,000 titles, carefully and interestingly annotated. There are only 150 copies for America, each numbered.

—A quaint little book—The Little Flowers of Saint Francis of Assisi—has been translated from the Italian by Abby Langdon Alger, who adds a brief biography of Saint Francis. It will be published by Roberts Bros.

—A Garland for Girls is the title of Miss Alcott's new volume of stories, of which the author says by way of preface: "These stories were written for my own amusement during a period of enforced seclusion. The flowers which were my solace and pleasure suggested titles for the tales and gave an interest to the work." The volume will be prettily illustrated by Miss McDermott.

—Edwin Arnold's forthcoming volume, Lotus and Jewel, will contain three long poems: "In an Indian Temple," "A Casket of Gems," and "A Queen's Revenge." The first involves readings from the Upanishads with lyrical interludes, and all are oriental in theme.

—Mrs. A. M. Diaz has brought together a volume of experiences which she calls Bybury to Beacon St.—not a story, but a series of tales on woman's work and woman's opportunities. D. Lothrop Co., who are to publish this book, have also in preparation a Life of Lowell by E. E. Brown, written by Mr. Lowell's consent and to a certain extent with his assistance. Among their numerous holiday books D. Lothrop Co. will bring out Lord Tennyson's The Holy Grail, illustrated with photogravures after designs by W. L. Taylor. Several of the illustrations are printed on India paper and mounted in the édition de luxe, of which only one hundred copies are to be printed. The same house will issue an édition de luxe of Ballads of Authors by Harriet Prescott Spofford, with illustrations by E. H. Garrett.

Few probably would be able to trace this forcible passage to its source. It was uttered on the occasion of Dickens's first visit to Boston in 1842, and the place was "Papanti's," where were gathered all the representatives of Boston wealth and culture to do him honor. This speech was the "first shot" fired in the copyright controversy, and through Mr. Niles's persistent propulsion it may be said literally to have been "heard round the world." Let us hope the time is "not far distant" when it will have accomplished its mission.

—The publishers of Wide Awake make some interesting announcements of the contents of that bright and attractive periodical for the coming year. In its pages are to appear a Christmas poem by Mr. Stedman, a ballad by Andrew Lang, a romance by Rider Haggard, stories by Mrs. Sherwood and "Sidney Luska," articles on various topics by John Burroughs, "Ik Marvel," Dr. E. E. Hale, Mrs. Jessie Benton Frémont, E. S. Brooks, George P. Lathrop, Margaret Sidney, Margaret J. Preston, Katherine S. Macquoid, and many others. There is to be an account of Rosa Bonheur by Mr. Henry Bacon, the well-known artist; of Sir Walter Raleigh's homes, of the children of the White House, of "Our Asiatic Cousins" by Mrs. Leonowens, of old story tellers by Mr. Oscar Fay Adams, and of Daniel Webster in New Hampshire. Mrs. Mary Bradford Crowninshield will contribute a naval story for boys, and Miss Olive Seward will write a series of "Around the World" stories. Many illustrations will greatly add to the interest of all these enticing contributions.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

- PEN PORTRAITS OF LITERARY WOMEN, BY THEMSELVES AND OTHERS. Edited by Helen Gray Cone and Jennette L. Gilder. Two vols. Cassell & Co. $3.00
- MEMORIALS OF COLERIDGE. Being Letters from Coleridge, Wordsworth and his Sister, Southey, and Sir Walter Scott, to Sir George and Lady Beaumont. Edited by William Knight. Two vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.50.
- THE WORLD'S WORKERS. Thomas A. Edison and Samuel F. B. Morse. By Van Buren Denslow and Jane Marsh Parker.—Mrs. Somerville and Mary Carpenter. By Phyllis Browne.—Sarah Robinson, Agnes Weston, Mrs. Meredith, By E. M. Tomkinson.—The Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury. By Henry Frith. Four vols. Cassell & Co. Each, 50c.
- REGINALD POLE, CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. An Historical Sketch with an Introductory Prologue and Practical Epilogue. By Frederick George Lee, D.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50
- MADAME DE STAEL. By Bella Duffy. Roberts Brothers. $1.00
- THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN. By J. G. Holland. Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.00
- RINGING BALLADS. By Rosa Hartwick Thorpe. Illus. D. Lothrop & Co. $2.00
- MATTHEW CALBRAITH PERRY. A Typical American Naval Officer. By Wm. Elliot Griffiths. Cupples & Hurd. $2.00
- THE RUSSIAN NOVELISTS. By E. M. de Vogüé. Tr. by Jane Loring Edmonds. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50
- JAMES MADISON, JAMES MONROE, AND JOHN QUINCY ADAMS. By Wm. O. Stoddard. Fred. A. Stokes. $1.25
- LIGHTS OF TWO CENTURIES. Edited by Rev. E. E. Hale. Illustrated. A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.70
- WARREN HASTINGS. By Lord Macaulay. Cassell's National Library. Paper, 10c.

Essays and Sketches.

- ARCADY FOR BETTER FOR WORSE. A Study of Rural Life in England. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75
- SOUTHERN SILMOUETTES. By Jeannette H. Walworth. Henry Holt & Co. $1.25
- HUMAN LIFE IN SHAKESPEARE. By Henry Giles. New edition. With introduction by John Boyle O'Reilly. Lee & Shepard. $1.50
- VICTORIAN POETS. Revised and Extended by a Supplementary Chapter to the Fiftieth Year of the Period Under Review. By Edmund Clarence Stedman. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.25
- THE "HOW I WAS EDUCATED" PAPERS. From the Forum Magazine. D. Appleton & Co. 30c.
- THOUGHTS. Second Series. By Ivan Panin. Cupples & Hurd. 50c.
- LINGUISTIC AND ORIENTAL ESSAYS. Written from the Year 1847 to 1887. By Robert Needham Cust, LL.D. London: Trübner & Co.
- MEN AND LETTERS. Essays on Characterization and Criticism. By Horace E. Scudder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
- HORSE, FOOT, AND DRAGOONS. Sketches of Army Life at Home and Abroad. By Rufus Fairchild Zogbaum. With illustrations by the author. Harper & Brothers. $2.00
- MEN, PLACES, AND THINGS. By Wm. Mathews, LL.D. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.50

Fiction.

- MAJOR AND MINOR. By W. E. Norris. 2 vols. Henry Holt & Co. $2.00
- OLD NEW ENGLAND DAYS. By Sophie M. Damon. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25
- AS IN A LOOKING GLASS. By F. C. Phillips. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
- A MODERN CIRCE. By "the Duchess." Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
- LES MISERABLES. By Victor Hugo. 5 vols. Little, Brown & Co. $7.50
- THE MODERN VIKINGS. Stories of Life and Sport in the Norseland. By Hjalmar H. Boyesen. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00
- SETH'S BROTHER'S WIFE. By Harold Frederic. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25
- A STORY OF THE GOLDEN AGE. By James Baldwin. Illustrated by Howard Pyle. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.00
- WIELAND; or, The Transformation. By Charles Brockden Brown. Philadelphia: David McKay. $1.50
- FRAU WILHELMINE. The Concluding Part of the Buchholz Family. By Julius Stinde. Translated by Harriet F. Powell. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25
- BURNHAM BREAKER. By Homer Greene. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

- IN HIS NAME. By E. E. Hale. Illustrated by G. P. Jacob-Hood. Roberts Brothers. $2.00
- SARINA'S DECEPTION. From the French of the Princess Olga Cantacuzene-Altieri. By E. Nute. Harper & Brothers. Paper, 25c.
- THE NEW ANTIGONE. Macmillan & Co. $1.50
- BLEDISLOW; or, Aunt Pen's American Nieces. By Ada M. Trotter. Cupples & Hurd. $1.50
- A FLOCK OF GIRLS AND THEIR FRIENDS. By Nora Perry. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
- ZORAH: A LOVE TALE OF MODERN EGYPT. By Elisabeth Balch. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25
- FAIRY LEGENDS OF THE FRENCH PROVINCES. Tr. by Mrs. M. Carey. With Introductory Note by J. F. Jameson, Ph.D. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25
- OLD MAIDS, AND BURGLARS IN PARADISE. By Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
- COUNTRY LUCK. By John Habberton. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00
- THE LAST VAN RECKENBURG. By Louise von Franco. Tr. by J. M. Percival. Cupples & Hurd. $1.50
- THE DUCHESS. By the author of "Phyllis," etc. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.
- DRIVER DALLAS. A Novel. By John Strange Winter. Harper & Bros. 25c.
- "THE RIGHT HONOURABLE." A Romance of Society and Politics. By Justin McCarthy, M.P., and Mrs. Campbell-Praed. D. Appleton & Co. 50c.
- JEAN MONTEITH. By M. G. McClelland. Leisure Hour Series. Henry Holt & Co. $1.00
- A FAIR CRUSADER. A Story of Today. By William Westall. Harper & Bros. 20c.
- ROLLO'S JOURNEY TO CAMBRIDGE. Illus. by Francis G. Atwood. 7th edition. Cupples & Hurd. 75c.
- TONY, THE MAID. By Blanche Willis Howard. Illus. Harper & Bros. $1.00
- HER ONLY SON. By Herba Stretton. Dodd, Mead & Co. 75c.
- EQUAL TO THE OCCASION. By Edward Garrett. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00
- ONE THAT WINS. A Story of a Holiday in Italy. By the author of "Whom Nature Leadeth." Harper & Bros. Franklin Square Library. Paper, 20c.
- THE INGENIOUS GENTLEMAN, DON QUIXOTE OF LA MANCHA. By Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra. Translation with introduction and notes by John Ormsby. 4 vols. Dodd, Mead & Co. $6.00
- A QUEER RACE. By Wm. Westall. Cassell & Co. Paper, 25c.
- CONTES TIRES DE MOLIERE. Par Alfred M. Cotte. Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. Wm. R. Jenkins. Paper, 20c.
- LES MISERABLES. Par Victor Hugo. Parts IV and V. Wm. R. Jenkins. Paper, Each $1.00
- UNCLE LISHA'S SHOP. Life in a Corner of Yankee Land. By Rowland E. Robinson. New York: Forest and Stream Publishing Co. $1.00
- WHITE COCKADES. By Edward Irenæus Stevenson. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
- THE HUNDREDETH MAN. By Frank R. Stockton. The Century Co. $1.50
- THE DUCHESS. By "The Duchess." Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
- ISMAÏ'S CHILDREN. By the author of "Hogan, M.P.," etc. Macmillan & Co. Paper, 50c.
- MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX. By F. Marion Crawford. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

History.

- ENGLISH HISTORY BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS. Edward III and his Times, 1327-1360. Arranged and Edited by W. J. Ashley. The Misrule of Henry III. Selected and Arranged by the Rev. W. H. Hutton. G. P. Putnam's Sons. Each, 60c.
- A SHORT HISTORY OF ENGLAND FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT DAY. By Cyril Ransome. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50
- THE Gnostics and their Remains, Ancient and Medieval. By C. W. King. 2d edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00
- THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT OF 1848-9 IN ITALY, AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, AND GERMANY. With Some Examination of the Previous Thirty-three Years. By C. Edmund Maurice. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $4.00
- ENGLISH COLONIES IN AMERICA. Volume II. The Puritan Colonies. 2 vols. By J. A. Doyle. H. Holt & Co. $7.50
- A SHORT HISTORY OF THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA FROM ITS FOUNDATION TO THE PRESENT TIME. By Susan Coolidge. Roberts Bros. $1.25
- DRUM BEAT OF THE NATION. The First Period of the War of the Rebellion from its Outbreak to the Close of 1862. By Charles Carleton Coffin. Illus. Harper & Bros. $3.00
- A HISTORY OF THE NEGRO TROOPS IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION. 1861-1865. Preceded by a Review of the Military Services of Negroes in Ancient and Modern Times. By Geo. W. Williams, LL.D. Harper & Bros. $1.75
- INTRODUCTION TO A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH COLONIES. By C. P. Lucas. Oxford: the Clarendon Press. $1.10
- BLUE JACKETS OF 1812. A History of the Naval Battles of the Second War with Great Britain, to which is Prefixed an Account of the French War of 1798. By Willis J. Abbot. Illus. Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.00

- THE STORY OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN. His Origin, Development, Decline, Destiny. By Elbridge S. Brooks. D. Lothrop & Co. $2.50
- UNIVERSAL HISTORY. 4 vols. Modern History. By Arthur St. George Patton.—Ancient History. By George Rawlinson.—Medieval History. By George Thomas Stokes.—Geological History. By Edward Hull. J. B. Lippincott. The set, $6.00
- A HISTORY OF THE CLAPBOARD TREES; or, Third Parish, Dedham, Mass. By Geo. Willis Cooke. Geo. H. Ellis. $1.00

Holiday Publications.

- KALOOLOAH: THE ADVENTURES OF JONATHAN ROBER. By W. S. Mayo. 30th thousand. The Franzosagda Edition, illustrated by Fredericks. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00
- OLD FOLKS AT HOME. Written and Composed by S. C. Foster. Illustrated. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
- TANGLEWOOD TALES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. With illustrations by George Wharton Edwards. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50
- RAN AWAY FROM THE DUTCH; or, Borneo from South to North. By M. T. H. Perelaer. Tr. by Maurice Blok and adapted by A. P. Mendes. Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.50
- GERALDINE. A Souvenir of the St. Lawrence. Illus. Ticknor & Co. $3.50
- BALLADS ABOUT AUTHORS. By Harriet Prescott Spofford. Illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. D. Lothrop & Co. $3.00
- KING HENRY IV. Parts I and II. With 12 illustrations by Edward Grellener, reproduced in photogravure. With an Introduction by Edward Dowden, LL.D. Cassell & Co. $15.00
- THE DESERTED VILLAGE. By Oliver Goldsmith. With etchings by M. M. Taylor. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00
- THE MODERN SCHOOL OF ART. Edited by Wilfrid Meynell. Illus. Cassell & Co. $6.00
- THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL. By James Russell Lowell. With illustrations by Alexander, Crane, Freer, Gifford, Kappes, Mowbray, Shirlaw, and Smith. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $10.00
- THROUGH THE YEAR. Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50
- ENOCH ARDEN. By Alfred Tennyson. Illus. E. P. Dutton & Co. $6.00

Juveniles.

- THE BOOK OF FOLK STORIES. Rewritten by Horace E. Scudder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 60c.
- THE SOLDIER'S WARD; or, Saved for Martyrdom. By E. Gerdes. Tr. from the Dutch with changes and additions by Rev. David Van Pelt. Presbyterian Board. $1.25
- THE BROWNIES: THEIR BOOK. By Palmer Cox. The Century Co. $1.50
- HOW TO AMUSE YOURSELF AND OTHERS. The American Girl's Handy Book. By Lina Beard and Adelia B. Beard. Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00
- DOG STORIES AND DOG LORE. Experiences of Two Boys in Raising and Training Dogs; with many Anecdotes of Canine Intelligence. By Thos. W. Knox. Cassell & Co. $1.75
- CHATTERBOX. Edited by J. Erskine Clarke. Estes & Lauriat. $1.75
- THE WONDER CLOCK; or, Four and Twenty Marvelous Tales. Being one for each hour of the day. Written and illustrated by Howard Pyle. Embellished with verses by Katharine Pyle. Harper & Bros. $3.00
- IDA WAUGH'S ALPHABET BOOK. Verses by Amy E. Blanchard. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00
- BABYLAND. Edited by the Editors of Wide Awake. D. Lothrop & Co.
- PRENTICE HUGH. By Frances Mary Peard. Illus. Thomas Whittaker.
- UNCLE IVAN; or, Recollections of Fifty Years Back. By M. Bramston. Illus. Thomas Whittaker.
- FOR HALF A CROWN. By Esmé Stuart. Illus. Thomas Whittaker.
- JOHNNY NUT AND THE GOLDEN GOOSE. Done into English by Andrew Lang. From the French of Charles Deulin. Longmans, Green & Co. $3.50
- PRUDENCE WINTERBURN. By Sarah Doudney. Illus. T. Y. Crowell & Co.
- THE BOYS OF 1812, AND OTHER NAVAL HEROES. By James Russell Soley. Estes & Lauriat. $2.50
- JUAN AND JUANITA. By Frances Courtenay Baylor. Illustrations by Henry Sandham. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
- A PRIMER. Stickney, Ginn & Co. 25c.
- THE BOYHOOD OF LIVING AUTHORS. By Wm. H. Ridgely. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00
- HISTORIC GIRLS. Girls who have Influenced the History of their Times. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00
- LULU'S LIBRARY. By Louise M. Alcott. Vol. II. Roberts Bros. $1.00
- YOUNGSTERS' YARNS. By Arcott R. Hope. Illustrated by C. O. Murray. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.75
- TALES FROM THE EASTERN-LAND. By A. L. Grimm. Tr. from the German by H. V. Illustrated by J. B. Sanderland. Geo. Routledge & Sons. 80c.
- LITTLE WIDE-AWAKE. An Illustrated Magazine for Children. Edited by Mrs. Sale Barker. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $2.50
- PRINCE LITTLE BOY, AND OTHER TALES OUT OF FAIRYLAND. By S. Weir Mitchell, M.D. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50

STORIES OF PERSONS AND PLACES IN EUROPE. By E. L. Benedict. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.50
 LITTLE ONES' ANNUAL STORIES AND POEMS. Illus. Estes & Lauriat.

THREE VASSAR GIRLS AT HOME. By Lizzie W. Champney. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $1.50

GREAT-GRANDMOTHER'S GIRLS IN NEW FRANCE. The History of Little Eunice Williams. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $2.50

FAIRY TALES AND STORIES. By Hans Christian Andersen. Tr. from the Danish by Carl Stewers. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $2.25

THE QUEENS OF SCOTLAND. Abridged and Adapted from Strickland's "Queens of Scotland." By Rosalie Kaufman. Illus. 2 vols. Estes & Lauriat.

THE KNOCKABOUT CLUB IN THE EVERGLADES. By F. A. Ober. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $1.50

Pamphlets.

THE ANTI-RENT AGITATION IN THE STATE OF NEW YORK. 1839-1846. By Edward P. Cheyney. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania. 50c.

HISTORICAL ADDRESS BY F. CHASE, AND ORATION BY G. HOADLY, before the Phi Beta Kappa of Dartmouth College, June 29, 1887.

COLLECTIONS OF THE NOVA SCOTIA HISTORICAL SOCIETY FOR THE YEAR 1886-87. Vol. V. Halifax, N. S.: Wm. Macnab.

Poetry.

SKETCHES IN SONG. By George Lansing Raymond. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

UNDER PINE AND PALM. By Frances L. Mace. Ticknor & Co. $2.00

TEN YEARS OF SONG. Poems by Horatio Nelson Powers. D. Lothrop Co.

LETTERS FROM COLORADO. By H. L. Wason. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25

THISTLE-DRIFT. By John Vance Cheney. Frederick A. Stokes. $1.00

FROM HEART AND NATURE. By Sarah Knowles Bolton and Charles Knowles Bolton. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.00

RHYMES FOR ALL SEASONS. By Sarah Prescott Kellogg. D. Lothrop & Co. $1.25

IN REALMS OF GOLD. By James B. Kenyon. Cassell & Co. $1.00

ENDYMION, AND OTHER POEMS. By John Keats. Cassell & Co. 10c.

EARLY AND LATE POEMS OF ALICE AND PHOEBE CARY. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50

BLOOMS OF THE BERRY. By Madison J. Cawein. Louisville: J. P. Morton & Co. $1.25

BALLADS AND POEMS OF TRAGIC LIFE. By George Meredith. Roberts Bros. $1.50

IMMORTALS. By Cora M. A. Davis. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

THE SENTENCE. A Drama. By Augusta Webster. London: T. Fisher Unwin. 4s. 6d.

SONGS AND BALLADS. By Fanny Raymond-Ritter. T. W. Christern.

AFTER PARADISE; or, Legends of Exile, with Other Poems. By Robert, Earl of Lytton (Owen Meredith). Estes & Lauriat. $1.25

DISILLUSION, AND OTHER POEMS. By Ethel M. de Fonblanque. London: T. Fisher Unwin.

Science and Philosophy.

ELEMENTARY PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATION. By Joseph Baldwin. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

THE ELEMENTS OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, WITH SOME APPLICATIONS TO QUESTIONS OF THE DAY. By J. Laurence Laughlin. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

HENRY GEORGE versus HENRY GEORGE. A Review by R. C. Rutherford. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.

THE ETHICAL IMPORT OF DARWINISM. By Jacob Gould Schurman. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50

SCIENCE AND IMMORTALITY. The Christian Register Symposium, revised and enlarged. Edited and Reviewed by Samuel J. Barrows. Geo. H. Ellis.

EDUCATIONAL ENDS; or, The Ideal of Personal Development. By Sophie Bryant, D. Sc. Loud. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00

RECENT ADVANCES IN ELECTRICITY. Edited by Henry Greer. New York: College of Electrical Engineering. $1.00

THE ADVANCE OF SCIENCE IN THE LAST HALF-CENTURY. By T. H. Huxley, F.R.S. D. Appleton & Co. 25c.

SKETCH OF AMERICAN FINANCES. 1789-1835. By John Watts Kearny. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

NATURAL LAW IN THE BUSINESS WORLD. By Henry Wood. Lee & Shepard. Paper, 30c.

THE SCIENCE OF POLITICS. By Walter Thomas Mills. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00

INDUSTRIAL PEACE. Its Advantages, Methods, and Difficulties. A Report of an Inquiry made for the Toynebee Trustees. By L. L. F. R. Price. With a Preface by Alfred Marshall. Macmillan & Co. $1.50

Sociology.

SOCIAL CUSTOMS. By Florence Howe Hall. Estes & Lauriat. $2.00

SOCIAL EQUILIBRIUM AND OTHER PROBLEMS. Ethical and Religious. By George Batchelor. Geo. H. Ellis. $1.50

MODERN CITIES, AND THEIR RELIGIOUS PROBLEMS. By Samuel Lane Loomis. The Baker & Taylor Co. $1.00

Text-Books.

THIRD NATURAL HISTORY READER. By the Rev. J. G. Wood. Illustrated. Boston School Supply Co.

THE GRAY TIGERS OF SMITHVILLE; or, He Would and He Wouldn't. A School Extravaganza in Three Acts. Edited by Edward Roth. Philadelphia.

VOICE CULTURE AND ELOCUTION. By Wm. T. Ross. Revised edition. The Baker & Taylor Co. $1.25

EXERCISES IN ENGLISH SYNTAX. By A. G. Bugbee. C. W. Bardeen.

ELEMENTARY FLOWER PAINTING. With Eight Colored Plates. Cassell & Co. $2.50

ELOCUTIONARY STUDIES AND NEW RECITATIONS. By Mrs. Anna Randall-Diehl. New York: Edgar S. Werner. 60c.

ELECTRICITY FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES. By W. Larden, M. A. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.75

GRADED GERMAN LESSONS, Being a Practical German Grammar by William Eysenbach. Revised and Largely Rewritten by William C. Collar. Ginn & Co. $1.30

Theology and Religion.

LIVING FOR THE MASTER. Sermons. By Lewis H. Reid. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25

"THE CHURCH" versus CHRISTIANITY. By Rev. George Augustus Strong. Dammell & Upham. 25c.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN PRINCIPLE AND PRACTICE. By Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. The Baker & Taylor Co. $1.25

SERMONS PREACHED IN ST. GEORGE'S. By W. S. Rainsford. $1.25

SUNDAYS AT BALMORAL. Sermons preached before Her Majesty the Queen in Scotland. By the late Very Rev. John Tulloch, D.D., LL.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25

OUR HEREDITY FROM GOD. Consisting of Lectures on Evolution. By E. P. Powell. D. Appleton & Co. $1.75

BEYOND THE STARS; or, Human Life in Heaven. By Rev. Archibald McCullagh, D.D. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.00

ON THE DOCTRINE OF MORALITY IN ITS RELATION TO THE GRACE OF REDEMPTION. By Robert B. Fairbairn, D.D., etc. Thomas Whittaker. $1.50

A MANUAL OF THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By the Rev. Charles Hole. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN. Tr. from the 4th German edition. Second edition. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.00

THE NEW CATHOLIC CHURCH. With Thoughts on Theism and Suggestions towards a Public Religious Service in Harmony with Modern Science and Philosophy. 10th edition. London: Trübner & Co.

THE MISSING SENSE, AND THE HIDDEN THINGS WHICH IT MIGHT REVEAL. Spiritual Philosophy Treated on a Rational Basis. By C. W. Wooldridge. Funk & Wagnalls. 60c.

THE LIGHT OF THE AGES. Asia, Africa, Europe. By the Rev. H. R. Haweis. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

FIVE LAST THINGS. Death, Intermediate State (Hades), Resurrection, Judgment, Eternity. Studies in Holy Scripture. By J. A. Spencer, S.T.D. Thomas Whittaker. 75c.

KLACKNER'S RECENT ETCHINGS:

EVENING IN A HAMLET OF FINISTERE.

By W. L. LATHEROP, from the painting by JULES BRETON.

Home of Evangeline. By F. RAUBICHECK.

Colonial Days. By JAS. S. KING.

Harbor of Quebec. By STEPHEN PARRISH.

The Marshes. By C. MORGAN MCELENNY.

The Golden Age. By BENJ. LANDER.

Naming the Day. After F. C. JONES.

Eve. By MRS. ANNA LEE MERRITT.

Silence. After WM. BLISS BAKER.

The May Festival. By F. M. GREGORY.

Venice. By THOS. MORAN.

Dordrecht. By THOS. MORAN.

Farm by the River. By G. W. H. RITCHIE.

Swallows' Home. By J. H. MILLSAUGH.

Purchasers of my COPYRIGHTED Engravings and Etchings have an absolute protection from inferior reproduction, such as all imported prints are liable to—there being no international copyright law to protect the latter—so, when visiting art stores anywhere, always ask for KLACKNER'S AMERICAN ENGRAVINGS AND ETCHINGS.

Klackner's Portfolio Stands.

IN EBONY, ASH, CHERRY OR MAHOGANY.

C. KLACKNER, 17 East 17th St., New York.

Send for catalogue and for pamphlet on "Proofs and Prints." Price 10 cents.

A Notable Biography.

MATTHEW CALBRAITH PERRY.

A Typical American Naval Officer. By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS, D. D. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00.

A biography of the hero of Japan, and a history of the evolution of the United States Navy, from wooden sailing vessels to iron steamers.

A Remarkable Essay.

DIET IN RELATION TO AGE AND ACTIVITY.

By Sir HENRY THOMPSON, F. R. C. S. From the tenth English edition. 16mo, cloth, 50 cents. A valuable treatise on an important subject by the greatest living authority.

A New Volume by the author of "Heidi."

GRITLI'S CHILDREN.

Translated by LOUISE BROOKS, from the German of Mme. Spyri, author of "Heidi," "Rico and Wisli," and "Veronica." 16mo, $1.50.

A new volume, making the fourth of this set.

SPYRI'S WORKS. Comprising "Heidi," "Rico and Wisli," "Veronica," "Gritli's Children." In uniform binding, in a box, the set of 4 vols., $5.00.

These charming tales are well named "Stories for children and those who love children."

A Book for all Bostonians.

RAMBLES IN OLD BOSTON.

New England.

By Rev. EDWARD G. PORTER. Illustrated with 42 full-page and 50 smaller cuts, maps, etc., drawn by George R. Tolman. Handsomely bound in half leather, gilt top, $6.00.

A limited edition of 25 copies on large paper, with the 42 full-page cuts printed by hand on Japanese paper, bound in parchment paper, flexible, in a box, $15.00. In half levant, crushed, $25.00.

For sale by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

CUPPLES & HURD,

94 BOYLSTON ST., . . . BOSTON.

Horsford's

ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system. Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools. Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.

It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body. It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

Beware of Imitations.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY:

HISTORIC GIRLS. Stories of Girls Who have Influenced the History of Their Times. By E. S. BROOKS. Octavo, fully illustrated. Uniform with "Historic Boys," and "Chivalric Days," by the same author. $2.00.

CONTENTS: Elizabeth of Tudor—The Girl of the Hertford Manor—Zenobia of Palmyra—Clotilda of Burgundy—The Girl of the French Vineyards—Pulcheria of Constantinople—The Girl of the Golden Horn—Woo of Hwang-Ho—The Girl of the Yellow River—Edith of Scotland—The Girl of the Norman Abbey—Jacqueline of Holland—The Girl of the Land of Fogs—Catarina of Venice—The Girl of the Grand Canal—Helena of Britain—The Girl of the Essex Fells—Theresa of Avila—The Girl of the Sierras—Christina of Sweden—The Girl of the Floras—Mataoka of Powhatan—The Girl of Virginia.

NEW EDITIONS OF

CHIVALRIC DAYS AND YOUTHFUL DEEDS. Octavo, fully illustrated, $2.00.

"Certain to captivate the fortunate boys and girls into whose hands the book may fall."—N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

"The stories are told with brilliancy and power."—N. Y. Evangelist.

HISTORIC BOYS; THEIR ENDEAVORS, THEIR ACHIEVEMENTS, AND THEIR TIMES. Octavo, fully illustrated, $2.00.

"Stories of real boys, who have met with real adventures and plenty of them."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The three volumes in box, $6.00.

REGINALD POLE. CARDINAL ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, an historical sketch. By FREDERICK GEORGE LEE, D.D., with etched portrait of Pole. Limited letter-press edition. Octavo, cloth, extra, $2.50.

A curious biographical and historical study, which throws light on various vexed questions of the reign of Queen Mary.

A SKETCH OF AMERICAN FINANCES, 1789-1835. By JOHN W. KEARNEY. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

CHIEF CONTENTS: Settlement of the Revolutionary War Debt Revenue—Expenditure and the Sinking Fund—The War of 1812—Increase of the Debt—Financial Embarrassment—Peace with Great Britain—The Tariff—Extinguishing of the Debt.

List of autumn publications sent on application. New classified catalogue on receipt of stamp.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 West 33d Street, New York.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, HON. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila.; 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauqua University, &c. Prospectus sent FREE from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND Lever needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to

R. C. HARTMAN, 709 Sanson Street,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books. Send for Catalogue of Americana.

JUST PUBLISHED:

Science and Immortality.

A "Symposium," giving the opinions of some of the most prominent scientific men in this country concerning the relation of science to the question of immortality. The major part of the discussion was published in the Christian Register, attracting wide attention, and is now republished in more permanent form, with additional contributions from Prof. A. Graham Bell, Gen. A. W. Greely, Prof. Joseph Le Conte, Prof. Ira Remsen, and Prof. Edward C. Pickering. Square 16mo. Cloth, 75 cents, paper, 50 cents.

Social Equilibrium

And other Problems, Ethical and Religious.

By REV. GEORGE BATCHELOR. These Essays relate to the many new questions of social and religious organization which have been forced upon the modern mind by scientific discovery and economical progress. They do not attempt to offer a panacea for the many evils of social life, but simply to describe and discuss some of the causes of social unrest and religious disintegration. They are hopeful, positive, and constructive. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by

GEO. H. ELLIS, Publisher,

141 FRANKLIN STREET - - BOSTON.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,

7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,

STANDARD BOOKS,

IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engravings, Etc., Etc.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1888. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of

A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers, (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25.

Now ready, by the author of "German Simplified," and on the same plan,

Spanish Simplified.

To consist of 10 numbers. Nos. 1 and 2 were published October 15, 1887. A new number will appear on the first of every month, until completed. Price, 10 cents a number.

Both works are for sale by all booksellers; sent postpaid on receipt of price, by Prof. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus free.

DYSPEPSIA can be cured,
DIGESTION is always promoted,
DEBILITY permanently removed,
By the use of Dr. Mark E. Woodbury's Dyspepsia

KILLER. True to their name,
ORRECT Indigestion. They are a
URE for all Stomach troubles and ILL Dyspepsia and all attending evils.

Mailed to any address on receipt of 50 cents for a large box or 25 cents for a trial box by

DOOLITTLE & SMITH,

24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston.

Granville Mosaic Floors

Have never failed to give satisfaction. Tested eight years. Lately improved whereby laying is made simple and inexpensive. Adapted equally to old floors or new houses. Positive but hidden fastening. Shrinkage practically overcome. Send plan of room and have floor made to a design prepared expressly for it. Ask for information. O. S. Dickinsen, Granville, Mass.

The "BEACON" Curtain Grate

(Showing Curtain drawn).

The Curtain Grate, with "Beacon" patent Shaking and Dumping attachment, is the most perfect and practical grate ever offered the public. Keep by all first-class dealers. SEND STAMP FOR CIRCULAR.

This Cut shows the working of the Basket.

- A. Handle for dumping.
- B. Lever for shaking.
- C. Draught slide.

MANUFACTURED BY

MURDOCK PARLOR GRATE CO.,
16 Beacon Street, Boston.

The Best Preparation for Housekeeping is a
WIRE GAUZE DOOR
As Used Exclusively in the
NEW HUB RANGE.

PERFECT COOKING

Is the most important item in the domestic economy. By using the Wire Gauze Oven Door with the New Hub Range, the skill of the cook is supplemented by the most perfect cooking apparatus ever made.

Three of the Hub Ranges with Wire Gauze Oven Doors are in constant use at the famous Boston Cooking School, and are indorsed by them as being better than all others. Insist on your dealer giving you the New Hub Range. It is the very highest grade of cooking apparatus made, and when quality is considered, is the lowest in price of any in the market. Over 100,000 Hub Ranges in use. The Hub line of goods are world-renowned, and are sold by dealers everywhere. Special circulars sent on application.

SMITH & ANTHONY STOVE CO.,
Manufacturers of Hub Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces,
53 & 54 Union Street, Boston, Mass.

THIRD VOLUME READY NOV. 15.

APPLETONS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF AMERICAN BIOGRAPHY.

EDITED BY

JAMES GRANT WILSON and JOHN FISKE.

* * This great national work will be completed in six volumes, royal octavo, of about 800 pages each. Sold only by Subscription. A full descriptive Prospectus, with specimen pages, will be sent to any address on application, or our agent will call upon any gentleman with specimen volumes upon a request to that effect being sent to the publishers.

D. APPLETON & COMPANY,PUBLISHERS,

1, 3 and 5 Bond Street, New York.

92 FRANKLIN STREET, - - - - - BOSTON.

THE STORY OF AN ENTHUSIAST.

Told by Himself. A novel. By Mrs. C. V. JAMISON, author of "Woven of Many Threads," "A Crown from the Spear," etc. 12mo, $1.50.

"Of great interest to lovers of art, as well as to readers generally. The scene is laid in Europe, and the story is founded on the well-known history of a remarkable picture, and it is cleverly told, with strong dramatic power, many of the characters being drawn from life."—Boston Transcript.

A new novel by the distinguished author of "Woven of Many Threads" (known through her former books as Mrs. Hamilton) is sure to be warmly welcomed.

SOBRIQUETS AND NICKNAMES.

By ALBERT R. FREY. 1 vol., crown 8vo, half morocco, gilt top, library style, $3.00.

Some years ago the author, while engaged upon a dictionary of Pseudonyms (since incorporated in Mr. Cushing's work), found so many nicknames, etc., that he began to collect them. The result is the present volume, containing over five thousand subjects, and is invaluable to all libraries, editors, students, to all who find such books as Wheeler's, Brewer's or Cushing's useful in their reading, study or work.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."COMPANY OF AMERICA.*LARGEST IN THE WORLD.*Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.
RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

IMPORTANT WORKS

IN LIMITED EDITIONS.

THE GNOSTICS AND THEIR REMAINS, ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL. By C. W. KING, M. A. Royal octavo, with 19 wood-cuts and 75 lithographic figures; a bibliography and full index. Cloth, extra, $6.00.

CHIEF CONTENTS: The Sources of Gnosticism—Platonic Sophia—Mithras and Serapis—Abraxas—Abraxaster and Abraxoid Gems—Figured Monuments—Templars—Rosicrucians—Freemasons—Gnostic Symbols, etc.

The volume is believed to be the only work now in print which gives a clear and comprehensive view of the principal forms of Gnosticism and the history of its development, together with an analysis of the relations of Gnosticism with Buddhism, and with the different phases of Christian belief; the creed of the Templars; the faith of the Rosicrucians, Freemasonry, etc.

ARCADY: FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE. A Study of Rural Life in England. By AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D. D. Octavo, with two plates, $1.75.

"This is a capital book. . . . The doctor's style is exceedingly good; his thoughts flow freely; his observation is sharp and accurate; his sympathies are so broad and deep that he wins the reader's interest at once, and his facts are so fresh and suggestive as to render his discussions economically valuable as well as charming in their purely literary aspect."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT OF 1848-9 IN ITALY, AUSTRIA, HUNGARY AND GERMANY. With a preliminary examination of the events of the preceding thirty-three years. By C. EDMUND MAURICE, author of "English Popular Leaders in the Middle Ages," etc. Octavo, with illustrations, $4.00.

"A remarkably painstaking and thoughtful narrative, . . . presenting an admirable summary of events worth recalling. . . . The story shows how the revolutionary movements of 1848 revealed the strength and the weakness of the principle of nationalities. It taught the peoples of Europe to aspire, while it also taught their rulers how, by dividing them, to rivet their chains."—N. Y. Sun.

REGINALD POLE. Cardinal Archbishop of Canterbury. An Historical Study, with introduction, prologue and practical epilogue. Octavo, with etched portrait of Pole, cloth extra, $2.50.

A curious and instructive biographical study, which throws light on various vexed questions of the reign of Queen Mary.

THE DAWN OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLAND. A Social Sketch of the Times. By JOHN ASHTON. With 116 illustrations drawn by the author from contemporary engravings. Second and popular edition. Octavo, cloth, gilt top, $3.50.

"It would be impossible to remark on all the telling points in Mr. Ashton's excellent work. It is in every way a most complete and thorough account of those early days, full of quaint humor and graphic sketches, faithful to life, and taken from undoubted contemporary sources."

For sale by all dealers, and sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
NEW YORK AND LONDON.

New classified catalogue of publications and catalogue of recent importations sent each on receipt of price.

THE most important French publication yet attempted in America is the new and handsome edition of VICTOR HUGO'S "LES MISÉRABLES" which W. R. Jenkins, 850 Sixth Avenue, New York, has just completed in five volumes. The work has been very tastefully printed from new long primer type on fine paper, and fulfills in every respect the promise of the publishers that it should be an excellent and attractive edition, cheap, and convenient in size. It may be had for $4.50 in paper; $6.50 in cloth, or $13.50 in half calf.

1888.
Wide Awake
$2.40.

Such writers and subjects as these:

Edmund Clarence Stedman, The Star Bearer, a lofty Christmas poem.

Andrew Lang, Ballad of a Bad Boy, a bit of autobiography.

H. Rider Haggard, A Tale of Three Lions, a book in itself.

Sidney Lusk, My Uncle Florimond, a serial.

M. E. W. Sherwood, Those Cousins of Mabel's and Double Roses, two serials.

Jessie Benton Frémont, a serial, Cruise of a Coverlet.

Harriet Taylor Upton, serial historical papers, Children of the White House.

Elbridge S. Brooks, opportunity papers, Getting On in the World.

Louise Imogen Guiney, The Bringing-Up of Puppies, not all in a month by any means.

Oscar Fay Adams, Dear Old Story-Tellers.

Mary Bradford Crowinshield, a serial, Plucky Small: His Story.

Edward Everett Hale, historical serial, The Story of Boston Common.

And these are not half, not a quarter, of those in sight.

ARTISTS.

Howard Pyle,
George Wharton Edwards,
Edmund H. Garrett,
William T. Smedley,
L. B. Humphrey,

W. L. Taylor,
Heywood Hardy,
F. H. Lungren,
Warwick Brooke,
and many others.

Wide Awake, more than ever this year, is the means of education as well as diversion of young folks.

We publish also four other magazines: Babyland, 50 cents a year; Our Little Men and Women, $1.00; Pansy, $1.00; Chautauqua Young Folks' Journal, $1.00. Sample copies of all will be sent for 15 cents; or any one for 5 cents.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY, BOSTON.

One of the prettiest covers ever put on a book is that of WIDE AWAKE, Volume W now in the bookstores; $1.75.

What is more to the purpose, the book is even better inside than out. For a boy or girl under twenty it is the one gift-book, if there is but one.

THE

Holiday Wide Awake

surpasses all previous achievements. Very large and full of riches. .96 pages; sent on receipt of 20 cents.

This number begins the volume and contains the Premium List. $2.40 a year.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY, BOSTON.

"They are the historical beginning of all imaginative prose literature in America, and it is impossible to understand its development without having read them."—THOMAS WENTWORTH HIGGINSON.

READY ABOUT NOVEMBER 10.

Edition limited to 500 sets. Each set numbered.

DESCRIPTIVE CIRCULAR MAILED ON APPLICATION.

OUR FIRST NOVELIST,

Charles Brockden Brown.

COMPLETE IN SIX VOLUMES.

Vol. 1. { MEMOIR.
WIELAND; OR, THE TRANSFORMATION.

" 2. ARTHUR MERVYN; OR, MEMOIRS OF THE YEAR 1793. Vol. 1.

" 3. " " " " 1793. Vol. 2.

" 4. EDGAR HUNTLY; OR, MEMOIRS OF A SLEEP-WALKER.

" 5. JANE TALBOT.

" 6. { ORMOND; OR, THE SECRET WITNESS.
CLARA HOWARD; OR, THE ENTHUSIASM OF LOVE.

The edition will be strictly limited to 500 sets. Printed on best all-linen paper, made especially for this work, and water-marked with the author's initials, C. B. B. Complete in 6 vols. octavo, tastefully bound in half vellum, with cloth sides, $18.00.

Sold only in complete sets, each order registered, and corresponding number of set furnished.

SOME OPINIONS.

"The appearance of these novels constitutes an epoch in the ornamental literature of America. They are the first decidedly successful attempts in the walk of romantic fiction."—William H. Prescott.

"Their intrinsic merit is so great, and their historic place in our literature is so interesting, that it would be a very creditable, and perhaps even a distinguished, thing for an American publisher to reproduce them."—Moses Coit Tyler, Professor of Literature, Cornell University.

"Brown, in his depth of insight into the morbid phenomena of the human mind, really anticipated Hawthorne."—Edwin Percy Whipple.

"As a novelist he ranks very high; he is the precursor of Hawthorne, and hitherto his only American rival."—Encyclopædia Britannica, ninth edition.

"I certainly think that a new edition of Brockden Brown's novels is desirable. . . . They were an original American product at a time when our literature was just beginning to emerge from provincial servitude and from the theological and political eras."—Charles F. Richardson, Professor of Literature, Dartmouth College.

"His talent for stirring the expectation of the reader, and keeping his anxiety alive from first to last, can scarcely be paralleled in the history of fiction."—Allibone's Dictionary of Authors.

DAVID McKAY, Philadelphia, Pa.

RAGNAROK.

By IGNATIUS DONNELLY,

Author of "Atlantis," "The Antediluvian World."

A New Edition (the Eleventh) Now in Press.

The AGE OF FIRE AND GRAVEL.

1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

In this work the celebrated iconoclast attacks the old-established ice theory, and endeavors to show that the Drift Age, with its vast deposits of clay and gravel, its decomposed rocks and its great rents in the face of the globe, was the result of contact between the earth and a comet. A notable part of the book is its relation to the Bible. It claims that the story of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire falling from heaven is simply one of the traditions of the Drift Age; that the "fall of man" and his expulsion from Paradise means the change which came over the condition of the world and mankind when the pre-glacial climate—during which, as the geologists prove, tropical plants grew in Spitzbergen and Greenland—gave way to the horrors of the Glacial Age; and that the Book of Job is a description of the same great event.

For sale by all book-dealers, or sent by mail on receipt of price. Orders from the Trade should be addressed to

R. S. PEALE & CO., Publishers, 407-425 Dearborn St., Chicago.

JUST OUT.

SONGS and BALLADS.

By FANNY RAYMOND-RITTER.

PRICE ONE DOLLAR.

PUBLISHED BY F. W. CHRISTERN,
204 FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK.

LINCOLNSHIRE NOTES AND QUERIES.

A Quarterly Journal.

DEVOTED to the Antiquities, Parochial Records, Family History, Traditions, Folk-lore, Quaint Customs, etc., of the County. Edited by Ernest L. Grange, M. A., LL. M., Great Grimsby, and the Rev. J. Clare Hudson, M. A., Vicar of Thornton, Horncastle.

The First Issue will appear Jan. 1, 1888. Price 1s. 6d., per quarter. Annual subscription (prepaid), 5s., or by post, 5s. 4d.

W. K. Merton, Publisher, Horncastle, Eng.

26 November 1887

THE LITERARY WORLD

HOLIDAY NUMBER

Four Holiday Books of Permanent Value.

THE LATE E. B. WASHBURN'S GREAT WORK.

RECOLLECTIONS OF A MINISTER TO FRANCE.

1869-1877. By the Hon. E. B. WASHBURN. 2 vols., fully illustrated, 8vo, $8.00.

"The interest aroused by this book is profound. Not only is the period of history with which it deals a momentous one, but the manner in which Mr. Washburne has treated it is one that arrests attention, so full is it of simplicity and dignity. He concentrates our attention on the internal drama of that great tragedy of the nineteenth century. He makes us breathe the atmosphere of Paris, and we become absorbed in its destiny and disaster."—New York Star.

"His narrative forms one of the most striking historical pictures we have in our literature."—Brooklyn Times.

A COLLECTION OF LETTERS OF THACKERAY.

1847-1855. With portraits and reproductions of letters and drawings. 1 vol., octavo, cloth, gilt tops, price $2.50.

"English literature has a new classic."—The Nation.

"The most charming letters that ever were printed."—London Daily News.

"They are worthy to rank with the most famous letters in the English language."—R. H. Stoddard.

"One of the most delightful volumes of the last five and twenty years."—London Saturday Review.

"To all admirers of Thackeray, and indeed to all lovers of literature, they will prove a literary feast."—Boston Advertiser.

GUATEMALA: THE LAND OF THE QUETZAL.

By WILLIAM T. BRIGHAM. With 26 full-page and numerous text illustrations. 8vo, $5.00.

"The most adequate and practical work that has, up to this time, been written on the resources of Central America."—Boston Traveller.

"Mr. Brigham made a very extensive trip through Guatemala, and he brought to all that met his eye a trained intelligence which detected everything revealed and promised. He discerned and comprehended much more than any of the natives have divined or hoped for, and his book is the only one extant in any language which discloses what the Guatemalan Republic is or might be."—New York Sun.

DOWN THE ISLANDS.

A Cruise to the Caribbees. By WILLIAM AGNEW PATON. Profusely illustrated. Square 8vo, $4.00.

This volume is the result of the author's journey through the British Guiana Islands, Barbadoes, St. Kitts, Antigua, Trinidad, and other of the Windward Islands. He has written entirely from personal observations, giving special attention to descriptions of the life, manners and customs of the natives, the Hindoo coolies and the negroes. The book is richly and most profusely illustrated by the artist, M. J. Burns, who visited for this purpose the localities described.

. These books for sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING

STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.

687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Nonnenberg, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY. BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated. COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREY'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

THE HENRY IRVING SHAKESPEARE.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by HENRY IRVING and FRANK MARSHALL. With notes and introductions to each play by F. A. Marshall and other Shakespearean scholars, and very numerous illustrations by Gordon Browne. To be completed in 8 vols., square royal 8vo, decorated cloth, price per vol. $3.00.

. Volume I. ready, and the other volumes will follow at intervals of three months.

The chief features of the Henry Irving Shakespeare, which is to appear soon, and to be the standard edition, will be a general introduction by Henry Irving: prefaces to each play, consisting of literary history, stage history and critical remarks by Mr. Marshall and other Shakespearean scholars; numerous and important notes, etc., and over 600 illustrations by Gordon Browne, a son of "Phiz."

"This edition may truly be called the literary sensation of the day, and nowhere will it be better appreciated than in this country."—New York Herald.

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.

Lady Burton's edition of her husband's Arabian Nights. Translated literally from the Arabic, prepared for household reading by Justin H. McCarthy. Six volumes, demy octavo, handsomely bound in white and gold. Net, $25.00.

. Lady Burton's object is to secure for the public, especially for her own sex and for scholars, the advantages of this Oriental masterpiece—the English reading, the knowledge of Eastern life, and perfect workmanship—which has been so heartily praised by the press and by scholars. She has been fortunate in securing the able assistance of a literary friend, Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, M. P., who has prepared it for family reading.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST.

By CHARLES LAMB. With an introduction by Andrew Long, and 8 illustrations on copper, small 4to, bound, $1.50.

THE BOOK FANCIER; or, The Romance of Book Collecting.

By PERCY FITZGERALD. New edition. Elzevir 8vo, vellum cloth, gilt top, uncut, $2.00. Large paper, half morocco, $5.00.

CONTENTS: Of Book Collectors and Book Dealers; of the Mazarin Bible; Concerning the Incunables or Cradle Books; of the Elzevirs, Plantins, and old Printers; of Caxtons and of the English Printers; of the Library; of Binding and its Curiosities; of Curiosities of Printing; of Illustrated Books and "Luxurious Editions," etc.

"Amusing and agreeable to read. There is hardly a branch of the sport of book-hunting that he does not touch on; he is always diverting."—Saturday Review.

. The above books will be sent upon receipt of advertised price. Catalogues of our regular stock will be mailed, if desired, to those interested. New catalogue of Choice and Rare Books ready.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 24.
WHOLE No. 337.

{ E. H. HAMES & Co.,
Publishers.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 26, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St.,
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE FOR 1888

THE completion of the first year of SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE will be signalized by the publication of this

CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

POEMS by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,
AUSTIN DOBSON,
EDITH M. THOMAS.
STORIES by BRET HARTE,
H. C. BUNNER,
SARAH ORNE JEWETT,
T. R. SULLIVAN,
the late E. P. WHIPPLE,
E. H. & E. W. BLASHFIELD,
With other contributions.
ILLUSTRATIONS by WILL H. LOW,
WILLIAM HOLE,
HOWARD PYLE,
J. W. ALEXANDER,
F. HOPKINSON SMITH, C. JAY TAYLOR,
W. L. TAYLOR, and many others.
EVERYTHING COMPLETE.

The following is a partial list of the important features which have been already prepared to appear during the coming year:

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON will contribute to every number during the year. He will write upon many topics, old and new, in a familiar and personal way which will form new bonds of friendship between the author and his thousands of readers. In his first paper, entitled "A CHAPTER ON DREAMS," he tells, incidentally, some interesting facts concerning the origin of his story "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." This will appear in the January number.

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS, by Prof. W. S. CHAPLAIN, will be the first of an especially important and interesting series of papers on railways, their administrations and construction, including great engineering feats, famous tunnels and passes, and, indeed, those branches of the subject which in this day engage the attention of the whole country. The illustrations which will accompany this series will be very elaborate, original, and beautiful. The authors and the titles of the future articles will be announced later.

THE FICTION of the year will be notably strong, not only in the work of well-known writers but in that of new authors. A serial novel, entitled "First Harvests," by F. J. STIMSON, will be begun in January. Novelettes by HENRY JAMES and H. C. BUNNER, the latter illustrated, will appear early in the year. There will also be many short stories of notable strength and freshness, several of them illustrated.

MENDELSSOHN LETTERS. Some hitherto unpublished letters of the great musician, of special interest, written to Moscheles, his friend and master, will furnish the substance of two or three articles. They will be illustrated with many portraits, drawings by Mendelssohn himself, and other original and unique material.

ELECTRICITY in its various applications as a motive power, EXPLOSIVES, etc., will be the subjects of a group of illustrated articles of great practical and popular interest, by leading authorities upon these topics.

ILLUSTRATED ARTICLES of special importance will be those on the Campaign of Waterloo, by JOHN C. ROPES; on "The Man at Arms," by E. H. BLASHFIELD; two papers by EDWARD L. WILSON, illustrating results of recent Egyptian research; a further article by WILLIAM F. APTHORP, on a subject connected with his recent contribution on Wagner; Dr. SARGENT'S papers on physical development will be continued, also Prof. SHALER'S articles on the surface of the earth, both being admirably illustrated.

SHORT ESSAYS will be, as during the past year, an especially noticeable and individual feature. They will include papers by AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, author of "Obiter Dicta;" some further articles by W. C. BROWNELL; articles by Prof. WILLIAM JAMES, AUSTIN DOBSON, Gen. A. W. GREELY, Prof. JAMES RUSSELL SOLEY, Mrs. JAMES T. FIELDS, EDWARD KING, C. A. YOUNG, and many others.

POEMS in early numbers by THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, ANDREW LANG, CHARLES EDWIN MARKHAM, and others, give a good augury for the next year's verse; and in several cases well-known artists—notably ELIHU VEDDER, WILLIAM HOLE, and WILL H. LOW—have accompanied poems by striking and imaginative drawings.

ILLUSTRATIONS. The Magazine will show increased excellence in its illustrations. They will be more abundant and elaborate than ever. It is the intention of the publishers to represent the best work of the leading artists, and to promote and foster the most skillful methods of wood-engraving. The Magazine, on its artistic side, will exhibit what is finest, most sincere, and original.

SUBSCRIBE NOW, BEGINNING WITH CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS. Publishers . . . New York.

TERMS: { $3.00 a Year.
25c. a Number.

SPECIAL NOTICE To enable new readers to possess the Magazine from the first number (January, 1887), the following inducements are offered:

A year's subscription and the numbers for 1887 $4.50
A year's subscription and the numbers for 1887, bound in two volumes, cloth, gilt top 6.00

A year's subscription, consisting of twelve monthly numbers, gives more than 1,500 pages of the best, most interesting, and valuable literature. More than 700 illustrations from designs by famous artists, reproduced by the best methods.

THE HOLIDAY WIDE AWAKE

surpasses all previous achievements. Very large and full of every good thing. It is a standing wonder how so much so good so various can be got together. But for twenty cents! The price is suspicious. What can the publisher mean?

WHAT IS IN IT

Important works of the following artists: Howard Pyle, George Wharton Edwards, Edmund H. Garrett, William T. Smedley, L. B. Humphrey, W. L. Taylor, Heywood Hardy, F. H. Lungren, Warwick Brookes, and more.

The following writers and subjects:

Edmund C. Stedman contributes a lofty Christmas poem, The Star-Bearer.

Andrew Lang—a humorous poem, Ballad of a Bad Boy, a bit of autobiography.

Jessie Benton Frémont—Cruise of a Coverlet, or what befell an embroidered counterpane in the U. S. Navy.

Olive Risley Seward—Animals I Have Met, adventures on a tour round the world.

Mrs. John Sherwood—Those Cousins of Mabel's, a practice-story in social life.

Sidney Luska—My Uncle Florimond.

H. Rider Haggard—A Tale of Three Lions, a book in itself.

T. Letherbrow—Warwick Brookes and his Pencil Pictures, a revelation of unsuspected riches.

Mary E. Wilkins—Dill, a delicious extravaganza.

Charlotte M. Vail—The Last Christmas Tree, a story of prairie children.

Emma Sherwood Chester—The Wonder Ball, a marvelous tale to a practical end.

E. D. Walker—Crystals, a scientific diversion.

Louise Imogen Guiney—The Bringing-up of Puppies, a practical paper by one who knows the way from troublesome puppyhood up to well behaved dogship.

A. H. Leonowens—The People of Hindoostan, by a former instructor in the royal family of Siam.

Oscar Fay Adams—Homer: Tales and Romances.

And more—there is no stopping-place.

But the Holiday number is only a little brighter than every other one of the twelve.

Wide Awake all the year round is good and substantial instruction, diversion and practice in moral and intellectual life. It is made for the young, but the rising young. They think better thoughts and read better books than some of their elders. A good magazine for them is extremely good for some of the rest of us. $2.40 a year.

Babyland, eight pages a month of easy pictures, stories, rhymes, jingles, finger-play; help for the mother and fun for the baby. Baby can't read of course; but he can listen. Wonderful tales and rhymes they are; and the pictures are a great deal fuller of baby-delight when the mother talks about them. Five cents is well expended in Babyland, if you have the baby—almost no matter about the age. 50 cents a year.

Our Little Men and Women, twenty-four pages a month of pleasant and profitable reading and pictures for children of six to eight beginning to read. Ten cents. Sample copy for five cents. $1.00 a year.

The Pansy, thirty-two or forty pages a month of mainly religious reading and pictures for children from eight to fifteen. Ten cents. Sample copy for five cents. $1.00 a year.

Chautauqua Young Folks' Journal, twenty-four pages a month of the most substantial diversion for scholarly young folks, and old folks too—there is no distinction of age for improving people. Ten cents. Sample copy for five cents. $1.00 a year.

D LOTHROP COMPANY Publishers Boston

REPRESENTATIVE BOOKS

Each one here is suggestive of others that ought to be alongside of it, if there were room. The books are intended to advertise the publisher; not the reverse.

THE HOLY GRAIL

By ALFRED TENNYSON. Fourteen photogravures by W. L. Taylor. $6.00. Limited édition de luxe, $12.00.

Perhaps the richest book of the year. Page 9.
Let this stand for luxurious Holiday books.

THROUGH THE YEAR WITH THE POETS

Edited by OSCAR FAY ADAMS. Twelve exquisite books for gifts, indeed for every purpose of books. $1.00 a volume.

Poetical touches upon the seasons, from Chaucer down to our own time. Page 15.

This may stand for what we are doing in poetry.

STORY OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN

By ELDRIDGE S. BROOKS. $2.50.

Written for thoughtful, justice-loving people. Apart from its serious import, it has an interest keen as that of a sea-story. Page 26.

Let it stand for adventure, easy history, news of the world.

MIDNIGHT SUN: TSAR AND NIHILIST

By JAMES M. BUCKLEY, LL. D. Illustrated, $2.50.

The air of the book is that of a quick and keen observer, a frank but cautious critic, a student of man under strange conditions of climate, country, inheritance, government, means of control and espionage. Page 25.

This may stand for travel, political insight, social discrimination.

LOOK-ABOUT CLUB

By MARY E. BAMFORD. Illustrated, $1.50.

The Club is a family. Under the guise of play the family learns about spiders and butterflies, chickens and rabbits, fishes and frogs, the folks on the ground and the folks in the air, which includes grasshoppers and beetles.

To make young people like beginnings of learning, we cover almost the whole range of elementary science with pleasure excursions.

EIGHTY-SEVEN

By "PANSY." $1.50.

The last of a hundred, more or less, by "Pansy," all written to fix the attention of young and old on religious devotion as first in the order of all good things. Eighty-Seven is a book of help and hope for those who look to themselves and God alone for their fortunes. Page 64.

Stands for whole libraries, books for forward-looking people.

THE IGNORAMUSES

By MARY BRADFORD CROWINSHIELD. Illustrated, $2.50.

A Tour of Europe with two boys and a girl along to ask questions. Everything yields its secrets. Page 24.

This for instruction under the guise of pastime.

MIDSHIPMAN AT LARGE

By CHARLES R. TALBOT. $1.50.

As bright as ever a story was, with as good a moral without any show of moral at all. Page 6.

Let it stand for another sort of help disguised.

GLADYS

A Romance. By MARY G. DARLING. 12mo, $1.25.

Two good and true to be spoiled by pursuit, she nevertheless slowly learns to distinguish conjugal love. Her fortune takes her more or less blindly through the school of experience—a school that tempers not its exactions. Page 5.

Let this stand for our fiction.

LITTLE POLLY BLATCHLEY

By FRANCES G. SPARHAWK. $1.00.

If the whole of little Polly's life had been written, it might have been a little dull; but a story here and there is all the brighter for being told at full length. She seems to pick out the very nicest things to do in every chapter; and yet she isn't a bit of a prig.

A rare book, a novel book; as dainty and good as new. Let it stand for another sort of teaching.

BYE-O-BABY BALLADS

By CHARLES STUART PRATT. Drawings by F. Childe Haslam. $1.50, either in one or two volumes.

A beautiful color-book. In all but color it stands for our care for the little ones.

Bound volumes of five magazines for the young, beginning with babies and ending with serious readers, containing an unexampled wealth of literature.

Babyland. 4to, boards, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00. Page 54.

Our Little Men and Women. 4to, boards, $1.50; cloth, $2.00. Page 21.

Pansy. 4to, boards, $1.25; cloth, $1.75.

Wide Awake. Volumes W and X. 4to, boards, $1.75 a volume; cloth, $2.25. Page 22.

[See the opposite page.] They show the drift of our work. We want no better example.

The pages cited are in "Book-Buyer's Guide, a quick insight into the active books of this year," sent free by

D LOTHROP COMPANY Publishers, Boston

Thomas Nelson & Sons' Holiday Books.

GEMS OF ART.

THREE HANDSOME COLOR BOOKS.

Communion; or, A Little Talk with Jesus. And other Hymns. With 16 full-page beautiful landscape designs in silver and colors. Oblong, ribbon style, illuminated paper cover. 32 pp. 50 cents.

Abiding in Thee. A selection of Poems. By CHARLOTTE MURRAY, CECILIA HAVERGAL, and others. Handsomely printed, with beautiful floral designs on every page. Small 4to, cloth extra. Illuminated cover, $1.00.

Garment of Praise (The), and other Poems. Selections from various authors. Beautifully printed, with a series of exquisite floral designs on every page. 4to, cloth extra. Ornamental design in silver on cover, $1.50.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "PEN AND PENCIL" SERIES.

Holland Pictures, drawn with Pen and Pencil. By RICHARD LOVETT, M.A. Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, with a map, and 133 illustrations, $3.50.

NEW VOLUME OF THE FAVORITE HYMN SERIES.

Lead, Kindly Light. The Favorite Hymn. By JOHN HENRY NEWMAN. With illustrations by F. Dadd, and a Memorial Sketch of the Author by H. L. L. Small 4to, cloth extra, beveled boards, gilt edges, $1.00.

A POPULAR BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

Favorite Rhymes for the Nursery. 16mo, fancy boards. Profusely illustrated, 50 cents.

TWO HANDSOMELY ILLUSTRATED BOOKS. By COMMANDER CAMERON.

In Savage Africa; or, The Adventures of Frank Baldwin from the Gold Coast to Zanzibar. By VERNEY LOVETT CAMERON, C.B., D.C.L., author of "Jack Hooper," etc. With 32 Illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.50.

Jack Hooper. His Adventures at Sea and in South Africa. By VERNEY LOVETT CAMERON, C.B., D.C.L., Commander Royal Navy author of "Across Africa," "Our Future Highway," etc. With 23 full-page illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.25.

R. M. BALLANTYNE'S NEW BOOK.

The Fugitives; or, The Tyrant Queen of Madagascar. By R. M. BALLANTYNE. 12mo, cloth extra, illustrated. Attractively bound in cloth, $1.50.

ILLUSTRATED JUVENILE BOOKS.

Temple's Trial; or, For Life and Death.

By EVELYN EVERETT GREEN, author of "The Heiress of Wyllmington," "Winning the Victory," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.25.

Our Sea-Coast Heroes; or, Stories of Wreck and of Rescue by the Lifeboat and Rocket.

By ACHILLES DAUNT, author of "Frank Redcliffe," "With Pack and Rifle in the Far South-West," etc. With 14 illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Early English Voyagers; or, The Adventures and Discoveries of Drake, Cavendish, and Dampier. Numerous illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, gilt edges, $1.50.

The title of this work describes the contents. It is a handsome volume, which will be a valuable gift for young persons generally, and boys in particular. There are included many interesting illustrations and portraits of the three great voyagers.

Martin's Inheritance; or, The Story of a

Life's Chances. A Temperance Tale. By E. VAN SOMMER, author of "Lionel Franklin's Victory," "By Uphill Paths." 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Ferryman's Boy (The), and Other Stories. By

CRONA TEMPLE. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, 50 cts.

Woodside; or, Look, Listen, and Learn. By

CAROLINE HADLEY, author of "Stories of Old," etc. 18mo, cloth extra, illustrated, 50 cents.

Johnnie's Venture. A Story of an Exciting Journey.

By G.E.W., author of "Harry Bertram," "Archie Digby," etc. 18mo, cloth extra, illustrated, 50 cents.

INTERESTING BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

Changed Scenes; or, The Castle and the Cottage. By LADY HOPE, author of "Our Coffee House," "A Maiden's Work," "Sunny Footsteps," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

An interesting story for girls, of two English orphans and their guardian, in the course of which valuable moral and religious lessons are conveyed by some pleasing allegories.

Children's Mirror (The). A Treasury of Stories.

By COUSIN KATE. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Georgie Merton; or, Only a Girl. By FLORENCE

HARRINGTON. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, 80 cents.

A most interesting tale for young people, with admirable etched illustrations. The heroine, "only a girl," is a noble example of courage, spirit, and fortitude.

Not Thrown Away, but Given; or, The Story of Marion's Hero. By MRS. G. S. REANEY, author of "Daisy Snowflake's Secret," "Our Daughters," "Our Brothers and Sons," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, 80 cts.

A clever and instructive story of self-sacrifice, illustrated in a mother becoming a teetotaler in order to save her son, and a talented young man devoting his life to lay-mission work among the poor of a low district in London.

Rinaultrie. By MRS. MILNE-RAB, author of "Morag:

A Story of Highland Life," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, gilt top, $1.50.

"We heartily commend this fresh, healthy, and carefully written tale, with its truthful and vivid pictures of Scottish life."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Dulcie's Little Brother; or, Doings at Little

Monksholm. By EVELYN EVERETT GREEN, author of "Temple's Trial," "Fighting Good Fight," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

Wilful Winnie. A Tale. By ANNIE S. SWAN, author of "Thankful Rest," "Aldersyde," etc. 18mo, cloth, 50 cents.

One of the Least and Ruth Elliot's Deliverer.

By MRS. E. R. PITMAN. 18mo, cloth extra. Frontispiece and Vignette. 50 cents.

ATTRACTIVE JUVENILES.

Jack's Year of Trial. By ANNIE S. SWAN, author of "Thankful Rest," "Aldersyde," "Carlownie," etc. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, 80 cents.

King's Message (The). A Book for the Young. By the Rev. J. H. WILSON, D.D., author of "The Gospel and its Fruits," etc. With illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Phantom Picture (The). By the Hon. MRS. GREENE, author of "The Grey House on the Hill," "On Angel's Wings," etc. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth extra, 80 cents.

For sale by all Booksellers. Sent by mail, postage paid by the Publishers.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, Publishers and Importers, 42 Bleeker St., New York.

Thomas Nelson & Sons' Holiday Books.

ATTRACTIVE JUVENILES.

Home for the Holidays. By Mrs. G. C. CAMPBELL, author of "Natural History for Young Folks," etc. With 20 illustrations. 16mo, cloth extra, 80 cents.

An attractive book for children, which, along with a simple narrative, includes some interesting facts of natural science, historical legends, etc.

Pictures of St. Peter in an English Home. By A. L. O. E., author of "The Shepherd of Bethlehem," "Hebrew Heroes," etc. 12mo, cloth extra, gilt edges, $1.50.

Story of the Spanish Armada. With 17 illustrations. 18mo, cloth extra, 60 cents.

Straight Paths, and the Three T's. By HARRIET CARSON. 18mo, cloth, 60 cents.

What Shall We Talk About? A Book for the Young. With 34 illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

New Edition, Handsomely Illustrated.

Pilgrim's Progress. By JOHN BUNYAN. With 60 illustrations by David Scott, R.S.A., and W. B. Scott. 8vo, cloth extra, $2.00.

NEW BOOKS BY JOHN GIBSON.

Chips from the Earth's Crust; or, Short Studies in Natural Science. By JOHN GIBSON, Natural History Department, Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art; author of "Science Gleanings in Many Fields," etc. With 29 illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.25.

Great Waterfalls, Cataracts, and Geysers Described and Illustrated. By JOHN GIBSON, author of "Science Gleanings," "Chips from the Earth's Crust," etc. With 32 illustrations. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.25.

Monsters of the Sea, Legendary and Authentic. By JOHN GIBSON, Natural History Department, Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art; author of "Science Gleanings in Many Fields," etc. With 16 illustrations. 18mo, cloth extra, 60 cents.

DAILY TEXT-BOOKS.

64mo, HANDSOMELY PRINTED.

OUR DAILY BREAD. OUR DAILY PORTION. OUR DAILY FOOD. OUR DAILY LIGHT.

Bound in fancy cloth, 20 cents each; bound in lambekin, Venetian morocco, and Persian calf, 50 cents each; bound in Indian matting Persian, elephant grain Persian, and Persian calf, silk center, 75 cents each.

SUNRISE SERIES.

FOUR BEAUTIFULLY ILLUMINATED TEXT-BOOKS.

For Eventide. Beautifully illuminated, with Text and Hymns for Eight Weeks. Edited by H. L. L. Richly gilt covers in gold bronze, ribbon style, gilt edges, 35 cents; Persian calf, $1.25.

Thoughts for Sunrise. Daily Morning Texts and Morning Hymns. Beautifully illuminated by L. M. W. Each page containing an illuminated text with appropriate hymn. Covers in gold bronze, ribbon style, gilt edges, 35 cents; Persian calf, $1.25.

Thoughts for Sunset. Daily Evening Texts and Evening Hymns. Beautifully illuminated by L. M. W. Covers in gold bronze, ribbon style, gilt edges, 35 cents; Persian calf, $1.25.

Thoughts of Heaven, our Home Above. Beautifully illuminated. Covers in gold bronze, ribbon style, gilt edges, 35 cents; Persian calf, $1.25.

For sale by all Booksellers. Sent by mail, postage paid by the Publishers.

THOMAS NELSON & SONS, Publishers and Importers, 42 Bleecker St., New York.

My Old Kentucky Home. The Swanee River.

By STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER. Beautifully illustrated. Each in one 4to volume. Full gilt, in cloth, ivory finish, imitation wood or monkey grain, $1.50; in seal, $2.50; in flexible calf extra, or tree calf, $5.00.

The words of the songs are exquisitely drawn and illuminated amid wreaths of rich Southern flowers and fair Southern landscapes; with many full-page pictures, representing the Swanee River, the old cabin home, the weary wanderer, the joys of childhood, the banjo-players, etc.

The Longfellow Prose Birthday Book;

OR, LONGFELLOW'S DAYS ($1.00; in flexible calf or seal, $2.50), is a charming compilation from the journals and letters of our great poet, edited by Mrs. Laura Winthrop Coffin, and full of spirituality and beauty. All lovers of Longfellow will seek out and possess themselves of this dainty book, which is illustrated with pictures of many scenes amid which the tranquil life of the poet was passed.

Juan and Juanita.

By FRANCIS COURTEMAY BAYLOR, author of "On Both Sides," etc. Square 4to, $1.50.

"Full of excitement, and cannot fail to give great delight to all readers, and particularly to the young people. There are many illustrations, which add very much to the interest of the narrative, and vividly show forth Indian and Mexican manners and customs, scenery and costume."

A Flock of Girls.

By NORA PERRY. $1.50.

"The latest and best of her stories appear in this attractive little volume, which will be sought by all who love innocence and beauty and strength."

Love and Theology.

By CELIA PARKER WOOLLEY. $1.50.

"It is a great theme, and it is handled in this novel with force, fire and fitness. This story is one of the most realistic presentations of conservative life in New England that I have ever seen."—Lillian Whitting, in Inter-Ocean.

Three Good Giants.

From the French of François Rabelais. By JOHN DIMITRY. With 175 illustrations by Gustave Doré and A. Robida. $1.50.

"The general reader, as well as the literary student, can now enjoy the wit and humor of the great Frenchman. No one need hesitate to place this book in his children's hands; and as to the children themselves, the 'Three Good Giants' will soon become as valued companions as 'Gulliver in Lilliput,' or 'Alice in Wonderland.'"

Miss Curtis.

By KATE GANNETT WELLS, author of "About People."—$1.25.

"Mrs. Wells is known as a woman who combines wide social observation and experience with literary ability, and whose researches in philosophy and ethics are not inconsiderable. It may be not unjustly claimed that she is rather a specialist on fine social theories—the ethics of society, so to speak—and that her thought in this direction has not only interest but value."—Lillian Whitting, in Inter-Ocean.

A brilliant story, demonstrating that true happiness springs from personality in religion, and not from dry ethical creeds and dogmas. It is full of delicious touches of parish experiences, of which the author is fully competent to speak.

The Shakespearian Drama.

A Commentary. The Tragedies. By DENTON J. SNIDER. $1.75.

A learned and interesting treatise, by this accomplished philosophical critic.

Under Pine and Palm.

Poems by Mrs. FRANCES L. MACE, author of "Legends, Lyrics and Sonnets," "Israeli," "Only Waiting," etc. Printed on hand-made-laid paper, gilt top and rough edges, $2.00.

"These are poems of exquisite aspiration and faith and tenderness; and, too, in an artistic rendering of the historic myths and legends of the Maine coast, Mrs. Mace has done for that shore what the poet Longfellow has for the North coast of Massachusetts. The work is of an exalted order and Mrs. Mace will be welcomed as one with a true claim to be numbered among the immortals."—Boston Traveller.

Fools of Nature.

By ALICE BROWN. 12mo, $1.50.

"Strikingly superior to the novel of the day—the vigor and passion of its love story—uninterruptedly interesting."—Boston Advertiser.

"A thoroughly enjoyable story, with enough of incident to keep the interest from flagging, with character-drawing marked by insight and skill, and with an ample store of humor, melting sometimes into pathos, sometimes hardening into satire."—Montreal Gazette.

"Both delightful and profitable reading, its morals being so admirably inculcated, and its æsthetics being of the first quality."—The Week (Toronto).

"While her work is too original to resemble that of Howells, it yet reminds one of him in various points so subtle as almost to evade analysis. The woman of the story is fortunately not of the Howells type, but the cleverness with which the disciples of spiritualism are described to us is worthy of his skillful pen."—Buffalo Express.

Sold by booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & COMPANY, BOSTON.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

THE SAÔNE. A Summer Voyage.

By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Author of "The Unknown River," etc. With 150 illustrations by Joseph Pennell and the author. Handsome quarto volume. Cloth, gilt, price $5.00.

IN HIS NAME.

A Story of the Waldenses, Seven Hundred Years Ago. By EDWARD E. HALE. A new holiday edition, with 129 illustrations by G. P. Jacomb-Hood, R. A. Square 12mo, cloth, gilt, price $2.00.

"In His Name" is the most artistic story Mr. Hale has ever written. It reads like an old troubadour song. — Helen Jackson ("H. H.").

HELEN JACKSON'S COMPLETE POEMS.

Including "Verses" and "Sonnets and Lyrics." In one vol., 16mo, cloth, price $1.50; white cloth, gilt, price $1.75; full calf, padded covers, $4.00; full morocco covers, $3.50; Kinnikinnick covers, $3.50.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

From the text of the Rev. Alexander Dyce's second edition. With portrait and memoir. 7 vols., 16mo. In neat box, half russia, gilt top, price $9.00 the set.

LOTUS AND JEWEL.

Containing "In an Indian Temple," "A Casket of Gems," "A Queen's Revenge," with other poems. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C. S. I., Author of "The Light of Asia," "Pearls of the Faith," "India Revisited," etc. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

POETICAL WORKS OF JOHN KEATS.

Chronologically arranged and edited, with a memoir, by Lord Houghton. A new edition printed on fine calendered paper. 16mo, cloth, price 1.50; limp calf or morocco, $3.50.

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

In the Name of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, Who was Crucified, and of His Mother, the Virgin Mary. In this Book are contained Certain Little Flowers, Miracles, and Devout Examples of that Glorious Poor Follower of Christ, Saint Francis, and of Certain of his Holy Companions, Told to the Praise of Jesus Christ. Amen. Translated from the Italian, with a Brief Account of the Life of Saint Francis, by ABBY LANGDON ALGER. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

IMAGINATION IN LANDSCAPE PAINTING.

By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Handsome cloth folio, gilt, price $6.50.

REYNARD THE FOX.

After the German Version of Goethe. By THOMAS JAMES ARNOLD, Esq. With 60 woodcut illustrations. Cloth, gilt top, price $9.00.

PARIS. In Old and Present Times.

By PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON. Profusely illustrated. Large 8vo, cloth, price $3.00.

DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY NEEDS.

"As thy Days, so shall thy Strength be." A selection for every day in the year. Selected by the editor of "Quiet Hours." 18mo, cloth, red edge, price $1.00; full morocco, padded, $3.00; full calf, padded, $3.50.

QUIET HOURS.

A Collection of Poems. 16mo, cloth, price $1.50; full calf, padded, $4.00; full morocco, padded, $3.50.

GEORGE MEREDITH'S NOVELS.

Ten volumes. Price, cloth, $20.00; half-calf extra, $25.00 the set.

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

With illustrations in silhouette, by PAUL KONEWKA. One superb royal octavo volume, bound in cloth, gilt, price $3.00; full seal, padded, $5.00; new Venetian style, $5.00.

CALENDRIER FRANÇAIS. 1888. Entirely New Selections.

Printed in the French language, and mounted on a card of appropriate design. Price $1.00.

NEW JUVENILES.

A GARLAND FOR GIRLS, and Other Stories.

By LOUISA M. ALCOTT. 16mo, cloth. Uniform with "Spinning-Wheel Stories," "Proverb Stories" and "Silver Pitchers." Price $1.25.

TOTO'S MERRY WINTER.

By LAURA E. RICHARDS, Author of "The Joyous Story of Toto." With illustrations. 16mo, cloth, price $1.25.

Readers of "The Joyous Story of Toto" will be glad to get inside of the blind grandmother's cottage again with Bruin and Coon and Cracker and the others, and hear about "Toto's Merry Winter."

THE ROB ROY CANOE.

By JOHN MACGREGOR, M. A. A new edition, including: A THOUSAND MILES IN THE ROB ROY CANOE; THE ROB ROY ON THE BALTIC; THE VOYAGE ALONE IN THE YAWL ROB ROY. Three books complete in one volume. 16mo, cloth, gilt, price $2.00; separately, $1.25 each.

ONE DAY IN A BABY'S LIFE.

From the French of M. ARNAUD. Translated and adapted by Susan Coolidge. With 32 full-page illustrations by F. Bouisset, printed in colors. 4to, illuminated board covers, price $1.50.

SOME OF OUR FELLOWS.

A School Story. By the Rev. T. S. MILLINGTON. With 16 illustrations. Small quarto, cloth, gilt edges, price $2.00.

HEROIC BALLADS.

Selected by the editor of "Quiet Hours." A presentation edition, containing 21 illustrations, printed on fine calendered paper, square 12mo, cloth, gilt, price $2.00.

LULU'S LIBRARY. Vol 2.

A Collection of Stories. By LOUISA M. ALCOTT. Illustrated by Jessie McDermott. Uniform with Vol. I. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

BOOKS WORTH BUYING.

The Count of Monte-Cristo. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS. With nearly 500 illustrations by Beauce, Staal and other eminent French artists. 5 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

Uniform with the superbly illustrated edition of Les Misérables, published last year. A translation of the tale on which Dumas founded his great romance is appended to the last volume.

Notre-Dame. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations from designs by Victor Hugo, Bayard, Brion, Johannot and other eminent French artists. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

Uniform with "Les Misérables" and "The Count of Monte-Cristo." Pronounced finer than any French edition by Hugo's literary executor (Paul Meurice).

The Toilers of the Sea. By VICTOR HUGO. With illustrations from designs by Chiffart, D. Vierge and Victor Hugo. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00. Uniform with the above.

This edition completes the trilogy of romances (of which "Notre-Dame" is the first and "Les Misérables" the second) on which Hugo's reputation so largely rests.

Carmen. By PROSPER MÉRIMÉE. With illustrations from designs by S. Arocs, engraved by A. Nargeot. 12mo, half levant, gilt top, $5.00.

The fine paper, broad margins, exquisite illustrations, attractive typography and rich binding make this without dispute the choicest edition that has ever appeared of any of Mérimée's works.

Sylvie: Recollections of Valois. By GÉRARD DE NERVAL. Preface by Ludovic Halévy. With 42 etchings by Ed. Rudaux. 12mo, half levant, gilt top, $4.00.

Fragrant with the memories of the days of early love, written in a most tender, charming, yet simple style. Uniform with Mérimée's "Carmen."

Paul and Virginia. By BERNARDIN DE ST. PIERRE. With 120 woodcuts and 12 full-page engravings from designs by Maurice Leloir. Large 8vo, cloth, $13.50; in a cloth portfolio, $12.00.

The illustrations so sympathetically interpret the text that new beauties are discovered through them in this forever charming pastoral of child-love.

The Iliad of Homer. Translated by George Chapman. With 24 full-page illustrations by Henri Motte, printed in the best style of heliogravure. With an introduction by Henry Morley. 4to, cloth, in a box, $15.00.

An edition worthy in every respect of the high place so long held by this version of the greatest of all epic poems. Commended to the attention of all lovers of worthy books for the beauty of its illustrations, the choiceness of typography and fitness of paper.

Père Goriot: Scenes from Parisian Life. By HONORE DE BALZAC. Translated by Miss Katharine Prescott Wormley. With illustrations by Lynch, engraved by Abot. 8vo, boards, $4.00.

The heavy paper and broad margins, together with the exquisite designs of Lynch, and skilful engraving of Abot, render it undoubtedly the handsomest edition ever published of any of Balzac's works. Imported by permission of Messrs. Roberts Brothers, who own the copyright of this translation.

Voices of the Flowers. Illustrated and arranged by HARRIET STEWART MINER. With poetical quotations from Longfellow, Whittier, Shakespeare, Moore. Each, $1.00.

The quotations appear on alternate pages, with appropriate pictures of flowers facing them. They are printed in colors, the covers being hand-painted and embossed.

Our Darlings: at Home, in Town, at the Seaside, in the Country and at Play. By MRS. Printed in colors and gold by Plea. Oblong 4to, cloth, $3.00; boards, $2.50.

First published in France, where it met with great success among both old and young. The children, laughing, dancing, romping, doing everything that children (and only children) can do—gracefully drawn and most charmingly colored—crowd every page with their happy faces, so that the text is obliged to wedge itself in as best it can.

Tartarin of Tarascon: Traveller, "Turk," and Lion-Hunter. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 115 illustrations by Montégut, Myrbaoh, Picard and Rossi. 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

"The humors of this countryman of Daudet and of Gambetta are simply delicious, and they are in this new shape fully illustrated by scores of delicate little pictures. . . . These pictures possess that lightness, elegance and grace, which belong to French art, and are not attained by English or American illustrations."—Springfield Republican.

Tartarin on the Alps. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 150 illustrations by Rossi, Aranda, Myrbaoh, Montenard, De Beaumont. 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

"As might have been expected from the names of the author, illustrators and publishers, this book is a thing of beauty. The illustrations especially are of marvelous delicacy, and though the range is necessarily limited, the variety of them is great. The book itself is a most amusing barter of the unvarnished gasconading to which their hot blood impels the natives of the South of France."—Glasgow Herald.

La Belle Nivernaise: the Story of an Old Boat and Her Crew; and other Stories. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 185 illustrations by Montégut. 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

"It is charmingly and gracefully wrought out, with a freshness of feeling that is more common among French than English writers, and a mingled pathos and heartiness that are delightful. The illustrations in these little stories are such as are possible only with French pencils and French printing."—R. H. STODDARD in Mail and Express.

Sappho: A Picture of Parisian Manners. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 70 illustrations by Rossi, Myrbaoh and other French artists. 12mo, three-quarters vellum, $6.00; half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

"We have no hesitation in pronouncing it Daudet's greatest work in fiction, and perhaps the particular letter-potent which places him above even the choicest rant and file of brilliant French authors in the galaxy of geniuses."—Independent.

These four books of Daudet are also bound in three-quarters vellum; per set, in a box, $24.00.

Mariage de Loti. By PIERRE LOTI. With illustrations. 12mo, half leather, $2.25; paper, $1.50.

Published in the same charming style as Daudet's "Tartarin" books and "La Belle Nivernaise." The author, who masquerades under the name of Pierre Loti, is Lieutenant Vland of the French Navy.

The Vicar of Wakefield. By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. With a prefatory memoir by George Saintsbury, and 114 colored illustrations by V. A. Porson. Royal 8vo, cloth extra. Printed in colors and gilt top, $5.00; three-quarters levant, $8.00; full levant, $12.00.

"The distinction of the book is its illustrations, of which there are one hundred and fourteen. . . . They interest and please by their minuteness and fineness, by their brightness and warmth, by their quietness, by their pertinency to the text, by their reproduction of the salient points in the story, by their harmony with history, by their artistic truth and mechanical merit."—Literary World.

Idyls of the Months. A book of colored designs, emblematic of the year, with appropriate verses. By MARY A. LATHEBURY. 4to, cloth, with gold, silver and three colors in inks; in a box, $3.50; also bound plain and tied with ribbon, in a box, $2.50; also in boards, $2.00.

The Literary World says: "It is a true poetic conceit." "One of the choice books of the season," says the Christian Union. The Hartford Courant says: "It is sure to find favor in the Holidays." Boston Goodridge says: "It is one of the prettiest volumes of the year." And the Cincinnati Gazette declares it "A showy and unique doudoir publication."

Cotillion Almanac for 1888. An American almanac of unique design and novel arrangement. Printed in colors and gold. Torchon style, 50 cents; boards, 25 cents.

Intended to illustrate "the German" and its favors. Forms a pretty Christmas souvenir and a suitable New Year's Card.

Last "Graphic" Pictures. By RAN-DOLPH CALDECOTT. Printed in colors. Oblong 4to, boards, $3.00.

Similar to his "Graphic Pictures" and "More Graphic Pictures" previously published. Overflowing with humorous conceits, and provoking good-natured laughter at human follies and weaknesses.

The Fairy Tales of the COUNTESS D'AULNOY. Translated by J. R. Planohé. New edition. With numerous illustrations by Gordon Browne and Lydia F. Emmet. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

"It is delightful to turn from the earlier mutilated paraphrases of these incomparable stories to the fresh, simple and accurate versions of this practiced man of letters, who was not vain enough to think he could better his author."—R. H. STODDARD, in N. Y. Mail and Express.

Stories of Persons and Places in Europe. By E. L. BENEDICT. Copiously illustrated. 4to, boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

"A capital book to teach and interest American children in the geography, antiquities, legends, historical events and personages, industries and works of art in foreign countries."—Boston Globe.

Mattie's Secret. By EMILE DESBREAUX. With 100 illustrations. 4to, boards, with lithographed double covers, $1.25.

"A charming little child-story, combining, in the most delightful manner, instruction with amusement. . . . We cordially commend it to the notice of our readers in search of pleasant and profitable reading for their children."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Every Boy's Annual for 1888. Edited by EDMUND ROUTLEDGE. Twenty-sixth year of publication. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

"The stories of travel and adventure, biographies, notes on natural history, expositions of parlor magic, tales of the French retreat from Russia, of Arctic exploration, of adventures in the bush, and of earthquakes, combine to make the volume extremely interesting."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Little Wide Awake for 1888. Edited by MRS. SALE BARKER. Fourteenth year of publication. With illustrations and colored frontispiece. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, $1.50.

"There is always something useful or entertaining to be found."—London Times.

"It is impossible to add anything to the praise of past years."—Saturday Review.

Wonderful Cities of the World. By HELEN A. SMITH. With numerous illustrations, many full-page. 4to, about 700 pages, cloth, $3.00.

"A book which is calculated to give much pleasure and instruction. . . . To bright boys and girls the volume will be the next best thing to a trip round the world."—Boston Advertiser.

Youngsters' Yarns. By ASCOTT E. HOPE. With illustrations by C. O. Murray. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

"Reading of the most attractive kind for youngsters, and, though veritable accounts of veritable experiences, have all of the stirring attractiveness of the most exciting fiction, and afford profitable examples of the value and advantage of courage, frankness and self-reliance."—Saturday Evening Gazette.

The Children of the New Forest. By CAPTAIN MARRYAT. New edition. With 54 illustrations by Paul Hardy, and 8 full-page plates by Sir John Gilbert, R. A. 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

An entirely new edition of one of the favorite books of the boys' favorite writer. The most attractive edition that this story of the English civil wars has ever appeared in.

The Adventures of Herbert Massey in Eastern Africa. By Commander V. LOVETT CAMERON. With illustrations by A. W. Cooper. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

Recounts the unusual experiences and remarkable exploits of an English boy traveling in Africa with his father. His romantic career and hair-breadth escapes will arouse the envy of every lad of spirit.

For Sale by all Booksellers, or sent, Postpaid, on Receipt of Price, by the Publishers,

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, - - 9 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & COMPANY.

HISTORICAL MEMORIALS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By ARTHUR PENNY. STANLEY, D. D., late Dean of Westminster. New edition in 3 vols., 8vo, large paper. This edition limited to 600 copies. Half cloth, $7.50.

While strictly following the author's arrangement, this edition will be issued in three volumes instead of one. In mechanical execution it will surpass the English edition, and be found much more convenient for reading or reference. The price of the three volumes will be only about one-fifth more than the London copy in one volume.

In addition to the illustrations in the English edition, each of these volumes will contain a frontispiece etching. The composition and presswork are by Messrs. John Wilson & Son of Cambridge, and the paper, the "Number One, extra," of the Cumberland Mills.

This large-paper edition will not exceed six hundred copies for sale. Each copy will be numbered, and registered when sold.

The price, bound in unique half cloth, with paper sides, will be seven dollars and fifty cents ($7.50) for the set. A limited number will be bound in full calf and morocco, and also in library bindings, at prices varying from $12.00 to $18.00.

Subscriptions solicited.

FIFTY YEARS OF ENGLISH SONG; or, Selections from the Poets of the Reign of Victoria. Edited and arranged by HENRY F. RANDOLPH. Beautifully printed by the University Press. 4 vols., small 12mo, cloth, $5.00. The volumes sold separately when desired, price $1.25 each.

Volume *. The Earlier Poets. The Blackwood Coterie and Early Scottish Poets.

Volume . The Poets of the First Half of the Reign. The Novelist-Poets.

Volume *. The Poets of the Latter Half of the Reign. The Writers of Vers de Societe.

Volume . The Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. The Ballad and Song Writers. The Religious Poets.

Each volume is prefaced by complete biographical and bibliographical notes, and contains full indexes, including an index of pseudonyms and literary sobriquets. Another valuable feature is the explanatory notes, which give the approximate number of lines contained in each poem not printed in full, an outline of the story, if any, and a description of the purpose of the poem, so that it is possible from a perusal of selections and notes, to form an intelligent opinion concerning the poem itself. The purpose of the volumes differs somewhat from that of the ordinary anthology, in that the selections have been made with a view to exhibiting the general characteristics of the authors represented, thereby furnishing a general survey of the scope and tendency of English verse during the last fifty years. Great pains have also been taken to obtain an accurate text. In all cases where it has been practicable, the selections have been made from the English edition of the author's works; and where this has been impracticable, an authorized American reprint has been used, and in all cases the reading and punctuation given in the volume adopted as an authority has been strictly followed. The chronological arrangement of the selections, and the large space allotted to living English poets makes the volumes cover an entirely different field from that occupied by the standard poetical anthologies, such as Dana's Household Book of Poetry, Emerson's Parnassus, Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song, Whittier's Songs of Three Centuries and Ward's English Poets, to which the volumes will prove an admirable supplement.

The volumes will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of price.

BETWEEN THE LIGHTS. Thoughts for the Quiet Hour. (A book of daily reading for every day in the year.) Compiled and arranged by FANNY B. BATES. 12mo, ornamental cloth binding, $1.75.

The publishers believe that for felicity and variety of selection the present volume is an advance on many similar publications; while the departure from the common rule in such volumes of limiting each day's selection to a single page has made possible the quotation of a very large number of poems in full.

NEW BIOGRAPHICAL VOLUMES.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF WILLIAM G. SCHAUFFLEE, for forty-five years a missionary in the Orient. With an introduction by Professor Park. With portrait, 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

THE LIFE OF CONSTANS L. GOODELL, D. D. By Professor CURRIER. With an introduction by William M. Taylor, D. D. With two portraits, $1.50.

MEMORIALS OF WILLIAM E. DODGE. Compiled and edited by D. STUART DODGE. Popular edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.00; by mail, $1.15.

OUTLINES OF A GENTLE LIFE. A Memorial Sketch of Ellen P. Shaw. Edited by her sister, MARIA V. G. HAVERGAL. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

JAMES HANNINGTON, D. D., F. L. S., F. R. G. S., First Bishop of Equatorial Africa. A History of his Life and Work, 1847-1886. By E. C. DAWSON. With portrait, map and 12 full-page illustrations, and a number of small sketches. 1 royal 12mo, $2.00.

"It would be hard to name, in any sphere of human endeavor, exposure, danger and suffering, an example of more manly steadfastness, more courage, more patience in 'enduring all things.'"—Standard, London.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MARIA V. G. HAVERGAL. With journal and letters. Edited by her sister, J. MIRIAM CRANE. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

DAINTY CHRISTMAS BOOKS. Made up for Christmas-tide in song and story. Each complete in itself. Put up in white Whatman paper, rough edges, with embossed titles, each $1.25; with hand-painted decoration on the cover, $1.75.

I. The Star in Judah's Sky. Compilation in prose and verse. Containing the gospel narrative of the nativity, and hymns and carols of a distinctively religious character. Printed on hand-made paper, with three photographic illustrations—THE NATIVITY, Schöner; THE HOLY NIGHT, Correggio; MARY AND ELIZABETH, Carl Müller, $1.25.

II. The Mistletoe Bough. Compilation in prose and verse. From Irving, Wordsworth, Hans Andersen, Phoebe Cary, etc. Printed on plate paper, with numerous illustrations copied from Caldecott's designs, $1.25.

III. Under the Holly. Compilation in prose and verse. From Thackeray, Tennyson, Addison, Dickens, etc. Printed on plate paper, with numerous illustrations copied from designs by Caldecott. $1.25. Each of the above three parts are complete in themselves.

THREE KINGS. A Christmas Legend of Long Ago. By Miss MARY LELAND McLANATHAN. Bound in colored Sweden paper, $2.00; parchment, $3.00; cloth of gold, $3.00.

This legend of the days of King Arthur tells, ostensibly from monastic records, the story

"Of how the message of the Christ-child found,
At Christmas-tide, three men of gentle will."

With four full-page illustrations from pen-and-ink drawings by Miss Rosina Emmett; the title-page and vignettes and large initials by Miss Susan Hayes Ward.

NEW VOLUMES OF SERMONS.

THE COVENANT OF PEACE. (Twenty Sermons.) By MARVIN E. VINCENT, D. D., author of "Gates into the Palm Country." Small 8vo, $1.75.

"The author does not discuss disputed questions in theology, or issues between science and religion; nor is it an attempt to restate the truths of the gospel in the terms of modern science. He endeavors to deal, in a direct and practical fashion, with certain hard, painful and puzzling phases of Christian experience, and with certain mischievous mistakes in popular conceptions of duty and of privilege. The book is for the tempted, the unsuccessful, the discouraged and the weary; for souls fighting for life and victory under the burden of infirmity and the sting of sorrow."

SUNDAYS AT BALMORAL. Sermons by the late Very Rev. Principal TULLOCH, D. D., LL. D. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

LIVING FOR THE MASTER. Sermons by LEWIS H. RIND. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE SEEKING SAVIOUR, and Other Bible Themes. By the late Dr. W. P. MACKAY, M. A., author of "Grace and Truth." 12mo, $1.25.

OTHER RELIGIOUS PUBLICATIONS.

THE CHILDREN FOR CHRIST. Thoughts for Christian Parents on the Consecration of Home Life. By the Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, author of "Abide with Christ," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

BEYOND THE STARS; or, Home Life in Heaven. A Series of Discourses on the Future Life. By ARCHIBALD McCULLAGH, D. D. 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

THE VERILY, VERILYS OF CHRIST. By Rev. I. H. ROGERS, M. A. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

STREAMLETS OF SONG. Poems for children. By the late FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. Square 16mo, cloth, $1.00.

THE LITTLE CHILDREN THAT ARE GONE. Words of Comfort for their Mothers. Square 24mo, paper, 50 cents.

A CRY FROM THE LAND OF CALVIN AND VOLTAIRE. A Sequel to the "White Fields of France." Records of the McAll mission. Illustrated, 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

OUR SOVEREIGN LADY. A book for her people. By the author of "English Hearts and Hands." 16mo, cloth, 50 cents.

LOVE THE FULFILLING OF THE LAW. Selected from the writings and MSS. of the late NORMAN MACLEOD. Compiled by his daughter. Crown 12mo, $1.75.

OUR FATHER. Illustrations of the Lord's Prayer from many writers. Compiled by ANNIS L. HYDE. 24mo, cloth, $1.00.

EPOCHS OF CHURCH HISTORY.

The Church of the Early Fathers. External History. By ALFRED PLUMMER, D. D. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

The Church and the Roman Empire. By Rev. A. CARR. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

A History of the University of Oxford. By the Hon. G. C. BRODRICK. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

The Church and the Puritans, 1570-1660. By HENRY OFFLEY WAKEMAN, M. A. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

The English Church in Other Lands; or, The Spiritual Expansion of England. By Rev. H. W. TUCKER, M. A. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

The Evangelical Revival in the 18th Century. By JOHN HENRY OVERTON. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

History of the Reformation in England. By GEORGE S. PRENTISS, M. A. 16mo, cloth, 80 cents.

AIDS TO BIBLICAL STUDY OR READING.

THE MEN OF THE BIBLE. 16mo, cloth, each $1.00.

New Ready.

Abraham: His Life and Times. By Rev. W. J. DEAN, M. A.

Moses: His Life and Times. By Rev. Canon RAWLINSON.

Elijah: His Life and Times. By Rev. Prof. W. MILLIGAN, D. D.

Solomon: His Life and Times. By Ven. Archbishop F. W. FARREAR, D. D.

For Speedy Publication.

Gideon: His Life and Times. By Rev. J. M. LANG, D. D.

Isaiah: His Life and Times. By Rev. Canon S. E. DRIVER, M. A.

Jeremiah: His Life and Times. By Rev. Canon T. K. CHEYNE, M. A.

Jesus the Christ: His Life and Times. By F. J. VALINOS, M. A.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR; or, Anecdotes, Similes, Emblems, Illustrations, Expository, Scientific, Geographical, Historical and Homiletic. Gathered from a wide range of home and foreign literature, on the Verses of the Bible. By Rev. JOSEPH S. EXELL, M. A. Vol. I., St. Matthew. Small 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

KEYS TO THE WORD. Helps to Bible Study. By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D. 16mo, cloth, 75 cents.

THE MONOGRAPH GOSPEL. Being the Four Gospels arranged in one continuous narrative in the words of Scripture, without omission of fact or repetition of statement. By G. W. MOON, F. R. S. L. With a map of Palestine. 24mo, cloth, 80 cents.

ABRAHAM, JOSEPH AND MOSES IN EGYPT. Being a course of lectures delivered before the Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. By Rev. ALFRED H. KELLOGG, D. D., of Philadelphia, Member of "Victoria Institute," etc. 8vo, cloth, $1.50.

NEW EDITIONS OF STANDARD BOOKS.

THE JEWS. A Prediction and Fulfillment. An argument for the times. By SAMUEL H. KELLOGG, D. D. New and enlarged edition. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

THE SENSUALISTIC PHILOSOPHY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. Considered by ROBERT L. DABNEY, D. D., LL. D. New edition, with additions. Small 8vo, cloth, $2.00.

THE QUESTION TO HAGAR: WHAT AILETH THEE? By the author of "The Other Shore," etc. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

HOLY CROSS. A History of the Invention, Preservation and Disappearance of the Wood Known as the True Cross. By W. C. PRIMS, LL. D. 16mo, ornamental cloth, $1.25.

THE DIVINE ORIGIN OF CHRISTIANITY indicated by its Historical Effects. By RICHARD S. STORES, D. D., LL. D. Small 8vo, 674 pages. New and cheaper edition. Cloth, $2.00. By mail, $2.15.

STEPPING HEAVENWARD. By Mrs. E. PRENTISS. New and cheaper edition, $1.00. By mail, $1.10.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF MRS. PRENTISS. Crown 8vo, with portrait and illustrations. New and cheaper edition, $1.50; by mail, $1.65.

HOME LIFE IN SONG, WITH THE POETS OF TODAY. New edition, with numerous illustrations. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

GARDEN GRAITH; or, Talks Among My Flowers. By SARAH F. SMILEY. New red line edition, in fancy cloth, $1.50.

AIDS TO PRAYER. Selected from the writings of HENRY WARD BEECHER. 24mo, cloth, red edges, $1.00.

* * Any of the above will be sent by mail on receipt of price.

38 WEST TWENTY-THIRD STREET (SO. SIDE), NEW YORK.

NEW GIFT BOOKS

THE SONG OF THE RIVER

By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Illustrated with original drawings by well-known American artists, especially drawn for this holiday edition of the ever popular poem, and engraved by George T. Andrew. 1 vol., small quarto, cloth, full gilt or torchon style, embossed, $1.50; full American seal, gilt edges, $2.50.

* * * Also a limited edition of 500 copies, with photogravure reproductions, printed on Japan paper, of the original drawings. Large quarto, beautifully bound in vellum-plated cloth, with appropriate design, $6.00.

NATURE AND ART

A collection of poems and pictures from the best authors and artists, compiled by LOUISE REID ESTES. Illustrated with etchings by Rajon after Bonnat, Forberg and Greuze, R. Swain Gifford, J. D. Smillie, H. Farrar, W. Leibl, Moran and others, and wood cuts engraved by W. J. Linton, Geo. T. Andrew, W. B. Closson, and others, from designs by A. F. Fellows, George Fuller, William M. Hunt, J. D. Woodward, Granville Perkins and others. 1 vol., quarto, vellum-plated cloth, gilt edges, with photo-etching design, $5.00; 1 vol., quarto, full seal morocco, $8.00; 1 vol., quarto, full tree marbled calf, gilt edges, $13.00.

THE DÜSSELDORF GALLERY

A portfolio of twenty etchings by noted artists of the Düsseldorf School, such as Volkhart, Leisten, Grotiohann and others, with descriptive and biographical text, royal quarto, beautifully bound. Edition limited to 350 copies, divided as follows: 5 copies, proofs on genuine parchment, text on vellum paper, in parchment cover, $150.00; 15 copies, proofs on satin, text on vellum paper, in satin cover, $75.00; 40 copies, proofs on India paper, text on vellum paper, in vellum cloth cover, $35.00; 40 copies, proofs on Japan paper, text on vellum paper, in parchment cover, $35.00; 250 copies, proofs on Holland paper, in cloth cover, $15.00.

RECENT FRENCH ART

A series of 16 beautiful photo-etchings, reproduced from selected original paintings, by the most celebrated French artists such as Meissonier, Dupré, Breton and others, printed in tints, with the authorization of E. Lecadre & Co. of Paris, by whom many of the plates were made, accompanied by biographical text compiled by W. F. KELLOGG. 1 vol., royal folio, cloth, with the French Arms stamped in gold and ink. A magnificent volume. $7.50.

LALLA ROOKH. The Vellum Edition

By THOMAS MOORE. This charming Oriental poem is now produced in a style worthy of itself. It is illustrated with 140 photo-etchings, made from designs by the best artists in America, Europe and Persia. Printed in a variety of colors on vellum paper, and the text of the poem set in with the illustrations in artistic style. This is without doubt the most sumptuous and elaborate art book ever published in America. 1 vol., quarto, bound in parchment paper, and in vellum cloth folio, with stamped ribbons, $15.00. Full American seal, gilt, $17.50.

New Books for the Young.

The Boys of 1812.

By PROF. J. RUSSELL SOLEY. An authentic account of the growth of the Navy, with an exciting narrative of the battles and adventures of the various heroes in that great naval war. Fully illustrated. Cloth, gilt, $2.50.

Zigzag Journeys in India.

A new volume in the popular Zigzag Series, of which over 200,000 volumes have already been sold, describing a journey to Bombay, Delhi, Lucknow, Calcutta, etc., with a collection of the fascinating Zenda tales of India. Fully illustrated, illuminated covers, $1.75.

Knockabout Club in the Everglades.

In which Mr. F. A. Ober, the traveler and lecturer, tells how the Club explored Lake Okechobee, fighting snakes, alligators and bears, and carries them through exciting adventures that have been fully illustrated by able artists. In illuminated covers, $1.50.

Three Vassar Girls at Home.

By MRS. CHAMPNEY, in which the favorites of so many readers visit some of our own States and Territories, accompanied by the inimitable "Champ" who has filled the pages with delightful sketches and views. Illuminated boards, $1.50.

Great Grandmother's Girls in New France.

By LIZZIE W. CHAMPNEY. A charming volume for girls, containing the story of many colonial heroines, their courage and romantic adventures. Cloth, 8vo, illustrated, $2.50.

New Standard Books.

Key to North American Birds.

By ELLIOTT COUES, A. M., M. D., Ph. D. Contains a concise account of every species of living and fossil bird at present known on this continent. Third edition revised to date, presenting the nomenclature of the American Ornithologists' Union. Illustrated. 1 vol., royal octavo, vellum cloth, $7.50. Sportsman's edition. Flexible Russia leather, $7.50.

Social Customs.

By FLORENCE HOWE HALL. A complete manual of American etiquette, by the daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and treats in an entertaining style some of the social problems that beset young and old, and will be found of use even by those most au fait in Mrs. Grundy's laws. 1 vol., 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

Travels in Mexico.

By F. A. OBER. A brilliant record of a remarkable journey from Yucatan to the Rio Grande. Historic ruins, tropic wilds, silver hills, are described with eloquence. 1 vol., 8vo., cloth, gilt, $2.50.

Miss Parlos's Kitchen Companion.

An entirely new work of a thousand pages by the authority on household matters. Fully illustrated. 1 vol., 8vo, cloth, $2.50. It is thoroughly practical; it is perfectly reliable; it is marvelously comprehensive.

After Paradise.

By OWEN MEREDITH. This dainty volume contains the later work of the author of "Lucile," and from its own merit as well as Lord Lytton's reputation, commands a wide interest. This is the AUTHORIZED EDITION. Cloth, gilt, $1.25.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS, OR SENT POSTPAID BY

ESTES & LAURIAT, - - - PUBLISHERS, BOSTON.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SHAKESPEARE'S KING HENRY IV.

Edition de Luxe, Limited. With 12 superb photogravures from original drawings by Herr Edward Grutzner. Expressly executed for this work and reproduced in the highest style of the art. The work is printed on Whatman's hand-made paper, and the text is tastefully printed in red and black. A series of original drawings has been executed to serve as ornamental headings and initials, each drawing being an exquisite little work of art. Folio, price $25.00.

ABBEYS AND CHURCHES OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial. Edited by the Rev. T. G. BONNEY, Sc. Doc., F. R. S., Professor of Geology in University College, London. $5.00; full morocco, $10.00.

THE MODERN SCHOOL OF ART.

Edited by WILFRED MEYNELL. With 8 full-page plates and etchings, and over 125 illustrations in the text. Cloth extra, gilt edge, $6.00; full morocco, $10.00.

CHRISTMAS IN THE OLDEN TIME.

By SIR WALTER SCOTT. Illustrated from designs by Harry Fenn, Edmund H. Garrett, J. S. Davis, George A. Teel, Henry Sandham, Childe Hassam, H. P. Barnes. Engraved and printed under the supervision of George T. Andrew. Large 8vo, cloth, $4.00; full morocco, $7.50; full light calf, $7.50; full tree calf, $8.00; calf and plush, $7.50; calf and watered silk, $7.50; seal padded, $6.00; seal flexible, $6.00; calf and shadowed silk, $7.50.

SHAKESPEAREAN SCENES AND CHARACTERS.

Illustrative of 30 plays of Shakespeare. With 30 steel plates and 10 wood-engravings, after drawings by Dicksee, Hart, Barnard, Ralston, Selous, Watson, Green, Hopkins, Bromley, Fredericks, Edwards, etc. The text by AUSTIN BRERETON. Royal 4to, full gilt, $6.00; seal, $8.00; full morocco, $10.00.

AMERICAN ART.

Illustrated by 25 plates, executed by the best American etchers and wood-engravers, from paintings selected from public and private collections, with text by S. R. KOEHLER. 1 vol. folio, new and unique style of binding, cloth, gilt edges, $15.00; half morocco, $25.00; full morocco, $30.00.

ETCHING. An Outline of its Technical Processes and its History.

With some Remarks on Collections and Collecting. By S. R. KOEHLER. Illustrated by 30 plates, by old and modern etchers, and numerous reproductions in the text. "A sumptuous volume." Full gilt edges, extra cloth, $20.00; half morocco, gilt, $30.00; full morocco, gilt, $40.00; édition de luxe, 2 vols., three-quarters russias, $100.00.

BY AUTHOR OF "GRANDMA'S ATTIC TREASURES."

A MOTHER'S SONG.

By MARY D. BRINE, author of "Merry-Go-Round," "Stories Grandma Told," etc., with elegant full-page illustrations from designs by Miss C. B. Northam. Engraved by Andrews. 1 vol., square 4to, extra cloth, full gilt, $2.50; seal, $5.00; full calf or morocco, $6.00.

DOG STORIES AND DOG LORE.

Experiences of two boys in rearing and training dogs, with many anecdotes of canine intelligence. An elegant, illustrated and exhaustive work on the Dog, by Col. THOMAS W. KNOX, author of "The Boy Travellers," "The Young Nimrods," "Marco Polo," etc. 1 vol., 4to, elegant double chromo cover, done in 12 colors, $1.75; extra cloth, gold and colored inks, $2.50.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART.

Bound volume for 1887, with 12 exquisite etchings, photogravures, etc., and several hundred choice engravings. Cloth, gilt, $5.00; full morocco extra, $10.00. "One of the handsomest gilt books of the season."

BIBLE TALKS ABOUT BIBLE PICTURES.

By JENNIE B. MERRILL and F. MCCREADY HARRIS. Illustrated by Gustave Doré and others. 1 vol., large 4to, with beautiful chromo cover, done in 10 colors, $1.25.

AFLOAT IN A GREAT CITY.

By FRANK A. MUNSEY, editor of The Golden Argosy. With 6 illustrations. 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

Now Ready. { Complete Descriptive Catalogue of our Publications is now ready, and will be sent free to any address on application. SEND FOR IT NOW. } Sent Free.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,

789 & 741 BROADWAY,

NEW YORK.

E. & J. B. Young & Company's New Publications.

A Dainty Novelty in Calendars.

THE EWING CALENDAR,

Being a Calendar for A. D. 1888.

Indicating the Principal Holy-days, the Anniversary of the Birth and Death of Eminent People, of Letters, Science and Art, Notable and Historical Events, etc., with Appropriate Selections from the writings of Mrs. JULIANA HORATIA EWING.

IN Leather
WITH BRONZE
Medallion

75

Silk Plush
WITH Celluloid
Antique Ivory
Medallion
$2.00.

This Calendar is made to use either in KASEL STYLE, or to HANG UP.

We commend this Calendar as a novel and graceful production.

The popularity of the author from whose works the selections are made, the discernment and ability shown in the choice of passages that bring out the veins of pathos and humor with which her writings abound, the care and taste displayed in the make-up of the Calendar, the perfect likeness of Mrs. Ewing given in the medallion, and the suggestiveness of the whole design, will appeal to the many readers and lovers of those stories, always pure, always bright, always interesting, in which Mrs. Ewing's pen was so prolific.

BUY THE ENGLISH EDITIONS

OF
MRS. EWING'S BOOKS.

The Peace Egg.

Dandelion Clocks.

Mary's Meadow.

Jackanapes.

Story of a Short Life.

Daddy Darwin's Dove-Cot.

Lob-Lie-by-the-Fire.

Mrs. Ewing and Her Books.

ALL IN PAPER BOARD BINDINGS.

33 cents each, net; by mail, 33 cents.

SUNDAY.
VOLUME FOR 1888
CONTAINS OVER 260 ILLUSTRATIONS.

Cloth, Gilt Edges, $2.00;
Illuminated Boards, $1.25.

No other volume of the same character gives a corresponding amount of new illustrations and letter-press.

The Publications of this Society are fac-simile reproductions in color of the works of the Old Masters, including examples after Fra Angelico, Raffaele, Giotto, Ghirlandaio, Bazzi, Perugino, and others.

Publications of Messrs. CASTELL BROS.

IN COLORS AND MONOTINT.

The "Peniel" Christmas Cards.

The great success of last year's issue of this series of True Christmas Cards has induced the publishers to issue for this season a longer and more artistic line than they have heretofore attempted. Prices range from 5 cents to 50 cents per card (sold in packages of three or six cards). A full list will be forwarded on application.

On the Wing.

Scripture Text for each Day in the Month. Verses by LUCY A. BENNETT. Designs by ALICE and F. CORBYN PRICE. Square 32mo. 17 pages of exquisite colored lithography, and 18 pages in monotint. Paper boards, 50 cents; also in a variety of fine leather bindings from $1.00 to $2.50.

Gray's Elegy.

A beautifully illustrated edition of the "Elegy Written in a Country Church Yard." By THOMAS GRAY. Small quarto, with full-page illustrations. Lettering and ornaments in the finest style of monotint. Small 4to, monotint, paper boards, gilt edges, $1.25; in fine leather bindings, from $1.25 to $3.00.

Footsteps of Jesus.

A Book of Scripture Texts and Poems for Children. By ERNEST C. PRICE. Designed and illustrated by ALICE PRICE and F. CORBYN PRICE. Oblong 4to, 11 pages of exquisite colored chromo-lithography, and 21 pages artistically rendered in monotint. Illuminated boards, gilt edges, $2.50.

Heavenward.

A Scripture Text-Book, with Poetical Extract for each day in the month. Beautiful designs and illustrations, in color and monotint, on opposite pages. By ALICE and F. CORBYN PRICE. Square 32mo, paper boards, 50 cents; or in cloth and fine leather bindings, from 75 cents to $1.50.

The sale of this book has reached nearly 300,000 copies within a year of its publication.

A New Volume of the "Jackdaw Series."

Misadventures at Margate;

Or, THE VULGAR BOY. Twenty full-page Designs, imperial 4to. Printed in colors. $3.00.

The Popular Ingoldby Legend, pictured by

ERNEST M. JESSOP.

A Gem in Monotint.

Children's Prayers.

IN VERSE.

By S. WILSON. Twelve full-page monochrome illustrations after original drawings by JANE M. DRALY and F. MARRIOTT. Delicately tinted illuminated cover, yellow edges, 50 cents.

Pictorial Architecture of Greece and Italy.

By the Rev. H. H. BISHOP, M. A.

With over 100 wood-cut illustrations. Oblong 4to, cloth, $1.50, net; by mail, $1.65.

Pictorial Geography of the British Isles.

By MARY E. PALGRAVE.

With 150 wood-cut illustrations. Oblong 4to, cloth, $1.50, net; by mail, $1.65.

THE LANDING

OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

By Mrs. HEMANS. An exquisite little book, illustrated in colors in the highest style of lithographic art. Paper boards, 50 cents; also in a variety of fine leather bindings from $1.00 to $2.00.

Three Dainty Booklets.

In monotint lithography. Square 32mo, round corners, gilt edges, ribbon-tied. 25 cents each.

Nearer, My God, to Thee.

Lead, Kindly Light.

Abide with Me.

EIGHT EDITIONS.

Prices from $1.25 to $12.00.

LONDON TEACHERS' BIBLES.

The Best Teachers' Bible Made. No Part Anonymous.

After critical comparison with the competing Bibles of other publishers, this edition has been adopted exclusively by the two great English Societies, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and

The Religious Tract Society.

A NOVEL BY CANON KNOX LITTLE.

THE BROKEN VOW.

A Tale of Here and Hereafter. By the Rev. W. J. KNOX LITTLE. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

"Beautiful story. . . . Rich in tender, pathetic beauty."—Academy.

"The descriptive portions of the book are charmingly vivid, and the whole atmosphere pure and elevating."—Home Journal.

"Told with so much grace and simple power as to rate it far above the class to which it belongs."—Chicago Herald.

THE ARUNDEL SOCIETY'S PUBLICATIONS.

A history of the formation and work of the ARUNDEL SOCIETY and catalogues of their publications will be sent free on application.

Any of the above books may be obtained from your bookseller, or will be sent post-paid by the publishers on receipt of advertised price

E. & J. B. YOUNG & CO., Cooper Union, Fourth Avenue, New York.

The great epic and tragic poem of contemporary life and eternal humanity. — A. C. SWINBURNE.

LES MISÉRABLES.

A BEAUTIFUL LIBRARY EDITION OF

Victor Hugo's Masterpiece,

JUST PUBLISHED BY

LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY,

254 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.

☞ The most complete Translation and the Best Edition for Library Use.

☞ It embodies the two great requisites of a Library Edition.—Clear Type and Handy Size.

This new and very handsome edition of "Les Misérables" has been printed by Messrs. John Wilson & Son, of the University Press, Cambridge, in their best manner, and no expense has been spared that would produce a really beautiful edition of Hugo's world-famous work in type which it is a pleasure to read, and in volumes which can easily and comfortably be held in the hand.

The basis of this edition is the English translation by Sir Lascelles Wraxall, which—made with the author's sanction and advice—has stood the test of time, and furnished the test of cheap editions in a single volume as well as a large and expensive edition in five quarto volumes. In the present issue this translation has been carefully examined and supplemented by the special translation of important passages and chapters, among the latter being in the first volume, Book II., Chapter VIII., The Wave and the Darkness; and Book V., Chapter XI., Christos Nos Liberavit; in Vol. II., Book I., Chapter XV., Cambroune; and Book VII., A Parenthesis, eight chapters; in Vol. IV., Book XII., Chapter VI., a metrical translation of the verses; and throughout the work many paragraphs which had hitherto been omitted. Numerous errors have been corrected, and the author's own arrangement of the work in five parts, and his subdivisions into books and chapters, have been restored.

Five volumes, 12mo, cloth extra, gilt top, with a beautifully decorated side and back stamp. PRICE. $7.50.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

BOSTON GLOBE (Editorial).

A NEW LES MISÉRABLES.

That Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," the greatest novel ever written, should have remained so long without a satisfactory presentation to American readers is a curious fact. At length, however, a Boston publishing house has come forward with an excellent edition of "Les Misérables," printed in five handsomely bound volumes, in clear, large type, and in all respects superior to any edition hitherto offered to American readers. Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., to whose enterprise we owe this new and surpassingly fine American edition, have done the legion of Hugo's lovers a further service by translating from the original French many chapters and passages omitted by the English translator and correcting many errors of the press which disfigured the latter's work. To re-peruse this masterpiece in this superior form is to renew the acquaintance of Fantine, Cosette, Marius, Jean Valjean, Javert, the Thénardiens; to go over that wonderful ideal field of Waterloo, more wonderful than the real battle itself; to hear and see and feel the revolution of July, 1832, surging through the streets of Paris; to see Enjolras, its typical spirit, on the barricade, with little Gavroche, the gamin, at his side,—and understand them all much better than we did before. The Boston publishers have certainly done literature a notable service.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

Five exquisitely printed volumes, the page of which is a delight to the eye and the touch. The binding is novel and attractive, and the volumes are of a size and aspect which invite perusal. . . . Altogether, for reading and for the library, the edition will satisfy the most exacting taste.

ROCHESTER DEMOCRAT.

An excellent edition of Hugo's greatest work, combining clear type, handy size, and moderate cost.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL REPUBLICAN.

Luxurious in paper, print, and binding.

☞ Sent, postpaid, upon receipt of the advertised price, or for sale by all booksellers.

ASK YOUR BOOKSELLER FOR LITTLE, BROWN & COMPANY'S LIBRARY EDITION.

LITTLE, BROWN & CO., PUBLISHERS,

254 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.

FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, AND OTHER STORIES OF NEW ENGLAND LIFE.

By C. H. W. 16mo. Cloth. $1.25.

CONTENTS: Five Hundred Dollars; The Village Convict; St. Patrick; Eli; By the Sea; In Madeira Place; The New Minister's Great Opportunity.

This is a volume of delightful and deliciously humorous stories by a new writer who has met with great favor as a contributor to the Century Magazine, in which "The Village Convict," "Eli," and some others of the stories originally appeared.

THE MERMAID SERIES.

The Best Plays of the Old Dramatists, unexpurgated, carefully edited, with Introductions by Gosse, Swinburne, Symonds, and other English writers, each volume containing an etched portrait. In monthly volumes of 400 to 500 pages. 12mo, cloth, uncut, $1.00 per volume.

VOLUMES READY:

MARLOWE. Edited by Havelock Ellis. With a general introduction by J. A. Symonds.

MASSINGER. Edited by Arthur Symonds.

MIDDLETON. With an introduction by A. C. Swinburne.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER. (2 vols.) Edited by J. St. Lou Strachey.

CONGREVE. Edited by S. C. Ewald.

Others in Preparation.

THE BADMINGTON LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

New Volume. Athletics (just ready). Fully illustrated, crown 8vo. Cloth, $3.50; half blue morocco, gilt top, $5.00.

Previous volumes of the series.

HUNTING, 1 vol.

FISHING, 2 vols.

RACING AND STEEPLECHASING, 1 vol.

SHOOTING, 2 vols.

OTOLING, 1 vol.

THROUGH THE FIELDS WITH LINNÆUS.

A Chapter in Swedish History. By Mrs. Florence Caddy, author of "Footsteps of Jeanne d'Arc," etc. With six illustrations and two maps. 2 vols., crown 8vo. Cloth, $4.50.

BARTLETT'S FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS.

12mo, cloth, 919 pages, $3.00.

Of this favorite book more than 80,000 copies have been sold. Notwithstanding the numerous invitations, this work remains the accepted authority. Dr. O. W. Holmes terms it "the most valuable, convenient, indispensable, and altogether admirable collection of quotations."

In the same style, and at the same price, Bartlett's Shakespeare Phrase Book.

FRANCIS PARKMAN'S WORKS.

Popular Edition. 10 vols., 12mo. Cloth, $15.00; half calf or half morocco, $30.00. (Sold only in sets.)

Library Edition. 10 vols., 8vo. Cloth, $25.00; half calf, $45.00. Separate volumes, $2.50 each.

Each of the above sets contains the following works:

Pioneers of France in the New World. 1 vol.

The Jesuits in North America. 1 vol.

La Salle and the Discovery of the Great West. 1 vol.

The Old Régime in Canada under Louis XIV. 1 vol.

Count Frontenac and New France under Louis XIV. 1 vol.

Montcalm and Wolfe. 2 vols.

The Conspiracy of Pontiac, and the Indian War after the Conquest of Canada. 2 vols.

The Oregon Trail: Sketches of Prairie and Rocky Mountain Life. 1 vol.

No American historian has achieved a greater popularity than Francis Parkman. His works have been pronounced "as fascinating as the best of Scott's novels." "The most eminent American historian now alive." "The Macaulay of the New World," and like phrases have been lavished upon him, and to read his works is to find these praises confirmed. Professor John Fiske terms Parkman's "Conspiracy of Pontiac" "one of the most brilliant and fascinating books that has ever been written since the days of Herodotus."

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

PALESTINE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST.

By EDMOND STAPFER, D.D., of the Protestant Theological Faculty of Paris. Translated by Annie H. Holmden. With maps and plans. 540 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, $3. London Athenaeum says: "Dr. Stapfer may be congratulated on the successful way in which he has accomplished his task. He has studied the diversified topics he treats of, and has generally drawn his material from the best authorities, arranging it in lucid order. Few guides will be found more useful in surveying the varied details into which a comprehensive subject leads him. There is no English book that can be put beside it as occupying the ground. The results of much reading and learned research are presented in a popular dress."

THE HUMILIATION OF CHRIST IN ITS PHYSICAL, ETHICAL AND OFFICIAL ASPECTS (being the 6th of the Cunningham Lectures).

By Rev. A. B. BRUCE, D.D. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $2.50. Uniform with the same author's Parabolic Teaching of Christ, and Miraculous Element in the Gospels. "These lectures are well worthy of the name they bear; with ample notes and references, it will be valuable to theologians, supplying a want in the literature of the subject, and containing many fruitful germs of thought. Dr. Bruce's style is uniformly clear and vigorous, and this book has the rare advantage of being at once stimulating and satisfying to the mind in a high degree. He has given us a book that will really advance the theological understanding of the great truth that forms its subject."—British and Foreign Evangelical Review.

ROMANISM AND THE REFORMATION.

From the standpoint of prophecy. By H. G. GUINNESS, author of the "Approaching End of the Age," etc. 12mo, cloth, 406 pages, $1.50.

CONTENTS: Daniel's Foreview of Romanism—John's Foreview of Romanism—Paul's Foreview of Romanism—Interpretation of this Triple Prophecy in Pre-Reformation Times, and its Practical Effect—Its Interpretation in Post-Reformation Times, and Practical Effect—Double Foreview of the Reformation in Old Testament Types and New Testament Prophecies.

"These lectures contain, I am sure, truth for the times, truth deeply and increasingly needed, not only for the preservation of the civil and religious liberties of our country, but for the practical guidance of the people of God."—Author's Preface.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT.

By their son, JOHN S. MOFFAT, with an introduction by Rev. William M. Taylor, D.D., with portraits and other illustrations, and a new supplementary chapter. 8vo, cloth, $1.75.

RAPHAEL: HIS LIFE, WORKS AND TIMES.

With 155 engravings and 41 full-page plates. By EUGENE MUNTZ. Edited by W. Armstrong. Large octavo volume. A new and improved edition. Handsomely bound. Price reduced from $15 to $9. Three-quarter levant, gilt top, $15; full levant, gilt edges, $20.

This is an entirely new and revised edition of this superb work.

"A magnificent and luxuriant volume. Among the illustrations will be found almost every work upon which the reputation of the master rests. There are some exquisite fac-similes of his rarer drawings, and a profusion of studies for his greater masterpieces."

THE STORY OF SOME FAMOUS BOOKS.

By FREDERICK SAUNDERS of the Astor Library, author of "Salad for the Solitary," etc. Cloth, uncut edges, $1.25.

"A most entertaining as well as informing book. In a chatty and easy style Mr. Saunders goes over the history of some of our most famous classics, telling the circumstances of their origination, the motives which prompted the writers, the difficulties and troubles endured in writing and launching their works, as well as the success they won, and the pleasure and advantage gleaned from their work."

THE BOOK LOVER'S LIBRARY.

How to Form a Library. By H. B. WHEATLEY.

The Dedication of Books to Patron and Friend. By H. B. WHEATLEY.

Modern Methods of Illustrating Books. By H. T. WOOD.

Each complete in itself. In cloth, uncut edges, $1.35.

IS THERE SALVATION AFTER DEATH?

A treatise on the Gospel in the Intermediate State. By E. D. MORRIS, D.D., of Lane Theological Seminary. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.25. Second Edition.

"The various views are stated with fairness and precision, the specific passages of Scripture bearing upon the subject are carefully considered, as well as the general testimony of Scriptural relation to it. We commend the volume to ministers and teachers."—N. Y. Observer.

THE GIST OF IT.

A Philosophy of Human Life. By Rev. THOMAS E. BARR, with an introduction by Rev. E. S. Gregory, D.D., ex-President of Lake Forest University. 12mo volume, cloth, 400 pages, $1.50.

. These books are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

NEW PRINCETON REVIEW FOR 1888.

Occupying a New Field, Covered by No Other Periodical of Europe or America.

EMINENT CONTRIBUTORS.

AS THE REVIEW enters its THIRD year, attention is invited to the fact that the promises made at its inception have BEEN MORE THAN FULFILLED. In addition to articles from the eminent contributors then mentioned, important papers have been published by such distinguished writers, both at home and abroad, as James Bryce, M. P., H. Taine, Philippe, Comte de Paris, Hon. A. H. Colquitt, the late Dr. A. A. Hodge, Dr. Henry Calderwood, J. Safford Fiske, E. L. Godkin, Hon. Ellis H. Roberts, H. H. Boyesen, Brander Matthews, Dr. Francis H. Brown, George Parsons Lathrop and many others. The four volumes already issued well justify the criticism made by one of the most famous publicists of the age: "IT IS MUCH SUPERIOR . . . IN EVERY WAY TO ANY AMERICAN REVIEW OF THE SAME SERIOUS AIM."

THE FOREMOST AMERICAN REVIEW.

THE INCREASED SUPPORT given the Review in the past year encourages the editor and the publishers to maintain in the future the high standard of excellence thus reached. It will be their steadfast purpose to keep the Review A FAITHFUL EXPONENT OF ALL THAT IS BEST IN THE THOUGHT OF OUR COUNTRY. Its aim is distinctively American. It is believed that the time has come when American scholarship is competent to support a discussion of American affairs, which in literary excellence, in scientific ability, in political insight, in philosophic culture, and in general soundness and worth, shall be abreast of the best that the scholars of any other land can show.

LIVE TOPICS.

To this end continued prominence will be given to the QUESTIONS OF THE DAY. No concessions will be made to the demands for a sensational literature; but, fully abreast of the times, the REVIEW will give to live topics that faithful consideration which alone can result in sound, thinking and cautious action on the part of earnest men. THE FOREMOST THINKERS in their respective fields of PHILOSOPHY, SCIENCE, HISTORY, ART AND POLITICS, will discuss the burning questions of the hour, in such a way as shall be best adapted to furnish our readers with an impartial knowledge of the great movements in which they themselves are called to play their parts.

FOREIGN AUTHORS.

IN ADDITION TO AMERICAN AUTHORS, THE CORPS OF FOREIGN WRITERS WILL ALSO BE INCREASED. In behalf of that catholic Americanism which welcomes the best from all lands, so long as it does not demand the retention of its own narrow nationality, the pages of the REVIEW will be adorned by papers from the leading minds of Great Britain and Continental Europe.

READABLENESS.

The brief and pointed "CRITICISMS, NOTES AND REVIEWS," by trained specialists in every department of thought, and the publication of a complete story in each number, will continue to maintain the POPULAR CHARACTER of the REVIEW, distinguishing it in this respect from many other periodicals.

THE ONLY REFERENCE REVIEW.

THE ELABORATE SYSTEM OF INDEXING AND THE COMPLETE HISTORICAL RECORD make the NEW PRINCETON unique as a record of contemporary thought. The two volumes published each year, with their facilities for ready reference, are worthy to serve as an annual encyclopedia of general information.

SMALL COST.

Finally, the low price at which the Review is offered to subscribers deserves careful consideration. Nowhere else in this country or in Europe is so much good literature, covering so wide a field of discussion, SUPPLIED FOR SO SMALL A REMUNERATION.

PUBLICATION.

The REVIEW is published six times a year, beginning with the January number, making TWO VOLUMES YEARLY. When no time is specified, subscriptions will commence with the current number. Vols. I., II., III. and IV., in numbers or bound, Now Ready.

TERMS.

$3 a year in advance, postage free. Remittances may be made in P. O. or Express Money Orders, or in Drafts, Checks or Registered Letters. Money in letters is at sender's risk. We make the Special Offer of the REVIEW for 1887 and 1888, TWO YEARS IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, FOR $5, OR THREE YEARS, from 1886 (commencement of NEW SERIES) to 1888, INCLUSIVE, FOR $7.

. Specimen numbers sent, postpaid, for 25 cents. Send for circular of club rates with other Periodicals.

A. C. ARMSTRONG & SON, Publishers, 714 BROADWAY, N. Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York.

Notable New Holiday Books. 1887.

I.

Engravings on Wood.

Engravings on Wood by Members of the Society of American Wood-engravers. With descriptive letter-press by W. M. LAFFAN. Popular Edition. Large folio, ornamental covers, $12.00.

The most distinguished wood-engravers of this country have contributed to this work twenty-five engravings, which are, with one exception, from American paintings, and the accompanying letter-press is written by William Mackay Laffan. The work not only illustrates in the most striking manner the marvelous progress which has been made in wood-engraving in the United States, but it represents the highest excellence ever reached in that art, in which America is universally acknowledged to hold the foremost place.

The Édition de Luxe—limited to 110 copies, at $100.00 a copy—has been sold in advance of publication.

The following is a list of the engravers who have contributed to the work:

V. BERNSTROM,	T. JOHNSON,	Miss C. H. POWELL,
T. COLE,	F. S. KING,	P. G. PUTNAM,
W. B. CLOSSON,	ELBRIDGE KINGSLEY,	JOHN TINKEY,
JOHN P. DAVIS,	G. KRUELL,	F. H. WELLINGTON,
FRANK FRENCH,	R. A. MULLER,	HENRY WOLF.

II.

"Harper's Young People" for 1887. Vol. VIII.

Pp. viii., 844, with 770 illustrations, 4to, ornamental cloth, $3.50. Vols. V., VI. and VII., $3.50 each. Vols. I., II., III. and IV. out of print.

Let the weary searchers for Christmas gifts pause at the sight of this book. Never could there be a more welcome reminder of Christmas joys. It is an inexhaustible source of entertainment. — N. Y. Tribune.

III.

Horse, Foot and Dragoons.

Horse, Foot and Dragoons. Sketches of Army Life at Home and Abroad. By RUFUS FAIRCHILD ZOGBAUM. With illustrations by the author. Pp. 176, square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $2.00.

It is not easy to say whether Mr. Zogbaum excels with pen or pencil, so evenly balanced are his accomplishments. — N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

IV.

The Wonder Clock.

The Wonder Clock; or, Four-and-Twenty Marvellous Tales: being One for each Hour of the Day. Written, and illustrated with 160 drawings, by HOWARD PYLE, author of "Pepper and Salt," "The Rose of Paradise," etc. Embellished with verses by Katharine Pyle. Pp. xiv., 320, large 8vo, ornamental cloth, $3.00.

These tales are fantastic, humorous, grotesque, comical, and the illustrations show a world of fancy and imagination. A wonderful book. — N. Y. Mail and Express.

V.

Modern Italian Poets.

Essays and Versions. By W. D. HOWELLS, author of "April Hopes," etc. With portraits. Pp. viii., 370, 12mo, half cloth, uncut edges and gilt tops, $2.00.

Mr. Howells has in this work enriched American literature by a great deal of delicate, discriminating, candid and sympathetic criticism. He has enabled the general public to obtain a knowledge of modern Italian poetry which they could have acquired in no other way. — N. Y. Tribune.

VI.

History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages.

By HENRY CHARLES LEA. To be completed in three volumes. Vol. I. (Origin and Organization of the Inquisition), pp. xiv., 584, published this day. 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, gilt tops, $3.00.

Vol. II. (The Inquisition in the Several Lands of Christendom) will be ready in December; and Vol. III. (Special Fields of Inquisitorial Activity) in February, 1888.

Mr. Lea is a man who is an embodiment of industry and conscientious thoroughness, and who writes in a deliberate, calm and philosophical manner. His former writings will secure for this history a wide hearing and an interested welcome. — N. Y. Times.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postpaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price. HARPER & BROTHERS' CATALOGUE sent on receipt of ten cents postage stamps.

BEGINNING OF A NEW VOLUME.

A Superb Holiday Number.

NO CONTINUED ARTICLES OR STORIES.

WITH SEVENTY ILLUSTRATIONS,

INCLUDING

A PAGE PLATE IN COLOR.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FOR DECEMBER, 1887 (Vol. 76, No. 451),

CONTAINS:

THE VICAR. A POEM.

By WINTHROP M. PRAED. Illustrated with Ten Drawings (including frontispiece) by EDWIN A. ABBEY;

OLD GARDEN FLOWERS.

By F. W. BURBRIDGE, F. L. S. With Eleven Illustrations by ALFRED PARSONS; PRECIOUS STONES IN THE UNITED STATES.

By GEORGE F. KUNZ. With a Beautiful Full-page Plate of Gems Printed in Colors;

ANNIE LAURIE. A STORY.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. Illustrated by C. S. REINHART;

CAPTAIN SANTA CLAUS. AN ARMY CHRISTMAS STORY. By Captain CHARLES KING, U. S. A. With Three Illustrations by R. F. ZOGBAUM;

HIS DAY IN COURT. A STORY.

By CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK. With Four Illustrations by A. B. FROST;

"INJA." A VIRGINIA CHRISTMAS STORY.

By AMELIE RIVES. With Four Illustrations by FREDERIC DIELMAN;

CRADDOCK'S HELDEST. A SKETCH.

By FRANCES COURTENAY BAYLOR. With Four Illustrations by FREDERICK BARNARD;

FIVE O'CLOCK TEA. A FARCE.

By WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. With Two Illustrations by C. S. REINHART;

PAULINE PAVLOVNA. A DRAMATIC POEM.

By THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH. With Two Illustrations by C. S. REINHART;

THE CONVICT'S CHRISTMAS-EVE. A POEM.

By WILL CARLETON. With an Illustration by GILBERT GAUL;

ANOTHER WAY. A POEM.

By ANDREW LANG;

ANTHONY OF PADUA. A POEM.

By HARRIET LEWIS BRADLEY. With Full-page Engravings after MURILLO;

FROM HEINRICH HEINE. A POEM.

By WILLIAM BLACK;

EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR.

By GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS.

EDITOR'S STUDY.

By WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

EDITOR'S DRAWER.

Conducted by CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

Including a Humorous Contribution from MARK TWAIN, and a Vaudeville, entitled "Shot Thro' the Head," by EDWARD EVERETT HALE, with Seven Illustrations by C. J. TAYLOR.

LITERARY NOTES.

By LAURENCE HUTTON.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

Per Year:

Postage Free to Subscribers in the United States, Canada and Mexico.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE	$4.00
HARPER'S WEEKLY	4.00
HARPER'S BAZAR	4.00
HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE	2.00

Remittances should be made by Post Office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

When no time is specified, subscriptions will begin with the current number.

NOTABLE NEW HOLIDAY BOOKS.

(Continued from preceding page.)

VII.

The Ancient Cities of the New World.

Being Voyages and Explorations in Mexico and Central America, from 1857 to 1882. By DESIRE CHARNAY. Translated from the French by J. Gonino, and Helen S. Conant. Introduction by Allen Thorndike Rice. 209 illustrations and a map. Pp. xlv., 514. Royal 8vo, ornamental cloth, uncut edges, gilt tops, $5.00. (A fresh supply ready about December 1.)

The volume will delight scholars. No archaeologist will wish to be without it. It is an important contribution to America's studies, and it is an entertaining book of travel. —Beacon, Boston.

VIII.

Charles Carleton Coffin's Works.

The Drum-beat of the Nation. The First Period of the War of the Rebellion, from its Outbreak to the Close of 1862. By CHARLES CARLETON COFFIN. Illustrated. Pp. xiv., 478. Square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $3.00.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE, $3.00 A VOLUME.

The Boys of '76.—The Story of Liberty.—Old Times in the Colonies.—Building the Nation. One volume each.

Mr. Coffin presents his material in the shape of personal anecdotes, memorable incidents, and familiar illustrations. He reproduces events in a vivid, picturesque narrative. —N. Y. Tribune.

IX.

An Unknown Country.

A Trip Through the North of Ireland. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman" (the late Mrs. D. M. CRAIK). Richly illustrated by Frederick Noel Paton. Pp. x., 233. Square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $2.50.

The whole account of this trip is delightfully fresh and bright, and interspersed with charming bits of description and quaint traditions and anecdotes. —Literary World, London.

X.

Reber's Mediæval Art.

History of Mediæval Art. By Dr. FRANZ VON REBER, author of "A History of Ancient Art," etc. Translated and augmented by Joseph Thacher Clarke. With 422 illustrations and a Glossary of Technical Terms. Pp. xxxii., 744. 8vo, extra cloth, $5.00. Uniform in size of page and style with "A History of Ancient Art." Illustrated. 8vo, cloth, $3.50.

This volume treats successively of early Christian and Byzantine art, of Asiatic art, and of Romanesque and Gothic art in Europe. We know of no history of artistic evolution so logical, so consequential, and so thorough. —N. Y. Sun.

XI.

The Boy Travellers on the Congo.

Adventures of Two Youths in a Journey with Henry M. Stanley. "Through the Dark Continent," by THOMAS W. KNOX. Profusely illustrated. Pp. 465. Square 8vo, illuminated cloth, $3.00.

That which Mayne Reid did for a past generation, Colonel Knox is doing for readers of today. He is producing books of travel fascinating alike for old and young. —N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

Thomas W. Knox's Books for Boys.

Richly illustrated. Square 8vo, ornamental cloth: The Boy Travellers in the Russian Empire, $3.00.—The Boy Travellers in South America, $3.00.—The Voyage of the "Vivian," $2.50.—Boy Travellers in the Far East. Profusely illustrated. In five volumes, $3.00 a volume.—Hunting Adventures on Land and Sea. In two volumes, $2.50 a volume.

XII.

Modern Ships of War.

By Sir EDWARD J. REED, M. P., late Chief Constructor of the British Navy, and Rear Admiral EDWARD SIMPSON, U. S. Navy, late President of the U. S. Naval Advisory Board. With supplementary chapters and notes by Lieutenant J. D. Jerrold Kelley, U. S. Navy. Illustrated, pp. x., 284, square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $2.50.

XIII.

Old Homestead Poems.

By WALLACE BRUCE. Illustrated, pp. x., 168. Square 8vo, ornamental cloth, $2.00.

These poems appeal to love of home, love of country, and other universal sentiment. They are gracefully expressed, and cannot fail to become popular.

XIV.

The Startling Exploits of Dr. J. B. Quies.

From the French of PAUL CELIERE. By Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie. Profusely illustrated. Pp. xii., 328. Crown 8vo, extra cloth, $1.75.

This enchanting book should become one of the most popular among the season's novelties. The artist's work is worthy of Bertall in his prime. —Saturday Review, London.

The above works are for sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by HARPER & BROTHERS, postpaid, to any part of the United States and Canada, on receipt of price.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE!

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

"A Perfect Encyclopedia of Literature and Art."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

Subscription per Year, $4.00.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE is an organ of progressive thought and movement in every department of life. Besides other attractions, it will contain, during the coming year, important articles, superbly illustrated, on the Great West; articles on American and foreign industry; beautifully illustrated papers on Scotland, Norway, Switzerland, Algiers, and the West Indies; new novels by WILLIAM BLACK and W. D. HOWELLS; novelettes, complete in a single number, by HENRY JAMES, LAFCADIO HEARN and AMELIE RIVES; short stories by Miss WOOLSON; and illustrated papers of special artistic and literary interest. The Editorial departments are conducted by GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS, and CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

"An Illustrated History of Current Events."

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

Subscription per Year, $4.00.

HARPER'S WEEKLY has a well-established place as the leading illustrated newspaper in America. The fairness of its editorial comments on current politics has earned for it the respect and confidence of all impartial readers, and the variety and excellence of its literary contents, which include serial and short stories by the best and most popular writers, fit it for the perusal of people of the widest range of tastes and pursuits. Supplements are frequently provided, and no expense is spared to bring the highest order of artistic ability to bear upon the illustration of the varied phases of home and foreign events. In all its features HARPER'S WEEKLY is admirably adapted to be a welcome guest in every household.

"A Journal of Fashion and Domestic Economy."

HARPER'S BAZAR.

Subscription per Year, $4.00.

HARPER'S BAZAR is a home journal. It combines choice literature and fine art illustrations with the latest intelligence regarding the fashions. Each number has clever serial and short stories, practical and timely essays, bright poems, humorous sketches, etc. Its pattern-sheet and fashion-plate supplements would alone help ladies to save many times the cost of the subscription, and papers on social etiquette, decorative art, housekeeping in all its branches, cookery, etc., make it useful in every household, and a true promoter of economy. Its editorials are marked by good sense, and not a line is admitted to its columns that could offend the most fastidious taste.

"An Illustrated Weekly for Juvenile Readers."

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE.

Subscription per Year, $2.00.

HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE interests all young readers by its carefully selected variety of themes and their well-considered treatment. It contains the best serial and short stories, valuable articles on scientific subjects and travel, historical and biographical sketches, papers on athletic sports and games, stirring poems, etc., contributed by the brightest and most famous writers. Its illustrations are numerous and excellent. Occasional Supplements of especial interest to Parents and Teachers will be a feature of the forthcoming volume. Every line in the paper is subjected to the most rigid editorial scrutiny in order that nothing harmful may enter its columns.

Volumes of the WEEKLY and BAZAR begin with the first numbers for January; volumes of the YOUNG PEOPLE with the first number for November; and volumes of the MAGAZINE with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions will be commenced with the Number of each periodical current at the time of receipt of order, unless otherwise directed. Remittances should be made by Post-Office Money Order or Draft, to avoid risk of loss. Postage free in the United States or Canada.

* Houghton, Mifflin and Company's New Books. *

The Vision of Sir Launfal.

A Poem of the Search for the Holy Grail. By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. With a new portrait of Mr. Lowell, from a charcoal drawing by Alexander, and nine full-page illustrations engraved on wood by Frederick Juengling (India prints, mounted), and others in the text. Quarto, bound in half leather in a very attractive style, price $10.00.

Tanglewood Tales.

By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. Holiday Edition. With 15 full-page illustrations and many smaller ones, by George Wharton Edwards. 4to, cloth, handsomely stamped, $2.50.

This beautiful book is a companion volume to the popular Holiday Edition of the Wendell Book published two years ago with illustrations by Mr. F. S. Church.

Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

By JAMES ELLIOT CABOT. With a fine, new steel portrait. 2 vols., 12mo, gilt top, $3.50.

"We try to recall another biography, from the reading of which we have derived such a full knowledge of the man and his works, but we cannot."—Philadelphia Press.

"Its value as a biography among biographies is very great. Its supreme and lasting value among the biographies of Emerson is unique. In both lights it is one of the few real books of the year."—Boston Advertiser.

Benjamin Franklin.

Vol. X. of American Men of Letters. By JOHN BACH MCMMASTER, author of "A History of the People of the United States." With a steel portrait. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25; half morocco, $2.50.

"A noble addition to a noble series."

Henry Clay.

Vols. XV. and XVI. of American Statesmen. By CARL SCHURZ. 2 vols., 16mo, cloth, $2.50; half morocco, $5.00.

"By far the best of the biographies which have been brought out in the American Statesmen series, if it be not the best work of this nature which has ever been produced in this country."—The Atlantic Monthly.

The Gates Between.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, author of "The Gates Ajar," "Beyond the Gates," etc. $1.25

Like the two other stories named here, this relates to the unseen. It is not a common "ghost" story, but an exceedingly interesting narrative indicating the possible experience and remedial discipline of a selfish nature in the life after death.

Jack the Fisherman.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With illustrations. 50 cents.

"It is one of the most artistic and powerful temperance stories ever written. I wish it might be distributed by the million copies."—Mrs. Mary A. Livermore.

Lyrics, Idyls and Romances.

Selected from the Poems of ROBERT BROWNING. 16mo, tastefully bound, $1.00.

This beautiful little book contains sixty or more of the choicest of Browning's lyrical poems. For reading or for a gift it is peculiarly acceptable and attractive.

Our Hundred Days in Europe.

By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Dr. Holmes's account of his hundred memorable days in England last year is full of interest, not only for the graceful and impressive incidents it recalls, but for its abundant felicities of thought and expression.

Knitters in the Sun.

A book of short stories. By OCTAVE THANET. 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

Freshness of subject, vigor and grace of narration, and simplicity and charm of style render this book peculiarly attractive. It is a proof of the London Spectator's generous remark that Americans write the best short stories.

* For sale by all booksellers. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Bird-Talk.

By Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," etc. With many illustrative designs. Square 12mo, tastefully bound, $1.00.

"Bird-Talk" comprises about twenty poems, each of which is supposed to be uttered by a bird—the owl, the chickadee, the quail, and other familiar birds.

On the Track of Ulysses.

Together with An Excursion in Quest of the so-called Venus of Melos. Two studies in Archæology, made during a cruise among the Greek islands. By WILLIAM J. STILLMAN. Fully illustrated, royal 8vo, carefully printed and bound, $4.00.

Patrick Henry.

Vol. XVII. of American Statesmen. By MOSES COIT TYLER. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

"It is thoroughly and excellently well done, and so fascinating that it would let me attend to nothing else until I had finished it. You have said all that there was to be said; you have said it thoroughly well."—George Bancroft

An Old Maid's Paradise. Burglars in Paradise.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. $1.25.

This book contains two stories which have already had a wide reading, but they are so full of good sense and humor that many will be glad to re-read them in the permanent form in which they now appear.

Lyrics and Sonnets.

A new volume of poems. By EDITH M. THOMAS, author of "A New Year's Masque," "The Round Year," etc. 16mo, gilt top, uniform with "A New Year's Masque." $1.25.

A beautiful book, containing many of the best poems written during the last two years.

Colonial Ballads, Sonnets and Other Verse.

By MARGARET J. PRESTON, author of "Cartoons," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

An attractive gift book. Mrs. Preston's elevation of purpose, her dignity and repose, give to her verse a character which commands respect, while her lyrical skill lends to it an attraction that wins admiration.

Victorian Poets.

By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN. Thirteenth Edition. Revised and extended, by a supplementary chapter, to the fiftieth year of the period under review. Crown 8vo, $2.25; half calf, $3.50.

Men and Letters.

Essays in Criticism. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Noah Webster," "Stories and Romances," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

CONTENTS: Elliza Mulford—Longfellow and his Art—A Modern Prophet—Landon as a Classic—Dr. Muhlenberg—American History on the Stage—The Shaping of Execlior—Emerson's Self—Aspects of Historical Work—Anne Gilchrist—The Future of Shakespeare.

The Old Garden, and Other Poems.

By MARGARET DELAND. New and enlarged edition. 16mo, fancy cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"A charming book every way."

Winter.

Selections from the Journals of HENRY D. THOREAU. Uniform with the "Early Spring" and "Summer." 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Goethe's Faust.

Part I. Translated into English verse by BAYARD TAYLOR. Cloth, $1.00.

Early and Late Poems of Alice and Phoebe Cary.

12mo, $1.50.

This book embraces the best portion of the poems of the Cary sisters not included in the Household Edition, and cannot fail to be very welcome to thousands.

The World to Come.

A volume of thoughtful, vigorous, readable and devout sermons, by WILLIAM BURNET WRIGHT, recently pastor of the Berkeley Street Church, Boston, and author of "Ancient Cities." 1 vol., 16mo, $1.25.

N. B. This book concludes with a lecture on CHRISTMAS, giving much information about the day and its observances.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY FOR 1888

Will contain three Serial Stories:

The Aspen Papers. (In three parts.) By HENRY JAMES.

Yone Santo: A Child of Japan. By EDWARD H. HOUSE.

Reaping the Whirlwind. By CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK.

Six Papers on the American Revolution. By JOHN FISKE.

Boston Painters and Paintings. By WILLIAM H. DOWNES.

Three Studies of Factory Life. By L. C. WYMAN, author of "Poverty Grass," etc.

Poems, Essays, Short Stories, may be expected from Mr. WHITTIER, Dr. HOLMES, Mr. LOWELL, Mr. NORTON, Colonel HIGGINSON, Mr. WARNER, Mr. ALDRICH, Miss PRESTON, Miss LARCOM, Miss JEWETT, Mrs. THAXTER, Mr. SCUDDER, Mr. WOODBERRY and many others.

TERMS: $4.00 a year in advance, POSTAGE FREE.

The November and December numbers of the Atlantic will be sent free of charge to new subscribers whose subscriptions for 1888 are received before December 30.

Postal Notes and Money are at the risk of the sender, and therefore remittances should be made by money order, draft, or registered letter, to

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY, 4 PARK ST., BOSTON.

E. P. DUTTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ENOCH ARDEN. By ALFRED TENNYSON. With original illustrations, the artist having visited the Isle of Wight, where the scene of this great poem is laid, for the express purpose of taking sketches on the spot. Quarto, 96 pages, cloth, gilt, $6.00; Japanese calf, antique design, limp, $7.50; best tree calf or morocco, $12.00.

"The English coast scene which illustrates the first lines of the text places before us the fishing village in the chasm of the cliffs as vividly, color excepted, as does Tennyson's word picture. . . . Several of Mr. Garrett's sea views, especially those illustrating the words, 'The Sea is His,' are deserving of high praise. The idea of tumult by day and unrest by night is conveyed with a true artist's feeling. . . . His ideal portrait of 'Miriam Lane' is by all odds the best thing in the book; and the study of Annie in her cottage, after the burial of her child, is strong and unaffected. Mr. Copeland's designs, as we presume them to be, for the borders, include some very pretty ones. The cover, in blue, silver and gold, is both effective and elegant."—The Art Amateur.

FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL'S POEMS. Complete in one volume, with 24 full-page illustrations. 8vo, cloth, price reduced to only $2.00.

HUMANITY. A Narrative Poem. By Dr. W. T. HELMUTH. Illustrated. Small quarto, Japanese calf, limp, $1.25.

POEMS by GEORGE MACDONALD, LL. D. Selected by V. D. S. and C. F. 16mo, cloth, with portrait, $1.25.

CHOICE BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

DUTTON'S ANNUAL.

Eight original full-page colored illustrations, double lithographed covers, all new matter in type and monotint. Large quarto, boards, $1.25.

HIS LITTLE ROYAL HIGHNESS. An Entertaining Story. By RUTH OGDEN. Illustrated by W. Rainey. Quarto, cloth, $2.00.

PICTURES AND SONGS for CHILDREN. By Miss CLARA DOTY BATES, MARGARET JOHNSTON, GEORGE COOPER, Mrs. MILLER and others. Profusely illustrated, quarto, boards, $1.50; cloth, extra gilt, $2.00.

THE BLUE BELL SERIES. 6 vols., small quarto, 32 pages, monotint and type, colored frontispiece, and cover printed in colors, each 20 cents.

THE CHRISTMAS STOCKING SERIES. 6 vols., quarto, colored frontispiece, lithographed cover, each 25 cents.

FINE ART COLOR BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

QUEEN OF THE MEADOW. From Original Drawings in Color and Monotint. By HARRIET M. BENNETT, author of "All Around the Clock." Large quarto, 64 pages, $2.00.

DAISY DAYS.

From Original Drawings in Color and Monotint. By Mrs. A. M. CLAUSEN (one of the artists of "Season Songs"). Quarto, 40 pages, $1.50.

A CHRISTMAS TREE FAIRY. From Original Drawings in Color and Monotint. By LIZZIE LAWSON, author of "Christmas Roses," etc. Quarto, 32 pages, $1.00.

CHILDREN'S GALLERY OF PORTRAITS.

Artistic Studies by an American Artist, printed in 13 colors, by E. Nister, Germany.

1st series, 8 portraits of babies, tied with gold cord, $1.00
2d series, 8 portraits of children, 4 years old, 1.00
3d series, 8 portraits of children, 8 years old, 1.00
4th series, 8 portraits of children, 12 years old, 1.00
"They will be much admired."—N. Y. Evangelist.

MONOTINT ART BOOKS.

The novelty we introduced last year (Season Songs and Sketches) proved such an instantaneous success in every part of the country that we have made monotint books a leading feature for the coming season. Our German lithographer, E. Nister, has no equal as a printer in color and monotint.

TREASURES OF ART AND SONG. Favorite poems of well-known authors, illustrated by large monotints, very artistic and effective. Oblong, cloth, gilt, extra, $5.00; oblong, floral, Japanese calf, $6.00; tree calf or morocco, $12.00.

THROUGH THE YEAR. Poems appropriate to the Four Seasons, profusely illustrated in monotint. Quarto, cloth, gilt, extra, $2.50; quarto, floral, Japanese calf, limp, $3.50; tree calf or morocco, $7.50.

PRINTED IN BOTH MONOTINT AND COLOR.

IN THE SERVICE OF THE KING. Religious Poems selected from various popular authors. Small quarto, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

THE FULLNESS OF JOY. By CECILIA HAVERGAL and others. Small quarto, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

COMING TO THE KING. By FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL and others. Small quarto, cloth, gilt, $1.00.

SONGS OF THE MASTER'S LOVE. By FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL. Quarto, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

THE HOMEWARD JOURNEY. A Selection of Poems by Mrs. PENNEFATHER and others. Small quarto, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

SONGS OF THE DAWN. By HORATIUS BONAR and others. Quarto, cloth, gilt, $2.00.

SONGS FOR LIFE'S JOURNEY. Selections from the most celebrated writers of religious poetry. Large quarto, cloth, gilt, $2.50.

MONOTINT BOOKS.

These books are printed in from four to seven tints and type. All are beautifully illustrated and bound in attractive light-tinted card covers, with rounded corners, gilt edges, and gold cord tied in a bow.

Morning Songs and Sketches. Quarto, 32 pp., 75 cts.

Noon Songs and Sketches. " " 75 "

Eventide Songs and Sketches. " " 75 "

Night Songs and Sketches. " " 75 "

By Land and Sea. Small quarto, 24 pages, 50 "

Landscape and Song. " " " 50 "

Falling Leaves. " " " 35 "

Holly and Mistletoe. " " " 35 "

Lilies and Heartsease. " " " 35 "

Roses and May. " " " 35 "

Fullness of Blessing. Oblong, 32mo, 32 pages, 35 "

Holly Leaves. " " " 35 "

Pilgrim's Songs. " " " 35 "

Star of Bethlehem. " " " 35 "

Bible Fearnets. Oblong, 48mo, 32 pages, 25 "

Heavenly Dew. " " " 25 "

Living Fountains. " " " 25 "

Love and Light. " " " 25 "

Springs of Comfort. " " " 25 "

* For sale at the bookstores, or sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Mail orders solicited.

E. P. Dutton & Co., Publishers, Booksellers & Stationers, 31 WEST TWENTY-THIRD STREET, NEW YORK.

HOLIDAY BOOKS WITH SUPERB ILLUSTRATIONS.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY have pleasure in announcing that the "Odes and Sonnets" of Keats, with illustrated designs by WILL H. LOW, is now ready. It is issued in uniform style with "Lamia," the favorite of the holiday Art Books, and it is confidently expected that the new volume will surpass the popularity achieved by the artist's first work, Mr. Low having given fifteen months' careful study in Florence, Italy, to the preparation of the drawings. The work is printed on plate paper throughout and handsomely bound in three styles to suit all tastes. Price: Extra cloth, $15.00; Japanese silk, $25.00; Morocco, $25.00.

UDORA. With Wood Engravings.

A Tale of Love. By M. B. M. TOLAND, author of "Ægle and the Elf," "Iris," etc. With charming illustrations by H. Siddons Mowbray and W. Hamilton Gibson. Also Decorations in the Text by L. S. Ipsen. A beautiful gift volume. Cloth extra, full gilt, $2.50. Vellum, gilt top, rough edges, $2.50. Ivory surface, $3.00. Full morocco, $3.00.

IDE, WIDE WORLD. With Etchings.

By ELIZABETH WETHERELL. Complete in one volume. Illustrated by Frederick Dielman. Cabinet 8vo. Printed on laid paper. Cloth extra, $2.50.

HREE POEMS. With Wood Engravings.

Royal 8vo. Cloth, $6.00. Ivory surface, $6.00. Full tree calf, $10.00.

This volume contains "An Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," by Thomas Gray, "The Hermit," by Oliver Goldsmith, and "The Closing Scene," by T. Buchanan Read.

AUST. With Etchings.

The Legend and the Poem. By W. S. WALSH. Illustrated by Hermann Faber. 8vo. Bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00. Ivory surface, $3.50. Alligator, $3.50. Morocco, $4.50. Tree calf, $7.50.

ESERTED VILLAGE. With Etchings.

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. Illustrated by M. M. Taylor. 8vo. Bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00. Ivory surface, $3.50. Alligator, $3.50. Morocco, $4.50. Tree calf, $7.50.

ROM PHARAOH TO FELLAH. With Wood Engravings.

By C. MOHERLEY BELL (Correspondent of the London Times). With numerous Illustrations by George Montbard. Engraved by Charles Barbant. An Important Work on Egypt, consisting of 250 pages of text and from 60 to 70 illustrations. Quarto. Handsomely and elaborately bound in cloth, $5.00.

For sale by leading booksellers, or sent free to any part of the United States on receipt of the price by the publishers.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA, PA

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, NOV. 26, 1887. No. 24.

Holiday Number.

CONTENTS.

BALLADS ABOUT AUTHORS	415
FAUST	415
A BATCH OF DAUDET'S FICTION	415
ORMSBY'S DON QUIXOTE	416
THE MODERN SCHOOL OF ART	416
THE DRUM-BEAT OF THE NATION	417
GUATEMALA	417
SHAKESPEARE'S HENRY IV	418
SKETCHES OF ARMY LIFE	419
THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL	419
OLD FRIENDS IN A NEW DRESS:
Mrs. Hemans's The Pilgrim Fathers	420
Tennyson's The Brook	420
Gray's Elegy	420
Foster's Old Folks at Home	420
Goldsmith's The Deserted Village	420
Tennyson's Enoch Arden	420
Kingsley's Song of the River	421
ILLUSTRATED POETRY:
Heroic Ballads	421
Old Homestead Poems	421
Ringing Ballads	421
Ballads of Romance and History	421
Through the Year	421
Poems in Color	422
Geraldine	422
BOOKS FOR BOYS:
Youngsters' Yarns	422
Stories of Persons and Places in Europe	422
Dog Stories and Dog Lore	422
The Boyhood of Living Authors	422
Kaloolah	422
Burnham Breaker	422
BOOKS FOR GIRLS:
Historic Girls	423
A Flock of Girls and their Friends	423
Prudence Winterburn	423
Great-Grandmother Girls in New France	423
The American Girl's Handy Book	423
CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS:
Ida Waugh's Alphabet Book	423
Queen of the Meadow	423
Jappie-Chappie and How he Loved a Dollie	423
Young England's Nursery Rhymes	423
A Robinson Crusoe Picture Book	423
A Gay Day for 7	424
Sunny Childhood	424
Twelve Times One	424
CHILDREN'S QUARTOS:
The Knockabout Club in the Everglades	424
The Three Vassar Girls at Home	424
The Look-About Club	424
Mattie's Secret	424
Zigzag Journeys in India	424
His Little Royal Highness	424
Every Boy's Annual	424
The Boy Travelers on the Congo	425
Blue Jackets of 1812	425
FAIRY TALES:
Townsend's Arabian Nights	425
Siewers's Hans Andersen	425
D'Aulnoy's Fairy Tales	425
New Fairy Tales from Brentano	425
Howard Pyle's Wonder Clock	425
Grimm's Tales from the Eastern Land	425
Lang's Johnny Nut and the Golden Goose	425
Mitchell's Prince Little Boy	426
Lulu's Library	426
OTHER JUVENILES	426
STORIES AND PICTURES FOR YOUNG READERS	426
S. P. C. K. BOOKS	426
THE CASTELL CHRISTMAS CARDS	427
LES MISERABLES	427
THOSE BOOKS WITH EMBOSSED TITLES	428
MINOR NOTICES	428
HOLIDAY MISCELLANIES	429
THE COUNT MONTE-CRISTO	429
MINISTER WASHBURN'S RECOLLECTIONS	430
A STUDY OF RURAL LIFE IN ENGLAND	430
MAX MULLER'S SCIENCE OF THOUGHT	431
HOMER AND CICERO	431
THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA	432
MINOR NOTICES	432
NEWS AND NOTES	433
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	433

BALLADS ABOUT AUTHORS.*

MRS. SPOFFORD finds the rhythmic freedom of the ballad suited well to her purpose of commemorating picturesque episodes or phases in the lives of half a dozen

* Ballads About Authors. By Harriet Prescott Spofford. Illustrations by Edmund H. Garrett. D. Lothrop Co. $3.00.

English authors. Under the title of "Goldsmith's Whistle" she celebrates the famous tour made by Goldsmith with his flute through Europe, when, according to tradition,

He trod a measure as he went,
And piped and sang his way to Florence!

Johnson doing penance in Uttoxeter Market; the blind Milton at his organ; Cowper wandering intent upon self-destruction beside the Ouse; Collins burning his poems; and Shakespeare imagining "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in Warwick woods, are the themes of the other ballads. Mrs. Spofford is not always felicitous in the management of her rhymes. It would be hard to find anything more awkward than this from the Goldsmith ballad:

And when the morning came, despair
Hung over him, and hunger gnawed him—
He was so young, and life so fair,
And death confronted him, and awed him.

Of Milton's playing we are told that delicious shocks,

Sweet as the honey of the rocks,
To other sense, well did he know
From dulcet stops to breathe and blow.

The worst charge we have to bring against the author of these pieces, however, is that of vagueness. She writes ostensibly for children (vide p. 29), but only one familiar with the lives and works of the authors referred to would find her intelligible. The best thing in the book, "A Splendid Fire," would be to the uneducated mind, we should think, the least comprehensible of all. It has some noteworthy lines. The poet is pictured making his way heart-broken to his dingy room. He seizes his once precious papers, tears them asunder, and applies the kindling spark.

What colors flash along the blaze
That spreads its wings, and soars and dips!
So burns, long soaked in salty sprays,
Driftwood of wrecked and stranded ships.

The precious manuscript of "Music on the Grecian Stage" exhales in visions of awful beauty.

It shrivels in a blackening scroll;
Gone those great shadows half divine,
But still on the reluctant coal
The swarming sparks re-write the line.

Mr. Garrett's illustrations do not show any special sympathy or understanding of the themes. Milton is depicted (p. 48) as a moon-struck consumptive, and Cowper (p. 67) as a burly farmer. The publishers have done their best to make of the Ballads a handsome book.

FAUST.*

MR. WALSH'S excellent essay on Goethe's greatest work makes its appearance at an opportune time, as Mr. Henry Irving's brilliant stage production of "Faust" is being given in New York, and is soon to fascinate other cities. Mr. Walsh recites briefly the origin of the legend, sketches Goethe's early life viewed as a preparation for the development in the poem of his mature philosophy of art and life, and then devotes the larger part of his essay to a running commentary, which embraces the two parts of the poem. He is an expositor, not a critic, and follows the later students of Goethe, who deem it incumbent on them to admire even the most frigid symbolisms of Goethe's last years, when imagination had almost withered in him, and reflection was all-absorbing.

* Faust, the Legend and the Poem. By William S. Walsh. With Etchings by Hermann Faber. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00.

But Mr. Walsh is not among the enthusiasts, and our criticisms would concern only two misuses of words. "Cynical" is applied to Herder, while Lucian, Swift, Heine, Thackeray, and Voltaire are ranked together as "laughers," a very inadequate word: just as little is it correct to identify the mocking spirit of Mephistopheles with the sense of humor. Mr. Walsh's matter, with the exception of these verbal inaccuracies, is valuable, if not particularly original; originality, indeed, in criticism or exposition of the much be-written "Faust" is well-nigh impossible now. Of Mr. Faber's six etchings the Temptation of Margaret is good, Faust in his Study is by far the best, the Compact with the Fiend is passable, but the remaining three are poor. Margaret in the Cathedral faints under the terrible words of the Dies Ira, not under the preaching of a friar, as here represented.

A BATCH OF DAUDET'S FICTION.

THE light, the graceful, the incomparable touch of a master is everywhere visible in these two volumes, which represent Daudet at his best. Those who still cling to the venerable tradition that the French are devoid of humor will find their preconceived ideas sadly shattered if they once take up Tartarin of Tarascon;¹ and in the story of *La Belle Nivernaise*² and the other tales bound in with it one finds realism of an exquisite sort mingled with delicious fancies. Daudet of all living novelists writes of things as they are, and gives along with faithful impressions the ideal interpretation of the poet. Imagination plays a great part in his work, but it is always subordinated to the facts. He has the synthetic power. He catches random traits and works them into consistent forms. His characters from the highest to the lowest always hang together. He leaves no loose threads. Everything is wrought out to the minutest detail, and yet details are not thought of as we read, so fine and true is the general effect. We no more think of questioning his methods than of questioning the methods of nature. They have the quality of inevitableness. The results are sure and we care very little about the process. Daudet excels in pathetic and humorous views of life, and pathos and humor make up so much of human existence that he has a wide range without venturing upon the tragic, where he does not move so freely. His tragedy is apt to be over-refined, intense, sometimes morbid with that pathological taint that affects nearly all modern representations of fierce passion or emotion. But his humor and pathos are unfailingly genuine—never too emphatic, never self-conscious, never forced, never lacking in harmonious expression. As a novelist he holds to the middle course. He does not ascend to the heights of philosophical speculation with Balzac or sink to the depths of human degradation with Zola. He is not attracted by the rarefied air of the mountains and he has no taste for studying sewage with a microscope. But on the broad plateaus and upland slopes, amid the everyday original life of men and women, in that sphere which most of us are wont to designate as commonplace, Daudet is at home, and in his own field he has no rival.

¹ Tartarin of Tarascon: Traveler, 'Turk,' and Lion Hunter. By Alphonse Daudet. George Routledge & Sons. $1.50.

² La Belle Nivernaise: The Story of an Old Boat and her Crew. By Alphonse Daudet. George Routledge & Sons. $1.50.

Perhaps books more delightful than Tartarin of Tarascon have been written during the last decade, but if so we have not had the good fortune to come upon them. Tartarin is at once an individual and a type. In him the elemental characteristics of the meridional Frenchman are brought to a focus and depicted for all time. Tartarin, that unique combination of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza, of artless bombast and simple wisdom; that theoretical hero and actual cantel; that worthy club-house Nimrod, that stalwart drawing-room Hector,—delightful, ridiculous Tartarin, whether singing the "duo" from Robert le Diable, or rehearsing stories of adventure among his cronies, or shooting donkeys for lions on the plains of Algeria, he is a personage henceforth enshrined in the memories of all who read the account of his prodigious history.

In La Belle Nivernaise Daudet sounds the vibrant, penetrating notes of pity and love. It is a charming idyl of the Seine here unfolded. Good-hearted Francis Louveau, the bargeman, with his equally benevolent though shrewish-tongued wife, are portrayed with a subtle sympathy that brings them out clearly against the background of poverty and toil. Victor is a poor little waif picked up by Louveau in the streets of Paris and cared for till he comes to be the chief prop and comfort of the worthy pair. The whole picture is before us; the trips up and down the river, the cheerful, useful childhood of Victor and his foster-sister, the discovery of Victor's father, the boy's departure for college in a distant city, his pitiful longing for a return to his previous life, his illness, the family reunion—all is told with a grace and charm which we may well call incomparable and which lend to the simplest incidents the glow and color of romance.

It is pleasant to have these productions brought before readers of our vernacular in forms so faithful and attractive. In illustration and typography these volumes compare favorably with their Parisian prototypes, the drawings of Montégut, de Myrbach, Picard, and Rossi being reproduced with praiseworthy fidelity, the resemblance extending even to the illuminated covers of cream-white paper. The translations are, generally speaking, fairly well done; that of La Belle Nivernaise is particularly noticeable for smoothness. Of the version of Tartarin we cannot speak so highly. Such phrases as "crankiness for the grandiose and romantic" (p. 46), "Tartarin meant to act like they did" (p. 67), "he orated upon these matters" (p. 70), and "Tartarin's confrontatress" (p. 137), indicate a linguistic license not at all consistent with the original and offensive to every cultivated reader.

ORMSBY'S DON QUIXOTE.*

WHEN Mr. Ormsby first thought of supplying a serious defect in our literature of translations, the lack of a rendering of Cervantes's immortal work in which he "smiled away," not "Spain's chivalry," but the absurd romances of chivalry, he intended to make only a new edition of Thomas Shelton's original English version of 1612-20. But not all Shelton's vigor and kinship of spirit with the author of Don Quixote can atone for his incorrectness. With Shelton put by, Mr. Ormsby found no later translation which it was worth while to improve. John Phillips's is dirty, Motteux's is a travesty of the original, while Charles Jervas's or Jarvis's, the accepted version, is "correct and careful, but dull, commonplace, and destitute of humor"—"wooden." Mr. Ormsby has, therefore, produced an independent translation, resolutely leaving Mr. Duffield's recent rendering out of sight until his own should be finished. He has tried to avoid all affectation and to cultivate plainness and simplicity in the style, retaining many old names and phrases, if somewhat incorrect, because they are now classical in our tongue. Names of things peculiarly Spanish like "olla" and "bota" are left untranslated, with an explanatory note. The complete text of the original is reproduced, Cervantes being, for his time, purity itself. A life of the author and an account of the character and fortunes of this greatest of novels, as many have esteemed it, are prefixed, while three appendices contain the proverbs of the book in alphabetical order, a summary of the Spanish romances of chivalry, and a bibliography of Don Quixote. The translator has thus furnished the accessories needful to an understanding of this "book of humanity," as Sainte-Beuve called it—"the best novel in the world beyond comparison," said Macaulay.

*The Ingenious Gentleman, Don Quixote of La Mancha, by Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra. A Translation with Introduction and Notes by John Ormsby. In four volumes. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $6.00.

Mr. Ormsby's translation itself—the essential matter—is of the first order for ease and simplicity, and retains the flavor of the original to a surprising degree; his scholarship is a guarantee for correctness. Reading chapters here and there, we have lamented that so readable and delightfully entertaining a version had not fallen into our boyish hands; every boy of a reading turn can relish the adventures of the fantastic knight, but charm has surely hitherto been lacking to the manner of telling them in English. This defect Mr. Ormsby has fully supplied, making Don Quixote run as smoothly in our tongue as in the original. He has not modernized the language and construction: as little has he sought out archaisms of language in the endeavor to give an antique flavor. The faults of style are the faults of the original, and its excellences remain complete. It is a genuine reproduction, one of the most successful in our language, of a masterpiece of foreign literature.

We will quote but two sentences from the first chapter, as a sample. Don Quixote, in short, his wits being quite gone, hit upon the strangest notion that ever madman hit upon, and that was that he fancied that it was right and requisite, as well for the support of his own honor as for the service of his country, that he should make a knight-errant of himself, roaming the world over in full armor and on horseback in quest of adventures, and putting in practice himself all that he had read of as being the usual practices of knights-errant; righting every kind of wrong, and exposing himself to peril and danger from which, in the issue, he was to reap eternal renown and fame. . . . So then, his armor being furnished, his morion turned into a helmet, his hack christened, and he himself confirmed, he came to the conclusion that nothing more was needed now but to look out for a lady to be in love with; for a knight-errant without love was like a tree without leaves or fruit, or a body without a soul.

The publishers have put the new translation into four handy duodecimo volumes, averaging about four hundred and fifty pages each: the binding is a neat red, with gilt tracery on the back and the upper side; the paper is thin enough to make the volume easy "to carry to the fire" to read thereby, but sufficiently opaque; the whole appearance of the set makes it an excellent present for the Christmas season. One may trust that Mr. Ormsby has given new life to the ingenious Hidalgo.

THE MODERN SCHOOL OF ART.*

IT is the object of this ample but by no means pretentious quarto to furnish an agreeable introduction to the persons, histories, homes, studios, and works of eighteen representative painters and sculptors of modern times—the artists whose names and achievements are most conspicuously before the world at the present hour. The subjects are almost entirely Englishmen, the only exceptions being two Frenchmen, a Spaniard, and a single American. The book being of English origin, this preference is natural, though it gives the work a provincial character and robs it of a true and broad cosmopolitanism. But one can derive much profit and enjoyment in the study of art without once stepping off what Emerson called that "tight little island."

*The Modern School of Art. Edited by Wilfrid Meynell. Illustrated. Cassell & Co. $6.00.

The names of the eighteen apostles of modern art are these: Leighton, Nicol, Millais, Thornycroft, Hook, Boughton, Halswelle, Legros, Herkomer, Fildes, Poynter, Hunt, Meissonier, Jopling, Orchardson, Yeames, Bonnat, and Eastman Johnson.

The plan of the work assigns an entire chapter for each artist. The important facts and dates of the life are given, accompanied by a sketch of the professional career, the whole supplemented by passing mention of important works and critical comments thereupon. Of the letter-press, itself uniformly interesting and instructive from the biographical point of view, the illustrations are a distinct and pleasing reinforcement. They are numerous and varied. They include in each case a portrait of the artist, and generally one or more views of the interior of his house, showing particularly the studio and the decorative style of the dwelling, and there are always several reproductions of important works on canvas or in marble. Many of these are full-page plates, and of these one is on steel and three are etchings, the latter respectively by Lalauze, Herkomer, and Rajon. The first and third of the etchings are easily superior to the second, and are admirable examples of their class. Herkomer's contribution is unsatisfactory.

With these exceptions all the illustrations are from wood, though some are printed outside the text on heavy plate paper and with good effect.

One of the interesting things to notice in looking through this book is the identification of each artist with a particular line of topics, for after all genius has its limitations. Thus Sir Frederick Leighton is occupied with classic themes; Mr. Erskine Nicol with rustic life—and what could be better than his delineations of Irish and Scottish nature? Millais with the refined and tender suggestions of elevated domestic life, Thornycroft with the anatomy of the human form in athletic posture and exercise, Hook with the animated scenes that belong to the border between sea and land, Boughton with sweet pastoral landscapes dotted with plaintive human figures, Herkomer and Fildes with the dramatic and pathetic in common life, Poynter with the historic and antique, Hunt with romance and mysticism, Meissonier with the warlike and grotesque, Orchardson with the quaint and old-fashioned.

The materials of this book we take to have been gathered out of that estimable periodical, the Magazine of Art, but they have been well worked over, and in their present form show homogeneity, order, and freshness. The book is elegantly printed and bound, and is one both to please the cultivated taste and instruct the studious mind.

THE DRUM-BEAT OF THE NATION.*

WE admit that at this day it must be hard to discover a good and fresh title for a history of the Civil War in the United States, but it seems to us that the selection in this instance is particularly poor. "Nation"—what nation? "Drum-beat"—what drum-beat? And what is a drum-beat in this connection? What does it stand for? This book might as well be called "Trumpet-note of the People," or "Footsteps of the Citizens." If "Drum-beat of the Nation" be an apt title for any book, it would be for a book which should trace the whole military life and history of the nation to which it pertained.

Mr. Coffin has undertaken to write a new popular history of the late Civil War. Of this large work the volume in hand is the first installment. It is complete in itself, and should it never have the successors promised, could not be regarded exactly as a fragment.

In many respects Mr. Coffin is especially qualified to describe these scenes. He lived through them. He saw into them. In the sense in which a newspaper correspondent is an actor in the life he portrays, he was an actor in this. He has already written of it over and over again. Personally he knew most of the leading generals in both armies. Personally he was present at many of the battles fought. It is to be doubted if there are many persons now living to whom the whole broad field of the Rebellion is more familiar at first hand than to Charles Carleton Coffin.

Added to this equipment of knowledge of facts is the mastership of a strong, dramatic, and picturesque style. Mr. Coffin was a pioneer in the since distinguished army of war correspondents. He is a sort of captain of the host of Forbeses and McGahans. No letters written from the field from 1861 to 1865 exceeded his in vivid description, in candor, justice, and truth of intention, and generally speaking in exactness and trustworthiness of information.

Set this man then to work upon a history of the war, twenty-five years after, with ten or fifteen millions of people before him who have come on the stage since the war began, and place in his hands all the materials that have accumulated, the maps, charts, reports, personal narratives, and above all the typographical and artistic resources of the Harpers' great establishment, and the result can easily be defined.

* Drum-Beat of the Nation. The First Period of the War of the Rebellion from its Outbreak to the Close of 1862. By Charles Carleton Coffin. Illustrated. Harper & Brothers. $3.00.

Mr. Coffin has undertaken not a critical or philosophical history, but a pictorial one, a panorama, a cyclorama, correct as to the great outlines and events and personages, circumstantial, anecdotal, intense. The incessant use of the present tense is a hobby and weakness of style. Short sentences are the strength of it. Scenes are brought before the reader almost with reality.

The story ends with 1862, and will be extended to the years that follow.

GUATEMALA.*

HERE now is a work of travel and exploration in Central America which not only enkindles interest, but inspires confidence, and conveys a mass of varied and really valuable information in at the same time a thoroughly entertaining form. Without the pretension of at least one recent narrative of research in somewhat the same quarter, and not directed by any profession of special scientific purpose, it is yet scientific in the best sense, is not only excellently written, but excellently made up in every particular; in all respects is what such a book ought to be, and reflects great credit alike upon the enterprise, energy, intelligence, judgment, and taste of its author. Its materials are the gatherings of three visits to the country; the author's journeys through it traversed it from the Atlantic to the Pacific; his eye, experienced by extensive travels in other parts of the world, was reinforced by the handy camera, the many hundred plates from which are the basis of the more than one hundred wood-cuts which embellish the handsomely printed volume; and five maps of good quality show his route and stopping-places, and the main features of the land, with a good degree of detail.

Mr. Brigham himself, though dating his preface from Boston, we do not know. He does not appear to be a man of science; he may be a lawyer. Certainly he is a trained and keen observer. His interests are those of the merchant, the student of politics, the man of affairs. He is not oblivious to the past of Guatemala, its antiquities and traditions, while not concerned with them; what he is intent upon is the Guatemala of the present, its scenery, its living towns, rather than its ruins; its people of today in their homes, the precious woods of the forests, the abundant growths of its soil, its inviting features to the immigrant, its possibilities and prospects as the great fruit garden of North America, its comforts as the home of the invalid, its salubrity and serenity as a resort for the excursionist. To borrow his exact words:

No country on the northern half of the American continent has a finer climate or more beautiful or varied scenery, or is a more attractive field for the genuine traveler. Valleys rivaling the paradises of the islands of the Pacific; uplands not unlike the plateau of the Indian Neilgherries forests as dense and luxuriant as those of Brazil; lakes as picturesque as those of Switzerland; green slopes that might have been taken from the Emerald Isle; glens like the Trossachs; desert wastes that recall the Sahara; volcanoes like Ætna; and a population as various as in that land whence comes the Indian name,—all these features make but the incomplete outline of the Guatemalan picture.

* Guatemala, the Land of the Quetzal. By William T. Brigham. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00.

Guatemala is the upper or northernmost of the three provinces of Central America and lies next to Mexico on the south. It comprises from forty to fifty thousand square miles, say the area of Virginia (42,000), and a population variously estimated at from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000. Its surface is greatly diversified, so that a traveler crossing this territory from ocean to ocean would sometimes follow the river valleys, then climb ridges, again traverse a plain, cross a valley, ride along another mountain ridge, compassing a volcano, and finally descend abruptly to the Pacific.

Mr. Brigham entered Guatemala from the Bay of Honduras at Livingston, an important port, about nine hundred miles due south from New Orleans, and thence made his circuit, sometimes by boats, sometimes on foot, sometimes on horseback, with a son for companion and by aid of porters, the chief points visited being Coban, Quezaltenango, Solola, San Jose on the Pacific shore, the City of Guatemala, Azacualpa, and Esquipulas, so returning to the point of departure. To the narrative of the expedition proper but five chapters out of the twelve are devoted. The others handle incidental topics. One introductory expounds the general features, geographical and political, of Central America as a whole. Another describes the Atlantic coast of Guatemala, and points out its maritime and commercial connections. Another describes Guatemala City, which is the principal city of Central America, with fine churches and imposing public buildings, "a confused mass of white walls almost hidden in foliage," extending six miles north and south, and with a population of 60,000 made up of many nations and tribes, and mingling the sixteenth century with the nineteenth in picturesque effects. One historical chapter traces the lines of the development of Guatemala out of its aboriginal condition down through the Spanish possession, and a succeeding statistico-political chapter arrays the resources and powers of the country after the manner of a blue-book. Two concluding chapters complete the picture by sketching in the particulars of its vegetable and animal kingdoms, and the facts and figures pertaining to its earthquakes and volcanoes.

The mean height of Guatemala is about 5,000 feet above the level of the sea. Mountains and rivers are its important physical factors, though lakes are not wanting. The volcanoes number several hundreds, the hot-springs are numerous, earthquakes have been frequent and destructive. Climatic changes are insensible; "the one season is summer." The death rate of Livingston is about one quarter that of Boston. Bananas and plantains are a most generous product of the fertile soil. The forests are dense and damp and dark. Mahogany is so plentiful as to be cut for railroad use; rosewood is used for building purposes; sarsaparilla, india-rubber, vanilla, and cocoa grow wild. Pine trees and oaks attain a prodigious size. The palm and the orchid are conspicuous by their variety and beauty. No land is better suited to raise the sugar-cane. Vast quantities of the best coffee are exported to Great Britain. The wild oranges excel the domesticated varieties raised elsewhere. Cocoa-nuts, pineapples, nutmegs, maize, wheat, sweet and white potatoes, yams, bread-fruit, tomatoes and mangoes are among the almost countless fruits and grains and vegetables.

But then Guatemala has experienced three hundred earthquakes sufficiently severe to be recorded, and it has snakes!

Politically Guatemala is a republic, has a constitution, a president, a legislative assembly, a cabinet, departments, and a carefully framed civil code. The national religion is the Roman Catholic, but liberty of worship is allowed to all denominations, though only one Protestant congregation improves the opportunity. Churches are falling into ruin. The army is well organized and vigorous. Public instruction is compulsory, and schools are numerous and well attended. Teachers' institutes are regularly held. There are respectable newspapers, but no libraries to speak of. The public debt approximates six millions of dollars. The currency is mostly debased silver, the standard being American gold. The government owns and runs the telegraph, as it should in the United States, and the foreign mail service is excellent. The largest mercantile houses are in the hands of Germans; "Americans" are scarce. Capital is greatly needed. Food is cheap and wages are low. There is no systematic sanitation.

No inconsiderable amount of valuable information is assembled by Mr. Brigham in his Appendix, as: a list of common woods, names of towns, mixture of races, cookery, money, heights, weights and measures, list of plants, and a list of works relating to Central America. An index closes the work, which is a handsome holiday book.

SHAKESPEARE'S HENRY IV.*

ALL lovers of Shakespeare and of art who have seen the superb edition of Romeo and Juliet, published by Cassell & Co., three years ago, will be rejoiced to know that the same house now propose to bring out a complete édition de luxe of the plays in similar style. It will be called "The International Shakespeare," and will be issued in large folio form—the page measuring 17 by 13 inches—printed on Whatman paper and illustrated with photogravures from drawings by leading English and foreign artists.

* King Henry IV. Parts I. and II. Illustrations by Grützner. Cassell & Co. $25.00.

The first volume—or the second, if we count the Romeo and Juliet—contains the two parts of King Henry IV., with an introduction by Professor Dowden, and twelve illustrations by Edward Grützner reproduced in photogravure. It may be questioned whether pictorial illustrations of Shakespeare can ever be perfectly satisfactory. A master of the graphic art as preëminent in his way as the dramatist might give fitting shape to the personages in the mimic world of the latter, but no inferior hand could be expected to set them visibly before us as their creator has made them appear to the "mind's eye." Nevertheless these designs by Grützner, like those by Dicksee in the earlier volume, must be reckoned among the most successful of the many attempts to illustrate Shakespeare in this manner.

As might have been expected, Falstaff has especially enlisted the attention of the artist, no fewer than eight out of the dozen illustrations being devoted to scenes in which his portly presence figures. The first of these is in 1 Henry IV. ii. 4, where the fat knight, with joint-stool for throne, dagger for sceptre, and cushion for crown, plays the part of the royal father, and gives Prince Hal a lecture on his graceless behavior. "Harry," he says, "I do not only marvel how thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied." The corpulent parody of the king, and his supposed son standing demurely before him with half-suppressed amusement in his face, while the rest of the company give way to uncontrolled mirth, Dame Quickly looking like Milton's "Laughter holding both his sides," are done to the life. The next picture shows us Sir John at the close of the same scene, fast asleep behind the arras, Peto picking his pocket of the tavern-bill which records the "intolerable deal of sack" to "one half-penny worth of bread," and Hal looking on. Here the artist seems to have taken certain liberties with the mise en scène for pictorial effect. The knight lies on the floor, at right angles to the wall, with his head on a bench. The prince has drawn aside the arras behind which the sleeper has been hidden; but it is evident that if the latter had been lying there when the tapestry was in place it must have fallen across his thighs, leaving the lower part of his legs and his feet in full view of persons in the room. Arras was usually hung only a little way from the walls, and in a room so small as that in the Eastcheap inn we may be sure that there would be barely space enough behind it for fat Jack to hide by squeezing himself close against the wall.

One of the best of the Falstaff pictures is that which shows him with Bardolph in Henry IV. iii. 3, as he says "Thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp," tapping the captain's nose with his finger by way of emphasis. Nowhere is the oleaginous face of Jack more radiant with exuberant fun. He is almost as good, however, in the scene (2 Henry IV. i. 2) where he asks his page "What money is in my purse?" and the mustering of his recruits (Id. iii. 2) may challenge comparison with any former rendering of that inimitable scene. Here, and in the subsequent scene at Justice Shallow's, where Pistol comes in to announce the death of the king, the delineations of both Shallow and Silence are very happy, and Pistol himself is a triumph of graphic art.

The serious designs are on the whole not inferior to the comic ones. The one chosen for the frontispiece is worthy of that honorable position. It represents the prince kneeling at the death-bed of the king, at the close of the long speech in which the latter has chided him for his seeming impatience to secure the crown. But we like quite as much the illustration of 1 Henry IV. i. 3, where, after the tilt with Hotspur concerning the Scottish prisoners, the king retires with the peremptory word, "Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it." Admirable also is the group of Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower, over the map (Id. iii. 1) when Hotspur is pointing out that his share of the divided territory is not a fair one.

Professor Dowden's introduction is in his happiest vein, the discussion of Falstaff being especially full of sympathetic humor. Altogether the volume is a brilliant beginning of the magnificent enterprise which the publishers have undertaken. If the plan is carried out in the same artistic and sumptuous style, the "International" will be the most elegant edition of Shakespeare the world has ever seen.

SKETCHES OF ARMY LIFE.*

THE author of this unique work is an artist both with pen and pencil, and it is difficult to say on which the book the more depends for its strongest appeal to the reader's interest—its verbal descriptions of scenes witnessed in military camp and field, or the pictures with which it depicts some of these scenes to the eye. We should guess that the author is of German descent and of West Point antecedents; if it is his portrait, mounted on horseback and bearing the Stars and Stripes, which serves as frontispiece, printed on a thin film of India paper, then is he every inch a soldier, though a young one.

Mr. Zogbaum has studied his subject in France, Germany, Great Britain, and the United States. In France he is with the army in Normandy at the time of the autumn manœuvres, the effect of which is a series of spectacles wonderfully like the realities of war. The enemy, on this occasion represented by a large body of troops, were supposed to have landed on the coast, and to be threatening two important towns, and were repulsed in a make-believe battle. Thus the sweet times of peace were made to glitter with splendid pageantry, and to palpitate with the stress of conflict. In England the author stations himself at Aldershot, observes the daily discipline and drill, and watches the departure of a detachment for the seat of war. In Germany he is witnessing mock manœuvres again, shivering all night on the picket line, brewing punch in the snug officers' mess, or bivouacking under a sharp skirmish fire. In the United States he is out on the plains with a cavalry column, or with the blue-coated garrison at a frontier fort, with Indians to right of him and cowboys to left of him. Very graphic are his descriptions, but his drawings are even better.

There are upwards of seventy wood-cuts in the book. They have great merit as engravings, but the workmanship of the engraver, excellent as that is, is even excelled by that of the artist-author. The accuracy, grace, and beauty of these drawings could hardly be surpassed; their life, their spirit, their precision, are worthy of a Meissonier. Whether it be a soldier's cap or a horse's accoutrements, the corner of a Norman inn-yard in the early morning when the men are boiling their coffee, or the presentation of the "billet de logement" at the peasant's door, or the sham attack in the French orchard, or the German squad standing reverently uncovered at the time of evening prayer, or the cavalry column en route—on all these varying subjects Mr. Zogbaum's pencil is unfailingly clever.

As a delineation of the poetry and romance of a soldier's life this book shows uncommon power.

THE VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL.*

OF all poems Mr. Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal is the last one to be employed for the purpose of illustration by careless or unsympathetic hands. Its atmosphere is idyllic. Its imagery is of a delicacy and beauty easily marred by any rude attempt at translation into visible forms. The two finest descriptive passages it contains, two passages in their way supreme in modern poetry, are utterly beyond the reach of any pictorial artist. What painter would dare to undertake the portrayal of the advent of June or the building of the ice-palace as the poet describes them? The clod climbing to a soul in grass and flowers;

The flush of life
Thrilling back over hills and valleys—

these, as well as the "fairly masonry" of

"the elfin builders of the frost," belong to the sphere of imagination, and brush or pencil never can bring them before mortal eyes.

The artist, then, who would illustrate The Vision of Sir Launfal must choose lines that have an objective meaning and render them with all the subtle insight and sympathy of which he is capable. Such lines are not hard to find, and properly chosen they would present an outline of the poet's thought. Here are the lines of the poem that to us seem most obviously fitted for illustration:

Over his keys the musing organist.

the druid wood
Waits with its benedictite.

Like burnt-out craters healed with snow.

The crows flapped over by twos and threes,
In the pool drowns the cattle up to their knees.

The castle alone in the landscape lay
Like an outpost of winter, dull and gray.

As Sir Launfal made morn through the darksome gate,
He was 'ware of a leper crouched by the same.

Through the deep gulf of the chimney wide
Wallows the Yule-log's roaring tide.

And he sat in the gateway and saw all night
The great hall-fire so cheery and bold,
Through the window-slits of the castle old,
Build out its piers of ruddy light
Against the drift of cold.

"For Christ's sweet sake, I beg an alms."

He parted in twain his single crust,
He broke the ice on the streamlet's brink,
And gave the leper to eat and drink.

The leper no longer crouched at his side,
But stood before him glorified.

The castle gate stands open now,
And the wanderer is welcome to the hall.

Turning now to the illustrated edition before us, what do we find? It seems impossible of belief, but it is a fact that not one of the passages just quoted has been selected by the artists who have prepared the drawings for this volume. Instead we are shown pictures to which legends like these are appended: "An image of Him who died on the tree"—"And what is so rare as a day in June?"—"My golden spurs now bring to me"—"He sees the snake-like caravan crawl"—"The wounds in the hands and feet and side"—"There is no price set on the lavish summer"—"Bearing Sir Launfal the Maiden Knight"—"An old, bent man, worn out and frail." If the artists engaged upon the work had rendered their subjects, ill-chosen as they are, with some reasonable degree of felicity the book might still have been interesting as a manifestation of contemporary art. But they betray astonishing inaptitude. The frontispiece portrait of Mr. Lowell by J. W. Alexander might well, with its puffy cheeks, its bead-like eyes, and uncouth beard, stand for a picture of Gambrinus, the German beer-king. Certainly its resemblance to the author of the Biglow Papers is not close. Mr. Siddons Mowbray presents the Christ in the guise of a gaunt and meager lazzarone, and the head of the figure he has placed on the cross is about as unsatisfactory as it could be. The landscapes by Hopkinson Smith, Swain Gif-

* Horse, Foot, and Dragoons. Sketches of Army Life at Home and Abroad. By Rufus Fairchild Zogbaum. Illustrations by the author. Harper & Brothers. $2.00.

* The Vision of Sir Launfal. By James Russell Lowell. With Illustrations. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $10.00.

ford, and Bruce Crane are vague and meaningless. It seems as if whenever there was an obvious meaning the artist has taken pains deliberately to avoid it. The wildest imagination could not construct a "snake-like caravan" out of Mr. Gifford's three camels, five Arabs, a vulture, and a palm-tree (p. 69). There is no hill-top in Mr. Crane's "open wold and hill-top bleak" (p. 59). Sir Launfal, as depicted by Mr. Bidwell on page 33, is an admirable counterfeit presentment of Don Quixote. There is a nun's head by J. W. Freer on page 43, which, aside from the fact that it has no meaning in connection with the text, is grotesque, with its eyelids like inverted saucers and its swollen nose like an inverted carrot. As for the productions of Alfred Kappes and Walter Shirlaw representing Sir Launfal in various attitudes and conditions, they are, through affectations of chiaro-scuro, well-nigh unintelligible.

After this prolonged chronicle of faults we are glad to be able to say a word in praise of Mr. Juengling's engraving, which is superb. Even the abominable portrait is almost made acceptable by the mastery displayed by the engraver, and the same might be said of all the other full-page pictures.

For the rest the book is got up in a style of noteworthy simplicity and beauty. The text is printed on sheets of thin card-board which are mounted on muslin. The illustrations, excepting a half-dozen head and tail pieces, are artists' proofs on India paper. The binding is conspicuous for its good taste. He who admires and understands the poem will sigh to think that through lack of artistic discrimination resources of such a noble sort have been lavished upon it in vain. The book may perhaps be cherished by collectors of éditions de luxe, in whose eyes a luxurious scale of manufacture atones for many shortcomings. But the lover of literature and art will regard it as a most disappointing production.

OLD FRIENDS IN A NEW DRESS.

Mrs. Hemans's familiar poem, The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, the original M.S. of which reposes in a glass case in Pilgrim Hall at Plymouth, Massachusetts, has been taken by Castell Brothers of London as the motive of a dainty little quarto, perhaps four inches square, the lines being traced in picturesque letters across pages embellished with colored landscapes and figures illustrative of the theme. The artist's name is not given except in one or two instances. The sprig of Mayflower which serves as the ornament on the reverse of the title is too deeply red to convey to our English friends a true notion of the flower itself. A good deal of taste is exhibited in the selection and treatment of subjects.

Tennyson's poem of The Brook appears in miniature oblong form, illustrated with vignettes in chromo-lithograph, which take good advantage of the woodland and meadow suggestions of the verse. This poem has no human interest whatever. A bridge, a mill, a church-spire, are almost its only connections with life; it is a disentangled thread of nature. The artist, Woodruff, has caught its spirit, but lacks a little a spirit of his own, and if we should criticise the designs it would be by saying that they were a trifle insipid. They are delicately done, however, and the effect is tranquil. [Macmillan & Co. 75c.]

The interest in Gray's Elegy, on the other hand, is distinctly human, and it adds greatly, in our judgment, to the attractiveness of the quarto in which Castell Brothers of London have presented it this season. The illustrations range from borders and vignettes to full-page drawings, and are done in shades of gray only, as if from sepia originals. They are generally pleasing, some of them particularly so. The best of all is the old grave-digger on the last page; next to this is a group of three rustics, old and young, accompanying the line "far from the madding crowd." Almost as good is the trio of children running to "lisp their sire's return." This is altogether a book of refined and gentle beauty. [$1.25.]

The Old Folks at Home.

The Old Folks at Home. By S. C. Foster. Illustrated. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.]

Thirty years ago Stephen C. Foster's plantation melody, The Old Folks at Home, was a song of songs in the United States. A few years ago Christine Nilsson revived the interest in it. It is one of the most touching of songs when feelingly sung. The singing of such a composition must always be more effective than the illustration of it. We doubt if the selection of it for an "illustrated quarto" is the happiest that could be made. We doubt if the pathos of the words can make its way to the heart so forcibly through the eye as through the ear. Still the artist, Mr. Copeland, and his publishers have done their best. A portrait of Miss Nilsson, "as she appeared when singing" the piece, prefaces the book, followed by words in full, and the music closes it. For the body of the book we have a repetition of the lines a few at a time, alternating with wood-cuts which delineate in succession the moss-festooned "Swanee ribber," "de old folks" sitting by the cabin door, the homeless darkey roaming "all up and down de whole creation," "longing for de old plantation," as the "heart grows weary," the "little farm," one of the "many happy days" he squandered, the little fellow playing "wid my brudder," the "one little hut among de bushes," the "bees a humming all round de comb," and "de banjo tumming." The roaming darkey in one of these cuts is walking at a somewhat impossible gait, and an urchin on a fence in another is a non-descript. The old folks at the cabin door, on the other hand, are natural and life-like; so is the group around the youthful banjoist.

The Deserted Village.

The Deserted Village. By Oliver Goldsmith, with Etchings by M. M. Taylor. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00.]

The form here given to Goldsmith's poem of The Deserted Village is that of a large but thin octavo of about fifty pages, allowing ample margins, and the printing of the text in large type. The paper is thick and heavy, the edges are gilt, and the cover is a dove-colored cloth stamped in silver and gilt and brown. The lines chosen by Mr. Taylor for the subjects of his six etchings are these:

"Thy sports are fled and all thy charms withdrawn."
"The swain responsive as the milkmaid sung."
"To seek her nightly shed, and weep till morn."
"There, in his noisy mansion, skilled to rule."
"He drives his flocks to pick the scanty blade."
"Downward they move, a melancholy band."

The first of these is placed as a frontispiece, and shows the roof outlines and dark gables of the once "sweet smiling village" against the kindling sky. It is technically good. In the second we have the figure of the milkmaid singing and the "swain responsive," but the latter is weak and awkward; better are the cattle, and the timbered gables of the barn behind the trees. In the third the widowed matron, "solitary thing," bearing home her fagot through the wintry scene, is feelingly and affectingly done; the work upon her face being particularly effective. Altogether pleasing is the fourth, the village street, with the quaint schoolhouse on the right, the inn on the left, and the dusky group of children loitering between. The flock of sheep, the central feature in the fifth plate, are timidly treated by the artist, who, in order to avoid the difficulties of foreshortening, has needlessly turned their heads this way and that. One of the shepherds, also, is too awkward and clumsy a bumpkin to appear in pages so fair as these, nor can we speak warmly of the "anchoring vessel" which lies conspicuously in the stream in the sixth plate, whose hull lacks grace and symmetry, and whose bowsprit is all awry. The perspective of the "melancholy band" upon the shore is better; so is the distance, the sense of which is well conveyed.

Enoch Arden.

Enoch Arden. By Alfred Tennyson. Illustrated by Edmund H. Garrett and Chas. Copeland. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $6.00.]

Messrs. Garrett and Copeland have worked together with admirable sympathy and discrimination in the illustrating of this volume, and their efforts delicately engraved and skillfully printed under the supervision of Mr. Geo. T. Andrews have resulted in a unique and attractive book. Enoch Arden in its simplicity, its appeal to ordinary emotions, and its artlessly artful interpretation of every-day motives, is well adapted to illustrative treatment and does not demand any great flights of genius to make it pictorially intelligible. In the volume before us Mr. Garrett has done the figure pieces and landscapes, and Mr. Copeland has provided for each of the eighty-two pages of text and illustrations a border of delicate design. These borders, printed in a delicate neutral tint by lithographic process, give the pages an effect like a silvery damask or brocade, both novel and attractive. The designs themselves are of decided beauty in their exquisite traceries of scroll and foliage or their gossamer-like suggestion of woodland vistas and tropical scenes. Mr. Garrett has also done his work exceptionally well. His figures are fully individualized and life-like, and his landscapes might have been studied from nature, so aptly do they bring into graphic semblance the multiplied suggestions of the text. Taken for all in all we shall not hesitate to pronounce this edition of Enoch Arden to be one of the most successful holiday volumes of the year. It is not meant for those who seek for the grand style or melodramatic effects, but those who appreciate the rich, quiet beauty of the poem in question will find it here enshrined in a form harmonious with its merits.

Song of the River.

Song of the River. By Charles Kingsley. Illustrated. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.50.]

Charles Kingsley's "Song of the River," both like and unlike Tennyson's "Brook," is distinctly a song, with as marked lyrical quality as "The Three Fishers." It is full of picturings, too, and a capital subject for the illustrator. It has but three stanzas, of eight lines each, yet of these twenty-four lines at least a half are suggestive to the pencil. Of the sixteen drawings engraved in the book before us to illustrate this poem, three are by W. L. Taylor, five by J. D. Woodward, two by H. Winthrop Pierce, and one each by Chas. Copeland, Geo. A. Tell, C. Hirschberg, W. St. John Harper, W. F. Halsall, and H. P. Barnes. The cuts occupy full pages generally, with a couple of lines of text at the bottom. The best work is Mr. Barnes's vignette following the table of contents, showing the old church in deep shadows by the river side, Mr. Copeland's "Clear and Cold," Mr. Woodward's "Foul and Dank," and Mr. Taylor's "The taintless tide that awaits me afar." The figures of mother and child in the latter, standing in the meadow, where the river finds the sea, are finely done; the faces are remarkable for spirituality. The book is neatly made, with careful attention to typographical detail.

ILLUSTRATED POETRY.

Heroic Ballads.

Heroic Ballads. Selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours." Illustrated. [Roberts Brothers. $2.00.]

It would be hard to find a better collection of English ballads for popular use than this so admirably selected by the editor of Quiet Hours—indeed, we know of none that approaches it in range and poetical value. The minstrelsy of the Scottish border, the great heroic poems of ancient and modern England, a few ballads of Revolutionary times, and the eight or ten really memorable poems inspired by our civil war, are all here—from "Sir Patrick Spens" to Lord Tennyson's "Revenge," from "Chevy Chase" to "Old Ironsides," from "The Bonnets of Bonny Dundee" to "Sheridan's Ride," from "Ye Mariners of England" to Lowell's "Commemoration Ode." Perhaps Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn" might have been included. However, we started out to say that of this excellent and already standard work the publishers have made a "presentation edition"—a handsomely printed small quarto with broad margins and a modest cover, containing moreover, from various sources, sixteen illustrations which add little or nothing to the interest of the poems, but which may be tolerated on account of the other good qualities of the book. It is not too much to say that a family library which does not contain Heroic Ballads in some form is sensibly the poorer.

Old Homestead Poems.

Old Homestead Poems. By Wallace Bruce. Illustrated. [Harper & Bros. $2.00.]

Why Mr. Bruce chose the title given to this volume we cannot say. The first poem is called "The Old Homestead," but it occupies small space compared with the remaining productions, which include memorial verses of one sort and another, poems read before Grand Army encampments, college gatherings, Chautauqua assemblies, genealogical anniversaries, and club celebrations, together with an ode to the land of Burns, and several short effusions denominated by courtesy sonnets, but which we prefer to call "fourteeners." Mr. Bruce belongs to the Will Carleton order of poets and he appeals "to the popular heart." He proclaims in resounding rhymes that Columbia is the land of the free; he eulogizes the industry of our grandmothers and reviews the memories of rural childhood; he turns off a frontier ballad in quasi-dialect to show the angelic qualities inherent in the whiskey-drinking clerk of a grocery bar; he displays his "humor" in lines like these:

How many flies in sweetness stick,
Youth only by experience learn;
When boys we "lasses" used to lick,
And we were all licked in return.

Mr. Bruce's poems are printed on heavy tinted paper; are abundantly illustrated in a coarse wood-cut style commensurate with their merits; and are bound in showy covers depicting the "old homestead" modernized into a "Queen Anne villa," surrounded by a cloud of silvery steam spouted from the nose of a very recent-looking tea-kettle.

Ringing Ballads.

Ringing Ballads. By Rose Hartwick Thorpe. [D. Lothrop Co. $2.00.]

Why Ringing Ballads? Because Mrs. Thorpe is the author of "C—w M—t N—t R—g T—t." There is no sign of a ring of any sort in any of the other productions in this volume. Most of them deal with fatalities of some sort. Margaret watches by the sea and the body of her drowned lover is cast on the beach at her feet. John Leigh, having made a home in the West for his "English bride," is killed while walking on the railway track; his wife and child coming in search of him are killed on the same spot in a collision; his grandfather finally appears and drops dead on the platform of the station near by. A maiden, "young and fair," saves an approaching train from wreck and is maimed in the effort. A miner parts from his betrothed on the eve of marriage and is buried alive in the depths of the "yawning abyss." Thirty years or so later he is dug out "untouched by the finger of Time's decay," and a white-haired woman dies with her head pillowed upon his breast. Another poem, "In Answer," relates how a woman besought the engineer of the train on which she was traveling to pray "that God will hold the train at B—" in order that she might reach her dying child. The engineer prays,

Just hold the train eight minutes, Lord,
And I'll make up the other seven—and "makes the connection." A spirited ballad commemorates the bravery of Travis and his heroic band at Alamo. The book makes a showy quarto; the illustrations are execrable.

Ballads of Romance and History.

Ballads of Romance and History. Illustrated. [D. Lothrop Co. $2.50.]

This is a quarto of a hundred or so pages made up, if we are not mistaken, from the Wide Awake magazine. Susan Coolidge relates most gracefully the fate of "Little Alix," an incident of the Children's Crusade; Mrs. Whitney tells how "The Deacon's Little Maid" tried to be good; Sarah O. Jewett has for theme of a charming poem the escape of Polly Masterson from the Indians at "York Garrison—1640;" Nora Perry chronicles the "Cherry Feast," to which the children of Naumburg were treated by the chief of the Hussites; Mrs. Spofford tells the story of how D'Assas saved the French at Auvergne; Mrs. Preston's historic ballad of Sir Walter Raleigh is here; Kate Putnam Osgood contributes a vigorous song of King Olaf's conquest; and the book closes with Mrs. Piatt's exquisite "Three Little Emigrants." We must not omit mention of Margaret Sidney's ballad of "The Minute Man," beginning:

For more than a hundred years
In history, legend, and rhyme,
Has the old story been told anew
Of the Century's deed sublime.

We could well have spared this attempt to "tell the story once more," for the "rhymes" are altogether too "simple." The illustrations throughout the volume, from designs by G. F. Barnes, H. Sandham, E. H. Garrett, F. C. Hassam, and W. L. Taylor, are mostly of the sort in which mannerisms and grotesque affectations are supposed to compensate for originality. There is, too, a uniform scratchiness about the drawing which is distressing.

Through the Year.

Through the Year. Verses and Illustrations. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50.]

Mechanically considered, this small quarto is the workmanship of Ernest Nister of Nuremberg, whose previous contributions to American holiday literature have commanded wide-spread admiration. Either because we are becoming accustomed to Nister's work, or because this example of it is not so fine as others that have gone before, Through the Year impresses us not as strikingly good but as only respectably so. In the first place the mixture in it of Nister's peculiar lithographic prints with ordinary woodcuts in the form of vignettes and ornaments produces a slight incongruity of effect, and detracts from the unity and even quality of the book. These woodcuts are delicately and deftly done and are pretty in themselves, but between them and the larger and more important lithographs, of a distinctly different type, the eye suffers a sense of confusion. The reading matter in the book consists of original verses by E. Nesbit, Caris Brooke, Theo. Gift, and C. Mainwaring, with selected additions from Wordsworth, Browning, N. P. Willis, Matthew Arnold, Keats, Byron, Buchanan, Burns, Herrick, Shakespeare, Macdonald, Wm. Morris, Tennyson, Swinburne, Shelley, and Dobson. This verse, all in fragments, is so arranged as to sing the procession of the seasons—Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter; and of the scenes thus suggested the pictures accompanying are the illustrations. They make a panorama of the changing conditions of out-door life, the windy morning in March, the budding leaves and opening flowers of early spring, seed-time, the luxuriance of fields in June, the twittering birds, hay-making and harvesting, autumnal stores and falling leaves, the snows of winter. Nister's lithography is done in soft neutral tints of gray, and much of it is really of exquisite refinement and beauty. The vignette before the frontispiece, the "restless baby" pursuing the flowers in the summer field, the mother rocking her child to sleep by the casement, the churchyard in winter, are among the best of the designs. The cover in sage green would be prettier, in our judgment, if stamped in gilt without the silver.

Poems in Color.

Poems in Color. Sea Pictures, from Tennyson; I Remember, from Thomas Hood; Worship of Nature, from Whittier; To a Water Fowl, from Bryant; Sunrise on the Hills, from Longfellow; To a Mountain Daisy, from Burns. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. The set, $3.00.]

These six booklets, each in its white envelope, nestle snugly in a white pasteboard box. The books are small, square, unbound, knotted at the back with white silk cord, and consist of the poem or extract named in the title set off with dainty thumb-nail vignettes in color, the whole printed on heavy rough paper or card-board with gilt edges. Mr. William J. Whittemore is the illustrating artist in each case. He uses his water colors and hair pencil with taste and skill, and the result is a collection of little color touches, suggestions or thoughts rather than finished sketches, well suited to their diminutive pages. The "Sea Pictures" from Tennyson catch the dashing spray on the shore, the can-buoy tossing on the blue waves, the somber cliff holding out against the tide, the ship under full sail in the moonlight, the distant sail "hull down" on the horizon. Burns's "Mountain Daisy" affords less scope, and the embellishments of it are less pleasing. Longfellow's "Sunrise on the Hills" is better, full of golden color, life, and action. Bryant's "Water Fowl" is made good use of with pictures of fen and reed. Whittier's "Worship of Nature" is so treated that it is one of the best of the series if not the best; though Hood's "I Remember" is not far behind it. Either of these books by itself is a pretty trifle; the set of six are six times that, which is saying a good deal.

Geraldine.

Geraldine. A Souvenir of the St. Lawrence. [Ticknor & Co. $3.50.]

We are at a loss to understand just why the anonymous poem of Geraldine, published some years ago, should be supposed to merit the honor now accorded it of an expensive reprint with illustrations. It is a metrical story in the measure of Owen Meredith's Lucile, turning on the fortunes of a so-called "poet" named Percival Trent. The specimens given of Percival's poetry would not incline us to place him in the front rank of the guild, but he manifests a truly poetical aptitude for collecting "material" out of his own experiences, the chief occupation of his life being a sort of double-ended love affair of the see-saw variety, between two ladies, to one of whom he is, and to the other of whom he ought to be, engaged. When he is not exchanging deep soul utterances with his betrothed Geraldine Hope, who is a maiden of spiritual turns of mind and phrase, he is kissing the bewitching Mrs. Lee on desert islands, or sailing with her hand in hand up the St. Lawrence—a course of action which in plain prose might be called dishonorable, but which in the case of a poet may find extenuation. Only it seems to us that in that case the poet should write better poetry, and not mask his infidelities with such needless devoutness of utterance or quite so many appeals to Deity! The illustrations here accompanying the poem have been conscientiously made, and the book has a "dressy" look.

—One prize of $700 and one of $300 are offered by the Congregational Sunday-school and Publishing Society, Boston, for the first and second best MSS., suitable for Sunday-school books, either of fiction, biography, or history. These prizes ought to set a good many pens to work. Competition is open until May 15, 1888. Of course full particulars may be obtained by addressing the Society.

BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Youngsters' Yarns. By Ascott R. Hope. With Illustrations by C. O. Murray. [Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.75.]

Stories of Persons and Places in Europe. By E. L. Benedict. Copiously Illustrated. [Same publishers. $1.50.]

Dog Stories and Dog Lore. Experiences of two boys in rearing and training dogs, with many anecdotes of canine intelligence. By Thomas W. Knox. [Cassell & Co. $1.75.]

The Boyhood of Living Authors. By William H. Rideing. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.]

Kaloolah. By W. S. Mayo, M.D. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00.]

Burnham Breaker. By Homer Greene. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50.]

In Youngsters' Yarns Mr. Hope has gathered six narratives of peril which actually happened, retold them, and told them well. They all but one concern boys; a young Fleming in "A Raw Recruit," a Bohemian in "An Ambassador's Page," a German, an English boy, and three Americans. There are battles, shipwrecks, prison life, escapes, captivity among the Indians, wanderings in the wilderness, hardships of all kinds, and thrilling situations enough to satisfy the most exacting boy. It is especially a book for boys, and they will find a great deal of enjoyment in these eight eventful stories, which introduce them to such a variety of people, make them acquainted with so many nations, and set forth so many actions of the heroic type. The last is that of Ned Myers, a shipmate of Fenimore Cooper, who afterwards used his nautical career in a novel.

The Stories of Persons and Places are in great variety—legends, bits from history, descriptive passages, geographical matter, extracts from books of travel, gathered from many sources ancient and modern; an accumulation in which one may find almost anything, from Vikings and Druids, Shakespeare and Robin Hood, glaciers and peat boys, bull fights and battlefields, O'Connell and Victor Emmanuel, the burning of Moscow and Saint George and the Dragon, to German toy-makers and the mosquitoes of Sweden. Nineteen countries of Europe have a place, one chapter being devoted to each, and into that is crowded all the information and incident possible to the space, adapted in style for the capacity of a child of twelve, but helpful to older persons who have not many resources; a storehouse of miscellaneous knowledge, without connection, in a few instances ungrammatical, but in the main an excellent book for its purpose, with abundance of illustrations.

All who are fond of the canine race and who appreciate "the faithful canine heart" will be delighted with the book of Dog Stories and Dog Lore; and those who are not will find in its pages much to create that fondness and appreciation. It would seem as if almost every known species of dog must be portrayed here, not only in legitimate picture but in a good pen-and-ink description of his personality and his ways. Certainly dogs here have justice done them. Their best traits—and what noble traits they have!—are brought to the front. Their sagacity, their fidelity, their marvelous intelligence are here illustrated. The natural history is given of spaniel, pointer, terrier, colly, greyhound and all the rest of the numerous family, even to the German "Sachsund," the "Chinese Puzzle," the "Bas-set" hound, the "dingo" and the Eskimo. The book is written in the form of a story, wherein two boys in addition to all the rest learn how to rear and train dogs, what to do for them when diseased, how to make a kennel, how to teach a dog to hunt, and everything else that can come within the province of such a book; from which it may readily be inferred that this compendium of canine literature is one of the most desirable books of the season for a boy to possess.

Sketches of The Boyhood of Authors both dead and living are apt to possess the defect of not containing much that is worth telling about till the boy vanishes into the author, and his career as a boy ends. Later, the author rehabilitates the boy, so to speak, and invests him with a fictitious interest; but it is for older people; and not all of such have that investigating tendency which cares to go back of the wine to the grape blossom, or look behind the cider cask for its protoplasm, the apple seed. As for children, for whose particular entertainment such compilations as this of Mr. Rideing's are made, they do not as a general thing care enough for the lights of literature to care for them in embryo, and little boys not at all likely to become famous are more interesting because more real to them than these reminiscent boys, in whom they miss the flavor of today. They will like to read about little William Clark Russell, perhaps, because exciting things happened to him at sea, and possibly about little Frank Stockton, because he and his brother played such very jolly pranks together, but for the greater part of Mr. Rideing's living authors in petto they will care not at all.

Mayo's clever and entertaining story of Kaloolah, the delight of boys and girls a quarter of a century since, appears this year in a new edition, with many illustrations. It gives the story of Jack Romer, a Nantucket boy who goes to sea, and after shipwreck and captivity among the Arabs, discovers an unknown and highly civilized tribe of natives known as the "white nation" in Central Africa, marries the king's daughter, whom he has rescued from slavery, and remains among them as one of their rulers. The book teems with lions and tigers and boa-constrictors, and will be as delightful to the boys of 1887 as it was to the boys of 1860 and their predecessors.

Burnham Breaker can be recommended in the main as a good book for boys. It is the story of a nameless foundling, one of the employés of a great coal mine, who by a mixture of good fortune and good qualities wins his way, and is in the end restored to his true name and inheritance. By far the cleverest part of the book is the episode of Ralph's escape from the mine after the accident; its most serious flaw is a certain "goody" and sentimental tone, which is neither boy-like nor quite manly.

—Unlike some others, Johnson's Universal Cyclopadia is not a mere compilation from miscellaneous work, but is full of original matter, carefully prepared by specialists justly celebrated in their chosen departments for their ability, learning, and profound research. It is brought down to September, 1887, and its cost is extremely low.

BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

Historic Girls, by E. S. Brooks [G. P. Putnam's Sons, $2.00], belongs to a class of books which we are particularly glad to see steadily enlarging, books, namely, which draw the attention of young readers to the real lives and events which are so much more deeply interesting than fiction. The twelve chapters which make up this volume begin with the story of the little Bath Zabbæ of Palmyra, who afterward became the famous Zenobia, Queen of the East. Next comes the tale of Helena, the loyal little daughter of King Coel of Britain—the original "old King Cole" of the nursery rhyme, who was afterward Empress of Rome, mother of the great Constantine, and discoverer of the wood of the true cross at Jerusalem. Then follows Pulcheria of Constantinople, Clotilda of Burgundy, the wife of Clovis first King of France, Woo the great Empress of China, Edith of Scotland, afterward the "Good Queen Maud" of Henry I, Jacqueline of Holland, Catherine Cornard the Queen of Cyprus, Saint Theresa of Aquila, Elizabeth Tudor, Christina of Sweden, and Pocahontas the daughter of King Powhatan. This list covers, as may be seen, a vast extent of time and place, and older as well as younger girls will find it interesting reading.

A Flock of Girls and Their Friends. By Nora Perry. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] Miss Perry has the art of conveying a moral in a sugar-coated manner that will entice the most wary. The moral, in fact, is a moral purpose, and it permeates each one of the fourteen stories in this volume. The Flock of Girls are real girls, they have their faults and their merits, and they are delineated with a faithful realism that never loses sight of higher motives. There is Tacy, who can be as pleasant as anybody, but is growing into a little tyrant; "Jim," who through clinging to a childish folly reaped good deal of unhappiness; Kate Oxford, who in an emergency found her talent of great service; Molly, who found that real courtesy might exist in conjunction with fine manners; Louise, whose time was "too valuable" to allow her to wait on herself or be useful to others; Marigold, who in spite of her deficiencies in mathematics showed herself competent for other things; Dorothy, who had the bravery to stick to her colors in the face of opposition and ridicule—and so on; good, wholesome, interesting stories, every one, sure to entertain and to influence the readers of them for the better. The girl who becomes familiar with A Flock of Girls and recognizes their efforts toward the performance of duty and the attainment of self-improvement, cannot fail to grow up a nobler and more useful woman because of the privilege of having made their acquaintance.

Prudence Winterburn. By Sarah Doudney, with illustrations. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25.] In the story of Prudence Winterburn is told the experience of a young country girl who has a sentimental desire for "a kindred soul," not another sister, but a woman friend to influence her life. This influence she soon finds in a widow from India, to whose fascinations Prue yields at once, becoming so infatuated that her own principles are nearly undermined and her life is made miserable by reason of the concealments and petty deceits she is guilty of, through her mistaken devotion to an artful woman. However, the wickedness of the widow is eventually exposed, and matters right themselves in time for the misled girl to learn a salutary lesson, as other girls will who read it, accepting the moral teaching for which it was written.

Great-Grandmother Girls in New France. By Lizzie W. Champney. [Estes & Lauriat.] $2.50. Mrs. Champney has chosen for the heroine of her pretty old-time chronicle the little six-year-old daughter of Mr. Williams, the Deerfield minister, who, with almost his entire family, was carried into captivity by the Indians, after the surprise of that place by the French and Abenakis in the year 1704. Mrs. Williams, it may be remembered, fell exhausted on the terrible march to Canada, and was tomahawked by her captors; her husband and his sons were subsequently released, but all negotiations for the ransom or exchange of the little Eunice failed, owing in part to the intrigues of the Jesuit fathers, and she remained to the end among the Abenakis, ultimately becoming the wife of one of their chiefs. Out of this sadly true history Mrs. Champney has constructed a really charming story. Its relator is a girl named Submit Dare, who, after the execution of her mother for witchcraft at Salem, had been received into the Williams family and placed in charge of the little Eunice. How faithfully she fulfilled this charge, how she even left her young husband and crossed the sea to plead with the all-powerful Madame de Maintenon for the release of the little prisoner, is well and delightfully told, with just that touch of pathos and romance which older children like. If the story, as we suspect, was framed to suit the illustrations, it is so skillfully done that only an experienced eye will suspect the fact.

The American Girl's Handy Book. By Lina Beard and Adelia B. Beard. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.] This book contains directions more or less precise and praiseworthy for the observance of holidays, the giving of parties and picnics, the playing of various games, for preserving and drying flowers, decorating seaside cottages (principally, it would seem, with the dead bodies of star-fish), for framing pictures, covering furniture, painting on china, and other useful and ornamental arts. The chapters on oil and water-color painting seem to us rather rudimentary in their character, and it would appear doubtfully wise if not needless to suggest a list of April Fool tricks for the imitation of children; but the volume generally is well meant and clearly written, and it will doubtless prove helpful in different ways to its youthful readers.

CHILDREN'S PICTURE BOOKS.

Ida Waugh's Alphabet Book. Verses by Amy E. Blanchard. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] No book better than this could illustrate the transfiguration which the traditional picture book has undergone under the improved tastes and processes of modern times. In it we have a succession of large, square creamy pages, each holding a six-line stanza of simple poetry adapted to baby ears and intelligence, but never silly or mere jingle, overhung with a pretty picture and encompassed with a delicately shaded border, the feature of which is a procession of cherubs playing all sorts of antics with the letters of the alphabet. The printing of both text and pictures is done in chocolate-colored ink, the effect of which on the creamy paper is rich and luxurious. The drawings are truthful and accurate, and the atmosphere of the book, inside and out, refined and refining.

Queen of the Meadow. By Robert Ellice Mack. Illustrated by Harriett M. Bennett. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00.] This is one of Nister's wonderful Nuremberg books, and seldom has that artist-printer's handiwork been seen at better advantage. The nursery rhymes of elevated Mother Goose order are done in English, but the pictures have an indescribable German quality about them, and are full of interest and technical beauty. We do not prefer colored lithography to the quieter style in monochrome, but both sorts are represented in this book, and each sort is the best of its kind. There are seventeen of the large full-page colored plates, and gay indeed they are, always with a child or children for central point of interest, and generally a pet of some variety for companion—dog, cat, sheep, doll, bird, or baby; and these pictures are as carefully drawn and as fastidiously finished almost as a miniature. Their sentiment is invariably chaste and gentle, and they are wrought out with unflinching conscientiousness. More pleasing to us even are the accompanying pictures and vignettes of a plainer type, the little touches of babyhood and nursery life, the little glimpses of landscapes, tufts of flowers, and clusters of buds, all done with infinite grace and delicacy. Babyhood and the animal kingdom are the twin factors of this lovely picture book.

Jappie Chappie, and How he Loved a Dollie. Told and Illustrated by E. L. Shute. [Frederick Warne & Co. 50c.] The showy and grotesque order of picture books is represented in this thin quarto of limber covers. Jappie Chappie was a moon-faced little man of Japan, who fell in love with an English Dollie, rescued her from the jaws of a frightful monster, and was rewarded with her hand in marriage. This tender romance is related by Mr. Shute in a ballad of amusing tenor, and embellished with pictures, some of which are resplendent with color and idealized to the degree of caricature, while others in outline, interwoven with the text, echo the humor of the tale in a lower key.

Young England's Nursery Rhymes. Illustrated by Constance Hazlewood. [Frederick Warne & Co. 75c.] The nursery rhymes chosen for illustration in this brilliant twelvemo are mainly taken from the familiar pages of Mother Goose. Miss or Mrs. Hazlewood is an artist of Kate Greenaway's school, though not wielding pencil and brush with quite the nicety of that distinguished master. The pictures—one to every page—are well done, however, and lithographed in color, and a pretty little nonsense book is the result.

Robinson Crusoe: His Life and Adventures. Illustrated. [Frederick Warne & Co. 75c.] We place this book under the present head because it is as a picture book rather than as a story book that it makes its appeal. The original text of Defoe's masterpiece is not here at all, but only a greatly abridged and weakened paraphrase of it, used simply as a medium on which to spread a dozen full-page plates in colors, which are more showy than artistic, and a great number of smaller wood-cuts scattered through the text. For infants whose introduction to Robinson Crusoe is required this book may do, but we should prefer to put into a child's hand the work in its integrity.

A Gay Day for 7. By Mrs. Rose M. Sprague. [L. Prang & Co. $2.00.] Seven little girls of the Kate Greenaway pattern, all massed under one huge umbrella, protecting their skirts as well as they can from the driving rain, greet us in the frontispiece to this pretty oblong picture book. The reading matter is a story in prose, printed in brown ink, which tells how the Seven were turned loose in an empty garret to spend a rainy day, and what a gay and happy day they had there, until the sun came out, and they could go down and out and into the sunshine to play. The dainty colored pictures which follow the text show us what the chubby tots did; how first they swept the garret floor, and then marked it off with chalk into homesteads, and then went to housekeeping, and then put the dolls to bed, and then turned to hunting after a strange cat, and then cooked some butter-scotch, and then resolved themselves into a sewing circle, and then ransacked a trunk of old clothes, and rigged themselves out in the grandmothers' gowns they found therein, and finally slid down the garret stairs and out into the yard, where the swings and hammock were, and kept their racket up till bedtime. We are glad to see Prang & Co. entering on this line of work, for they have the resources to do it well.

Sunny Childhood. By Mrs. Sale Barker. Illustrated by S. McCloy. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.25.] This book looks very like the work of Ernest Nister of Nuremberg, but it is the work of Meissner & Buch of London and Leipzig. Considered as a picture book it is the best sort of German color work, whether we look at the half-dozen large child faces which confront us on some of the pages, or the child groups which alternate with them, all in rich color, or the monotonous vignettes, generally glimpses of seashore or rural scenes, which decorate the pages on which the reading matter is printed. This reading matter consists of original verse which celebrates the traits and charms of childhood and its life. Its poetic quality is poor. Mrs. Barker appears to better advantage as an editor than a poet. This defect of the book makes it one to be looked at, not to be read; and that it will please the eye is as certain as that it will not please the ear.

Twelve Times One. By Mary A. Lathbury. With Descriptive Poems. [Worthington Co. $1.75.] The illustrations in this octavo are by Miss Lathbury, after designs in water color; the descriptive poems are fragmentary selections from Mrs. Craik, Leigh Hunt, Mrs. Browning, Jean Ingelow, Swinburne, Allingham, and several others. The verse is printed in brown ink, with occasional vignettes of the same; the color-plates occupy entire pages, and are the feature of the book. They are of respectable but not superior quality. American artists have not yet learned to excel in such designs as these; any more than American printers have in the execution of them. There is a tendency to woodenness in these pictures—to the carved and painted image type of childhood, though the fault is sometimes avoided. The child asleep, the child at prayer, and the little fisherman, are the best of the series. The tone of the book is refined; it is an effort of pure feeling after choice expression, but the effort is noticeable.

CHILDREN'S QUARTOS.

The "Children's Quarto" does not seem to be so abounding a feature of this holiday season as it has been of some others. However, several volumes of this description are already in hand, and it is not unlikely that there are others to come.

"The Knockabout Club," previously under the direction of Mr. C. A. Stephens, are this year taken by Mr. F. A. Ober on an excursion In the Everglades of Florida, going by schooner from Boston to Mosquito Inlet, and spending the good part of a winter in exploring swamps, lakes, rivers, and lagoons, and in encounters with alligators and traditions of the Seminole Indians. The book makes a liberal use of Florida's past history as well as of its picturesque present, and gives considerable place to description. Exciting incident, however, is not wanting, and this element is reinforced by the pictures, though some of them seem to have been borrowed from other uses. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.50.]

Mrs. Champney's famous and far-traveled "Three Vassar Girls" are this season At Home, but "at home" does not mean Vassar College. "At home" is to the American a designation which takes in a continent, and in this book the Three Vassar Girls range from the Hudson to Florida, and westward as far as to Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, the Yosemite Valley, and the Yellowstone Park. Over this extensive stretch of country our heroines are "personally conducted" by Mrs. Champney in lively style, and her pages give a moderate amount of information about St. Augustine, Manitou, the Pueblo and Zuni Indians, and the wonders of the Yellowstone. Some of the well-worn pictures which adorn Mr. Ober's book do duty over again in Mrs. Champney's, with changed names, but with unwearied and patient fidelity. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.50.]

The members of Mrs. Bamford's Look-About Club are not travelers, but students of the insect and animal world, and under bright and quick-witted guidance are taught how to use their eyes upon the animate things of nature. Spiders, kittens, gnats, beetles, dragon-flies, and other creatures of God are made to yield up the secrets of their structures and their lives, and to inspire sentiments of kindness and humaneness for them and of admiration for the wisdom and skill of their Maker. The book is written in story form, and is printed and illustrated in a superior manner. It is an unworthy device of the publishers to print several pages of advertisements at the end of the book, in the same type with the rest of it, and without any break whatever to indicate that business has begun. Such a thing seems a trifle, but it is a significant one. [D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.]

Though belonging to the order of instructive stories, its thoroughly French construction separates Mattie's Secret with its hundred wood-cuts quite apart by itself, and subjects it to some criticism. Its object is to give information on a number of practical topics—coal mining, diamond digging, lead pencil making, beer brewing, torpedoes, dynamite, and gunpowder. This is all well, and it is possible to convey such information in story form, but to make that story a thorough-going, almost grown-up love story, when the readers are supposed to be young readers, seems out of place. Such is the French idea of the author, Emile Desbeaux. The wood-cuts are brilliant and strong, the typography excellent. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.25.]

Having finished one series of "Zigzag Journeys," in eight volumes, the ingenious and indefatigable Mr. Hezekiah Butterworth has begun another series with a volume on India. It professes to be based on the author's personal travels throughout that country, but whether this profession is an historic fact or only a feature of the fiction in which all these books have been molded, we are unable to state. Whether Mr. Butterworth has been in India or not he has studied it—land and literature; and this book consists quite as much of extracts from its legends, romances, and traditions as of personal observation and description. Its conglomerate character is illustrated by the circumstance that on pp. 77-82 we have an account of the origin of the Youth's Companion and Boston Recorder. The book is plentifully illustrated with veteran wood-cuts, some of which, depicting scenes of horror, are repulsive. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.50.]

The law of literary coincidences finds a new illustration in the story of His Little Royal Highness, by "Ruth Ogden" of Brooklyn, the title of which and indeed its subject and manner are something of a reminder of Little Lord Fauntleroy. But we are able to say that there is no real connection between the two, the manuscript of His Little Royal Highness having been accepted by the publishers while Little Lord Fauntleroy was still running in St. Nicholas, and before the latter story had fallen under the notice of the author of the former. His Little Royal Highness is well able to stand on its own merits. It is a sweet and sunny book about a little boy, Reginald, lamed by an accident, who was left by his adopted parents, while they went to Europe, in the care of "Sister" Julia, at one Captain Murray's on the Jersey shore. Here he is the winter hero and saint of a group of merry children, one of whom is a witch and another a bully. Sister Julia, Captain Murray, the five poor Croxson children and other people are the courtiers around Master Reginald, and his scepter of love rests upon all. Shipwrecks, the rescue of an imperiled crew, raising money for a hospital, and other natural incidents, enter the life of the little world, and are made to teach lessons of fortitude, patience, charity, and the bearing of one another's burdens in the love of Christ. The story is simply and prettily told, and the printing of it by Nister of Nuremberg, with its choice and artistic wood-cuts, add to its attractiveness, though there is nothing whatever showy or ambitious about the typography. [E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00.]

Every Boy's Annual, edited by Edmund Routledge, is not exactly a "children's quarto;" it is more of a "boys' octavo," and an inviting volume it is of 572 pages, of English manufacture, filled with instructive reading in which fiction holds a subordinate place, and liberally illustrated. History, biography, natural science, the phenomena of the universe, and adventure take a large share of its space, making it a book which a thoughtful boy, with a taste for mental improvement, would thoroughly enjoy. It is a handsome book withal. [George Routledge & Sons. $2.50.]

Col. Thomas W. Knox has added to his "Boy Travelers" series a volume On the Congo, which is really an abridgement or abstract, with selections, of Mr. Stanley's famous narrative, Through the Dark Continent. That narrative is as fascinating as it is famous, and undoubtedly a readable adaptation of it might be prepared, suited to the wants of boys. But we cannot say that Col. Knox's attempt is an entire success. We do not think the method chosen a happy one; it is clumsy, scrappy, and artificial. An independent and original narrative based upon Stanley's, or a wise condensation of the latter without piecing the fragments together by fiction, would have been better. The illustrations are plentiful. [Harper & Brothers. $3.00.]

Blue Jackets of 1812. By Willis J. Abbot. Illustrated. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $3.00.] We owe this book to the success which attended Mr. Abbot's similar volume of last year, The Blue Jackets of '61. The two, in their covers of blue and white canvas, nautically stamped, with their picturesque letter-press and spirited illustrations, are true shipmates, and deserve to sail together. The present volume is a sparkling and dramatic narrative of the naval part of the French War of 1788 and the war with Great Britain of 1812. Between the Revolution on the one hand and the Civil War on the other, this is a neglected or at least forgotten chapter of American history. And yet it is made forever memorable by some of the most illustrious heroes and splendid victories whose names appear in our annals. Bainbridge, Perry, and Decatur, Lake Erie, Lake Champlain, and Chesapeake Bay, the "Congress," "Constitution," and "Constellation," are enough to specify to call to mind some glorious days—so far, that is, as war can make days glorious. We believe that we are entering times which peace will make more glorious still, but none of us can deny the honest pride we feel as we look back upon this exciting passage of the past. Mr. Abbot's book is of course a compilation, but its materials are well fused and molded into new and coherent form, and he has the gift of graphic and telling recital. He is a good story-teller, and writes with a glow of patriotic feeling and youthful enthusiasm which is contagious. The pictures are numerous, comprising full-page plates engraved by a mechanical process, and smaller cuts inserted in the text. The former are ambitious but are often faulty, both in drawing and engraving, some of them here and there to the point of grotesqueness. Still they have a certain striking effect, and if not examined too closely serve their purpose with vigor if not with delicacy. The book is large and handsome, and a good one to put into boys' hands.

FAIRY TALES.

A new edition of the Arabian Nights, designed for popular circulation, comes to us under the sponsorship of the Rev. Geo. Fyler Townsend, an English clergyman, who has used Dr. Jonathan Scott's edition as a basis, and whose ruling purpose has been, while preserving the original tales in their utmost possible integrity, so to purify the text "that the most innocent maiden may read them aloud to her brothers and sisters without compunction." We cannot see that the text has suffered any at Mr. Townsend's careful hands, and the notes with which he has supplemented it convey some useful information. The book is a large and showy octavo of 560 pages, illustrated, though the colored plates are not to our taste. [F. Warne & Co. $3.00.]

Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales and Stories have an incomparable charm, and preserve the same in the new translation by Carl Siewers, made directly from the Danish original. Sixty-nine stories are presented, with pictures in the text, the whole making a heavy, but well-proportioned and well-printed book. For most readers such a one-volume collection is desirable. [Estes & Lauriat. $2.25.]

The element of child and animal life, which plays so important a part in Andersen's writings, is wanting in Madame D'Aulnoy's Fairy Tales, or if not exactly wanting, is subordinate to the element of romance, as might be expected from a French author. Madame D'Aulnoy wrote two hundred years ago, and her tales are really novels, or novelettes, in a vein of pure but extravagant fancy. They have a certain historical value for their portrayal of court and aristocratic life of their time; are expressed in a graceful and flowing style; and have been translated for their present form by J. R. Planché with due regard for the refinement and morals of modern readers. The translator declares that they now appear in English for the first time in their integrity. There are wood-cuts and instructive notes, with preface and introduction. We can name no objection to any one's making the acquaintance of Madame D'Aulnoy, though the younger class of minds would probably find her method and manner a trifle above them, and prefer the simpler and homelier inventions of Hans Christian Andersen, for example. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.50.]

Three years ago we had a volume of Fairy Tales from Brentano, told in English by Kate Freiligrath Kroeker, and now we have another, adding five tales to our knowledge of this quaint German author, whose inventive genius and literary style are his own. The longer tales are somewhat intricate, and none of them is the easiest to render out of their own language into another. They are "The Story of Gockel, Hinkel, and Gackeleia," a father, mother, and little daughter, who lived together in an old castle; "The Story of Frisky Wisky," who was favorite page to King Roundabout, and married his daughter the Princess Prompt, after he had killed the giant Stretch-Yourself; "The Story of the Myrtle Maiden," or what grew out of a myrtle tree; "The Story of Brokerina," who was daughter to a very rich merchant, "Mr. Late Liability Company Limited and Sons," and who bakes a cake-prince into a beautiful husband; and "The Story of Old Father Rhine and the Miller," which is full of the genius of the famous German river. The droll humor of these tales, their grotesque proper names, and their odd and unexpected turns of incident—something like Mr. Lear's and Mr. Stockton's nonsense stories—give them a rare and striking flavor. The book has colored plates designed by F. Carruthers Gould. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $2.00.]

Mr. Howard Pyle's The Wonder Clock contains twenty-four stories, one for each hour of the day and night, with a rhymed preface for each by Miss Katherine Pyle, the author's sister. Both the stories and the rhymes are bright and graceful, but the great merit of the book is the illustrations, of which the large square volume is generously full, and which seem to us to be, as the English say, "far and away ahead" of most other illustrations for a child's book produced this year. The delightful wood-cuts are in the style of Mr. Walter Crane, and have all his careful accuracy of drawing and all his grace of design, with a certain distinctive charm of their own superadded. We commend them to the attention of those who are low-spirited with regard to the growing tendency of modern wood-cuts toward a smudgy impressivism, and to making bold lines and a certain breezy movement and pose do duty, in the stead of anatomical correctness, beauty of face and form, and the carrying out of the accompanying text with fidelity. Mr. Pyle's animals are as perfect in their way and as full of life and humor as his men. Notice the contrast when "The Great Red Fox calls upon the Sausage," and the preceding picture where the sausage and the gray goose hold a conversation, and that where the soldier goes about accompanied by Trouble, and the other where St. Nicholas and St. Christopher sit at the rich man's table. But it seems invidious to designate where all are so good. [Harper & Brothers. $3.00.]

Hawthorne's adaptations of the old classical myths for children are still without parallel for grace, sweetness, delicacy of handling, and tenderness of tone, and are likely to remain so till another Hawthorne appears to resume the broken thread, which, to use a Scotch phrase, is a "far cry" indeed. Children cannot be too early or too often introduced to these delightful tales. We are always glad over their re-appearance in new and attractive forms, and the new edition of The Tanglewood Tales is sure to meet with a welcome. It is a large square volume, admirably printed and bound, with illustrations by George Wharton Edwards. The very look of it tempts to a re-reading of the stories, and to re-read is to be struck afresh by their wonderful charm. The touch of a master hand is apparent in each lightest stroke, and the side of Hawthorne's genius which they exhibit is peculiarly interesting from its contrast to the other sides—the contrast of the blossoming heath with the stern crag which it overlies; of the rainbow flag of foam with the deep and stormy ocean over which it floats. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.]

Grimm's Tales from the Eastern Land are very good of their kind, something after the pattern of the Arabian Nights, but with a novelty and freshness of conception which make attractive even the old themes of magic and transformation. Young people who like to escape from more matter-of-fact reading into the enchanted realms of oriental romance will find pleasure in these adventures which happened in the days of "good Haroun Al Raschid," when a little white bird in a cage might prove to be an enchanted princess, or a parrot turn into the prince that had been lost; when, fortunately, virtue was sure of being rewarded and right was made to triumph over wrong, with no special harm done to one's principles or violation of taste and propriety. [George Routledge & Sons. 80c.]

Mr. Andrew Lang has given us another version of Johnny Nut and the Golden Goose, from the French of Charles Denlin, the old myth of the silly boy whose very silliness wins him fortune, and whose appearance at the head of a long procession, joined in itself and to him by the magical virtues of the golden goose which he carries under his arm, makes a smileless princess laugh for the first time in her life and obtains for him a royal bride. The story has appeared in several forms in the fairy literature of different nations; this, the French version, is an entertaining one. [Longmans, Green & Co. $3.50.]

When a very clever man pauses from graver pursuits to amuse himself with a lot of children, he is apt to be a good deal more amusing than ordinary people can be. Dr. Weir Mitchell's titles to fame lie, it is understood, in a different direction from the telling of fairy stories, but it is evident that had he cared to make that the business of his life, he could have given most of our writers of juvenile books "points" at their own game. The stories in Prince Little Boy are full of grace and fancy and distinctly original, while there is an undercurrent of veiled humor in them which makes them entertaining to older readers, and delightful to those bright children who like to look beneath the surface and detect a meaning within a meaning. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50.]

There is a youth of the imagination, as of the heart, when the freshly waked fancy revels, as it were, in its own suggestions, when the forming style has as yet acquired no mannerisms; and ambition, usage, and the certainty of success do not, as in later life, play their part in the action of a writer's mind. To this youthful period belong the little tales which, invented originally for the entertainment of certain beloved small neighbors, Miss Alcott now enlarges for a wider circle under the title of Lulu's Library. They are fairy tales, or of the fairy order; but they convey the same kindly and helpful lessons with her later books, and as simpler of construction and keeping more faithfully to the true childish standpoint, we prefer them to those. Some of these little stories are as fresh as charming. Nothing, for example, could be prettier in its way than "Little Bud." [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.]

OTHER JUVENILES.

Stories of the Magicians. By the Rev. Alfred J. Church, M.A. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50.] What Professor Church has done in this volume is very simple. He has taken Southey's romances of "Thalaba" and "The Curse of Kehama" and told them in prose, and to these he has added a prose version of the "Story of Rustem" taken from Mohl's translation of the Shah Nameh. The result is a book adapted to both young and old readers, although intended primarily of course for the former. Professor Church's style, as those familiar with it are aware, is clear, forcible, and picturesque. In this book the famous oriental romances are rendered in a way to gratify the scholarly reader and to hold the attention of the unliterary. Some justifiable liberties have been taken with the "Story of Rustem" to make it more intelligible to Western minds. The illustrations from Persian and Indian MSS. are an excellent accompaniment to the text.

St. Paul's Problem, and its Solution. By Nye Huntington. [Thomas Y. Crowell & Co.

$1.25.] "St. Paul's" is a church, and the "problem" is how to interest the young people. The "solution" is the establishment and success of a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. To this body in general the book is dedicated, with the fervent belief of the author that the "thought" is meant to meet a great need in the church. In the form of a story the purpose and workings of one of these societies are fully set forth, in its various departments of temperance, mission, social, "look-out," and other forms in which earnest, practical young Christians can use their best endeavors. As a book it is sanguine, strenuous, insistent; it urges the necessity of aggressive work; it presupposes consecration and singleness of purpose; it holds up a high ideal; it gives encouragement; it presents to each person pledged to the society a mission; the rewards and returns are sure. Those "banded together in Christian endeavor" will find it helpful, cheering, suggestive, and a reminder of their responsibilities.

Juan and Juanita. By Frances Courtenay Baylor. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] Among the most distinctly interesting stories for children which have been published during the past five years is Miss Frances Courtenay Baylor's Juan and Juanita, which, having run its course in the pages of St. Nicholas, now makes its appearance as a volume with the original illustrations by Henry Sandham. It is the tale of a little Mexican brother and sister, captured during a raid by the Comanches and carried off prisoners, who, after four years of captivity, escape and accomplish the almost incredible feat of finding their way home across three hundred miles of pathless desert and mountain range. The story is full of excitement and hair-breadth escapes, but is most skillfully told; death and danger are looked at as it were through childish eyes, and it is never allowed to become more than delightfully terrible for the youthful reader. We can heartily recommend it as one of the best books and best Christmas presents of the season.

The Brownies: Their Book, by Palmer Cox, is so very happy in its illustrations that children will find it amusing in spite of the rather dull quality of the rhymes. It is a large, square volume, and every page is made comical with pictures of the droll little people employing and amusing themselves in all conceivable ways. [The Century Co. $1.50.]

STORIES AND PICTURES FOR YOUNG READERS.

Babyland is one of the excellent and popular serials published by the D. Lothrop Co. As its title indicates, it is intended for the nursery and for little hands first reaching out after the treasures of literature. The monthly numbers of this magazine for 1887 bind up into an engaging volume of about one hundred pages, full of the very essence of child-life—the child-life of dolls and baby-houses, and chair-horses, and cribs and toys, and tea-sets, whose natural concomitants are kittens and chickens, lambs and puppies. The art-work in this book is ingenious and delicate, the drawing always accurate and good, and the reading matter well adapted to its use. There are few better books to put into the hands of the three and four year olds just learning to read. [75c.]

Of similar origin, like typographical excellence, and kindred spirit, but addressed to an older class of children, is Our Little Ones' Annual. Here we have nearly 400 pages of pictures and stories, the pictures of a high grade of wood-cut work, the stories short but instructive and entertaining, the paper and print all that could be asked for. Considerable thought and ingenuity have gone into the editing of this annual, into the preparation of its reading matter, and especially into the designing of its illustrations. The whole air of the book is one of refinement and good breeding. [Estes & Lauriat.]

Coarse and cheap beside the foregoing is the look of Chatterbox, whose issue for the year holds a prominent place among the issues of each season. But Chatterbox is not to be despised because it is dressed in homespun. Mechanically English books of this class are inferior to the American, but these pictures in Chatterbox have a bigness and a boldness all their own, are uniformly in good taste in their subjects, and the reading matter is unexceptionable. There is much about animals, a liberal sprinkling of anecdotes of courage and heroism, not a little information in history and biography, and the influence of such a book is of the best. [Estes & Lauriat. $1.25.]

Little Wide Awake, Mrs. Sale Barker's English imitation of our American Wide Awake, is not so successful a candidate for the suffrages of children as its famous American namesake. It is inferior to it typographically, and lacks the variety, the vivacity, the brilliancy of that; but it is a wholly respectable magazine, nevertheless, and its numbers for the year make an inviting quarto for young readers just at the threshold of their teens. Mrs. Barker is one of the most competent of purveyors. Some of the pictures are good, but as a rule they are of a second grade, though bearing the names of distinguished artists, however. There is a colored frontispiece after a sketch by Kate Greenaway. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.50.]

Superior in appearance to the foregoing is Sunday Reading for the Young, another English book under an American imprint, with upwards of 240 original illustrations on wood, and a great mass of reading matter in prose and verse, some long, some short, all instinct with a healthy religious feeling. Without any cant this book is thoroughly Christian in a good sense, and its wood-cuts, both in spirit and execution, are above the ordinary English grade as found in books of this class, while many of them are striking and strong. [E. & J. B. Young & Co. $2.00.]

S. P. O. K. BOOKS.

The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge is one of the institutions of London, a sort of religious tract society. Through its New York agents, E. & J. B. Young & Co., we have received a package of its latest publications, all of which are unusually attractive by reason of good paper, clear type, frequent illustrations, and pretty bindings. Certain similarities in these bindings seem to group the books now in hand into sets or series, and in that order we shall proceed to characterize them.

THE CYCLAMEN BOOKS. 2 vols. A Minor Chord, by Niall Herne, is a love story of life in the North of Ireland. Its religious lessons are plain and sweet, but we do not see its adaptation to the young. Perhaps it is intended for the old,

— Two of Them, by an author not named, details the advent of twin boys into a home where they had been adopted but were not welcome, and the softening towards them of an aunt's heart as they grew up. It is brightly written, and the religious lessons are left to be inferred rather than directly taught.

THE BAT BOOKS, as we will designate them, because of the picture on the cover of a bat flying across the face of the moon. 4 vols. The Downward Course, a story of the Ten Commandments, deals with a girl who went from bad to worse and brought up in ruin to the sorrow of all who had to do with her. We prefer to have the upward course set before young people. — In The Black Coppice, a man named Harry Watkyns is found dead with two gun-shot wounds in his chest, and Thomas Lea is tried for the crime, convicted on circumstantial evidence, and transported. But justice is done at last, and sorrow yields its peaceable fruits. — Three Stories for Working Girls are all intended for the reading of homeless and friendless girls of the middle and lower classes, who are exposed to coarse forms of temptation, to walk the streets, drink, etc. — Four Peas in a Pod follows the London life of sisters left behind with friends while their parents were gone to India; an every-day story without any special quality.

THE PEACOCK FEATHER BOOKS. 5 vols., bound in peacock blue, with the feather stamped on the cover. In The Christmas Present a selfish bachelor's quarters and life are invaded by a niece sent unexpectedly to him, to be taken care of, whose simple and artless influence over her uncle illustrates anew how "a little child shall lead them." — The Stories for Sunday Scholars are twenty-two in number, short, spirited, and glowing with the teachings of Bible and Book of Common Prayer. — With Hooks of Steel belongs to the order of religious novels; it is a marine story of love and trial among the islands off the west coast of Scotland, bringing out the strong qualities of the highland character in contrast with the selfishness and superficiality that often underlie "good breeding." — In Foxholt a young lad through whose fault an almost serious accident happens runs away from home, and reaches success only through many vicissitudes. — Mrs. Barth's Girl is named Cappy; she lives with her granny, an old flower woman in London, at whose death she goes to be with Mrs. Barth in the country, with whom she grows up to be a Christian woman devoted to good works.

THE SEA GULL BOOKS. 6 vols., the cover of each stamped with a picture of a flock of gulls hovering over a wave-swept cliff. The Best Book has for its subject the part played by the Bible in some of the famous lives and memorable passages of English history. — A Treasure Lost is a musical story in which a young man, Christopher Stanton, succeeds at last in devoting his life to his beloved art, becomes an organist, loses his situation because he has lost the faith, and recovers the latter only through the bitter discipline of sorrow. — The Goldmakers is metaphorically entitled, there being in it a young man who goes away to Australia and makes the gold that "perisheth," and a young woman who stays at home and by faith and patience makes the gold that "perisheth not," of that kind that is tried in the fire. There is an English seaport in this book, and a wreck, and a foundling, and a decrepit old book-seller, and a weak Molly West, who says yes to two lovers at the same time and gets things into a snarl. — The motive of All is Lost Save Honour, which is wrought out of French materials, is that equity is something more than justice. This truth is taught by means of a story of the restitution of a valuable chateau property which had fallen by will into other hands than those to whom it rightfully belonged. — The story of Rex is that of a boy sent home from India to his aunt's in England, and its chief interest lies in the contrast which his outlandish ways present to the more cultivated customs of his new home. — The hero of Nell's Bondage is a flower girl in London, whose experiences belong to the "seamy side" of life in the great metropolis, and teach her at last after long lessons of trial that the path of true liberty is the way of God's commandments.

Tre, Pol, and Pen is an unintelligible title, which we may explain by saying that these syllables are "short" for Treherne, Polwhele, and Penruddock, three of the leading characters in the book, which is about smugglers, wreckers, and revenue officers on the Cornish coast in the times of Admiral Nelson. How the "Christian Knowledge" comes in we do not see, as the tale is simply one of exploit and adventure.

Several short stories by Mrs. Newman are collected under the title of Her Will and her Way. The title story has to do with an eccentric woman's two wills, and what followed when the second will was discovered to supersede the first. In "Luck," a hapless man dreams that he had committed a theft, and is nearly arrested for doing it. A third is a ghost story. A fourth relates the repudiation of a fortune. A fifth is a story of "Christmas Night."

THE CASTELL CHRISTMAS CARDS.

The Christmas cards published by Castell Brothers, London, which reach this country through the New York agency of E. & J. B. Young & Co., are a new departure in this somewhat hackneyed line, and are capable of reviving interest in what is at its best a sweet and pleasant way of emphasizing the Christmas season. There are eight sets, six cards to a set, of uniform excellence of workmanship and beauty of design, and with certain novelties of effect. The combination is one of verses or texts with pictures in color. The sentiments are always Christian, and there is nothing to jar upon one's tastes and feelings. The series called Dayspring from on High is perhaps the least pleasing of all, the scenes being from the life of Christ, and the gilding and coloring too pronounced to suit us. Winged Words are beautifully colored views of English rural scenery with Bible passages accompanying. The First Christmas Tide consists again of scenes from the Saviour's life, done in a brown tint, delicate, but not so effective as the previous named. In Starlight Chimes we have Alpine landscapes with verses by Rev. Charles Bell. Mispah Messages are very choice, showing long stalks of lilies so as to form a sort of border to verses by Lucy A. Bennett. In Glad Tidings there is the uniform feature of the Star of Bethlehem, enveloped in clouds, shedding its radiance upon lines by Frances Ridley Havergal. We like these less than some of the others. The same judgment we would pass upon Bands of Light, selected lines from George MacDonald's poems, illustrated by wintry scenes in two tints of cool gray. The largest set of all is Chimes from Afar, the subjects of which are the Cathedrals of Mayence, Milan, Dinan, Notre Dame, Tours, and Cologne, with sympathetic verses by Canon Bell. Mechanically all these cards are choice, highly glazed, with beveled and silvered or gilded edges, and the designs are often by eminent artists.

LES MISERABLES.

For many years there has been but a single English translation of Victor Hugo's Les Misérables accessible to American readers. That was C. E. Wilbour's, published by Carleton, and as we remember it there was little about it, either in form or spirit, to attract. The present year has witnessed a remarkable revival in respect of this masterpiece of Hugo's, and no fewer than four editions of the work, one the French original, the other three English reproductions, are now before the public.

The French text bears the imprint of W. R. Jenkins, New York, and is becomingly presented in five volumes of excellent typography and paper covers, the latter of course easily to be displaced by a more permanent binding at the taste of the owner. All who can we advise to read Les Misérables in the original. Victor Hugo is not the most translatable of authors, and a peculiar enjoyment is theirs who can follow him in the sparkling, dramatic, delicate idioms of his own mother tongue. [$4.50.]

For those who are however dependent upon an English translation, the foremost one of the year in form is that of the late Charles Lascelles Wraxall, as presented by George Routledge & Sons, in five large and sumptuous octavo volumes, richly printed and showily illustrated. The name of the translator should have been placed upon the title-page. Wraxall in this work was an almost ideal translator, and he had the assistance of Henri Esquiros, "that great and noble mind," as Victor Hugo called him in a note which is credited in this edition as "From the Translator's Preface," although no hint of Wraxall's connection with it is given. Victor Hugo was singularly fortunate in the men who have turned his epoch-making romances into English. There have been one or two unworthy versions of his works, to be sure, but each of his leading prose writings is now represented by an excellent rendering. Among these Wraxall's translation of Les Misérables is easily the first, and ranks among the foremost of all translations. It is singularly faithful to the idiomatic complexities of the original text and at the same time is expressed in clear-cut, lucid, forceful English, that never jars upon a cultivated sense of style and that always conveys the author's meaning with conspicuous ease and grace. To some persons the highly calendered paper out of which this book is made will not altogether commend itself, but the largeness of the type, the breadth of the margin, the uncut edges, the chaste and simple linen binding with paper labels on the backs, the large, numerous, and creditable wood-cuts in French style, and withal the extremely low price at which the work is offered, have made for it many friends. It certainly is one of the noticeable products of the year, and it is no wonder that the edition was taken up so rapidly as to be now scarce and hard to find. The publication has been taken out of the trade and put into the hands of Messrs. McDonnell Bros. of Chicago. Any ordinary person, once having seen the Routledge edition, will find it hard to be content with any other. [The set, $15.00.]

The same translation—Wraxall's—has been brought out by Little, Brown & Co., in five much smaller volumes, in good type and of handy size, and with sundry improvements of the text by addition of omitted passages, corrections of errors, etc., but without illustrations. If one does not care for the latter, the Little, Brown & Co. edition may well answer his purpose. The look of the pages is inviting, and the binding, lavishly decorated in imitation of fine old tooling, fits the books to take an honorable place on the library shelf. It is not to be disputed that Wraxall's text as extended in this edition is made to come nearer the original French than Routledge's, and if we are going to approach Victor Hugo at all, we want to approach him as close as possible. But for our own selves we like an illustrated Hugo as we do an illustrated Shakespeare. [$7.50.]

This feature of illustrations brings us naturally and finally to speak of the edition of Les Misérables published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., which like the foregoing is in five neat crown 8vo volumes, but which unlike the foregoing has wood-cut illustrations, and which differs from both the foregoing in being an entirely new translation by an American, Miss Isabel F. Hapgood, who has succeeded in making a very literal and at the same time a very readable version—one that is entitled to rank with the best. The type is large and clear, the presswork excellent, the paper of fine quality, the illustrations are worthy representations of French originals, the binding in keeping with the rest. Altogether this edition cannot fail to meet a large want; and in fact between the three it is not exactly easy to choose. Considering the difficulty of now getting hold of Routledge's, most people reading in English, we presume, will be shut up to Little, Brown & Co.'s and Crowell's, and for them the desire or otherwise for pictures will probably be the determining consideration. [$7.50.]

THOSE BOOKS WITH THE EMBOSSED TITLES.

We can think of no better designation than the above for a quartette of curious looking books that come to us from L. Prang & Co., decidedly novel in their externals of shape and binding, and having as a distinguishing feature their titles embossed in a graceful letter upon the cover in what looks like heavy silk embroidery, but which is some new device whose secret it is beyond our power to guess. The books have some other general points of resemblance; three of them are square, knotted at the back with silken cord, and bound in an imitation of finely flowered damask. Within they show much the same artistic taste and beauty, though expending their workmanship on different topics. The Home of Evangeline, an oblong of about the size of an autograph album, consists of a series of eight full-page designs in color, based on originals in water, representing scenes in Longfellow's poem, and accompanied with selected lines therefrom, together with considerably more than that number of subordinate and minor sketches and ornaments in monotint of brown. The Christmas Processional assembles a few verses of simple poetry with corresponding sketches in color, depicting the winter landscape at Christmas time. The cattle which appear in some of these plates are poorly done; the inanimate landscape is always better with suggestions of radiant skies and cheerful interiors. Echoes in Aquarelle from Along Shore are half a dozen Mount Desert views, feelingly and effectively drawn, and reproduced like the others in chromolithography. This we think to be the most attractive number of the series. The way in which the word "Echoes" is treated on the title-page is ingenious and clever. In The Voice of the Grass we find the same unsatisfactory figure work that we have noted above, but the scenery in these half-dozen rural pictures is good. Mr. Louis K. Harlow is the illustrating artist in all of these four books; the letter-press is by various hands. For several reasons they will be sure to attract attention, and in many ways to please.

MINOR NOTICES.

Three Good Giants: Whose Famous Deeds are Recorded in the Ancient Chronicles of François Rabelais. Compiled from the French by John Dimitry, A.M. Illustrated. [Ticknor & Co. $1.50.] Mr. Dimitry has undertaken a daring task and has in the main accomplished it well. Setting aside all theories as to Rabelais, whether he was a great social reformer, or the chief of agnostics, or a humorist pure and simple, we may recognize in his work an element of original romance which is independent of the speculations of commentators. To take this element of romance, as far as it deals with the incomparable trio, Grandgousier, Gargantua, and Pantagruel; to free it from the filth with which, to suit the taste of the Middle Ages, it was originally interlarded; and to present it in readable English—has been Mr. Dimitry's task. He has, as we have said, performed it well, and it may be that the result justifies the means. It is desirable that the world should have some conception of Rabelais's good qualities as well as his bad, and to accomplish this Mr. Dimitry's book is admirably designed. Because a rare and innocuous fruit grows from a dung-hill is no reason, perhaps, why it should not be enjoyed by those who like it and are able to forget in the process of deglutition the circumstances of its unsavory origin. For children we cannot help thinking that the volume before us would have been more suitable if Mr. Dimitry had had the wisdom to omit his prefatory "explanation." The illustrations are imitations by "process" of Doré and Robida.

The Bridal of Triermain. By Sir Walter Scott. With Illustrations by Percy Macquoid, R.I. [Lee & Shepard. $3.50.] Scott's fantastic ballad of The Bridal of Triermain is not one of the most worthy productions of his poetical talent, but such as it is Mr. Macquoid has made good use of it in the fourteen illustrations given in this volume. The volume is an oblong quarto, 13 by 9 1-2 inches, and the photogravure impressions are 8 1-2 by 6 1-4 inches. Mr. Macquoid has treated his theme in an original way, his drawing is excellent, his style free yet careful in the management of detail, his landscapes and interiors full of suggestion, his figures lifelike and well individualized. The costumes—where there are any to speak of—are gracefully designed, and there are indications of archæological research in the representation of armor and details of architecture. In fact, the artist seems to have grasped very thoroughly the Greco-Gothic sentiment which marks the poem and to have reproduced it effectually in these illustrations, which deserve the respectful study due to all earnest, original work. The publishers have done their part admirably as regards paper, typography, and presswork; the binding is a dull gilt, the front cover showing in outline King Arthur blowing the ivory bugle at the gate of the magic castle.

The Story of the American Indian.

The Story of the American Indian. His Origin, Development, Decline, and Destiny. By Elbridge S. Brooks. [D. Lothrop Co. $2.50.]

Mr. Brooks's book is a popular digest of the latest and most comprehensive studies of the Red Man of North America. He gives at the end a list of the best hundred books on the subject, and it is evident at once that he has used these and other authorities with excellent judgment. The volume does not belong to the familiar type of boys' books of adventure among the redskins, but is a thorough compendium of the archæology, history, present standing, and outlook of our nation's wards. It is clearly and concisely written and embodies a vast deal of pertinent information. The future prosperity of the Indians, so far as they can have any, Mr. Brooks finds in education and possession of land in severalty. The author is an earnest friend of the race, and generally sides with them against the white man. There has been enough indeed of undeniable injury wrought by soldiers and agents to excuse some bias in favor of the weaker side. The volume is profusely illustrated, and in every way handsomely gotten up. We commend it as the best comprehensive book on the Indian for general reading known to us. Certainly Mr. Brooks's own list contains nothing better.

A Handy Volume Tennyson.

Tennyson's Complete Works. Handy Volume Edition, 8 vols. [T. Y. Crowell & Co. $6.00.]

In a great many respects this is an attractive and desirable collection of Tennyson's poems. It is fresh. It includes the earlier as well as later writings, and follows the most recent text. The volumes are small, light, clearly printed, very neatly and tastefully bound, and as quiet and chaste in appearance as a Quaker maiden. The order and arrangement of the several volumes, and of their contents, do not seem to us the most natural, though the principle is apparent. It would have added to the reader's satisfaction if the later poems had been dated, and indeed all of them, so far as possible. "Miscellaneous Poems" fill the first two volumes, the "Idylls" a third, "Enoch Arden," "In Memoriam," and other longer poems the fourth and fifth, in a sixth come "Additional and Later Poems," including "Poems by Two Brothers," and the dramatic pieces, in volumes seven and eight, close the series. The set is inclosed in a pretty box, and its price, joined to its other pleasing features, is likely to win for it large popularity.

Knickerbocker Nuggets.

A "nugget," says the dictionary, is "a diminutive mass of precious metal." "Knickerbocker Nuggets" is the collective title given by G. P. Putnam's Sons, proprietors of the Knickerbocker Press, to a series of diminutive masses of precious literary metal, including the following numbers so far issued: Select Tales from the Gesta Romanorum, translated from the Latin by C. Swan; Headlong Hall and Nightmare Abbey, by Thomas Love Peacock; Gulliver's Travels, in two volumes; selected Tales from Irving, two volumes; "The Book of British Ballads," as edited by S. C. Hall; "The Travels of Baron Munchausen," reprinted from the early complete edition; Lord Chesterfield's Letters, Sentences, and Maxims, introduced by Sainte-Beuve's critical essay; and Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield. The third, fourth, sixth, seventh, and ninth volumes are illustrated. The books are small and beautifully made, of a size to fit easily into the pocket, printed in that new font of type of which we have spoken once or twice lately, which is singularly sharp and clear, and bound in a novel and uncommonly tasteful style, so as to fit them to any one's library shelf. The illustrations, some of them ordinary wood-cuts, some outlines, some thumb-nail sketches inserted in the text, some results of mechanical processes, are as dainty as the books themselves.

HOLIDAY MISCELLANIES.

On the Wing. [London: Castell Brothers.] This is a lovely little vade mecum in poetry and color, one page for every day in the month, each page bearing an exquisite vignette and one or two bits of reading matter, the latter sometimes in prose and sometimes in verse. The reading matter is prepared by Lucy A. Bennett, being partly original and partly selected; the designs are by Alice Price and F. Corbyn Price. These are divided between low monotonies and particular colors, and the round corners, burnished edges, and leatherette cover help to make up beauty in its completeness.

Heavenward. [London: Castell Brothers. E. & J. B. Young & Co., N. Y. 50c.] This little "daily food," with its Scripture text and poetical extract for every day in the month, comes to us with the announcement of its having reached its 200th thousand. The extracts are from the poems of Miss Procter and Archbishop Trench; the designs are by Alice and F. Corbyn Price. Two pages are given to each day, the verse being traced within a border all in brown ink on one, and the accompanying vignette in color occupying the other.

The Longfellow Prose Birthday Book. Edited by Laura Winthrop Johnson. [Ticknor & Co. $1.00.] This is a "birthday book" of the ordinary pattern. The selections, however, are from Longfellow's prose writings, not his verse, and show us a different side of the man from that to which we are accustomed. They seem to be taken chiefly if not wholly from his journals, and therefore fit in with peculiar aptness to the structure of a book like this. The thirteen wood-cuts are passable, but not as good as they might be. They depict the houses and landscapes connected with Longfellow's life. The book is prettily made.

The Cotillion Almanac for 1888. [George Routledge & Sons. 25c.] This is a novelty. Each page gives the calendar for a month, and for illustrations we have a snatch of music score at the top and vignettes gay in gilt and colors, the subjects of the latter being drawn from the ball-room. In drawing they are extremely clever, reminding one of Du Maurier's best society work; and a skillful colorist has finished them. For a philopena gift how pretty this would be!

Mr. W. Goodrich Beal's six etchings of Picturesque Cambridge are creditable as etchings, though uneven in quality; but they are not literal and lifelike delineations of Cambridge. "Morning on the River" is not easily recognized; "Longfellow's Home" looks decrepit and shaky, as if the etcher held his tool in a trembling hand; "Cambridge on the Charles" has a single familiar feature, the marked tower of Memorial Hall. The "Corner of Massachusetts Hall" and "Old Churchyard" are excellent bits of work; so is "Evening on the River;" and the view of "Elmwood" is decidedly better than that of the Craigie House. The views are accompanied by a title-page, and neatly enveloped. [L. Prang & Co. $1.50.]

An attractive devotional picture book, with a page of Scripture and of art mixed, for every day in the month, is The Shall Nots of the Bible. Sketches in color from originals in water, vignettes in monochrome after drawings in sepia, and letter-press delicately inscribed in type of different size and style, make up an inviting interior echoing with directing and strengthening voices. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.00.]

Of kindred spirit with the foregoing, but simpler in manner, is Loving Links, a selection of Bible texts, with appropriate and familiar verses of hymns, the whole decorated with tinted borders, and singularly well executed sprays of white flowers and green foliage. This is an exceptionally pure and tasteful book of its kind. [George Routledge & Sons. $1.00.]

Calendars are becoming an old story, but new devices have been hit upon to hold the public interest this year. The Ewing Calendar is the most distinguished looking thus far received, its decoration being a panel of copper bronze in relief, showing a portrait bust of Mrs. Ewing in profile, a view of one of her homes, and emblems of her life and work. The dated leaflets follow the order of the Christian year, and the back-board is so arranged as to hang on the wall or stand on the table, which latter posture its small size would enable it easily to take. [E. & J. B. Young & Co. 75c.]

The Calendrier Français, with its daily sentiments in French, will serve to instruct the students of that language while also admonishing them of the flight of time in English. [Roberts Brothers. $1.00.]

The Holmes and Whittier Calendars are arranged on a new plan: the leaflets being affixed to the back-board in book form, to be turned over instead of torn off, so that at the end of the year you have a permanent collection of excerpts instead of "nothing but leaves." [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Each $1.00.]

Mary Lakeman's story of Faith's Festivals, in its bridal dress of satin paper and white cover stamped in gilt, is a simple record of our human life, with its ups and downs, its sunny childhood, its shadowy noon, its tranquil old age, its trust and hope and peace; sweetly related in tones of joyful Christian confidence, articulated to Christmas and Easter, and celebrating among other things the value and comfort of good books. [Lee & Shepard. $1.00.]

A half-dozen illustrated presentations of popular poems or hymns, which have appeared in various forms the past few years, reappear this fall trimmed down to diminutive quarto size, and richly bound in cloth of old gold, with ornamentations in gilt and brown. The series are Sears's "That Glorious Song of Old," "Gray's Elegy," "The Breaking Waves Dashed High,"

Tennyson's "Ring out, Wild Bells," Domett's "It was the Calm and Silent Night," and Knox's "Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?" The illustrations are dainty and pleasing. [Lee & Shepard. Each 50c.]

THE COUNT OF MONTE-CRISTO.*

WHATEVER analytical criticism may say of the literary methods of the elder Dumas, his magnificent series of romances, from Les Trois Mousquetaires to Le Vicomte de Bragelonne, remains an established fact, and it is difficult to imagine any epoch in the history of civilization when they will not be the delight of multitudes of readers. Alexandre Dumas, with all his charlatanry, held the magician's wand, and evolved from the abodes of imagination and fancy shapes that, whether they inspire pleasure or terror, never fail to fascinate. The reader who surrenders to his spell is for the time being lost to the sensations of every-day life, and in a world of dreams finds nepenthe for all sorrows. Such books arouse and stimulate while they soothe the wearied mind, and what a relief it is to turn from the commonplaces of contemporary realism to revel for a few hours in the fantastic creations of Dumas's fertile brain! They do not grow stale with age. To the man or woman of thirty they are as fresh and enticing as they are to the boy or girl of sixteen. There is much in them that in moments of stern reflection we might wish away; but no healthy mind, we are sure, could be harmed by occasional contact with them. They carry their own antidotes, and one no more looks for a moral from them than from the marvelous tricks of a prestidigitateur. It is permitted sometimes in this valley of sorrows that the children of men shall be children and find amusement in childish things, and when the mood of pure enjoyment is uppermost none minister to it more effectually than the elder Dumas.

Among the mountainous mass of volumes, good, bad and indifferent, upon which Alexandre Dumas stamped his name, The Count of Monte-Cristo still stands in the world's estimation as the supreme efflux of his genius. Its unparalleled audacity of conception, its astonishing versimilitude, its wonderful array of incident, its dramatic force in dialogue, all combine to hold the attention captive. The death of Faria, the escape of Dantès, the night on the barren island, the discovery of the hidden grotto, and the innumerable train of events that follows in the chronicle of implacable hatred and studied revenge—who, having once read, can forget them, or, unforgetting, cares not to read again and again?

The publishers have therefore done well in selecting this book as the subject of an édition de luxe. In many forms has The

* The Count of Monte-Cristo. By Alexandre Dumas. With Illustrations. Five vols. George Routledge & Sons. $15.00.

Count of Monte-Cristo come before readers of English, never in guise so rich and worthy as that now given to it at the Messrs. Routledge's hands. The illustrations, nearly five hundred in number, are fac-similes of those drawn and engraved by Staal, Beauce, Dumont, and other eminent French artists when the work was first published in France almost half a century ago. They are not only remarkable as illustrations and as specimens of a style of engraving deserving artistic perpetuity, but they also afford a generous view of the costumes and manners of the French people during the reign of Louis Philippe. One is brought nearer to the novelist's ideas by seeing his characters depicted as he himself imagined them to be in outer aspect. In mechanical execution this edition leaves nothing to be desired. It has been printed at the De Vinne Press on heavy, polished, plate paper, is bound in five thin quarto volumes of 330 pages each, the cover being of plain green cloth with a simple paper label. The translation is smooth, grammatical, and sufficiently faithful. Could the most exacting admirer of Dumas ask for more?

The Literary World.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 26, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

. The Longfellow memorial directors at the last meeting voted, in accordance with the wishes of the donors of the "garden," not to place a statue or monument there; although it is possible that they may ultimately erect a small fire-proof building in the rear part of the garden to receive manuscript and other memorials of him. The Longfellow heirs have recently given to the Memorial Association the strip of marsh land between the proposed garden and the river, across Mount Auburn Street, which secures the open view forever.

. We regret that in our notice of the late Mrs. Mulock-Craik, two weeks since, we were misled by what we supposed to be accurate and trustworthy information, into saying that her husband was not living. We are assured by one who knows that he is living, and is an active partner in the London house of Macmillan & Co. An excellent sketch of Mrs. Craik, by Mr. Bunker, accompanied by a most pleasing portrait, appeared in a late number of Harper's Bazar.

MINISTER WASHBURNE'S RECOLLECTIONS.*

IN these Recollections of the late Minister Washburne, we readily find the best general history of that momentous period covering the Franco-German war and the Commune thus far put into print. The author had unequalled facilities for observation.

Recollections of a Minister to France, 1869-1877.* By E. B. Washburne, LL. D. Two vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $3.00.

He was thrown constantly into relations with the leading officials of the various governments that administered the affairs of France; he had the respect of the populace; he enjoyed the confidence of the German government, and to him was intrusted the protection of German citizens remaining in Paris through the siege. Of all that he saw and heard he writes with the utmost impartiality. Frenchmen will read his chronicle with admiration, and Germans will recognize its just and friendly spirit to the combatants on both sides. Writing as a contemporary, Mr. Washburne by the peculiar traits of a judicial temperament attained without effort the dispassionate attitude of the historian. His condemnation of unworthy political methods, his praise of noble statesmanship, his appreciation of bravery in the field, his sympathy for suffering, his efforts to mitigate the barbarism of war and insurrection, were all inspired by motives that took no account of race or caste. His style is simple and straightforward; not altogether classical in point of syntax, but never obscure, verbose, or pretentious. The natural dignity and impressiveness of a sincere, energetic character are behind the words of the writer. It is almost as if another Franklin were recording memories of later days in the brilliant, stormy, turbulent, fascinating, terrible Paris of Napoleon III and the Commune.

The narrative is notably dramatic. When Mr. Washburne arrived at the French capital on the 12th of May, 1869, he found the glittering splendor of courtly rule dazzling all eyes with its unsubstantial glory. The war-cloud that had just before appeared above the horizon had momentarily vanished and all classes gave themselves over to the enjoyment of luxurious ease. Mr. Washburne's official duties were devoted largely to court presentations and presence at imperial fêtes. An interval of leisure took him to Carlsbad, and there on the 15th of July, 1870, came the news, "like a clap of thunder in a cloudless sky," that France had declared war against Germany. Mr. Washburne hurried back to Paris and found responsibilities of great moment awaiting him. Upon him devolved the care not only of the large American colony, but also, by request of the German government, of all subjects of the North German Confederation then residing in France. It is enough to say here that he discharged the duties in question with a zeal and fidelity that won the friendship of the French, and obtained from Berlin tokens of cordial appreciation.

But it is not the record of personal deeds, modest and commendable as that record is, which will attract the majority of readers to these two volumes. What an era, what events, does it not portray! First a visit to the imperial palace at Compiègne, and a New Year's ball at the Tuileries; then the effects of the sudden declaration of war, the condition of Paris as long-suppressed news of the first French defeats became known; the proclamation of the republic, the flight of the Empress, the closing of the city gates, the progress of the siege, the bombardment, the armistice, the triumphant entry of the Prussian army; then, in swift succession, the election of Thiers as chief of the executive power, the evacuation, the outburst of the Commune, the reign of anarchy and terrorism, the struggles at the barricades and the final suppression of the insurrection, the confirmation of the republic, the overthrow of Thiers, the election of MacMahon, the downfall of the Simon Ministry, and Thiers's death.

All of these events Mr. Washburne describes with circumstantial touches that render his narrative invaluable, and with the veracity of an unprejudiced eye-witness. His comments on men and affairs are always sagacious, and he throws many side-lights upon the progress of the times and affords significant means of insight to the ruling motives of those who successively controlled the administration of France during the period under his observation. It is, therefore, only fair to say that Mr. Washburne's Recollections, adorned with many fine portraits, fac-similes of important documents, and illustrations of historical scenes, cannot fail to be regarded as an important contribution not only to history, but to general literature.

A STUDY OF RURAL LIFE IN ENGLAND.*

REV. DR. JESSOPP prefixes to these delightful papers, for the most part reprinted from the Nineteenth Century, a brief preface addressed to his American readers, in which he assures us that though baffled in this life in his strong desire to visit our country, he intends after death "to hover over and haunt America, and bid my spirit dwell for a season there and see how my brethren fare." Such a compliment as this ought to procure for the genial author many a reader among us, but his volume needs no recommendation beyond its own merits.

Settled over a country parish in Norfolk, as a young man, and spending seven years there, Rev. Dr. Jessopp returned to the same district after twenty-five years' activity in the city. His first essay treats of this return to Arcady, and how he found things there. The face of the country had greatly changed through the inclosure of common lands, and the disappearance of many small farms, whose owners had emigrated, driven out before the incoming tide of capitalists. The wages of the laborer had risen, "and his luxuries have multiplied surprisingly." With one great and notable exception his condition we find to be greatly improved, not only when we go back to the Arcady of our Grandfathers (the subject of the second paper), but even as compared with his lot a quarter of a century back. The shameful exception is the houses in which the majority of the agricultural laborers are compelled to live. These are ten times worse than they were.

*Arcady for Better, for Worse. A Study of Rural Life in England. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75.

Let a man of fifty ride five miles in any direction from his own door in some of the most carefully tilled counties of England, and he must be fortunate in his surroundings if he can find ten laborers' cottages with three sleeping-rooms that have been built since he arrived at manhood.

Old tumble-down shanties, with one sleeping-room for the parents, and but one other for all the children, of whatever age or sex, where they sleep in shameless promiscuity, are the rule. Most of these are the property of small proprietors, and this fact makes a reform all the more difficult.

Of the people of Arcady, ignorant, superstitious, parochial to the last degree, Dr. Jessopp draws a picture from his own experience which is minute, sympathetic, and extremely fascinating to any student of men as they are. A rippling humor plays over the description of the saddest scenes, and lightens the burden which must have weighed upon this warm-hearted shepherd of Arcady, as he went about doing good among these little ones. Happy was the fortune of the East Anglian parishioner who in his earlier and his later life enjoyed the ministrations of such a generous nature. The Arcadian swain in Norfolk has no amusements to speak of; he has no politics, and the limit of his sympathies is fixed by the parish line, though the next parish church be but a mile away! The clouds over Arcady are many, and one of them is the elementary education given in many schools, where grammar is a favorite, because a financially profitable study. "Little girl," said Dr. Jessopp at an examination in one of these schools where history was neglected, "what do you know of Admiral Nelson?" "Please sir, we only do nouns and adjectives. We have not got into verbs." Matching well with this story is another of an old man who said he had never been drunk enough to be "converted," his notion of conversion being that it was a synonym for delirium tremens!

But "the coppers ain't all tails" in Arcady. Dr. Jessopp has great faith in the small farmers, whom he holds to be the very salt of English earth. In the paper on "The Little Ones and the Land" he pleads their cause, and rejects ambitious theories which have the faintest possible connection with the facts of land-holding as he knows them. The whole book is most interesting and profitable for the student of social forces, while its kindly humor will fasten the attention of those who know English country life only through novels. Few modern English novels, indeed, can rival the wealth of apt description and amusing anecdote which Dr. Jessopp sets before us in Arcady.

MAX MÜLLER'S SCIENCE OF THOUGHT.*

PROFESSOR MAX MÜLLER'S metaphysical treatise affords a new proof that his strength lies in the exposition of established truths, rather than in the discovery of new ones. These two volumes are full of valuable matter drawn from the field of comparative philology, in which he is an acknowledged master, all of which is marshaled forth to prove that there is no reason without language, that we think and must think, in words, and that therefore the history of language is the history of human thought. Nominism is the name for this theory, which Prof. Müller considers most appropriate.

"There is no such thing," he says, stating the outcome of the theory, "as intellect, understanding, mind, and reason, but all these are only different aspects of language." This is a sufficiently surprising position for any thinker to assume; but Professor Müller at once takes most of the offense away by adding that, at the same time, he is aware he is only substituting a new and more correct list of names for the actual powers, the existence of which he does not at all question. "No language without reason" is the other member of his argument. How this is reconcilable with the first member, "No reason without language," he quite fails to show. Under any theory of the evolution of language, of reason, or of man (and Professor Müller claims always to have been an evolutionist, though never a Darwinian), language must have preceded reason, or reason language. That language is a development conditioned by, and afterwards conditioning, the growth of reason is an undoubted fact; that after many generations of speech-uttering men have come and gone, we now think almost entirely in words, from the beginning of our conscious mental life, is another fact admitting question as little. But Professor Müller simply causes a hopeless muddle in our notions by claiming everything for language as the originating cause of reason. Sometimes he means by language articulated words; sometimes words only thought to be uttered, or imagined; at other times it is the faculty, or power, of uttering articulated sounds. This confusion is as troublesome as his defiance of all distinctions of time in his cardinal couplet of propositions. The fundamental contention of the book, that we cannot think without words, oversteps the limits respected by nearly all psychologists. It appears to us much such an exaggeration as Professor Müller's well-known fancy that all mythology is a "disease of language;" the theory explains some facts of mythology, but as a complete explanation nothing could well be more inadequate.

It is not surprising that, in carrying his theory of the dependence of reason upon language to such an extreme, Professor Müller ridicules, under the name of "Menagerie Psychology," all researches into the mental phenomena manifested by animals, asserting that it is all guess-work. None the less does he calmly attribute to smell in the dog the actions which seem to people in general most indicative of intelligence, and deny to the whole brute creation the possession of any kind of language. This would show that Professor Müller knows all about it!

A considerable number of pages are devoted to the refutation of Darwinism, as to which the author makes the vulgar mistake that Darwin traced the descent of mankind from existing species of monkeys. Indeed, any reasoned-out theory of evolution would be inconsistent with Professor Müller's own hypothesis of the utter dependence of thought on language. No studies are more indispensable toward the understanding of the evolution of mind in the race than the "Menagerie Psychology" and the "Nursery Psychology," for which the author has so much disdain. Professor Müller's "Monon," again, which he would substitute for "Mind," is at least as mythological as he declares the latter to be.

For Professor Müller's thesis and for much of his confused argument we cannot confess any high admiration. But no one who has read his previous works on language will miss here the charm of style and the abundance of illustration which make his writings so justly popular. More severe in its argument than most of his former books, this work cannot attract so large an audience; but the author is certainly in error when he thinks that there can be but few to whom this book is likely to be of much interest. It is of great interest to students of language and of psychology, and it must be of great profit to all who can avoid conversion to the extreme one-sidedness of the theory here set forth, which makes language the creator of reason, instead of being, as it is, the most shining example of the creative force of reason, and, consequently, the most efficient and now indispensable servant of the human intellect.

HOMER AND CICERO.

Homer's Iliad, Books I-III. Edited from the German edition of Ameis and Hentze, by Prof. T. D. Seymour. With map of Homeric Greece, after Kiepert. [Ginn & Co.] It would be difficult to suggest any improvement in this admirable edition. The book includes the part of the Iliad usually required for college, is of convenient size, neatly bound, printed on pleasantly tinted paper, with the Greek text in large, clear type and the notes conveniently placed below upon the same pages. The text is that of

* The Science of Thought. By F. Max Müller. Two vols. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

Dindorf (Leipzig, 1884). The notes, of the usual explanatory character, are stated to be designed "not to usurp the teacher's functions, but to aid him in doing scholarly work;" and are interspersed with illustrations of suggested passages from the Old Testament, Virgil, and Milton, with the view of associating in the learner's mind the great epic poems of Greece and Rome and stimulating him to recall comparisons in his own language. The book is further enriched by an appendix containing a list of extant manuscripts and of editions of Homer, a bibliography of works auxiliary to the study of his poems, and sundry critical matters thought not in place in the exegetical notes, and finally by a Greek and an English index.

M. Tulli Ciceronis Cato Maior et Laelius. Edited by Austin Stickney, A.M. [Harper & Brothers.] The editor discusses in an introduction the probable time of the composition of these interesting treatises, best known in English as that on old age, and that on friendship, as compared with some other works by Cicero, the known Latin manuscripts, and some further matters, and gives an abstract of the line of thought in each essay. The Latin text is stated to be substantially that of C. F. W. Müller, Leipzig, in which that editor endeavored to give the orthography most usual in the time of Cicero. In composition of the notes, occupying a little more than half the bulk of the volume, Prof. Stickney acknowledges obligations to editors who have preceded him. We find the notes judicious, and observe that they aim rather to explain allusions and peculiar grammatical constructions than to assist frequently in translation. A few references are made to Allen and Greenough's and Harkness's grammars. The index refers to both text and notes. The type and paper are pleasing to the eye.

THE BIRDS OF NORTH AMERICA.

A Manual of North American Birds. By Robert Ridgway. Illustrated. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $7.50.]

This large octavo of many hundred pages furnishes a carefully descriptive list of all known North American birds, based upon the unrivaled collection in the National Museum at Washington. In classification, nomenclature, and numeration the plan of the work corresponds to the "Check List of American Birds," published last year by the American Ornithologists' Union. Nothing is intentionally omitted which is requisite to determine the character of a given specimen, and particulars of the environment of each are included. For example (p. 453):

FAMILY TANAGRIDÆ. THE TANAGERS.

GENUS EUPHONIA DESMAREST.

Species.

Adult male: Top of head and hind neck uniform bright blue; forehead dark rusty or chestnut, margined behind by black; rest of head and neck, with upper parts generally, uniform glossy blue-black, inclining to purplish steel-blue; lower parts (except chin and throat) plain orange-rapous. Adult female: Top of head colored as in the male; upper parts olive green, lower parts, including chin and throat, paler and more yellowish olive green. Length about 4.70, wing 2.75, tail 1.80. Eggs "creamy white, with a few scattered spots and blotches, principally at the larger end, of two shades of brown." (SCLATER) Hab. Eastern Mexico and Central America, south to Veragua; north to southern Texas.

606. E. ELEGANTISSIMA (Bonap.) BLUE-HEADED EUPHONIA.

The 594 pages of text which thus daguerreotype the birds of our continent are supplemented by 37 pp. of index, and these by no fewer than 124 beautifully engraved plates containing 464 outline drawings of feet, wings, beaks, claws, feathers, and other members, for better identification.

Key to North American Birds. By Elliott Coues. Third Edition. Profusely illustrated. [Estes & Lauriat. $7.50.]

Dr. Coues's work, now presented in a third and variously improved edition, has a wider scope than Mr. Ridgway's, and is, perhaps, less technical in the same field, while at the same time introducing considerable additional matter fitted to enliven the interest of it and adapt it to that popular use which it seeks to promote. Dr. Coues would train the ornithologist, Mr. Ridgway would simply serve him after he is trained. Mr. Ridgway's book is a splendid and beautifully finished tool; Dr. Coues's is the tool with instructions how to handle it, and encouragement thereto. Mr. Ridgway plunges abruptly into his learned catalogue; Dr. Coues uses his first fifty pages or so with full directions on the collection of birds and birdskins, beginning even with the choice of a gun; and then spends nearly 200 pages more on an exposition of the general features of ornithological science, such as the structure of birds, their classification and distribution. Not till p. 238 does he enter on the descriptive catalogue proper, of which there are nearly 600 pages in all, with an appended synopsis of fossil birds and an index. The illustrations here are scattered through the text. The proficient ornithologist cannot do without Mr. Ridgway's manual; the amateur will find Dr. Coues's more useful.

MINOR NOTICES.

A Manual of the Prayer-Book.

A Manual of the Book of Common Prayer. By the Rev. Charles Hale. [Thomas Whittaker. 75c.]

This is an English Church clergyman's commentary on the English Book of Common Prayer, but with trifling changes and additions it would answer equally well for the American Book of Common Prayer, and for popular use it is by far the best manual of its kind we know of. Of course it does not compare with such ponderous and learned treatises as Blunt's, for example, but it is difficult to see how, within the compass of 275 16mo pages, more could have been said or better said for the instruction of those people who want to have the history of the Prayer-Book as a whole and in its parts, an analysis of its structure, an exposition of its meaning and purposes, and a clear and satisfying setting forth of all the historical secrets and spiritual beauties which are hidden away in its venerable and valued pages. Less scholastic than Proctor and more specific than Bainbridge, it is in almost every respect a model of what such a manual should be. Five chapters trace the growth of liturgical forms of worship from primitive times, two more narrate the story of prayer-book reform in England, and then the book itself is taken up, taken to pieces and examined critically, piece by piece, first the morning and evening prayers, then the Te Deum, then the litany, then the creed, and then in turn the chief days of the Christian year, the collects, epistles, and gospels therefrom, the forms of the administration of the sacraments, the occasional offices, and the three ordination services. An edition of this book ought to be published under the editorship of the Rev. Wm. R. Huntington, D.D., or some other competent person, adapted precisely to American use.

How I was Educated.

The "How I was Educated" Papers, from the Forum Magazine. [D. Appleton & Co. 30c.]

A delightful "experience meeting" is reported in these eleven papers by men who have been all their lives prominent in educational work. They are full of suggestive hints, and one reads them with undivided interest. Perhaps the most noteworthy thing about them is the agreement of all with regard to the futility of mere scholasticism. "My experience with schools and with the college teaches me to distrust all the mechanisms of education," says Dr. Hale. "When I finally parted company with the University, I had made the discovery that my education was just beginning," is Mr. Higginson's conclusion. President Barnard remembers with gratitude his voluntary apprenticeship in a printer's office, and asserts that "a man's education must be mainly his own work." Chancellor Vincent did not have a college training. "I am at school now as a student every day," is his closing remark. "All higher education is essentially self-education," Prof. W. T. Harris decides. "Teachers do not make the scholars. The impulse comes chiefly from within." President Kendrick maintains that his real education began only when he entered the ministry. President Dwight dwells upon "the importance of the family life in giving the impulse to intellectual growth." President Robinson says: "To the teachers into whose hands I fell during the first sixteen years of my life I find it impossible to be grateful." President Angell got the best part of his early education in a college library and a newspaper office. President White began "the most real part" of his education when he entered upon the duties of a college professorship. The whole series ought to be read by every educator and by parents who would have a proper understanding of what true education is. Teachers and text-books are not decried; the leading idea of all the men who have spoken in these papers is the importance of developing the inner impulse toward the acquirement of knowledge, and the inestimable value of association with strong, vigorous, stimulating minds.

An English Masterpiece Course.

English Masterpiece Course. By Alfred H. Welsh. [John C. Buckbee & Co. 90c.]

Mr. Welsh's book, in spite of its ambitious title, is nothing more than a simple reference guide to contemporary criticism of leading English and American authors from Chaucer to Tennyson. Most of the references are to periodicals. The material is classified by periods, and each period has references to a score or so of articles dealing with the general course of literature at that time. Mr. Welsh has the schoolmaster's devotion to cut-and-dried methods, and he lays down exact rules for the students who use this handbook. They are to give the "masterpiece" under consideration a careful persual, they are to consult the authorities enumerated, they are then to make "an essay-statement of results," and "a written critique and an oral discussion" is to follow in the classroom. There seems to be nothing novel about this plan (Mr. Welsh calls it the "seminary plan"); and about all one can say for the book is that it supplies the indolent or hurried student with useful data and thus obviates the necessity for independent research. As for Mr. Welsh's hysterical introduction, the least said the better. It begins with the assertion that "through all the kingdoms of organic and inorganic being is the unity of the persistent, illimitable Essence." It goes on to say that "the mighty voices of earth thunder through the dome of fame the truth that there is no excellence without determined, sober continuity of meditation and toil." It closes with the suggestion that "the true mission of criticism is to shake the branches of the tree of genius." With the aid of Mr. Welsh's book there is no perceptible reason why any one should not become an accomplished genius-shaker. After he has crammed himself with all the conflicting authorities cited he ought to be prepared to formulate second-hand opinions with the utmost facility. Meanwhile let us say for his benefit that if he wishes to know anything of English literature he would better begin with reading English literature—and not with a Masterpiece Course of opinions about what English literature is, is not, or ought to be.

From the Publication Department of the National School of Elocution and Oratory in Philadelphia come a handful of books, large and small, collecting a varied assortment of selections in prose and verse for readings and recitations. A fifth volume of Best Things comprises Nos. 13, 14, and 15 of the Elocutionist's Annual, consisting of upwards of 200 extracts from English and American writers, grave and gay. Such insertions as that of "The Widow Cumiskey" compel us to say that the contents are not always most refined and in the best taste. The crediting of "God's Anvil" on p. 111 to Bishop Doane forces us to add that the editing is not always accurate, since Bishop Doane is not the author but only the translator of this impressive hymn, the original of which is German. [$1.50.]—The component thirds of the foregoing volume can be had separately in paper, at 30c. each.—Choice Dialect for Reading and Recitation is a similar collection in paper covers, made up wholly out of the materials which its title suggests. [30c.]—Holiday Entertainments furnishes dialogues related to Christmas. [Paper. 30c.]—The Child's Own Speaker consists of short and simple pieces adapted to the youngest readers. Paper. 15c.]

NEWS AND NOTES.

—James Russell Lowell will contribute a paper on Walter Savage Landor to the Century. It will be accompanied with a number of unpublished letters by Landor.

—Cassell & Co. announce that they will hereafter publish The Woman's World, a magazine edited by Oscar Wilde, in this country as well as in England.

—Lucy C. Lillie gives some personal reminiscences of Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt in the December Lippincott's,

—The Christmas Scribner's will contain a posthumous essay by the late E. P. Whipple, entitled "In Dickens Land."

—Mr. Ivan Panin, a recent graduate of Harvard, is delivering at the Hawthorne Rooms on Wednesday afternoons a course of six lectures on Russian literature, embracing separate discourses on "Pushkin," "Gogol," "Turgenev," "Tolstoy the Writer," and "Tolstoy the Preacher." Mr. Panin's introductory lecture on "The Literary Period, 1800 to 1880," displayed breadth of view and vigor of thought.

—The publishers of Mrs. Burnett's Little Lord Fauntleroy are now printing the 40th thousand of that charming story.

—A new collection of stories by Joel Chandler Harris is announced by the Scribners. Its title is Free Joe, and Other Georgian Sketches.

—The Atlantic Monthly is to publish during 1888 "The Aspen Papers," a story in three parts, by Henry James, and a serial story, "Reaping the Whirlwind," by Charles Egbert Craddock. The January number of the Atlantic will have a portrait of Miss Murfree, engraved on steel.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. announce for early publication translations of The Vagrant, and Other Tales, by Vladimir Karolénko, and A Russian Proprietor, and Other Stories, by Count L. N. Tolstoi. Karolénko belongs to the younger generation of Russian writers and is an uncompromising realist. He is thirty-four years old, was for three years an exile in Siberia, and has only within two or three years risen to fame as a novelist.

—Patriotic Addresses, a collection of public speeches by Henry Ward Beecher, from 1850 to 1885, and a new edition of Wagner's Epics and Romances of the Middle Ages, are announced by Fords, Howard & Hulbert, New York.

—Ginn & Co. will have ready, December 1, Washington and his Country, being Irving's Life of Washington, abridged, supplemented, and continued by John Fiske.

—The writers represented in the Christmas number of Harper's Magazine are T. B. Aldrich, W. D. Howells, Amelia Rives, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Charles Egbert Craddock, Frances Courtenay Baylor, Captain Charles King, George F. Kunz, F. W. Burbidge, Will Carleton, Harriet Lewis Bradley, Andrew Lang, William Black, George William Curtis, Charles Dudley Warner, Mark Twain, and Edward Everett Hale. The chief artists are E. A. Abbey, Alfred Parsons, Frederick Dielman, C. S. Reinhart, A. B. Frost, Gilbert Gaul, R. F. Zogbaum, and Frederick Barnard.

—Mr. F. Blake Crofton, one of the librarians of the Provincial library of Halifax, N. S., recently read a paper on "Sam Slick" before the Historical Society of that city. This paper he is preparing to supplement with another on Judge Haliburton's merits, faults, and peculiarities as a writer, his opinions, humor, the effect of the latter on American humor, and the various qualities of his style. It is understood that Mr. Crofton will take the ground that, if not one of the very greatest writers of the century (certain slovenly faults being produced by his unstimulating and uncritical environment), Judge Haliburton was one of the very greatest thinkers and observers.

—The following is reprinted from our issue of November 12, as in the hurry of going to press it was sadly mixed up:

America has no more devoted adherent to the cause of international copyright than Mr. Thomas Niles, of Roberts Brothers (stat nominis umbra), whose relations with leading English authors are of the most friendly character. Mr. Niles has for a long time had printed at the head of the note paper used in correspondence of the firm the following passage from a speech by Charles Dickens:

There must be an international copyright arrangement. England has done her part, and I am confident the time is not far distant when America will do hers. It becomes the character of a great country, firstly, because it is justice; secondly, because without it you never can have and keep a literature of your own.

Few probably would be able to trace this forcible passage to its source. It was uttered on the occasion of Dickens's first visit to Boston in 1842, and the place was "Papanti's," where were gathered all the representatives of Boston wealth and culture to do him honor. This speech was the "first shot" fired in the copyright controversy, and through Mr. Niles's persistent propulsion it may be said literally to have been "heard round the world." Let us hope the time is "not far distant" when it will have accomplished its mission.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

- STUDIES IN NAVAL HISTORY. Biographies. By John Knox Laughton. Longmans, Green & Co. $3.50
SOME ITALIAN AUTHORS, AND THEIR WORKS. By Geo. E. Vincent. D. Lothrop Co. 60c.
RICHARD LEPsius. By Georg Ebers. Tr. from the German by Zoe Dana Underhill. W. S. Gottsberger.
ROYAL GIRLS. By M. E. W. Sherwood. Ill. D. Lothrop Co. $1.25
LIFE OF WASHINGTON. By Virginia F. Townsend. The Worthington Co. $1.25

Essays and Sketches.

- THE STORY OF SOME FAMOUS BOOKS. By Frederick Saunders. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.25
WINTER: From the Journal of Henry D. Thoreau. Edited by H. G. O. Blake. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50
DE OMNIBUS REBUS. By the author of "Flemish Interiors." Illustrated by R. Caulfield Orpen. London: John C. Nimmo.

Fiction.

- THE STORY OF AN ENTHUSIAST TOLD BY HIMSELF. By Mrs. C. V. Jamison. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
DAMEN'S GHOST. By Edwin Lasseter Bynner. Ticknor & Co.'s Paper Series. 50c.
PINE AND PALM. By M. D. Conway. Henry Holt & Co. $1.00
NARKA, THE NIHILIST. By Kathleen O'Meara. Harper & Brothers. $1.00
CAPTAIN MACDONALD'S DAUGHTER. By Archibald Campbell. Harper & Brothers.
PARADISE. By Lloyd S. Bryce. Funk & Wagnalls.
FOR HER DAILY BREAD. By Litere. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
AN AMERICAN PENMAN. From the Diary of Inspector Byrnes. By Julia Hawthorne. Cassell & Co. $1.00
MISS CURTIS. A Sketch. By Kate Gannett Wells. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
THE CITY OF SARRAS. By U. Ashworth Taylor. H. Holt & Co. $1.00
A MIDSHIPMAN AT LARGE. By Charles Remington Talbot. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50
STRANGE CASE OF DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
IN THRALDOM. A Psychological Romance. By Leon Mead. Fireside Series, No. 33. J. S. Ogilvie & Co. Paper, 25c.
THE FLAG ON THE MILL. By Mary B. Sleight. Funk & Wagnalls. $1.50

History.

- A HISTORY OF THE INQUISITION OF THE MIDDLE AGES. By Henry C. Lea. In 3 vols. Vol. I. Harper & Brothers.
CA IRAL or, Danton in the French Revolution. By Laurence Gronlund. Lee & Shepard. $1.25
PIONEERS OF FRANCE IN THE NEW WORLD. By Francis Parkman. 25th edition. Revised. Little, Brown & Co.
ANNALS OF THE ENGLISH STAGE. From Thomas Betterton to Edmund Kean. By Dr. Doran. Edited and revised by R. W. Lowe. Illus. 3 vols. London: John C. Nimmo.

Holiday Publications.

- OLD FOLKS AT HOME. Written and Composed by Stephen C. Foster. Illus. Ticknor & Co. $1.50
- OLD HOMESTEAD POEMS. By Wallace Bruce. Illus. Harper & Brothers. $2.00
- POEMS IN COLOR. I Remember, from Hood; Sea Pictures, from Tennyson; Worship of Nature, from Whittier; To a Water Fowl, from Bryant; Sunrise on the Hills, from Longfellow; To a Mountain Daisy, from Burns. T. Y. Crowell & Co. The set, $3.00
- THE SONG OF THE BELL. By F. Schiller. Translated by U. W. Cutter. D. Lothrop Co. $2.00
- SONG OF THE RIVER. By Charles Kingsley. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $1.50
- BALLADS OF ROMANCE AND HISTORY. By Susan Coolidge and eleven others. Illustrations by George Foster Barnes and four others. D. Lothrop Co.
- THE BROOK. By Alfred Lord Tennyson. Illustrations by A. Woodruff. Macmillan & Co. 75c.
- FAUST. The Legend and the Poem. By William S. Walsh. With etchings by Hermann Faber. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00
- HEROIC BALLADS. Selected by the editor of "Quiet Hours." Illus. Roberts Bros. $3.00
- THE VOICE OF THE GRASS. By Sarah Roberts. Illustrations by Louis K. Harlow. L. Prang & Co. $3.50
- A GAY DAY FOR 7. By Mrs. Rose Mueller Sprague. L. Prang & Co. $2.00
- PICTURESQUE CAMBRIDGE. Six Etchings by W. Goodrich Beal. L. Prang & Co. $1.50
- LOVING LINKS. A Selection of Scripture Texts with Appropriate Verses by Various Authors. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.00
- THE "SHALL NOTS" OF THE BIBLE. By F. C. Marsh. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.00
- ON THE TRACK OF ULYSSES; together with an Excursion in Quest of the So-called Venus of Milos. Two Studies in Archaeology made during a cruise among the Greek Islands. By W. J. Stillman. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00
- FAITH'S FESTIVALS. By Mary Lakeman. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
- THE CHRISTMAS PROFESSIONAL. By "Tertius." Illustrated by Louis K. Harlow. L. Prang & Co. $2.50
- THE HOME OF EVANGELINE. Illustrations by Louis K. Harlow. L. Prang & Co. $2.50
- ECHOES IN AQUARELLE FROM ALONG SHORE. Illustrations by Louis K. Harlow. L. Prang & Co. $2.50
- THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN. By Sir Walter Scott. With Fourteen Illustrations by Percy Macquoid, R.I. Lee & Shepard. $3.50

Juveniles.

- THE LOOK-ABOUT CLUB, AND THE CURIOUS LIVE THINGS THEY FOUND. By Mary E. Bamford. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50
- HIS LITTLE ROYAL HIGHNESS. By Ruth Ogden. Illustrated by W. Kainey. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00
- QUEEN OF THE MEADOW. By Robert Ellice Mack. Illustrated by Harriett M. Bennett. E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.00
- TWELVE TIMES ONE. Illustrations of Child Life, Designed in Water Colors by Mary A. Lathbury. With Descriptive Poems. Worthington Co. $1.75
- SUNNY CHILDHOOD. By Mrs. Sale Barker. With Colored Illustrations by S. McCloy. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.50
- GRITLI'S CHILDREN. Translated from the German of Johanna Spyri by Louise Brooks. 2 vols. in 1. Cupples & Hurd. $1.50
- JAPPY-CHAPPY, AND HOW HE LOVED A DOLLIE. Told and Illustrated by E. L. Shute. Frederick Warne & Co. 50c.
- HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE. 1887. Harper & Brothers. $3.50
- ZIGZAG JOURNEYS IN INDIA; or, The Antipodes of the Far East. A Collection of the Zenana Tales. By Hezekiah Butterworth. Illus. Estes & Lauriat. $1.75
- IN THE HOSPITAL AT ELMRIDGE. By Ella Rodman Church. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
- SUNDAY EVENINGS AT ELMRIDGE. By Ella Rodman Church. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
- ROBINSON CRUSOE. His Life and Adventures. Illus. Frederick Warne & Co. 75c.
- YOUNG ENGLAND'S NURSERY RHYMES. Illustrated by Constance Haslewood. Frederick Warne & Co. 75c.
- POOR JACK. By Captain Marryat. Illus. Frederick Warne & Co. $2.00
- THE ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. A new edition, revised, with notes, by the Rev. Geo. Fyler Townsend. Illus. Frederick Warne & Co. $3.00
- BROKEN PITCHERS. By Mrs. A. K. Dunning. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
- RESCUED FROM THE STREETS. By Margaret E. Winslow. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
- SOME OF OUR FELLOWS. By the Rev. T. S. Millington. Illus. Roberts Bros. $2.00
- CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN. Rob Roy. By Sir Walter Scott. With Notes and Glossary. Ginn & Co. 70c.
- SERMONS FOR CHILDREN PREACHED IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00

- BOYS AND MASTERS. A Story of School Life. By A. H. Gilkes. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25
- STORIED HOLIDAYS. By E. S. Brooks. Illustrated. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50
- A PROMISE KEPT. By Mary E. Palgrave. Illustrated. Thomas Whittaker.
- THE NORTHERN CROSS; or, Randolph's Last Year at the Boston Latin School. By Willis Boyd Allen. D. Lothrop Co. $1.00

Poetry.

- LYRICS, IDYLS, AND ROMANCES FROM THE POETIC AND DRAMATIC WORKS OF ROBERT BROWNING. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00
- THE SENTENCE. A Drama. By Augustus Webster. Scribner & Welford.
- TRANSLATIONS FROM THE POEMS OF VICTOR HUGO. By Henry Carrington. 2d edition. Thomas Whittaker.
- BIRD-TALK. A Calendar of the Orchard and the Wildwood. By Adeline D. T. Whitney. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00
- LYRICS AND SONNETS. By Edith M. Thomas. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
- THE DEATH OF ROLAND. An Epic Poem. By John Frederick Rowbotham. London: Trübner & Co.

Science and Philosophy.

- STUDIES IN CIVIL GOVERNMENT. By Wm. A. Mowty. Silver, Rogers & Co.
- BIG WAGES, AND HOW TO EARN THEM. By a Foreman. Harper & Bros.
- DIET IN RELATION TO AGE AND ACTIVITY. By Sir H. Thompson. From the 10th English edition. Cupples & Hurd.
- HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY OF THE STATE AND OF HISTORY. An Exposition by George S. Morris. S. C. Griggs & Co. $1.25
- MY GARDEN PETS. By Mary Treat. Illustrations by E. H. Garrett. D. Lothrop Co. 75c.

Text-Books.

- COMPLETE GERMAN MANUAL FOR HIGH SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES. By Wesley C. Sawyer. Chicago: John C. Buckbee & Co. $1.20
- BAKER'S HUMOROUS SPEAKER. A Series of Popular Recitations and Readings. Edited by Geo. M. Baker. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
- VOCAL AND ACTION-LANGUAGE, CULTURE AND EXPRESSION. By E. N. Kirby. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

Theology and Religion.

- FIFTEEN YEARS IN THE CHAPEL OF YALE COLLEGE. By Noah Porter. Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.50
- THE STORY OF OUR LORD. By Frances Younghusband. Longmans, Green & Co. $1.00
- THE WESTMINSTER QUESTION BOOK FOR 1888. Presbyterian Board.
- BOHLEN LECTURES. Inaugural Series. By Alexander H. Vinton, D.D. T. Whittaker. 2d edition.
- THE STORY OF THE PSALMS. By Henry Van Dyke, D.D. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50
- LIVING VOICES OF LIVING MEN. Practical Sermons by Bishops and Clergy of the Church, intended for Family and Lay Reading. Thomas Whittaker. $1.25
- ROMANISM AND THE REFORMATION FROM THE STANDPOINT OF PROPHECY. By H. Grattan Guinness. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $1.50
- THE STORY OF JONAH. Second and Revised Edition. By Professor L. T. Townsend. Boston: J. J. Arakelyan.

Travel and Observation.

- WELL-WORN ROADS OF SPAIN, HOLLAND, AND ITALY. Traveled by a Painter in Search of the Picturesque. By F. Hopkinson Smith. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
- OUR HUNDRED DAYS IN EUROPE. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50
- AN UNKNOWN COUNTRY. By the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman." Illus. Harper & Brothers. $2.50
- THE NEW HONDURAS: Its Situation, Resources, Opportunities, and Prospects. By Thomas R. Lombard. Brentano.
- SOME THINGS ABROAD. By Alexander McKenzie. D. Lothrop Co. $1.50
- GUATEMALA, THE LAND OF THE QUETZAL. A Sketch by William T. Brigham. Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.00

Miscellaneous.

- RECITATIONS FOR CHRISTMAS. Selected and Arranged by Margaret Holmes. Indianapolis: Charles A. Bates. Paper, 25c.
- A NATURAL SYSTEM OF ELOCUTION AND ORATORY. Founded on an Analysis of the Human Constitution. By T. A. and William Hyde. Illus. Fowler & Wells Co.
- ROYAL TRUTHS. Reported from the Spoken Words of Henry Ward Beecher. Fourth American from the Sixth English Edition. Fords, Howard & Hulbert. $1.25
- SOBRIQUETS AND NICKNAMES. By Albert R. Frey. Ticknor & Co. $3.00
- A VOYAGE TO ABYSSINIA. By Father Jerome Lobo. Cassell's National Library. Paper, 20c.
- GOETHE'S FAUST. Tr. from the German by John Anster, LL.D. Part II. With an Introduction by Henry Morley. Harper & Brothers. Paper, 25c.

- THE COMMONWEALTH OF OCEANA. By James Harrington. With an Introduction by Henry Morley. Geo. Routledge & Sons. 60c.
- THE PUBLISHERS' TRADE LIST ANNUAL. 1887. 15th year. Publishers' Weekly.

Christmas Gifts.

PALMER, BACHELDER & CO.

Announce their Christmas Assortment of Choice

Diamonds & Other Gems,

WATCHES, CLOCKS, SILVER WARE
AND ARTISTIC POTTERY,

— AT —

No. 146 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Palmer, Bachelder & Co.

$100 will be paid for a copy of "TAMERLANE," by a "Bostonian," 1887. Size 4 1/4 x 6 1/4 inches

G. H. FISHER,

P. O. Box 2,768.

NEW YORK CITY.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, HON. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, DR. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila.; 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauque University, &c. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

Horsford's

ACID PHOSPHATE

(LIQUID)

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

• IMPORTANT • HOLIDAY • PUBLICATIONS •

At Prices ranging from Fifty Cents to One Hundred Dollars Each.

A dainty new series of delightful size and low price. THE PHOTOGRAVURE SERIES OF HYMNS.

Will comprise the best-loved hymns in the English language. A great novelty lies in the exquisite illustrations, each hymn having

NEW PHOTOGRAVURES,
Beautifully printed in different colors, from designs by Mr. FREDERICK W. FREER, made especially for this series. Parchment-paper binding, with very decorative design stamped in gold across the top of the cover, and with lettering below, in color. Each in a box. Each volume, 75 cts. Cloth, similar stamping in gold and color. Each volume, 75 cents.

1. Rock of Ages.
 2. Nearer, My God, to Thee.
 3. Hark, the Herald Angels Sing!
- (Others in preparation.)

Three new volumes and two new bindings in the popular
BIRD-SONGS SERIES.

By FIDELIA BRIDGES and SUSIE BARSTOW SKELDING.
NEW VOLUMES.

IV.—Favorites in Feathers.

Colored designs of Cat-birds and Garden-roses; Owls at Evening; Chewink and Trillium; and Cedar-birds and Cedar-bough.

With poems, etc., by well-known authors, including "Major and Minor," by GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, in fac-simile of his MS.

V.—Harbingers of Spring.

Colored designs of City-sparrows and Wisteria; White Doves and Blossoming Apricot; Swallows Skimming over White Daisies; Chipping-birds and Pussy-willow.

With poems, etc., by well-known authors, including poems by MARY BRADLEY and FRANCES L. MACE, each in fac-simile of MS.

VI.—Winged Flower-Lovers.

Colored designs of Bobolink and Clover-blossoms; Sand-pipers and Blossoming Beach-plums; Purple Finches and Peach-blossoms; King-bird and Cardinal-flowers.

With poems, etc., by well-known authors, including one by JOHN W. CHADWICK, in fac-simile of MS.

Each one of volumes IV., V., and VI., is bound in the new Satin-Panel Binding.

A perfect reproduction, in miniature size, has been made of each of three of Miss Bridges's best designs of birds. This appears in colors, upon a panel of white satin which is sunk in the white cover of each volume.

Cover is of heavy "sealskin paper" (new and very beautiful in effect), roughened edges, with title, in embossed gold letters, below the satin-panel.

- I. Songs of Birds.
- II. Birds of Meadow and Grove, and
- III. Songsters of the Branches

(the other volumes in this series), are offered in a new "Tinted Ivory Binding," in which the exquisitely engraved ivory is mounted upon heavy "Whatman" paper, which has been delicately tinted by hand with pale colors which are blended together—pink and pale blue, etc. (See catalogue.)

Each of the above six volumes has covers with roughened edges, is tied with silk-and-metal cord, and is in a neat box. Price, each volume, $1.50.

(For further particulars, send for catalogue.)

The Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette says: "The grouping of 'The Good Things of Life' in a holiday book has quite naturally come to be an annual matter, and much is the refined merriment and enjoyment scattered thereby. It is a brilliant combination of the best witty conceits of America."

THE GOOD THINGS OF LIFE. FOURTH SERIES.

Now ready. Equals or surpasses any of the previous volumes in this successful and rapidly selling series.

Each series is in one volume, oblong quarto, with highly ornamental and humorous design on cover, in color and gold. Cloth, beveled boards, gilt edges. Each, $2.50.

A NEW VOLUME IN THE BEAUTIFUL "WORDS OF COMFORT AND HOPE SERIES."

WORDS OF PEACE AND REST.

Selections from THOMAS A. KEMPIS, ST. BERNARD of Clairvaux, JOHANN TAULER, MADAME GUYON, and others.

With design of birds, flowers, and church, in brown on the ivory. Text printed in brown.

Each one of the five volumes has the ivory tied with floss to the white cover of the new "seal" board.

Each is tied with silk-and-metal cord, and is in a protector and a silvered box. Price, each volume, $1.00.

(For full description, send for catalogue.)

"One of the finest specimens of book-making it has ever been our pleasure to see."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

EIGHT CALENDARS FOR 1888, OF WHICH THE MOST NOTABLE IS

THE PHOTOGRAVURE SHAKESPEARIAN CALENDAR.

A new departure in calendars. An original design for each month has been made by Mr. FRANK M. GREGORY (the well-known etcher and President of the Salmagundi Club), and each design has been beautifully engraved by the photogravure process.

The various designs are printed in a variety of colors, and each illustrates a quotation from SHAKESPEARE, appropriate to the month.

Each photogravure is printed on a separate leaf, and the twelve are tied together with silk and have roughened edges. By far the most artistic and dainty calendar yet published. Each in a box, $1.50.

For description of the other seven, send for catalogue. Their prices range from 25 cents to $1.00 each.

Two new volumes in the successful series of

LIVES OF THE PRESIDENTS.

By WILLIAM O. STODDARD. I.—James Madison, James Monroe and John Quincy Adams. II.—Andrew Jackson and Martin Van Buren.

This important series now comprises five volumes, and will be completed in about ten.

Each volume 12mo, from new type, on good paper, with illustrations.

Bound uniformly in red cloth, with attractive design in black and gold on covers, showing portraits of Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Garfield. Each volume, $1.25.

A new book written ESPECIALLY FOR GIRLS.

UNCLE RUTHERFORD'S ATTIC.

By JOANNA H. MATHEWS, author of "The Beanie Books," "Little Sunbeams," "Miss Ashton's Girls," etc.

A wholesome and yet thoroughly interesting story. Illustrated by new wood-engravings, 12mo, attractively bound in cloth, $1.25.

A welcome new "MURRAY" book.

PRACTICAL CARVING.

Its title tells its story. Uniform with "Fifty Soups" and the other five volumes in the wonderfully salable series. Price 50 cents; in very attractive shape.

Two important new volumes in the series of

MANUALS OF GAMES.

I.—Pole on Whist.

In every respect the best edition made.

II.—The Game of Euchre.

By JOHN W. KELLER, author of "Draw Poker."

Each of the foregoing is a 16mo, well printed, from new electrotypes plates, on fine laid paper.

Boards, separate design for each cover, in bright coloring, with appropriate subject. Each volume, 50 cents.

One of the most delightful bits of fiction of the season.—
BOSTON TRAVELLER.

SEÑORA VILLENA AND GRAY:

An Old-Haven Romance.

By MARION WILCOX, author of "Real People."

Mr. Wilcox has accomplished more important work in a field in which his first efforts gained for him the praise of the highest literary authorities of America. His sketches of Spanish-American life are wonderfully attractive and original. 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

A new volume in Frederick A. Stokes & Brother's successful new series of American verse.

THISTLE-DRIFT.

By JOHN VANCE CHENEY. A volume of Mr. Cheney's verses, many of which have attracted well-merited praise in connection with their appearance in THE CENTURY and others of our most prominent periodicals.

Elzevir 16mo, printed from new plates on very fine laid paper. Delightful in size and bindings. Cloth, $1.00; Parchment paper, $1.00.

(For full descriptions of bindings, send for new catalogue.)

Uniform with "Point Lace and Diamonds," "Cap and Bells," and "Madrigals and Catches."

A great advance upon any previous collection of American Etchings.

REPRESENTATIVE ETCHINGS.

By Artists of Today in America.

All the plates have been etched especially for the collection, and the list of etchers includes several most important artists whose work has not appeared in the former collections.

Text, including an important new essay, by RIPLEY HITCHCOCK, author of "Etching in America," etc.

Size of page, 17 x 12 inches.

List of Etchers and Titles of Plates:

FREDERICK S. CHURCH,	The Return of the Wanderer.
ROBERT F. BLUM,	A Macaroni of the XVIIth Century.
JAMES S. KING,	Ideal Head.
STEPHEN PARRISH,	A Winter's Day, Windsor, N. S.
HERMAN N. HYFEMAN,	Desdemona.
FREDERICK W. FREER,	Honeysuckle.
FRANK M. GREGORY,	Madison Square, New York.
STEPHEN J. FERRIS,	A Good Story.
JAMES J. CALAHAN,	Souvenir of Cairo. After Garowe.
C. F. W. MIELATE,	Old Mill Near Newport, R. I.

I.—VELLUM PROOFS, Limited to Five Copies, Signed and Numbered. Remarque proofs on vellum, accompanied by proofs on Japan paper.

Price per copy $100.00

II.—SATIN PROOFS, Limited to Fifteen Copies, Signed and Numbered. Proofs on Satin.

Price per copy $50.00

III.—JAPAN PROOFS, Limited to 100 Copies, Signed and Numbered. Proofs on Japan paper.

Price per copy $35.00

All etchings contained in the above copies are REMARQUE PROOFS, SIGNED.

All styles of the Artist-Proof editions are inclosed in handsome portfolios of vellum with leather backs. All have ornamentation on side in color and gold, and are tied with silk.

IV.—Regular impressions on etching-paper. Bound in olive green cloth, with rich cover ornamentation, representing Mr. Parrish's etching. Limited to 500 copies.

Each $12.50

Same in black portfolio, with leather back. Limited to 50 copies.

Each $15.00

Each copy of each edition is signed and numbered.

These prices are subject to further advance.

Send for NEW CATALOGUE, containing full descriptions of these PUBLICATIONS, and of many NEW VOLUMES OF FICTION, POETRY, BIOGRAPHY, HUMOR, ART, etc., etc. Mention LITERARY WORLD. On receipt of 10 cents, this catalogue and one of FIDELIA BRIDGES's colored STUDIES OF BIRDS will be sent to any address. Any of the above can be had of your bookseller, or will be sent to any address (at publishers' expense), on receipt of advertised price.

FREDERICK A. STOKES & BROTHER,

Publishers, Importers, Booksellers, Stationers, and Dealers in Works of Art,

(Successors to WHITE, STOKES & ALLEN.)

182 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.

A. C. McClurg & Co.'s Valuable Books.

NEW BOOKS.

THE STANDARD CANTATAS. Their Stories, their Music and their Composers. A Handbook. By GEORGE P. UPTON. 12mo, yellow edges, price $1.50; full gilt, $2.00.

The "Standard Cantatas" forms the third volume in the uniform series, which already includes the "Standard Operas" and the "Standard Oratorios." This latest work deals with a class of musical compositions midway between the opera and the oratorio, which is growing rapidly in favor both with composers and audiences.

SCIENCE SKETCHES. By DAVID S. JORDAN, M. D., Ph. D., Professor of Zoölogy, and President of the University of Indiana. Large 12mo, price $1.50.

Dr. Jordan, whose special work in natural science, much of it in connection with the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, has given him high reputation in America and Europe, has here collected a dozen papers under the appropriate title of "Science Sketches." While all the papers, except two, are scientific or semi-scientific in character, they are written in a style that makes them attractive to the popular reader no less than to the student.

A GIRDLE ROUND THE EARTH. Home Letters from Foreign Lands. By D. N. RICHARDSON. 8vo, price $2.00.

The author of this book, Hon. D. N. Richardson, editor of the Davenport (Iowa) Democrat, has a talent for traveling and a faculty of narration not often united in one person. Mr. Richardson started westward from the Mississippi River and returned to it from the eastward. The author's quickness of perception and fullness of information, aided by his never-failing humor and his off-hand narrative style, have combined to produce an uncommonly readable and instructive book of travels.

NOTES FOR BOYS (and their Fathers). On Morals, Mind and Manners. By AN OLD BOY. 12mo, price $1.00.

This is a book, written by an English father for his own son, that cannot fail to be of good service to every boy who will read it. It is a sturdy book, full of honesty and manliness, and of scorn for pretense and sham. It tries to show a boy how to grow into real manhood, how to make himself a place in the world and at the same time in the respect and regard of those around him.

THE BIDDY CLUB. And how its members, wise and otherwise, some toughened and some tender-footed in the rugged ways of housekeeping, grappled with the troublesome SERVANT QUESTION, to the great advantage of themselves, their servants, and, as they hope, of many others. By GRIFFITH A. NICOLAS. 12mo, price $1.25.

This racy little volume deals, as its title implies, with the vexed and vexing problem commonly known as the "Servant-girl question." The subject was perhaps never treated in a fresher, more entertaining and more thoroughly practical way. The familiar and often piquant "experience-meeting," which, it has been alleged, takes place whenever two or three housekeepers are just together, is here developed into a ladies' club, whose weekly discussions are cleverly reported for the present work.

INSTITUTES OF CHRISTIAN HISTORY. By the Rt. Rev. A. CLEVELAND COXE, D. D., Bishop of Western New York. Large 12mo, price $1.50.

The "Institutes" are an outline of Christian history, based on the original idea of discarding a conventional treatment of the subject, and reducing words and theories to the hard foundation of demonstrated facts. The author adjusts the science of history to the admitted facts of history, and thus far follows the scientists of the age, discarding empirical and exploded formulas and phrases.

HIGHER GROUND. Hints toward Settling the Labor Troubles. By AUGUSTUS JACOBSON. 12mo, price $1.00.

The author of this little book is one of the many practical and thoughtful men who earnestly desire some right adjustment of the social disturbances. He believes in prevention, and would prefer to spend money in removing the causes of disturbance rather than to wait and pay the enormous costs of strikes and militia service. The strong practical sense of the writer, his kindly and philanthropic tone, and the force of many of his suggestions must win the attention of thoughtful and intelligent readers.

NEW EDITIONS.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. By VICTOR HUGO. Translated by Melville B. Anderson, M. A. 8vo, 424 pages, price $2.00.

"This volume is much more than a study of Shakespeare. All history, all theology, and all philosophy are grasped and handled with titanic force, the bard of Avon furnishing the text, or, as we should say, the pretext, for magnificent speculation. Why has this great work of Hugo's never before been Anglicized?"—Bulletin, Philadelphia.

THE AZTECS. Their History, Manners and Customs. From the French of LUCIEN BIART, by J. L. Garner. Illustrated, 8vo, price $2.00.

"The man who can rise from the study of Lucien Biart's invaluable work, 'The Aztecs,' without feelings of amazement and admiration for the history and the government and for the arts cultivated by these Romans of the New World, is not to be envied."—The Advance, Chicago.

THE STANDARD OPERAS. Their Plots, their Music and their Composers. By GEORGE P. UPTON. 12mo, yellow edges, price $1.50; full gilt, $2.00.

"There are thousands of music-loving people who will be glad to have the kind of knowledge which Mr. Upton has collected for their benefit, and has cast in a clear and compact form."—R. H. Stoddard, in N. Y. Evening Mail and Express.

THE STANDARD ORATORIOS. Their Stories, their Music, and their Composers. By GEORGE P. UPTON. 12mo, yellow edges, price $1.50; full gilt, $2.00.

"Music lovers are under a new obligation to Mr. Upton for this companion of his 'Standard Operas'—two books which deserve to be placed on the same shelf with Grove's and Riemann's musical dictionaries."—The Nation, New York.

THE HOME-LIFE OF GREAT AUTHORS. By HATTIE TYNG GRISWOLD. Large 12mo, price $1.50.

"No such excellent collection of brief biographies of literary favorites has ever before appeared in this country. Mrs. Griswold's taste and discretion are as much to be admired as her industry in the composition of these delightful sketches."—Bulletin, Philadelphia.

THE LIFE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN. By the Hon. ISAAC N. ARNOLD. With steel portrait. 8vo, gilt top, price, $2.50.

"It is the only Life of Lincoln thus far published that is likely to live—the only one that has any serious pretensions to depict him with adequate veracity, completeness and dignity."—Sun, New York.

TALES FROM FOREIGN TONGUES. Comprising: MEMORIES (Max Müller), GRAZIELLA (Lamartine), MARIA (Pushkin), and MADELEINE (Sandeau). In vellum cloth, gilt top. The four volumes in neat box. Price, per set, $4.00.

The series of four volumes contains perhaps the best pieces of classic fiction which have been added by translation to the English language in recent years. New editions have been printed on fine laid paper, and bound in new and beautiful style. No choicer present can be found than a set of these exquisite tales.

THE BOOK-LOVER. A Guide to the Best Reading. By JAMES BALDWIN, Ph. D. 16mo, gilt top, price $1.25.

"We know no work of the kind which gives so much needful information in so small a space."—Evening Telegram, New York.

THE HUMBLER POETS. A Collection of Newspaper and Periodical Verse. 1870 to 1880. By SLASON THOMPSON. Crown 8vo, gilt top, price $2.00.

"The high poetic character of these poems, as a whole, is surprising. As a unit, the collection makes an impression which even a genius of the highest order would not be adequate to produce."—Independent, New York.

"In short, after an hour thus spent over Goodholme's Cyclopædia, it was unanimously voted that there could be no 'getting along' without it, and it was accordingly installed on the shelf by the side of Webster's Unabridged and Smith's Dictionary of the Bible."—THE LITERARY WORLD.

THE NEW, REVISED EDITION

OF

Goodholme's Domestic Cyclopædia

OF PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Is now ready, and special bindings have been prepared for THE HOLIDAYS!

"It is one of the very few books of which it can be truly said that they were needed, and that they supply the need. It is practical, it is comprehensive, and it is indispensable."—Richard Henry Stoddard.

"It is constantly referred to in my own household, and we have learned to place confidence in the variety and value of its information."—Edmund Clarence Steadman.

"Has become a sort of patron saint at Edgewood. It seems to me that no book of its class approaches it for everyday, practical value. All young households may safely take counsel by it, and its pages furnish what I should call an 'all around' home equipment."—Donald G. Mitchell.

STYLES OF BINDING.

Garnet Cloth, extra, richly stamped in black and gold $5.00.

Old-Gold Cloth, extra, richly stamped in black and gold, with gilt edges, old-gold ribbon book-mark, and boxed. (Special edition for Holiday Gifts and Wedding Presents.) $5.75.

Library Style, full sheep, marbled edges, $6.50.

Half Turkey Morocco, marbled edges (very handsome), $8.00.

. For sale by all booksellers, or sent by express, prepaid, to any address, on receipt of price.

(Customers wishing us to forward copies direct to their friends, can send card, with dedication or inscription, to be inclosed.)

C. A. MONTGOMERY & CO., Publishers,
7 Murray Street, New York.

Sold by all booksellers, or mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price by the publishers,

A. C. McCLURG & CO., CHICAGO.

RECENT AMERICAN NOVELS

ISSUED IN THE "GLOBE LIBRARY."

A PURITAN LOVER.

By Mrs. LAURA C. S. FRESENDER. 12mo, 220 pages, paper, 25 cents.

"A story of colonial New England days, told in a straightforward, vigorous way. . . . The plot is an interesting one."—Brooklyn Eagle.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

By "LITERE"; with preface by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. 12mo, 225 pages, paper, 25 cents. The story of a working-girl's life in Chicago.

"The story is filled with sympathy for the destitute, for the struggling, and tends to keep the star of hope above the horizon of the unfortunate." . . .

"Let the rich read these pages—they will have a kinder feeling toward those who toil; let the workers read them—they will think better of themselves."—Robert G. Ingersoll.

"It is a simple and touching story, many of whose features will be promptly recognized by all who have mingled much with the business world. . . . From first to last it reflects a loyal, devoted, womanly spirit. . . . The man who can read it without an inner resolve to be henceforth a little more considerate of the people he may casually meet as they go about their struggle for a livelihood, must be a very unsympathetic individual indeed."—Chicago Times.

CALAMITY ROW; OR, THE SUNKEN RECORDS.

By JOHN R. MUSICK. 12mo, 263 pages, paper, 25 cents; cloth, $1.00.

"Mr. Musick is a writer whose careful observation and faithful portrayal of the character of people of all classes places him well up in the list of American novelists of today. His plots are natural and deeply interesting; his descriptions are vivid, and, while he never tires his readers with long or prosy sermons, his interpretations of character are healthy and his moral tone is good. 'Calamity Row' is Mr. Musick's best work."—Detroit Free Press.

"Highly praised for its excellence in description, plot, and character drawing, by some of the best critics in America."—Weekly Graphic.

ONLY A FARMER'S DAUGHTER.

By L. H. ANDREWS. 12mo, 206 pages; paper, 25 cents.

"He writes after the manner of Hugh Conway, by plunging boldly into his subject matter. The book is a great success."—New York Star.

"A simple tale, woven in a decidedly interesting style."—Omaha Bee.

"It contains some powerful passages."—New York Sun.

OTHER LATE ADDITIONS TO THIS, "THE HANDSOMEST OF ALL CHEAP LIBRARIES."

TEXAS'S REVENGE; OR, NORTH AGAINST SOUTH.

By JULES VERNE. Two parts complete in one volume. 12mo, 332 pages, paper, 25 cents. Handsomely illustrated holiday edition, on fine paper, in cloth, $1.25.

A story of the American Civil War, the scene of which is laid in Florida. Full of striking situations and thrilling incidents.

This edition is published, by special arrangement, simultaneously with the appearance of the work in England.

THE STRANGE CASE OF DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.

By R. L. STEVENSON. 12mo, 160 pages, paper, 25 cents.

A LUCKY YOUNG WOMAN.

By F. C. PHILIPS. 12mo, 240 pages, paper, 25 cents.

THE DUCHESS.

By "THE DUCHESS." 12mo, 192 pages, paper, 25 cents.

NOW IN PRESS.

A BATON FOR A HEART: A ROMANCE OF AMERICAN STUDENT LIFE IN PARIS.

By "BESVAL." Illustrated with portrait of Mme. Mathilde Marchesi la Comtesse de la Rajata de Castrone. No American that contemplates studying art of any kind in Paris should fail to read this book. Will be ready for the holidays. (Double number.) 12mo, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00.

Send for Complete List.

We carry also the largest assortment of guide books, maps, etc. to be found in the United States, and can supply to order maps or guides to every country, and to every city of importance, in the world.

Indexed pocket maps and guides to every State and Territory in the Union, and to the Canadian provinces, 25 cents each.

Guide books and maps to Chicago, and to each of the large cities in the United States.

Railroad and engineering books, etc.

Send for complete catalogue and price list of any of these specialties, to

RAND, McNALLY & CO., Publishers,

New York Store, 323 Broadway.

148 to 154 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

LES MISERABLES,

A MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF HUGO'S MASTERPIECE.

Extract from private letter from Paul Meurice, Literary Executor and Business Administrator of the late Victor Hugo: "I wait no longer to tell you how delighted I am with your beautiful edition of 'Les Misérables.'"

Routledge's Superbly Illustrated Edition de Luxe. In FIVE LARGE Octave Volumes. Price per set, cloth, uncut, paper label, $39.00; half morocco, $39.50; full morocco, gilt edges, $45.00.

SOLD ONLY BY SUBSCRIPTION. SEND FOR ILLUSTRATED CIRCULAR.

This new edition of Les Misérables is the only one that presents to English readers the greatest work of the greatest modern French writer in a form befitting its grandeur and beauty. No pains have been spared to make it as perfect as possible. The book contains nearly FOUR HUNDRED illustrations from designs of some of the most eminent French artists. De Neuville, the celebrated painter of military subjects; Scott, whose views of interiors are always admirable; Morin, who furnishes some charming vignettes; Brion, E. Bayard, Valnay, and others—all selected for their special knowledge of the subjects assigned to them, and thoroughly acquainted with the places and personages described, thoroughly French in feeling and spirit, and in full sympathy with the author. Last, but not least among the illustrators, is Victor Hugo himself.

"A tall, wide octavo, with generous margins, with a broad and boldly-printed page, with uncut edges, made of a superior quality of heavy paper, bound—exquisitely bound—in perfectly plain covers of sage-green linen, labeled on the back only with the simplest of white paper labels, and embellished within by a profusion of engravings after drawings by distinguished French artists—the volume is one of singular attractions to the lover of noble books, and will place the writing of Victor Hugo, which it is to embody, before his English and American admirers in a form which leaves little to be desired."—Literary World.

"No English edition that we have ever seen will compare for a moment with this Routledge edition of this famous classic—a noble octavo, the paper, ink and binding of which fulfill all the conditions that go to the making of a good book, while the illustrations, of which there are four hundred, large and small, reflect with singular fidelity the spirit of the text they elucidate. They are from designs by the best French artists—such men as De Neuville, Bayard, Morin and Valnay, whose drawings have been interpreted by artists of equal eminence as in the reproductive process of engraving."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

McDONNELL BROTHERS,

PUBLISHERS,

185 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

Le Français.

Revue mensuelle de Grammaire et de Littérature.

The object of Le Français is twofold:

1. To offer to its readers a great variety of interesting readable matter from the pen of the best French writers, and such as can be put into all hands.

2. To try to explain the syntax and the niceties of the French language by the aid of corrected compositions and answers to queries sent by its subscribers.

The Nation says: "Le Français is by all odds the best educational French journal ever attempted in this country. We cannot too strongly recommend it as an adjunct wherever French is taught."

The Boston Evening Transcript says: "The rich selection shown in the literary department is an indication that Le Français is eventually to take the place of expensive foreign magazines unattainable by the majority."

The Boston Post says: "This sterling monthly has been making rapid advances into public favor of late, until now it has a large and discriminating family of readers. It is printed entirely in the French language, and its original and selected matter is of the highest order of excellence."

Mrs. Cleveland Subscriber.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON,

November 1, 1887.

"Le Français."

21 University Place, New York City.

Please place Mrs. Cleveland's name on the subscription list of "Le Français" for one year from date, and find enclosed two dollars in payment therefor.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,

Private Secretary to the President

Le Français is published on the fifth of every month. It will be sent, postpaid, one year for $2.00; single copies, cents.

A sample copy of Le Français will be mailed to your address on request. Address

"LE FRANCAIS."

21 University Place, New York

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Myth, Ritual, and Religion.

By ANDREW LANG. 2 vols., crown 8vo, $7.00.

"Mr. Lang here gathers into orderly sequence the results of long years of study. . . . Readers will be impressed by the overwhelming weight of evidence which he here marshals in support of his favorite thesis."—Athenaeum.

Johnny Nut and the Golden Goose.

Done into English by ANDREW LANG, from the French of Charles Deulin. Illustrated by Am. Lynen. 8vo, $3.50.

SOME OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF GEORGE CANNING.

Edited, with notes, by EDWARD J. STAPLETON. 2 vols., 8vo, $10.00.

"It is stated by the editor that Mr. Augustus Stapleton's two 'Lives of Canning' were written with the conclusive object of vindicating his patron's reputation, and that he rejected all materials which did not conduce to that end. Among the papers thus laid aside, Mr. Edward Stapleton has found matter enough to fill about eight hundred pages, without ever becoming tedious or monotonous. . . . Among the non-official letters it is difficult to make a selection where all are so interesting."—Standard.

FROM A GARRET.

By MAY KENDALL, One Author of "That Very Mab." Crown 8vo, $2.00.

"Clever, and full of fun and the genuine pathos which is so often found in motley."—St. James's Gazette.

"These sketches expound incidentally, and often with a touching pathos, the philosophy of self-denial and renunciation which makes life possible to the curious characters brought before the reader."—Scotsman.

DREAMS TO SELL: POEMS.

By MAY KENDALL, One Author of "That Very Mab." Fep. 8vo, gilt top, $2.00.

EUTHANASIA; or, Medical Treatment in Aid of an Easy Death.

By WILLIAM MUNK, M. D., F. S. A. Fellow and late Senior Censor of the Royal College of Physicians, etc. Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.75.

STUDIES IN NAVAL HISTORY.

Biographies. By JOHN KNOX LAUGHTON, M. A., Professor of Modern History at King's College, London; Lecturer on Naval History at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. 8vo, $3.50.

BOYS AND MASTERS:

A Story of School Life. By A. H. GILKES, M. A., Head-Master of Dulwich College. Crown 8vo, $1.25.

"Nobody whose sympathy with boys was not deep and genuine could have written the pathetic episode of the illness and death of 'Coddies,' and many a reader who, like one of Mr. Gilkes's small boys, 'doesn't believe that any one can make him blub now,' may find, when he comes to this part of the book, that he is not quite so hardened to the melting mood as he imagined."—Saturday Review.

THE STORY OF OUR LORD told in Simple Language for Children.

By FRANCES YOUNGHUSAND. With 25 illustrations from pictures by the old masters, and numerous ornamental borders, etc., the whole being selected from Longmans's Illustrated New Testament. Crown 8vo, $1.00; cloth plain, $1.25; cloth extra, gilt edges.

"Just the kind of language is used in this book that teachers would do well to adopt in their Scripture lessons, and we desire to draw their attention to the attractiveness that would mark their Bible instruction if this were attempted and carried out. . . . An excellently planned and well-conceived little work."—Teacher's Aid.

WEATHER CHARTS AND STORM WARNINGS.

By ROBERT H. SCOTT, M. A., F. R. S., Secretary to the Meteorological Council. With numerous illustrations. Third edition. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

ENGLAND AND NAPOLEON IN 1803; being the Despatches of Lord Whitworth and others.

Now first printed from the Originals in the Record Office. Edited for the Royal Historical Society, by OSCAR BROWNING, M. A., F. R. Hist. S., Corresponding Member of the Société d'Histoire Diplomatique. 8vo, $6.25.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,

15 EAST SIXTEENTH STREET, . . . NEW YORK.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want.

In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engravings, Etc., Etc.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS, New York, has now ready his new and handsome edition, in French, of VICTOR HUGO'S LES MISÉRABLES. It is attractive, convenient, cheap, tastefully printed from new type, well bound, and in every respect the most important French work yet published in America. 5 volumes, paper, $4.50; cloth, $6.50; half calf, $13.50.

Mr. Appleton Morgan, President of the New York Shakespeare Society, will be prepared to deliver his lecture, "Is There a Ogher Legible in the Shakespeare Plays?" to clubs, lyceums, etc., the coming season.

Address L. L. LAWRENCE,
P. O. Box 5, Newtown, Queens County,
New York.

JOHN C. NIMMO'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF DR. DORAN'S GREAT WORK.

In 3 vols., demy 8vo. Roxburghe binding, gilt top; also large paper copies, royal 8vo, with portraits in duplicate, each numbered.

ANNALS of the ENGLISH STAGE, from THOMAS BETTERTON to EDMUND KEAN.

By Dr. DORAN, F. S. A. Edited and revised by R. W. Lowe from author's annotated copy. With 50 copper-plate portraits and 80 wood-engravings.

NOTE.—The following are some of the chief features of this new edited and revised edition of Dr. Doran's well-known work. It is illustrated for the first time with fifty newly engraved copper-plate portraits of the leading and best-known actors and actresses, all of which are printed as India proofs. There are also fifty-six illustrations, newly engraved on wood, printed on fine Japanese paper, and mounted at the head of each chapter, as well as some twenty or more character illustrations, also newly engraved on wood, and printed with the text at end of the chapters. There are numerous new and original foot-notes given, as well as a copious and exhaustive index to each volume. Besides the demy 8vo edition, a limited number will be printed on royal 8vo, fine deckle-edge paper, with a duplicate set of the fifty portraits, one on Japanese paper and the other on plate paper, as India proofs. Each of these copies will be numbered.

A NEW VOLUME OF ELIZABETHAN LYRICS.

Post 8vo, hand-made paper, also large paper copies, in half-German calf, each numbered.

MORE LYRICS from the SONG-BOOKS of the ELIZABETHAN AGE.

Edited by A. H. BULLEN, B. A.

NOTE.—Many of the poems in this collection are from unique books preserved in the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, the Royal College of Music, and Mr. Halliwell-Phillips's Library at Hollingbury Copse. Others are printed, for the first time, from MSS. The editor has been careful to include only such songs as are "choicely good."

NEW VOLUME OF THE ELIZABETHAN DRAMATISTS SERIES.

In 2 vols., post 8vo, cloth; also fine large paper copies, medium 8vo, cloth, each numbered.

THE WORKS OF GEORGE PEELE.

Edited by A. H. BULLEN, B. A.

NOTE.—A new library edition of Peele's works is needed, for Pickering's beautiful volumes are rare and costly. In the present edition some interesting fac-similes of title-pages, etc., will be given.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "FLEMISH INTERIORS."

Large crown 8vo, with 100 illustrations by R. CAULFIELD ORPEN, cloth elegant.

"DE OMNIBUS REBUS."

An Old Man's Discursive Ramblings on the Road of Every-day Life.

Third edition, newly revised and corrected, and greatly enlarged, 2 vols., medium 8vo, with 300 engravings and 12 full-page plates, cloth.

THE ROSICRUCIANS;

Their Rites and Mysteries. By HARGRAVE JENNINGS.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14 KING WILLIAM ST., STRAND, W. C.

READY NOVEMBER 26.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF CHARLES DARWIN.

INCLUDING

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL CHAPTER.

EDITED BY HIS SON,

FRANCIS DARWIN.

WITH PORTRAITS AND VIEWS OF DOWN HOUSE, DARWIN'S RESIDENCE.

IN TWO VOLUMES. 12mo, CLOTH, PRICE $4.50.

 The work is published by arrangement with Mr. Francis Darwin, and will appear not more than a few days later than the English Edition.*

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,
1, 3 & 5 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

The BEST BOOKS for ENTERTAINMENTS and EXHIBITIONS.

THE ELOCUTIONIST'S ANNUAL, NO. 15.

"The best series of speakers published." No one should be without all the numbers. 200 pages. Each, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

BEST THINGS FROM BEST AUTHORS, VOL. 5.

This volume contains, with all their attractive features, the last three numbers of the Elocutionist's Annual, Nos. 12, 14 and 15. 600 pages, cloth, $1.50.

For a limited time we are offering the full set of the series, five volumes, put up in neat and durable boxes, at the special price of $5.00. The regular price would be $7.50.

CHOICE DIALOGUES.

For school and social entertainment. The dialogues in this book have been arranged on a comprehensive plan, with reference to securing the greatest possible variety, and they have been specially prepared for us by a corps of able writers. Boards, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

CHOICE DIALECT.

For reading and recitation. This volume contains a rare collection of choice dialect of every variety, covering a broad range of sentiment, and suited to almost every occasion. Boards, 50 cents; paper 30 cents.

CHOICE HUMOR.

For reading and recitation. Adapted for use in public and private. The latest and best book of humor published. Boards, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENTS.

Everything is strictly new and has been specially prepared for this book. It is made up of short dramas, dialogues, stories, recitations, etc., in all of which are introduced many new and novel features that give the spice and sparkle so desirable for holiday occasions. Boards, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

CHILD'S OWN SPEAKER.

This little book is a collection of recitations, motion songs, concert pieces, dialogues and tableaux for the very little children of five years old and thereabouts. 100 pieces. Boards, 25 cents; paper 15 cents.

LITTLE PEOPLE'S SPEAKER.

For children of ten years of age. 100 pages. Boards, 25 cents; paper, 15 cents.

YOUNG FOLKS' RECITATIONS.

For young people of fifteen years. 100 pages. Boards, 25 cents; paper, 15 cents.

YOUNG FOLKS' DIALOGUES.

Entirely new and original. 120 pages. Boards, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

YOUNG FOLKS' ENTERTAINMENTS.

Containing among many other original and attractive features a beautiful Tambourine Drill and Fan Drill. Boards, 40 cents; Paper, 25 cents.

HOW TO BECOME A PUBLIC SPEAKER.

By William Pittenger, author of "Oratory," "Extempore Speech," etc. Boards, 50 cents; paper, 30 cents.

Full descriptive catalogue will be cheerfully sent upon application. The above books for sale by all booksellers and newsdealers, or mailed upon receipt of price, to any part of the United States or Canada. Remit otherwise than by two-cent stamps.

THE NATIONAL SCHOOL OF ELOCUTION AND ORATORY,

PUBLICATION DEPARTMENT.

CHAS. C. SHOEMAKER, Manager.

No. 1124 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Worth of the War

IN PATRIOTISM.

There was one effect produced by the War of the Rebellion, especially in its earlier days, that was really worth all it cost, and that was the arousing of a genuine love of country. In these days of "enterprise," books about the thoughts, feelings and deeds of a quarter of a century ago are exerting a wholesome influence.

Among them, few will be found more instructive in the history of the principles then at issue, more interesting from a merely intellectual point of view, or more powerful as an inspiration to the love of American institutions, than the newly published volume of

Patriotic Addresses

By HENRY WARD BEECHER. These productions—including formal orations, addresses before societies, a few famous newspaper articles, letters, war sermons in Plymouth Church, the speeches in England and other material—begin with "Shall We Compromise," in 1850, and end with the stately "Eulogy on Grant" in 1885. It is a gathering of splendid eloquence from one of the great orators of a great era—the best work of Beecher in his best days; undoubtedly the most comprehensive representation of Mr. Beecher's remarkable variety of gifts that has been or is likely to be made, because collected from so many fields. However men have differed in their estimates of him in particulars, he was indisputably a colossal power for good in American history, and this book shows many of the sources of his extraordinary influence.

It is prefaced with a "Review of Mr. Beecher's Personality and Public Career," by JOHN E. HOWARD, the editor of the volume, who originally undertook the compilation and editing of his political addresses at Mr. Beecher's suggestion and under his own eye. The volume is illustrated with interesting portraits. It is bound in cloth at $2.75; cloth, gilt edges, $3.25; or half morocco, red edges, $4.25. The volume is one that no intelligent reader of American history can afford to miss.

Abraham Lincoln

Was of course the central figure in that time of tremendous events, and the true story of his life and personal character has been admirably told by WILLIAM O. STODDARD, one of his confidential secretaries at the White House.

The Literary World says: "Written in terse, clear-cut English, and intensely readable from beginning to end, Mr. Stoddard's, in our opinion, approaches closely to the ideal biography, and scarcely will be superseded by the efforts of any subsequent author."

Its price is, in cloth, $2.75; half roan, red edges, $3.50.

One of the most picturesque and soul-stirring books about the war is Bullet and Shell: War as the Soldier Saw It.

By Private, Major and Field-Correspondent GEORGE F. WILLIAMS. Illustrated by sketches taken in the field by Edwin Forbes.

The Boston Globe says: "It will instruct the public better what the Civil War really was than any book published."

And Generals Grant, McClellan and Sherman have all heartily commended it, not only as "very correct history," but as an admirable and enjoyable picture of the interior of army life. In style and price it corresponds with the "Lincoln" mentioned above.

And finally, as a broad view of the whole field, we can honestly recommend the

Concise History of the American People,

By Prof. J. H. PATTON, A. M., Ph. D. Complete in two handsome illustrated octavo volumes, bound in English cloth, gilt top, at $5.00; or in half morocco at $7.50.

The Christian Union says: "His work must be given the highest place among short histories of the United States."

And the conservative old New York Observer: "We take great pleasure in commending it . . . for all the purposes of a complete and accurate history."

Should you desire any of the above books for your library, or as gifts to your young friends, and if they are not to be had at your bookseller's, drop a line to the publishers, who will send either descriptive circulars of them, or, if the price be inclosed, the books themselves.

Fords, Howard & Hulbert

27 Park Place, New York.

S. C. GRIGGS & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED.

HEGEL'S PHILOSOPHY OF THE STATE AND OF HISTORY. By GEORGE S. MORRIS, Ph. D., of the University of Michigan. 320 pages. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

This is the sixth volume in the series of "German Philosophical Classics," and contains an expository résumé of two of Hegel's most popular and important masterpieces. To the great number of those interested in the thoughtful discussion of questions relating to the foundations, the nature and the law, of all social relations—domestic, civil, political and religious—the appearance of this work must be peculiarly timely and welcome.

PRECEDING VOLUMES OF THE SERIES:

I. KANT'S CRITIQUE OF PURE REASON. By Prof. G. S. MORRIS, Ph. D., of the University of Michigan. $1.25.

II. SCHELLING'S TRANSCENDENTAL IDEALISM. By Prof. JOHN WATSON, LL. D., of Queen's University. $1.25.

III. FICHTE'S SCIENCE OF KNOWLEDGE. By Prof. C. C. EVERETT, D. D., of Harvard University. $1.25.

IV. HEGEL'S ESTHETICS. By Prof. J. S. KEDDER, S. T. D., of Seabury Divinity School. $1.25.

V. KANT'S ETHICS. A critical exposition by Prof. NOAH PORTER, D. D., LL. D., of Yale College. $1.25.

"Griggs's Philosophical Classics" will serve a valuable purpose, and will make accessible to the English student much of the wealth hidden in the treasury of German philosophy."—Philadelphia Lutheran Observer.

Of this series the Chicago Tribune says: "The most important contribution that has been made to our knowledge of the greatest philosophic movement in the world's history."

MEN, PLACES AND THINGS. By WILLIAM MATHEWS, LL. D. Just published. Uniform with his other works. 394 pages. $1.50.

"A collection of vigorous papers on such subjects as Napoleon I., William Wirt, Bulwer, Dumas, the Weaknesses of Great Men, the Greatness of London, the House of Commons, illusions about the Past, the Philosophy of Handwriting, etc. There is much force and point in the treatment alike of the men, the places, and the questions discussed in the book. It will well repay reading."—Brooklyn Eagle.

ALSO BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Literary Style, and Other Essays.....$1.50
Getting On in the World..... 1.50
The Great Conversers..... 1.50
Hours With Men and Books..... 1.50
Words; Their Use and Abuse..... 2.00
"Monday-Chats"..... 2.00
Oratory and Orators..... 2.00

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ENGLISH LITERATURE AND LANGUAGE. From the Pre-English Ages to the Death of Emerson. By Prof. A. H. WELSH, A. M. Two vols., crown 8vo, library cloth, 1,150 pages, $4.00. University edition in one vol., without abridgment, $3.00.

"The most comprehensive and satisfactory review of English Literature ever produced on this continent."—Prof. R. B. Anderson, U. S. Minister to Denmark.

"The articles on Hawthorne and Emerson, which are complete, have never been equalled."—Boston Globe.

MORRIS'S MANUAL OF CLASSICAL LITERATURE. Comprising biographical and critical notices of the principal Greek and Roman authors, with illustrative extracts for popular reading. By CHARLES MORRIS. 12mo, 420 pages. $1.50.

"Of sterling value. . . . A complete treasure-house of quotations, apt illustrations, and famous utterances of the most brilliant minds."—Christian at Work, New York.

BLANC'S GRAMMAR OF PAINTING AND ENGRAVING. Large octavo. Richly illustrated. Price $3.00.

"It furnishes precisely what all lovers of art who are not themselves either artists or trained critics need. It teaches the reader what to admire and what to condemn, by teaching him why some things in art are admirable and others are not. It educates the art instinct. It is a great work."—New York Evening Post.

POETRY AND PHILOSOPHY OF GOETHE. Edited by MARION V. DUDLEY. 306 pages, $1.50.

THEOPHILUS TRENT; OR, OLD TIMES IN THE OAK OPENINGS. A novel by the late BENJAMIN F. TAYLOR, LL. D. One volume, 12mo, $1.00.

MASTERS OF THE SITUATION: OR SOME SECRETS OF SUCCESS AND POWER. By WILLIAM J. TILLEY, B. D. Second edition. 346 pages, $1.25.

SPARKS FROM A GEOLOGIST'S HAMMER. By Dr. ALEX. WINGHELL, Professor of Geology and Paleontology in the University of Michigan. Third edition, illustrated, $2.00.

. Sold by booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of the price, by the publishers.

S. C. GRIGGS & CO.,
 87 & 89 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

PRANG'S
Fine Art Publications

FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

PRANG'S ART BOOKS.
HOME OF EVANGELINE.

Illustrated by Louis K. Harlow, with eight full-page illustrations in color and eight monotone plates with text. Bound in snake-skin, size 7 3/4 x 5 1/4, price, in box, $2.50.

THE CHRISTMAS PROCESSIONAL.

By "TERTIUS." Six full-page illustrations in color, and six monotone plates with text, by Louis K. Harlow. In novel style binding, size 7 x 7 1/2, price, in box, $2.00. The same, bound in snake-skin, size 7 1/4 x 7 5/8, price, in box, $2.50.

ECHOES IN AQUARELLE FROM ALONG SHORE.

Six full-page illustrations in color, and six monotone plates, with text, of views in and about Mt. Desert, by Louis K. Harlow. In novel style binding, size 7 1/4 x 7 1/2, price, in box, $2.50. The same, in rich silk plush and satin binding, title in colors on satin cover, size 7 1/4 x 7 1/2, price, in box, $3.50.

THE VOICE OF THE GRASS.

By SARAH ROBERTS. Six full-page illustrations in color and seven monotone plates, with text, by Louis K. Harlow. In novel style binding, size 8 x 6, price, in box, $2.50. The same, in rich silk plush and satin binding, title in colors on satin cover, size 8 3/8 x 6 1/4, price, in box, $3.50.

A GAY DAY FOR SEVEN.

By Mrs. ROSE MUELLER SPRAGUE. Illustrations in aquarelle by the author. Between illuminated board covers, size, 9 1/2 x 7 1/2, price, in box, $2.00.

ETCHINGS.

PICTURESQUE CAMBRIDGE.

Six original etchings by W. GOODRICH BEAL. In neat portfolio, price $1.50.

HOMES AND HAUNTS OF THE POETS.

Original etchings by W. B. CLOSSON. Five parts, each containing six etchings of portrait, autograph, birthplace, homes and favorite spots of the following poets and authors: Longfellow, Whittier, Emerson, Hawthorne and Holmes. In leatherette portfolio; price, per part, $1.00; all five parts, in neat portfolio box, $5.50.

LONGFELLOW STATIONERY.

Made of best linen stock and water-marked; put up (4 quires with envelopes) in a unique box, representing a fac-simile of Longfellow's residence in Cambridge, Mass. The chimneys are used for the reception of postage stamps. The house is securely packed in a wooden box, ready for shipment, making it a handsome and convenient present.

PRANG'S CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S CARDS,
 NOVELTIES AND SATIN ART PRINTS,
 METALLINE DECORATIONS AND CALENDARS.

. For full particulars, catalogues and price lists, address

L. PRANG & CO., Boston, Mass.

JAMES POTT & CO.

PUBLISHERS.

A NEW WORK BY DR. GEIKIE.

THE HOLY LAND AND THE BIBLE.

A Book of Scripture Illustrations, gathered in Palestine by CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D. D., Author of "Life of Christ," "Hours with the Bible," etc. Ready immediately. 2 vols., 1,400 pp., map, etc., $5.00.

It is full of intense interest from beginning to end, and is crowded full of information of the highest importance for the understanding and intelligent reading of the Holy Scriptures of both the Old and the New Testaments.—Notice from Advance Sheets.

UNFINISHED WORLDS: A Study in Astronomy.

By S. H. PARKES, F. R. A. S. With ten illustrative diagrams printed by photomezzotype. Crown 8vo, cloth, $1.50. Ready.

The author has endeavored to give a brief summary of the results of recent scientific discovery regarding the present physical condition of those far-off worlds which the telescope and the spectroscope have revealed to man.—From the Preface.

BOOKS WHICH HAVE INFLUENCED ME.

By twelve contributors: GLADSTONE, RUSKIN, HAGGARD, R. L. STEVENSON, HAMERTON, FARRAR, and others. Parchment paper, 25 cents.

NATURAL LAW IN THE SPIRITUAL World.

By HENRY DRUMMOND, F. R. S. E., F. G. S. Author's Edition, 438 pp., price $1.00.

"'Natural Law' is the latest and most magnificent discovery of science."

"Its originality will make it almost a revelation."—Christian Union.

"If you read only one book this year, let it be 'Natural Law in the Spiritual World.'"—American Institute of Christian Philosophy.

"Those who fail to read it will suffer a serious loss."—The Churchman.

DR. FOTHERGILL'S LAST BOOK.

THE WILL: Its Power in Success and Development of Character.

12mo, cloth, price $1.00. Third edition just ready.

"An inspiring book."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"All the greatest characters in history are summoned to prove that a sufficient amount of will power can accomplish anything."—Princetonian.

"A book of surpassing interest."—Chicago Times.

CHRISTENDOM: Ecclesiastical and Political, from Constantine to the Reformation.

By Rev. JOHN H. EDGAR, D. D. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

There will be found in this volume many notable facts in history, presented in their relations one to the other in such a way that many well-known occurrences may be viewed in new light. A complete study and survey of a period hitherto but slightly noticed.

14 & 16 ASTOR PL., NEW YORK.

FUNK & WAGNALLS,

18 & 20 Astor Place, New York.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

MISS HOLLEY'S POEMS.

"Josiah Allen's Wife's" latest book. A fascinating holiday book. Companion volume to "Sweet Cicely." 64 poems. The only book of poems ever issued by "Josiah Allen's Wife." Beautifully illustrated by William Hamilton Gibson and others. Luxuriously bound. Square 12mo, cloth, price $2.00.

"SWEET CICELY";

Or, Josiah Allen as a Politician." By "Josiah Allen's Wife." 30th thousand. Square 12mo, cloth, over 100 illustrations, price $2.00.

A BUNDLE OF LETTERS.

To Busy Girls. By Grace H. Dodge. A practical and important book. Natural, charming, and winsome in style and full of common sense. 16mo, cloth, cut flush, gold side stamp, 142 pages, price 50 cents.

THE FLAG ON THE MILL.

A Novel. By MARY B. SLEIGHT. 12mo, cloth, $1.50. Beautifully bound. Printed on fine paper. Five elegant full-page drawings. A most attractive holiday book.

The conception, the plot, the characters, the action, the lessons, the final complete impression, all show the hand of an accomplished writer and novelist. The interest is intense, even to the last page. Portions of it are highly dramatic. There is not a page of padding in the book.

THE SCIENCE OF POLITICS.

By WALTER THOMAS MILLS. 12mo, cloth, $1.00. A practical and important work.

"The purpose of this book is to give a simple statement of the more fundamental principles of civil life, and of the methods and conditions of their successful application to the conduct of affairs, under the forms and usages of our government. The desire has been to be useful rather than technical, and all is given in brief, plain form."—From the Introduction.

THE FAMOUS FIRST FOLIO EDITION (A. D. 1623) OF SHAKESPEAR'S PLAYS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

A photographic fac-simile. Every curious and important detail exactly reproduced. This book is the only means with which to test Donnelly's Shakespear Cipher, also his claim that in the plays is concealed an extended secret history. This 1623 edition is also the sole authority for the texts of many of the most important of Shakespear's plays. It is a rare book, unsurpassed in interest and critical value. As a literary treasure it is unexcelled.

THE MISSING SENSE.

And the Hidden Things Which it Might Reveal. Spiritual Philosophy treated on a rational basis. By C. W. WOODBRIDGE, B. S., M. D. 12mo, cloth, 60 cents.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN.

A remarkable companion volume to "Letters from Hell." 12mo, cloth, $1.00. Price of "Letters from Hell," $1.00. If ordered together, both books will be sent, postage free, for $1.75.

PARADISE.

A Novel. By Gen. LLOYD S. BAYNE. 12mo, paper, 25 cents.

A bright, humorous, telling satire on society in one of the great Western cities. The divorce customs are handled in a wise yet irresistibly funny manner. The author strikes powerful blows against wrong. The interest is intense.

GUNETHICS.

A book devoted to the social status of women. By J. W. BROWN, D. D., president of Wesleyan Female College, Cincinnati, O. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

Andover Publications.

TEXT-BOOKS.

Bascom, Pres. John. Political Economy. $1.50.
Bateman's Questions on Kuhner's Elementary Greek Grammar. Paper, 40 cents.

Buttmann. Grammar of the New Testament Greek. Prof. J. Henry Thayer's Translation. $2.75.

Cary, Prof. George L. Introduction to the Greek of the New Testament. 75 cents.
— Hebrew and English Psalter. In Parallelism. $1.00.

Doederlein's Handbook of Latin Synonyms. With an index of Greek words. $1.25.

Gardiner, Prof. Frederic. Harmony of the Gospels in Greek. Tischendorf's Text. $3.00.
— Harmony of the Gospels in English. $2.00.
— Life of Our Lord (Diatessaron). In the words of the Gospels, arranged for continuous reading. $1.00.
— Principles of Textual Criticism. 75 cents.

Jones. Elementary Hebrew Grammar. $1.50.

Mitchell, Prof. E. C. Principles of Hebrew Grammar. Paper, 15 cents.

Shedd, Prof. W. G. T. Lectures. $1.25.
— Theronian's Rhetoric. Eloquence a Virtue. $1.00.
— Guerike's Ancient Church History. $2.75.
— Guerike's Medieval Church History. $1.25.

Vibbert, W. H. A Guide to Reading Hebrew. $1.00.

Winer. Grammar of the Idiom of the N. T. Prof. J. Henry Thayer's Translation. $4.00.

Wright, Prof. J. F. Logic of Christian Evidences. $1.50.
— Studies in Science and Religion. $1.50.

COMMENTARIES.

Ellicott, Bishop C. J., on Galatians. $1.25;
— Ephesians. $1.25; Thessalonians. $1.25.
— Phil. Col. and Philemon. $1.75.
— The Pastoral Epistles. $1.75.

The Whole Set in two vols., $6.75.

Henderson, Dr. E., on the Minor Prophets. $3.00.
— Jeremiah and Lamentations. $2.25.
— Ezekiel. $1.75.

Lightfoot, Prof. J. B., on Galatians. $3.00.

Murphy, Prof. J. G., on Genesis. $3.00; Exodus. $2.50.
— Exodus. B. S. Edition. Crown 8vo, $1.25.
— Leviticus. $2.25; Psalms. $3.50.
— Book of Daniel. 16mo, $1.25.

Perowne, J. J. Stewart, on the Psalms. 2 vols., $6.75.

Stuart, Prof. Moses, on Romans. $1.75; Hebrews. $1.75.
— Proverbs. $1.50; Ecclesiastes. $1.25; Miscellanies. $1.25.

The Book of Enoch, translated from the Ethiopic, with notes. By Prof. Geo. H. Schodde. $1.75.

The Book of Esther. A New Translation. With notes, maps and illustrations. By the LOWELL HAZEN CLUB. Edited by Rev. J. W. Haley. $1.50.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Augustine's Confessions. Shedd's Edition. $1.25.

Ellicott, Bp. C. J. Life of Christ. $1.50.

Erskine's Internal Evidences. 60 cents.

Haley. Alleged Discrepancies of the Bible. $1.25.
— The Hereafter of Sin. 75 cents.

Harris, Prof. Samuel. Kingdom of Christ on Earth. $1.50.

Haven's Studies in Philosophy and Theology. $1.50.

Hill, Dr. Thomas. Natural Sources of Theology. Paper, 60 cents; cloth, 90 cents.

Hymns and Chords. By Profs. Park and Phelps and Rev. Dr. Furber. $1.25.

Immer. Hermeneutics of the N. T. Prof. A. H. Newman, Translator. $1.50.

Kelly's Proverbs of all Nations. $1.25.

Kennedy's Life of Christ (Messianic Prophecy). $1.25.

McCurdy, Prof. J. F. Aryo-Semitic Speech. $2.00.

Menod, Adolphe. Discourses on St. Paul. 90 cents.

Merrison. The Proofs of Christ's Resurrection, from a Lawyer's Standpoint. Revised edition. $1.25.

Park, Prof. E. A. Discourses on some Theological Doctrines as Related to the Religious Character. 400 pp., $2.50.

Powd, Dr. Enoch. Pastoral Theology. $1.25.

Reubelt. The Scripture Doctrine of the Person of Christ. Based on the German of Gess. $1.50.

Russell, Prof. Wm. Pulpit Elocution. $1.25.

Taylor, Dr. S. H. Classical Study. Its Value, etc. $1.50.

Thayer. The Hebrews and the Red Sea. By ALEXANDER WHISLOCK THAYER. With a map. 16mo, 140 pp., 80 cents.

Theologia Germanica. Ed. Prof. C. E. Stowe. $1.25.

Tyler, Prof. W. S. Theology of the Greek Poets. $1.50.

Whately, Archbishop. Essays, viz.: Difficulties in the Writings of St. Paul. $1.50; Peculiarities of the Christian Religion, etc., $1.50; Historic Doubts, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

* Send for a descriptive catalogue.

W. F. DRAPER, Publis'r, Andover, Mass.

S. E. CASSINO'S

LIST OF

* Holiday * Publications *

FOR 1887-S.

137 High St., Boston.

RIP VAN WINKLE. By WASHINGTON IRVING. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. This most popular story by Irving has been superbly illustrated by Mr. Merrill, whose illustrations for Thackeray's "Mahogany Tree" were so successful last season. The forty or fifty photographs and other illustrations are printed in appropriate tints. The binding is not the least attractive portion of the work. In cloth extra, boxed, $7.00.

THE PICTURESQUE COAST OF NEW ENGLAND. A handsome portfolio, containing twelve photogravures from drawings by Louis K. Harlow, each plate being 16x20 inches in dimensions, is issued. Large paper edition, portfolio or bound, $10.00; Japanese paper edition, signed proofs (50 copies), portfolio, $25.00; satin edition, signed proofs (25 copies), portfolio, $50.00.

MY GARDEN. An original poem by SIMON TUCKER CLARK, M. D. Illustrated by Lena J. Ringueberg and F. Schuyler Mathews. This is superbly illustrated by fine woodcuts, and makes a beautiful gift-book. Beautifully bound in cloth, size 9x13 inches, $4.50.

ROMEO AND JULIET. By WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Illustrated by superb wood-engravings after original compositions by the celebrated French artist, Androulli, and engraved by J. Huysot. The binding is unique, and will alone sell the book. Bound in satin, $2.50.

THE MAHOGANY TREE. By WILLIAM M. THACKERAY. Illustrated by the well-known artist, Frank T. Merrill. In new binding, $6.50; bound in full morocco, $12.00; bound in full tree calf, $15.00.

THE CHRISTMAS CAROL. By CHARLES DICKENS. Illustrated by the celebrated artists, I. M. Gauguier and T. V. Chominski. Cloth, in a box, $9.00.

ETCHINGS. By LOUIS K. HARLOW. Six etchings of American Scenery. $1.50.

BITS OF DUTCH LAND. By LOUIS K. HARLOW. A collection of Etchings of charming bits of Dutch Scenery. There are six etchings of very picturesque views made in Holland in 1896. $1.50.

BEACON LIGHT SERIES.

GREEN PASTURES AND STILL WATERS. This new work in the series of Beacon Light text-books for the month is even more attractive than the book from which it receives its name. It has a new and beautiful design for each day of the month, and the selections have been made with great care and good judgment. The book cannot fail to be very successful. The cover design is unique and very attractive. Size, 5½x6½ inches. Bronzed cover, $1.50; ivory binding, $2.00.

HABITATIONS OF GOD AND HIS WORSHIPPERS. By Miss ELIZABETH N. LITTLE. Bronze, $1.50; Ivory binding, $2.00.

LONG SHORE. By Miss ELIZABETH N. LITTLE. Tied with floss and put up in a neat box, $1.50; bound in ivory, $2.00.

BEACON LIGHTS FOR GOD'S MARINERS. By Miss E. N. LITTLE. A new edition of this work has been printed on larger paper, making a book 5½x6½ inches, which adds greatly to its appearance. Bronze, $1.50; Ivory, $2.00.

"GOD BLESS YOU." By WILLIAM HALE. Illustrated by Miss E. N. Little. With designs, $1.50.

THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET. By SAMUEL WOODWORTH. Illustrated by Louis K. Harlow. This very popular song has been illustrated in colors by the well-known water-color artist, Mr. Harlow. Tied with silk cord, $1.50.

BREEZES FROM OAK BLUFFS. A series of etchings of six characteristic sketches about this famous island. In neat wrapper, $1.50.

CHARMING BITS OF BOSTON HARBOUR. $1.00.

PLEASANT MEMORIES OF OLD NAN-TUCKET. $1.00.

NEW BOOKS.

Science and Immortality.

A "Symposium," giving the opinions of some of the most prominent scientific men in this country concerning the relation of science to the question of immortality. The major part of the discussion was published in the Carleton Register, attracting wide attention, and is now republished in more permanent form, with additional contributions from Prof. A. Graham Bell, Gen. A. W. Greely, Prof. Joseph Le Conte, Prof. Ira Remsen, and Prof. Edward C. Pickering. Square 16mo. Cloth, 75 cents, paper, 50 cents.

Social Equilibrium

And other Problems, Ethical and Religious.

By Rev. GEORGE BATCHELOR. These Essays relate to the many new questions of social and religious organization which have been forced upon the modern mind by scientific discovery and economical progress. They do not attempt to offer a panacea for the many evils of social life, but simply to describe and discuss some of the causes of social unrest and religious disintegration. They are hopeful, positive, and constructive. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

A NEW EDITION OF Bluffton.

By MINOT J. SAVAGE. This book, the author's only work of fiction, has for some been out of print. It is now republished in response to a popular demand. The New York correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat quotes the superintendent of a prominent Sunday-school as saying: "The author is Rev. Minot J. Savage, the prominent and eloquent Boston Unitarian clergyman. The book is a remarkable one, and even made me feel uncomfortable, as I have been in Calvinism as I supposed I was. Investigation showed that a score of our older scholars and several of the teachers had been very much impressed by the story, and had been talking the subject over. The book is all the more effective because it is a faithful portrayal, so I understand, of Mr. Savage's personal experience." Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price by

GEO. H. ELLIS, Publisher,

141 FRANKLIN STREET - - BOSTON.

BANGS & COMPANY,

739 & 741 Broadway,

WILL SELL AT AUCTION:

NOV. 28 and 29.—A Private Library of desirable Standard and Miscellaneous Books; many in handsome and substantial bindings.

NOV. 30.—An unusual collection of Books from a Private Library, including Allibone's Dictionary of Authors, extended to 26 volumes, with 2,421 portraits; extra illustrated copies of Drake's Biographical Dictionary, Byron's English Bards, Wynne's Private Libraries of New York, etc.

DEC. 1 and 2.—The third portion of the LIBRARY OF I. THOMAS SCHAF, A. M., LL. D., of Baltimore, comprising a large collection of Americana, Local and State Histories, etc.

DEC. 5 and 6.—A collection of Elegant Books. Fine Art Works, Standard and Miscellaneous Books in fine bindings.

Catalogues mailed upon application.

RICHARD LEPSIUS.

A BIOGRAPHY.

By GEORG EBERS.

FROM THE GERMAN BY ZOE DANA UNDERHILL.

WITH FRONTISPIECE.
One Vol., 12mo, Cloth, $1.25.

AUTHORIZED EDITION.

WM. S. GOTTSBERGER, Publish'r,
11 Murray Street, New York.

IN THE SELECTION OF A CHOICE GIFT

For Pastor, Parent, Teacher, Child, or Friend, both elegance and usefulness will be found combined in a copy of Webster's Unabridged.

Besides many other valuable features, it contains

A Dictionary
of 112,000 Words, 3000 Engravings,
A Gazetteer of the World
locating and describing 25,000 Places,
A Biographical Dictionary
of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
All in One Book.

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.
Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

JUST ISSUED, AND WILL BE SENT FREE ON APPLICATION.

Priced Catalogue No. 138

—OF—

ENGLISH BOOKS,

OLD AND NEW, INTERESTING, CURIOUS OR RARE.

JUST RECEIVED, AND FOR SALE AT LOW PRICES BY

ALEX'R DENHAM,

No. 744 Broadway,

CORNER OF ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.
CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.
BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of
A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY In the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.
RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

KLACKNER'S RECENT ETCHINGS:

EVENING IN A HAMLET of FINISTERE.
By W. L. LATHROP, from the painting by JULES BRETON.

Home of Evangeline. By F. RAUBICHECK.

Colonial Days. By JAS. S. KING.

Harbor of Quebec. By STEPHEN PARRISH.

The Marples. By C. MORGAN McLENNANT.

The Golden Age. By BENJ. LANDER.

Naming the Day. After F. C. JONES.

Eve. By Mrs. ANNA LEA MERRITT.

Silence. After WM. BLISS BAKER.

The May Festival. By F. M. GREGORY.

Venice. By THOS. MORAN.

Dordrecht. By THOS. MORAN.

Farm by the River. By G. W. H. RITCHIE.

Swallows' Home. By J. H. MILLSAUGH.

Purchasers of my COPYRIGHTED Engravings and Etchings have an absolute protection from inferior reproduction, such as all imported prints are liable to—there being no international copyright law to protect the latter—so, when visiting art stores anywhere, always ask for KLACKNER'S AMERICAN ENGRAVINGS AND ETCHINGS.

Klackner's
Portfolio
Stands.

IN EBONY, ASH, CHERRY OR
MAHOGANY.

O. KLACKNER, 17 East 17th St., New York.

Send for catalogue and for pamphlet on "Proofs and Prints." Price 10 cents.

Artistic Presents of Permanent Value.

High-class Etchings, mostly unprocurable elsewhere, costing when framed from $5.00 upward.

An Illustrated and Descriptive catalogue mailed on receipt of 10 cents. FREDERICK KEPPEL & CO., London, and 20 East 16th Street (Union Sq.), New York.

SENT FREE

A SAMPLE NO. OF THE Phrenological
Journal,

A magazine of HUMAN NATURE for every body.

35,000 Sold.
HOW TO STUDY THEM
A manual of Character Reading and a list of BOOKS on ing for the people, an intensely Phrenology, Physiognomy interesting and attractive book
Every body should read it. my Health, Heredity, &c 200 pages, 200 fine illus. 40 cts. Send address on postal.
FOWLER & WELLS CO., 775 Broadway, N. Y.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND
Lever needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to
R. C. HARTRANFT, 709 Sanson Street,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books.
Send for Catalogue of Americana.

DO YOU KNOW THAT

One Box of the D. K. Will Make O. K.
If you have Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Headache or any trouble with your STOMACH or LIVER,
DR. MARK E. WOODBURY'S
DYSPEPSIA KILLERS
will give immediate relief. All Druggists sell them for 5 cents a box (trial box 25 cents). Mailed to any address on receipt of price by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston.

✦ A Most Useful and Valuable Christmas Gift. ✦

CYCLOPÆDIAS

Every home, school, and office needs a Cyclopædia, which should be reliable, fresh as to information, and low in price. Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia (1887) is ten years later than either Appletons' or the Britannica, is more reliable and satisfactory, and costs only half as much.

A. J. JOHNSON & CO.,
11 Great Jones St., New York.

"NOT EQUALLED BY ANY OTHER."

Note. JOHNSON'S is now the latest, most complete, most satisfactory, and cheapest Cyclopædia in the market. Our sales are larger, each week, than all the others combined. JOHNSON'S is not a compilation, but a CREATION, its ASSOCIATE EDITORS and contributors being the greatest scholars in the world. Write for information as above.

NEW BOOKS AND RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

T. Y. CROWELL & CO.

13 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

Tennyson's Complete Poems.

Illustrated edition, with portrait and 24 full-page illustrations by celebrated artists. Engraved by George T. Andrew. Uniform in size and style with "Cambridge Book of Poetry." Royal 8vo, cloth, gilt, $5.00; morocco, gilt, $10.00; tree calf, $12.00.

Cambridge Book of Poetry and Song.

New and Revised Edition. With steel portrait of Longfellow and 16 full-page illustrations by Church, Dielman, Fredericks, Penn, Gifford, Murphy, Schell and others. Cloth, gilt edges, $5.00; full morocco, gilt, $10.00; tree calf, gilt, $12.00.

George Elliot's Poems.

Illustrated Edition. With 16 full-page illustrations by Garrett, St. John Harper and others. Engraved by George T. Andrew. 8vo, cloth, full gilt, $4.50; full morocco, $9.00; tree calf, $9.00.

Favorite Illustrated Edition of Popular Poets.

24 vols., square 8vo, cloth, gilt edge, $2.50 per vol.; tree calf, full russet or full morocco, padded covers, $6.00 per vol.

Red Line Poets.

Embossed Calf Edition. Padded covers, gilt edges. 40 vols., 12mo, $1.50 per vol.

Red Line Poets.

India Bamboo Edition. In new and elegant styles of embossed fancy leather binding. Padded covers, round corners, gilt edges. 30 vols., 12mo, $3.00 per vol.

Wild Rose Edition of the Poets.

Printed on laid paper, bound in extra cloth. Gilt edges, with wild rose design on cover in red and gold. 27 vols., 12mo, $2.00 per vol.

Tennyson's Works.

"Handy Volume Edition." From the latest text. Complete in 8 vols., large type, cloth, gilt top, $6.00; leather bindings in various styles from $12.00 to $30.00 per set. Each set in fancy box, suitable for presentation gift.

Les Misérables.

By VICTOR HUGO. Translated from the French by Miss Isabel F. Haggood. Illustrated edition, with 160 full-page illustrations. Printed on fine calendered paper, and bound in a neat, attractive style. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, 5 vols., $7.50; 12mo, half calf, $15.00; popular edition, in one vol., 12mo, $1.50.

Printed from new plate and large type.

"The most spirited rendering of Hugo's masterpiece into English, and the illustrations and the letter-press are just as deserving of praise."—Philadelphia Press.

"This translation of Victor Hugo's masterpiece is the best one that has been made."—New York Observer.

Poems in Color.

With 56 illustrations photographed by Armstrong & Co., from original designs by W. J. WHITMORE. Sea Pictures, by TENNYSON. Sunrise on the Hills, by LONGFELLOW. The Worship of Nature, by WHITTIER. I Remember, by HOOD. To a Water-Fowl, by BRYANT. To a Mountain Daisy, by BURNS. 6 vols., fancy paper covers, each 50 cents; cloth covers, stamped in gold, each 75 cents; celluloid covers lithographed, each $1.00.

A Dictionary of Poetical Quotations.

Based upon that of Henry G. Bohn. Revised, corrected and enlarged by the addition of over 1,200 quotations. By ANNA L. WARD. Crown 8vo, beveled boards, $2.50; interleaved edition, $3.50; half calf, $5.00.

Her Majesty's Tower.

By W. HERFORTH DIXON. A History of the Tower of London. 2 vols., 12mo, 47 illustrations, $3.50.

The result of twenty years' research and painstaking labor. Bringing the records of the Tower from the earliest legendary accounts down to the story of the last prisoners confined there.

Princes, Authors and Statesmen of Our Time.

By JAMES T. FIELDS, E. P. WHIPPLE, Canon FARRAR, LOUISE CHANDLER MOULTON and others. Edited by James Parton. With 60 illustrations. 8vo, $2.75.

Eminent Authors of the Nineteenth Century.

By DR. GEORG BRANDES. Translated by Rasmus B. Anderson, U. S. Minister to Denmark. A series of essays upon the works of John Stuart Mill, Hans Christian Andersen, Ernest Renan, Gustave Flaubert and other European writers. With portraits. 12mo, $2.00; half calf, $4.00.

From Heart and Nature.

Poems by SARAH K. BOLTON and CHARLES K. BOLTON. Cloth, 12mo, gilt top, $1.00.

Burnham Breaker.

By HOMER GREENE, author of the "Blind Brother," 12mo, $1.50.

Like the "Blind Brother," which has enjoyed such phenomenal success, "Burnham Breaker" is a story of the coal regions, and is constructed with remarkable skill, the plot being of thrilling but healthy interest. A better book for the young can scarcely be found.

The Giant Dwarf.

By J. A. K., author of "Who Saved the Ship," "Birchwood," "Fitch Club," "Prof. Johnny," "Riverside Museum," and other successful juveniles. 12mo, $1.25.

"The author of 'Birchwood,' 'Prof. Johnny,' and other tales, will always be sure of a welcome among young people, and 'The Giant Dwarf' will be found to rank among her most fascinating work."—Boston Traveller.

Fairy Legends of the French Provinces.

Translated by Mrs. M. CARRY, with introductory note by J. F. Jameson, Ph. D., of Johns Hopkins University. 12mo, $1.25.

These new and delightful Fairy Tales have the same qualities that make "Mother Goose" and the "Arabian Nights" classics. Children of almost any age cannot fail to find perennial pleasure in their racy fancy, shrewd wit, and quaint simplicity of style, all admirably preserved in the translation. They are interesting, amusing and instructive.

The Christmas Country, and Other Fairy Tales.

Translated from the Danish and German by MARY J. SAYFORD. With new and original illustrations by Charles Copeland. 12mo, $1.25.

Boyhood of Living Authors.

By WILLIAM H. RIDING. Sketches of the Early Life of Howells, Aldrich, Whittier, Gladstone, Clark Russell, Frank Stockton, etc. 12mo, $1.25.

All the sketches in this volume have been prepared with the consent, and generally with the assistance, of the authors represented; and many errors of fact in other biographies have been corrected. Mr. Riding has aimed at completeness and absolute authenticity in all his chapters.

Cuore.

An Italian School-Boy's Journal. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the thirty-ninth Italian edition, by Isabel F. Haggood. 12mo, $1.25.

"It has remained for an Italian writer to give to English speaking people the best book for boys that has yet been written. We say this with Tom Brown's delightful school days fresh in our recollection."—Portland Press.

Famous American Authors.

By SARAH K. BOLTON, author of "Poor Boys Who Became Famous," "Girls Who Became Famous," etc. 12mo, illustrated, $1.50.

"Especially rich in the little events and acts which, though often overlooked, give one a clearer idea of character than those which are marked as leading events."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Girls' Book of Famous Queens.

By LYDIA HOTT FARMER, author of "Boys' Book of Famous Rulers." 12mo, illustrated, $1.50.

"Mrs. Farmer has filled a want never filled before, and met a demand to which there has been no previous reply."—Boston Daily Traveller.

Who Saved the Ship?

By J. A. K., author of "Birchwood," "Fitch Club," "Riverside Museum," etc. 12mo, $1.25.

"One of the brightest books of the season."—Ohio State Journal.

Professor Johnny.

By J. A. K., author of "The Giant Dwarf," "Fitch Club," "Riverside Museum," etc. 12mo, $1.25.

"An admirable book for teaching boys the science of common things."—Home Journal.

Prudence Winterburn.

By SARAH DOUDNEY. 12mo, $1.25.

"Prudence Winterburn" is a wholesome story of English country life. The tale has genuine earnestness and power, and while it points a moral, the moral is not too obtrusive to dull the interest. It is an admirable book for girls.

Poor Boys Who Became Famous.

By SARAH K. BOLTON. Short biographical sketches of George Peabody, Horace Greeley, Bayard Taylor, Michael Faraday, General Sheridan, and other noted people, with numerous portraits, 12mo, $1.50.

"It is seldom that a book passes under our notice which we feel impelled to commend so highly to young readers, and especially to boys."—New York Observer.

Girls Who Became Famous.

By SARAH K. BOLTON. Short biographies of Harriet Beecher Stowe, George Eliot, Jean Ingelow, Harriet Hooper, Margaret Fuller, and other eminent women. With 20 Portraits. Companion book to "Poor Boys Who Became Famous." 12mo, $1.50.

"Such books as this will elevate the minds of young girls, help them to understand the real problem of life, and leave a lasting impression on their minds and character."—Boston Herald.

The Boys' Book of Famous Rulers.

By LYDIA HOTT FARMER. Lives of Agamemnon, Julius Caesar, Charlemagne, Frederick the Great, Richard Coeur de Lion, Robert Bruce, Napoleon, and other heroes of historic fame. Fully illustrated with portraits and numerous engravings. 12mo, price $1.50.

"One of the best publications of the kind we have seen."—Ohio State Journal.

Birchwood.

By J. A. K. 12mo, $1.25.

"A hearty, honest boys' book, which young people are sure to enjoy."—New York Mail and Express.

Riverside Museum.

By J. A. K. 12mo, $1.25.

"Thoroughly healthy in tone."—Nation.

"A very charming story for young folks."—Inter-Ocean.

The Fitch Club.

By J. A. K. 12mo, $1.25.

"The author has a happy way of telling a story in just the style calculated to interest boys."—Christian Union.

"My little boy has just learned to read. What series of books would you recommend which would take him along by slow degrees, interest him all the way, and prepare him for something better?"

"ANSWER: One series of books stands out and answers this question in all its conditions—books which have been read by two or three generations. A hundred thousand of our readers, at least, have guessed the name before we announce it to them:

THE ROLLO BOOKS.

Published by T. Y. Crowell & Co. of New York.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.

A new and cheaper edition now ready. 14 vols., bound in vols. Cloth, 16mo, $8.75.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO., 13 ASTOR PLACE, NEW YORK.

FREDERICK WARNE & COMPANY'S

HOLIDAY PUBLICATIONS.

* * * Bookbuyers are requested to see these books; they will be found well printed, illustrated, and attractively bound, and very suitable for gifts and prizes. Our new catalogue of standard and popular works, children's books and Sunday school libraries, mailed free on application.

WARNE'S "VICTORIA GIFT BOOKS."

Illustrated, uniform in size and style, handsome cloth bindings, price $2.00 each.

Arabian Nights. Revised edition, by the Rev. GEORGE FRYER TOWNSEND.

Andersen's (Hans) Fairy Tales. A new edition, by MRS. PAUL.

The Broad, Broad Ocean, and Some of its Inhabitants. Corals, Diving, Fishing, etc. By WILLIAM JONES, F.S.A.

The Treasures of the Earth; or, Mines, Minerals and Metals. By WILLIAM JONES.

Grimm's Tales and Stories. A new translation. With 16 illustrations.

Robinson Crusoe. With 100 illustrations by ERNEST GRISSET.

Swiss Family Robinson. Full of illustrations.

The Swan and Her Crew. By G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES.

Wildcat Tower. A Book for Boys. By G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES.

Nursery Rhymes, Tales and Jingles. 400 illustrations. Contains all the Fairy Tales, Folk Songs, Jingles, etc., known to childhood. A valuable collection founded on "Halliwell."

The Animal Creation. A Popular Introduction to Zoology. By T. RYMER JONES. 500 choice illustrations.

Mammalia. A Popular Introduction to Natural History. By T. RYMER JONES. 200 illustrations.

The Natural History of Birds. By T. RYMER JONES. 200 illustrations.

Flora Symbolica: Including Floral Poetry and the Language of Flowers. Page illustrations of flower groups in colors.

Karr's (Alphonse) Tour Round My Garden.

Howitt's (Mary) Tales of English Life. Illustrated.

Howitt's Tales for All Seasons.

We Three Boys; or, A Year of Adventure. By L. VALENTINE. The adventures of three boys on a trip to the Mediterranean and India. A capital book for school-boys.

Godfrey Maudslayi; or, The Squire's Grandsons. A capital story for boys. By E. W. FIRTH. 50 illustrations.

Peter Penitence, Gamekeeper and Gentleman. Natural History sketches and stories of life in the woods and fields. By G. CHRISTOPHER DAVIES.

Captain Mayne Reid's Last Story.

THE LAND OF FIRE. A tale of adventure in Tierra del Fuego, by Captain MAYNE REID. This was the last story written by this prince of story-tellers and boys' favorite. Published complete, with all the original and beautiful illustrations as issued in St. Nicholas. Small square 8vo, cloth, beveled boards, handsome design, $1.50.

CONJURER DICK; or, The Adventures of a Young Wizard. By Professor HOFFMAN (Angelo J. Lewis). A capital story for boys, into which the author introduces the knowledge of which he is an adept, and which is always acceptable to youngsters. Small square 8vo, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

THE GORDON LIBRARY OF STIRRING STORIES FOR BOYS.

By various authors. An entirely new series of books of adventure by good and known writers.

The Avalanche. By W. J. GORDON.

recking of the Sapphire. By HARRY the Outpost. By R. ANDRE.

the King's Throne. By W. J. GORDON.

Room Heroes. By A. L. KNIGHT.

lled. By PAUL BLAKE.

and in cloth, gilt, 12mo size, 6 vols., boxed,

CLEVER SOCIETY SKETCHES.

Quarto size, paper, tied with white ribbon, price 50 cents.

THE MAN WHO WOULD LIKE TO MARRY. Depicting, in twelve humorous sketches by HARRY PARKES, the vacillations of the society young man of the period.

Uniform with the above 50 cents.

A GIRL WHO WOULD NOT MIND MARRYING. Giving the other view of the situation.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES. A new and choice Presentation Edition, fully illustrated, and with numerous full-page colored pictures. Square 8vo, cloth, $3.00.

ARABIAN NIGHTS. Revised edition, fully illustrated, and with 16 colored page pictures. Uniform with the above in size and price, $3.00.

Always in season and always acceptable to the young. These editions have been prepared specially to meet the demand for well printed and well illustrated editions of these universal favorites.

An artistic little color-book.

YOUNG ENGLAND'S NURSERY RHYMES. Illustrated by CONSTANCE HASLEWOOD. With 100 charming illustrations in colors, after water-colors. Lithographed boards, 75 cents; or cloth, novel design, stamped in colors, $1.00.

Something from Santa Claus.

JAPPIE CHAPPIE, And How He Loved a Dollie. Told and illustrated by E. L. SHUTE. With eight full pages in color and quaint vignettes. 4to, picture cover, 50 cents.

* * * Also admirably adapted for decoration, screens, etc.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. In large type, full of pictures, and with 12 full-page colored illustrations. 4to, boards, lithographed cover, $1.50.

Uniform with the above. $1.50.

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS. Children's Edition. Large type. Twelve colored and plenty of plain illustrations.

STIRRING BOOKS FOR MANLY BOYS.

By the author of "Across Africa."

HARRY RAYMOND. His Adventures among Pirates, Slavers and Cannibals. By VERNEY LOVETT CAMERON, R. N., author of "Across Africa," etc. With original illustrations. Square 8vo, price $2.00.

RONALD HALLIFAX; or, He Would be a Sailor. By ARTHUR LEE KNIGHT. Illustrated, square 8vo, cloth, price $2.00.

POOR JACK. By CAPTAIN MARRYAT. Square crown 8vo, cloth, $2.00. With forty-six illustrations by Clarkson Stanfield, R. N.

Uniform with the above.

MASTERMAN READY. SETTLERS IN CANADA.

By CAPTAIN MARRYAT. New editions, with upwards of sixty choice illustrations, forming the best edition of these ever-popular books for boys. Square 8vo, cloth, elegant, $2.00 each.

BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

ETHEL FORTESCUE; or, Left in Charge. By CECILIA SELBY LOWNDES, author of "New Honors," "Lena Graham," etc. Illustrated by Edith Scannell. 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

By the author of "In the Time of Roses."

SYLVIA'S DAUGHTERS. By FLORENCE SCANNELL. Daintily illustrated with 24 engravings in tints, by Edith Scannell. Small 4to, cloth, gilt and gilt edges, $1.50.

STANDARD SETS

For Presentation.

A SOUVENIR OF ENGLAND.

ABBEYS, CASTLES AND ANCIENT HALLS OF ENGLAND AND WALES. Their Legendary Lore and Popular History. By JOHN TIMBS. Re-edited, revised and enlarged, by Alexander Gunn. Illustrated with twelve photographs by Frith. In 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, price, boxed, $7.50; or three-quarters calf, elegant, $15.00.

HALF HOURS WITH BEST AUTHORS.

By CHARLES KNIGHT. The new edition, with the biographies revised. 4 vols., maroon cloth, gilt tops. Each volume with steel frontispiece of some noted author. Boxed, per set, $5.00; three-quarters calf, $12.00.

Uniform with the above, and by the same author.

HALF HOURS OF ENGLISH HISTORY.

From the Roman period to Queen Victoria. Steel frontispieces. 4 vols., cloth, boxed, $6.00.

NAPIER'S PENINSULAR WAR. History of the War in the Peninsula, and in the South of France, from the year 1807 to 1814, by Major-General Sir W. F. P. NAPIER, K. C. B. New edition, revised by the author, with fifty-five steel maps and plans. 6 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, $9.00 per set, boxed.

Of all booksellers, or mail, free, on receipt of price by

FREDERICK WARNE & CO., Publishers,
20 Lafayette Place, New York.

THE December number of LIPPINCOTT'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE opens with "From the Ranks," another brilliant military novel from Capt. Charles King, whose "Deserter," in the May number, won widespread admiration. "Prof. Cadmus's Great Case," by Albion W. Tourgee, is the first of a series of short stories of mystery, complication, and detective ingenuity, to be published under the general heading, "With Gauge and Swallow." Each story is complete in itself, though all revolve around a common center of interest.

In addition, Miss F. C. Baylor contributes a delightful bit of humor, "The Drum-Major"; Lucy C. Lillie, an entertaining and valuable sketch of "Jenny Lind-Goldschmidt," with personal reminiscences; Janet Edmondson, formerly of the Boston Ideals, an amusing account of "My First Appearance"; and there are sketches, poems, and essays by Ella Wheeler-Wilcox, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, Bessie Chandler, Mary Parmele, etc.; entertaining "Gossip" and "Book-Talk."

The addition of a complete novel to the regular magazine miscellany has proved a great popular success, and will be retained during the coming year. Novels are promised from so brilliant an array of writers as Amelie Rives, Edgar Saltus, Wm. H. Bishop, Brander Matthews, Julia Magruder, Maud Howe, Mrs. A. L. Wis-ter, and others.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Those subscribing before end of this year will receive the December number (Capt. King's "From the Ranks") free of charge.

Single copies, 25 cents. Annual subscription, $3.00.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers,
PHILADELPHIA.

For sale by all booksellers, or free by mail on receipt of price, by the publishers.

20 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

LEE AND SHEPARD'S HOLIDAY LIST.

Miss Jerome's New Book.

A BUNCH OF VIOLETS

Gathered by IRENE E. JEROME. Original illustrations, engraved on wood and printed under the direction of Andrew. 4to, cloth, $3.75; Turkey morocco, $9.00; tree calf, $9.00; English seal style, $7.00.

As we turn over the rich pages we seem to inhale the peculiar delicate odor of violets, while we follow the poet and the artist through flowering meadows, up and down green slopes, beside cool flowing waters, in sequestered valleys, along shaded forest walks. Now we are beside a rushing little waterfall, now under a tall tree. The sentiment of the poems are sweet, tender and pure as the violets themselves, and come from His Word who wrote His love on the hillside and meadows in the language of these "floral apostles."

—Christian Secretary.

NATURE'S HALLELUJAH

By IRENE E. JEROME. Fifty full-page original illustrations (9½ x 14 inches), engraved on wood by Andrew. Elegantly bound in gold cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, $6.00; Turkey morocco, $12.00; tree calf, $12.00; English seal style, $10.00.

ONE YEAR'S SKETCH BOOK

By IRENE E. JEROME. Containing forty-six original full-page illustrations, engraved on wood by Andrew; in same bindings and at same prices as "Nature's Hallelujah."

The MESSAGE of the BLUEBIRD

TOLD TO ME TO TELL TO OTHERS. By IRENE E. JEROME. Engraved on wood by Andrew. Cloth and gold, $2.00; palatine boards, ribbon ornaments, $1.00.

"Every thick, creamy page is embellished by some gems of art. Sometimes it is but a dash and a few trembling strokes; at others, an impressive landscape; but in all and through all runs the master touch. Miss Jerome has the genius of an Angelo, and the execution of a Guido."—Washington Chronicle.

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN

By SIR WALTER SCOTT. With 14 full-page illustrations by Percy Macquoid, R. I. Oblong 4to, size 10½ x 14. Bound in gold cloth, $3.50; Turkey morocco gilt, $9.00; tree calf, $9.00; English seal style, $7.00.

"The illustrations are black and white sketches, done in the broad way, and will commend themselves as original, forceful and modern. The volume is a holiday book of the finest kind. The French would call it a haute nouveauté. The illustrations are in the style of Fortuny and Madrazzo, and are not injured by petty details and distracting vignettes, the performance being entirely honest and straightforward. It is an art book, not merely a decorative affair."—Boston Beacon.

PLASTIC SKETCHES

By J. G. and J. F. Low, the famous tile-artists, being a series of 47 designs, 10 x 12 inches, in satin portfolios of unique design. Price $10.00.

FAITH'S FESTIVALS

By MARY LAKEMAN, author of "Pretty Lucy Merwin" and "Ruth Eliot's Dream." Price in cloth gilt, $1.00; in palatine boards, with floss trimmings, 75 cents.

MEADOW MELODIES

By CHARLES F. GERRY. Cloth, illustrated, $1.75.

TALKS TO YOUNG MEN

WITH "ASIDES" TO YOUNG WOMEN. By ROBERT COLLYER, Minister of the Church of the Messiah, New York. $1.25 (about).

POEMS

By DAVID ATWOOD WASSON. With portrait. Edited by Mrs. EDNA DEAN CHENEY. Cloth, $1.25.

PRE-GLACIAL MAN AND THE ARYAN RACE

A History of Creation, and of the birthplace and wanderings of man in Central Asia, from B. C. 32,500 to B. C. 15,000. With a History of the Aryan Race, commencing B. C. 15,000; their rise and progress, and the promulgation of the first Revelation; their spiritual decline and the destruction of the nation, B. C. 4,795; the Inroad of the Turanians, and the scattering of the remnant of the race, B. C. 4,394, as deciphered from a very ancient document. Also an exposition of the law governing the formation and duration of the Glacial Period, and a record of its effects on man and on the configuration of the globe. A chapter on the Deluge, its cause, locality and extent, and an account of the "Oannes Myth." By LORENZO BURGE. Cloth, $1.50.

THE ART OF PROJECTING

A Manual of Experimentation in Physics, Chemistry and Natural History with the Porte-Lumière and Magic Lantern, also with Electric Lights and Lamps, and the Production and Phenomena of Vortex Rings. By Prof. A. E. DOLEAR, inventor of the telephone. New edition, illustrated, $2.00.

CA IRA! or, Danton in the French Revolution

By LAWRENCE GRONLUND, author of "The Co-operative Commonwealth, an Exposition of Collectivism." Cloth, $1.25.

The FORTUNES of the FARADAYS

Is Miss DOUGLAS's new novel. Uniform with Lee & Shepard's Library Series of the Douglas novels. 17 vols, cloth, $1.50 per vol.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-FELLOW

HIS LIFE, HIS WORKS, HIS FRIENDSHIPS. By GEORGE LOWELL AUSTIN. Profusely illustrated. Cloth, $2.00. New edition; formerly published by subscription.

LIFE AND TIMES OF WENDELL PHILLIPS

By GEORGE LOWELL AUSTIN. With steel portrait and illustrations. Cloth, $1.50. New edition. The only complete "Life" of the great agitator.

READY ABOUT; or, Sailing the Boat

Cloth, illustrated, $1.25. OLIVER OPTIC's latest, completing the Boat-Builders Series, which are now ready in 6 vols. (boxed), $1.25 per vol.

ONLY A YEAR, AND WHAT IT BROUGHT

A BOOK FOR GIRLS. By JANE ANDREWS, author of "Ten Boys who Lived on the Road from Long Ago to Now," "Seven Little Sisters who Live on the Round Ball that Floats in the Air," "The Seven Little Sisters Prove their Sisterhood," etc. Illustrated, $1.00.

PETER BUDSTONE, THE BOY WHO WAS HAZED

By J. T. TROWBRIDGE. Cloth, illustrated, $1.25. Completing the Tide Mill Stories, which are now ready, 6 vols. (boxed), $1.25 per vol.

SIXTEEN FAVORITES

IN NEW DRESSES.

Rock of Ages.

It Was the Calm and Silent Night.

Nearer, My God, to Thee.

My Faith Looks Up to Thee.

He Giveth His Beloved Sleep.

The Lord is My Shepherd.

Home, Sweet Home.

Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?

Come into the Garden, Maud.

From Greenland's Icy Mountains.

Abide with Me.

The Breaking Waves Dashed High.

The Mountain Anthem.

That Glorious Song of Old.

Tennyson's Dora.

Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight.

IN

The English Seal Style.

Heavy tinted paper, gilt edges and fine leather. Price $1.75 each.

AND

The Alhambra Style.

Comprising the above, printed on large paper with decorated covers and "Alhambra" boards, "ragged edge" and ribboned. An original and attractive style. Price $1.00 each.

TWELVE FAVORITES

IN

The Lilliputian Style,

KNOWN AS

GOLDEN MINIATURES.

Oh, Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?

That Glorious Song of Old.

It Was the Calm and Silent Night.

Gray's Elegy.

The Breaking Waves Dashed High.

Ring Out, Wild Bells.

Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight.

Rock of Ages. Home, Sweet Home.

Abide with Me. Nearer, My God, to Thee.

My Faith Looks Up to Thee.

Bound in the attractive palatine boards, gilt edge, ribboned, 50 cents each; gold cloth, gilt, 50 cents each.

In great demand for

SCHOOL PRESENTS

And as substitutes for

CHRISTMAS

"These pretty books are beautifully printed on fine paper, and the pictures are admirable in drawing engraving. They form an exceptionally attractive set for a holiday gift, for which purpose they can in demand."—Boston Gazette.

Sold by all booksellers, and sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Illustrated Holiday Catalogue mailed free.

LEE AND SHEPARD, PUBLISHERS, BOSTON.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 25.
WHOLE No. 338.

{ E. H. HAMES & Co.,
Publishers.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 10, 1887.

{ Office, 1 Somerset St.,
Room 11.

Ten Cents per Copy.
$2.00 per Year.

JUST PUBLISHED:

By JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS.

FREE JOE, and Other Georgian Sketches.

Including Free Joe, Little Compton, Aunt Fountain's Prisoner, Trouble on Lost Mountain and Azalia. 12mo, $1.00.

This new collection of the most recent stories by the author of the "Uncle Remus" tales will be welcomed by thousands. Full of sympathy with the characters he portrays, and inimitable in his droll humor and strong delineations of Southern life and character, Mr. Harris has placed these stories on an equal footing with his best previous work.

"Mr. Harris has done nothing better than 'Free Joe and the Rest of the World'—the very title is a sermon."—Harper's Magazine.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF ESSAYS

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

These two volumes contain many delightful essays on a great variety of subjects, the papers being marked by the same incisiveness of style and vigor and subtlety of thought that characterize the author's other works.

MEMORIES AND PORTRAITS.

12mo, $1.00.

VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE, and Other Papers.

12mo, $1.00.

SEND 10 CENTS

With 50 BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATIONS.

A complete review by distinguished writers of the holiday books, with fifty superb illustrations—over twenty-five in colors. Special cover in three colors. The fullest and most beautiful guide to the Christmas literature of the year. Sent, postpaid, for 10 cents.

Contributions by John Burroughs,

Edith M. Thomas,
Howard Pyle,
Mrs. Barton Harrison,
H. H. Boyesen,
E. H. Stoddard,
Laurence Hutton,
J. B. Millet,
H. W. Mable,
J. Ashby-Storrey.

Illustrations by

W. Hamilton Gibson,
F. S. Church,
Joseph Pennell,
Childe Hassam,
F. Hopkinson Smith,
Frank S. King,
Francis Day,
Edmund H. Garrett,
Howard Pyle,
Philip G. Hamerton.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,
743-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES:

CONTAINING
STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE
in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE,
With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference,
Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German,
Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon,
Latin and Greek.

681 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORR. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLET, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME. Together with notes of sermons and other pieces.

CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. STOKES. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CERVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRBOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIÈRE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PREY'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RICHTER'S LEVANA.

RICHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

BOOKS BY MR. HENTY.

"Among writers of stories of adventure for boys Mr. Henty stands in the very first rank."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive or trimmed edges, $2.00 each. Each book is beautifully illustrated with from eight to twelve full-page pictures.

Bonnie Prince Charlie. A Tale of Fontenoy and Culloden. A book of the most stirring incident.

For the Temple. A Tale of the Fall of Jerusalem. A story of thrilling interest.

In Freedom's Cause. A Story of Wallace and Bruce. "Full of stirring action, and will commend itself to boys."—Athenæum.

The Lion of the North. A Tale of Gustavus Adolphus and the Wars of Religion. "This book should hold a place among the classics of youthful fiction."—United Service Gazette.

The Young Carthaginian. A Story of the Times of Hannibal. "Second to none of Mr. Henty's former tales."—Pall Mall Gazette.

True to the Old Flag. A Tale of the American War of Independence. "Does justice to the pluck and determination of the British soldiers."—The Times.

The Bravest of the Brave; or, With Peterborough in Spain. "All lads will read the book with pleasure and profit."—Daily Telegraph.

For Name and Fame; or, Through Afghan Passes. "Not only a rousing story, but an instructive history of a recent war."—Glasgow Herald.

The Dragon and the Raven; or, The Days of King Alfred. "Perhaps the best story of the early days of England which has yet been told."—Court Journal.

In the Reigu of Terror. The Adventures of a Westminster Boy. A tale of the French Revolution.

Orange and Green. A Tale of the Boyne and Limerick.

With Clive in India; or, The Beginnings of an Empire. "Mr. Henty here exceeds himself in stirring adventures and thrilling situations."—Saturday Review.

A Final Be reckoning. A Tale of Bush Life in Australia. "Mr. Henty has never published a more readable or a better written story than this."—Spectator.

With Wolfe in Canada; or, The Winning of a Continent. "A model of what a boy's story-book should be."—School Guardian.

Under Drake's Flag. A Tale of the Spanish Main. "A real good story, really well told."—Punch.

Through the Fray. A Story of the Ludite Riots. "One of the best of the many good books Mr. Henty has produced."—The Standard.

St. George for England. A Tale of Cressy and Poitiers. "A story of very great interest for boys."—Pall Mall Gazette.

By Sheer Pluck. A Tale of the Ashanti War. "The lad must be very difficult to satisfy who is not satisfied with this story."—Scotsman.

Facing Death. A Tale of the Coal Mines. "This is the book we would recommend to give as a present to a boy who is worth his salt."—Standard.

*. New Holiday Catalogue, also a Complete List of Books for the Young, with Synopsis of their Contents, will be supplied on Application.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

The Count of Monte-Cristo.

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

With nearly 500 illustrations from designs by Beauce, Staal and other eminent French artists. 5 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

Uniform with the superbly illustrated edition of "Les Misérables" published last year.

"In many forms has 'The Count of Monte-Cristo' come before readers of English; never in guise so rich and worthy as that now given to it at the Messrs. Routledge's hands. . . . They [the illustrations] are not only remarkable as illustrations, and as specimens of a style of engraving deserving artistic perpetuity, but they also afford a generous view of the costumes and manners of the French people during the reign of Louis Philippe. . . . In mechanical execution this edition leaves nothing to be desired. . . . The translation is smooth, grammatical, and sufficiently faithful. Could the most exacting admirer of Dumas ask for more?"—Literary World.

Notre-Dame.

By VICTOR HUGO.

With illustrations from designs by Victor Hugo, Bayard, Brion, Johannot and other eminent French artists. 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, $6.00.

Uniform with "Les Misérables" and "The Count of Monte-Cristo." Pronounced finer than any French edition by Hugo's literary executor (Paul Meurice).

Carmen. By PROSPER MERIMÉE. With illustrations from designs by S. Arcois, engraved by A. Nargeot. 12mo, half levant, gilt top, $5.00.

The fine paper, broad margins, exquisite illustrations, attractive typography and rich binding make this without dispute the choicest edition that has ever appeared of any of Mérimée's works.

Sylvie: Recollections of Valois. By GÉRARD DE NERVAL. Preface by Ludovic Halévy. With 42 etchings by Ed. Rudaux. 12mo, half levant, gilt top, $4.00.

Fragrant with the memories of the days of early love, written in a most tender, charming, yet simple style. Uniform with Mérimée's "Carmen."

Paul and Virginia. By BERNARDIN DE ST. PIERRE. With 120 woodcuts and 12 full-page engravings from designs by Maurice Leloir. Large 8vo, cloth, $13.50; in a cloth portfolio, $12.00.

The illustrations so sympathetically interpret the text that new beauties are discovered through them in this forever charming pastoral of child-love.

Père Goriot: Scenes from Parisian Life. By HONORE DE BALZAC. Translated by Miss Katharine Prescott Wormley. With illustrations by Lynch, engraved by Abot. 8vo, boards, $4.00.

The heavy paper and broad margins, together with the exquisite designs of Lynch, and skillful engraving of Abot, render it incontestably the handsomest edition ever published of any of Balzac's works. Imported by permission of Messrs. Roberts Brothers, who own the copyright of this translation.

Voices of the Flowers. Illustrated and arranged by HARRIET STEWART MINER. With poetical quotations from Longfellow, Whittier, Shakespeare, Moore. Each, $1.00.

The quotations appear on alternate pages, with appropriate pictures of flowers facing them. They are printed in colors, the covers being hand-painted and embossed.

The Vicar of Wakefield. By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. With a prefatory memoir by George Saintsbury, and 114 colored illustrations by V. A. Porson. Royal 8vo, cloth extra. Printed in colors and gilt top, $5.00; three-quarters levant, $8.00; full levant, $12.00.

"The distinction of the book is its illustrations, of which there are one hundred and fourteen. . . . They interest and please by their minuteness and fineness, by their brightness and warmth, by their quietness, by their pertinency to the text, by their reproduction of the salient points in the story, by their harmony with history, by their artistic truth and mechanical merit."—Literary World.

Idyls of the Months. A book of colored designs, emblematic of the year, with appropriate verses. By MARY A. LATHBURY. 4to, cloth, with gold, silver and three colors in inks; in a box, $3.50; also bound plain and tied with ribbon, in a box, $2.50; also in boards, $2.00.

The Literary World says: "It is a true poetic conceit." . . . "One of the choice books of the season," says the Christian Union. The Harford Courant says: "It is sure to find favor in the holidays." Susan Coolidge says: "It is one of the prettiest volumes of the year." And the Cincinnati Gazette declares it "A showy and unique boudoir publication."

For sale by all booksellers, or, sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, 9 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

Our Darlings: at Home, in Town, at the Seaside, in the Country and at Play. By MARS. Printed in colors and gold by Plon. Oblong 4to, cloth, $3.00; boards, $2.50.

First published in France, where it met with great success among both old and young. The children, laughing, dancing, romping, doing everything that children (and only children) can do—gracefully drawn and most charmingly colored—crowd every page with their happy faces, so that the text is obliged to wedge itself in as best it can.

Last "Graphic" Pictures. By RANDOLPH CALDECOTT. Printed in colors. Oblong 4to, boards, $3.00.

Similar to his "Graphic Pictures" and "More Graphic Pictures" previously published. Overflowing with humorous conceits, and provoking good-natured laughter at human follies and weaknesses.

The Fairy Tales of the COUNTESS D'AULNOY. Translated by J. R. Planché. New edition. With numerous illustrations by Gordon Browne and Lydia F. Emmet. 4to, cloth, $2.00; boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

"It is delightful to turn from the earlier mutilated paraphrases of these incomparable stories to the fresh, simple and accurate versions of this practiced man of letters, who was not vain enough to think he could better his author."—R. H. STODDARD, in N. Y. Mail and Express.

Stories of Persons and Places in Europe. By E. L. BENEDICT. Copiously illustrated. 4to, boards, with lithographed double cover, $1.50.

"A capital book to teach and interest American children in the geography, antiquities, legends, historical events and personages, industries and works of art in foreign countries."—Boston Globe.

Mattie's Secret. By EMILE DESBEAUX. With 100 illustrations. 4to, boards, with lithographed double covers, $1.25.

"A charming little child-story, combining, in the most delightful manner, instruction with amusement. . . . We cordially commend it to the notice of our readers in search of pleasant and profitable reading for their children."—Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

Every Boy's Annual for 1888. Edited by EDMUND ROUTLEDGE. Twenty-sixth year of publication. With numerous illustrations. 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

"The stories of travel and adventure, biographies, notes on natural history, expositions of parlor magic, tales of the French retreat from Russia, of Arctic exploration, of adventures in the bush, and of earthquakes, combine to make the volume extremely interesting."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Wonderful Cities of the World. By HELEN A. SMITH. With numerous illustrations, many full-page. 4to, about 700 pages, cloth, $3.00.

"A book which is calculated to give much pleasure and instruction. . . . To bright boys and girls the volume will be the next best thing to a trip round the world."—Boston Advertiser.

Youngsters' Yarns. By ASCOTT R. HOPE. With illustrations by C. O. Murray. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

"Reading of the most attractive kind for youngsters, and, though veritable accounts of veritable experiences, have all of the stirring attractiveness of the most exciting fiction, and afford profitable examples of the value and advantage of courage, frankness and self-reliance."—Saturday Evening Gazette.

D. APPLETON & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED:

I.

THE DIVINE MAN.

FROM THE NATIVITY TO THE TEMPTATION. By GEORGE DANA BOARDMAN, D. D., author of "The Creative Week," etc. With frontispiece. 12mo, cloth, gilt, price $1.50.

This presentation of the Life of Christ is well calculated, by its original form and fresh treatment, to stir the sympathies and awaken the imagination. It is a suitable volume for a Christmas gift.

II.

THE LAWYER, THE STATESMAN, AND THE SOLDIER.

By GEORGE S. BOUTWELL. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, price $1.25.

CONTENTS: Rufus Choate, the Lawyer—Daniel Webster, the Statesman—President Lincoln, the Statesman and Liberator—General Grant, the Soldier and Statesman.

"The preparation of these sketches is due to the circumstance that it is my fortune to have had the acquaintance of the persons to whom the sketches relate. These pages may show the marks of friendship rather than the skill of the biographer or the research of the historian. I have written in obedience to the rule or maxim that we value a man by the measure of his strength, at the place where he is strongest."—From the Introduction.

III.

WEATHER:

A POPULAR EXPOSITION OF THE NATURE OF WEATHER CHANGES FROM DAY TO DAY. By the Hon. RALPH ABERCROMBY, Fellow of the Royal Meteorological Society, London. "International Scientific Series." 12mo, cloth, with numerous cuts, price $1.75.

"This book is not intended to be in any way an encyclopedia of meteorology, or a mere repository of facts. Our endeavor has been to sketch the great principles of the science as a whole, and to give a clear picture of the general conclusions as to the actual nature of weather to which meteorologists have been led. The whole of this work is devoted to weather, in the tropics as well as in the temperate zone."—From the Preface.

IV.

ORIGINS of the ENGLISH PEOPLE and of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

COMPILED FROM THE BEST AND LATEST AUTHORITIES. By JUAN ROEMER, LL. D., Professor of the French Language and Literature, and Vice-President of the College of the City of New York. With chart and lithographic fac-similes of Anglo-Saxon and early French writings. 1 vol., 8vo, pages xxiii., 658, cloth, price, $3.50.

V.

WEALTH AND PROGRESS:

A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE LABOR PROBLEM. The Natural Basis for Industrial Reform, or How to Increase Wages without Reducing Profits or Lowering Rents: the Economic Philosophy of the Eight-Hour Movement. By GEORGE GUNTON. 12mo, cloth, price $1.00.

VI.

LITTLE PETER:

A CHRISTMAS MORALITY FOR CHILDREN OF ANY AGE. By LUCAS MALET, author of "Colonel Enderby's Wife," etc. With numerous illustrations. Square 12mo, cloth, decorated, price, $1.25.

The author, who is reputed to be a daughter of Charles Kingsley, exhibits in this charming story a genius not unlike that of her father in similar imaginative sketches.

For sale by all booksellers; or any work sent by the publishers by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price.

1, 3 & 5 BOND STREET, NEW YORK.

TWO SUPERB GIFT BOOKS.

WITH ILLUSTRATIVE DESIGNS BY WILL H. LOW.

KEATS'S

ODES AND SONNETS.

J. B. Lippincott Company have pleasure in announcing that the "Odes and Sonnets" of Keats, with illustrative designs by Will H. Low, is now ready. It is issued in uniform style with "Lamia," the favorite of the Holiday Art Books, and it is confidently expected that the new volume will surpass the popularity achieved by the artist's first work, Mr. Low having given fifteen months' careful study in Florence and Paris to the preparation of the drawings.

KEATS'S

LAMIA.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRESS:

"All lovers of Keats will be glad to know his 'Odes and Sonnets' has been embellished with designs by Will H. Low, so well known already as the artist of the 'Lamia.' We need only say the designs are, like the former ones, most worthy in spirit and execution of the poetry of Keats. They illustrate in the most literal and full sense of the word."—Chicago Journal of Commerce.

"One of the most elegant and sumptuous of illustrated volumes ever published is Keats's poem, 'Lamia,' illustrated by Will H. Low, who has fully caught the spirit of the poet, and has furnished drawings which for refinement of types and ideas, for poetic ideality, and for their excellence of execution, can command the warmest praise."—New York Herald.

Both books are bound in uniform style at the following prices: Cloth, $15.00; Japanese Silk, $25.00; Morocco, $25.00.

If not obtainable at your booksellers', send direct to the publishers, who will forward the book, free of postage, promptly on receipt of price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT CO., Publishers,

715 and 717 Market Street,

PHILADELPHIA.

NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.

Suitable for Holiday Gifts.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S WAVERLEY NOVELS.

New Library Edition. Complete in 25 octavo volumes. Cloth, gilt top, $43.75; half morocco, $56.25; half calf, gilt, marbled edges, $75.00. Special Edition, with 10 extra steel plates (in all, 185 plates). Sets, in cloth boards, 25 vols., $62.50; full tree calf, gilt edges (London), $150.00.

"We are glad to say of it that it is the most desirable set that we have ever seen." — Boston Advertiser.

UNIVERSAL HISTORY.

In 4 vols., extra cloth, gilt top, $5.75. Each volume sold separately.

Modern History. By ARTHUR ST. GEORGE PATTON, B. A. $1.50.

Ancient History. By GEORGE RAWLINSON, M. A. $1.50.

Medieval History. By GEORGE THOMAS STOKES, D. D. $1.50.

Geological History. By EDWARD HULL, M. A., LL. D. $1.25.

HALF-HOURS WITH AMERICAN HISTORY.

Selected and arranged by CHARLES MORRIS. 2 vols., crown 8vo, uniform with "Half-Hours with the Best American Authors." Cloth, gilt top, $3.00; half morocco, $5.00; three-quarters calf, $6.50.

WORCESTER'S DICTIONARY.

Standard Royal Quarto Dictionary of the English Language. Unabridged, profusely illustrated with wood-cuts and full-page plates. Edition of 1887. Enlarged by the addition of a New Pronouncing Biographical Dictionary of nearly 12,000 personages, and a New Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World, noting and locating over 20,000 places. Sheep, marbled edges, $10.00; half turkey morocco, marbled edges, $12.00; half russias, marbled edges, $12.00. With Denison's Patent Index, 75 cents additional.

LIPPINCOTT'S PRONOUNCING GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD.

A Complete Geographical Dictionary. Thoroughly revised. Containing supplementary tables, with the most recent census returns. Royal 8vo, sheep, $12.00; half morocco, $15.00; half russias, $15.00.

LIPPINCOTT'S PRONOUNCING BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

Containing complete and concise biographical sketches of the eminent persons of all ages and countries. New edition. Thoroughly revised and enlarged. By J. THOMAS, M. D., LL. D. 1 vol., imperial 8vo, sheep, $12.00; half morocco, $15.00; half russias, $15.00.

CYCLOPÆDIC SCIENCE SIMPLIFIED.

By J. H. PEPPER, late Professor of Chemistry and Honorary Director of the Royal Polytechnic Institution, etc. With 650 illustrations. Fourth revised edition, with additions. 1 vol., 8vo, extra cloth, $2.50.

The work embraces LIGHT, HEAT, ELECTRICITY, MAGNETISM, PNEUMATICS, ACOUSTICS and CHEMISTRY.

ODES AND SONNETS OF KEATS. WITH PHOTOGRAVURES.

From designs by Will H. Low. Uniform with "Lamia." Folio. The holiday book of the season. Extra cloth, $15.00; Japanese silk, $25.00; morocco, $25.00.

LAMIA. WITH PHOTOGRAVURE ILLUSTRATIONS.

By JOHN KEATS. Designs by Will H. Low. The favorite of the holiday art books. Folio, printed on plate paper, and containing 40 reproductions in photogravure from original drawings, handsomely bound in extra cloth, $15.00; elegantly bound in Japanese silk, $25.00; morocco, $25.00.

FAUST. WITH ETCHINGS.

The Legend and the Poem. By W. S. WALSH. Illustrated by Hermann Faber. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

THE DESERTED VILLAGE. WITH ETCHINGS.

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH. Illustrated by M. M. Taylor. 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt, $3.00; ivory surface, $3.50; alligator, $3.50; morocco, $4.50; tree calf, $7.50.

THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD. WITH ETCHINGS.

By ELIZABETH WETHERELL. Complete in one volume. Illustrated by Frederick Dielman. Cabinet 8vo, printed on laid paper, cloth extra, $2.50.

THREE POEMS. WITH WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

Royal 8vo, extra cloth, $6.00; ivory surface, $6.00; full tree calf, $10.00.

EUDORA. A TALE OF LOVE.

By M. B. M. TOLAND, author of "Ægle and the Elf," "Iris," etc. A beautiful gift volume. With charming illustrations by H. Siddons Mowbray and W. Hamilton Gibson. Also decorations in the text by L. S. Ipsen. Cloth extra, full gilt, $2.50; vellum, gilt top, rough edges, $2.50; ivory surface, $3.00; full morocco, $3.00.

Small Quartos. In New Styles of Ivory bindings. Price, $1.50.

GRAY'S ELEGY, READ'S CHRISTINE, READ'S DRIFTING, READ'S BRUSHWOOD, SHAKESPEARE'S SEVEN AGES OF MAN, READ'S WAGONER OF THE ALLEGHANIES.

ENGLISH POEMS.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONGS AND SONNETS, THE MAY QUEEN, L'ALLEGRO, LUCY GRAY AND OTHER POEMS, WE ARE SEVEN AND OTHER POEMS.

IRVING'S WORKS.

KNICKERBOCKER SKETCHES, PRIDE OF THE VILLAGE AND OTHER STORIES, LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW, ENGLISH SKETCHES, RIP VAN WINKLE, CHRISTMAS STORIES.

THE SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE; or, The Lake Lands of Canada.

By B. A. WATSON, A. M., M. D. Profusely illustrated by Daniel C. and Harry Beard. Elegantly bound in extra cloth, 8vo, $3.50.

No portion of our continent affords better hunting and fishing than Canada, and Dr. Watson evidently has the keenest relish for such sport. The anecdotes, experiences and adventures he relates will possess a fascination for sportsmen, and prove most agreeable reading for all lovers of out-door life.

A MANUAL OF NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS.

Containing concise descriptions of every species of bird known in North America. By ROBERT RIDGWAY, Curator Department of Birds, United States National Museum. Profusely illustrated with 464 outline cuts of the generic characters, and a portrait of the late Spencer F. Baird. Library Edition; Royal 8vo, extra cloth, gilt, $7.50; Sportsman's Edition, bound in leather, flexible, $7.50.

HORSE AND MAN. Their Mutual Dependence and Duties.

By the Rev. J. G. WOOD, M. A., author of "Homes without Hands," etc. With illustrations. 8vo, extra cloth, $2.50.

THROUGH SPAIN. WITH WOOD ENGRAVINGS.

A narrative of travel and adventure in the Peninsula. By S. P. SCOTT. Profusely illustrated, square 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt top and rough edges, $5.00.

"A better written, more suggestive, and better illustrated book of travels has not been published for a long time." — New York Tribune.

FROM PHARAOH TO FELLAH.

By C. MOBERLEY BELL (Correspondent of the London Times). An important work on Egypt, consisting of 250 pages of text, and with numerous illustrations by George Montbard. Engraved by Charles Barbant. Quarto, handsomely and elaborately bound in fine cloth, $5.00.

A SIGNAL SUCCESS.

THE WORK AND TRAVELS OF MRS. MARTHA J. COSTON. An autobiography. With illustrations. Crown 8vo, extra cloth, gilt top and rough edges, $2.00.

"Mrs. Coston is a woman as remarkable for her ability and perseverance as for her beauty. Gossipy, but without malice, with a piquant flavor to its egotism, brightened all along by anecdote, this is an entertaining book." — Boston Literary World.

ATTRACTIVE BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE.PRINCE LITTLE BOY, and Other Tales out of Fairy-Land.

By S. WEIR MITCHELL, M. D. Illustrated by F. S. Church and H. Siddons Mowbray. 4to, cloth extra, $1.50.

IDA WAUGH'S ALPHABET BOOK.

"For little ones, who, if they look, Will find their letters in this book."

Verses by AMY E. BLANCHARD. Attractively illustrated. Printed in two colors, on heavy plate paper. Large 4to, 9x11 inches, bound in a handsomely illuminated cover, $1.00.

For sale by all booksellers, or will be sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY, Publishers, 715 & 717 Market St., Philadelphia.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, DEC. 10, 1887. No. 25.

CONTENTS.

Holiday Supplement.

RIP VAN WINKLE ILLUSTRATED	449
MY GARDEN	449
ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD	449
KEATS ILLUSTRATED	450
A VOYAGE TO THE CARIBBEES	450
A SUMMER VOYAGE ON THE SAONE	451
WILD ANIMALS IN CAPTIVITY	452
THE LAND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW	452
ON THE TRACK OF ULYSSES	453
STORY BOOKS:
A Midshipman at Large	453
Royal Girls and Royal Courts	453
Storyed Holidays	454
Grilli's Children	454
A Promise Kept	454
Boys and Masters	454
Some of Our Fellows	454
YOUNG FOLKS' HISTORIES:
Queens of Scotland	454
George Washington	454
MISCELLANY:
Schiller's The Song of the Bell	454
Hale's In His Name	454
Footsteps of Jesus	454
Eschings	455
Bits of Dutchland	455
Treasures of the Wayside	455
Romeo and Juliet	455
Photogravure Shakespearian Calendar	455
Les Misérables	455
COMMODORE PERRY	455
THE GNOSTICS AND THEIR REMAINS	455
THE WOODS OF WASHINGTON IRVING	455
MR. SCUDDER'S ESSAYS	456
THE COLBERTON MEMORIALS	456
TWO BOOKS ON EVOLUTION:
Our Heredity from God	457
The Ethical Import of Darwinism	457
A UNIVERSAL HISTORY	457
MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX	458
SOME THINGS ABROAD	459
SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY:
Half-Hours with the Stars	459
Linguistic and Oriental Studies	459
The Missing Sense	459
Science and Immortality	459
FICTION:
Zarah	460
Country Luck	460
Bledisloe	460
Driver Dallas	460
The Duchess	460
The Last von Reckenburg	460
Seth's Brother's Wife	460
A Fair Crusader	461
Her Only Son	461
Inchfawn	461
Equal to the Occasion	461
Tony, the Maid	461
Jean Monteith	461
MINOR NOTICES	461
PARAGRAPHS	455
CORRESPONDENCE	455
PERIODICALS	462
SHAKESPEARIANA. Edited by W. J. Rolfe:
Another "Mermaid" Volume	462
"A Shakespeare Pronouncing Vocabulary"	463
Shakespeare in "Cassell's National Library"	463
The Shakespeare of the Greek Mythology	463
The Philadelphia "Shakespeariana"	463
A Poetical Tribute to the Dramatist	463
NOTES AND QUERIES. 832	463
NEWS AND NOTES	463
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	464

MY GARDEN.*

THE basis of this oblong folio — of late a fashionable shape in books — is a simple little poem of fourteen four-line stanzas by Mr. Clark, dated Lockport, N. Y., and modestly printed in full at the end, as if in this instance the poet were minded to stand behind his illustrators. This spirit is commendable, and presents a strong contrast to that of some other poets, who set their own portraits before their work. The illustrations, which give the book its shape and form and character, are nineteen in number, exclusive of the mere ornaments, and divide the fourteen stanzas of the poem between them for subjects. A fragment of verse and its accompanying illustration occupy every right hand page, the left hand pages being blank. The illustrations are all engraved on wood, and consist partly of landscapes, but chiefly of flower studies, the latter showing in succession the arbutus, dandelion, violet, trillium, anemone, lilac, apple-blossom, clover, rose, eglantine, cockle, poppy, tiger-lily, water-lily, wild azalea, kal-mia, coreopsis, cardinal, golden-rod, aster, cichorium, and Christmas rose — the floral procession of the spring, summer, and autumn.

* My Garden. By Simeon Tucker Clark. Illustrated by Lena J. Ringueberg and F. Schuyler Mathews. Samuel E. Cassino. $4.50.

The defect of the book grows out of an inherent difficulty, the failure of the wood-cut to depict color. In landscape work this is not felt, for the beauty of the landscape is not wholly dependent on color. We write these words looking out upon a December scene, from which all color has faded out to an almost uniform brown; and yet who shall say that nature in December has no beauty? But with a handful of faded colorless flowers the case is different; we throw them away.

Landscape, then, may be always a proper subject for the wood-cut, while the flower is beyond its scope. The landscape without color we can enjoy, but not the flower. The chief merit that floral engravings can have is that of accuracy; and this is a cold quality for such associations.

Of the drawings in this book, therefore, we must be content with saying that they are conscientiously drawn and are faithful representations in form and outline. The lilacs, the roses, and the pussy willows are perhaps the most pleasing. The "cylostyle" text in which the verse is sketched in with the plates is a happy thought, and typographically the book is handsomely made.

RIP VAN WINKLE ILLUSTRATED.*

JOSEPH JEFFERSON, of course, is the illustrator of Irving's Rip Van Winkle, and nobody can be said to have seen that masterpiece of tender comedy presented to the full who has not seen it on the stage under Mr. Jefferson's powerful illumination. But Mr. Frank T. Merrill has done for it in the present volume about all that pen and ink and brush and sepia can do, and his large sketches with the latter materials especially reach a high grade of excellence, a very high grade indeed. We recall nothing better of the kind since F. O. C. Darley's famous drawings, in whose manner they are studies. There are decided advantages, we think, in committing the illustration of such a text to a single artist. A certain unity of sentiment and effect is thereby secured which is almost sure to be lost when the task is divided between several hands. Put a story like this of Irving's, full of feeling, humor, and life, into the charge of a sympathetic, acute, and capable draughtsman, and we can hardly fail to have a satisfying result.

Mr. Merrill furnishes in all forty-one illustrations, ten of which are full-page photogravures or prints of that class, while several of the wood-cuts also occupy full pages outside the text. The remaining engravings are inserted as vignettes in the text. There is also an ornamental title-page, and a frontispiece portrait of Irving on India paper.

Is it imagination, or reality — the resemblance between Mr. Merrill's delineation of Rip and Jefferson's? The actor's make-up is certainly suggested by the artist's drawings. The sudden change (to the eye) of the young man to the old, the astonishment of the villagers, their later recognition of the seeming stranger, their final abandonment to wonder as his story is told, are all depicted in a series of charming scenes, whose conception and execution are alike admirable. The wood-cuts suffer, of course, in comparison with the soft rich tones of the larger plates, but the drawing is good throughout them all, and a correct interpretation of the story gives them spirit, truth, and strength.

The letter-press, though filling a good-sized page in large, clear type, shows an ample margin on each side, the edges of the book are gilt all around, and the cover of russet cloth shows a tasteful emblematic design. In every respect this is one of the choice publications of the season.

ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD.*

THIS mammoth folio is a difficult one to examine. It is more than a book to be laid on the drawing-room table; it is one to stand up to and lean over, with hands outstretched to hold its spreading sides. Its pages measure nearly 15 inches by more than 18, and its 25 plates and 18 or 20 pages of letter-press are printed on paper so heavy that the book approaches a solid inch in thickness.

The motive of publication is to exhibit and celebrate the achievements of American wood engraving, by means of (1) twenty-five fine examples prepared by fifteen representative engravers expressly for the purpose, and (2) an accompanying essay by Mr. W. M. Laffan. The engravings strike us as rather more effective than the essay. The latter is boastful and over-triumphant in tone; the former speak eloquently for themselves. We cannot think, as Mr. Laffan seems to think, that American graving art is to be cried up by crying English graving art down. Since Mr. W. J. Linton became a resident of America, says Mr. Laffan, "England has had no wood engravers, only workmen on wood." Of what avail is such extravagant language as this? It is perfectly true that American wood engraving, under the lead of Harper's and the Century magazines, has distanced English, but it has not by any means left it out of sight, as the pages of more than one English periodical and more than one English book of the present year abundantly show. And the honored name of Thomas Bewick can well afford to bear the contemptuous sneer which Mr. Laffan passes upon it—a name which will be remembered when some of his critics are forgotten.

* Rip Van Winkle. By Washington Irving. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. S. E. Cassino. $7.00.

* Engravings on Wood. By Members of the Society of American Wood Engravers. With an Introduction and Descriptive Text by Wm. M. Laffan. Harper & Brothers. $12.00.

When Mr. Laffan leaves the stage of general remarks for that of explicit comment upon the plates of which he is the showman, we listen to him with greater patience, and are obliged to him for useful judgments and not a little information, personal and technical. He is guide certainly to a rich and interesting collection of large wood-cuts, the contributors of which are Victor Bernstrom, W. B. Closson, Timothy Cole, John P. Davis, Frank French, T. Johnson, F. S. King, Elbridge Kingsley, G. Kruell, R. A. Muller, G. A. Powell, S. G. Putnam, John Tinkey, F. H. Wellington, and Henry Wolf. These engravers have selected as their respective subjects a variety of paintings, mostly of the modern school, including some that are familiar. Among these latter we note Marr's "Mystery of Life," George Fuller's "Quadroon Girl," Giotto's "The Entombment," Shirlaw's "Among the Old Poets," Inness's "A Morning," W. M. Hunt's "Portrait of Himself," and Vedder's "Identity." Eastman Johnson's "New England Peddler" presents an entirely uncommon type of that species, and Swain Gifford's "Roadside" is not a roadside at all in the proper sense, but a piece of pasture next the road beyond the fence. A "roadside" is the side of the road within the inclosing fences, not beyond them.

But these are trifles, and are not part of the engravers' work, with which alone the book is concerned. The differences in that work even a layman will notice; while the expert would use strong language about some of it. But much of it—most of it—is fair and strong, here and there marvelously so, though we think there is little of it whose equal could not be found in the pages of either of our leading magazines, taking the year through. Of course the size of these plates gives the engraver a great advantage; he has breadth to work upon, and can produce large and striking effects with yet the most delicate handling of the burin. The head of Hunt, the artist, is a remarkable engraving; so is "One Day in June," "The Lady and Horse," "A Difference," "The Cobblers," and "The Listeners." Any one of these plates is worthy of framing and exposition upon the wall. We should like to see the Harpers provide them in form suitable for that purpose.

This imposing work is provided with a rubricated title-page and a binding beautiful in its simplicity, while its workmanship in all externals is of the highest excellence. We learn that the 110 copies of the édition de luxe, at $100 each, were all taken up in advance of publication.

KEATS ILLUSTRATED.*

THIS heavy and sumptuous quarto is not quite the largest book of the season, for one whose dimensions exceed it has just been mentioned; but it has few rivals either in avoirdupois, mechanical elegance, or artistic beauty. This being said, it must be added that its leading motif is the idealization of the nude, the female nude, though there are exceptions enough to this dominant purpose to avert the fault of sameness and to appeal to different tastes from that which is gratified by looking at the human form divine in a state of nature. Of Mr. Low's studies under this latter head it is only just to affirm that they are characterized by an unchallengeable purity of feeling, which admits not the slightest coarseness in the handling, and can provoke no lawless thought in a cleanly mind.

The verse of Keats selected for illustration includes the odes "To a Grecian Urn," "To Autumn," "To Fancy," "To a Nightingale," "On Indolence," "To Psyche," "On Melancholy," and on Beaumont and Fletcher's "Fair Maid of the Inn," "The Eve of Saint Mark," and fourteen sonnets, among which are those "On First Looking into Chapman's Homer," on "Homer," on "Sleep," on "The Nile," on "The Elgin Marbles," and Keats's "Last Sonnet," written on a blank page in Shakespeare's poems.

For each page of printed text Mr. Low has supplied an ornamental border above and below—a broad floral band stretching across from left to right; but the more notable designs are nineteen photolithographic reproductions, by the Forbes process, of original drawings, in preparation of which the artist is understood to have spent some months in study abroad, and in which he obviously had the advantage of living models before him. Both ornaments and plates are printed in neutral tints of a warm brown or soft gray, and each heavy leaf of the book is separately mounted on its own stub at the back, so that the book may be opened to the widest with perfect ease. In the first plate we have the "Grecian Urn," and three figures before it, one a cherubic boy, the others mortals; one of the latter draped and sitting, the other reclining lover-like at her feet. "Autumn" is personified by a lovely harvester gathering the fruits afield; "Fancy" by a sweet girlish figure, winged and wearing the chaplet on her brow, holding pencil and tablet in her hand, and looking up with ecstatic thrill at the angelic visitors who are just emerging from the clouded air above her head. In the picture accompanying the "Ode on Indolence" we have the "three figures" depicted by the poet, gracefully draped, encircling the pillar of flowers, "like figures on a marble urn." The "Ode to Psyche" shows

—"two fair creatures, couched side by side
In deepest grass, beneath the whispering roof
Of leaves and trembled blossoms—"

Their arms embraced, and their pinions too,
Their lips touch'd not"—

"Melancholy" is represented by a woman crouching, whose face is a masterpiece of intense sadness; the likes of her in varying attitudes, with or without vesture, appear in the next two series. The illustration of "Keats's Last Sonnet" is in some respects the most impressive of all. The head of the dying singer, with laureled brow, is seen lying on its pillow; while Poesy, lyre in hand, stands near with finger on her lips, as if to signify that the soul is passing and that silence must settle on the air.

An ornate binding incloses these designs and their accessories, and a flannel-lined case of heavy pasteboard completes the outfit.

A VOYAGE TO THE CARIBBEES.*

WE confess to being so far possessed by the spirit of utilitarianism as to take the greatest possible amount of enjoyment in a work like this. Pleasing the eye by many of those typographical charms which pertain to the holiday season, it also ministers abundantly to the intelligence and taste, to the geographical sense, and to the love of travel; while to open its tempting pages just at this particular time, as we are passing into the clutch of winter, is to escape by the avenue of the imagination into lovely tropical surroundings and scenes of perpetual summer.

Mr. Paton is a young New Yorker, who, not many seasons since, at an hour's notice joined his friend, the Doctor, for a six weeks' cruise among the Caribbean Islands, or Little Antilles, that crescent-shaped group which forms the southernmost and easternmost link in the chain that binds Florida to the Venezuelan coast of South America, and with the help of Yucatan marks off the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico from the broad Atlantic. Leeward Islands or North Caribbees, and Windward Islands or South Caribbees, the group is also called, accordingly as we speak of one or the other

*Odes and Sonnets, by John Keats, with Illustrative Designs by Will H. Low. J. B. Lippincott Co. $15.00.

*Down the Islands. A Voyage to the Caribbees. By William Agnew Paton. With illustrations from drawings by M. J. Burns. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00.

of its main divisions. Anguilla, St. Christopher, Antigua, Montserrat, Guadeloupe, Dominica, Martinique, Barbadoes, Grenada, and Trinidad are its leading individual members, and St. John, Basseterre, Roseau, S. Pierre, Bridgetown, St. George, and Port of Spain, its most familiar ports of call.

To this charmed circle of tropical islands the good steamer "Barracouta" bore our voyagers in six days from the starting pier in the East River. One day out, and the nipping northeaster of a New York March gave way to the genial atmosphere of the Gulf Stream; two days, and overcoats and reefers were laid aside; three days, and out came summer apparel and the awnings; four days, and the ship was ploughing the weed-strewn waters of the Sargasso Sea; five days, and the Southern Cross loomed up in the early evening; six days, and the barren chalk cliffs of Sombbrero, the northernmost of the islands, faintly rose above the blue horizon of the sea.

It would be difficult to devise pleasanter conditions for a trip than those enjoyed in the present case. The "Barracouta" was a stanch, clean, well-appointed ship. Her captain was a gentleman. Her crew, notably Aleck and Anthony, who manned the captain's gig, were a study and an entertainment. Her regular course took in the complete circuit of the islands, with calls at all the principal ports, and leisurely opportunities of going ashore at all interesting points; and in addition a detour as far south as Georgetown in British Guiana, at the mouth of the Demerara. Thus our travelers always had a home with them when one was not to be found on the land. And the six weeks—for one fond of maritime experience—were full of pleasurable excitement, novelty, welcome relief from the rigors of winter, and easy introductions to a world of strange sights and sounds.

Some of the Caribbean Islands are mountainous, grandly and picturesquely so; others are flat and prairie-like, fertile and richly cultivated. One, like Barbadoes (pronounced Bar-bade-os), will be a vast sugar plantation; another, like Trinidad, almost solely a colony of Hindu coolies; another, like Grenada, a mass of cocoa trees. Everywhere the Africans and Creoles abound. The French language prevails. The variety and abundance of fruits must be seen to be understood. The gardens are affluent. The landscapes are magnificent combinations of sea and land, of shore and mountain, of forest and meadow. At evening the sun drops behind the horizon and darkness instantly supersedes the day. The stars stand out with wonderful intensity. A soft and balmy air undulates through the night, inviting to out-of-door slumber beneath the canopy of heaven; by day cool breezes from the sea refresh the life upon the land. The costumes and customs of the people afford an unceasing subject of interest. Their jewels and ornaments are often almost barbaric. Their uproar over a new arrival exceeds even that raised by New York hackmen. The towns are often neat and inviting, and the hotel accommodations, when good at all, as at Georgetown and Port of Spain, are very good indeed. And the mysteries of a "pepper-pot" and a "swizzle-stick"—who that has once mastered them will forget their potent spell?

The Caribbean Islands are not wanting in historical associations, and to these Mr. Paton pays passing reference without ever delaying his readers unreasonably from the keener delights of sight-seeing. In 1493 Columbus, on his second voyage, discovered Dominica, and in 1498 he cast anchor in the harbors of Grenada. Sir John Moore recovered St. Lucia from the French and restored it to English possession. Nevis was the birth-place of Alexander Hamilton, and on the same island Lord Nelson was married to Mrs. Nisbet, in 1787. The Empress Josephine was born on Martinique, and a drawing of the humble cottage in which that event took place is one of the illustrations of Mr. Paton's volume.

To these illustrations collectively we must give more than a word of praise. Beside the fifteen full-page engravings, all of them based, we should say, on original photographs, there are upwards of fifty smaller cuts of the vignette order inserted in the text. All of these are excellent as drawings, displaying self-evident fidelity and cultivated artistic power; while not a few of them exhibit an intelligence, delicacy, and humor which we are accustomed to find only in the best French work. The large and handsome printed page, the yellowed edges, and the cool brown linen cover with its tropical suggestions, invest this most delightful interior with appropriate external attractions, and complete the strong appeal of the book to a very wide class of readers.

A SUMMER VOYAGE ON THE SAONE.*

WE may all take a special pride in this beautiful book, because, though of French subject and English authorship, it is of American manufacture, and proves that our University Press of Cambridge, given the occasion and materials, can produce results comparable with the finest products of London and Paris establishments. Mr. Hamerton's volume, with its notable illustrative element, is of a peculiar kind and quality that we do not commonly look for as a growth of our own soil; so that to see this exotic, springing up so naturally and healthfully at our very side, establishes the largest sort of confidence in the capacity of native resources.

Mr. Hamerton's subject is a summer's cruise, for adventure and for sketching purposes, on the French river Saône. The cruise was as recent as last year, and the letters to a London friend, in which form his narrative of incident and experience is cast, have therefore the utmost freshness. The Saône is a considerable stream, rising in the Vosges, near the German frontier, not far away from Strasbourg, and flowing south-westerly and southerly past Auxonne, Verdun—where it is joined by the Doubs, Chalon, and Macon, to Lyons, where it unites with the Rhone. Between Lyons and Chalon it is easily navigable, abounding in lake-like expanses which afford a fair field for sailing craft. Above Chalon as far as Corre it can be penetrated under conditions, the conditions including a narrow vessel, a shallow one, and towage by steam or donkey power. The elbows of the river are often cut short by canals, some of which are carried through tunnels, while bridges, locks, quays, tow-paths, and other accessories add to the complications, sometimes inconvenient, of the inland voyage. Mr. Hamerton took it in two sections: the first, between Corre and Chalon, by canal-boat or barge, rigged up and fitted out as a house-boat for towage; the second, between Chalon and Lyons, by a sail-boat of the catamaran pattern. Autun being the base of supplies, and Chalon the point of departure, the house-boat—named the "Boussemroum"—was first towed rapidly up to Corre, a distance as the river runs of perhaps two hundred miles, and from Corre began its backward, downward voyage to Chalon again, under the gentle motive power of an active-heeled donkey. So much of the excursion occupied the month of June, and requires a little more than the first half of the book for its narration. Upon the second section of it, in the catamaran "Arar," from Chalon to Lyons, Mr. Hamerton set out the last of August, reaching his destination in about twenty days.

Of the two voyages, that of the "Boussemroum" between Corre and Chalon is much the more eventful, picturesque, and entertaining as a theme for its accomplished diarist, and the sketches which it inspires from his pencil, and that of his compagnon du voyage, Mr. Joseph Pennell, are the more numerous and pleasing. The oddity of the old barge as a means of locomotion and at the same time a movable habitation, the ingenuity and skill with which it was fitted up for its novel uses, the simple romance of living in it, sleeping in it, eating in it, and gliding in it through the lovely landscape, the contrasted individualities of its "Pilot" and "Patron," the marked character of the donkey, "Zoulou," and harmonious traits of his driver, Franki, the lazy, drifting progress down the stream, the constant succession of quaint villages on either bank, and the daily going ashore to forage and explore and sketch, made up a round of amusement and instruction of which one could not soon grow weary. Once in a while a terrible thunder tempest disarranged the conveniences and comforts on board; sometimes a violent wind gave the boatman difficulty in steering; unpleasant accidents now and then marred the pleasure of an hour; but good nature met every exigency with success and conjured enjoyment out of even adverse circumstances.

*The Saône. A Summer Voyage. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $5.00.

The most serious drawbacks encountered by Mr. Hamerton and Mr. Pennell grew out of the suspicions awakened by their pencils and sketch-books in the minds of the gendarmes and local authorities. In France the law is now very strict against out-door sketching as a precaution against the enterprise of German spies, and of this law our voyagers felt the force. At Pontailier they were arrested and detained; their drawings, innocent though they looked to be, were sent off for official inspection; and although they were presently politely released, it was evident that sketching was an unpopular and dangerous diversion.

Our artists, however, got their portfolios sufficiently full to yield an ample and most delightful pictorial element to Mr. Hamerton's volume. Beautiful as is the book in all its typographical features—paper, print, presswork, and binding, these wood-cuts are so fascinating for their technical skill, their pastoral repose or urban picturesqueness accordingly as they delineate the country or the town, and their miniature-like fineness and delicacy, that they at once engage the reader's eye and absorb his attention, making it hard for him to bestow a thought upon the text until he has looked the whole book through. Besides the four maps, which cover the whole route traversed by means of sections conveniently arranged, there are no fewer than 148 wood-cuts inserted in the text, of which 102 are original pen-and-ink drawings by Mr. Pennell, 19 of the same class by Mr. Hamerton, 24 drawings in ink by Mr. Pennell from lead originals by Mr. Hamerton, and 3 in ink by Mr. Hamerton from originals in water-color, etching, and lead, by M. Chevrier and Mr. J. P. Pettit. Practically this book puts one in possession of fac-simile reproductions of a hundred and fifty sketches by two consummate English artists of the time; one of whom adds to a distinct cleverness a most genial temper, and the other unites great manual dexterity with the highest artistic cultivation. The effects accomplished in some of these little sketches, especially the effects in perspective and distance, in light and shade, are truly wonderful. The foliage also is often indescribably beautiful. The shadows of the arched bridge on the placid water, the architectural traits of a village street, an old church, or a towered chateau, the masses of roofs, the winding river, the low-lying shore in the distance, the slender spire miles away, the copse upon the point, the sentinel lines of poplars, even the radiant sunset, are set before the eye with singular fidelity, simplicity, and strength. There is almost magic in the few slight touches—a line here and a dot there—with which all this is done. We should say that a student of drawing would find many a lesson in these sketches, which look so natural and easy, and yet which are evidently the carefully finished work of true genius.

But after the beauty of the pictures has been all taken in, there remain the quaintness of the experience, the charming manner of its recital, the delicate humor with which it is flavored, the acquaintance which it affords with a section of sunny France, and the luxurious beauty with which the whole has been made up into a book—whose grace and refinement could hardly be surpassed.

WILD ANIMALS IN CAPTIVITY.*

THIS large, heavy, and sumptuous quarto, belonging easily in the foremost group of holiday publications, has every appearance of being an honest, fresh, and original work, founded on careful studies and close personal observations in the animal kingdom, and will be readily distinguished by any expert from those made-up illustrated works of the season which assemble a "job-lot" of old wood-cuts to set off the artificial talk of a mere compiler. Mr. Nott's work is full of conscience and feeling, and as scientific as it is artistic. It consists of twenty-four chapters, with forty-one accompanying engravings on wood, the subjects being the elephant, the kangaroo, the hippopotamus, the camel, the bison, the yak, the zebu, the zebra, the rhinoceros, the giraffe, the wild sheep, the wild ass, the tapir, the lion, the tiger, the leopard, the jaguar, the polar bear, the seal, the sea lion, the antelope, the cape buffalo, the deer, and the crocodile. Of each of these representative animals Mr. Nott gives in simple language the natural history, inspecting the example in its native conditions, tracing its changes of trail and character under domestication, introducing to special notice some celebrated or interesting individuals, and relating many passing anecdotes of the forest, the hunt, and the field, all warmed with an affectionate and admiring sympathy, and tending to exalt the intelligence of animals and to urge kindness and considerateness in dealing with them.

We share Mr. Nott's regrets that some of the most interesting races of wild animals are becoming extinct; the zebra for example, which has almost ceased to be found at all, and the elephant, who is fast disappearing before the greed of ivory hunters. Mr. Nott's pages are full of unexpected and curious pieces of information; for instance, that lions born wild rather than those born in captivity are selected to be tamed and trained; the latter being wholly destitute of the fear of man, while the presence of this emotion in the former affords the keeper and tamer one of his strongest weapons of conquest and discipline.

Mr. Nott's illustrations are well worth looking at with scrutiny and deliberation. They are full-page engravings on wood, well executed, and well printed on heavy paper, outside the text, and all based on photographs taken in every instance but one by the author himself from living subjects. It is like walking through a menagerie to turn these forty plates, only instead of howls and cries all is startlingly silent! How marvelously come out the wrinkles in the elephant's back and legs under Mr. Nott's camera, the lion's "gory mane," the leopard's unchangeable spots, the camel's hairy hump, the crocodile's scales, the tough leathery hide of the rhinoceros! There are three examples of the elephant, one the monster Indian fighter, Jung Pershaud. There are two camels, a splendid lion and lioness, two sea lions, six antelopes, and several stags or deer.

We commend Mr. Nott's fascinating and elegant volume in hearty terms to all who would like to make a close acquaintance with these notabilities at a safe distance and under agreeable conditions. For a child there is immense educating value in such a volume, but then it is a pretty costly book for a child's book. However, there are plenty of children who are worth it.

THE LAND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW.*

WE wish always to be sparing in the use of superlatives and guarded in the use of strong language, and to preserve carefully what reputation we have for a conservative and temperate judgment; but restraint is hard to bear in speaking out our minds about the work which, at the present writing, lies open on the editorial table. Irving is on the whole the foremost of all American authors in the field of pure literature. Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and "Wolfert's Roost;" Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and "Wolfert's Roost" illustrated by plates in outline and in photogravure, the latter from sun-pictures of the actual scenes; this reinforced by a sketch of Irving and his home on the Hudson, by Dr. J. L. Williams; and the whole presented in a large drawing-room quarto, manufactured in costly and luxurious style, and with the most skillful workmanship—such is the rare and imposing combination of values in this volume. Whether as a memorial of Irving, or as an introduction to some of the loveliest river and mountain scenery of our continent, or as a fragment of our choicest literature, or as an example of our best taste and skill in book-making, and especially in

* Wild Animals in Captivity. Illustrated by Pen and Camera. By J. Fortuné Nott. Dodd, Mead & Co. $7.50.

* The Land of Sleepy Hollow and the Home of Washington Irving. A series of Photogravure Representations, with Descriptive Letter-press by J. L. Williams, etc., etc., etc. Limited Letter-press Edition. Geo. P. Putnam's Sons. $15.00.

artistic illustration, this product of the Putnams' "Knickerbocker Press" is second to no issue we have yet seen the present season, and can hardly be excelled in interest and attractiveness by anything yet to come. The large pages (11 inches by 13), the broad margin (3 1-2 inches), the heavy, unglazed paper, the untrimmed edges, the gilt tops, the simple, sober, but elegant binding in cloth of bluish green, with the inlaid photograph panel, showing both Irving's portrait and his "Sunnyside" home, with "Sleepy Hollow" between, and, chiefest of all, the illustrative plates within—thirty-one in number—make up an assemblage of details whose effect in their harmonious whole is exceptionally pleasing.

Of the letter-press—two thirds of it extracted from Irving's once familiar writings, one third added by the editor's hand in excellent resemblance to Irving's delightful manner—we shall not take space to speak at length. Dr. Williams presents and describes Irving in person and in literature, and takes his readers to visit his now famous home at Tarrytown, so named of old, as Irving himself tells us, by the women of the vicinage, "from the inveterate propensity of their husbands to linger about the village tavern on market days."

From the text we must pass at once to the pictures. These are in two series, the engraved outline drawings, after a well-known style, and the photogravures, reproduced from photographs taken by Dr. Williams himself. Between these two series we are particular to distinguish. We like the former much less than the latter. In such a case as this the ideal must prove less pleasing than the actual. And deftly and delicately as these outlines are drawn and engraved, they do not give us the same pleasure as the photogravures.

These photogravures are the work of a New York company, and we find it hard to believe that artist and printer can ever have worked more sympathetically together or turned out a better result. The photographer—if an amateur, as we suppose him to be—is a master of his instrument; his selection of subjects, his focusing of the lens, the finishing of his plates, all afford a consummate preparation of materials for the printer. And the printer has done his part with great feeling and care. The ink is a soft, deep brown, admirably suited to the subjects, imparting a warm, rich tone to the plate, avoiding both a cold severity and a crude overcoloring. The tone and perspective of these plates are almost perfect. Is there a forest? You can see into its depths. Is there a path? You can follow it step by step. Is there a distance? You can measure it. Is there a house, or a fence, or a stone, or a trunk of a tree? It is solid and you can touch it. The foliage in particular is remarkable for its clearness, sharpness, and precision. The dainty etched effects introduced here and there by way of border decoration are exquisite, and the occasional vignettes dropped upon the corner of a larger plate introduce a charming irregularity and variety.

That we are giving this book high praise, we are well aware; but we have said nothing that will not be borne out by a close examination; and he who can conduct such an examination without joining in the verdict must have either ignorance or prejudice to contend with.

ON THE TRACK OF ULYSSES.

On the Track of Ulysses: Together with an Excursion in Quest of the So-called Venus of Melos. By W. J. Stillman. [Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.00.]

This elegant volume repeats in folio form the Odyssean researches of Mr. W. J. Stillman which appeared originally in the Century Magazine, with additions and revision. The beautiful illustrations also reappear in enlarged form, let into great white pages, whereon the printing of the Riverside Press is even lovelier to look on. A more refined piece of Christmas work we have not seen in many a day. As to the value of the archæological or rather geographical discussions therein contained, opinions will differ. Mr. Stillman is nothing if not positive and dogmatic, and his ungloved handling of his brother archæologists is not calculated to strew his own path with roses. Setting out on the rather fantastic errand of tracing the wanderings of Ulysses geographically, he takes us hither and thither in the Levant, hither and thither in the Adriatic, without adding materially to our knowledge or making the terra incognita of the Odyssey any firmer under our feet. The vital conclusion he comes to, however, is that Homer really knew the ports of the Mediterranean; he has "feather-stitched" into his poem—really knew Ithaca and Corfu, Cape Malea, and perhaps bits of the Tyrrhenian Sea; but all this is so entangled with myth and legend, so trimmed with imaginative figment, so colored with inventive dyes, so fused with migration stories and race conflicts, that hunting the real Ulysses is "hunting the hare": indeed: little substantiality can be found in the cloudland, few things that are solid emerge from the mist. Full of wonderfully realistic touches as the Odyssey is, they harden into tangible shape only here and there, and we are left for the most part floundering in a poetic fogland, where all things change as we look at them; where even Ulysses, that greatest incarnation of Greek cunning, daring, and duplicity, floats beyond our ken into an unimaginable sea in which land and sky become one, and fiction and history interpenetrate. Yet, on the other hand, the Odyssey is a Bayeux tapestry inwrought with real event, colored by the manners of its time, twisted out of filaments that will not break and that connect in unbroken continuity with the Greek life of today. It is the earliest text on Greek geography to which we have access, the Almanach de Gotha of Greek nobility, the creed of the antique Greek world, which believed as faithfully in its poetic confession as ever an Aryan did in his Gothic credo. Therefore its study, the tracking out of its suggested world, the grasping of its faintly limned outlines, the exploitation of its mythic and geographic wealth, become objects of the first importance to the Philhellene. This, in a measure, Mr. Stillman endeavors to do, commissioned by the Century: he hires a yacht for three months, explores the Odyssean corners of Corfu, Zante, Cephalonia, and Ithaca, rediscovers several lost localities, finds an unedited inscription of the seventh century B.C., finds occasion to scourge Dr. Schliemann out of the archæological temple, and as a "passionate pilgrim," scents Homer wherever he can be found. His fault is that, like Macaulay, he is too "cock-sure" of his conclusions, even when these are couched in very contingent and conditional forms, and he is too fond of lashing other archæologists with his scorn and contempt. Bonhomie is not a lost virtue, we hope, and one must deplore the introduction of "High Dutch" scoldings and scariings into the service of our yet infant American branch of science.

Apropos of the Venus of Melos, Mr. Stillman's very plausible theory is that it is no less than the celebrated Niké Apteros, or Wingless Victory, that once adorned the temple of that name on the Acropolis. As a work of art he places it between Pheidias and Praxiteles, and argues that the statue was probably carried off to Melos (an Athenian colony) for safety, and never returned. He has many sensible remarks on the wholesale attribution of every handsome female statue to "Venus," and shows that many of the so-called "Venuses" are Venuses only in the catalogues. He gives interesting sketches of his two visits to Melos in 1865 and 1880, and rates soundly, as he should, the narrow-minded policy of the Greek government in its treatment of works of art found in Greek fields. His experiences of Greek craft and guile coincide with our own, and he comes to the conclusion that insular character at least is an unlovely mixture of greed and mendacity.

STORY BOOKS.

A Midshipman at Large. By Charles Remington Talbot. [D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.] Mr. Talbot's story, which is a reprint from the pages of St. Nicholas, has for its setting Newport Harbor, Narragansett Bay, and the water beyond. It is full of fresh air and hearty fun. We defy any boy or girl, but especially any boy, not to laugh when, at the beginning of the yacht race, Aunt Maria, Teddy, and the two girls emerge from their different places of concealment through the companion way. We are glad that Flagler resists the temptation of Aunt Maria's money and sticks to his profession, and of the hint that in the end he marries Constance; but though there are girls as well as boys concerned in the plot, there is not a hint at flirtation or a tinge of sentimentality to mar the healthy and youthful tone of the tale.

Royal Girls and Royal Courts. By Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood. [D. Lothrop Co.] There is a gossiping and familiar tone, as of one intimate with the insides of palaces, about these papers of Mrs. Sherwood, on the princesses and queens of our own day in Europe. We cannot be sure how far her entertaining little narratives are justified by fact. In their main features they doubtless are so, and a certain latitude is allowable in the attempt to make court life real and understandable to young republicans. American girls will find some valuable lessons in deportment and etiquette in the opening chapters.

Storied Holidays. A Cycle of Historic Red Letter Days. By Elbridge S. Brooks. [D. Lothrop Co. $1.50.] The idea of Mr. Brooks's "Storied Holidays," if not absolutely new, is an extremely good one, namely, to search the past for tales of holidays on which things of consequence happened or hung, and so invest those which we now celebrate with the romance of historical interest. The story of the little Spartan maid who personated her father as a runner at one of the Olympic festivals in the year 480 B.C., comes first in chronological sequence. Next follows that May Day, A.D. 185, when the young Emperor Commodus was surprised and nearly assassinated while entering the amphitheater. Then comes a tale of St. Patrick's Day, 1540, then that of little Mistress Margery More and her pin-money in 1518, and so on, down to what may, in comparison, be called our own times, when Joe Nixon smuggles himself into the hall to hear the resolutions of independence read in Philadelphia, 1776. Children will learn a good deal from these stories, but will enjoy them none the less.

Grilli's Children. A Story for Children and for Those who Love Children. Translated from the German of Johanna Spyri, by Louise Brooks. Two volumes in one. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.50.] This is a spun-out story, telling of a little English girl, and of her death at a village among the mountains of Switzerland; of the two Swiss children whom her mother adopted; and of the irrepressible brood of Doctor Stein. It is in the narration of the doings of these young Steins, each of whom has a hobby, that the humor of the author shows at its best, as her sweetness and piety do in the gentle invalid, Nora. Fred Stein has a passion for natural history, Oscar for celebrations and speech-making, and Emma devotes herself to helping her comrade, Fani, to opportunities for sketching from nature. When they go on a visit to their old play-fellows, whom the rich Mrs. Stanhope has adopted, they are solemnly charged by their mother to abstain from their favorite pursuits and pastimes, but each disobeys; Fred nearly ruins some of the beautiful furniture of his room by the creatures he has collected as specimens, Oscar is arrested for trespassing and uttering disloyal sentiments, and Emma and her friend come near being drowned. The letters of the culprits to their delightful aunt, begging to be sent for to go home, are very racy. All are forgiven, all comes out right, a good lesson is taught, and the story of this special house full of the children of the good doctor is very interesting.

A Promise Kept. By Mary E. Palgrave. With four full-page illustrations. [London: National Society's Depository. New York: Thomas Whitaker.] If this story was shorter its good qualities would have more weight; as it is, one has to go over too much ground. The teaching is self-sacrifice; Stephen Searle, oldest son of the rector, gives up his own chance at school for the sake of a younger brother; becomes acquainted with a new family, the Nethercotes, who move into the manor house; is influenced towards a religious life by the beautiful daughter, Margaret, who is a kind of impressionist, and while she urges him on is only half sincere herself. Lady Nethercote, who is a most lovely and lovable woman, becomes his devoted friend, encouraging him in the purpose which Margaret has pressed on him, of becoming a missionary to Africa. The two young people are betrothed, but at the last hour Margaret's courage fails, the engagement is broken, and Stephen goes forth to his work alone. The spirit is devotional, the moral tone high, the example and motherliness of Lady Nethercote are beautiful, and the struggles and final mastery of Stephen are such as might be possible to any high and honest nature, while the result shows that a life is not necessarily spoiled even if what seemed its greatest good and happiness did not come to pass.

Boys and Masters. By A. H. Gilkes, M.A. [Longmans, Green & Co. $1.25.] This is rather a book about masters than boys, and as such may be considered a novelty in the literature of the public and boarding school. The masters in this case are jolly, youngish fellows with real sympathy and a discriminating kindness in their hearts for the boys under their charge, and the story, though disfigured by the constant employment of that argot which seems inseparable from school life in England, is a pleasant and helpful one.

Still another story of school life, but in a different key, is Some of Our Fellows, by T. S. Mellington. [Roberts Brothers. $2.00.] Its scene, like that of Boys and Masters, is a large private school in England, but the story is made interesting by the carefully studied characters of three or four boys, all different but all unmistakably real. There is a manly tone about this book which will commend it to manly boys.

YOUNG FOLKS' HISTORIES.

Young Folks' History. The Queens of Scotland. Abridged and adapted from Strickland's "Queens of Scotland." By Rosalie Kaufman. 1st and 2d series. Illustrated. [Estes & Lauriat.] Among the historical tales of the late Agnes Strickland were a "Life of Mary, Queen of Scots," "Lives of the Queens of England," and "Lives of Queens of Scotland and English Princesses connected with the royal succession of Great Britain," the latter in eight volumes. From somewhere out of these books Rosalie Kaufman has "abridged and adapted" two volumes of "Young Folks' History" under the common title of The Queens of Scotland. The first is divided between Margaret Tudor, Magdalene of France, Mary of Lorraine, and Lady Margaret Douglas, Countess of Lennox; the second is devoted wholly to Mary Queen of Scots. Miss Strickland's writings had popularity in their day, though strictly speaking they are tales rather than history, and they are not improved by abridgement and adaptation. Few writings are. The books are plain and neat. The wood-cuts are numerous and mediocre, the better being the copies of curious old prints.

Life of Washington. By Virginia F. Townsend. Illustrated. [Worthington Co. $1.25.] In the opening chapters of this book the author falls into a sentimental way, and has too much imagining about "the shy, grave, slender-limbed boy," the "busy, swift-footed, keen-eyed boy," the "blue-eyed, grave-faced, rather overgrown boy," and matters of this sort, with a redundancy of adjectives weakening in their effect. Later she shows a more incisive style, and an ability to present the situation in condensed paragraphs. Considering the wide field she had before her and the weighty import of her subject, she has done remarkably well in presenting George Washington as the man, military chief, head of the nation, and private citizen. The labor is evidently one of love, and she has realized the modest hope expressed in the preface that her hero "may live and breathe in these pages." It is a handy volume for a young person, who will be stimulated by the perusal to become thoroughly acquainted with that period in our history and with the full biography of its great leader. It is in attractive shape, with open type, and an abundance of well selected illustrations of a meritorious quality.

MISCELLANY.

The Song of the Bell. By Frederick Schiller. Translated by U. W. Cutler. [D. Lothrop Co. $2.00.] Mr. Cutler's translation of the much translated "Song of the Bell" does not anywhere rise above mediocrity; on the other hand, it is nowhere very bad. The thirteen full-page illustrations, gathered from various sources, are of various degrees of merit, but they suffice to make a very attractive minor gift-book. One is a reproduction of Millet's "Angelus," another of one of Raphael's cartoons: the remainder are pleasant pictures of German home-life by Müller and Jäger. The portrait of Schiller has lost the strength which is so plain in the original photograph, from which this is evidently a copy; the face is in fact very weak.

In His Name. By E. E. Hale. [Roberts Brothers. $2.00.] The Rev. E. E. Hale's Waldensian story, In His Name, is the best thing he ever wrote, and one of the best things ever written by anybody—a sweet and noble embodiment in romance of the truest Christian life of the Middle Ages, and truer Christian life was never known. A really well illustrated edition of the book is a desideratum, but we shall have to wait for something else than that which is now offered to the public under the name of Jacomb-Hood. And who is Jacomb-Hood? Was it necessary to employ an artist whom few persons ever heard of before, and who does not know how to draw? Or has Mr. Jacomb-Hood suffered at the hands of his engravers? The illustrations are numerous, their intention is excellent, they are admirably planned and poorly done. They are all the more a disappointment, because their designer has the feeling of a true artist but not his technique. Their prevailing character and position in the text as vignettes are greatly in their favor; it is a pity their execution is not equal to their motif.

Footsteps of Jesus. By Ernest C. Price. Designs by Alice Price and F. Corby Price. [London: Castell Brothers. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. $2.50.] This is a sort of religious nursery book; an attempt to turn the resources of the modern picture book to the account of gospel instruction. We cannot say that it is wholly successful. With great diversity of materials there is great unevenness of quality. The Scripture texts are good, of course; but while some of the verses—those, for example, about children to whom bread is broken being disciples—are good, others are poor, mere doggerel. The illustrations in neutral tint of children and child-life, of landscapes and blossoms, are pleasing; but the colored pictures of incidents in the life of the Saviour are to us disagreeable, and sometimes artistically painful. Except for these last, the workmanship of the book is good.

The collection of half a dozen Etchings which comes to us from Mr. Cassino, interleaved with printed extracts from Longfellow, Lowell, Mrs. Thaxter, and others, whose illustrations they are, has no title-page or other handle by which to take hold of them; but are signed "Harlow," and are probably Mr. Louis K. Harlow's work. They are small, about 2 1-2 inches by 3 1-2, though printed with large margins. A pretty little group of sylvan or seashore scenes they make, not remarkable, however, as etchings. [$1.50.]

Bits of Dutchland. By Louis K. Harlow. [S. E. Cassino. $1.50.] In plan and form this collection of etchings resembles the one last named, there being six examples laid loosely in a cover, interleaved with brief printed descriptions; but the whole air of the folio is fuller and richer than, and the plates are not only somewhat larger but considerably superior to, Mr. Harlow's other set. The canals and windmills of Holland, its reedy levels, its solemn distances, its quaint gables, its bulky fishing smacks, are shown in turn with delicacy and discernment, making with the letter-press a pleasing introduction to bits of the Low Country.

Mr. Thomas Whittaker, New York, sends us Treasures by the Wayside, a little Bible text-book in color for every day in the year, six days to every opening, the texts on the left hand page in red ink with simple floral embellishments, and blank spaces on the right hand in which to enter names or other data ad lib. [50c.] Also five neat small quartos, containing verse, printed in brown ink without illustrations. One of these, "Should Auld Acquaintance be Forgotten?" is of a social and friendly spirit; the others are all devotional, as follows: "Lights from Golden Skies," "Gems Strewing the Path to Heaven," "Stray Jewels," "Gems of Gold." All are bound in rough white paper of heavy texture, with decorations in color and gilt. Two of them bear hand-painted sketches in water. [Each 40c.]

A dainty edition of Romeo and Juliet is published for the holiday season by S. E. Cassino & Co. of Boston. It is illustrated with wood engravings by J. Hugot after original designs by the French artist Andrioli, and delicately bound in white satine, with Juliet in the balcony on the front cover. The page is a small quarto, on which the text is well printed with ample breadth of margin. [$2.50.]

Shakespeare calendars are no novelty, but Messrs. F. A. Stokes & Co. of New York have hit upon a "new departure" in that line in the Photogravure Shakesperian Calendar, made up of twelve rough-edged leaves tied together with silk ribbon; each leaf bearing an original design for the month by Mr. Frank M. Gregory, president of the Salmagundi Club, well known as an etcher. A quotation from Shakespeare appropriate to the month is added, and the photogravures are printed in a variety of colors. It is a very pretty thing for the price. [$1.50.]

The price of the Les Misérables formerly published by Routledge & Sons and now sold only by subscription through McDonnell Brothers of Chicago, has been raised from $15 to $20, and is cheap at the latter figure — $4 a volume.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 10, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

 Saturday of next week, the 17th inst., is Whittier's 80th birthday. It does not seem possible that it can be ten years since the Literary World so famously celebrated the poet's 70th birthday, and led off in that long series of "birthday numbers" which have become a feature in American journalism. The memorial for this 80th birthday approaching is to be a congratulatory letter, with many signatures, suitably bound. If all were to sign it who would like to, more than one volume would be needed.

 We must again ask the forbearance of our readers. The pressure of the season forces us out of our usual path, and costs us much of our customary variety of matter. Our next issue will contain our regular Annual Review, now an established and unique feature of this journal. After that we shall resume our ordinary lines with renewed vigor.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Literary World:

SIR: In your Holiday Number, just received, you say, page 427, that the title Tre, Pol, and Pen, of one of the S. P. C. K. publications, "is an unintelligible title." The mouse upon occasion may deliver the lion out of the toils. On this principle I venture to suggest to you an explanation of the above title. Your notice of the book shows that it is a story of Cornish life and character. There are a number of Cornishmen, mostly miners, in this city, and I have heard them use the following proverb, referring to their peculiar surnames:

By Tre, Pol, or Pen,
You may know the Cornishmen.

A tale of Cornwall is not inappropriately entitled Tre, Pol, and Pen, if its purpose be to portray that ancient and interesting people.

Very respectfully,

JOS. BLOUNT CHESHIRE, JR.

Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 3, 1887.

COMMODORE PERRY.*

THE life of Commodore Perry is valuable no less as a type than as a record. Born in Newport in 1794, the son of a brave American sailor and a no less brave Irish mother, Matthew Perry inherited by blood, courage and firm will; and by education and discipline, temperance, reverence, self-denial, self-reliance, the mastery of the passions, and that power of indomitable persistence in the course he deemed right, which of itself may be said to determine success. His mother's training was of the sort which makes heroes. It was Mrs. Perry "who licked the British," an old farmer declared when the news of the victory on Lake Erie reached Kingston, and in this opinion he persisted.

* Matthew Galbraith Perry. A Typical American Officer. By Wm. Elliot Griffis. Cupples & Hurd. $3.00.

Entering the navy at fifteen, Perry's life was nearly all passed at sea. The years immediately preceding and following 1812 were stirring and eventful ones, and adventure and promotion were easy to come by. There is much to interest all American boys in the narrative of that time, the fights with English cruisers off the coast of New England, the voyages to intercept British merchantmen, the chases and narrow escapes. At eighteen Perry was made acting lieutenant, at twenty-six first lieutenant; two years later find him a post captain in command of the man-of-war "Shark." Truly, in those days "heroes were made early."

As an organizer and disciplinarian Matthew Perry deserves high mention. To his faithful and persistent endeavors we owe much of the great improvement in our naval service between 1815 and 1850. He was an early advocate of the introduction of steam into vessels of war, and of rifled ordnance and cannon, and he worked hard at the reformation and perfecting of the light-house system. He was the first man in this country to discover the new element of power in the naval "ram." Later, he proved himself as able in diplomacy as in scientific gunnery, by his conduct of the first treaty with Japan. It was soon after the publication of the second volume of his report on this deeply interesting expedition that he died in New York, at the age of sixty-four, from disease contracted in the service of his country thirty-five years previously.

Commodore Perry has been fortunate in his biographer. Dr. Griffis's treatment of his subject is in excellent taste, and he imbues his readers with his own enthusiasm — an excellent thing in those who treat of illustrious persons.

THE GNOSTICS AND THEIR REMAINS.*

THIS stately volume is the second edition of a learned and valuable work, published twenty-three years ago, on a curious and important chapter of human thought. Gnosticism is sufficiently well known on the side of its theory to every reader of ecclesiastical history, but its archæology has received very little attention from English writers. This work by Mr. King, an M.A. of Cambridge, England, is, in fact, the only one of importance on this neglected side of the Gnostic movement since Chifflet's Apistopistus of 1617. Since the appearance of the first edition, in 1864, Mr. King has mastered those two very important works of recent discovery, the Refutation of all Heresies, by Hippolytus, and the Pistis-Sophia (Faith-Wisdom), "sole survivor of the once numerous family of Gnostic Gospels." The latter is of great value for the archæology of Gnosticism, as it sets forth the Egyptian mysteries identical with those of the rabbinical Kabbala.

* The Gnostics and Their Remains. Ancient and Medieval. By C. W. King, M.A. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.00.

The five parts of Mr. King's volume treat of Gnosticism and its source, which he finds in Buddhism; of the worship of Mitteras, the Persian deity, whose religion was so prominent in the Roman Empire at the advent of Christianity, and of Serapis, whom Mr. King identifies as Yama, the Indian "Lord of Hell," attended by his dog Carbara, the three-headed; of Abraxas, the god of Basilides, Abraxaster and Abraxoid gems; of the figured monuments of Gnosticism; and of Templars, Rosicrucians, and Freemasons (for whom the author will allow no high antiquity). Nineteen wood-cuts in the text and fourteen plates at the end illustrate the seals, gems, talismans, and other archaeological remains of this daring faith.

Any one at all conversant with the recondite matters here brought to light knows how much literature of the most superficial order, but claiming to be "esoteric" or "theosophic," is rampant today among the semi-educated. Mr. King's treatise does not belong to any such class. In his obscure and sometimes unsavory field of research he is, probably, occasionally more confident of connections of thought between East and West than a cautious temper would be; but his work is a sober, scholarly treatise, deserving the attention of all students of the antiquarianism of religion. An excellent book to read with it is M. Jean Réville's work on "Religion at Rome under the Severi."

THE WORKS OF WASHINGTON IRVING. TAPPAN ZEE EDITION.*

WE are glad to see small books coming in fashion again. There is no reason why they should not meet the requirements of the oculist, and in many ways they can be made satisfactory to the reader. The new "Tappan Zee Edition" of Irving's Works is a case in point. Here are twelve volumes, with an aggregate of something like 3,600 pages; but the whole pack loosely into a cabinet-like box only ten inches long, six high, and four deep. It is indeed a case of jewels, suited to a boudoir.

The distribution of the set is as follows: The Sketch Book, 2 vols.; Tales of a Traveller, 2 vols.; Wolfert's Roost, 1 vol.; Knickerbocker's New York, 2 vols.; Bracebridge Hall, 2 vols.; Tales of the Alhambra, 2 vols.; Crayon Miscellanies, 1 vol.

Except tail-pieces and other simple typographical ornaments, we discover but a single illustration, an etching giving a glimpse of the Alhambra, a cool, shaded interior perspective.

Exteriorly the books bear the same stamp with the Knickerbocker Nuggets noticed in our last issue; not large but excellent and wholly legible type, a clear white paper not too highly calendered, front and bottom edges uncut, tops gilded, and for binding a back of dark green cloth richly tooled in gilt, with sides of a flowery damask pattern.

Though small, these books are not dwarfed in appearance; they do not look like toys or trifles; they have dignity despite their size, and for lightness, grace, and beauty, as well as for convenience, make a strong appeal to a cultivated taste as a presentation of pure literature in a fine form.

MR. SCUDDER'S ESSAYS.*

HABITUAL readers of the Atlantic Monthly for the last two or three years have taken note of a series of critical essays marked by a catholicity of tone, a breadth of treatment, a readiness of insight, and a clear simplicity of style which set them out at once as far superior to the average anonymous magazine reviewing of the day. Among literary people their authorship has long been an open secret, and it is pleasant now to find the author throwing off the mask and appearing in propria persona before the general public. The eleven papers brought together by Mr. Scudder in this volume are of the sort that wears well. They have something more than a momentary interest. They are original, sound, and full of suggestion. They advance in a quiet, unobtrusive manner many a significant idea. They bear the stamp of sincerity and their suggestions are results of thorough knowledge and mature thought.

The subjects chosen by Mr. Scudder are in keeping with the current of the times, while they exhibit a freedom of choice that is characteristic of the writer. The opening essay on Elisha Mulford is a delightful portrayal of a unique man, bringing us into immediate relation with his strong, vigorous personality and yet never saying a word too much. Of "Longfellow and his Art" Mr. Scudder writes with earnest appreciation. He is the first, we believe, to point out the critical epochs in the career of Longfellow, and to determine "the bent of his genius . . . toward the artistic use of the reflected forms of nature and of the product of human forces." "He was first of all a composer, and he saw his subjects in their relations rather than in their essence." Another essay on "The Shaping of Excelsior" is familiar to the readers of the Literary World as it originally appeared in these columns.

Mr. Scudder writes of Maurice as "A Modern Prophet," one chiefly noteworthy for a vivid perception of a few large truths and their vehement application to conduct. Landor is lauded as a classic. "Apart from a course of study in the Greek and Latin classics," says Mr. Scudder, "I doubt if any single study would serve an author so well as the study of Landor." Dr. Muhlenberg is the theme of a brief but forcible characterization. From the growing familiarity of Americans with the facts of their history a quickening influence upon the stage is predicted. "Emerson's Self" is dwelt upon as the most enduring charm of Emerson's work, while Emerson's lack of passionate nationality is lamented. In an essay on "Aspects of Historical Work" the scientific method of writing history is urged as a necessary prelude to philosophical conclusions regarding national tendencies. Annie Gilchrist is depicted from the side of personal friendship as a large, devoted, genuine, serene nature. In discussing "The Future of Shakespeare" Mr. Scudder makes the interesting prediction that "the time will some day come for a new and interesting study of Shakespeare—namely, the study of Shakespeare as reflected in successive generations of men." Our summary is brief, but it will show that Mr. Scudder does not follow the beaten track and that his opinions have the merit of sincerity and discernment. Thoughtful readers who would take note of the trend of current literature and biography will find in these essays a pleasure of no transient or uncertain kind.

THE COLEORTON MEMORIALS.*

THESE are genuine literary treasures—these letters unearthed by Professor William Knight while rummaging the archives of the Beaumonts at Coleorton Hall in Leicestershire. The Sir George Beaumont, to whom and to whose wife the letters were addressed, was the seventh baronet of that name, born in 1753, a traveler, an artist, and the founder of the British National Gallery. His relation to the poets and artists of his day was of a singularly free and generous nature. He knew intimately Coleridge and Wordsworth as early as 1803 when he lodged for a time at Greta Hall; and, Professor Knight tells us, he was among the first to appreciate the genius of these two men. He presented Wordsworth with a small property at Applethwaite (which, however, Wordsworth never occupied), and in 1806 offered the Wordsworth family the use of the farm-house adjoining Coleorton Hall, and they lived there about a year, planning meanwhile the winter garden, which, according to Professor Knight, "retains at this day more memorials of Wordsworth than the grounds of Rydal Mount or Fox Howe." Sir George died in 1827; "by far the most sensible and pleasing man I ever knew" is Sir Walter Scott's comment in noting the event. Lady Beaumont, who survived her husband two years, Henry Crabb Robinson described in his

* Tappan Zee Edition of Irving's Works. 12 vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons & Co. $12.00.

* Men and Letters: Essays in Characterization and Criticism. By Horace E. Scudder. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

* Memorials of Coleorton: Being Letters from Coleridge, Wordsworth and his Sister, Southey, and Sir Walter Scott, to Sir George and Lady Beaumont of Coleorton, Leicestershire, 1803 to 1834. Edited by William Knight. Two vols. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $4.50.

journal of 1823 as "a gentlewoman of great sweetness and dignity." To her nearly one half of the letters are addressed.

The correspondence, arranged chronologically and edited with scrupulous care by Professor Knight, opens with a letter from Coleridge, dated August 12, 1803, and covers a period of thirty years, several letters being included at the close of the second volume written by Wordsworth and his sister to occupants of Coleorton Hall as late as 1834. Nineteen of the letters are from the pen of Coleridge, 35 by Wordsworth, 23 by Dorothy Wordsworth, 20 by Southey, 2 by Mrs. Wordsworth, and 3 by Sir Walter Scott. All are of decided interest: their chief value is in the light they throw upon Wordsworth's life and upon the mental condition of Coleridge during the later portion of his intellectual career, from the time when he first became subject to the opium habit almost up to the period of his death. It ought to be said, however, that the letters of Coleridge here printed are not in any sense "confessions"—but they show a mental condition which all students of his life will readily appreciate. They are often incoherent and rambling, but they abound in striking passages and in startling flashes of self-revelation. In 1803 he speaks of a foot-tour through Scotland which he has just completed, and relates how he entered a public house and "fell down in an hysterical fit, with long and loud weeping." Later in the same year he writes that he is afraid to fall asleep because of the terrifying visions with which he is afflicted. Emmet's death at 24 leads him to speak of his own experiences at that age, when, although an extravagant supporter of the doctrine of non-resistance, he spoke "vehemently from mere verbal associations" and "aided the Jacobins by witty sarcasms and subtle reasoning, and declarations full of genuine feeling against all rulers and against all established forms!" Speculating on the possibility of imprisonment he adds: "The very clank of the chains that were to be put about my limbs would not at that time have deterred me from a strong phrase or striking metaphor, although I had had no other inducement to the use of the same, except the wantonness of luxuriant imagination, and my aversion to abstain from anything simply because it was dangerous." He sends to Sir George the first draft of his ode to "Mont Blanc," showing that it was much modified by later revision; he speaks, in a veiled way, of his unhappy relations with his wife; of the hard experiences of his early years; explains his method for the comparative study of Shakespeare's plays; comments on his journey to Malta; describes his relations to Wordsworth; propounds, now and then, his religious and philosophical views; and gives fully his journalistic experiences with The Friend.

Wordsworth's letters have the dignity and repose natural to the author, but are frequently warmed into fervent gratitude for the unremitting kindness and friendship of Sir George. They show us Wordsworth in his home, performing the rude domestic offices entailed by his frugal manner of living; walking the fields and composing his poems; laying out grounds; expressing with calm confidence his faith in the ultimate recognition of his work as worthy of a place in the world's literature; and they contain many pages of reflections on nature and human life which will not be forgotten.

Not the least valuable of the letters in Professor Knight's collection are those of Dorothy Wordsworth, whose quick sensibility, vivacity, generous ardor, and unflinching good sense find felicitous utterance. Her opinions of Coleridge at different periods are extremely suggestive, and her observations on the life of her famous brother cannot fail to gratify the reader. As for Southey's letters, they are also, in their way, important revelations of character; several of them are urgent requests for preferment for himself or his brother, and the remainder are mostly occupied with accounts of those laborious literary tasks whose fruits the world has been so willing to let die. Mrs. Wordsworth's letters are concerned with family matters. Sir Walter Scott writes in a cordial vein to decline and proffer invitations, to commend a young painter to Sir George's good offices, to record his friendly feeling for Wilkie, and to express his pleasure at the "manly sense and candour" of Wordsworth.

A word must be said regarding the manner in which these letters have been given to the public. They were printed by the Constables of Edinburgh, are bound with edges uncut in covers of bluish gray paper, with vellum backs and corners and simple gilt lettering, forming two of the most attractive volumes that ever delighted the book-fancier's eye.

TWO BOOKS ON EVOLUTION.

THE first book named below¹ consists of twenty lectures delivered to a society in Utica, N. Y., which, if we are not mistaken, is an organization of an entirely independent character, not connected with any denomination, but gathered by natural affinity around a somewhat eccentric leader. The lectures are as remarkable a mixture as we have ever seen, in a wide reading in evolutionary literature, of bright and forcible exposition of Darwinism and of clear and sound morality, with all manner of "crankiness" in theology. Mr. Powell perceives one increasing purpose running through all the changes of the universe, ethics being the crown of the whole endeavor of evolving nature and struggling man. Life he defines as an essential and permanent quality of the universe, and eternal life is God. He stoutly affirms the ethical argument for immortality, and he is substantially a Christian theist with a strong "ethical passion." But he is sadly unbalanced when he sets down all that we have received from primitive ages as puerility and myth, and prophesies a future which "repeats with tenderness the name of its greatest expounder, Darwin; and with reverential love that of its supremest prophet, Jesus!" In fact, Mr. Powell is often thus dangerously near the level of much spiritistic literature, if it can so be named, with its exuberant rhetoric and extravagant taste. Yet, for a discerning reader, the book is one of the best popular manuals of Darwinism, its naïve confidence in Darwin, which is quite uncritical, being balanced by a spiritual view of nature and man very uncommon in ultra-Darwinians. Mr. Powell has studied evolution carefully; he has a talent for exposition; his originality is not slight, and he is never dull.

¹ Our Heredity from God. Consisting of Lectures on Evolution. By E. P. Powell. D. Appleton & Co. $1.75.

Perhaps there could be no better book named as a corrective of the indiscriminate admiration for Darwinism exhibited by Mr. Powell and very many others, today, than Professor Schurman's keen and vigorous little book on its Ethical Import.² His opening chapters state with admirable discrimination the essential contribution which Darwin made to the familiar doctrine of evolution in scientifically establishing the law of natural selection. But between Darwin the observer of nature, and Darwin the speculator on the origin and trend of the moral life of man, Professor Schurman carefully distinguishes. The first he admires, as he ought; the second he criticises, as he must.

Darwinism in morals, as taught by Darwin himself, is pervaded with English utilitarianism. But "all that natural selection requires is that something shall be useful; what else it may be, what other predicates it may have, wherein its essence consists, natural selection knows not and reck not. . . . It is accordingly a gratuitous assumption which our exponents of evolutionary ethics make when they decline to allow more than a merely relative value to morality." "Because natural selection presupposes a utility—a fittest that survives—the evolutionists have fallen into the fallacy of supposing that morality was nothing but a utility."

On the contrary the Sage professor at Cornell holds that "the consciousness of right and wrong is underived, and, like intelligence in general, witnesses to a suprasensible principle in man—a principle which the wheels of mechanism, grinding through eternity, could never of themselves produce. This view of the subject may be affiliated to Darwinism as readily as the other. For an abiding ideal of action is, to say the least, quite as beneficial as a chance action; and wherever there is an advantage, there natural selection may operate. But natural selection does not determine the material upon which it works. Given the forms of primitive morality, whatever they be, natural selection only settles which shall perish and which survive." "Evolutionary science in general," then, "natural selection in particular, does not necessitate or even indicate a new system of ethics."

² The Ethical Import of Darwinism. By J. G. Schurman. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

Evolutionary ethics as hitherto expounded have no support from evolutionary science.

We have preferred to let Professor Schurman speak for himself. We consider his position substantially sound. He has defended it with a fairness and a subtlety of discrimination deserving the highest praise. His book is a notable contribution to the much-needed criticism of Darwinism from the ranks of the believers in natural selection. They are Darwin's best friends and truest followers who continue his work by defining the actual limits of natural selection as an evolutionary power in the natural world, and can correct his errors in speculation in the moral field, where he was not an expert.

A UNIVERSAL HISTORY.*

THREE of these books, arranged in logical order, suffice to furnish a history of the world from the beginning to the present day, arranged upon a somewhat common plan. The fourth, Professor Hull's Geological History, is a supplement to the set, or perhaps we ought to say a prefix thereto, the latter certainly, if a knowledge of the earth itself is a prerequisite to a study of what has been done upon it. All the four authors are British scholars of distinction. Professor Hull belongs to the Royal College of Science in Dublin; Professor Stokes to the University of Dublin; Professor Patton to the same and also to Alexandra College; and Dr. Rawlinson, as is well known, to Oxford and Canterbury. Some general editor seems to be behind these authors, but he conceals himself, whereas it would have been better had he magnified his office, and given greater distinctness to the orderly relation and disposal of the several works. Except for the desirability of presenting the books to the public in their individuality, each complete in itself, they might well have been marshaled in their proper chronological order and suitably numbered.

The period of Ancient History as treated by Dr. Rawlinson extends from the Creation to the destruction of the Roman Empire, A. D. 476, thus passing by the advent of our Lord as the end of the old and the beginning of the new. The composition makes liberal use of the latest investigations among the monuments of the East, dismisses the earliest sections of the subject with a few words, and expends its strength on the thousand years which lie equally divided before and after the advent. The millennial period next immediately before this is not however by any means slighted. Here the Egyptian dynasties are sketched in detail. The method is not chronological in the first instance, but topical, the story of each country and its people being related by itself within the period under consideration. Where Dr. Rawlinson leaves off Dr. Stokes begins in his Mediæval History, covering in his 250 pages (nearly 100 fewer than Dr. Rawlinson's) the whole stretch of the Middle Ages, and ending with the fall of Constantinople, A. D. 1453. Again the method is topical by periods, the growth of Europe being the dominant action in the ever-shifting scene. Then succeeds Professor Patton's Modern History, the portliest volume of the three (624 pp.), completing the narrative to date. Over this broad expanse—crowded with events and figures—the author moves with rapid tread, and it would be difficult to excel the lightness, dexterity, and precision of his touch as the long and complicated lines slip through his separating fingers. Modern history is of all history the most difficult to write; but in such crucial passages as the progress of affairs in the United States and Great Britain during the past twenty-five years, Professor Patton achieves a degree of success which is at least creditable.

A marked excellence of the books is the copious synopses, abundant tables, and full indexes with which they are provided. In this respect they leave nothing to be desired. We recall no recent publications whose outfit is more generous or serviceable in this respect. The Geological History further displays a colored chart of the formations. The books are substantially, simply, and suitably printed and bound.

MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX.*

MR. CRAWFORD'S latest romance, Marzio's Crucifix, is a work of admirable strength, purpose, and form. The principal actor in this little drama of Roman middle-class life is a striking embodiment of the mischievous socialist, with his spirit of denial of all that exists, and his inflammatory declamation which he mistakes for logic. It is certain that one has to be very credulous to disbelieve in God and man!

While, in general characteristics, Marzio is akin to the enemies of law and order everywhere, his especial type is thoroughly Roman; and Roman are also the other personages of the story, Don Paolo the priest, Gianbattista the apprentice of the silversmith, Maria Luisa with her lazy, genial presence, and Lucia, practical and impassioned. Each one is a study clearly drawn and well colored.

Admirable as is Mr. Crawford's art in individual portraits, he is much less reliable and efficient when it becomes a question of generalization. Indeed, it is curious to note how he—with intimate knowledge of Roman society, high, low, and of the mezzo ceto, with an idiom that approaches in tone and in wording often so close to the Italian that it may be almost verbally translated—fails when he undertakes to speak of Italy and Italians as a whole. Except politically and geographically, it is not indeed possible so to speak. The Italian of Lombardy or Venice is rather more distinctly different from the Italian of Calabria or Naples than a Maine man is from a Creole of Louisiana. The Calabrian comes of Oriental and Greek descent, the people of upper Italy inherit from the Goths that poured down like Alpine torrents upon the plains of Lombardy; and Teuton and Provençal may be traced in the manners and speech of upper Italy, while those of Sicily and Calabria are colored with classic and Eastern phrases and traditions. The central part of Italy derives more unmixedly from the old Romans. And even these groupings appear too general when it is remembered how jealous were the mediæval divisions between state and state, how each city won its epithet from the character of its people.

No country has had more history to the square mile than has Italy; and no turn of the wheel of fortune has failed to leave its mark upon the land. Italy has now secured its political unity; and with the advance of liberal thought and material prosperity, many distinctions will gradually disappear, while others must remain indelible.

Meanwhile, the superficial way in which many intelligent persons regard Italy is matter for correction. Even the kindest of Anglo-Saxons are apt to imagine the Italian—from Cape Spartivento to the Alps—as forever basking in the sun and entangling himself, a gastronomic Laocoön, in endless coils of macaroni; an irresponsible being who causelessly vibrates between a serenade and a stiletto. The original of this operatic type—so numerous as he may still exist—is the Neapolitan lazzarone, child of a meridian where earth and sea teem with fruits and offer a premium to laziness. Yet even Naples is full of people working hard for incredibly small pay. The Sicilians and Calabrians, men and women, work like slaves in the fields; the girls of Capri carry loads of stone on their heads, shaped like those of Greek statues; the people of Lombardy utilize every resource of their country, toil among the vines, the corn, the rice-fields, and live with frugality and industry to give points to a New England household. If it be necessary to fall into generalization—at least industry, patriotism and patience may be truthfully predicted of all Italy.

Mr. Crawford is, moreover, in error when he says that Italy is no longer imaginative or creative. To credit this, one can have looked at the question only superficially, mistaking an outward phase for an essential condition. It is true that the practical needs of the reconstructed nation have turned men's minds strongly toward civil engineering, mechanics, and military discipline; and at present Italy shares the quietness—perhaps of a preparatory period—existent throughout the literary and artistic world. Meanwhile, Italy can boast the one living great opera composer, Giuseppe Verdi; a writer second to none in nobility and in brilliance, Edmondo de Amicis; and a host of sculptors, painters, and writers who lose by comparison rather with the past of Italy than with the present of other countries.

* Universal History. 4 vols. Modern, Ancient, Mediæval, Geological. By Patton, Rawlinson, Stokes, Hull. J. B. Lippincott Co. The set, $6.00.

* Marzio's Crucifix. By F. Marion Crawford. Macmillan & Co., London and New York. $1.50.

A very minor error, yet enough to point the lack of entire appreciation of the Italian spirit, is Mr. Crawford's idea of what he calls an almost untranslatable phrase, un uomo serio. His equivalent, Philistine, conveys an unlovely impression not at all inherent to the Italian words. The uomo serio is simply a settled, right-minded man, not delighting in folly; while according to his natural bias he may or may not be prosaic. Probably not, since it requires a good dose of imagination to avoid absurdities.

These objections have been made at once, so that after criticism of certain misapprehensions included in Mr. Crawford's story, the wider and pleasanter field of praise may be left for the end of this review.

Marzio's Crucifix has a sufficient plot, logical, not too insistent, but steadily carried onward. It comes to a fine climax of storm and subsequent calm; and it pictures with strength and subtilty the bitterness, old as the story of Cain, which animates Marzio against his brother. The reflections upon socialism, in the speeches of the prelate, are extremely brilliant and sound. The feeble fury of Marzio, his fervor of negation that supplies to his art of the silversmith the force that should have been given to it by faith; the strange spasms of belief that flit across his mind in contemplating the crucifix which he has designed; the extraordinary manner in which events combine to mercifully teach him beforehand the lesson of remorse—form a strong and thoughtful romance which it is great praise to have written.

SOME THINGS ABROAD.*

DR. MCKENZIE'S journey was a long one, occupying several months. It extended over a great deal of territory, and the effort to compress the impressions of so much sight-seeing into a small octavo of less than 500 pages has obliged the author to neglect many things, and to bring his opinions to a small focus. In many respects this is an advantage to the reader. Dr. McKenzie has a terse style, conveying a goodly amount of information in a little space; he has a quiet vein of humor with which he enlivens his pages; and he never grumbles, nor does he dwell as much as he might on the discomforts of travel in the far East.

* Some Things Abroad. By Alexander McKenzie. D Lothrop Co. $1.50.

The route followed led from Queenstown to the lakes of Killarney, then, with a pause in Scotland, to Newcastle, and thence by steamer to Norway. What he saw in Ireland led the author to conclude that the Irish race deteriorates by transfer to American soil, at least physically speaking; and he complains of the inroads of foreign customs in hotel life. He found a Parisian table at Killarney, and at the Giant's Causeway the head waiter might have been chief justice of the district. The chapter giving details of a carriage drive through the interior of Norway is of interest. Dr. McKenzie found the attractions of Norway to be fresh and great, the country easy of access, traveling inexpensive and agreeable, the people hospitable and eager to please, though singularly undemonstrative in their manners. He thinks that the tide of English travel is setting that way, and that in view of the German occupation of Switzerland in the summer months, Americans would do well to follow the English. From Norway the author passed through Sweden and Denmark into Italy, by way of the Rigi—meaning by that term not the Kulm alone, but the whole region of twenty-five miles' circuit. Dr. McKenzie preferred the Rigi First as a stopping place, and commends it to travelers. The Italian tour extended to Venice, and then turned to Trieste, where the author became one of a "personally conducted" company bound for the East. Athens, Constantinople, Damascus, Jerusalem, and Jaffa were in the itinerary, and the book closes with a hurried sketch of the homeward journey from Jaffa to Vevey. Dr. McKenzie might have told us more of the work of the American Classical School at Athens. He devotes several pages to Robert College at Constantinople, and to the less known school for girls at Scutari, conducted by young American women. The work of education is carried on under serious disadvantages, but it seems to be steadily growing in influence in spite of the jealous fears of the government. The journey from Beirut to Jerusalem was made under the supervision of Alexander Howard, the grand dragoman of Syria; and while often subjected to serious discomforts, arising mostly from inadequate preparation for meeting the frequent and heavy rain storms, the author maintains throughout his uniform composure, and peoples the barren hills and dreary ruins of Palestine with memories of the gospel narratives.

SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Half-Hours with the Stars. A Plain and Easy Guide to a Knowledge of the Constellations, showing in Twelve Maps the Position of the Principal Star Groups Night after Night Throughout the Year; with an Introduction, and a separate explanation of each map, two for every year. Maps and text prepared especially for American students. By Richard

A. Proctor, F.R.A.S. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00.] The stars, says Emerson, always awaken reverence in man, because while constantly visible they are forever inaccessible. The seven planets of the ancients gave sacredness to the number seven; so that even among the Hebrews the very word seven acquired a sacred meaning, and signified a solemn oath. To become acquainted with the names of the constellations leads to their contemplation; one greets them with new interest in their returning seasons, if he associates with them the names which they have borne from times of unmeasured antiquity. And we have never seen a book from which a person, ignorant of all astronomy, could so readily learn to recognize the principal constellations, as these Half-Hours of Professor Proctor. There are a few minor blemishes of style in the text, and a few typographical errors; but the only serious defect seems to us to be, that the last paragraph of the first page of the Introduction was not signalized by italics, or some typographical device, as containing the most valuable direction for making the maps useful.

Linguistic and Oriental Studies. Second Series. By R. N. Cust, LL.D. [London: Trübner & Co.] Dr. Cust, who has had many years' experience in India, and has traveled widely through the British Empire, has published a number of volumes and essays on the languages of the East Indies and Africa, and on his travels. He is a diffuse writer, and the present volume has been swollen to great size by the inclusion of needless matter. A few of the twenty-one essays are of general interest; such are the "Tour in Egypt and Palestine," and the "Geography of the Greeks and Romans." Others have special interest for English people, treating of the government of India and the best Egyptian policy. In respect to these matters, as well as to his judgments on Russia and Turkey, Dr. Cust displays a warm sympathy for the subject races and a striking freedom from English prejudices. The larger part of the volume contains essays on the Royal Asiatic Society, the races, religions, languages, and literature of India, the languages of Africa, and related subjects. Here the interest of the volume is for students of comparative religion and philology. While Dr. Cust does not rank as an authority of the first order, his papers have a value for specialists which will make them thank the author for collecting them in permanent form.

The Missing Sense. By C. W. Wooldridge, B.S., M.D. [Funk & Wagnalls. 60c.] The missing sense of this sober and thoughtful little volume is a sense we might possibly have had in our human nature to perceive spiritual intelligences which are ever about us. Dr. Wooldridge argues that the phenomena of dreams, for instance, are to be explained only on the supposition that we have the rudiments of such a sense. The book has no scientific value, however, as one may see from the praise it bestows upon that enormous mass of unsifted instances called "Phantasms of the Living."

Science and Immortality. [Geo. H. Ellis. 75c.] The enterprising editor of the Christian Register, of Boston, sent out last winter over twenty letters to prominent scientific men of this country and England, asking their views on the subject of personal continuance after death

The replies received were printed in the Register last April, and they are now reprinted in a neat booklet, with additional communications from Professors Graham Bell, Le Conte, Remsen, and Pickering, and General Greely. The answers show a great variety of opinion, ranging as they do from flat denial of immortality, in the name of science, through agnosticism, to confident affirmation. The collection is a valuable one to have at hand, for we doubt if so many men of note in scientific circles were ever before called to give an account of their belief about a future existence for man. Rev. Mr. Barrows adds biographical notes on the contributors, and sums up the testimony in an excellent paper, in which, for ourselves, we find just as sound science as in any of the foregoing contributions and a much more satisfactory theology than most of them can boast of.

FICTION.

Zorah: A Love Tale of Modern Egypt. By Elisabeth Balch. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.25.] Zorah appears upon the scene in the first chapter as a beautiful slave girl employed by a Cairene snake-charmer to exhibit the effects of his art. She is rescued from her wretched condition by Mustaphà Bey, master of ceremonies at the Egyptian court, renowned as the handsomest man in the land of the Pharaohs. The rescue is made at the request of Edith Vance, a blue-eyed English girl with whom Mustaphà is madly in love. Zorah is placed in the service of the Princess Saydeh and is able to frustrate the plots of the jealous princess against the happiness and life of Mustaphà. When, on the occasion of the visit of the Empress Eugénie, Mustaphà is forced by the Khedive into a harem marriage, Zorah poisons the bride before the ceremonies are completed and Mustaphà is left free to wed the English girl, while Zorah makes her confession before the court and is put to death by order of the Princess Saydeh. The author has caught certain phases of Egyptian life and depicted them forcibly; the story is vivified by an intensity that does not overleap the limits of discretion, and while the characters are not very strongly individualized they are made to play their parts sufficiently well to beguile the not-too-exacting reader. The story of Zorah's devotion and tragic fate is finely told and is full of true pathos.

Country Luck. By John Habberton. [J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.00.] Mr. Habberton is forced and artificial in this story. Everything is planned out before hand, and the wires by which the puppets in the little show are moved are always in sight. It is Philip Hayn who has country luck. He is a farmer's son, a manly young fellow with a great mind. He goes to New York, calls at once upon the Tramlays, who had boarded at his father's house during the summer, is at once welcomed by the circle of wealth and fashion in which the Tramlays move, is taken into partnership by Tramlay, organizes a joint stock company and cuts up the paternal farm into lots for seashore villas, and when he is fairly on his way to fortune marries Tramlay's daughter, with whom he has been modestly in love all along. Mr. Habberton tries to be realistic in his descriptions of country life, but the disposition to caricature often gets the better of him. With regard to city matters he is vague. The story was evidently got up as the basis for a play, but it is dramatic only in intention, not in action. The characters, although deceptively attired and skillfully managed, are only lay-figures after all.

Bledisloe; or, Aunt Pen's American Nieces. By Ada M. Trotter. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.50.] Bledisloe is an attractive story of the invasion of a sleepy English village by two bright American girls who win friends and lovers, find a great deal to criticise, institute some piquant comparisons, and on the whole have a thoroughly good time. Aunt Pen, a charming old maid; Bet, a quaint serving-woman; the very Rev. Russel Somers, the handsome, selfish, sport-loving rector of Bledisloe, who wishes to clear himself of debts by marrying his beautiful daughter Effie to Sir Ralph Farnsworth, a wealthy old baronet; Irwine Keith, a proud, austere, athletic artist in love with Effie; Kent Beresford, a gruff, good-hearted, many-sided lawyer; a brood of robust, red-headed young people, all Beresfords—these are among the leading characters. The author has an easy style; her pictures of English country life are undoubtedly faithful; she has a gift of dialogue; and her humor is fresh and invigorating. Effie's renunciation of her betrothed at the altar savors somewhat of melodrama, but is not impossible. The account of the picnic at Raglan Castle and of the momentous incidents that occurred there is well written. Indeed, except as regards a good deal of unpardonable nonsense about "aristocratic bearing," "aristocratic features," "cleanly-carved race-traits," "dominant race," "royal bearing," and so on, we have only commendation for Bledisloe.

Driver Dallas. By John Strange Winter. [Harper & Bros. 25c.] "Driver" Dallas is the nickname by which Captain John Dallas of Drive of the Royal Horse is known to his intimate friends. He is a stalwart, honest, clear-eyed young fellow; and when the bewitching Mabel Rivers, left motherless, comes to Drive to make her home there with his sister Betty and his great-aunt Miss Aurora, the result usual in such contingencies follows. The course of love does not run at all smoothly, however. Mabel assumes for the time being the character of a coquette, when a handsome officer of the Lancers appears on the scene. Dallas sees service in India and the Soudan. In the end all comes right. The descriptions of army life are not elaborate, but are effective. It may safely be assumed by all lovers of wholesome fiction that everything she who calls herself John Strange Winter writes is quite worth reading.

The Duchess. By the author of "Phyllis." [J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.] The sprightly author of Phyllis and other sentimental tales who formerly masqueraded as "The Duchess" now makes her pseudonym the title of a story, whether autobiographical or not we are unable to say. The "portrait of the author" standing as frontispiece ought to set at rest any rival claims. "The Duchess" is the nickname of a pretty Irish girl who lives with her jovial old "dad" on a half-ruined estate. She has "a slender, childish figure," clear, gray, deep eyes with "purple shadows" beneath them, "long, curling lashes," "rippling chestnut hair," a "wide, low, capable brow," and "above all and beyond all, the exquisite sweetness of her mouth reigns queen; so riante, tender, loving, all in one; so arch, too, and so soft, and red as roses in fair June." The "sweetness" of a "riante" mouth reigning "above and beyond" a "capable brow"!—what wonder that Denis Delaney, aged twenty-eight, falls in love with so charming a creature? and this notwithstanding that he is already betrothed to the proud, statuesque Katherine Cazalet. He lets Katherine know of his falsity, but she refuses to give him up till a lucky accident leads to his release, etcetera, etcetera. Gush, nonsense, moonlight sentimentalism, "high-bred" scenes, make up nine tenths of the volume. "Dad" is the only commendable figure in the story, and he, we confess it with pleasure, is wholly delightful.

The Last von Reckenburg. By Louise von François. Tr. by J. M. Percival. [Cupples & Hurd. $1.50.] This novel has been received with a considerable degree of approval in Germany, where anything of what we should call average merit in fiction is nowadays exceptional; but although the characters are well drawn and the incidents boldly imagined and cleverly managed, the scene of the story is too remote to have much attraction for readers of today. The time is toward the close of the last century; the place, Saxony; the dramatis personæ are: the proud spinster Hardine, last of the von Reckenburgs; Dorothee, a beautiful child-woman led astray by a Saxon prince; Siegmund Faber, an impossible personage to whom Dorothee is married; and Justine, a foster nurse. The plot involves the fate of Dorothee's illegitimate son and of his daughter. As for Dorothee, her punishment is hard enough to gratify the severest moralist. The style of the translation is clear and remarkably forcible.

Seth's Brother's Wife. By Harold Frederic. [Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.25.] Mr. Frederic's novel is distinguished by its firm grasp of unhackneyed material, its realistic portraiture of life in a rural region, its repose of manner, its masterly dealing with unusual types without descent to caricature. Placed now in book form it makes a stronger impression than it did in the pages of the magazine where it first appeared. Mr. Frederic has evidently written out of a full mind. He knows the interior of northern New York thoroughly and he omits no essential details. The ethnography, geography, topography, and sociology of Dearborn County could not be more completely set forth within the limits of 400 octavo pages. And the story—for it is a story in spite of its scientific adequacy!—is intensely interesting. The characters are strongly outlined and without exception consistent in action. The interplay of motives is dexterously managed. The evolution of Seth from callow boyhood to manly superiority is depicted in his own mental transformation. The process of change, like a chemical experiment, goes on before one's eyes. The author is content to allow his personages to play their own parts, and there is no trace of arbitrary interference with artistic ends. The harsh, crude, unlovely aspects of a rural community with the social and political problems suggested by them are brought before us by Mr. Frederic in a way that commands respectful attention. The construction of his sentences may sometimes be awkward, but there is no escaping his meaning. He has the capability that comes of sincerity, careful observation, a thorough knowledge of men and women, a fixed purpose, a far-reaching perspective, a constant recognition of relative values. Few American novels of recent years have approached Seth's Brother's Wife in point of realistic power. It is a unique manifestation in current fiction and a book that augurs for its author an influential future.

A Fair Crusader. By William Westall. [Harper & Bros. 20c.] The "Fair Crusader" is Evelyn Waters, whose husband, one Conroy, has been arrested on the day of their marriage and condemned to fifteen years' penal servitude on conviction as a forger. Evelyn becomes a "Crusader," or a member of an organization similar to the Salvation Army. Her, George Brandon sees on his return from India a wealthy banker, and falls in love with her sweet face and gentle wisdom. But George goes to stay with his brother and falls mysteriously ill, and at length it is discovered that his brother's wife, a wily French woman, has been poisoning him with cocaine, that by his death her child might get a share of his property. She confesses; news comes of Conroy's death; and George marries Evelyn. On the coast where they are passing a portion of the honeymoon a wreck occurs, and a seaman rescued by George proves to be Conroy. A painful situation is abruptly ended by the murder of Conroy by George's Indian servant, Ali.

Her Only Son. By Hesba Stretton. [Dodd, Mead & Co. 75c.] This is a model book for terseness and point, for its beginning at the beginning, its telling the story and nothing else, and its leaving off at the end. It is also a strong story; true to human nature, touching, tender, painful in its picture of what slavery to drink will do for a man, but with the relief that a mother's fidelity and the charity of a Christian minister bring to its saddened pages. Joanna Fleming, the widowed mother of this only son, goes up from her sweet and tidy country home to London to care for him and his little children after the death of his wife; finds them half starved in a wretched room to which rum has brought them. She stays by, suffers everything, and at last is thrust out into the street by him, in one of his frenzies, and nearly perishes; both, however, are saved by a vicar whose life is spent in looking out for the wretched and sinning, and a new history begins for all. The book is brimful of sweet charity, and is such a warning against drink, so appealing for those who have been overcome, that it ought to be sent out by temperance societies on a mission of good all over the land, not only for the benefit of the unfortunate ones and the encouragement of their helpers, but for those who, like the great house of "Drummond & Co.," get their riches through the liquor traffic.

Inchfawn. By L. T. Meade. [Thomas Whitaker. $1.00.] An Irish story this, in which the question about the future of the great surpluse of the Irish peasantry is answered in a way that the author finds both pleasant and available. Inchfawn is the estate of the O'Donnells, descendants of Irish kings; the master is a jolly, big-hearted man, but improvident, and the beloved place goes out of his hands into those of a rich Englishman, Brownlow, who evicts the old tenants and makes himself detested. The secret order of "Red Glen" men, who suspect him of smuggling, keep an eye on him, and draw into their councils their old master and his son. Meanwhile the daughter Ellen, who is passionately loved by all the people, has established another society in the "Cave of Good-will," aided by another Englishman, Arundel, and his rich cousin, Margaret Ellerslee. Many complications arise, and the evicted tenants, blind to their true interests, spirit Arundel away, and he would have perished but for young Brownlow, who is in love with Ellen and loses his own life in saving him for her sake. The elder Brownlow, crushed by the death of his son, confesses to the old master of Inchfawn that he acquired his riches by smuggling, and begs him to take back the estate. It is, however, bought by Margaret (who it is to be inferred saves it to the O'Donnells by marrying the heir), and Arundel and Ellen go off with eight hundred men and women to found a new Inchfawn on the other side of the Atlantic. There is too much of the story, but it is delightfully told. Ellen is a lovely girl, her aunt Biddy a type, Margaret an excellent representative of the modern rich young woman with a mission, and poor John Henry Brownlow, with all his weaknesses, is of the stuff that heroes are made of. The warm Irish heart has justice done to its impulses, and some of the scenes, like that of the "Irish betrothal," are rich in local flavor.

Equal to the Occasion. By Edward Garrett. [Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00.] This story tells how little things may grow into unexpected importance and be potential in one's life; and of what imminent consequence it is to do one's duty as it is made clear, no matter how small it may be. The shaping of many characters has to do with a certain sermon preached by a stranger to a congregation of eleven, most of whom carried a part of it away with them and were influenced by it. Chrissy Miller, the heroine, is helped by it to attend to the work that comes first to her hand, and so goes on step by step as the way is made clear to her, one step at a time. She is as sweet as she is true, and as natural as she is womanly. She earns her living when her father loses his property, pays his debts, encourages and stands by the brave Hans, and goes courageously on in the business of life, accepting God's way for her and finding happiness in it. A pure and wholesome story, with a positive influence for good.

Tony, the Maid. A Novelette. By Blanche Willis Howard. Illustrated. [Harper & Bros. $1.00.] A capital story, cleverly told; a study of two women, the piquant and self-poised Tony, and the ineffably simple and good Miss Aurelia. The hits at human foibles are telling, without being malicious, and the gentle moralizing of the poor, perplexed lady over questions that are quite beyond her are unconsciously satirical without the sting:

I think it is pleasant when people don't know that they are doing wrong. It is certainly pleasanter than when people are so dreadfully sure that they alone always do right. At all events, since I am over here, simply traveling for pleasure, I would rather see the happy people. And it seems to me, if we don't like what foreigners do, and if we consider them so bad, we'd better stay at home. Of course there are things that they do Sundays which we couldn't possibly do. Beer and music, under a tree, for instance. I don't know that the beer is wrong, or the music, or the tree; but the combination does seem wicked. That is, for me. But is it for Tony? Mr. Brown himself told me once he did not think a quiet drive in the woods Sunday afternoon in itself a sin. Then, so far as beer is concerned, most people at home have their best dinners Sunday. Dear, dear! it is very confusing. And if a phaeton in the woods is not a sin, why is a boat on the water?

Jean Monteith. By M. G. McClelland. Leisure Hour Series. [Henry Holt & Co. $1.00.] The author of Oblivion has not as yet quite fulfilled the promise of her first performance, but Jean Monteith is a far better story than Princess. Its scene is a little settlement called Montrose at the foot of the Cumberland range, its motif the loyal devotion of a young girl to her father's memory and his dying charge. It is a brave little story, of a sort to help and not hinder the growth in character of any one who reads it; and, which must be counted for righteousness in these days of "dialect," its characters as a general thing talk a language which we who run can read without the aid of a special lexicon of mispronunciations and verbal oddities.

MINOR NOTICES.

Of the Doctrine of Morality in its Relation to the Grace of Redemption. By Robert B. Fairbairn, D.D. [Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.] The differentia of Christianity, says Warden Fairbairn (who should not be confounded with Principal Fairbairn of England), is redemption and grace. There is a perceptible tendency now-a-days to bring into prominence the ethical element of our religion as Ecce Homo did. The author therefore endeavors in these lectures to give to morality that theological coloring which he thinks a right conception of Christianity requires. A moral theology or system of distinctively Christian ethics is his desideratum.

The Scottish Pulpit from the Reformation to the Present Day. By Wm. M. Taylor, D.D. [Harper & Brothers. $1.50.] Here are seven lectures, delivered before the theological department of Yale University in the Lyman Beecher course for 1886. The preachers of that annual course are getting "hard up" for subjects. Dr. Taylor has gone for his to the lights of the Scotch pulpit—John Knox, Melville, Rutherford, Dickson, Livingstone, Leighton, Chalmers, and others; and these men, with the dissenting preachers and their environment, furnish him with an entertaining and suggestive theme. Dr. Taylor's own limitations come out in this volume, as where he says, p. 271, that it is a "mystery" to him how the preacher of a written sermon can resume his delivery after interjecting in the heat of utterance an extemporaneous passage, as Dr. Guthrie did. A little practice, we doubt not, would give Dr. Taylor the knack of doing a not difficult or uncommon thing. There is nothing better in the book than the two bits of advice on the last two pages: Be yourselves, but don't preach yourselves!

We have from Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago, their folding pocket maps, in stiff paper covers, of Virginia, Tennessee, Idaho, and Nevada; and the same in cloth covers of New York and Colorado. A bad typographical error in the latter is "Genwood" for "Glenwood Springs." But these maps are based on good surveys, and are generally satisfactory. They have a large sectional folding map of Michigan [$1.00], and a railroad and county map of Tennessee [$1.25], all in cloth covers; also thin stiff-paper covered pocket maps of Illinois, Nebraska, and New Mexico [each 25c.].

—The edition of Shakespeare edited by Henry Irving and Frank A. Marshall is to fill eight small quarto volumes, and will be illustrated with 37 full-page etchings and 550 designs by Gordon Browne. Mr. Irving will contribute an introduction with the object of showing that Shakespeare was a practical playwright, and that there is little warrant for the mutilation to which the dramas have been subjected. The text is given entire, marginal notes indicating such passages as are not essential to stage representation. A time-analysis accompanies each play, and in certain cases sketch maps of the scene of action are given. The American publishers of this important work are Scribner & Welford of New York.

PERIODICALS.

The December Century has an illustrated paper on the Sea of Galilee, by Edward L. Wilson, who writes from personal observation and treats his theme in a realistic way. The illustrations are beautifully done. Brander Matthews contributes a chatty article on Parisian newspapers—a pertinent subject just now—and with it are portraits of leading journalists. Mr. Matthews puts the matter in a nut-shell when he says that the characteristic of American journals is news; that of Parisian journals is criticism of news. Another of Mrs. van Rensselaer's altogether delightful critiques on English cathedrals deals this time with the stately composite of Durham, Joseph Pennell supplying some exquisite illustrations. Prof. Shields closes his argument for "The United Churches of the United States." Mr. Kennan unveils the prison life of Russian revolutionists, and reveals a terrible picture of autocratic oppression. The second installment of Mr. Cable's "Au Large" is filled with blended humor and pathos. Mr. Stockton begins an amusing sequel to the Lecks-Aleshine business. There is some good criticism of Irving's "Faust," and a discussion by teacher and critic about the tonic sol-fa system.

The thralldom of Japan is the subject of a stirring article by E. H. House in the December Atlantic. Mr. House draws a melancholy picture of the disadvantages under which Japan is suffering, in consequence of the oppressive treaties into which she was forced, and which now seriously hamper her welfare. If the United States do not step forward and relieve Japan of the burden first established by American control, Mr. House thinks that a policy of self-defense will justify Japan in decisive measures. Sophia Kirk contributes a gossipy, semi-critical review of the literary career of Robert Louis Stevenson, who, it seems, was a dozen years ago pointed out in a mixed company of wits as one who was fit for death, "as having apparently very little to live for." Agnes Repplier traces with subtle perception the growth of pessimism in modern literature. Mr. Hamerton, writing of French and English, discusses sexual morality and untruth. As indicative of the first he refers to the radically different ways in which the two countries regard "a certain incident in the early life of a former prime minister of Egypt;" concerning the second, he argues that French mendacity is artlessly inventive, and English falsehood ingenious. A socialist would be pleased with Edmund Noble's account of an island democracy in the Caspian, where a contented community live without governors, policemen or priests. Percival Lowell carries his analysis of oriental impersonality into the fields of religion and imagination. Few psychological essays of recent years have equaled Mr. Lowell's study of Far-Eastern characteristics in interest and value.

In accordance with the season Harper's Magazine for December is devoted largely to fiction and the illustrations are more than usually numerous. Alfred Parsons supplies vigorous drawings for an article on old garden flowers by F. W. Burridge, and E. A. Abbey illustrates with his accustomed felicity Præd's poem, "The Vicar." An innovation—and a very successful one—is the colored plate accompanying a paper on precious stones in the United States, which is an exquisite piece of lithography. Amélie Rives is at her best in the story of "Inja;" Miss Murfree takes us once more to the Great Smoky Mountains in "His 'Day in Court';" Mr. Howells is brilliant but labored in "Five O'clock Tea;" Captain King exploits frontier garrison life in "Captain Santa Claus;" Miss Phelps is perhaps too "intense" in "Annie Laurie;" Miss Baylor is delightful in "Craddock's Held-est;" William Black's translation from Heine probably would not have been published save for the name of its author; Mr. Aldrich is cold and very undramatic in "Pauline Pavlovna;" Mr. Carleton in "The Convict's Christmas Eve" is lame in meter and sound in sentiment; Mr. Howells will not allow the joyous Christmas-tide to interfere with his sermon on the real vs. the ideal; the "Editor's Drawer" is noteworthy for a comical petition to Queen Victoria by Mark Twain, and an imitation of a French vaudeville by Edward Everett Hale.

Scribner's for December opens with a contribution by Robert Louis Stevenson called "Ticonderoga;" it is in verse, but is not a poem, although being by Mr. Stevenson it could not escape flashes of genius now and then. Bret Harte in "A Drift from Redwood Camp" tells the story of a good-for-nothing who became chief of an Indian tribe through sheer cowardice and laziness; the conception of "Skeesicks" is capital and the denouement exquisitely droll. There has been no better short story in any magazine of late than Mr. Bunner's account of "The Zadoc Pine Labor Union," which ought to be printed in form of tract and circulated by some beneficent philanthropist among the educated and uneducated unemployed. "In Florence with Romola" is the subject of a gratifying paper, but somehow the Florentine atmosphere is not in it. Sarah Orne Jewett in "Law Lane" relates the history of a rural feud and its happy termination. J. R. Sullivan conveys a suggestive meaning in "The Tincture of Success" with a good deal of originality. The illustrations of this number of Scribner's justify high praise—those of "Ticonderoga" being the least, and those of Florence the most noteworthy for artistic value. Two drawings by G. F. Barnes, accompanying "A Song to the Lute" by Austin Dobson, are full of expression.

In the Forum for December Prof. Freeman Snow pleads for reciprocity as a solution of the fisheries question; the Hon. J. A. Kasson presents the Western argument for protection; Prof. Henry C. Adams advocates the conversion of the public debt into non-interest-bearing certificates; Murat Halstead proclaims the nullification of the constitution because Southern negroes do not vote with the Republicans; A. Lawrence Lowell says that Irish agitation in America is having a deleterious effect on Americanism; James Parton finds the issue for the next presidential election to be in reform of the tariff and of the civil service; President Bartlett urges that college disturbances must be put down by the strong hand of the law; Frances E. Willard waves the banner of national prohibition; and Park Benjamin considers the problem of communication between fog-bound vessels at sea.

The December Lippincott's has a novelette by Captain Charles King—a thrilling tale of garrison life called "From the Ranks." Janet Edmondson relates her experiences as an operatic débutante. A. W. Tourgée tells a tale of legal perplexities, and tells it well. Mary Parmele extends Darwin's theory of earth worms to the social world, and draws some suggestive conclusions. Lucy C. Lillie contributes interesting reminiscences of Jenny Lind. And there is an account of an afternoon with Dinah Mulock Craik.

The American Magazine for December is chiefly noteworthy for an article—elaborately illustrated—on "Christ Ideals in American Art," by W. H. Ingersoll; a charming sketch of street life in New Orleans sixty years ago, by Charles Gayarré; an account of salmon fishing on the Cascapedia, by R. F. Hemenway; an enthusiastic story of the discovery of natural gas at Findlay, O., and of the wonderful transformation wrought thereby; and an asinine description of an interview with Walt Whitman, by Cyrus Field Willard. Mr. Julian Hawthorne's literary notes thus far contributed to the American are surely stale, flat, and unprofitable.

The first number of the Woman's World puts in an appearance as a neat quarto of forty-eight pages. Lady Archibald Campbell, who writes of open-air plays, takes the ground that Orlando is a much more poetical character than Rosalind. Annie Thackeray (Mrs. Richmond Ritchie) writes delightfully of the grandmother of Mme. de Sévigné; Mrs. Francis Jeune of educational work among the poor children of London; and there is an article on the "Oxford Ladies' Colleges." The fashion notes are thrust to the end of the number and occupy but a small space, comparatively speaking. The literary notes of the editor, Mr. Oscar Wilde, are naturally enough concerned with women's writings and are not too critical. But when Mr. Wilde says that the "remarkable intellectual progress of the United States is very largely due to the efforts of American women, who edit many of the most powerful magazines and newspapers," he permits his faith to get the better of the facts.

SHAKESPEARIANA.

EDITED BY W. J. ROLFE, A.M., CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS.

Another "Mermaid" Volume. The second volume devoted to Beaumont and Fletcher in the "Mermaid Series" has come to hand. It is edited, like the former one, by Mr. J. St. Loë Strachey, and deserves the same commendation. The plays included are A King and No King, Bonduca, The Spanish Curate, The Faithful Shepherdess, and Valentinian. For a frontispiece we have an excellent portrait of Fletcher, from a picture in the possession of the Earl of Clarendon; and by way of preface, an interesting extract from the "Address to the Reader," contributed by the poet Shirley to the folio edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, published in 1647.

It is Beaumont, by the by, who furnishes the motto of this series: "I lie and dream of your full Mermaid wine;" and he also who writes thus to Ben Jonson:

"What things have we seen
Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been
So nimble, and so full of subtle flame,
As if that every one from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest,
And had resolved to live a fool the rest of his dull life."

"A Shakespeare Pronouncing Vocabulary." A correspondent in Nashua, N. H., writing in behalf of a Shakespeare club, asks for such a book. She has heard that there is one, but applications to publishers and booksellers fail to obtain it. We know of no Shakespeare lexicon, glossary, or other work that gives the pronunciation of names of characters, irregularities of accentuation, etc., in the plays and poems. Schmidt's Lexicon is helpful on many of these points, and so is Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar (the sections devoted to prosody). The list of "noted names in fiction, etc.," in Webster's Dictionary contains the names of many of the leading characters with the pronunciation. The subject will be more fully treated in a certain Shakespeare Glossary which, as we happen to know, is in preparation.

Shakespeare in "Cassell's National Library." We have referred more than once to the cheap and accurate reprints of old English literature in "Cassell's National Library" as likely to be useful to teachers who find difficulty in getting more expensive editions into their classes. School officers and parents who would object to paying even half a dollar for an English classic, to reading which a few weeks are devoted, cannot have the face to complain of spending a dime for it. Among the ninety or more volumes now furnished at this insignificant price are a number of the plays of Shakespeare, such as Hamlet, Macbeth, The Merchant, As You Like It, The Tempest, Henry VIII. and King John. They are without notes, but have concise introductions by Prof. Henry Morley, the editor of the series, which are admirable in their way. These wonderfully cheap editions of single plays are in striking contrast to the new édition de luxe of which the initial volume (noticed in the last number of the World) has just been issued by the same publishers, the price of which is twenty-five dollars a volume. Here we have Shakespeare for the million as well as for the millionaire, and Cassell & Co. print several editions between the two extremes.

The Shakespeare of the Greek Mythology. Mr. Ernst, in his "Notes on Language" in the Beacon—which are worth several times the cost of the journal to any teacher or critical student of English—remarks incidentally:

Pallas, the name of the Athenian goddess, appears to be derived from the Greek verb pallo, which means "I brandish" or "I shake." Pallas Athene is usually represented with a spear. Clearly, then, she must be the Shakespeare goddess of Athens.

The Philadelphia "Shakespeariana." This magazine has been steadily improving during the year, and we hope that teachers and students of Shakespeare are coming to appreciate its helpfulness in their work. The November number opens with a particularly good article on "Shakespeare as a Text-Book" by Prof. Charles F. Johnson, of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. Profs. M. W. Smith and W. T. Thorn contribute practical suggestions on the study of Hamlet. Mr. Thos. Frankland, of Chicago, shows that Bacon must have been a "prophet," if Donnelly is right, as Henry IV. was registered in 1597 and published in 1598, while Sir John Hayward's First part of the Raigne of King Henrie the III., "the book in question in the cipher story, was published in 1599, and Hayward was censured in the Star Chamber and imprisoned that year." Bacon must then have predicted the events of the story, and "embalmed them in his cipher over two years before the occurrence."

Shakespeariana, it will be recollected, is published at 1104 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, at $1.50 a year.

A Poetical Tribute to the Dramatist. The following is sent us from Washington, D. C., by the author:—

SHAKESPEARE.

BY KATE BROWNLEE SHERWOOD.

On fabled California's flowery strand
There stands, great-girthed and piercing to the sun,
A tree before whose front the gods might stand
A-tremble at the sign of Mightier One;
Within whose tunneled trunk, 'neath emerald spires,
The Indian shapes his flints and fans his fires,
And cayotes creep and horse and rider chase,
Through ceaseless cycles of the human race.
The fool will sneer if you the story tell,
The wise man worship—marvels please him well.
So thou, perennial Shakespeare, aye must stand
The mightiest marvel of the human mind!
Let maundering nomads near with axe and brand;
Pause, master spirits; here your master find!

NOTES AND QUERIES.

[All communications for this department of the Literary World, to secure attention, must be accompanied by the full name and address of the author; and those which relate to literary topics of general interest will take precedence in receiving notice.]

832. Treatise on Instrumentation. We have mislaid a request from some one for the title of a useful work on instrumentation in music. Our answer is Prout's, published by Novello & Co.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—C. A. Montgomery & Co., New York, have ready the sixth edition of Goodholme's Domestic Cyclopædia of Practical Information. This cyclopædia is conceded by all to be the best work of its kind in the English language, and its sale is steadily increasing as it becomes better known. They have also ready the first four issues of "The Good-Housekeeping Series," in paper covers, intended for busy housewives. Catherine Owen has furnished three of them—A Key to Cooking, Perfect Bread, and Lessons in Candy-Making, and joins with Maria Parloa, Marion Harland, Juliet Corson, Helen Campbell, and Mrs. D. A. Lincoln in preparing Six Cups of Coffee. They announce to be published shortly: Dainty Desserts for Dainty Diners, by Mrs. N. M. Littlehale, and In the Sick Room, by a thoroughly trained and experienced nurse, to be followed by equally valuable literature devoted to the interests of the home.

—Dodd, Mead & Co.'s Catalogue of Choice Books, No. 17, contains many appetizing entries, particularly an interesting bound MS. of Ruskin's, priced at $500; a set of first editions of Tennyson, 42 volumes in all, priced at $350; and a collection of the first four folios of Shakespeare, in good condition, $4,750. We notice also a long line of Cruikshanks, and of Hamerton etchings.

—New York has had an Authors' Reading. It was a highly successful entertainment, both from the literary and financial points of view, presenting a number of notabilities, collecting a large audience, and netting something like $4,000 for the Copyright League.

—A batch of new books which Ticknor & Co. have ready includes The New Astronomy, by Prof. S. P. Langley, the recently elected secretary of the Smithsonian Institute; New Waggings of Old Tales, a volume of burlesque novellettes, by F. D. Sherman and J. K. Bangs; The White Sail and Other Poems, by Louise Imogen Guiney; Olden Time Music, edited by Henry M. Brooks; Women and Work, by Emily Pfeiffer; and two booklets of Aino fairy tales—The Hunter in Fairy Land and The Birds' Party, by Basil H. Chamberlain.

—The publishers of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, G. & C. Merriam & Co., Springfield, Mass., deny the report that a new edition of that work, revised by President Porter, is about to be published. They assert that since the publication of the last great revision of the work, there has been an uninterrupted course of editorial labor, in the accumulation and arrangement of material for a future edition, and the results of this work have been from time to time presented in appendices and supplements. "Other editorial labor has been directed to an ultimate revision of the entire work—a revision which becomes necessary at considerable intervals in the case of any cyclopedic work designed to keep abreast of the living and moving world, but the very elaborate and thorough preparation necessary for such a new issue is still far from complete." Therefore no revised edition of the Unabridged is to be expected for some years to come.

—Child Culture, the Fowler & Wells Co. announce, is to be discontinued as a separate periodical, and will hereafter appear as a department in the Phrenological Journal.

—Little, Brown & Co. will shortly publish a volume of stories, entitled Five Hundred Dollars, and Other Stories of New England Life, by C. H. W., a new writer, who has met with considerable favor as a contributor to the Century Magazine, in which several of the stories were originally published.

—Macmillan & Co. have just issued a prospectus and specimen plates of a work on Musical Instruments—Historic, Rare, and Unique, which, from its intrinsic excellence and from the artistic beauty of its illustrations, will attract a wide interest. It consists of fifty plates in chromo-lithography of rare and famous musical instruments, with introduction and descriptive notes by the well-known authority, A. J. Hipkins, F.S.A., containing much information not hitherto published. The subjects of illustrations have been obtained from private and public collections, including the remarkable one of the Loan Exhibition recently held at South Kensington.

— Scribner & Welford are to be the American publishers of The Court and Reign of Francis the First, by Julia Pardoe, a sumptuously printed work in three royal octavo volumes.

— The December number of The English Illustrated Magazine, with its fourteen full-page illustrations and admirable variety of literary contents, is an exceptionally noteworthy number of that excellent periodical.

— Ginn & Co. announce that the new edition of Siever's Grammar of Old English, translated and edited by Professor Albert S. Cook of the University of California, has been thoroughly revised in every part, and represents the present state of knowledge and scientific opinion on this subject. Ginn & Co. also publish Pilgrims and Puritans, by Miss N. Moore, a book of easy reading for children, containing sketches of the early days of Massachusetts.

— Mr. M. M. Ballou, who is getting to be known as an indefatigable globe-trotter, will publish shortly through Ticknor & Co. an account of his recent travels in New Zealand, with the title, Under the Southern Cross.

— One of the parables in Tolstoi's Ivan Ilyitch, and Other Stories, that called "Where Love is, there God is also," is being printed in pamphlet form by T. Y. Crowell & Co. at the request of a certain Boston philanthropist, who will circulate it as a tract.

— John Wiley & Sons publish a holiday work which we have not seen, entitled Gems, Talismans, and Guardians, giving a great deal of curious information about the traditions and superstitions of birthdays.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Holiday Publications.

- SHAKESPEARE'S TRAGEDY OF ROMEO AND JULIET. With illustrations by Andrioli. S. E. Cassino. $2.50
- BITS OF DUTCHLAND. By Louis K. Harlow. S. E. Cassino. $1.50
- ETCHINGS. S. E. Cassino. $1.50
- MY GARDEN. By Simeon Tucker Clark. Illustrated by Lena J. Ringueberg and F. Schuyler Mathews. S. E. Cassino. $4.50
- RIP VAN WINKLE. By Washington Irving. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. S. E. Cassino. $7.00
- DOWN THE ISLANDS: A Voyage to the Caribbees. By William Agnew Paton. Illustrated. 8vo. Charles Scribner's Sons. $4.00
- THE SAONE. A Summer Voyage. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton. Illustrated. Roberts Brothers. $5.00
- THE LAND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW AND THE HOME OF WASHINGTON IRVING. A Series of Photogravure Representations, with Descriptive Letter-press, by J. L. Williams. Together with Irving's "Legend of Sleepy Hollow," with illustrations by F. O. C. Darley, and Selections from "The Chronicle of Wolfer's Roost." Limited Letter-press Edition. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $15.00
- WILD ANIMALS IN CAPTIVITY. Illustrated by Pen and Camera. By J. Fortuné Nott. Dodd, Mead & Co. $7.50
- THE TAPPAN-ZEE EDITION OF IRVING'S WORKS. 12 vols. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $12.00
- TREASURES BY THE WAYSIDE. A Colored Text-Book for Every Day. Thomas Whittaker. 50c.
- LIGHTS FROM GOLDEN SKIES. By the Rev. Basil Woodd and Miss Jane Strickland.—Gems Strewing the Path to Heaven. Edited by Miss Jane Strickland.—Stray Jewels. By Cecilia Havergal.—Gems of Gold, Original and Selected. By the Rev. Basil Woodd.—Should Auld Acquaintance be Forgotten? Illus. Thomas Whittaker. Each, 40c.
- FOOTSTEPS OF JESUS. A Book of Scripture Texts and Poems for Children. By Ernest C. Price. Designed and Illustrated by Alice Price and F. Corby Price. London: Castell Brothers. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. $2.50
- ODES AND SONNETS BY JOHN KRATS. With Illustrative Designs by Will H. Low. J. B. Lippincott Co. $15.00
- ENGRAVINGS ON WOOD. By Members of the American Society of Wood Engravers. With an Introduction and Descriptive Text by William M. Laffan. Harper & Brothers. $12.00

History.

THE KENTUCKY RESOLUTIONS OF 1798. An Historical Study. By E. D. Warfield. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Travel and Observation.

THE SPORTSMAN'S PARADISE; OR, The Lake Lands of Canada. By B. A. Watson. Illus. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.50

Miscellaneous.

- THE BEST READING. 3d Series. Edited by Lynds E. Jones. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00
- THE DIARY OF SAMUEL PEPYS. From Nov., 1666, to May, 1667. Cassell & Co.'s National Library. 10c.
- THE TALMUD. What it is and What it Knows about Jesus and His Followers. By Rev. Bernhard Pick. J. B. Alden. 50c.
- THE CHRISTMAS BOOKS OF MR. M. A. TITMARSH. By Wm. Makepeace Thackeray. 2 vols. Illus. London: Smith, Elder & Co. Each, 50c.
- ROUNDABOUT PAPERS AND LITTLE TRAVELS AND ROAD-SIDE SKETCHES. By Wm. Makepeace Thackeray. London: Smith, Elder & Co. 50c.
- QUOTATIONS: with Translations, References, Explanatory Notes, and Indexes. By Wm. Francis Henry King, Oxford. London: J. Whittaker & Sons. 5s.
- ST. NICHOLAS. Vol. XIV. Parts I and II. 2 vols. The Century Co.
- THE CENTURY. Illustrated Monthly Magazine. Vol. XXXIV. May, 1887, to October, 1887. The Century Co.
- HUMAN NATURE, AND OTHER SERMONS. By Joseph Butler. Cassell's National Library. 10c.

Christmas Gifts.

PALMER, BACHELDER & CO.

Announce their Christmas Assortment of Choice

Diamonds & Other Gems,

WATCHES, CLOCKS, SILVER WARE
AND ARTISTIC POTTERY,

— AT —

No. 146 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Palmer, Bachelder & Co.

Horsford's

ACID PHOSPHATE

[LIQUID]

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.

Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools. Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.

It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body. It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R. I.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Charming New Gift Books

THE SONG OF THE RIVER.

By CHARLES KINGSLEY. Illustrated with original drawings by well-known American artists, especially drawn for this holiday edition of the ever popular poem, and engraved by George T. Andrew in the highest style of the art. 1 vol., small quarto, cloth, full gilt or torehorn style, embossed, $1.50. Full American seal, gilt edges, $2.50.

* Also, a limited edition of 500 copies, with photogravure reproductions, printed on Japan paper, of the original drawings. Quarto, beautifully bound in vellum-plated cloth, with appropriate design, $6.00.

NATURE AND ART.

A collection of poems and pictures from the best authors and artists, compiled by LOUISE REID ESTES. Illustrated with etchings by Rajon after Bonnat, Forberg after Greuze, R. Swain Gifford, J. D. Smillie, H. Farrar, W. Leibl, Moran and others, and woodcuts engraved by W. J. Linton, George T. Andrew, W. B. Closson and others, from designs by A. F. Fellows, George Fuller, William M. Hunt, J. D. Woodward, Granville Perkins and others. 1 vol., quarto, vellum-plated cloth, gilt edges, with photo-etching design, $5.00. Full seal morocco, $8.00; full tree-marbled calf, gilt edges, $13.00.

THE DÜSSELDORF GALLERY.

A portfolio of 20 etchings by noted artists of the Düsseldorf School, such as Volkart, Leisten, Grotjohann and others, with descriptive and biographical text, royal quarto, beautifully bound; edition limited to 350 copies, divided as follows: 5 copies, proofs on genuine parchment, text on vellum paper, in parchment cover, $150.00. 15 copies, proofs on satin, text on vellum paper, in satin cover, $75.00. 40 copies, proofs on India paper, text on vellum paper, in vellum cloth cover, $35.00. 40 copies, proofs on Japan paper, text on vellum paper, in parchment cover, $35.00. 250 copies, proofs on Holland paper, in cloth cover, $15.00.

RECENT FRENCH ART.

A series of 16 beautiful photo-etchings, reproduced from selected original paintings, by the most celebrated French artists, such as Meissonier, Dupré, Breton and others, printed in tints, under authorization from E. Lecadre & Co. of Paris, by whom many of the plates were made, accompanied by biographical text compiled by W. F. Kellogg. 1 vol., royal folio, cloth, with the French arms stamped in gold and ink, $7.50.

LALLA ROOKH. The Vellum Edition.

By THOMAS MOORE. This charming Oriental poem is now produced in a style worthy of itself. It is illustrated with 140 photo-etchings, made from designs by the best artists in America, Europe and Persia. Printed in a variety of colors on vellum paper, and the text of the poem set in with the illustrations in artistic style. This is without doubt the most sumptuous and elaborate art book ever published in America. 1 vol., quarto, bound in parchment paper, and in vellum cloth folio, with stamped ribbons, $15.00; full American seal, gilt, $17.50.

THE BOYS OF 1812.

By Prof. J. RUSSELL SOLEY, author of "Blockaders and Cruisers," etc. An exciting narrative of the great naval war, with an authentic account of the different battles and romantic adventures of the participants. Fully illustrated from original drawings by Merrill & Hendry. 1 vol., quarto, cloth, attractively bound, $2.50.

GREAT GRANDMOTHER'S GIRLS IN NEW FRANCE.

By LIZZIE W. CHAMPNEY, author of "Three Vassar Girls." A charming volume for girls, consisting of the romantic story of little Eunice Williams and other heroines in the early colonial days—their privations and courage. 1 vol., 8vo, beautifully illustrated by "Champ" and others, cloth, gilt, $2.50.

For sale by all booksellers, or sent, prepaid, on receipt of price by ESTES & LAURIAT, Boston, Mass.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company.

ILLUSTRATED GIFT BOOKS.

The Vision of Sir Launfal.

By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL. A sumptuous holiday volume. Quarto, bound in half leather in a very attractive style, price $10.00.

Tanglewood Tales.

By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. Holiday Edition. With 15 full-page illustrations and many smaller ones, by George Wharton Edwards. Quarto, cloth, handsomely stamped, full gilt, $2.50.

Bird-Talk.

By Mrs. A. D. T. WHITNEY, author of "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," etc. With many illustrative designs. Tastefully bound, $1.00.

On the Track of Ulysses.

Together with an excursion in quest of the so-called Venus of Melos. Two studies in Archaeology, made during a cruise among the Greek Islands. By WILLIAM J. STILLMAN. Fully illustrated, quarto, carefully printed and bound, gilt top, $4.00.

POETRY.

Lyrics, Idyls, and Romances.

Selected from the poems of ROBERT BROWNING. 16mo, tastefully bound, gilt top, $1.00.

Lyrics and Sonnets.

A new volume of poems. By EDITH M. THOMAS, author of "A New Year's Masque," "The Round Year," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Early and Late Poems of Alice and Phoebe Cary.

12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Colonial Ballads, Sonnets, and Other Verse.

By MARGARET J. PRESTON, author of "Cartoons," etc. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Poems.

By EDWARD ROWLAND SILL. 16mo, gilt top, $1.00.

The Old Garden, and Other Verses.

By MARGARET DELAND. New and enlarged edition. 16mo, fancy cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

The Unseen King, and Other Poems.

By CAROLINE LESLIE FIELD, author of "High-Lights." 16mo, parchment-paper cover, $1.00.

NOVELS AND SHORT STORIES.

The Gates Between.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, author of "The Gates Ajar," "Beyond the Gates," etc. $1.25.

Paul Patoff.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD, author of "A Roman Singer," etc. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

Jack the Fisherman.

A powerful and pathetic temperance story. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. With illustrations, 50 cents.

An Old Maid's Paradise.

Burglars in Paradise.

By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. 16mo, $1.25.

Knitters in the Sun.

A book of excellent Short Stories. By OCTAVE THAYER. 16mo, $1.25.

The Story of Keedon Bluffs.

By CHARLES EGERT CRADDOCK. A story for young folks, and older ones. 16mo, $1.00.

BIOGRAPHY.

Memoir of Ralph Waldo Emerson.

By JAMES ELLIOT CABOT. With a fine new steel portrait. 2 vols., 12mo, gilt top, $3.50; half calf, $6.00.

Henry Clay.

Vols. XV. and XVI. in Series of American Statesmen. By CARL SCHURZ. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50; half morocco, $5.00.

Patrick Henry.

Vol. XVII. of American Statesmen. By MOSES COIT TYLER. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Benjamin Franklin.

Vol. X. of American Men of Letters. By JOHN BACH MCMMASTER, author of "A History of the People of the United States." With a steel portrait. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Ormsby Macknight Mitchel,

Astronomer and General. A biographical narrative by his son, F. A. MITCHEL. With a portrait. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

HOUSEHOLD LIBRARY BOOKS.

Our Hundred Days in Europe.

By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, author of "The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table," etc. 1 vol., 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Victorian Poets.

By EDMUND CLARENCE STEDMAN. Thirteenth Edition. Revised and extended by a Supplementary Chapter, to the Fiftieth Year of the Period under Review. Crown 8vo, $2.25.

Men and Letters.

Essays in Criticism. By HORACE E. SCUDDER, author of "Noah Webster," "Stories and Romances," etc. 12mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Winter.

Selections from the Journals of HENRY D. THOREAU. Uniform with the "Early Spring" and "Summer." 12mo, gilt top, $1.50.

Wit, Wisdom, and Beauties of Shakespeare.

Selected by C. S. WARD. 16mo, full gilt, $1.25.

The World to Come.

A volume of thoughtful, vigorous, readable and devout Sermons, with a Lecture on Christmas, by WILLIAM BURNET WRIGHT, author of "Ancient Cities." 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

The Atlantic Monthly

For 1888 will contain

Six Papers on the American Revolution,
By JOHN FISKE.

Besten Painters and Paintings,
By WILLIAM H. DOWNES.

Three Studies of Factory Life,
By L. C. WYMAN.

Poems, Essays, Short Stories,

May be expected from Mr. WHITTIER, Dr. HOLMES, Mr. LOWELL, Mr. NORTON, Colonel HIGGINSON, Mr. WARNER, Mr. ALDRICH, Miss PRESTON, Miss LARCOM, Miss JEWETT, Mrs. THAXTER, Mr. SCUDDER, Mr. WOODBERRY and many others.

TERMS: $4.00 a year in advance, POSTAGE FREE.

Postal Notes and money are at the risk of the sender, and therefore remittances should be made by money-order, draft, or registered letter, to

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

THE NEW ASTRONOMY.

By S. P. LANGLEY. 1 vol., royal octavo, illustrated, $5.00.

A fascinating and instructive volume, giving the latest discoveries and theories in Astronomical Science, with nearly 100 elaborate and beautiful illustrations. The following are the titles of the chapters, showing the scope of the work: Spots on the Sun; the Sun's Surroundings; the Sun's Energy; the Planets and the Moon; Meteors; Comets; the Stars.

NEW WAGGINGS OF OLD TALES.

By TWO WAGS. 1 vol., 12mo, illustrated by Oliver Herford. $1.00.

A quaint and amusing group of burlesque novelettes and other bright witticisms, prepared by two of our most entertaining writers—Frank Dempster Sherman and John Kendrick Bangs (one of the editors of and contributors to "Life"). This volume will afford great entertainment to all readers, and is sure to be very popular.

WOMEN AND WORK.

An Essay treating on the Relation to Health and Physical Development, of the Higher Education of Girls, and the Intellectual or more Systematized Effort of Women. By EMILY PFEIFFER. $1.50.

THE HUNTER IN FAIRY LAND.

Aino Fairy Tales, No. 1. 40 cents.

THE BIRDS' PARTY.

Aino Fairy Tales, No. 2. 30 cents.

By BASIL H. CHAMBERLAIN. Published by The Kobunsha, Tokyo, Japan; and by Ticknor & Co., Boston. Each in one booklet. 12mo, illuminated paper covers.

These dainty and beautiful little works are printed on the most delicate and silky Japanese paper, with quaint colored illustrations in the text and on the covers; and are bound with knotted silken cords.

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

ROBERTS BROTHERS'

NEW BOOKS.

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

In this book are contained Certain Little Flowers, Miracles, and Devout Examples of that Glorious Poor Follower of Christ, Saint Francis, and of Certain of His Holy Companions. Translated from the Italian, with a Brief Account of the Life of Saint Francis, by ABBY LANGDON ALGER. 16mo, cloth, price $1.00.

LOTUS AND JEWEL.

Containing "In an Indian Temple," "A Casket of Gems," "A Queen's Revenge," with other Poems. By EDWIN ARNOLD, C. S. I., author of "The Light of Asia," "The Song Celestial," "India Revisited," etc. 16mo, cloth. Uniform with Mr. Arnold's other works. Price $1.00.

TOTO'S MERRY WINTER.

By LAURA E. RICHARDS, author of "The Joyous Story of Toto." With illustrations, 16mo, cloth, price $1.25.

Readers of "The Joyous Story of Toto" will be glad to get inside of the blind grandmother's cottage again with Bruin and Coon and Cracker and the others, and hear about "Toto's Merry Winter."

SUGAR AND SPICE AND ALL THAT'S NICE.

A collection of Nursery Rhymes and Jingles selected by the editor of "Quiet Hours." Fully illustrated. A cheap edition, square 12mo, illuminated board covers, price 75 cents.

Sold everywhere. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

TWO NOTABLE NEW RUSSIAN TRANSLATIONS.

The Vagrant and Other Tales.

By VLADIMIR KOROLENKO. Translated by Mrs. Aline Delano. 12mo, $1.25.

KOROLENKO's name is new to American readers, but in Russia he stands at the head of the younger generation of writers. Like all of the literary children of Gogol, he is a realist; he paints with photographic distinctness, but at the same time he is an artist and selects only the details that are relevant. His style is crisp and nervous. He excels in placing before the eye, by a few shrewd touches, a whole landscape. It sends the blood to the heart with a quick rush, and thus the author sways the reader with a power that is irresistible. One knows that he writes from his heart, that he is genuine.

A Russian Proprietor and Other Stories.

By Count LYOF N. TOLSTOI. Translated by Nathan Haskell Dole. 12mo, $1.50.

In none of Tolstoi's books is the personality of the author more pronounced; but the stories are creations, spontaneous and inimitable, written at the time when the Count was in the heat of his most abundant production, and when his brush was, as it were, still fresh and full. They are the most artistic of Count Tolstoi's works, and deserve the greatest popularity.

For sale by all booksellers.

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & CO.,
13 Astor Place, New York.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

Standard Holiday Books.

Approved by the Elders. Enjoyed by the Children.
Why Not Let the Children Have Them?

WASHINGTON AND HIS COUNTRY.

By WASHINGTON IRVING and JOHN FISKE. With maps. Cloth, $1.00; boards, 85 cents.

This consists of Irving's Life of Washington judiciously abridged by Prof John Fiske and supplemented with an introduction and a continuation by Mr. Fiske that make the work a classic history of the United States.

CLASSICS FOR CHILDREN.

Andersen's * Fairy Tales, two volumes (each 45 cents).

Aesop's * Fables, with some from the French and the Russian (40 cents).

Kingsley's * Water Babies (40 cents) and * Greek Heroes (40 cents).

Swiss * Family Robinson (50 cents) and Robinson Crusoe (40 cents).

Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare (50 cents), Adventures of Ulysses (30 cents).

Scott's Tales of a Grandfather (50 cents), Lady of the Lake (40 cents), Lay of the Last Minstrel (40 cents), Talisman (60 cents), Quentin Durward (50 cents), Guy Mannering (70 cents), Ivanhoe (70 cents), Rob Roy (70 cents).

Church's Stories of the Old World (50 cents).

Irving's Sketch Book, six selections, (35 cents).

Johnson's Rasselas (40 cents).

Swift's Gulliver's Travels (35 cents).

Plutarch's * Lives (50 cents).

Martineau's * Peasant and Prince (40 cents).

With Notes. Starred volumes are illustrated.

INDORSED BY SUCH MEN AS

THOMAS HILL, D. D., LL. D., ex-President of Harvard College.

WILLIAM T. HARRIS, LL. D., ex-Superintendent of Schools, St. Louis.

JOHN D. PHILBRICK, formerly Superintendent of Schools, Boston.

Gen. JOHN EATON, recently U. S. Commissioner of Education.

Rev. JOSEPH COOK, Boston.

EDWARD EVERETT HALE, D. D., Boston.

MELLEN CHAMBERLAIN, LL. D., Librarian, Boston Public Library.

W. D. WHITNEY, Ph. D., of Yale College.

Dr. J. H. VINCENT, Superintendent of Instruction, Chautauqua Assembly.

JAMES PARTON, the eminent author.

Hon. ROBERT C. WINTHROP and T. W. HIGGINSON.

By hundreds of others and by the press generally.

THOSE DREADFUL MOUSE BOYS.

By ARIEL. Illustrated. In cloth, $1.00; in boards, 60 cents.

This is a double story for young and old, designed to illustrate, by a moral that is felt rather than seen, the contrast between narrow, selfish lives, and broad, generous ones.

Recommended by such eminent men as Rev. Dr. E. E. Hale, Rev. Dr. C. A. Bartol, Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, Rev. Dr. J. T. Dwyer, F. H. Underwood, Samuel Adams Drake, William E. Alger and many others.

LITTLE FLOWER PEOPLE.

By Miss G. E. HALE. Illustrated, 50 cents.

This book tells some of the most important elementary facts of plant life in a way to awaken interest and stimulate observation.

"It is safe to predict a wide popularity for this instructive little book."—The Chautauquan.

TWILIGHT THOUGHTS.

Stories for children and child-lovers. By MARY S. CLAUDE. Edited by Mary L. Avery, with a preface by Matthew Arnold.

"There is nature and fable and humor and pathos and morality and Chartism in these stories—something for every taste; and it is well that America, too, should possess them and read them."—Matthew Arnold.

HUDSON'S HARVARD SHAKESPEARE.

Hudson's Family Shakespeare.

Hudson's Life, Art and Characters of Shakespeare.

The best editions for all readers of Shakespeare. Special terms for this season.

For sale by booksellers and by

GINN & COMPANY, Publishers,

Boston, New York and Chicago.

Ruskin's New Volume.

HORTUS INCLUSUS: MESSAGES FROM THE WOOD TO THE GARDEN. Sent in Happy Days to the Sister Ladies of the Thwaite, Coniston, by their thankful friend, JOHN RUSKIN, LL. D. 12mo, cloth extra, $1.00.

RUSKIN'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY—PRÆTERITA. Chap. 12, vol. 2 (completing the volume). 8vo, paper, 25 cents.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY—PRÆTERITA. OUTLINES OF SCENES AND THOUGHTS, perhaps worthy of memory, in MY PAST LIFE. By JOHN RUSKIN, LL. D. Vol. 2. 8vo, cloth extra, $3.00.

ROADSIDE SONGS OF TUSCANY. By Miss FRANCESCA ALEXANDER. With 20 fine full-page plates. Edited by John Ruskin. New Edition. 8vo, cloth extra, $3.50.

A TRULY UNIQUE VOLUME.

Gems, Talismans and Guardians.

Their Sentiment and Language.

The Facts, Fancies, Legends and Lore

OF NATIVITY.

A BEAUTIFUL PRESENT

FOR EVERY SEASON.

FOR OLD AND YOUNG, FRIENDS AND LOVERS, PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

Also interesting and valuable to Jewelers and Designers in Gems and Art Work.

With an Illuminated Frontispiece.
Extra Cloth, Gilt Edges, Beveled Boards,
Oblong 8vo, $5.00.

JOHN WILEY & SONS,
15 Astor Place.

N. B.—A PRIZE OF $100.00

WILL BE PAID FOR THE RETURN OF THE BEST NATIVITY IN CONNECTION WITH EACH CLASS OF THE ABOVE-NAMED VOLUME ISSUED. THE PRESENT CLASS BEING A.

* Circulars with full particulars gratis.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems.
Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hons. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MINOR, &c. Class of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila., 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauqua University, &c. Prospectus POST FREE from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

CATALOGUE NO. 23 NOW READY.

BEING "ODDS AND ENDS" from the "LITERARY JUNK SHOP" of A. S. CLARK, 34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. COAN."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1886. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. THOS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

TERRORS OF THE INQUISITION

DISPELLED BY THE ACQUISITION of a box of Dr. Mark R. Woodbury's

Dyspepsia Killers.

THE HORRORS OF INDIGESTION, THE PAINS OF DYSPEPSIA, SUFFERING FROM HEADACHES, and all STOMACH troubles permanently cured by the use of the famed D. K.'s.

Mailed to any address for 50 cents for a large box, 25 cents for a trial box, by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston.

STONINGTON LINE.

INSIDE ROUTE

FOR

NEW YORK,

SOUTH AND WEST.

Express train leaves Boston & Providence R. R. Station daily (Sundays excepted) at 6.30p. m.

Tickets and Staterooms secured at Company's office, 214 Washington Street, corner State, and at Boston & Providence R. R. Station. J. W. RICHARDSON, Agent, Boston.

A. A. FOLSON, Supt. P. & B. R. R.

LONDON BOOKS.

[ESTABLISHED 1840.]

A. L. LUYSTER,

IMPORTER OF ENGLISH AND FOREIGN BOOKS.

OFFERS A VERY

Large and Choice Collection

—OF—

ENGLISH and FOREIGN BOOKS,

In all departments of Literature, in various and fine bindings, and of Sterling Worth and Permanent Value, suitable for

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Having a London Branch, we are enabled to offer our importations, less the various commissions and charges paid to agents by other dealers, affording, in this respect, a favorable opportunity to American buyers.

NOW READY:

DESCRIPTIVE LIST,

With prices annexed, of a large and valuable invoice recently received, comprising every variety of books. Catalogues mailed gratis on application to subscriber.

No. 98 NASSAU STREET, N. Y.

10 SILVER ST., LONDON, ENG.

THE new edition in French of VICTOR HUGO'S "LES MISÉRABLES" which William R. Jenkins, 850 Sixth Avenue, New York, has been issuing, is now ready in five volumes; paper covers for $4.50; cloth, $6.50; half calf, $13.50. It is the handsomest, best, and only convenient edition to be had in French, as the only Paris edition is a large and cumbersome octavo.

KLACKNER'S RECENT ETCHINGS:

EVENING IN a HAMLET of FINISTERE.

By W. L. LATHROP, from the painting by JULES BRETON.

Home of Evangeline. By F. RAUBICHECK.
Colonial Days. By JAS. S. KING.
Harbor of Quebec. By STEPHEN PARRISH.
The Marshes. By C. MORGAN McELHINNY.
The Golden Age. By BENJ. LANDER.
Naming the Day. After F. C. JONES.
Eve. By MRS. ANNA LEA MERRITT.
Silence. After WM. BLISS BAKER.
The May Festival. By F. M. GREGORY.
Venice. By THOS. MORAN.
Dordrecht. By THOS. MORAN.
Farm by the River. By G. W. H. RITCHIE.
Swallows' Home. By J. H. MILLSPAUGH.

Purchasers of my COPYRIGHTED Engravings and Etchings have an absolute protection from inferior reproduction, such as all imported prints are liable to—there being no international copyright law to protect the latter—so, when visiting art stores anywhere, always ask for KLACKNER'S AMERICAN ENGRAVINGS AND ETCHINGS.

Klackner's
Portfolio
Stands.

IN EBONY, ASH, CHERRY OR
MAHOGANY.

O. KLACKNER, 17 East 17th St., New York.

Send for catalogue and for pamphlet on "Proofs and Prints." Price 10 cents.

Artistic Presents of Permanent Value.

High-class Etchings, mostly unprocurable elsewhere, costing when framed from $5.00 upward.

An Illustrated and Descriptive catalogue mailed on receipt of 10 cents. FREDERICK KEPPEL & CO., London, and 20 East 16th Street (Union Sq.), New York.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers, (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25.

Now ready, by the author of "German Simplified," and on the same plan,

Spanish Simplified.

To consist of 10 numbers. Nos. 1 and 2 were published October 15, 1887. A new number will appear on the first of every month, until completed. Price, 10 cents a number.

Both works are for sale by all booksellers; sent post-paid on receipt of price, by Prof. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus free.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who are always doing "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest

PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES
ACCIDENT TICKETS, covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
BEST LIFE POLICY in the Market. Indefeasible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.

Paid Policy-Holders, $13,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres. RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,

7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want. In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engravings, Etc., Etc.

IN THE SELECTION OF

A CHOICE GIFT

For Pastor, Parent, Teacher, Child, or Friend, both elegance and usefulness will be found combined in a copy of Webster's Unabridged.

Besides many other valuable features, it contains

A Dictionary
of 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings,
A Gazetteer of the World
locating and describing 25,000 Places,
A Biographical Dictionary
of nearly 10,000 Noted Persons,
All in One Book.

3000 more Words and nearly 2000 more Illustrations than any other American Dictionary.
Sold by all Booksellers. Pamphlet free.
G. & C. MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND Lover needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to R. C. HARTMAN, 709 Sanson Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books. Send for Catalogue of Americana.

FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES.

Send for our Catalogue of prices for 1888, just issued, and free to any address. Foreign periodicals cheaper than ever before. We charge, per year, for

Illustrated London News,	$7.75
Spectator or Saturday Review,	6.90
Punch, with Almanack,	3.40
London Times, weekly ed.,	3.00
Revue des Deux Mondes,	12.00
Deutsche Rundschau,	5.30
Fliegende Blätter,	3.20
Ueber Land und Meer,	3.50
Fresenius Zeitschrift,	4.00

and others in proportion.

Catalogue gives rates for nearly three thousand publications—American, English, French and German.

A. H. ROFFE & CO.,
No. 11 Bromfield Street Boston, Mass.

Macmillan & Co.'s New and Standard Books

SUITABLE FOR

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

IMPORTANT FINE ART WORKS.

A HISTORY OF MINIATURE ART.

With Notes on Collectors and Collections. By J. L. PROPERT. With twenty-two plates. Super royal 4to. Next week.

A very complete account is given of the various schools which attained anything approaching a high level in this fascinating work. Commencing with a description of the few remains of classical times which have been preserved to us, the record notices fully the Byzantine, Hibernian, Carolingian, Saxon, English, French, Spanish, Italian and Flemish schools. In the third period of the book, the history of the professors of portrait miniature is especially treated, commencing with Hans Holbein, and continuing on through the English school represented by Willard, the Rivers, Hoskins, Cooper, Fletman, Peillot and his son, and the hosts of other artists who adorned the renaissance of miniature art.

MR. HIPKINS'S GREAT WORK ON MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Historic, Rare and Unique. The selection, introduction and descriptive notes by A. J. Hipkins, F. S. A., London, author of the article "Pianoforte," in the Encyclopædia Britannica. Illustrated by a series of fifty plates in colors, drawn by William Gibb. In 1 volume, folio, handsomely bound in half morocco, $50.00. Next week.

In the series of descriptive notes, although the editor has not attempted to write a continuous history of instrumentation, an important contribution has been made to this branch of musical science. It cannot, for example, be otherwise than highly suggestive to learn that the Bebec of the Saracens was the near ancestor of the most perfect musical instrument yet imagined, the Cremona violin. The concertinas, harmoniums and American organs, so popular in the present day, are directly derived from the antique Chinese Chêng. Burmah touches hands at the same time with ancient Egypt and modern Calabria; and to Italy, as Dante tells us, traveled the Celtic harp, to meet the Eastern psalter, which at last became the spinet, as the twin dulcimer became the pianoforte.

There is another not less interesting aspect in which musical instruments, and particularly those of the past, may be considered—that, namely, of the beauty of form and tastefulness of adornment which still make them, even when their sound is obscured or forgotten, a source of æsthetic delight. It is perhaps more especially from this point of view that the publishers have regarded the issue of the work.

The admirable drawings of Mr. William Gibb, reproduced in the most careful manner, form fifty plates printed in the highest style of chromo-lithography, under the direct superintendence of the artist.

The impression, which is limited, will be supplied to subscribers only.

The publishers undertake neither to print further copies, nor to publish any smaller edition, and they reserve the right to raise the price after a certain number have been sold.

MRS. OLIPHANT'S NEW BOOK.

(Uniform with "Makers of Florence.")

THE MAKERS OF VENICE.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT, author of "The Makers of Florence," etc. With numerous illustrations. Medium 8vo; also an edition on smaller paper, 12mo. Immediately.

A NEW BOOK FOR THE YOUNG BY MRS. MOLESWORTH.

LITTLE MISS PEGGY.

By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, author of "Carrots," "The Cuckoo Clock," "Tapestry Room," "Tell Me a Story," etc. With illustrations by Walter Crane. 16mo, $1.25. Ready.

A NEW HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE IN FOUR VOLUMES.

ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE.

By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Being Vol. II. of "A History of English Literature" in four volumes. 12mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.75; also a Student's Edition, printed on thinner paper, price $1.00.

HUTTON. ESSAYS ON SOME OF THE MODERN GUIDES OF ENGLISH THOUGHT IN MATTERS OF FAITH.

By RICHARD HOLT HUTTON. Globe 8vo, $1.50.

These essays treat of the following writers: Thomas Carlyle, Cardinal Newman, Matthew Arnold, George Eliot, and Frederick Denison Maurice.

A companion volume to "Social Life in Greece."

MAHAFFY. GREEK LIFE AND THOUGHT FROM THE AGE OF ALEXANDER TO THE ROMAN CONQUEST.

By J. P. MAHAFFY, D. D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin, etc. 12mo, $3.50.

SHAKESPEARE. THE VICTORIA SHAKESPEARE.

The text of the Globe Edition, with a new Glossary, by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. 3 vols., each $1.75; or, complete, in paper box, $5.00. Vol. I., Comedies; Vol. II., Histories; Vol. III., Tragedies.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL. D.

And Journal of a Tour to the Hebrides. Including Johnson's Diary of a Journey into North Wales. Edited with notes, by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D. C. L. 6 vols., 8vo, $16.00.

JACKSON. DALMATIA. THE QUARNERO, AND ISTRIA.

With Cettigne in Montenegro and the Island of Grado. By T. V. JACKSON, M. A., F. S. A. With numerous plates and other illustrations. 3 vols., 8vo, $10.50.

LOFTIE. WINDSOR CASTLE.

With a Description of the Park, Town, and Neighborhood. By W. J. LOFTIE, M. A., F. S. A. With numerous illustrations. 12mo, $2.00.

LANFREY. HISTORY OF NAPOLEON I.

By P. LANFREY. Translated with the sanction of the author. New and cheaper edition. 4 vols., 12mo, $9.00.

STEPHEN. THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

Edited by LESLIE STEPHEN. To be completed in about fifty volumes. Vols. 1 to 12, 8vo, each $3.75.

TENNYSON. THE WORKS OF ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON, P. L., D. C. L.

Seven vols., globe 8vo, $12.00; Poetical Works, Miniature Edition, 10 vols. in box, $6.00; Dramatic Works, Miniature Edition, 4 vols. in box, $3.00; Works, Popular Edition, 12mo, $1.50.

THE BROOK.

With 20 colored illustrations by A. Woodruff. Oblong cloth, gilt, 75 cents.

ARNOLD. THE PROSE AND POETICAL WORKS OF MATTHEW ARNOLD.

Globe 8vo, Prose Works, 8 vols., in paper box, $12.00; Poetical Works, 2 vols., $3.50; Prose and Poetical Works, 10 vols., in paper box, $15.50; Poetical Works, Popular Edition, 12mo, $1.50.

KINGSLEY. THE NOVELS OF CHARLES KINGSLEY.

Eversley Edition. 11 vols., in paper box, $19.00; Poetical Works, uniform with above, 2 vols., globe 8vo, $3.50; Poetical Works, Popular Edition, 12mo, $1.50.

PALGRAVE. ULYSSES, OR SCENES AND STUDIES IN MANY LANDS.

By W. GIFFORD PALGRAVE, author of "Central Arabia," etc. 8vo, $3.50.

MORLEY. THE MISCELLANEOUS WRITINGS OF JOHN MORLEY.

Nine vols., globe 8vo, uniform with the Arnold and Kingsley, $13.50.

CARLYLE. EARLY LETTERS REMINISCENCES— CORRESPONDENCE.

Edited by CHARLES ELIOT NORTON. 3 vols., 12mo, in paper box, $6.00.

WARD. THE ENGLISH POETS.

With critical introductions by various writers, and a general introduction by Matthew Arnold. Edited by T. M. WARD. 4 vols., 12mo, Student's Edition, $4.00; Cabinet Edition, $5.00.

AMIEL. THE JOURNAL INTIME OF HENRI FREDERIC AMIEL.

Translated with an Introduction and Notes, by Mrs. HUMPHREY WARD. 12mo, $2.50.

FINCK. ROMANTIC LOVE AND PERSONAL BEAUTY.

Their Development, Causal Relations, Historic and National Peculiarities. By HENRY T. FINCK. 4th edition. 12mo, $2.00.

Macmillan & Co.'s New Holiday Catalogue of books suitable for presents is now ready, and will be sent free, by mail, on application.

MACMILLAN & CO., 112 FOURTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

THE LITERARY WORLD.

Choice Readings from the Best New Books, and Critical Reviews
FORTNIGHTLY.

VOL. XVIII, No. 26. { E. H. HAMES & Co., } BOSTON, DECEMBER 24, 1887. { Office, 1 Somerset St., } Ten Cents per Copy.
WHOLE No. 339. Publishers. Room 11. $2.00 per Year.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE,

25c a Number.

JANUARY NUMBER,

New Ready, Contains:

The first of Mr. ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON'S monthly contributions entitled "A Chapter on Dreams."

THE MAN AT ARMS—I.

By E. H. and E. W. BLASHFIELD.

Sixteen (4 full-page) illustrations by E. H. Blashfield.

THE GREAT PYRAMID.

By EDWARD L. WILSON.

With 21 illustrations, some of which were taken by the magnesium light in the interior of the Pyramid, and now first printed.

WHITE EDITH.

Poem by THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.

JAPANESE ART, ARTISTS AND ARTISANS.

By WILLIAM ELLIOT GRIFFIS.

With 14 illustrations by a Japanese artist.

NATURAL SELECTION.

By H. C. BUNNER.

A novelette in 3 parts. Part I. With 9 illustrations.

THE END OF THE BEGINNING.

Story by GEORGE A. HIBBARD.

Illustrated by the author and Francis Day.

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

Poem by ANDREW LANG.

With a full-page illustration by H. Siddons Mowbray.

FIRST HARVESTS.

A new serial. Chapters I.-III. By F. J. STIMSON.

MUNICIPAL FINANCE.

By CLAYTON C. HALL.

A NEW LIGHT ON BALZAC.

By EDWARD S. HOLDEN.

POEMS.

By CHARLES EDWIN MARKHAM, C. P. CRANCH, RENNELL RODD, GRAHAM R. TOMSON and E. CAVAZZA.

FRENCH TRAITS—INTELLIGENCE.

By W. C. BROWNELL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To enable new readers to possess the Magazine from the first number (January, 1887), the following inducements are offered:

A year's subscription for 1888 and the 12 numbers for 1887 . . . $4.50
A year's subscription for 1888 and the numbers for 1887, bound in two volumes, cloth, gilt top . . . 6.00

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS,

742-745 Broadway, New York.

"The respectable and sometimes excellent translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."—R. W. EMERSON.

"I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know."—THOMAS CARLYLE.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

CONTAINING

STANDARD WORKS OF EUROPEAN LITERATURE in the ENGLISH LANGUAGE, With Dictionaries and other Books of Reference, Comprising, in all, Translations from the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Scandinavian, Anglo-Saxon, Latin and Greek.

687 Volumes, $1.40 or $2.00 each, with exceptions.

RECENT ADDITIONS.

RANKE'S HISTORY OF THE LATIN AND TEUTONIC NATIONS. Translated by P. A. ASHWORTH, translator of Dr. Gneist's "History of the English Constitution."

HEINE'S TRAVEL-PICTURES. Including the Tour in the Harz, Norderney, and Book of Ideas, together with the Romantic School. Translated by FRANCIS STORM. With appendices and map.

GOETHE'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH ZELTER. Selected, translated and edited by A. D. COLERIDGE, M. A.

THE STUDENT'S HANDBOOK OF HISTORICAL GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B. A., F. G. S., of the Geological Survey of England and Wales. With numerous diagrams and illustrations.

WERNER'S TEMPLARS IN CYPRUS. Translated by E. A. M. LEWIS.

"Werner was a Freemason, and his religious notions were, at the date of his writing this poem, of a theosophic order."—Preface.

PAUSANIAS'S DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. Translated into English, with notes and index, by A. R. SHILLETO, M. A. 2 vols.

HOFFMAN'S TALES. The Serapion Brethren. First portion, containing thirteen tales. Translated from the German by Major A. EWING.

HAUFF'S TALES. The Caravan, The Sheikh of Alexandria, The Inn in the Spessart. Translated by S. MENDEL.

GOLDSMITH'S WORKS. A new edition, containing pieces hitherto uncollected, and a Life of the Author, with notes from various sources. By J. W. M. GIBBS. 5 vols.

FOSTER'S ESSAY ON THE IMPROVEMENT OF TIME.

Together with notes of sermons and other pieces. CHRISTIAN ICONOGRAPHY; or, THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ART IN THE MIDDLE AGES. By the late A. N. DIDRON. Translated from the French by E. J. MILLINGTON, and completed, with additions and appendices, by M. Stokes. 2 vols., with numerous illustrations.

TALFOURD'S LETTERS OF CHARLES LAMB. With explanatory notes. New edition, revised and greatly enlarged by W. CAREW HAZLITT. 2 vols.

HAZLITT'S SPIRIT OF THE AGE; or, CONTEMPORARY PORTRAITS. New edition. By W. C. HAZLITT.

A SELECTION.

ANTONINUS.—THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS.

BAX'S MANUAL OF THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY.

BOSWELL'S LIFE OF JOHNSON (Centenary Edition, edited by Napier). 6 vols.

CEVANTES'S DON QUIXOTE. 2 vols. Translated.

COLERIDGE'S WORKS. 6 vols.

FAIRHOLT'S COSTUME IN ENGLAND. (Dillon.) 2 vols.

HUGO'S (VICTOR) POEMS. Translated.

MOLIERE'S DRAMATIC WORKS. 3 vols.

PEPYS'S DIARY. 4 vols.

RIGHTER'S LEVANA.

RIGHTER'S FLOWER, FRUIT AND THORN PIECES.

SPINOZA'S CHIEF WORKS. Translated. 2 vols.

STAUNTON'S CHESS HANDBOOK.

LE LIVRE D'AMOUR.

A choice collection of Chansons, Madrigals, Sonnets, Odes, Serenades, Ballades, etc., selected from French Poetry of all times. Beautifully printed and exquisitely bound in white vellum, with gold fleur-de-lis ornamentation. Square 12mo. Issued in four different editions, viz.: sur grand papier parchemin du Japon, $15.00; sur petit papier parchemin du Japon, $7.50; sur papier crayon imperial allemand, $8.00; sur papier Whatman, $8.00.

*.*This is the most complete collection of French love poems which has yet been made. Compiled under exceptionally fortunate circumstances, it culls from the whole range of French literature, from the earliest troubadour poetry to writers still living, including such poets as Belay, Benserade, Banville, Baudelaire, Bouchor, Bourget, Coppée, Daudet, Gautier, Hugo, La Sablière, Leconte de Lisle, Richepin, Silvestre, Sully-Prudhomme, Villon, etc., and forms a most exquisitely dainty volume.

THE COURT AND REIGN OF FRANCIS THE FIRST, KING OF FRANCE.

By JULIA PARDOE, author of "Louis the Fourteenth and Court of France in the Seventeenth Century." With numerous portraits and illustrations on steel. A new edition. 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, $15.00.

THE LAST OF VALOIS:

And the Accession of Henry of Navarre, 1559-1589. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE, LADY JACKSON. In two volumes, large crown 8vo, with portraits on steel, cloth, $9.00.

The Portraits to the above work comprise Henry III., Henry IV., Henry de Lorraine, Charles IX., Anne, Duc de Montmorency, Sully, Le Chancelier de l'Hôpital, Gabrielle d'Estrees and Catherine de Médicis. Lady Jackson's previous works on French history are "Old Paris," "Court of France in the Sixteenth Century," "The Old Régime," "French Court and Society," and "The Court of the Tulleries."

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS.

LADY BURTON'S edition of her husband's "Arabian Nights," translated literally from the Arabic, prepared for household reading by Justin H. McCarthy. Six volumes, demy 8vo, handsomely bound in white and gold, net, $25.00.

*.*Lady Burton's object is to secure for the public, especially for her own sex and for scholars, the advantages of this Oriental masterpiece—the English reading, the knowledge of Eastern life, and perfect workmanship—which has been so heartily praised by the press and by scholars. She has been fortunate in securing the able assistance of a literary friend, Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, M. P., who has prepared it for family reading.

. New Holiday Catalogue, also a Complete List of Books for the Young, with Synopsis of their Contents, will be supplied on Application.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD, - 743-745 BROADWAY, N. Y.

ATLANTIC MONTHLY

For January

Contains:

YONE SANTO: A Child of Japan.

The beginning of a Serial Story by EDWARD H. HOUSE, who incorporates into an excellent story the results of many years' residence and observation in Japan.

THE SECRET. A Poem.

By JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

THE DESPOT OF BROOMSEDGE COVE.

The first two Chapters of a striking Serial Story by CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK.

THE GOLDEN HESPERIDES.

A delightful narrative of travel in Southern California by CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER.

AFTER "OUR HUNDRED DAYS."

By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

JUDSON'S REMORSE.

A story of Country life and character by LILLIE CHACE WYMAN.

THE LOST EARL.

A striking Poem by J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF FRANKLIN TO STRAHAN,

A London Printer. By S. G. W. BENJAMIN.

CONSTANTINOPLE.

A valuable and interesting description of this picturesque and important city, by THEODORE CHILD.

With other excellent Essays, Poems, Reviews, and the Contributors' Club, and

 An excellent Steel Portrait of "CHARLES EGBERT CRADDOCK" (Miss Murfree).

25 cents a number; $4.00 a year, postage free.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & COMPANY, Boston.

Second Edition Just Ready.

THE Life and Letters of Charles Darwin.

INCLUDING AN AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL CHAPTER.

EDITED BY HIS SON,

FRANCIS DARWIN.

WITH PORTRAITS AND VIEWS OF DOWN HOUSE, DARWIN'S RESIDENCE.

In 2 vols., 12mo, cloth, price $4.50.

"With pious care and great skill in selection, Mr. Francis Darwin has furnished a fitting portrait of his father. Rising from them and setting at once to express one's feelings, it is difficult to find the means which will adequately represent to others the kind of emotions which the three-fold picture has aroused. Mr. Darwin himself makes use of an expression of admiration which will best, perhaps, serve our present purpose; he wrote from Rio de Janeiro to Professor Henslow: 'I formerly admired Humboldt, I now almost adore him.'"—The Athenæum.

"Of such a man, of so rare a genius and so lofty a nature, the record cannot fail to be of deep and abiding interest for us all. . . . The book is at once a biography, an autobiography, and the history of a great idea. With a truly remarkable literary skill, the man and his work are so presented as never to be dissociated."—London Spectator.

"We see in the volumes before us a clear and striking picture of the man himself, and we are shown the inner workings of his mind, the training and influences which led him on the path of investigation, and the methods by which he arrived at his conclusions."—London Literary World.

"A picture to all future generations of the inner workings of the mind of one of the greatest of the world's masters, of his life as it showed itself to those of his own household, and to his intimate friends. What would we not give for such a picture of the genesis of the Republic, or of the Metaphysics, or of the Organon?"—Academy.

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers, 1, 3 & 5 Bond St., New York.

Christmas Gifts.

PALMER, BACHELDER & CO.

Announce their Christmas Assortment of Choice

Diamonds & Other Gems,

WATCHES, CLOCKS, SILVER WARE
AND ARTISTIC POTTERY,

— AT —

No. 146 TREMONT ST., BOSTON.

Palmer, Bachelder & Co.

A BARGAIN.

A $450 SET FOR $100. DICKENS'S WORKS. The celebrated "EDITION DE LUXE," splendidly printed in very large, bold type, on extra paper, and illustrated by upwards of SEVEN HUNDRED ENGRAVINGS, all PROOF IMPRESSIONS on India paper. 30 large vols., imperial 8vo, in the original cloth as published. A BARGAIN at $100. (Former price, $450.)

*. Edition limited and each copy numbered.

The plates, on steel, copper and wood, comprise the whole of the original illustrations drawn by Seymour, "Phil," Cattermole, Tenniel, Doyle, MacIise, Walker, Marcus Stone, Leech, Stanfield, and Frank Stone, as well as a selection from those by other artists in the later editions, and are printed on real China paper, the woodcuts and vignettes being mounted with the letterpress, and the steel and copper-plates on plate paper.

The present opportunity of securing this superb edition at a merely nominal price should be taken advantage of by all admirers of the great novelist.

J. W. BOUTON,

700 Broadway,

New York.

Horsford's ACID PHOSPHATE

(LIQUID)

A preparation of the phosphates of lime, magnesia, potash and iron with phosphoric acid in such form as to be readily assimilated by the system.
Prepared according to the directions of Prof. E. N. Horsford of Cambridge, Mass.

FOR DYSPEPSIA,
Mental and Physical Exhaustion,
NERVOUSNESS,
Weakened Energy, Indigestion, Etc.

Universally recommended and prescribed by physicians of all schools.
Its action will harmonize with such stimulants as are necessary to take.
It is the best tonic known, furnishing sustenance to both brain and body.
It makes a delicious drink with water and sugar only.

Invigorating, Strengthening,
Healthful, Refreshing.

Prices reasonable. Pamphlet giving further particulars mailed free. Manufactured by the

Rumford Chemical Works, Providence, R.I.

 BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

The Literary World.

VOL. XVIII. BOSTON, DEC. 24, 1887. No. 26.

CONTENTS.

THE WORLD'S LITERATURE IN 1887.

A General Survey.

DENMARK	471
FRANCE	472
GERMANY	474
GREAT BRITAIN	475
INDIA	477
ITALY	477
JAPAN	479
NORWAY	480
RUSSIA	481
SPAIN	483
SWEDEN	483
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA	484
NECROLOGY	485
MORE HOLIDAY BOOKS:
Our Darlings	486
The Man Who Would Like to Marry	486
Notre Dame	486
Rolfe's Edition of Scott's Poems	487
Raphael's Life, Works, and Times	487
Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey	487
Dr. Doran's Annals of the English Stage	487
The Book of British Ballads	488
The Dawn of the XIXth Century in England	488
NEWS AND NOTES	489
PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED	489

THE WORLD'S LITERATURE IN 1887.

A GENERAL SURVEY.

Denmark.

Among the deaths which have occurred in Denmark during the past twelvemonth, we have to mention Professor Johannes Kok, author of many valuable works on the south Jutland dialects. He was born Feb. 24, 1821, and died Jan. 20, 1887. A more severe blow to Denmark was the loss of Bishop D. G. Monrad. He was born in Copenhagen, Nov. 24, 1811, and died on the island of Falster, March 28, 1887. He graduated in theology in 1836, became a journalist in 1840, and during the years 1840 to 1849 he took an active part in the constitutional struggles in Denmark. As a member of the so-called March Ministry he was one of the chief authors of the Danish constitution. During the dark days of the last Danish war he was Prime Minister. He wrote many valuable works, mainly religious, and was one of the finest orators Denmark has produced. He was also the author of many political pamphlets. But the greatest loss, not only to Denmark but to the enlightened world, was the death of the great Latin scholar, Johan Nicolai Madvig, which occurred Dec. 12, 1886, too late to be reported last year. He was born Aug. 7, 1804, had been for about 60 years a professor at the Copenhagen University, and was ranked as the ablest Latin scholar of modern times. His published works fill a whole library. The great poet, M. A. Goldschmidt, died Aug. 15, 1887. He was born Oct. 26, 1819, and was the author of many of the finest gems in Danish literature. From 1840 to 1846 he gained a great reputation as the editor of the satirical journal, "Korsaren." In the death of Thomas Lange, which occurred Aug. 25, 1887, Denmark lost another of her distinguished poets and novelists. He was born Nov. 30, 1829. Among his best known works are the two novels, "Aaen og Havet" (The Stream and the Ocean), and

"Lyse Nætter" (Light Nights). In the midst of these sorrows Denmark has had the opportunity of celebrating the 70th birthday of her greatest living son, Judge A. F. Krieger, which occurred Oct. 4. On that day he was handed a volume written and published for the occasion by the most distinguished jurists of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. We can hardly conceive of greater homage than this paid to Krieger, and the best of all is that it was so well deserved.

In a conversation with the great critic, Dr. Georg Brandes, the other day, the writer asked him why so little first-class literature was produced in Scandinavia nowadays. "The older authors like yourself," said the writer, "seem to have become unproductive, and no new talents of importance are announced." After a moment's reflection Dr. Brandes answered that the dearth of first-class literature was due to the hard times. Authors have formed a habit of being well paid for their works, but in the midst of the present economical crisis the best book does not sell, and hence the authors are not stimulated to write. He said he believed that there was more real talent in Scandinavia now than ever before. He was then asked if the above was his reason for not publishing anything the past year or two. He said no, and added that he had been as busy as a bee preparing the sixth volume of his "Main Currents in the Literature of the Nineteenth Century," and that as soon as the work was ready it would be issued both in Danish and in German. Last summer a splendid banquet was given in Copenhagen to Dr. Sophus Schandorph, in honor of the 25th anniversary of the publication of his first book. The speech of the occasion was made by Dr. Georg Brandes. Schandorph has published a small collection of poems this year, and soon after the festival he and his wife went to France, where they will reside several years.

The ablest of the younger writers of fiction in Denmark is Henrik Pontoppidan. We have two little volumes from him this year, "Mimoser" (Sensitive Plants) and "I Hytterne" (In the Cabins). He has a remarkable faculty for describing the life of common people. The popular author, V. Bergsø, has given us a volume of stories called "Fra sollyse Strande" (From Sunny Strands), and from S. Bennet we have "Konsulinden" (The Consul's Wife), a genuine Copenhagen story. Mrs. Ina Lange is a woman of Finnish birth, but she resides in Copenhagen. She has heretofore published a number of stories with the nom de plume Daniel Sten, but this year she has given the public, in a Danish translation, a story under her own name. This story, entitled "En Skæbne" (A Fate), deals with life in the time of our grandparents. The scene is laid in Finland, and it is universally admitted that the work does the author great credit. J. Bondesen has written a voluminous story called "I Strid og Strøb" (In Strife and Toil). It is very readable. That strange phenomenon in Danish letters, Herman Bang, one of whose books was confiscated a few years ago, has returned from his voluntary exile in Austria with a huge manuscript in his trunk. The manuscript has been changed into a printed story of over 400 pages, and its title is "Stuk," whatever that may mean. We understand it is as naturalistic as the author dares to be and avoid confiscation. A story 448 pages long, by the great poet Holger Drachmann, has just come from the press. Its title is "Med den brede Pensel" (With the Broad Brush), but no reviews of it have as yet appeared. In the early part of the year he wrote a drama called "Der var Engav" (Once upon a Time), which was a great success at the Royal Theater. A still greater success at the Dagmar Theater was Betzonich's "Landsoldaten" (The Danish Soldier), describing scenes from the late Danish wars. This was played 150 nights in succession to crowded houses. Sophus Schandorph dramatized one of his stories for the theater, but it was a failure. From Edw. Brandes we have a drama called "Kjærlighed" (Love), in four acts, which was successful on the stage, and is a literary work of high grade.

Cooper, Ingersoll, Miss Alcott, P. T. Barnum, Mooty, Lew Wallace, Henry James, Jr., and Eggleston are the American authors who have been translated into Danish the past year. From the deceased Bishop Monrad we have two religious works. From Madvig we have two volumes: his "Opuscula Academica" (796 pages), with his portrait; and his "Autobiography," the latter a magnificent work. The poet critic, Rudolph Schmidt, has published a volume of seven lectures on life and literature; an interesting volume. The deceased Goldschmidt left several manuscripts, one of which has been published and is called "Small Sketches from Fancy and Reality."

Here we may leave the domain of elegant literature and look at some of the miscellaneous books that have fallen from the press. Mr. H. V. Mansfeld-Büllner deserves great credit for his numismatic work. He possesses himself one of the finest collections of coins in Denmark, and from his pen we have an illustrated work on the Danish coins from the year 1241 to 1377. It is in all respects a model work, which throws valuable light on the history of that period. The indefatigable O. Nielsen has issued the eighth huge tome of Copenhagen's "Diplomatarium." Carstensen and Lütken have completed their magnificent, illustrated life of the naval hero Tordenskjold. The erudite scholar F. A. Wimmer has written a unique monogram on the baptismal font in Akirkeby Church. It is an édition de luxe, published in connection with the 100th anniversary of the great Danish linguist Rasmus Rask, which occurred on Nov. 22. The subject is handled in a masterly manner. Volapük makes considerable progress in Denmark, and countless books and pamphlets are continually appearing. Slöjd (handiwork) makes great progress in the schools. Galschiöt's elaborate work illustrating Denmark has reached part 24, but is yet far from complete. Liebenberg's monumental edition of Holberg's Comedies has reached part 37, but it will take fully 60 parts to complete the work. Every play is illustrated by Tegner. Horn and Magnussen's illustrated work "Hellas and the Hellenes" is finished. Kalker's dictionary of the old Danish tongue has been published as far as part 17. Brunn's history of Copenhagen has reached part 13, and the Danish Cyclopaedia part 47. Alexander Thorsen has at length finished his great historical work on the reign of King Frederik VII. Holm and Garde's "Greenland Expedition" has only reached part 8 and there is no telling when it will be completed. Bricka's Danish biographical dictionary progresses slowly, the sixth part having recently appeared. Vol. 20 of Icelandic laws brings this work down to 1870. It is an octavo of 642 pages. Schöote's elaborate "Zoologica Danica" continued by H. J. Hansen makes but slow progress.

A work of decided merit is H. Höfding's "Ethics" (Etik). Prof. Thomsen's "Unity of Matter" (Materiens Enhed) also deserves great praise. A rather strange, but very scholarly work is "Real Portraits of Jesus" (Virkelige Portrætter af Jesus) by L. Lund. It has made a real sensation in Denmark. O. H. Aagaard has written a valuable monogram on Scottish history from 1536 to 1560, and finally we have to record the appearance of Vol. VIII of T. Lund's "History of Denmark and Norway," which gives a description of the daily life, of births and baptisms in the latter part of the sixteenth century.

France.

The literary activity of France for the last twelvemonth, as manifested in published works, is largely a repetition in substance of the preceding year. The dead level of cultivated mediocrity has not often been broken, and the books that have made the most sensation have been books of a day. Sensationalism, indeed, has been perhaps more pronounced than ever. The reading public of Paris, ever on the qui vive for novelty, demands highly-spiced mental pabulum, and this the enterprising "naturalists," led by M. Guy de Maupassant, undertake with their aspirations after "modernity" to supply. In fiction the greatest of living French novelists, Alphonse Daudet, has been silent. History has been largely an editing of memoirs and a collection of documents. In criticism a series of monographs on great French writers has called forth the most noteworthy work of the year. Scientific writers have been occupied with the phenomena of hypnotism, and with what it is now the fashion to call "physiological psychology" — the psychology of nerve-cells and reflex processes. Politics and social science have received but little attention, comparatively speaking. Accounts of travel and observation have been mainly concerned with the French colonies, more particularly with northern Africa. Of poetry there has been hardly anything worthy the name, and the best has come from versifiers of long-established fame. There has been a constantly growing interest in Russian literature, and translations and studies of Russian writers have met with an extraordinary vogue. According to our custom we shall mention here chiefly the books of the year that seem to us to be illustrative of general tendencies.

The first volume of M. Renan's "Histoire du Peuple d'Israël," which comes at the close of the season, is of historical works easily the first. A. de Quatrefages has published a "Histoire Générale des Races Humaines," which though brief is a masterly coup d'oeil and a convincing argument in favor of monogenesis and the universality and perpetuity of the religious sentiment. Eugène Plon in his "Maîtres Italiens au Service de la Maison d'Autriche" has illuminated a hitherto obscure epoch in the history of art, and Léon Palustre has made a superb memorial to "La Renaissance en France." Léon Henzy's study of "Les Opérations Militaires de Jules César" is a systematic review of the famous campaign against Pompey. É. Chaveriat has examined the influence of religion on politics in "Les Affaires Religieuses en Bohême au XVI^e Siècle," while Prof. J. Lichtenberger in his "Histoire des Idées Religieuses en Allemagne" covers the period from the rise of Wolf and his school about the middle of the 18th century to the present epoch of neo-Lutheranism, ultra-Catholicism, and infidelity. Of special studies in French history A. Bardoux's "La Bourgeoisie Française" (1789-1848) is elaborate, painstaking and systematic; Maurice Poinignon's "Histoire Générale de la Champagne et de la Brie," now completed, is partial if learned; Gabriel Hanotaux in his "Études Historiques sur le XVI^e et la XVII^e Siècle en France" is painstaking and truth-seeking; Albert Sorel, in the second part of "L'Europe et la Révolution Française" is occupied with the fall of the dynasty; Vicomte G. d'Avenel has issued the third volume of his valuable account of "Richelieu et la Monarchie Absolue;" Paul Thureau-Dangin has brought out the fourth volume of his masterly history of "La Monarchie de Juillet;" Paul Robiquet has displayed patient and intelligent research in "Paris et la Ligue sous la Règne de Henri III;" Comte d'Hérison in "Le Cabinet Noir" has collected piquant souvenirs of Louis XVIII, Napoléon, and Marie Louise; "La Règne de Philippe III," by Charles Langlois, throws a good deal of light on the institutions of feudal monarchy and depicts "the Bold" as possessed of an uncultivated intelligence and a feeble will; Jules Zeller in the second part of his "Entretiens sur l'Histoire du Moyen Age" is occupied with the period from Louis the Debonair to the Crusades; Edme Champion has discussed "L'Esprit de la Révolution;" and Pierre de la Gorce has produced a "Histoire de la Seconde République Française." Of what may be called the biography of history there has been enough and to spare. The "Correspondance de Louise de Coligny," by Léon Marlet, is nothing less than fascinating. Mme. C. Coignet's memoir of François de Scépeaux, sire de Vieilleville, is a forcible portrait of a magnificent specimen of the feudal "grand seigneur." Duc Arthur of Brittany, "Le Comté de Richemont," is the subject of a noteworthy monograph by E. Cosneau. Edouard Petit has gibbeted André Doria for all time as a bloody and unscrupulous tyrant. The memoirs and correspondence of Jacques Bougars, diplomatist, are the basis of a gratifying book on "Henri IV et l'Allemagne" by L. Auguez. Albert Vaudal in "Une Ambassade Française en Orient sous Louis XV" is occupied with the mission of the Marquis de Villeneuve to Constantinople in 1728-1741, and Tibulle Hamont in his memoir of "Lally-Tollendal" is engaged in the rehabilitation of one of the most zealous of the servants of France in the East. The "Correspondance Inédite du Comte d'Avaux," by A. Boppe, is concerned with Venice, Copenhagen, Hamburg, and Paris in 1627-1642. Under the suggestive title of "Un Valet Ministre" Charles Nisard writes of Guillaume du Tillot and his part in an episode in Franco-Italian history (1749-1771). The "Mémoires du Prince Adam Czartowyski," edited by Charles de Mazade, are practically a history of Poland from 1776 to 1809, and include important correspondence with Alexander I of Russia, who is here revealed as a remorseful mystic. In "Talma et l'Empire"

Alfred Copin has written a history of the first Napoleon as seen from behind the footlights. We must not close this paragraph without mention of "Les Origines de l'Opéra Français," by Charles Nutter and E. Thoinan, a most important contribution to the history of the French drama; and "L'Académie des Derniers Valois," by Edouard Fremy, who has brought to light the prototype of the modern French Academy and from unedited documents explained its origin.

The beginning of a series of monographs on "Les Grands Écrivains Français" is, as we have said, the most important event of the year in the department of literary criticism. Jules Simon has written of "Victor Cousin," Gaston Boissier of "Madame de Sévigné," Albert Sorel of "Montesquieu," and E. Caro of "George Sand," and it may safely be asserted that each of these volumes is in its way an authoritative and definitive estimate. From the sober and learned Ferdinand Brunetière we have had a third series of "Études Critiques" dealing with Descartes, Pascal, Le Sage, Marivaux, Voltaire, Rousseau, and the classicists and romanticists. Jules Lemaitre in a new series of "Les Contemporains" presents literary portraits of Octave Feuillet, the Goncourts, Pierre Loti, the Duc d'Aumale, Josephin Soulay, Jean Richepin, and Paul Bourget — portraits in which the spirituelle and mordant talent of the author is fully manifested. Bérard-Varagnac, the serious, far-seeing critic of the Débats, has given us in his elegant and polished style the "Portraits Littéraires" of Victor Hugo, George Sand, Stendhal, Pierre Loti, Scherer, and Balzac. Émile Faguet is frank, incisive, and sagacious in his "Études Littéraires" of Chateaubriand, Lamartine, A. de Vigny, Victor Hugo, De Musset, Gautier, Mérimée, Michelet, George Sand, and Balzac. The Vicomte E. M. de Vogüé is acute and learned in his "Souvenirs et Visions." Comte Charles de Mony in his "Lettres Athéniennes" celebrates the sovereign beauty of Greek nature and art. "Le Livre de Caliban," by Émile Bergerat, contains a deal of effective satire in its reflections on social tendencies and famous men and women of the day. Léon Sichler's "Histoire de la Littérature Russe" is commended as a faithful, comprehensive, and instructive review. Gustave Larroumet has reviewed "La Comédie de Molière;" Félix Hémon has studied severally the tragedies and comedies of Corneille; Charles des Guerrois has translated and commented upon Shakespeare's "Timon of Athens;" Alidor Delzant has published a valuable criticism of the literary career of the late Paul de Saint-Victor; and Rodolphe Topffer, as "writer, artist, and man," has been the subject of a gratifying memoir by Auguste Blondel and Paul Mirabaud.

Under the head of social science we may class M. Guyan's "L'Irréligion de l'Avenir," for the author treats religion as a progressive sociological explanation of the universe, and maintains that it is going the way of all myths, to be supplanted by a social ideal. Here, too, should be mentioned "Le Christianisme," by Constant Blandiaux, who is concerned, from the agnostic point of view, with the social value of Christian doctrines. An audacious book on "Joseph et Mardochée" as symbols of monopoly and proxenetism by Édouard Drumont has been honored with mention in the Roman Index. A. Laisant in his "L'Anarchie Bourgeoise" argues for the establishment of a great socialist-republican party to overcome the influence of the bourgeoisie, whom he regards as guilty of all the ills that have afflicted France since the Revolution. Charles Lambel's "Essai sur les Réformes Nécessaires" is written with the generous ardor of the radical reformer. "Les Sophistes Allemands et les Nihilistes Russes," by Th. Funck-Brentano, is written by an original thinker who does not shrink from extreme conclusions. Jules Simon has written with bitterness of "Nos Hommes d'État" and their relations to questions of the day. Albert Duruy discusses current educational theories in "L'Instruction Publique et la Démocratie," and similar themes occupy Édouard Maneuvrier in "L'Éducation de la Bourgeoisie sous la République." E. Boutiny heralds the supremacy of British democracy in treating of "Le Développement de la Constitution et de la Société Politique en Angleterre," while the Comte de Franqueville unfolds the mechanism of "Le Gouvernement et le Parlement Britannique."

Travel and observation have called forth a number of interesting volumes. Albert Tissandier in "Six Mois aux États-Unis" is concerned chiefly with American inventions and what he calls the grandeur of industrial humanity. Charles Bigot in "De Paris au Niagara" pays more attention to social matters and is always a quick-witted traveler. "L'Allemagne Intime," by Henri Conti, is a really faithful narrative full of exact information. Baron E. de Mandat-Grancey, "Chez Paddy," is tourist, philosopher, historian, and man of the world; his remedy for the woes of Ireland is emigration. Barthélemy Saint-Hilaire has made a complete and exhaustive study of "L'Inde Anglaise." G. de Molinari has made up from letters in the Débats a useful volume on "Panama, la Martinique, Haïti." Léon Huggonet, editor of La France, has been "Chez les Bulgaires." Félix Narjoux has made a brilliant sketch of "L'Italie des Italiens." "La Vie et les Mœurs à la Plata" have inspired a comprehensive work from Émile Daireaux; Ernest Michel has given his experiences "A Travers l'Hémisphère Sud;" and Louis Bousse-nard has unfolded "Les Mystères de la Guyanne." Of the many books on the French colonies we shall mention only "Par delà la Méditerranée," a book of practical views and picturesque descriptions; "A Travers la Tunisie," by Léopold Baraban, of the French department of agriculture; and "L'Algérie qui s'en va," a highly-colored picture of primitive conditions, by Dr. Bernard.

Coming now to science and philosophy we find that M. Ferraz has completed his masterly work on "Spiritualisme et Liberalisme" as manifested in the leading French minds of the century, and that his final word is a prediction of complete harmony between science and the idealistic philosophy. M. Nourisson opposes the doctrine of evolution in his discourses on "Philosophies de la Nature" as exemplified by Bacon, Boyle, Toland, and Buffon. George Fonsegrive is theoretical and historical in his "Essai sur la Libre Arbitre," and holds firmly to man's essential freedom of action. Olivier de Sanderval, writing "De l'Absolu," discovers in the universe an incessant transformation in the direction of an ultimate good whose cause and end we cannot know. In direct contrast with this is Dr. Paul Regnard's book on "Les Maladies Epidémiques des Esprit." Dr. Regnard says that the epidemic intellectual malady of the seventeenth century was sorcery; of the eighteenth, miracles; of the nineteenth, somnambulism; and that the malady of the twentieth century will be a universal outbreak of carnage. A full exposition of hypnotism is given in "Le Magnétisme Animal" by Alfred Binet and Charles Féré. "L'Hypnotisme et les États Analogues" by Dr. Gîles de la Tourette is a solid and scholarly production. The pathology and hygiene of nerve cells occupy the eloquent and logical Dr. de Leven in his essay on "La Nevrose." Man is described as a ferment of systematization by Fr. Paulhan in "Les Phénomènes Affectifs," and Charles Féré in "Sensation et Mouvement" argues that man is an interesting example of psycho-mechanism. Charles Richet attempts the synthetic method in his "Essai de Psychologie Générale." Dr. Georges Hayem in his "Leçons de Thérapeutique" argues that all diseases of the human system are due to living organisms and must be combated by disinfecting or antiseptic medication. "Le Caractère dans la Santé et dans la Maladie" is analyzed with subtle insight by Dr. Azam. And A. Coutance in "Venins et Poisons" studies man as a generator of poisons, and civilization as poisoned by the incidental products of its own industry.

"The André Cornélis" of Paul Bourget is easily in our eyes the first novel of the year—a splendid performance, this portrait of a modern Hamlet, showing perhaps traces of effort now and then in the exquisitely elaborated style, but in substance subtle and profound. After M. Bourget we come to a long pause. M. Zola has further developed his pessimistic views of the essential bestiality of humanity in "La Terre," which is of the earth, earthy. Guy de Maupassant, still the recognized leader of the younger naturalists, has in "Mont-Oriol" and "Pierre et Jean" invested his brutally outspoken method with a delicate and seductive grace. A new writer, Marcel Prévost, has won pronounced celebrity with "Le Scorpion," a painful but fascinating history of a little provincial seminarist destroyed by contact with the wickedness of Paris. "Braves Gens," by Jean Richepin, is a triumph of realism in its portrayal of the world of bohemia. Hector Malot has a sympathetic charm in "Zyte," which depicts the double life of theater and fireside; he is only offensive in "Vices Français," the ironical title of an attempt to unmask English debauchery. "Le Bilatéral" by J. H. Rosny, shows a too fierce struggle after novelty, but is a significant expression of "the ground swell of humanity." "L'Immolation" by the same author deals with peasant life and presents a truly tragic picture of a gloomy and ferocious intensity, but is vouched for as thoroughly faithful. Octave Mirbeau displays a Poe-like power in "Le Calvaire," a fantastic and revolting romance. "Une Faute de Jeunesse" by Alexandre Boutigne is recorded as an advance upon that author's previous work. Gustave Tondouze exploits his favorite theme, adultery, in "Fleur d'Oranger," and in "Le Pompon Vert" rehearses experiences in the siege of Paris. The "Masques" of René Maizeroy is a caustic revelation of boulevard morals and manners, and the same author's "L'Adorée" is a study of jealousy of incontestable power. Victor Cher-buliez is accused of being unsavory and labored in "La Bête." Robert de Bonnières has painted with delicious grace the development of romantic love in his "Jeanne Avril," which celebrates the bewitching qualities of the cultivated French girl of modern Paris. Paul Dumas, a new writer, shows vitality in "Le Joueur," and feverish passion in "La Belle Veuve." Paul Bonnetain's "En Mer" makes a poetical study of the combined effects of woman and ocean. André Theuriot is concerned with bureaucracy in "L'Affaire Froideville," and displays a most delicate art in "Au Paradis des Enfants." "Madame Robert" by Théodore de Banville is the story of a magnificent courtesan in love with a poor devil of a student. Henri Rochefort, the irreconcilable, has made an agonizing picture of social conditions in "La Mal'aria." "Le Dernière Bandit," gay, charming, pathetic stories of the Midi, by Emmanuel Arène; "Candidat!" an amusing satire on political life by Jules Claretie; "La Gouine," a bitter cry of mistaken love, by Boyer d'Agen; "Madame Chrysanthème," a series of exquisite Japanese romances by Pierre Loti; and "Le Petit Moreau," a pathological narrative by Émile Bergerat—must close our lengthening list.

Turning to the verse of the year let us select a few volumes most worthy of mention. "Arrière Saison," by François Coppée, is, of course, enchanting. "Le Forgeron," of Théodore de Banville, is a mythological poem in which notes antique and modern gracefully intermingle. Jean Aicard sings like a genuine troubadour of love and roses in "Les Livres d'Heures de l'Amour." A dolorous charm pertains to the "Edel" and "Les Aveux" of Paul Bourget. Ernest Prarond echoes Baudelaire in "Le Jardin des Racines Noires." Honoré Bonhomme manifests imagination and sincerity in "A Travers les Buissons Fleuris;" Jean Lorrain a bizarre and brilliant talent in "Les Griseries;" Émile Peyrefort a languid grace in "La Vision;" Charles de Pomairols delicate sensibility in "La Nature et l'Âme;" François Fabié genuine if undisciplined talent in "Le Clocher;" and there is both subtlety and vigor in "Le Vitrail," by George Boutelleau.

As usual there is a large number of books that do not fall readily into the categories already enumerated. The "Francillon" of Alexandre Dumas, with its wit, verve, intensity, and its pitiless analysis of a corrupt and frivolous society, has been among the most talked-of productions of the year. The "Monsieur Scapin" of Jean Richepin is a brilliant comedy in verse. Concerning the Parisian stage "Les Coulisés," by Aurélien Scholl; the "Souvenirs et Étude de Théâtre," by P. Regnier; "Les Mille et une Nuits du Théâtre," by Auguste Vitu; and "Le Théâtre Contemporain," by Barbey d'Aurevilly, are sufficiently explicit. The "Journal des Goncourts" is a noteworthy history of literary apprenticeship. Émile Montégut has brought together a series of essays on a variety of topics under the title of "Choses du Nord et du Midi." Charles Leser has written of "La Vie Militaire," and Émile Blavet of "La Vie Parisienne." The "Notes d'un Journaliste," by Gustave Geffroy, are penetrating, bold, and suggestive, and "L'Année Littéraire" of Paul Ginisty is a readable chronicle. For a piquant sketch of literary life in Paris "Nos Gens de Lettres," by Frédéric Lollée, is worth reading. A collection of the "Oeuvres Littéraires de Napoléon Bonaparte," by Tancrède Martel, has been one of the literary events of the year, for it exhibits the emperor in the rôles of poet, historian, pamphleteer, and writer of love letters. "Napoléon et ses Détracteurs," by Prince Napoléon, has also attracted attention, largely for political reasons. The Vicomte Ch. de Lovenjoul has written a "Histoire des Oeuvres de Théophile Gautier" full of curious information. Victor Hugo's "Choses Vues" is already familiar to our readers. Comte Ferdinand de Lesseps has given to the world his "Souvenirs de Quarante Ans." "Le Jeu de l'Épée," by Jules Jacob and others, is best described as the duelist's vade mecum.

Of new editions of standard works we must not fail to speak of the first volume of the "Oeuvres de Blaise Pascal," edited by Prosper Faugère, to whom we owe the first authentic text of the "Pensées," and who died before the appearance of his work in print. G. Bengesco has begun an edition of "Oeuvres Choies de Voltaire," and M. R. Chantelauze has issued eight volumes of his collection of the "Oeuvres du Cardinal de Retz." An edition of the "Oeuvres et Correspondance Inédites de d'Alambert" is in charge of Charles Henry.

E. Iedrain has begun a new translation of "La Bible," noteworthy for its scholarly and eloquent rendering of the sacred texts. Lorédan Larchey has made a highly valuable collection of "Nos Vieux Proverbes." The "Correspondance, 1830-1850," of Gustave Flaubert, edited by his niece, contains delightful memorials of that great-hearted man. The miscellaneous writings of Guizot and his wife are collected under the title of "Le Temps Passé." Madame N. N. Oursel has completed her "Biographie Normande." Paul Lacombe has issued a remarkable "Bibliographie Parisienne" (1600-1880); Joseph Blanc has produced a "Bibliographie Italico-Française" (1475-1885); and to his monumental "Bibliographie des Bibliographies" Léon Valée has added a supplement of 3,351 titles, making now a total list of over 10,000 distinct bibliographical works.

Germany.

This year we have had a rich harvest in the field of good fiction, minor as well as longer. In quantity and quality Spielhagen's "Was Soll Das Werden" stands foremost, a great novel with a noble ethical purpose. The same author's latest work, "Noblesse Oblige," running through some dozen and a half dailies just now, will not be "out" before January or so, but it may already be taken for granted that it is up to its illustrious author's standard. Another remarkable novel with high-flown tendencies is Max Nordau's "Die Krankheit des Jahrhunderts," already announced. Like all of its gifted author's writings, it is creating a good deal of sensation on account of its great beauties of style and description as well as of its radical views and teachings. By the "malady of the century," indicated in the title, pessimism is meant, and socialism is largely dealt with. Of course, many critical attacks are being hurled at these two volumes. Paul Lindau's "Arme Mädchen" belongs to the same group; it is the second of a series of novels under the collective title

"Berlin," mentioned in our last Annual Review. It deals with the position of poor needlewomen, and has been much parodied and criticised.

Of historical novels, Rudolf Gottschall's "Verschollene Grössen" (Forgotten Celebrities) occupies the first place; it is decidedly one of the very best books of the year; Gottschall is by no means a prolific novelist, but what he writes is sure to be good. Paul Victor Wichman's "Die Eiserne Maske" will create much stir on account of its trying to prove that the famous historical Iron Mask was none of the persons hitherto taken for it, but Prince Tancred de Rohan. Hans Blum—the son of Robert Blum, the famous democrat of 1848—has published "Die Aebtissin von Säkkingen," embodying a most fascinating narrative of the times of the Reformation, distinguished by great beauties of style, and full of poetical and philosophical passages as well as fine historical pictures. Julius Grosse's excellent novel, "Der Spion," deals with Russian life, and has been forbidden in Russia. Alfred Friedman's "Zwei Ehen" treats of married life, and is quite as interesting as "A. L.'s" "Ein Arzt," a small but very valuable romance of a psychological description, said to be written by Anna Leschivo. Balduin Groller, a high-class writer already several times mentioned in our columns, has given us "Gräfin Aranka," a novel somewhat repulsive on account of its characters, but highly attractive because of its wonderful psychological treatment.

Neither Ebers nor Heyse have come forward with new volumes this year. As regards longer fiction of renowned authors, only four more need to be mentioned. Maximilian Schmidt's "Bubenrichter vom Mittenwald" is a charming story of Bavarian highland peasant life. The scene of Mrs. Fanny Lewald's "Die Familie Darner" is laid in the province of eastern Prussia in the beginning of the present century, and this noteworthy book narrates the fortunes of the family of a rich merchant snob, who formerly was a serf guilty of manslaughter. Wilhelm Jensen's "Asylrecht," a literary romance of great ability and beauty, is full of pathos and humor, a perfect gem in fiction. Hermann Heiberg, who has become very popular within the last five years or so (he was past forty when he began to write), adds "Ein Weib" to the last of his novels, a work approaching the realism of "youngest Germany," without, however, adopting its licentiousness. We wind up our survey of longer fiction by noticing "Die Dulderin," a strange but excellent story of the sufferings of a mater familias and her younger sons, driven out of their home and property by the infamy of the eldest son and the weakness of the father. The author, Eugene de Jagow, is not as yet celebrated, but is sure to become so in the field of romance.

Passing over to shorter fiction, we find that Wilhelm Jensen's "Aus schwerer Vergangenheit," a series of five serious historical novellettes, stands foremost. Next comes Ludwig Ganghofer's "Oberland," a volume of four remarkably lifelike Bavarian peasant stories, full of brisk descriptions, sound and vigorous figures, and touching incidents. There are some other very good volumes of a similar nature; e. g., P. K. Rosegger's "Allerhand Leute" (All Sorts of People), which is quite as charming as any of the famous peasant writer's numerous works. It deals with Austrian mountaineers, and so does Otto Lohr's "Aus dem Eckstübchen" (containing four splendid tales, chiefly about clerical life), while the scene of Caroline Häusser's "Geschichten aus Nord und Süd" is mostly laid in Bavaria; Mrs. Häusser—the wife of a prominent Munich actor—is also a writer of very good dramatic literature of Bavarian peasant life ("Der Bergschreck," etc.). Conrad Alberti's "Plebs: Novellen aus dem Volke" also have the life of the people for their subject; they are realistic and vigorous specimens of the best branch of "youngest Germanism." However, the self-asserting preface is apt to provoke contradiction and make the author appear presumptuous.

As to humorous stories and tales, we have to mention Ferdinand Gross's graceful "Drei Geschichten," and Hildebrandt's sparkling "Novellen." Gross has long been a well-known writer; Hildebrandt, however, is quite a new one, but decidedly destined to become one of our very best humorists; he is particularly great in describing American adventurers' life and such like subjects. Of miscellaneous short stories we must name Berta von Suttner's "Verkettungen," one of the most amiable books of this amiable talent; Hans Hoffmann's charming and accomplished collection of five Corfu novellettes under the common title of "Neue Korfugeschichten;" Alfred Friedman's little book containing "Kirchenraub" and "Falsche Freundschaft," two good stories from the life of the working classes, without, however, treating of social questions; and lastly, "Aus dem Reiche des Herzens," a number of common but very pleasantly written and interesting love stories.

Literature for the young is as numerous as ever, but few publications of note have been issued in this department. The best are Frida Schanz's "Mit Ränzel und Stab," an excellent story illustrating the geography, customs, habits, etc., of the principal nations, and accompanied by charming pictures, showing the stamps, flags, costumes, etc., of the peoples described; and Victor Blüthgen's "Märchenquell," a collection of some of the finest fairy tales of the Germans, Swedes, Arabs, Danes, etc., beautifully illustrated; Blüthgen—who is also one of the most successful, though not most prolific, of German novelists—has added some pretty fairy tales of his own. Lina Morgenstern's "Storchstrasse" is the next best fairy tale book of the year.

The department of poetry has been rather barren so far as really good productions are concerned. Karl Schäfer's "Heiderosen," and Paul Bähr's "Neues Buch der Lieder" are the two best volumes of lyric poems. Of epics, five works deserve notice: Gensichen's "Tamina," a short love story; "Die Kinder von Wohldorf," by Ferdinand Avenarius, a weird narrative of a fiddler, slightly reminding of Wolff's "Pied Piper of Hamelin," but entirely original; Rudolf Gottschall's "Merlins Wanderungen," a gracefully written, partly satirical description of modern Paris life; Julius Grosse's charming volume of "Episoden und Epiloge;" and Johan Fastenrath's "Zwölf Alfonsos von Castilien," a happy and clever glorification of the deeds and history of the Spanish kings bearing the name Alfonso, especially the VI, VII, and XII. Fastenrath owes his fame to his zeal in mediating between the literatures of Germany and Spain. Concerning dramatic poetry, there has been only one really remarkable book: "Vom König" by Paulus Cassel, D.D., the celebrated pastor of Christ Church, Berlin; the scene is laid in Kyrene in the first century B.C. It is a tragedy full of dramatic vigor and fine ethical passages; it aims at teaching love of mankind. Of miscellaneous poetry we ought to mention "Poetisches Tagebuch," the latest gift of old Eduard Bauernfeld, a famous Vienna playwright now far over eighty years old, but almost youthful in mind; and Maximilian Bern's "Declamatorium," a wonderfully good collection of German poems of several hundred authors, particularly well adapted for the purposes of recitation.

Returning to prose literature, let us first survey the department of history and its allied branches. Those who were afraid that after Ranke's death his last great work, the "Weltgeschichte," would break off with the sixth volume, have been agreeably surprised by the appearance of the seventh volume, which covers the time between Otto II and the death of Henry IV. The freshness of mind with which this veteran of historiography approached, even at an age of ninety years, the most difficult problems, is a matter of astonishment as well as admiration. Another posthumous work of Ranke's has been published during the year—"Zur Geschichte Deutschlands und Frankreichs im 19. Jahrhundert," containing three lengthy treatises on historical subjects concerning France and Germany. The late Max Duncker has also left two books which have now seen the light—"Abhandlungen aus der Neueren Geschichte" and "Abhandlungen aus der Griechischen Geschichte;" each of the seventeen papers contained in these volumes is a splendid testimony to the eminently historical mind of the distinguished professor. Another great authority, Ferdinand Gregorovius, has collected a number of essays—partly reminiscences of travels, partly results of scholarly studies—into a volume under the title of "Kleine Schriften zur Geschichte und Kultur;" all of them show this splendid writer's famous mastery of style. Otto Henne Am Rhyn's great national work, "Kulturgeschichte des deutschen Volkes," has come to a conclusion by the issue of the two last volumes, while Friedrich Ratzel's wonderful ethnographical book, "Völkerkunde," has become complete by the publication of the second part; both works are meeting with enthusiastic reception. Cornelius Gurlitt has written an excellent "Geschichte des Barockstils, des Rococo und des Klassizismus," the first bulky volume of which—dealing with the history of the barocco in Italy—is just "out;" the whole will, on its completion, be a great standard work of the highest merit.

On travel and observation perhaps the best books of the year are the two by A. von Huhn, about contemporary Bulgaria: "Der Kampf der Bulgaren um ihre Nationaleinheit" and "Aus bulgarischer Sturmzeit;" in both, the accomplished author—who long acted as correspondent to the Cologne Gazette—strongly sympathizes with the Bulgarians' struggles for independence. In "Londoner Streifzüge" Wilh. F. Brand presents us with some clever light sketches of London life, while Julius Rodenberg sends forth a second series of his extremely valuable "Bilder aus dem Berliner Leben," the first of which was noticed last year. Ludwig Hevesi, a leading humorist—although a Hungarian by birth—has succeeded in writing a volume of very spirited "Bilder aus Italien," and C. F. Peterssen supplies a fairly good and interesting collection of sketches and pictures of Paris and French life, entitled "Aus Frankreich." A small but attractive book is Karl Pröhl's "Vergessene Brüderstämme," abounding in descriptions of German life in Transylvania and Bohemia. Last, not least, we ought to mention Adolf Schulze's "Aus dem Notizbuch eines Berliner Schutzmanns," a series of sketches from Berlin life, written by a plain police constable; there are certainly very few policemen who can write books, much less such interesting ones. Herr Schulze has also written some other books, especially translations.

In the department of biography, the many lives of the great national poet Ludwig Uhland that have appeared apropos of his centenary make a small library; here we can only mention those by Adolf Rümelin, Eduard Paulus, H. Fischer, and G. Hassenstein. Two lives of another celebrated national poet, Emanuel Giebel—who died two years ago—have been issued, one by K. Th. Gaedertz, the other by C. Litzmann. The "Don Juan" centenary has called forth various books on Mozart and especially on that splendid opera of his; Karl Engel's "Die Don-Juan-Sage auf der Bühne" will be found to be particularly good. The death of the "cannon king" of Essen evoked "Alfred Krupp und sein Werk," a small but timely and interesting book by Schmidt-Weissenfels. A very good work in its way is Professor Brandt's "Samuel Taylor Coleridge und die englische Romantik," so much so that it has already been translated into English. The field of Dante literature, already very rich, has been further enriched by F. Sander's excellent book, "Dante Alighieri, ein Lebensbild." G. Schmeding's "Victor Hugo" is a remarkably well written and attractive attempt at causing the Germans to better appreciate the good qualities of the great French poet's writings. The literature of reminiscences and autobiography has produced three deeply interesting and instructive books: Count Schack's "Ein halbes Jahrhundert," Count Beust's "Erinnerungen und Aufzeichnungen aus drei Vierteljahrhunderten"—already translated into English—and Count Vitzthum von Eckstädt's two volumes, "Berlin und Wien, 1845-52," and "St. Petersburg und London, 1852-64."

As to literary history, only three works deserve notice: Hellwald and Schneider's "Geschichte der Niederländischen Literatur," Karl Bleibtreu's "Geschichte der Englischen Literatur," and Bender's "Geschichte der Griechischen Literatur;" all three forming part of Wilhelm Friedrich's giant undertaking, "Geschichte der Weltliteratur in Einzeldarstellungen," already several times mentioned in our columns. To a closely allied department belongs the highly noteworthy æsthetic work, "Die naturwissenschaftlichen Grundlagen der Poesie," by Wilhelm Bölsche; also Karl Kehrbach's wonderful bibliographical encyclopædia on the "Monumenta Germaniæ paedagogica," three volumes of which are "out;" this work, which will have an enormous number of big volumes when complete, embraces reprints of, or extracts from, all the books, orders, etc., relating to school matters, ever issued in German-speaking countries, and is a monument of the diligence of its numerous compilers.

There remain a few very good miscellaneous publications to be mentioned which cannot well be placed under any of the previous headings.

The first six volumes of the Goethe Society's great edition of the "Altmeister's" works have been issued. Oskar Hase has written a volume on "Die Entwicklung des Buchgewerbes," treating of the development of publishing, bookselling, printing, and the allied trades. Conrad Alberti's clever, though a little exaggerated sketches on matters theatrical, entitled "Ohne Schminke," is likely to create a stir. Bertha Katscher's charming "Kunst, Mensch zu sein" is a dainty little volume of advice in many matters of life—"words of the heart" and "practical wisdom," as the title page has it. Ferdinand Gross has not omitted to send forth his annual volume of chatty and cheerful essays on everything; this time the title runs, "Literarische Modelle und andere Geschichten." Paul Lanzky's five hundred "Psychologische Betrachtungen"—all short aphoristic sentences—prove him to be a wise observer and a profound thinker. Max Seiling's "Perlen der pessimistischen Weltanschauung" are a collection of 700 utterances of international philosophers and poets on pessimism. Our leading lexicographer, Daniel Sanders, has published, under the title "Fürs deutsche Hans," an excellent anthology of valuable passages from the Bible as well as the Greek and Roman classics. Wilhelm Spemann has just issued "Schatzkästlein des guten Rates," an extremely useful book of the inquire within for everything type, but much more comprehensive and of wider range than the well-known English volume.

We conclude by remarking that we have purposely omitted to mention any books, however interesting, already noticed in the "Letters from Germany" in the course of the year.

P. S. After writing the above, two eminent authors have come forward with new fiction: Paul Heyse sends forth "Der Roman der Stiftsdame," a very touching novel of noble tendencies, and a volume of novelettes entitled "Villa Falconieri und andere Novellen;" while Felix Dahn publishes no less than three books at a time, namely, two novels ("Bis zum Todegetren" and "Kaiser Karl und seine Paladine") and a novelette, "Was ist die Liebe?" Well, the Königsberg professor is nothing if not prolific!

Great Britain.

In the case of Great Britain, as in that of the United States further on in this Review, we shall confine our writing largely to general terms, remembering the considerable extent to which English literature is reflected or repeated in American, and the measure of familiarity with it afforded by our successive issues of the year. We shall mention only the leading authors and the few representative titles, attempting no exhaustive enumeration, indicating simply the main divisions of the literary map of the year, and its more important or more noticeable centers of activity. Let us premise, also, that the border land between English and American literature is in some places vaguely defined, and occupied by stragglers whom it is not always easy to fix where they belong. Mr. James, for example—is he an ornament of American letters or of English? And Mr. R. L. Stevenson, whose home is England, who camps out in the Adirondacks, and who writes with English ink under an American copyright—where is his professional domicile?

Lord Tennyson, for the year 1887, has rested on his laurels, which some say have faded. Now nearly eighty, the laureate's bough seems to have about ceased bearing, and we are left to enjoy the fruits of his earlier years. Mr. Browning, who has just turned the third quarter of his century, has given us the—uncouth, shall we call them? but strong and vivid "Parleyings with Certain People of Importance in their Day;" Lord Lytton has published a volume of "Legends and other Poems;" Mr. Swinburne has "done some poetry" for the magazines, one fragment of which was lately cabled to a New York paper; Edwin Arnold signalizes the closing month of the year with a volume of oriental verse; Philip Bourke Marston's "Garden Secrets," and companion collection of "Stories," lie under the shadow of his untimely death; Mr. Stevenson has published a first volume of verse, and Mr. Wm. Morris has undertaken nothing more than a new translation of the "Odyssey" of Homer. In poetry this is all. Where is the once broad and glorious stream of English poesy? Narrowed and dried into insignificant proportions.

The English novelists—where, too, are they? We had almost said there are no English novelists in a year of grace which gives Mr. Rider Haggard's "She," "Jess," and "Allen Quatermain" the place of honor and the reward of largest circulation. Mr. Wilkie Collins's "Little Novels" is one of the titles of 1887, but where is the hand which wrote "The Woman in White" and "The Moonstone"? Mr. Wm. Black is represented by "Sabrina Zembra," Mr. R. D. Blackmore by "Springhaven," Mr. Thomas Hardy by "The Woodlanders," each a deterioration from past standards. Edna Lyall's "Knight Errant," Baring-Gould's "Red Spider," and "The Gaverocks," Grant Allen's "Beckoning Hand," Mr. Stevenson's "Merry Men," and other short stories, and Mr. Westbury's "Frederick Hazzleden," are the few chiefly notable works in the long list of current English fiction of the year. The rank and file of the novelists, who write for the circulating libraries, have been active and productive, but have given us little, if anything, to be remembered.

In literary biography two important and permanently valuable works are Dowden's "Shelley" and Colvin's "Keats," enough in themselves to redeem this department of the year's product and establish its claim to recognition. But besides these independent lives has been started the series of "Great Writers," to which Mr. Knight has contributed a sketch of "D. G. Rossetti," Mr. Hall Caine one of "Coleridge," and Mr. Marzials an admirable one of "Dickens." A "Shelley Primer" is one of the signs of the times. Charles Reade's "Memoir" has been compiled out of his Literary Remains, and Dr. Charles Mackay's "Through the Long Day" is an interesting retrospect of a busy literary life running through half a century. Lee's "Dorothy Wordsworth" and the "Coleorton Memorials" have thrown counter lights upon some of the distinguished figures and fascinating precincts of the literary life of the earlier half of the century. To Mr. George Saintsbury we are indebted for a history of "Elizabethan Literature," which reaches us only as we prepare this article.

The "Works of Edward Fitzgerald," "The Life and Writings" of the gifted Anne Gilchrist, and the authoritative "Life of Darwin," in two volumes, lie where literary biography leaves off and general biography begins; and we have next to mention the unimportant "Life of Agnes Strickland," the unpleasant if not scandalous "Life of Rosina, Lady Lytton," and Thomas Adolphus Trollope's autobiography "What I Remember." Ruskin has continued his "Praeterita," Laurence Oliphant has related "Episodes," and Mr. W. Beatty-Kingston has told of "Monarchs I Have Met." On the religious side the two noblest biographies of the year are Thomas Hughes's life of "Bishop Fraser" of Manchester, and Dawson's of "Bishop Hannington" of Central Africa. To "English Worthies" Mr. Mowbray Morris has added a sketch of "Claverhouse," and to "Famous Women" Miss A. Mary F. Robinson one of "Margaret of Angoulême." The irrepressible John Cordy Jeaffreson has published a two-volume "Historical Biography of Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson," and Archibald Ballantyne a one-volume "Political Biography of Lord Carteret." We append here Chase's "Chrysostom," Collette's "Cranmer," Lee's "Cardinal Pole," and Lupton's "Dean Colet;" and then by way of as sharp a contrast as possible Norman's "Corsairs of France," and the biographical volume in Laughton's "Studies in Naval History." Mr. Frith's entertaining autobiography is one of the last but best books of the year; and another is Armstrong's recension of Munz's "Raphael."

The completion of the Victorian Half-Century has given a special turn to history, and the writings on her Majesty's reign hold the first place. Mr. Thomas Humphrey Ward's two edited volumes on "The Reign of Queen Victoria" are an impressive compendium of the progress of Great Britain on all lines, during Victoria's fifty years. A "History of India under Queen Victoria" has come from Captain Trotter. A third part of the "Greville Memoirs" in two volumes is substantially a "Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria" from 1852 to 1860. The occasion has also been improved by Mr. Loftie for an interesting history of "Windsoor Castle," so closely associated with the British royal line, and by no fewer than three writers for new histories of England complete from the beginning, viz.: "A Concise History" by Rev. Sir J. W. Cox, "A Short History" by Cyril Ransome, and "A History for Beginners" by Arabella B. Buckley. Passing to sub-divisions of the general subject Hubert Hall has sketched "Society in the Elizabethan Age," Dr. S. R. Gardiner has brought out a first volume of his great "History of the Great Civil War," Mrs. Brown Delves Broughton has edited the journals of her grandmother Papendiek, assistant keeper of Queen Charlotte's wardrobe, and reader to her Majesty, for the sake of the light they throw on "Court and Private Life in the Time" of that lady; the University of Oxford has had two historians at work, Mr. Maxwell Lyte, Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records, and Warden Brodrick of Merton College, and "Scotland as it Was and Is" has been sketched by the Duke of Argyll, and the "Great Historic Families of Scotland" by James Taylor, each in two volumes. Mr. Lecky has got through a fifth and a sixth volume of his "History of England in the Eighteenth Century." Dr. E. A. Freeman has printed his Oxford (1885) lectures on "The Chief Periods of European History," and Dr. William Stubbs his eighteen Regius Professorship "Lectures on the Study of Mediæval and Modern History." After a long delay have appeared the third and fourth volumes of Mr. Creighton's "History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation." From Mr. J. A. Doyle have come "Vol. II," in two volumes, of his "English Colonies in America," and from Mr. George Hooper a masterly piece of military history in "The Campaign of Sedan."

The religious and theological list is slender, comprising as chief items Dr. Sayce's Hibbert "Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by the Religion of the Ancient Babylonians," Dr. Higgs's excellent account of "The Christian Platonists of Alexandria," Dr. Hatch's evolutionary if not revolutionary treatise on "The Growth of Church Institutions," Dr. Edwin A. Abbott's anti-supernatural dissection of the "Kernel and the Husk" in Christianity, Mr. Haweis's completed studies of "Christ and Christianity" in the interest of the new criticism, and Dr. Cheyne's scholarly monograph on "Job and Solomon." It is impossible to miss the fact that every one of these influential works is off the traditional lines of philosophy and interpretation, and that together they make a strong showing of the change of base which religion is slowly undergoing in these closing years of the nineteenth century.

For scientific literature we always look eagerly to England, but this year we find little of note. Mr. Herbert Spencer has published on "The Factors of Organic Evolution," and Mr. E. D. Cope on "The Origin of the Fittest;" that is about all on this subject. Mr. Norman Lockyer's "Chemistry of the Sun" is really a review of the growth of spectroscopy, but not as original and authentic as it ought to be. Sir Henry Roscoe's address before the British Association at Manchester in August is valuable as a partial review of scientific progress during the Victorian era. The official report of the "Scientific Results of the Voyage of H. M. S. Challenger" drags its slow length along; four volumes have appeared during the year, three on "Zoology" and one on "Botany." Jeans has written comprehensively for the first time on "Railway Problems in Different Countries," and Bucknall Smith practically on "Cable or Rope Traction as Applied to the Working of Street and other Railways," a treatise which ought to find large use in the United States. There have appeared a first part or volume of Fowler's "Coleoptera of the British Islands," a third of the Britton-Holland "Dictionary of Plant Names," and a seventeenth of Swainson's "Folk-lore and Provincial Names of British Birds."

In the essay, pure and simple, once so strong an ingredient in the composite English literary life, we recall nothing to speak of beyond Sir John Lubbock's "Pleasures of Life," Mr. Walter Pater's "Imaginary Portraits," and a second series of Mr. Augustine Birrell's charming "Obiter Dicta." Or we may add here Mr. Ruskin's "Hortus Inclusus," a book sui generis.

Along the line of special investigation appear Max Müller's "Science of Thought," Andrew Lang's "Myth, Ritual, and Religion," W. A. Clouston's "Popular Tales and Fictions," Rev. W. W. Skeat's "A Beginning of Principles of English Etymology," and Dr. Gaster's "Lectures on Græco-Slavonian Literature and its Relation to the Folk-lore of Europe during the Middle Ages." Upon an adjacent line stands Dr. Augustus Jessop's "Arcady," a unique and delightful social study of rural life in England. In Art and Architecture we have had two volumes on "The Castellated and Domestic Architectures of Scotland from the 12th to the 18th Century," by Macgibbon and Ross, a collection of "Impressions from Copper-plates and Wood-blocks engraved in the Bewick Workshop," edited by Boyd, an illustrated description of "Ornamental Interiors, Ancient and Modern," by Smith, and a fascinating "History of Miniature Art" by Propert; in Music an elaborate illustrated "History of Musical Instruments" by Hipkins, and "Lectures on Musical Analysis" by Banister; in numismatics two works on Greek coins, one a "Manual" by Head, the other a "Catalogue" by Percy Gardner; and a new and desirable edition of Dr. Doran's "Annals of the Stage."

Under Travels and Description the list is long and rich, but our limits will restrict us to a few titles only. In point of scholarship the first place belongs easily to Mr. Jackson's "Dalmatia, the Quarnero, and Istria," and in that of grace and personal interest to the late Mrs. Craik's "Unknown Country," and Mr. Hamerton's "Såone," side by side. A unique narrative is that of Mr. Riley of his and Mr. Owens's visit to "Athos, the Mountain of the Monks;" with Mr. Butler we have tasted "Court Life in Egypt," with Mr. Laurence Oliphant "Life in Modern Palestine," as seen at Haifa, under the shadow of Mt. Carmel, and as first described in letters to the New York Sun, and with Mr. Cecil Torr we have explored "Rhodes in Modern Times." South Africa in various aspects has been touched by three writers, Theal, Fielden, and MacKinnon; South American provinces by two, Rumbold and Simson. Capt. S. P. Oliver, R.A., has given us in two encyclopædic volumes an exhaustive exposition of "Madagascar." Chalmers, Guillemard, and Churchward have written respectively of New Guinea, Formosa, and the Navigator Islands.

India.

One sixth of the world's population, as it is generally computed, has its home in the peninsula of India. It is only within the last few decades that the Western world has begun to comprehend this fact. The magnitude of the statement is perhaps a sufficient apology for this slowness in taking it in. A country which, divided into states of the size of New York, would give us thirty such states, and which contains fifty times the population of the Empire State, is worthy of the notice of the civilized world. Hitherto to American view it has loomed up in the distance like an immense mountain range—its own Himalayan heights, for example, on its northeastern border. But commerce and philanthropy are uniting their efforts to bring this mass of humanity to the notice of Europe and America, and with a good degree of success.

The literature of India is made up of ancient and modern; the ancient very ancient, and the modern very modern.

Modern literature in India has mostly sprung up since western civilization began to make its influence felt in the country. Some have said there is nothing yet worthy of the name of literature. But a beginning must always precede a vigorous growth and full fruitage. Dr. Hunter asserts that "India is now one of the most rapidly progressive countries of the earth." And in this age of the world it is surely impossible to progress rapidly without some considerable attention to books old and new. Most of the valuable books which India now uses came from abroad. But there are several thousand new publications issued annually from the presses of India. Looking through an official report of "books printed in the Bombay Presidency during the quarter ending June 30, 1887," the writer finds a total of 404 books and 44 periodicals. Of the books, 18 were in the English language, 95 in Mārāthi, 132 in Guzarāthi (the language of the Pārsis), 36 in Urdu, 34 in Sanskrit; then a few in Hindi, Canarese, Persian, and Arabic; also some bi-lingual, tri-lingual, etc. As there are over 400 new publications in one quarter of the year, there would probably be not less than 1,600 during the year; and this in the Bombay Presidency alone. Dr. Hunter says that in 1882 (five years ago) "the number of registered publications for the year in all India was 6,198. Of these 720 were translations, the rest were original works, or new editions of the original." It is to be noticed in the official list that more than one half are small books or tracts of less than fifty pages; and only about one fourth of them have 100 pages or more. Many of them are reprints or translations from the Sanskrit of parts of the Vedas and Purāns, the old Hindu Shāstras.

First in importance among the publications of the year for India (though not in the official list, because it was printed in London) is the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," by Dr. Hunter, already referred to above. This work consists of eleven 8vo volumes issued (and two or three more are promised), containing each from 450 to 550 pages. The subjects are arranged in alphabetical order, and each province, city, town, river, mountain, or locality receives due notice in proportion to its relative importance. It is a complete thesaurus of information in regard to the history, population, productions, and other statistics of interest of all parts of the country. Many years have been spent in collecting the materials for this work; and as Dr. Hunter had received an official appointment and was carrying on the work under instructions from Government, he had the assistance of the local authorities in securing accurate statistics, and full information in all the various departments to be reported upon. Vol. 6 of the series takes the single word "India," and gives in 747 pages a succinct view of the whole country, including its physical aspects; the origin of the different races, languages, religions; the zoölogy, mineralogy, botany, trade, and history of the whole peninsula. No one to whom this work is accessible has any longer an excuse for being ignorant of India.

In most of the large cities of India there are daily and weekly papers and magazines, English and vernacular, secular and religious, which discuss the political, social, and religious problems of the day as in other countries. Many of these discussions are called up by the peculiar character of the social questions which now agitate the people. Education and reform are two great words in India; and though not one tenth of the population can read, nine tenths of them can hear, and talk, and discuss that of which they know almost nothing. As India is under foreign rulers, naturally much of the current vernacular literature is tinged with criticism of governmental action or inaction. At times these criticisms become very severe, bordering on disloyalty. But during the present year of jubilee for her Majesty, the "Empress of India," numerous loyal addresses of congratulation have been forwarded from the large cities and native states; and several of the princes have visited England to pay their respects in person to the sovereign of the paramount power.

Educational matters are progressing, but immense strides are yet to be made before India will become a nation of readers. Just now much attention is given to the education of female physicians. The Governor-General's wife, Lady Dufferin, has made a "jubilee collection" for the fund which bears her name, and is designed to provide educated medical women for their own sex in India. The amount of the jubilee collection is Rs 479,465. * Pundita Ramabai in America is raising a fund to provide a home and education for high-caste Hindu widows. Her plans are freely discussed in the papers, and as usual many are ready to say it can never succeed. Orthodox Hindus say the widows will not be found ready to leave their homes, and place themselves under instruction in such an institution. But Orthodox Hinduism is already at a discount with many natives, and as Christianity is better understood it will be more and more trusted, and Christian institutions will be chosen because they show better results. Said an intelligent Brahman teacher to the writer, once, after visiting the mission schools and seeing the cleanliness, order, and progress of the pupils, "We can have nothing like this in our schools, and the reason is that yours is a work of love, while ours is the work of hirelings." Hindu widows will find out that Pundita Ramabai's home is the work of love, and they will trust her and be drawn to her.

Much might be said of what the Bible society, the tract societies, and missionary societies are doing to provide a pure Christian literature for India. But this is a large subject, and would of itself furnish material for another article.

* Equals $165,070. At the present rate of exchange the rupee is worth about 35 cents.

Italy.

The literary activity of Italy cannot be called anything else than a ferment. The present year has not been less fecund than 1886, and in 1886 more than eleven thousand works were issued from the Italian press. Even Sicily boasted of producing 652—more than a quarter as many as were published in Lombardy. It has been a great year for the professors. Apparently every professor in every Italian college has said to his soul: "My soul, let us sit down and write a book." They have accordingly rummaged dusty archives and brought to light forgotten chroniclers, and written erudite introductions to mediæval poets, and exercised all their ingenuity to discover some new or old thing for a text. Naturally the majority of ten thousand volumes are ephemeral, and it is no loss that the "Literary World" cannot even mention a tithe of the number. The Italians themselves do not patronize their best workers as they ought. Has it not been said of Carlo Lozzi's monumental "Biblioteca storica della antica e nuova Italia" that such a work would have been received in Germany con entusiasmo by a whole legione di dotti e di eruditi, while in Italy it has met with scant success? And the critic is moved to exclaim mournfully, tale è il destino dei migliori autori nostri, such is the fate of our best authors! It is nevertheless interesting to note how in the case of Italy and Germany a reciprocity of literary interest has sprung up, or rather the Tedesco and the Toscano, who once flamed up on contact, now work together as peaceably as the traditional lion and lamb. The Alps have been bored in more senses than one by the subnivean tunnels.

A subject that has attracted Germans and Italians alike for many years is the populations of German origin on the Italian slope of the Alps. A recent work on that somewhat intricate subject is Professor Arturo Galanti's "I Tedeschi sul versante meridionale delle Alpi." The author examines the various hypotheses that have been advanced to account for these settlements, and he goes to some length to confute a Tyrolean historian who argued that a part of Lombardy and Piedmont was ever an ethnical portion of Germany. Carlo Combi has written an enthusiastic and even loving history of his native Istria, whose manners and customs he understands perhaps better than any Italian.

Pietro Feo has brought out a large volume of 500 pages giving the "Narrazione storica e militare" of Alessandro Farnese, duca di Parma, from documentary material found in abundance in Parma, Naples, and Simancas. It is a work highly praised for its style and treatment. Col. Carlo Buffa di Perrero has written a critical and original study of Carlo Emanuele III di Savoia and his famous defense of the Alps in the campaign of 1744. This campaign was one of the great triumphs of the Piedmont army, and Col. di Perrero succeeds in investing it with new interest.

Achille Dina has searched the archives of Milan and Florence for letters and other documents relating to Ludovico il Moro, the fourth son of the Florentine Duca Francesco. His brothers were born before Francesco became Duke, but Ludovico was porfirigenito. In 1464 when he was only thirteen, his father purposed making him captain in an armed expedition. Many of his letters are preserved, and the details that he gives of his visit to relatives in 1466 give a most entertaining picture of a princely boy and the manners of a provincial city four hundred years ago.

Fedele Savio also has made use of unedited documents in writing about the Marchese Guglielmo di Monferrato, who was one of the most influential men in Lombard politics at the time of the Emperor Frederic Barbarossa. Professor Gaetano Capasso has gathered into one volume three biographical essays on Antonio Jerocades of Calabria ("un Abate Massone del Secolo XVIII"), on Vincenzo de Filippis ("un Ministro della Repubblica parthenopia"), and on Gregorio Ararici ("un canonico letterato e patriota"). All three exhibit careful historical study.

Professor Vito Cusumano has made use of a mass of unedited documents in preparing a history of the private banks of Sicily. The work promises to be of great scope, and will be very complete in its treatment. In the volume recently published the professor gives some interesting facts concerning the industries, commerce, and monetary circulation of Sicily, and he shows the financial operations of the private bankers in the XIV, XV, and XVI centuries. Isidoro del Lungo has published the third volume of his "Dino Compagni e la sua cronaca," a work which has received the highest praise for its understanding of Florentine history in the sixteenth century. It contains a thorough investigation into the authenticity of the codex of the much-disputed chronicle. The same author has been at work during the past year on the "Cronaca di Donato Velluti" (1300-1370).

The celebration of the eight hundredth anniversary of the University and Law School of Bologna will occur next year and the approaching event has called forth one or two notable works. Corrado Ricci has written of the origin of the "Studio bolognese" and Italian law in the middle ages. Carlo Malagola has searched State documents as a basis for his work on the rector of the ancient Law School ("I Rettori nell'antico Studio e nella moderna Università di Bologna"). In the thirteenth century the two great parties, ultramontana or foreign, and citramontana or national, were balanced in the "Studio" and these formed what were called Nazione. They elected the rector. In 1262 the Nazione in the ultramontana party amounted to thirteen; sixty-seven years later they had increased to sixteen. The citramontanes were Rome, Tuscany, and Lombardy. This division lasted till 1612. In that year a change was made and the "Studio" was divided into two new parties—la ultramontana and la ultramarina. In the sixteenth century it was already becoming impossible to find any one willing to accept the annoyances and bear the responsibility of the rectorship, and in that century the University began to decline—a decline which only recently has been arrested. There is no doubt that the coming anniversary will tend to give éclat to an institution which dates back to such a hoary old.

Prof. Iginio Gentile of Padua has published an important work on the Emperor Tiberius ("L'imperatore Tiberio secondo la moderna critica storica"). He gives a rigid examination of the testimony of the Emperor's contemporaries and of the writers who lived in the years succeeding, and then he weighs the evidence and elaborates on the difference between the Tiberius of tradition and the Tiberius of fact. Giuseppe Stocchi has published a history of the first war of the Romans in Mesopotamia ("La prima Guerra dei Romani nella Mesopotamia"). He follows the fortunes of Marcus Crassus till he fell by the hands of the Parthians. The author almost incontestably fixes the date of the Crassus expedition into Asia as having taken place between July 699 and June 700, corresponding to 54 B.C.

Prof. Bertolini has been working diligently on his "History of the Italian Renaissance," which is published with illustrations by Matania. Count Bettoni has written an account of the Italians in the Hungarian war of 1848-9. Doctor Cesare Bertolini has made a full and complete study of oaths in private Roman law ("Il Giuramento nel Diritto privato romano"), and the work is no less interesting as history than in its author's application to present day necessities. The same indefatigable and prolific young author has also contributed to the history of the constitution of ancient Rome in his "I 'celeres' ed il 'tribunus Celerum.'" Of curious and rather painful interest is Ettore Natale's "Il Ghetto di Roma," which contains the result of long and patient study, and is "a pitiful story of abuses, miseries, and persecutions." Doctor Antonio Longo has published the part of an elaborate study of "La Mancipatio," in which he goes back to the origins of ancient law. The work, however, has been severely criticized for its conclusions.

Prof. Giulio Salvatore del Vecchio has heaped up facts and observations from which to draw a moral in his treatise on the family as regards society and the social problem ("La famiglia rispetto alla Società Civile e al problema sociale").

Prof. Emilio Costa has collected under the title "Spigolature Storiche e Letterarie" seven of his magazine articles. Among them are included "Maura Lucenia Farnese," based on archive documents, and "Le Nozze del Duca Ranuccio I Farnese," with Margherita Aldolrandini. The Duke's marriage took place in 1600. Prof. Antonio Zardo, under the title "Il Petrarca e i Carraresi," describes the relationship between the poet and Jacopo II and Francesco il Vecchio. He also describes the poet's sojourn at Padua.

Eugenio Checchi has written a biographical study of the composer Verdi under the title "Guiseppe Verdi: il Genio e le Opere." Professor Antonio Favaro has continued his labors on the life of Galileo. Pasquale d'Ercole, professor in Turin, has written a study of the works of the philosopher Pietro Ceretti, to which he has prefixed a biographical sketch. Ceretti is scarcely known outside of Italy, yet he is regarded as one of the most "robust and independent" thinkers of the day. He was born in 1823 and died in 1884. He was a disciple of Hegel. His great work is a Latin treatise of three volumes of 2,000 pages each, entitled "Pasaelogicis specimen." The translation of this treatise on logic which some of his admirers have undertaken will be in eight octavo volumes. Andrea Armetes has brought out a study of Democracy and Finance ("La Democrazia e la Finanza: Intemperanze e Freni"). He considers that the continual increase of public debts in modern states is an abnormal and pathological symptom due principally to political causes, to the influence of democracy and the flow of parliamentarianism; he believes that the remedy is to be found in the reform of administrative institutions and in fresh constitutional ordinances.

Among the recent books of biography may be mentioned Pietro Desiderio Pasolini's "Memorie di Guiseppe Pasolini." Guiseppe was one of the great men of the Italian risorgimento, and a most interesting and striking contrast to his friend and collaborer D'Ayola, whose memoirs were published not long since. D'Ayola was the fighter, Pasolini the diplomat; D'Ayola was bold, impetuous, almost rash; Pasolini prudent, calm, and calculating; yet both are fairly to be regarded, as has been well said, heroes: son due nobili figure di patriotti.

In this connection it will be interesting to note that Chiola has just published the sixth volume of the Count Cavour's letters edite ed inedite. Giovanni Rizzi has edited and published the letters of Giulio Carcano to his family and friends ("Lettere di G. C. alla Famiglia ed agli Amici, 1827-1884"). Carcano was regarded as a most genial and delightful man, and this volume shows him at his best. Under the head of biography may be grouped two widely different books. One is Paolo Trombetta's "Donatello" illustrated with twenty-seven phototypes, treating of one of the great periods of Italian art; the other is the autobiography of the great actor, Ernesto Rossi ("Quarant' Anni di Vita Artistica"), which gives a picture of Italian drama during the past forty years. To these may be added for convenience G. P. Pasano's "Dizionario di Opere Anonime e Pseudonime," a continuation of, or rather supplement to, that of Milzi.

In philosophy we must mention Luigi Ferri's careful study of the Foundation of Realism ("Il Fenomeno Sensibile, e la Percezione Esteriore"). It gives a remarkable analysis of Plato and Aristotle. Professor Giuseppe Toniolo has made an interesting study of "Scolastica ed Umanismo" in the economical doctrines at the time of the Renaissance in Tuscany, describing with great fullness the two currents of thought, scholastic and theological on the one hand, humanitarian and rational on the other, which at that time were contending together. Mario Mancini and Ugo Galeotti have prepared a practical manual, on philosophical principles, of parliamentary usages ("Norme ed Usi del Parlamento Italiano"). The first part includes a description of the constitution of the two parliamentary chambers, the functions and prerogatives of Parliament; the second treats of the executive power, the crown, and the cabinet. The work was greatly needed and is highly praised. Generous praise has been given also to Professor Augusto Graziani's "Sulla Teoria Generale del Profitto" (On the General Theory of Profit). Carlo Cattaneo, the great political economist, has just published a volume containing portions of a history of Lombardy. Professor Francesco Torraca has issued the third and last volume of his "Manuale della Letteratura Italiana," containing the writers of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries. It is curious, however, that the perhaps extant history of Italian literature is written in Hungarian and published at Budapest.

The "Divina Commedia" of Dante has of course received its share of attention during the year. Among the works published on this inexhaustible subject may be mentioned the late Baron Gaetano Balsano's posthumous treatise, "Sullo Scopo e sull' andamento della Divina Commedia." The author argues that Dante had in mind the political regeneration of Italy rather than any specific moral idea. Adolfo Bartoli has published the sixth volume of his great history of Italian literature, which covers the Divine Comedy and Dante. The barest facts must be given in regard to the publications in the domain of fiction and poetry during the year.

Orazio Grandi has published a series of scenes and dialogues under the title "La Presenza del Nume" (The Presence of the Deity), in which he gives simple, plain, but affecting touches of nature without attempting psychological analysis.

G. Gloria has issued four novelle under the title "Spicci d'Amore" (Displays of Love). One of them is a remarkable study of a poor lad epileptic by inheritance, who puts an end to his life, believing that he is incurable.

Signora Speratz, who writes under the pseudonym of Bruno Sperani, has published "Numeri e Sogni," in which she pleasingly contrasts the idealism of life with its reality. Anto Guilio Barrili has published "Il Merlo Bianco" (The White Blackbird). The hero of his story is the traditional sailor with a sweetheart in every port. He is about to be married, and the bianco merlo carries him away to strange and fascinating adventures. He has also written three other stories: "Il Dentino," "Occhio di Sole," and "Raggio di Luna." G. Verga is of the race of realists, and his remarkable "Vagabondaggio" must not be forgotten. Enrico Castelnovo is making a great success with his "Filippo Bosini, Jr."

Michaele Lessona's "Sigaretta" is full of cleverness and wit. The "Piccola Bibliotica" continually adds new numbers. Its editors are Paolo Mantegazza (science), Ruggero Bonghi (history, politics, and sociology), and A. G. Barrili (fiction). Its selections, now numbering thirty or more, are universally good. One of the latest additions is Dora D'Istria's "Gli eroi della Rumenia" (The Heroes of Roumania).

In poetical literature we must mention Dr. Demetrio Ferrari's "History of the Italian Sonnet" ("Storia del Sonetto Italiano"), which contains an anthology beginning with Pier delle Vigne and ending with Antonio Fogazzaro. Geosué Carducci furnishes an introductory al sonetto. The same Carducci has published his "Nuove Rime," which have been received with extraordinary favor. Pasquale Papa, a young poet, has issued a volume of "Madrigali," which de Gubernatis, who furnishes a proemio, calls "Fiori di Prato e di Campi" (Flowers of Field and Meadow). Guiseppi Fracaroli, the translator of Pindar, has recently published a volume of "Odi" which are notable for their classic spirit. Among them are the odes on the sixth centennial of the Sicilian Vespers and the first anniversary of the death of Giuseppe Garibaldi. We must also mention the "Carmi" of Giovanni Franciosi, which it has been said ought to give the author "a separate and very honorable place on the contemporary Parnassus."

Japan.

The history of literature in this country during the past twelve months presents numerous features of interest. The number of new books and periodicals published has been unusually large. In the month of January alone copyright certificates were issued to no less than 156 authors, and there were 182 books published without a copyright. The new magazines that made their appearance during the first half of the year amounted to 71.

This luxuriant growth of itself is no sign of true literary progress. For in Japan, as elsewhere, the gifted and the learned among authors are few in comparison to the herd of mercenaries who fill the book shelves with second-rate productions. It is gratifying to observe that Japanese scholars themselves are beginning to feel the need of checking this wild growth by the application of a process of weeding and pruning. So deeply impressed are these scholars with the importance of establishing and maintaining a high standard of authorship that they have founded a school of critics, whose duty it is to pronounce on the merits of each new book or periodical as it appears. The monthly magazine which contains these criticisms is known as the "Shuppan Geppyō." The first number was published in August last. The facilities for puffing inferior works in this country are numerous. Where the author is unknown it is deemed sufficient to ask a government official, irrespective of his literary qualifications, to give an air of importance to the book by writing a preface, or to state that some well-known man has examined its contents. Numbers of books are purchased owing to the status of the authors of their prefaces rather than to the value of the works themselves.

Among the useful and carefully prepared volumes that have appeared during the year, some call for a special notice. Mr. Watanabe On has published a revised edition of a well-known Chinese dictionary called the "Kōki-jiten." The book has occupied seven years in preparation and contains over 4,000 corrections. The "Nihon-Tsugan," by Sugiura Jugo and several assistants, is a work which, when complete, ought to prove a valuable addition to historical literature. The aim of the authors is to write a history of the Japanese people rather than of their rulers, to trace the progress of art and industry rather than compile a dry record of battles and political intrigues. "Japanese Ethics," by Nishimura Shigeki, is a valuable compendium on Confucian ethics, "The Youth of New Japan," and "The Japan of the Future," by Tokutomi Ichirō, irrespective of the value of the theories propounded, owing to the grace and verve with which they are written, have won for their author, hitherto unknown, a high reputation. "A Strange Interview with a Beautiful Woman," by Shiba Shiro, a work of fiction, is evidently the product of a vivid imagination, and is a pleasing result of the attention which certain scholars have been giving to the cultivation of this faculty. "Sights of Japan," by Sekitoku, contains a short history of the spirit of enterprise which actuated the Japanese of mediæval times prior to the crushing and cramping influence of the Tokugawa regime.

Among translations, Sully's "Psychology" by Ariga, and Tait's "Unseen Universe" by Inaba, may be noticed.

Among new magazines that have appeared during the year several have established their claim to be ranked among the first-class literature of the day. The "Kokka-gakkai" magazine, started by the energetic and popular President of the University, contains from month to month a number of well-written articles on general politics. The "Koku-min-no-toms" is another political magazine whose style and breadth of view have already won for it a wide circulation. The "Koku-min-no-Kyoiku," as its title indicates, confines itself to the discussion of education and kindred subjects. The magazine has made an excellent start and promises to prove an organ of wide influence in the country. The "Japanese Philosophical Society's Magazine" has filled up a gap in periodical literature that has been long felt. The society has been in existence about three years, but it was not until the spring of this year that it was in a position to make arrangements for giving publicity to its transactions. Under the presidency of Mr. Kato Hiroyuki, the late President of the University, and the vice-presidency of Professor Toyama, the society bids fair to hold a prominent position among learned societies.

To come to magazine articles. Professors Hozumi and Yatabe have published two articles in the "Tōyogakugei-zasshi," containing sound advice to women. The former gentleman has written in the same magazine on "Suicide," furnishing a large amount of interesting statistics, showing the extent and the character of the practice in various countries. Mr. Suocoka, Professor of Law in the University, by comparing the civil services of England, France, Germany, and Austria, furnishes his fellow countrymen with a high standard of attainment in government service and urges them to strive to reach it. Professor Toyama still continues to propound his favorite and well-known theory bearing on the adoption of Christianity by the Japanese. In an article published in several magazines he recommends the missionaries to found high-class schools as proselytizing agencies. It is an open secret that the Professor is no believer in Christianity himself, and that he attaches no importance whatever to the acceptance of its dogmas. It is solely for the civilizing and refining influence that is found in conjunction with a profession of the Christian faith that he wishes to see it professed if not believed here. Professor Toyama is the author of a long article on "Adoption," as practiced in the West, lately published. The pages of the "Rikugōzasshi," a Christian organ, contain some valuable articles on subjects of general interest. Mr. Takahashi Gorō, a most voluminous writer, propounds in the May number of that journal a new theory on women's rights. He is of opinion that the position of women in Japan in the past, taken in connection with that of men, has not been so disadvantageous as it is usually represented by modern writers on the subject to be; that the arbitrariness and despotism of men and the servility of women have alike been exaggerated. The "Rikugōzasshi" by no means confines itself to the exposition of dogmatic Christianity. Philosophy, general literature, and sometimes science furnish topics for discussion; hence it obtains a wide circle of readers. The "Japanese Philosophical Society's Magazine" publishes the papers read before the society by its members. Mr. Kano in an article on "Utilitarianism" points out, what has often been pointed out before, that there is a certain amount of indefiniteness in the ethical standard of utilitarians owing to different meanings being attached to the terms pleasure and pain, happiness and misery, and owing to the impossibility of getting people to agree as to what constitutes happiness. Mr. Kano remarks, however, that its capability of expansion, development, and practical application renders the utilitarian ethical system eminently adapted to meet the requirements of an age of progress. Mr. Kato Hiroyuki, in a paper entitled "Mankind," maintains that self-interest, or egoism, in one form or other, has been the guiding principle of nations and individuals in all times, that what is called civilization has sprung from it, and that altruism is only one of the forms in which it manifests itself. It is superfluous to observe that Mr. Kato understands the word self in a very wide sense as including one's family, friends, and country. Mr. Kato is of opinion that there is no such thing as absolute disinterestedness in the world.

In a paper on Buddhism, Mr. Tatsumi Kojiro takes the same ground in reference to Buddhism as Mr. Toyama takes in reference to Christianity, arguing that its perpetuity in the country depends upon the general enlightenment and learning of its teachers and not on the value of its dogmas — its adjuncts and not its doctrines will decide its fate. This is the view that a large majority of Japanese scholars entertain in reference to all religious creeds. To their claims to supernatural origin they are supremely indifferent; to the value of the influences that accompany their propagation and acceptance, keenly alive. In a paper entitled "Urgent Philosophical Questions in Japan," Mr. Walter Denning urges the members of the Philosophical Society to leave the discussion of purely abstract and metaphysical subjects to others, and expend all their energies in discussing to what extent and in what way the civilization of the West may be best amalgamated with the already existing civilization of Japan.

The Japanese Education Society's journal contains among others a paper by Professor Chamberlain on "Traces of the Aino Language Found in Japanese Place Names;" a discourse on Christianity by Dr. Verbeck, under the title of "The Importance of Education;" a paper on "The Standard of Morality" by Mr. W. Denning; and an article on "How to Obtain Good Middle-School Teachers" by Dr. Hansknecht.

This review would not be complete without a brief notice of English works bearing on Japan and the Japanese that have been published in Japan during the year.

Professor Chamberlain's valuable book on the Ainos, which includes an Aino grammar by Mr. J. Batchelor, deserves to be mentioned first among these. Professor Chamberlain has also given us "A Series of Japanese Fairy Tales," told in English. These have been published by the Kobumsha. This bookseller has "A Series of Aino Fairy Tales" by the same author in the press. Both sets of tales are quaintly and tastefully illustrated and told in a very attractive manner. They are having a wide circulation in both America and England. A series of tales or novelettes, translated from the Japanese by Mr. Walter Denning, entitled "Japan in Days of Yore," is in course of publication. The first volume of the series, entitled "Human Nature in a Variety of Aspects," has already appeared, and a second will be out this month.

The Asiatic Society of Japan has been well supplied with papers on learned subjects. We subjoin a list of such as have been read since the review of last year was published: "The 'Yellow' Languages," by E. H. Parker; "The Gakushikain" (The Literary Institute of Japan), by W. Denning; "The Manchus," by E. H. Parker; "The Connection of Japanese with the Adjacent Continental Languages," by J. Edkins, D.D.; "On Maritime Enterprise in Japan," by H. A. C. Bonar; "An Aino Bear Hunt," by B. H. Chamberlain; "The Feudal System in Japan under the Tokugawa Shōguns," by J. H. Gubbins; "Persian Elements in Japanese Legends," by J. Edkins, D.D.; "On Rodriguez's System of Transliteration," by B. H. Chamberlain; "On the Aino Term Karnui," by J. Batchelor.

The past year has witnessed the publication of a great many books written in English by Japanese and allowed to go through the press in their unrevised state. Two works of this kind, "Pictorial Descriptions of the Famous Places in Tokyo" and "Pictures of a Hundred Eminent Japanese, Ancient and Modern," received in the columns of "The Japan Mail" a few weeks ago no severer handling than the execrable English in which they are written called for. There are hundreds of Japanese who have so high an opinion of their own powers as to deem it beneath them to submit their compositions in a foreign tongue to the eye of a competent foreign judge; hence the bookstalls swarm with volumes written in a style that for violation of all the laws of English grammar is not to be surpassed anywhere.

Norway.

The great writers of Norway seem to be taking a rest from their literary labors. From the pen of Henrik Ibsen we have not had a single line during the past twelvemonth. He still resides in Munich, but spent about three months of the summer visiting Denmark and Sweden. Strangely enough he avoided Norway. In Sweden banquettes were given him, at which he made short speeches, and, judging from these, it would appear that he is about to make a new departure in his literary career. It is believed by many that he is going to leave the smooth-beaten track of the realists and return to the romantic school of literature. He spent a few days in Copenhagen, and here the writer had the pleasure of dining with the great dramatist. One of his earlier dramas, entitled "Pillars of Society," is soon to be published by Swan, Sonnenschein & Co., London, the translation to be edited by Prof. R. B. Anderson, the United States Minister to Denmark.

Björnstjerne Björnson's only work during the past year is a revision of his drama "A Glove." After a five years' residence in Paris he left that city in the beginning of November, 1887, and intends henceforth to reside permanently in Norway. He is still on his way home, and is delivering lectures to crowded houses in Denmark and Sweden on the subject of chastity. During the summer there has been a spirited controversy between him and Dr. Georg Brandes on this delicate subject. In Copenhagen Björnson's lecture filled the largest hall to overflowing. He has taken a stand for the absolute purity of both men and women.

From Alex. Kjelland we have two works — a drama, "Betty's Guardian," and a story, "St. John's Festivities." Neither seems to be up to the high-water mark of his previous productions. The Norwegian Parliament last March refused him a national salary as author, and the result was that Björnson also renounced the salary he has been receiving these many years. The loss has been fully made up to both by private subscriptions among their friends. For Christmas, 1886, Jonas Lie published a story called "The Commander's Daughter," and for Christmas, 1887, we have from him a new story, "A Companionship" (Et Samliv). While Björnson is abandoning the Zola school, Lie gradually approaches the naturalists, we are sorry to say. The two worst outgrowths of Zolaism in Norway are Hans Jæger and Christian Krohg, both of whom have published novels describing the lowest life imaginable, but fortunately the government stepped in and confiscated both, besides fining Krohg and sending Jæger to prison. Arne Garborg is a gifted writer, but his last book, "Mannfolk," is so indecent that it, too, deserved confiscation. Amalie Skram, besides writing a pamphlet in defense of Christian Krohg, has herself written two stories, one called "Sjur Gabriel," and the other "Two Friends." She does not distinguish herself in either.

(From Kristofer Janson, the poet-preacher in Minneapolis, we have a charming volume containing two stories of Norse life in America. One has for its background the Scandinavian regiment (the 15th Wisconsin) which took part in our civil war. His wife, Drude Janson, has also made her début as an author and her first book is called "A Young Girl." Minneapolis is the chief scene of the story, which is highly praised by her talented husband. The book is a plea for the rights of her sex.)

John Paulsen has reaped another literary failure in his "A Woman of the Future," which has made little or no impression. L. Dilling's clever volume entitled "Begavet" (Gifted) is in fact an autobiography, but ranks well up as a popular work. Magdalene Thoresen's "Pictures from the Land of the Midnight Sun" has been universally well received by the press, and contains vivid pictures of life as she found it in the far north. The prolific "Marie" has added one more volume to her long series of stories for unsophisticated readers. Her last is called "Drifting Clouds," and, like her others, is of the kind usually found in Sunday-school libraries. Its literary merit may be given at null. Of a higher grade is C. Flood's "Strong Jansen," a romance based on fact. K. Glöersen has published a collection of short stories, and a new star has risen in the Norwegian horizon in the person of Kristofer Kristofersen. This new author has given us two charming stories, one called "Lövspret" (Leafing) and the other "Rydningmænd" (Pioneers), both dealing with life in Norway. He bids fair to become the peer of Kjelland in psychological insight and fine descriptions. We would commend him to lovers of good literature. A drama, "A Forgotten One," has come from the pen of Th. Klavenäs, and a small volume of lyrics and satires from Th. Caspari, both prominent writers. The complete edition of the late A. Munch's works is about half published.

Passing now into other domains of literature we find Friis's "Dictionary of the Lappish Language" has been printed down to page 868, and Fritzner's "Dictionary of the Old Norse Language" has reached part II. Of Sars's famous history of Norway, the third volume is just out and the third part of the learned Prof. Bugge's "Researches in Northern Mythology" is daily expected. Dr. Winkel Horn's translation of R. B. Anderson's "Norse Mythology," announced last year, is just out and is furnished with a steel portrait and a short biography of the author. J. B. Halvorsen's monumental dictionary of Norway's authors has reached part 16, which ends with Guldberg. Two of Henry George's books have been translated, his "Social Problems" by H. Brække, and "Free Trade and Protection" by J. Sörensen. Old Chr. Tönsberg has reached part 17 of the third and last edition of his great work, "Norway Illustrated." The professor of Latin, J. P. Weise, who died a year ago, left several unpublished manuscripts, and of these two volumes have been issued, both dealing with the history of the Roman Empire. They reveal a world of learning and deserve to be translated into English. The report of the North Sea expedition, 1876-1878, progresses slowly but surely under the able direction of G. O. Sars, two parts having found daylight during the current year. K. Knudsen still struggles on with his reformation of the Norse tongue, this being split in three. The title of his last book is "Who Shall Win?" Our impression is that Knudsen himself will win. Rolfson and Jæger's "Norske Digtere fra Petter Dass til vore Dage" (Norwegian Poets from Petter Dass to our Days) is completed, and this able and elegant work has found hosts of readers. Mr. H. J. Barstad has published a book of no less than 586 pages on the defense of Bergen in 1801 and 1807-1814. From Prof. Dietrichsen we have an interesting little volume on the reform of fashions and clothes, and from C. J. Anker a volume of biographies of the Norwegian volunteers who took part in the Danish wars of 1848-50 and 1864. The new, enlarged edition of Kjær's dictionary of Norway's physicians from 1800-1886 is progressing well. Amund Helland has published three large volumes on mining. Albert Cammermeyer has published superb tourist maps of Norway, and Paulsen's large work containing stories from Norwegian history is completed. Prof. J. Lieblein, the distinguished Egyptologist, has given us in the German language an interesting and scholarly volume on the commerce and navigation on the Red Sea in ancient times, from Egyptian documents.

Finally we have to mention two works of which only the first parts have been issued, but both promise to become both interesting and important, and both are to be extensively illustrated. The one is Capt. Jacobsen's journeys to the northwest coast of North America in 1881-1883; the other is Dr. Carl Lumholtz's travels in Australia. It is called "Among Cannibals." The latter is to appear in German and English simultaneously with the original. Dr. Lumholtz has just returned from a four years' sojourn in the wilds of Australia.

Russia.

Two deaths and the fiftieth anniversary of a death have engrossed the attention of literary Russia during the past year, not to the exclusion of other topics, but somewhat predominantly.

The echoes of the Gogol celebration had not by any means died away when it was decided to have a new apotheosis of a greater than Gogol. Aleksandr Sergeyevitch Pushkin, it will be remembered, was killed at the early age of thirty-eight, while in the very prime of his powers and apparently about to make of his genius something better than imitations of Byron or even Shakespeare—killed in a wretched duel with Hekkeren-Dantes on Feb. 12, 1837. This anniversary has called forth numerous new editions of the poet's separate works as well as complete editions and biographies, and reminiscences and criticisms, and studies and review articles beyond number. The most important biography perhaps is that by A. M. Skabichevsky in Pavelenkof's new edition of Pushkin's works. Among other works which throw light on various periods of his activity may be mentioned Piotr Ustimovitch's "Memoirs" (Pamyati) of Feb. 12, 1837, and V. A. Yakovlev's "Recollections of Pushkin in the South of Russia." Archbishop Nikanof of Odessa delivered a brilliant discourse before the Novo-Rossky University on Feb. 13, and under the same auspices A. Kirpitchenkof treated of Pushkin as a European poet. A. I. Nezelonof was the chief speaker at the celebration at St. Petersburg, and Privat Docent P. O. Morozof discoursed on "Pushkin in Russian Criticism," and contributed an article on "Pushkin in Russian Literature" to the magazine Dyelo. Discourses by Y. K. Grot, I. N. Janof, V. P. Haevsky, and verses by N. Zotof were printed by the Imperial Alexandrovsky Lyceum. Other works suggested by the same event are V. Kliuchevsky's "Yevgéní Onyégín i yevó Predki" (Eugene Oniégin and his Predecessors) and Vladímir Vasilyevitch Nikolsky's "Idealui Pushkina" (Pushkin's Ideals). Readers of Russian will be glad to know that Stasiulevitch publishes an excellent cheap edition of Pushkin's complete works in one volume for a ruble and a half.

It is a poor year when Russia cannot find at least one lion of a century ago to hold a "jubilee" over. This year was the jubilee of the birth of the unfortunate poet K. N. Batiushkof, who, though he died as late as 1855, at the advanced age of eighty-eight, closed his literary career in the first quarter of this century. His latter days were clouded by mental disease. In memory of the 100th anniversary of his birth, his works have been for the first time collected and published with a biographical sketch by L. N. Maikof.

The past year has been rather prolific of new editions of the collected works of the great Russian writers. We may mention the complete edition of Y. P. Polonsky in ten handsome volumes and an accompanying volume containing a critical study of his poetry by Yevgéní Garshin. P. A. Yefremof has edited the new (6th) edition of Lermontof's works. The fifth edition of Danilevsky's works in six volumes and the ninth of Koltsof's poems show that the Russian public, though it is far behind that of other nations—1.5 books serving for each 100 inhabitants, while France has eight times as many and Italy almost the same—still tries to do its duty. And it is evidently endeavoring to improve; only recently the fourteenth edition of Count L. N. Tolstoi's "Pervaya russkaya kniga dlya Chteniya" (First Russian Reading-book) was published in Moscow, and the edition numbered 25,000 copies, while M. Volper's manual "Russkaya Ryetch" and his other two reading-books are published in editions of 20,000 each, and K. Ushinsky's Primer and Reading-book has 50,000 copies in its 77th edition.

To return to biography: inedited materials and the recollections of K. K. Zeidlitz have been used for the life of Zhukovsky, the gentle tutor of the Emperor Alexander II, ("Zhizn i Poeziya V. A. Zhukovskaya"). The volume contains a portrait and a fac-simile of Zhukovsky's writing, a preface to the new edition of his poems by P. A. Viskovatoi and a selection from his letters to Zeidlitz. N. Shenrok has added to the immense mass of Gogol literature his "Biograficheskiya Zamyetki" (Biographical Remarks), in which he gives a minute account of Gogol's life at school at Niezhin until 1831, when he went to St. Petersburg and first entered the public service.

V. Ostrogorsky and D. Semenof have written biographical sketches of Pirogof, Ushinsky and Baron Korff, whose lives were spent in promoting the cause of education in Russia. A work of national importance has been begun by S. A. Vengerof in his "Kritico-biograficheski Slovar russkikh Pisatelei i Ucheniukh" (Critico-biographical Dictionary of Russian Writers and Savants). The early parts scarcely get out of the underbrush of pseudonyms before the name of Sergei Aksakof is reached, and if the other great men of Russian literature and science are treated with proportional fullness the whole work will reach almost colossal proportions.

It is but a step from biography to necrology. The two deaths which have created the deepest impression have been those of the young Hebrew poet Nadson, and of the dictator Katkof. Semyon Yakolevitch Nadson was born in 1862; a short autobiographical sketch which appeared in the Viestnik Yevropai shows that his early life was full of privations and disappointments, but he struck out into a path of originality which amounted to positive genius. His lamentable death early in the year made all Russia mourn. The articles which it called forth have been reprinted in a volume, and the complete collection of his poems, including a number of posthumous works, has been received with great enthusiasm.

The death of Mikhail N. Katkof was undoubtedly felt as a relief. The man's personality was so pronounced, his energies were so imperious and so intensified by his very narrowness, that they were irresistible. Taking his position on the solid rock of Slavic unity, he wielded his journal, the Moskovskaya Vedomosti (Moscow Gazette), wholly in the interests of autocracy and thus secured an influence with the Emperor that was at one time paramount. When he died it was felt that one of the barriers to the revival of the liberal journal Golos ("the Voice") was removed.

Another signal loss to Russian literature was the death of Pavel Vasilyevitch Annenkov, which occurred on the 20th of March. He was born in 1811. His work was largely critical and biographical. His great work was "Aleksandr Sergeyevitch Pushkin i Aleksandrovskaya Epokhu" (Pushkin in the Alexandrine Epoch). This was published in 1874. In 1879 and 1881 followed his "Vospominaniya i Kriticheskiye Ocherki" (Recollections and Critical Sketches). The bibliography of his magazine articles is very long. Among his latest publications was a selection of letters written to him by the novelist Turgénief, whose intimate friend he was.

A considerable portion of the historical work of the year has been of semi-biographical character. Such, for instance, is A. A. Vasilchikov's Semeistvo Razumovskikh (The Razumovsky Family), the fourth volume of which appeared early in the year. It contains portraits of the Empress Elizabeth Petrovna, Count Alekséi Grigorevitch Ramumovsky, and his brother Count Kirill, the Countess Natalya Demyanovna Razumovskaya, and Prince Andrei Kirillovitch. The Razumovsky family were notable in Russian history. Prince Andrei, who is the principal character of the fourth volume, was for many years Russian ambassador at the Court of Vienna, and afterwards a member of the Holy Alliance. The work contains a great many very interesting particulars mined from the state archives. The special subject of the Holy Alliance has been ably treated by Prof. V. C. Nadler, the third volume of whose "Imperator Aleksandr I i ideya Svyaschennaya Soyusa" has made its appearance. The reign of Alexander I has found its historian in I. A. Galaktianov, whose work in two volumes was one of the events of the year. New editions of the admirable historical works of Kostomarov have appeared: Prof. Nadler has also published a brochure on the mythic element in history ("Mifichesky-element f istorii"). The work, however, has been criticised as promising much and giving little in spite of its scope.

P. A. Lavrof has published an account of Piotr II Petrovitch Négosh, the last vladik of Montenegro. Montenegro was long governed by a dignitary that absorbed all the temporal and spiritual powers of the state. Piotr Petrovitch after a short assumption of the duties of vladik went to St. Petersburg, where he engaged in literary activity until his death in 1851. Lavrof's book is especially devoted to his literary work.

N. Karéef has continued his researches into the history of the middle ages, while Prof. A. A. Inostrantsev of the University of St. Petersburg has gone back still further, and, basing his observations on the discoveries made in the vicinity of Lake Ládoga, has composed a valuable treatise entitled "Doistorichesky Chelovyék Kamennaya Vyéka" (Prehistoric Man of the Stone Age). The work is illustrated with 122 text cuts, two lithographs and twelve photographs.

A kindred work is Count Alekseï Bobrinsky's account of archæological discoveries in some Kurgans, or Tumuli, near Kiev. The work is entitled "Kurganui i Sluchainiui Arkheologicheskiya Nakhodki bliz Myestechka Smélui." The volume has a map of the government of Kiev and the little district of Smela, where the mounds are situated.

N. A. Polyevtkof has edited the third, fourth, and fifth volumes of the "Vologodsky Sbornik" published by the Statistical Committee of the Vologda government. The volumes contain much curious and valuable ethnographical material in the way of popular songs, superstitions, and practices.

K. Golovin has made a study of the village communities, "Selskaya Obschina i Literaturnye i Dyestvityelnosti," but his work is compared unfavorably as regards thoroughness with Keissler's "Zur Geschichte und Kritik des bäuerlichen Gemeindebesitzes in Russland." A. S. Prugavin has been investigating some of the religious movements of the Russian people, and has published the results in a volume entitled "Raskol o Sektanstvo" (The Raskol or Sectarianism).

In the domain of law we may mention Prof. N. S. Tagantsev's lectures on criminal law ("Lektzii po Ugolovnomu Pravu"), L. P. Roshkovsky's digest of civil law proceedings under the reign of Alexander II, with commentaries, etc., "Ustaf Grazhdanskaya Sudoproizvodstva," and D. A. Nosenko's "Ustaf Torgovui"—the laws of trade which relate to artisans and manufacturers.

One of the literary events of the year has been the reappearance of the great novelist J. A. Gontcharof, who after a long silence began a series of reminiscences of university life a half-century ago. Many good judges consider Gontcharof the second greatest of Russian novelists. Certainly "An Ordinary History," "Oblómov," and "Obriuf" may be safely considered typical examples of the great in fiction.

It is quite impossible to characterize all the works of fiction that have appeared during the last year. One of the most successful has been a volume of "Ocherki i Razskazui" (Sketches and Tales) by the talented Vladimir Korolenko.

A selection from these tales has just been published by T. Y. Crowell & Co., in a translation by Mrs. Aline Delano, who is a personal friend of the author. Mr. George Kennan intends to make Korolenko the subject of one of his Century Magazine articles during the coming year, and it is to be hoped that there will be sufficient interest to warrant Mrs. Delano in presenting the rest of the volume to American readers. It is said of Korolenko that in his descriptions of the forest "he is original even after Turgénief."

Another great novelist, A. K. Scheller, who writes under the name of A. Mikhailof, and is as yet entirely unknown outside of Russia, Germany, and Poland, has published several new works during the year: one is entitled "Bezdomniki" (The Homeless), in two volumes; another in one volume is entitled "Padenie" (Falling). Like Korolenko, Mikhailof is under police surveillance, but he has never yet been subjected to the miseries of Siberia. The seventh edition of Count L. N. Tolstoi's collected works in twelve volumes has appeared. The twelfth contains his powerful drama of illicit love, "Vlast Timui" (The Power of Evil or Darkness), a work which has been called "A Village Oedipous." The play was presented with great success on the stage but was shortly stopped by the police authorities. Count Tolstoi's present attitude has called forth an immense amount of comment in the form of books and magazine articles. The general tendency is toward rather severe criticism upon him, not as an artist, but as a philosopher and logician. A brochure of 234 pages containing a baker's dozen of critical sketches and remarks ("Graf L. N. Tolstoi Kak Khudozhnik i Myslitsel," Count L. N. Tolstoi as Artist and Thinker) by A. Skabichevsky, very fairly represents the attitude of the Russian literary world toward its greatest writer. There is also a valuable study of Count Tolstoi in Orest Miller's "Russkiye Pisateli Poslyé Gogolya" (Russian Writers Since Gogol), which has reached its third edition.

We may merely mention by name M. M. Filippov's "Ostap," an historical tale of the time of Khmielnitsky; Vladimir Mikhnevitch's "Peterburgskoyé Liéto," a collection of stories for the summer season; Maksim Bielinsky's "Povysti i Razskazui" (Stories and Tales), two volumes of which have been published under the pseudonym of J. Yasninsky; L. Shakovsky's historical romance "Pod Vlasti Tiviriya" (Under the Power of Tiberius); N. M. Syédelnikov's "Zhizn, chtó morskaya Puchina," which might be rendered as "The Abyss of Life;" E. N. Karnovitch's two historical tales, "Perepolokh f Peterburge" (Trouble in Petersburg) and "Limon" (A Lemon); Viktor Bibikov's "Chistaya Liubov" (Pure Love); L. P. Blummer's historical tale "Doche Boyarina Vorotuiusky" (A Daughter of the Boyar Vorotinsky); D. Muravlin's "Nasha Babushka" (Our Grandmother). The list might be almost indefinitely extended. There is also a long list of new poetical works. The names of the authors, besides that of Nadson, already mentioned, are N. P. Pirogof, Konstantin Fofanof, Matvéi Ramshef, A. Kirillof, and S. G. Frug. The last mentioned has during the last four years been extraordinarily prolific, and his "Dumui i Pyéni" (Thoughts and Songs) is made up of the work of this period.

Spain.

In giving a brief résumé of Spanish literature for 1887 it is quite natural to begin with fiction and poetry and allow other subjects to relegate themselves to the supplement. It must be confessed at the very beginning, however, that Spain's showing for the year is not very encouraging, and it is, perhaps, not very strange that there is such a palpable lack of interest in Boston in Spanish literature; but it is certainly not entirely creditable that not one of the Spanish reviews is taken either at the Boston Public Library, the Athenæum, or at Gore Hall.

Don Luis Alfonso, under the title of "Historios Cortesanas," has gathered four stories—"Dos Cartas," "La Mujer del Tenorio," "La Confesión," and "Dos Noches Buenas," which, with all their brilliancy of coloring and excellence of style, are to be regarded as belonging to the immoral French school of the fleshly and voluptuous. Of far more importance is the first novel of Don Baltasar Ortez de Zárate, which the critic Don Candido Ruiz Martinez welcomes with acclaim. He sees poetry both lyric and epic in Spain passing through a "lamentable crisis of prostration and decay," so that he almost despairs lest it be a symptom of irretrievable ruin. But fiction in his opinion has a future, and one of its bright lights is the young Don Baltasar, whose "Los de Gumia" has been added to the "Colección de Escritores Castellanos." Señor Martínez praises it for its naturalness, its excellent style, its purity of purpose and treatment, and its faithful sounding of the human heart. At the same time he declares that it is simple and not marked by great originality, and that it has the one great vice which characterizes the realism of Spain and France. In trying to escape the three-headed Scylla of romanticism, sentimentalism, and idealism, the realistic school has fallen upon the Charybdis of psychological dissection and minute photographic description, which even when expressed in beautiful language, interrupts the course of the narration and detracts from its interest. The plot is summed up in two lines: a man who loves one woman marries another, and after his marriage, forms illicit relations with the one whom he loves. Such a plot can be worked out in an ignoble or a noble way; it may be a moral or an immoral book. "Diego Mendez" is naturally upright and honorable; his instincts are virtuous; he recognizes his weakness and his sin, but is so carried away by his passion and the vehement selfishness of "Lola Gumia" that he becomes more and more involved in his sin. The types in the story are all carefully elaborated and show that their author has made his studies from real life.

The sixth volume of Don Jose M. de Pereda's collected works has been published under the title "Tipos y Paesajes" (Types and Landscapes). It contains a dozen short stories descriptive of the mountainous region of Santander and its inhabitants. Pereda is regarded as a consummate artist.

Don M. Martínez Barrionuevo is one of the most prolific of the Spanish novelists, having brought out during the past two years half a dozen works of fiction which have given him an established position in the world of letters. His last novel is entitled "Señores de Saldivar." This is praised for its dramatic situations and its charming style, though the plot is criticised as theatrical and not natural.

He has also published under the title of "El Padre Eterno" five novelettes, one of which, called "Divina," is so much in the style of Zola that a critic with a face serious or laughing under a mask of seriousness suggests that it would better have been omitted no ciertamente por falta de mérito literario, sino por el naturalismo con que esta ejecutada—words which need no translation.

We must finish this brief and inadequate outline sketch of Spanish fiction during the year with a mere mention of Don Armando Palacio Valdes's "Maximina," which is the sequel of the same talented author's "Réverita," published a year ago. It is in two volumes, and, perhaps more than any other of his works, deserves attention.

In speaking of Spanish poetry we shall have nothing to say of the greatest of the singers of the day, such as Zorrilla, Campoamor, Nuñez de Arca, the Duke de Almenara, Becquer, or Quintana, but confine ourselves simply to the little singing birds that perch on the low trees at the very edge of the forest. Don Antonio Chapuli y Navarro, a brilliant young author of prose and verse, has published a volume under the title "Ocios Literarios" (Literary Pastimes), which has been hailed as a sort of oasis in the desert—as a genuine "contribution to the literary criticisms of our day." Among the poems which it contains may be mentioned the legend "Enrique el noble y el noble Enrique," the poems "Estrellos, flores mujeres," which its admirers liken to Calderon, "las expediciones y Guerras de Jolo," and "Andalucia," which last is certainly written in multifarious and graceful verse. Christino Murciano has written and published with a dedication to the Bishop of Málaga a short narrative poem descriptive of the passion of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is entitled "El Drama de la Cruz," and reveals the author as inspired "with a sacred fire of pure mysticism combined with admirable learning." The well-known critic Vicente Colorado, whose plea for the repression of rabid Zolaism has been mentioned above, has issued a volume of graceful, natural, and at the same time sententious poems entitled "Besos y Mordiscos" (Kisses and Nibbles). He understands how to ring the changes on the gamut of the passions, and his style is bright and piquant. His volume was notable in the verse of the year. The same author also publishes a volume of critical articles entitled "Hombres y Bestias" (Men and Beasts), which contains "types and scenes from actual life." Their style is admirable. Don Juan Alcover y Maspens has published a volume of "Poesías," which are commended for their simplicity and quiet beauty, appealing to the soul rather than to the passions. Don Julio S. Gomez de Tejadat, a poet who belongs to the traditional escuela romantico-espiritualista, has issued a volume of poems entitled "Amorosas," which are praised for the beauty of their idealism, which is "like the perfume breathing from the petals of a flower," and it is said that the sweetness of his harp sounds divinely "amid the skeptical, pessimistic, sensual, and atheistic cries which at the present day invade not only the novel but the lyric and dramatic poetry of Spain." It must be confessed that the praise of the Spanish critics is somewhat vitiated by the facility with which multifarious adjectives and epithets are expressed in Spanish ink. Olive oil and not gall tips the pens of Spanish criticism.

Among works of general literature we may mention the following: Señor Aramburu y Zuloaga's treatise "La Nueva Ciencia Penal," in which he treats with some critical acumen of the genesis of the new school, crime and the criminal, punishment and trial. Don Enrique Fajarnes y Tur has given a curious historical sketch of the post office in the Island of Ibiza. Don Emilio Blanchet has published a volume containing four historical pictures and narratives (Cuadros y Narraciones). They are entitled "Maria Tudor," "Alarico en Roma," "La Ambicion (treating of Anne Bolein), and "El Puntapié del Duque de Eniza."

Señor Don Antonio Sendras y Rubín has begun the publication of a series of biographical studies of some of the most eminent public men of Spain under the general title, "Propagandistas y Políticos Contemporáneos." Each volume is sold separately. In the list we may mention that of Don Rafael M. de Lalra, who was one of the great forces of the recent democratic movement in Ultramar and well known as an eloquent orator and a man of considerable learning. Brief, but worthy of consideration, is Señor Federico Rahola's "Economistas Españoles de los Siglos XVI y XVII." The author offers a few considerations also on the origin of the science of political economy.

Don Juan Montalvo sends out from Paris two volumes of essays modestly entitled "El Espectador," in which, besides several narraciones novelísticas, combining fact and fiction with great skill and gracefulness, there are certain strictures on the modern tendencies in Spanish literature, and one in particular on Doña Emilia Pardo Razán, whose great novel, "Los Pazos de Ulloa," raised such a storm of enthusiasm about a year ago. This brilliant lady's latest book is entitled "La Revolución y la Novela en Rusia," and consists of lectures delivered in the Ateneo at Madrid.

Sweden.

Of all Swedish authors August Strindberg is most talked about. He founded his great reputation several years ago with his startling story, "Röda Rummet" (The Red Room), a book which made the profoundest sensation throughout Scandinavia. It proved its author to be one of the greatest literary talents Sweden has ever produced. The subject was very much the same as that presented by Ibsen in his "Brand," but it was treated in a far more realistic manner. Later Strindberg produced "Giftas," which was confiscated in its original form. Gradually Strindberg has become more and more a pronounced pessimist, hating everybody and everything. His three volumes, "Tjenestekinnans Sön" (The Son of the Servant Woman), published in part this year and in part last year, give the author's own life in installments. Six more volumes are said to be ready for the press, but it is reported that no publisher can be found who dares print such literature. Strindberg, at war with himself and with everybody and everything, and at the same time a towering genius—shall we say like Byron?—is apparently exerting all his powers to shock the world. His books are the most painful reading one can imagine.

His very best printed work was published a few days ago by an obscure publisher in the small town of Helsingborg, and has been put on the stage in a second-class theater in Copenhagen. The title of it is "Faderen" (The Father), and represents one of the most cruel and unhappy fathers conceivable. Mr. Strindberg came himself to Copenhagen and assisted in arranging the play for the stage. While it is impossible to write about Swedish literature without beginning with Strindberg, let us hope that American literature may long be spared from the infliction of that sort of writers. Two of the best and most important novels produced during the past year are Ernst Ahlgren's "Marianne" and "Höststormar" (Autumn Storms), by Mathilda Ross, and this last name leads to the remark that there is scarcely another country in Europe where the women are so active in literature as in Sweden. And this has been so for at least two generations back. The reader will easily recall such names in the past as Fredrika Bremer, Mrs. Schwartz, Mrs. Kellgren, Mrs. Carlén, and many others. Of the younger generation we have first of all Mrs. Edgren, Mrs. Agrell, Mrs. Benedixen, Amalia Fahlstedt, Elna Tenow, and Hilma Strandberg, but besides these a full dozen more might be named. Not all of these have published books this year, but from Amalia Fahlstedt, whose first work appeared in 1883, we have a fairly good collection of stories called "Ax och Halm" (Ears and Straw). Elna Tenow has given us a series of short stories in a volume called "Motley" (Brokig). This deals with the question of marriage. From Hilma Strandberg we have a book of stories, "Västerut" (From the West), which describe life in the western part of Sweden. It may be said of them all that they deal in a somewhat radical fashion with the social problems of the day. Georg Nordensvan, a writer of distinction, has written a volume of short stories, "Lek" (Amusements), and the young and decidedly promising novelist, Gustaf af Geijerstam, has given the public two stories, the one entitled "Tills Vidare" (Until Further Notice) and the other called "Pastor Hallin." He is a bright writer, of the Strindberg school minus the latter's coarseness and pessimism. During the months of October and November he has been lecturing on Swedish literature in Norway and Denmark to large and enthusiastic audiences. He is destined to make a decided mark in the literature of his country. This year Emilie Flygare-Carlén celebrated her eightieth birthday, and in that connection was published what she calls the "Aftermath," a collection of stories never before published. The old lady is still in vigorous health, but it is said she has forever said farewell to literature. From F. Hedberg we have a large volume, 448 pages, giving descriptions of life in Stockholm and its surroundings. King Oscar has had the pleasure of issuing a new edition of his poems and speeches and from Count Carl Snoilsky we have "Svenska Bilder" (Swedish Pictures), a collection of poems the like of which no other Swede can produce. Schuck's elaborate "History of Swedish Literature" has reached part five, and promises to become a monumental work worthy of its talented author and the magnificent literature it is to describe.

Passing now to miscellaneous books we may mention the fact that Arvid Ahnfelt's great work on the artists of Europe has been completed. In its preparation the author has been assisted by eminent writers in the three Scandinavian countries. The Swedish Cyclopædia is nearing its completion, vol. XI having been published. Sundén has published his dictionary of the Swedish language, and Söderwall his dictionary of the Swedish language of the middle ages. From Boethius we have a "History of the French Revolution," and from the great philosopher, A. Nyström, vol. II of his "History of Civilization." The 12th part has appeared of Baltzer's "Rock Tracings from Bohuslän," an important archaeological work. The second volume of the Swedish "Diplomatarium" has appeared this year. Finally, we have to mention three elaborate works of travel: The first is "A Journey in Persia, Mesopotamia, and Caucasus," by S. Hedin; the second is "Travels in Central America," by C. Bövallins; and the third is "Three Years in Congo," by P. Möller and his associates. Of the last only vol. I has appeared.

United States of America.

We shall not undertake this year, as we have in previous years, to give under this head a somewhat detailed account of the American literary product for 1887. The foreign departments of this Annual Review have now come to require so much space, and the domestic field is so well covered for our readers by our current issues, that we shall restrict ourselves on the present occasion to the most general survey noting only the leading lines and tendencies, the groupings around vital subjects, the contributions of a few chief authors; foregoing all attempt to be personal and minute except in a most general way.

In fact the history of strictly American literature for the year now closing is for the most part uneventful and dull. A great deal that passes at the bookstore for American is really English; and of purely native growth there is little that is striking or that will prove memorable. If asked to name one genuine American book for 1887 which we believed destined to live in literature, or to name an American author who had achieved distinction by any performance of the year, we should not know what to say. There has been some work of good quality; but it has not been "an apple year."

Mr. Lowell, who now stands at the head of our American company, has had something to do, it is understood, with the editing of "Thackeray's Letters," whose appearance in the new Scribner's Monthly, followed by their reappearance a few weeks since in book form, probably comes as near as anything to being the literary event of the year; but "Thackeray's Letters," even when edited by Mr. Lowell, can hardly be considered as making an American book. Mr. Whittier, on the eve of whose 80th birthday we write these words, has been almost wholly silent. Dr. Holmes, beyond one or two occasional poems, has given us nothing more important than his "Hundred Days in Europe," clear and entertaining, no doubt, but merely a magazine incident, and hardly to be classed with serious literature. Mr. Howells, to his "April Hopes" and his regular department of "criticism in Harper's, has added a volume of critical biography on Italian Poets. Mr. Higginson and Mr. Scudder have both made book collections of essays contributed to the periodicals. From Bret Harte we have had two works of fiction, and from Mr. Crawford—if it be proper to name him among American novelists—three; from Julian Hawthorne two, and from Miss Phelps two. The list of minor fiction is considerable in length but hardly noteworthy outside of Mr. Stockton's various whimsicalities, Miss Preston's "A Year in Eden," Mr. Bishop's "Golden Justice," and Dr. Hammond's "On the Susquehanna." Mrs. Walworth's "Southern Silhouettes," Mrs. Damon's "Old New England Days," Miss Carpenter's "South County Neighbors," and Mr. Harris's "Free Joe," have been the chief contributions to the department of "local color."

The one notable work from a new author is Mr. Harold Frederic's "Seth's Brother's Wife."

The revival of American interest in Russian literature, which was a signal feature of 1886, has been narrowed down in 1887 to the works of Tolstói, no less than nine of which have appeared since January in English translations by American hands and under American imprints, all but one of them for the first time. The nine are "Ivan Ilyitch," "Sebastopol," "My Confessions and the Spirit of Christ's Teaching," "Katia," "In Pursuit of Happiness," "What To Do," "The Cossacks" (revised edition), "The Invaders," and "A Russian Proprietor and Other Stories." To the foregoing may be added Korolenko's "The Vagrant and Other Tales," appearing only as we write. We have now, from Tourguenief, Gogol, Dostoieffsky, Tolstói, and one or two others, a library of Russian literature in good English versions of very respectable size, quite sufficient for the purpose of any student who wishes to decide for himself the question of its merits as bearing on the dispute of the hour between the two schools of realism and idealism. For our own part we do not hesitate to reaffirm most emphatically that the Russian school is more than worthy of an acquaintance; it demands it from all who would follow what is best in modern thought and style. Mr. Edmunds's translation of Voqué's "Russian Novelists" is a timely contribution of the year towards a right understanding of them.

A generous paragraph—perhaps the most generous—in this enumeration belongs to works illustrative of American life and history; life that is most conspicuously and illustriously associated with the national name and fame, history of sections or periods prominent in the general development. Both in its subject and in its manner Mr. Cabot's biography of Emerson easily holds the foremost place, while the "Final Memorials of Longfellow" stand not far behind. Thoreau's "Winter" is not exactly an autobiography, but being quite as truly a portrait of its author as a picture of its subject, may perhaps be mentioned here as delineating a unique New England personality. Mr. Browne's life of Abraham Lincoln opened the year, as Messrs. Nicolay and Hay's larger and most exhaustive work has lasted all through it, and will run over into the year to come. Hale's "newly studied" life of "Washington," McMaster's "Franklin," Roosevelt's "Benton," Schurz's "Clay," Frémont's "Memoirs," and Griffis's "Perry," have cast strong lights backward upon picturesque figures of the past. Passing from biography to history we are met by Charnay's "Ancient Cities of the New World," vol. iv of Mr. Winsor's composite "Narrative and Critical History of the United States," Brooks Adams's "Emancipation of Massachusetts," Hallowell's "Pioneer Quakers," Johnston's "Connecticut," Drake's "Making of the Great West," Miss Woolsey's "Sketch of Philadelphia," Carleton's "Drum-Beat of the Nation," Williams's "History of Negro Troops," Abbot's "Blue Jackets of 1812," Soley's similar book, "The Boys of 1812," and Brooks's "Story of the American Indian." This is at least as good a showing in this part of the field as that of 1886, and in some respects better. Rev. Edward G. Porter's "Rambles in Old Boston," though published, if we remember aright, just at the very end of 1886, may be dropped into the scale of 1887.

To the "Story of the Nations" series, now getting to be a library by itself, have been added Miss Jewett's "Normans," Benjamin's "Persia," Rawlinson's "Egypt," Raogzin's "Assyria," Mahaffy's "Alexander's Empire," and the Hon. Emily Lawless's "Ireland."

Next to the literature of American character and life we shall place the religious and theological books of the year, though the assortment is neither great nor striking. In exegesis Dr. Hovey's "Commentary on the New Testament," and Dr. Vincent's "Word Studies;" in history Prof. Fisher's incomparable "Church History," Bishop Cox's "Institutes of Christian History," and a first volume of Lea's "History of the Inquisition;" in the philosophy of religion Harris's "Self-Revelation of God;" in its ethics Dr. Phillips Brooks's lectures on "Tolerance;" in the comparative study of religion Parks's "Star in the East;" in its practical applications Loomis's "Modern Cities" and Peirson's "Evangelistic Work;" in missions Wellcome's "Story of Metlakatla;" in ecclesiology Heard's "Russian Church and Russian Dissent;" and in sermons collections by ex-President Porter of Yale College, Rev. W. B. Wright of Boston, Drs. Smyth and Munger of New Haven, Dr. Rainsford and other Episcopal preachers of New York, Dr. McKim of New Orleans, and the late Dr. Leeds of Baltimore—these are the outlines.

Since theology and philosophy live next door to each other, we may mention here Bowne's "Philosophy of Theism," the same Boston scholar's "Introduction to Psychological Theory," McCosh's "Psychology," and Ladd's "Elements of Physiological Psychology."

From these dark and winding passages of human thought it is pleasant to escape into the paths of travel, where we have had not only Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes to accompany through his "Hundred Days," as above noted, but Dr. Glisan of Oregon, during his "Two Years in Europe," Minister Benjamin to "Persia" and General Wilson to "China," "Sunset" Cox to the "Isles of the Princes" and artist Stillman "On the Track of Ulysses," Mr. Ballou on his journey "Due North" and Mr. Paton on his trip "Down the Islands"—the Caribbees; Mr. Brigham to "Guatemala," and Mr. Stevens "Around the World on a Bicycle." Mr. Meriwether on his "Tramp Trip" through Europe at fifty cents a day, and Mr. Richardson as he puts "A Girdle Round the Earth." Dr. McKenzie's "Some Things Abroad" may be, and Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd's "Cathedral Days" should be, added to the list.

In science the discussions of evolution and sociology have had the larger place, some half-dozen works of note having appeared under each head. Among these we will only mention Schurman's "Ethical Import of Darwinism" and Laughlin's "Elements of Political Economy." Storer's "Agriculture" deserves mention, and Mr. Langley's "New Astronomy" is probably an important work, though it has not yet reached us.

There remain as representative American productions of the year Mr. Washburne's "Recollections," France, 1869-'77, Mr. Van Dyke's "Principles of Art," Mr. Finck's "Romantic Love," Mr. Knox's "Decisive Battles since Waterloo," Roemer's "Origins of the English People and the English Language," Prof. Davidson's translation of Scartazzini's "Handbook to Dante," Upton's "Handbook of Sacred Oratorios," and Prof. Charles Eliot Norton's editing of the "Correspondence between Goethe and Carlyle"—if that work is properly to be entered here at all.

Whether the Hon. Ignatius Donnelly's loudly heralded book on "The Great Cryptogram" is to be added to the important and valuable productions of the year, it would be premature at present writing to say.

The readers of the foregoing will see at once that we have given nothing more than the most rapid generalization, mentioning only a few leading works under each head, and aiming merely to indicate currents and directions. This in the case of the United States, as in that of Great Britain, in view of the fullness with which the literature of these countries is dealt with during the year, must suffice.

NECROLOGY, 1887.

A.

ADAMS, Rev. John G., D.D.; Melrose, Mass., May 4, 77 y.; journalist and theological writer.
ALEXANDER, Patrick Proctor; Edinburgh, Scotland, Nov. 14, 63 y.; a "Bohemian" journalist.
ALFRIEND, Frank H.; Washington, D.C., May 3, 47 y.; journalist.
ANNENKOF, Pavel Vasilyevitch; Russia, March 20, 76 y.; biographer and critic.
ARISCHOU, Johan Edvard; Stockholm, May 7, 76 y.; botanist.
AUBERT, Prof. Ludvig Cesar Martin; Christiania, June 15, 80 y.; philologist.
AUERBACH, Dr. Jacob; Germany, Nov. —; brother of the novelist, a journalist, and historian of the German Jews.

B.

BAIRD, Spencer Fullerton; Wood's Holl, Mass., Aug. 19, 64 y.; Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.
BAYNES, T. Spencer; London, May 30, 64 y.; philosophical writer, journalist, Shakespearean, and editor of the 9th edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica.
BEACH, J. W.; New York, Nov. 12; journalist.
BEALEY, Richard H.; Nottingham, England, Feb. 5, 59 y.; dialect poet of Lancashire.
BERCHER, Rev. Henry Ward; Brooklyn, L. I., Mar. 8, 73 y.; preacher, orator, journalist, novelist, and religious author.
BELL, Major Evans; England, Sept. 12; writer on India.
BERESFORD-HOPE, see HOPE.
BERG, Fredrik Theodor; Stockholm, May 7, 81 y.; statistician.
BERNHARDI, Theodor V.; Germany, Feb. —, 85 y.; historical biography.
BERT, Paul; Paris, Nov. —; naturalist and professor of the Collège de France.
BERRY, Abel B.; Weare, N. H., May, 69 y.; novelist and historical writer.
BLOOMSTRAND, Dr. Anders; Lund, Sweden, Oct. 17, 65 y.; a Tamil scholar of distinction.
BRASSEY, Lady, wife of Sir Thomas; at sea on board the yacht "Sunbeam," bound for Australia, Sept. 14; author of yachting narratives.
BRAYMAN, J. O.; Chicago, Oct. 30, 72 y.; journalist.
BRINZ, Professor Aloys von; Munich, Sept. 14, 67 y.; jurist.

C.

CARLSON, Fredrik Ferdinand; Stockholm, Sweden, Mar. 17, 54 y.; historian and editor.
CAULFIELD, Dr. —; Cork, Ireland, Feb. —; librarian of Queen's College and antiquary.
CLEMENT, M. Charles; Paris, July —; journalist.
COBB, Sylvanus, Jr.; Fairmount, Mass., June 20, 64 y.; for many years a contributor to the New York Ledger.
COLEMAN, Frances Ellen; England, May; joint author of a History of the Zulu War.
COLLINS, Rev. William Lucas; England, March 24, 70 y.; biographer and editor.
COMLY, Gen. J. M.; Toledo, O., June 25, 55 y.; editor of the Toledo Commercial.

CONCHES, Feuillet de; France, Feb. —, 84 y.; biographer and editor in French literature.
CRAIK, Mrs. Diana Maria Mulock; near London, Oct. 12, 61 y.; poet and novelist.
CROCKER, Uriel; Cohasset, Mass., July 19, 90 y.; of the old Boston publishing house of Crocker & Brewster.
CURRY, Rev. Dr. Daniel; New York, Aug. 17, 78 y.; journalist and biographer.

D.

DANA, Alexander H.; Montclair, N. J., April 27, 80 y.; legal and philosophical writer.
DEKKER, Eduard Douwes; near Mayence, Feb. 19, 67 y.; a Hollander by birth, an East Indian by service, author of works on Holland in the East.
DESNOVERS, M. Jules; Nogent-le-Rotrou, France, early in September, 86 y.; librarian.
D'IDREVILLE, M. Henri; France, June —; journalism and letters.
DOMETT, Alfred; London, Nov. 2, 76 y.; poet.
DUPIN, Jean Henri; Paris, April 6, 95 y.; dramatic author.
DURUY, Jean Victor; France, about August 12, 76 y.; historian.

E.

EGLI, Pfarrer J. B.; Canton Aarau, Switzerland, Dec. —; dialect story teller.

F.

FAIRFIELD, Francis Gerry; New York City, April 4; journalist.
FARIS, Ahmed Effendi; Oct. 8; Arabic journalist.
FAVAL, Paul Henri; Paris, March 8, 69 y.; dramatist, novelist, and historian.
FRILITZEN, Dr. Olof Otto Hugo Johannes von; Stockholm, Jan. 10, 32 y.; literary historian and critic.
FLURRY, Alfred Auguste Cuvillier; Paris, Oct. 18, 85 y.; journalist and author, and member of the French Academy.
FLOOD, Charles B.; Columbus, O., Oct. —, 76 y.; journalist.
FOWLER, O. S.; Sharon Station, Conn., Aug. 18, 77 y.; phenologist and lecturer.
FROMMANN, Dr.; Nuremberg, Jan. —; Old German scholar, and sub-director of the Germanistic Museum.
FRY, Francis; Bristol, England, Nov. 12, 83 y.; collector and reprinter, particularly of Bibles.

G.

GREER, Gen. Elihu; Lyme, Conn., March 27, 70 y.; printer and publisher.
GILLER, Agathon; Galicia, Aug. —, 56 y.; political writer.
GOEDRKE, Karl; Göttingen, Oct. 28, 73 y.; literary historian, and editor of Lessing, Goethe, and Schiller.
GOLDSCHMIDT, Meir Aaron; Copenhagen, Aug. 15, 68 y.; novelist.
GONZALES, M. Emmanuel; Paris, Oct. —; fiction and drama.
GOSTWICK, Joseph; London, Jan. —; teacher, journalist, and historian of German literature.
GOZZADINI, Count Giovanni; province of Bologna, Italy, Aug. 26, 77 y.; archaeologist.
GRANT, James; England, May 5 (62), 65 y.; military romancer and historian.
GURNEY, Rev. Archer Thompson; Bath, Eng., March 21, 67 y.; essayist, journalist, poet.
GUYTON, Mrs. Etherington; England, Sept. —; religious author and editor under her maiden name of Emma Jane Worboise.

H.

HASELL, Miss E. J.; Dalesmain, Ullswater, England, Nov. 14; Spanish scholar and translator.
HAYELAAR, Max; Germany, March; author of Mulla Tuli.
HAYDON, Frank Scott; London, Oct. 29, 65 y.; of the Public Record Office.
HEDDERWICK, Robert; Glasgow, Aug. —, 81 y.; journalist.
HENRIK, of Trolle; at Listerby, near Karlskrona, Sweden, Sept. 16, 57 y.; novelist.
HERAND, John Abraham; England, April 19, 88 y.; poet, dramatist, and critic.
HILDYARD, Rev. James; Ingoldsby, England, Aug. 27, 78 y.; pamphleteer under the pseudonym of "Ingoldsby." ¹
HILL, Rev. John Harwood; Leicestershire, England, Dec. 3, 77 y.; local history.
HITCHCOCK, Rev. Roswell Dwight; near Fall River, Mass., June 17, 80 y.; theologian.
HOE, S. S.; Tarrytown, N. Y., July 29; grandson of Robert Hoe, and junior member of the series of printing press manufacturers.
HOPE-BERESFORD, Alexander James Beresford; England, Oct. —, 67 y.; architecture.
HOLMES, Dr. H. A.; Albany, N. Y., Nov. 3, 75 y.; State librarian and Orientalist.
HOPKINS, Rev. Mark; Williamstown, Mass., June 17, 85 y.; theologian and philosopher.
HOPKINS, Rev. Samuel; Northampton, Mass., Feb. 10, 79 y.; historian.
HUGHES, John; April —; last of a triad of Welsh lyric poets.
HUGHES, Thomas Piott; England, June 18; Orientalist.
HYMERS, Rev. John; England, April —; author of mathematical text-books.

I.

INGLIS, W.; Edinburgh, Oct. 11, 75 y.; for upwards of 50 years connected with the publishing house of W. & R. Chambers.
"INGOLDSBY," see HILDYARD.
IPOLYI-STUMMER, Bishop Arnold von; Grosswardein, Hungary, Dec. 2, 62 y.; history.

J.

JEFFRIES, Richard; Goring, England, Aug. 14; a modern "White of Selborne."

JEWETT, Elam R.; Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 10, 76 y.; journalist.
JONES, John; Manchester, England, Nov. 3, 62 y.; a Welsh shoemaker-poet under the pseudonym of "Idris Vychan."

K.

KATKOFF, Michael Nikephorovitch; Moscow, Aug. 1, 67 y.; publicist and journalist.
KEITH-FALCONER, the Hon. Ion G. N.; Aden, May 13, 31 y.; Orientalist and translator of the Fables of Bidaï.
KERR, Rev. Dr. D. R.; Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 14, 69 y.; journalist.
KISSELBERG, Wm. E.; Troy, N. Y., May 20; journalist.
KNIGHT, Rev. J. P.; Yarmouth, England, June 1; author of "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" and some 200 other songs.
KOK, Johannes; Denmark, Jan. 20, 66 y.; philologist.
KONER, Prof.; Berlin, Oct. —; head of the University Library.
KRASEWSKI, —; Poland, March —; a most fertile author of poetry, romance, travels, and critical essays.

L.

LAIGHTON, Albert; Portsmouth, N. H., Feb. 6, 58 y.; poet, and a cousin of Celia Thaxter.
LAIRD, John M.; Greensburg, Pa., Jan. 25, 86 y.; the senior journalist in the State.
LANGE, Thomas; Lyngby, Denmark, Aug. 25, 58 y.; novelist.
LAZARUS, Emma; New York, Nov. 19, 36 y.; poet and magazinist.
LEUTSCH, Prof. von; Göttingen, Aug. —; editor.
LONG, Rev. James; England, March 23; Orientalist.
LUBOJATZKY, Franz; Germany, June —; prolific novelist.

M.

MACFARREN, Sir George Alexander; England, announced Oct. 31, 74 y.; musical composer.
MACGREGOR, Sir Charles; England, Feb. —; travels.
MADALÈNE, M. Henri de la; Oct. —; journalist and novelist.
MARLITT, Eugénie; Arnstadt, Thuringia, June 22; novelist.
MAYHEW, Henry; London, July 25, 75 y.; journalist and fiction.
MERRIAM, Charles; Springfield, Mass., July 9, 81 y.; publisher.
MESSNER, Professor; Berlin, Nov. —; theologian of the University.
MICHEL, Francisque Xavier; France, May 22, 78 y.; archaeological writer and translator.
MONRAD, Bishop D. G.; Falster, Denmark, Mar. 28, 76 y.; theologian.
MORTIMER, Philip, pseud., see Knight.

N.

NADSON, Samyón Yakolevitch; Russia —, 25 y.; poet.
NAPIER, Rev. Alexander; Holkham, England, Aug. 24, 73 y.; theological writer and an editor of Boswell's Johnson.
NASON, Elias; Billerica, Mass., June 17, 76 y.; editor and miscellaneous writer.
NELSON, William; London, Sept. 10, 71 y.; senior partner in the publishing house of T. Nelson & Sons.
NEWTON, Rev. Richard; Philadelphia, May 25, 79 y.; theological writer.
NICHOLSON, Dr. John; Penrith, Scotland, Dec. —, 78 y.; Orientalist.
NORDMANN, Johannes; Vienna, Aug. —, 69 y.; author and journalist.

O.

O'CONNOR, Rev. W. A.; England, Mar. 22; historian and commentator.
OLMSTED, E. K.; Lake View, N. J., Oct. 7; journalist in New York.
Olney, Prof. Edward; Detroit, Mich., Jan. 16, 59 y.; of the State University.
OSTERWALD, W.; Germany, March —; poet.

P.

PALMER, Rev. Ray; Newark, N. J., March 29, 78 y.; poetry and devotional books.
PASSAGLIA, Father; Turin, March, journalist.
PETTINGILL, Rev. John Hancock; New Haven, Conn., Feb. 27, 72 y.; theological writer.
PISANI, Count; Constantinople, Nov. —, 83 y.; archivist.
PLATONOFF, M.; Russia, Oct. —; journalist.
POORE, Ben Perley; Washington, D. C., May 29, 67 y.; editor, correspondent, and author.
PORTER, George William; London, Nov. 11; Senior Assistant Keeper of the Library of the British Museum.
POTT, Professor August Friedrich; Halle, Germany, July 5, 84 y.; philologist.
PRENDERGAST, Thomas; Cheltenham, England, Nov. 14, 79 y.; linguist.

R.

RACOT, Adolphe; Paris, May, 46 y.; novelist and critic.
RAMBERT, Prof. Eugène; Lausanne, Switzerland, Nov. —; author of a Life of Vinet and a work on the Swiss Alps.
RAMSDALL, Henry J.; Washington, D. C., May 25; journalist.
RANDOLPH, Maj. Innes; Baltimore, Md., April 29; journalist.
RAYET, M. Olivier; Paris, March —, 39 y.; Professor of Archaeology in the Bibliothèque Nationale.
REID, George William; London, Oct. 20; Keeper of prints and drawings in the British Museum.
REUMONT, Alfred von; Paris, May 20, 79 y.; historian and biographer.
ROBE, James; Manchester, Scotland, Sept. —, 63 y.; Irish and Scotch journalist.
ROSS, John Wilson; London, May —, 68 y.; contributor to the periodicals in prose and verse.
ROQUETTE, the Père Adrien; New Orleans, July 15, 74 y.; master of many languages, and writer in French of both prose and verse.

ROUSSE, Peter W.; Orange, N. J., May 2; journalist.
"ROWEL, M.," see Thisted.
RUDDOCK, David S.; New London, Conn., Sept. 17, 69 y.; journalist.

S.

SAFFORD, E. H.; Haverhill, Mass., Dec. 12, 78 y.; journalist.
SANDIFER, J.; London, Feb. 15; publisher.
SATCHELL, Thomas; England, April 16; writer on angling.
SAWYER, O. S.; New York, July 31; journalist.
SAXE, John Godfrey; Albany, N. Y., March 31, 71 y.; poet.
SCHANNE, —; Paris, May —; chronicler of the vie de bohème.
SECOND, Alberie; Paris, June, 70 y.; dramatist.
SELLON, Charles E.; Dorchester, Mass., March 25, 50 y.; journalist.
SEOANE, the Marquis Juan Antonio; Spain, Feb. —; philosophy.
SHELDON, James; Buffalo, N. Y., May 1, 66 y.; contributor to the Knickerbocker Magazine.
SHIELDS, Thomas; Bradford, England, Oct. (Nov.?) —, 59 y.; journalist.
SIM, George; Scotland, Oct. —; antiquary.
SIMPSON, John Palgrave; London, Aug. 19, 80 y.; novelist and dramatist.
SKEFFINGTON, W.; London, May 10, 79 y.; publisher.
SMITH, Francis S.; New York, Feb. 1, 68 y.; printer and journalist.
SMITH, Wm. L.; Springfield, Mass., May 19, 63 y.; journalist.
SMYTH, Rev. Anson; Cleveland, O., May 2, 75 y.; educational writer.
SNOW, Eliza R.; Salt Lake City, Dec. 6, 84 y.; a Mormon poetess.
STANTON, Henry B.; New York, Jan. 14, 81 y.; journalist.
STENZLER, Professor; Breslau, Feb., 86 y.; Orientalist.
STEVENS, William; England, April, 80 y.; founder of the Family Herald.
"ST. HERMIDAD, Emanuel," see Thisted.
ST. HILAIRE, M. Marco de; Paris, Nov. —, nearly 80 y.; once librarian of Strasbourg, and author of recollections.
STRAKOSCH, Maurice; Paris, Oct. 10; musical composer and conductor.
STRAUSS, Gustave Louis Maurice; Teddington, England, Sept. 2; "author, linguist, chemist, politician, cook, tutor, dramatist, journalist, surgeon" — nothing seemed amiss to Dr. Strauss.

T.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin; Cleveland, O., Feb. 24, 65 y.; journalist and poet.
TEIXEIRA, Charles W.; New York, June 1, 35 y.; journalist.
TEN EVCK, Henry James; Albany, Dec. —, 31 y.; journalist.
TEXIER, M. E.; France, Oct. —, journalist.
THISTED, Valdemar; Tommerup, Zealand, Oct. 16, 72 y.; a parish priest, and author of Letters from Hell, under the pseudonym of "M. Rowel," and of many other writings — novels, tracts, and verses — under that of "Emanuel St. Hermidad."
THRING, Rev. Edward; Uppingham, England, Oct. 22; educational science.
TOSSE, Joseph; Covington, Ky., Jan. 6, 84 y.; musical composer.
TRAUTMANN, Dr. F.; Bavaria, Nov. —; dramatist, novelist, journalist.
TURNER, R. S.; England, June —, 68 y.; book collector.
VICARY, Fulford; Devonshire, England, July —; author of The Stork's Nest, and other tales of Denmark and Norway.

V.

VIEL-CASTEL, Count Louis de; France, early in October; critic and historian.
VOLLMER, Dr. Wilhelm; Stuttgart, June, 58 y.; editor of German literature.
VOSK, James E.; Ashburnham, Mass., May 30, 51 y.; critic and educational writer.
"VYCHAN, Idris," see Jones.

W.

WAGNER, —; Munich; May 31; geographer and explorer.
WALROND, Theodore; London, June —; editor of Lord Elgin's letters.
WARING, C. H.; Bristol; England, early in September, 68 y.; magazinist.
WARNE, Charles; Brighton, England, Ap. 11, 85 y.; archæologist.
WARREN, Henry George; London, May —; journalist.
WEBB, George James; Orange, N. J., about Oct. 7, 85 y.; musical composer.
WHITEHURST, Edward Capel; England, May 13, 63 y.; critic and correspondent.
WILLIAMS, Robert; London, Dec. —; Oxford scholar and journalist.
WOOD, Mrs. Henry; England, Feb. —, 68 y.; novelist.
WORBOISE, see Guyton.
WYETH, Mrs. M. E. C.; near Jacksonville, Fla., May or June, 55 y.; magazinist and poet.
WYLD, James; London, June —; geographer to the Queen.

Y.

YOUMANS, Prof. Edward Livingston; New York, Jan. 18, 65 y.; text-books in natural science, and journalist.
YOUNG, Sir Charles; London, Sept. 11; dramatist.

Z.

ZACHER, Prof.; Germany, March —; journalist.

The Literary World.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 24, 1887.

Entered at the Post Office at Boston, Mass., as second-class mail matter.

MORE HOLIDAY BOOKS.

Though it is Christmas Eve, and forehanded people have made their Christmas purchases, and are beyond reach of any advising words from us now, yet a few of the best of the Christmas books have only just come in, fresh and damp from the publishers. And so all that can be said by our readers, as at this late hour we open to them the tempting packages, will be: "It might have been!"

Our Darlings. By Mars. [Geo. Routledge & Sons. $2.50.]

All things considered this is the most brilliant picture-book of the present season. As all good picture-books are bound to be, it is an apotheosis of childhood, and as all picture-books are not, it is artistic, original, and well done. "Our Darlings," "At Home," "In Town," "At the Seaside," "In the Country," and "At Play," furnish the subjects for the more than forty crowded plates which make up the pages of the large oblong book, and nearly every one of these pages is a study. "Mars," whoever may be the owner of that pseudonym, is a combination of Kate Greenaway and Du Maurier, and the sketches have the merit not only of good drawing and coloring, but of individuality. They have a distinct style of their own, unlike anything we have had this year. They unite the cultivation of English life with the animation of the French; always refined, they are never dull; there is little repetition; their endless variety of subject and treatment is in fact quite as remarkable as the technical skill with which they are executed, and the pure and delicate feeling which inspires them. The figures, attitudes, movements, sentiments of children have seldom been more effectively delineated.

The Man Who would Like to Marry. By Harry Parkes. [F. Warne & Co. 50c.]

There is amusement in this trifle for about three minutes, and we commend it to mischievous young ladies with a fondness for bantering their bachelor friends. For a book to be tied anonymously by a bevy of giggling girls on the door-handle of the room occupied by their tormentor, we know of nothing to compare with it. The twelve large outline plates illustrate the following points:

"The man who would like to marry,"
"But the pretty girls are so demure,"
"And the clever ones are so alarming,"
"And the talkative ones are so tiresome,"
"And the merry ones make such game of a fellow,"
"And the sentimental ones are so spooney,"
"And the horsey ones are so outrageous,"
"And the nautical ones are so inconsiderate,"
"And the little ones are so little,"
"And the large ones are so VERY LARGE!"
"And the wealthy ones have such very unpleasant papas!"
"That he thinks he'll let it stand over for the present."

After all, this weapon of satire would be as effective in a young man's hand as in a maiden's.

Notre Dame. By Victor Hugo. 2 vols. Illus. [Geo. Routledge & Sons. $6.00.]

This is the third number of the illustrious series of French romances which the Routledges are bringing out in such sumptuous form. The two volumes, in paper, illustrations, presswork, and cover, are uniform with the five volumes of Les Misérables, the five of Monte Cristo, and the two of Toilers of the Sea. The illustrations of Notre Dame are wood-cuts from designs by Hugo, Bayard, Brion, Johannot, and a long list of other French artists. Primarily they are noticeable for their number, next for their boldness and vigor, occasionally for their refinement and delicacy, often for their dramatic power. They move along on the current of the story with panoramic vividness and fidelity. From many points of view—not from all, but from many—this is to be a remarkable edition of Victor Hugo, and when it is completed, American readers will have a great French author in a form almost unrivaled. There is something in the very dimensions and outward splendor of these books in keeping with the grandeur of the genius whose name they bear.

The Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott. Edited with a careful revision of the text by Wm. J. Rolfe. With illustrations. [Ticknor & Co. $10.00.]

This is certainly a superb edition of Scott's poems, complete, scholarly, well furnished, and set forth with nearly all possible typographical elegance. Beside Scott's longer and best-known poems, "The Lady of the Lake," "Marmion," "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," etc., there is a full collection of miscellaneous poems; an appendix contains the songs and mottoes from the novels, with various fragments; there are upwards of sixty pages of notes; and a glossary and index supplement the text. Of the illustrations, wood-cuts, including vignettes and ornaments, there are nearly 350, all "drawn, engraved, and printed under Mr. Anthony's supervision." While some of these cuts, as we have had occasion to remark on their previous appearance in connection with single poems, are crude and bad, especially in the drawing, others are uncommonly good and satisfying, and their general average quality, taken with their profusion and scenic value, makes them a welcome feature of the book, which in every other respect is handsome, imposingly so. It is an octavo of convenient proportions, of 646 pages made of good paper, well printed, gilt edged, and tastefully bound.

But the special value of this edition of Scott's poems lies in Dr. Rolfe's careful emendation of the text, which has become more or less corrupt, and in these pages has been restored for the first time to its original purity. Not only by Lockhart, but by other editors, some of them utterly careless, errors have been allowed to creep in and multiply, until some of them, as Dr. Rolfe says, became "incredibly bad." "Marmion," as already shown by Dr. Rolfe, has never been printed correctly until his editing, "sundry misprints in the first edition having been overlooked by Scott and by all his commentators and critics." For example, in the "Lady of the Lake," canto i, stanza 12, Scott wrote, as printed in the first edition, 1810,

"The primrose pale and violet flower Found in each clift a narrow bower;"

but in every subsequent edition till Rolfe's "clift" was misprinted cliff. In canto ii, stanza 30, of the same poem, Roderick Dhu is made to say, according to every edition printed since 1821,

"Nay, Ellen, blench not thus away;
And, mother, cease these signs, I pray,—
I meant not all my heart might say;"

when what, according to Scott, he did say was,

"I meant not all my heat should say."

These are examples of the minute and painstaking care with which Dr. Rolfe, down to periods, semi-colons, and commas, has worked over Scott's text, and given us not only a decided improvement over every other recension, but what is probably the nearest approach to perfection which is possible.

We have only one suggestion to make to the publishers, namely: that after the holiday want is supplied, they give us an edition of the work in plain library dress without gilt, in simple cloth, paper-labeled on the back, and rough-edged in front.

Raphael: His Life, Works, and Times. By Eugene Muntz. Illus. New edition by Walter Armstrong. [A. C. Armstrong & Son. $9.00.]

We count it a misfortune for all concerned that such a work as this should reach us at so late an hour, when in order to get it seasonably before our part of the public we must dismiss it with so few words. Muntz is the librarian of the National School of Fine Arts in Paris, and an authority. This work, originally published in France and in French, passed in six years to a second edition, which was improved with many additions and corrections. From this second edition the present English translation was made, whose editor, Mr. Walter Armstrong, is a Bachelor of Arts of Oxford. As it stands it is the last and best critical and descriptive work on Raphael, to whose genius it shows a devotion amounting to enthusiasm, tempered, however, always with a critical discrimination which seldom if ever allows eulogy to pass into extravagance. It is a sober, sound, accurate, adequate presentation of the history and products of the great painter, made additionally brilliant and beautiful by the profuse illustrations which accompany the text.

The text is in twenty-one chapters, of which the first three relate to Raphael's childhood and its environment, and to his arrival and early studies at Perugia. The next three follow his wanderings toward Florence, where we find him about the year 1504, working away at Madonnas and Holy Families. Then in three chapters more to Rome, and the service of Popes Julius II and Leo X, where he does his famous cartoons and distinguishes himself as an architect. Ten chapters further are occupied with his Roman career, the central section of his life. In the 20th chapter we inspect his studies and experiments with the antique, and in the 21st he dies.

But the pictures—oh! the pictures in this rough-edged, gilt-topped octavo of 500 heavy pages. There are well-nigh 200 of them; 154 engravings in the text, and 43 full-page plates. A few delineate the historic scenes amidst which Raphael's life was spent, as, for example, Florence and Rome in the 16th century, after old prints; but the majority are representations of Raphael's works, and among these none possess greater interest for the student than the first rough studies made by Raphael for those masterpieces which have given him his undying fame. To see the rude yet living and powerful outlines which express his earliest conception of his themes, and trace their development in the finished pictures, noticing the corrections, changes, refinements introduced, is a wonderfully fascinating exercise in psychological mysteries. These contracted sketches give us insight to the artist's mind and lay bare the processes by which he arrived at his matchless conclusions. They teach us again that genius is attention, talent well-directed toil.

Some of the full-page plates are done in colors, others by an automatic method which produces a result exceptionally pleasing for its tone. Together assembling the treasures of the Vatican, the Louvre, and other great European collections, they constitute a Raphael Gallery which, if not absolutely complete, is almost bewildering in extent and variety.

Historical Memorials of Westminster Abbey. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley. 1st American from the 6th English edition. Illus. 3 vols. [A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $7.50.]

Dean Stanley's noble memorial of Westminster Abbey, in its primal English form, is now a dozen years old, and half a dozen English editions have carried it into a hundred thousand hands or more. Finer subject annalist never had, and memorable edifice never a more loving or tender historian. All the studious pains, the scholarly accuracy, the antiquarian taste, the glowing imagination which Dean Stanley expended upon the Jewish and Eastern churches, are here concentrated upon the majestic and venerable fabric which on the whole is more closely associated than any other with the most interesting lines of English history. An enormous amount of research went into the preparation of the work, and the fullness of its outlines and richness of its details make it a product almost as curious and beautiful as an embroidery chiseled in stone. The work grew out of the inspiration afforded by the 800th anniversary of the dedication of the Abbey—what a stretch that figure gives the fancy! We cannot take time or space, in the midst of the Christmas hurry, to expatiate, either in description or in criticism, on the contents of this fascinating work, which Mr. Randolph has brought out in a new and beautiful large paper edition. For criticism, indeed, there is no occasion. For description we might take many columns and much of our readers' time. We envy those of the latter who can sit down at their leisure to the feast which these three volumes spread before the eye. What a point of view for a picturesque survey of nearly a thousand years of English history! What a host of notable figures move in procession through the stately interior; how dramatic the life that goes on in this great national sanctuary! Mr. Randolph has made a rare trio of books out of the one volume of the English original. A generous page, ample margins, clear print, choice laid paper uncalendered, rough edges, illustrative etchings, and a unique binding of elegant simplicity, make up the whole; and only 600 copies on large paper have been printed for sale.

Annals of the English Stage, from Thomas Betterton to Edmund Kean. Edited and Revised by Robert W. Lowe. Illus. 3 vols. [John C. Nimmo. 54s.]

This revival of Dr. Doran's standard—almost classic—work is under favorable conditions and deserves well. First published a quarter of a century ago, it at once took possession of its field and has held it ever since, not only without a rival, but without even a competitor; so that if you ask for a history of English actors and acting there is only one answer: "Why, Dr. Doran's, of course." Two editions the work has had, and both have been for some time out of print, copies of the first having become so rare as to command a high price. Dr. Doran, who became editor of Notes and Queries in 1873, died in 1878. His great work, not his only work though, by any means, has now been brought forth from its retirement, and with fresh attractions introduced anew to the English and American public. Besides rough edges, gilt tops, and a Roxburghe binding, these attractions include careful corrections of the text made from the author's own annotated copy, and an extensive series of illustrations, which add much to the historical and biographical atmosphere of the work. These illustrations are in two lines: first, a series of fifty portraits of leading actors and actresses, engraved on copper, all printed and mounted as India proofs "before letter;" and second, a series of small wood-cuts of the vignette order, printed for the most part on India paper and inserted at the head of chapters. These, generally speaking, are views of buildings connected with the subject, theaters or actors' homes, but include some portraits. Subordinate to these, and placed at the end of the chapters, are a few character portraits. There are in all about 130 illustrations. Besides the demy 8vo edition, the basis of the present notice, a limited edition has been printed in royal 8vo with a duplicate set of the fifty portraits, one on Japanese paper, and the other as India proofs, each copy numbered.

The Book of British Ballads. Edited by S. C. Hall. With illustrations after designs by Creswick, Gilbert, and others. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

It was a happy thought of the Putnams to tuck Mr. S. C. Hall's Book of British Ballads into their "Knickerbocker Nugget" series. A little larger "nugget" it makes than the other series, of the same height, but a trifle wider, though its binding and typography are uniform. The type is small, very small, but distinct and readable. Apart from the historic and literary interest of the ballads, the charm of this present setting of them lies in the illustrations and the arrangement of them. They are profuse, almost always one for every page, and they are so contrived as to occupy usually a long narrow panel at the side of the page only, making a pictorial border. They are of the miniature class, and are done with great fineness and delicacy of touch. All they need is color to suggest, with their poetical accompaniments, an illuminated manuscript of old. As for the ballads "Chevy Chase" is here, and "Fair Rosamond," and "Robin Goodfellow," and "Lord Ullin's Daughter," and "Robin Hood," and "Auld Robin Gray," and many others—between 50 and 60 in all. An introduction, appendix of notes, and glossary complete the book.

The Dawn of the XIXth Century in England. A Social Sketch of the Times. By John Ashton. Illus. Popular Edition. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50]

Mr. Ashton is an English antiquary, and this is a London book with an American imprint. There is abundant material in it for many hours' reading, with a fair degree of entertainment and occasional amusement, especially over the pictures, though it is a book not to be taken all at once. Mr. Ashton is a ransacker, a collector of curiosities, a showman, and a good talker. Out of the newspapers and similar sources of information belonging to the first decade of the century, he has got together an immense mass of facts, stories, oddities, and characteristics illustrative of the English, and especially the London, life of that time. His 53 chapters and 114 pictures, the latter copies of old prints and largely caricatures, are divided between markets, police, politics, literature, the army and navy, funerals, riots, jubilees, costumes, the press, prisoners, roads, travel, fires, street life, amusements, gambling, hunting, racing, theatricals, clubs, art galleries, music, medical practice, royal societies, smuggling, and some scandals.

Mr. Thomas E. Van Bibber has translated the facts of Scripture and the supplements of tradition respecting the infancy of Jesus into a rather stately blank-verse poem of about 5,000 lines, called The Holy Child, and dedicated it under that title to his brother, a Doctor of Divinity of Baltimore. In print the poem is set off with a number of excellent photogravures, some of them depicting the Holy Family, others ideal scenes in the desert, not all of them, however, exactly illustrative of the poem. [G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.]

Few American novels of its class have achieved a wider popularity than did Susan Warner's (pseud. Elizabeth Wetherell) Wide, Wide World a generation ago. Of late almost forgotten, the J. B. Lippincott Co. have revived it in a new edition, two volumes in one, not printed from new plates but from respectable old ones, and with the compensation of eight good etchings—real etchings—by Dielman. The paper is too deeply tinted to suit our taste. The edges are gilt all round. The cover is a patch of the starry sky. The Wide, Wide World is an old book worth reading now, notwithstanding its religious sentimentalism. The story goes that when the MS. was first submitted to the elder Putnam for publication he was inclined to reject it as not being a book that would "sell." His mother got hold of the MS., read it, liked it, and urged her son to print it. To please her he did so. At first the book fell flat, notwithstanding the good mother was "sure Providence would open a demand for it." Providence, Rhode Island, did, first in the way of a "good notice" of the book in a leading journal of that city, and then in a large order from a bookseller there. The fortune of the book was made, and in a few months 40,000 copies had been sold. So says Barrows in his Acts and Anecdotes of Authors.

The successive volumes of the Century and St. Nicholas magazines issue from the press with the regularity and precision of coins dropping from the mint. Perhaps we have used this figure before, but it is true enough and good enough to be used again, and often. The Century is the golden eagle and St. Nicholas the silver dollar of this factory of the currency of precious literary metal. We could make a good use of much space for a retrospect of the volumes for 1887, but those of 1888 are already beginning to form, and we must set face to the front. [Century Co.]

We have the bound volume of Harper's Young People for 1887—887 large quarto pages of delightful pictures and excellent reading matter; a forcible argument in favor of subscription for next year. [Harper & Brothers.]

From Geo. Routledge & Sons we have a dainty bit of a Kate Greenaway Almanack for 1888, 25c., and four little quartos expressing each The Voice of the Flowers, as uttered respectively by Shakespeare, Longfellow, Moore, and Whittier. All of the latter are richly illustrated in color, and all are provided with hand-painted and embossed covers. [The latter $1 each.]

An extremely beautiful book, in both its typography and illustrations, is The Story of our Lord as written out by Frances Younghusband. The author has let the Four Gospels tell their own story, simply weaving the accounts into one connected narrative; letting the miraculous and supernatural element remain as the Bible presents it. There is no attempt to "write down" to the comprehension of children; the style is dignified and manly—perhaps we should say womanly. The twenty-five larger wood-cuts are well executed copies of famous paintings by the old masters, and in addition to these there is a rich and varied assortment of ornamental head-and-tail pieces, borders, and initial letters. Altogether this is a model and beautiful book. Though small and unobtrusive, we ought to have found place to notice it among the choicest holiday books of the season. [Longmans, Green & Co.]

Just as our forms are ready for the press, there come a handful more of holiday books, which we can only glance at here in the most cursory manner, leaving further remarks till another time. Among them are Fifty Years of English Song, edited by Randolph, in 4 volumes, an anthology of Victorian verse [Randolph]; Eudora, a versified tale of love by M. B. M. Toland, elegantly printed, and handsomely illustrated with drawings by Mowbray and Gibson, and tinted decorations by Ipsen [Lippincott Co.], and three attractive works of fiction from Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., of London, Ethne, Westminster Cloisters, and Little Miss Peggy, the latter by Mrs. Molesworth.

Mr. Wm. T. Ross's Voice Culture and Elocution, which we reviewed twice last year (see pp. 254, 356, Vol. XVII), has reappeared in a new edition and under a new imprint, and is entitled to further commendation for its plates illustrating the vocal organs, its additional exercises, its references, its revised selections, and its index. [Baker & Taylor Co. $1.25.]

The merit claimed by Mrs. Anna Randall-Diehl for her collected Elocutionary Studies and New Recitations is that they are new and fresh, having been written or "adapted" expressly for their present use. Their demerit in our judgment is the low grade of many that profess to be witty and humorous. It is so hard to be funny in these days without being coarse and vulgar. We submit that selections from standard authors would be generally better for such uses as are contemplated by this little book. [New York: Edgar S. Werner. 60c.]

— Among the interesting entries in Mr. J. W. Bouton's last catalogue are an Autograph Album containing signatures and notes of visitors to the rooms of the American Philosophical Society and Mr. John Vaughan, Philadelphia, 1834-41; a copy of the rare first edition of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy; a complete large paper set of Valpy's Delphin and Variorum Classics, 183 vols.; a set of Dibdin in 31 vols.; an original set of Ruskin's Modern Painters, Stones of Venice, and Seven Lamps, in 9 vols.; and a large paper edition of Winckelmann's History of Ancient Art, extended to 4 vols. by the insertion of 386 extra plates.

NEWS AND NOTES.

—The attentions paid to the poet Whittier on Saturday last, his 80th birthday, were almost unprecedented in their tenderness and affectionateness, and displayed a depth and strength of regard which must be extremely gratifying to the recipient. A symposium of tributes in the Boston Advertiser, after the example set by the Literary World ten years ago, with contributions from Holmes, Lowell, Walt Whitman, Samuel Longfellow, Higginson, and many others, and, at the poet's home, calls, letters, congratulations, flowers, and a huge birthday cake, all testified to the honor and esteem in which the poet of New England is held by a very much larger than the mere New England circle. Truly in Mr. Whittier's serene old age it is again true that "at evening time it shall be light."

—By invitation of members of his last winter's class in Aristotle, Mr. Edwin D. Mead will give twelve lessons in the philosophy of Kant, at the Hotel Vendome, Boston, on Tuesday mornings, at eleven o'clock, beginning December 13. The subjects of the several lessons will be: The Problem left by Locke and Hume; Kant's Doctrine of Space and Time; the Categories of the Understanding; the Unity of Self-consciousness; Phenomena and Noumena; the Antinomies or Self-contradictions of Thought; the Proofs of the Existence of God; the True End and Method of Reason; Kant's Ethics; Kant's Doctrine of Teleology or Final Cause; the Relation of Kant to Fichte and Hegel and later German Thought.

—Mr. Higginson has been unwell at his Cambridge home, and has devoted the month of December to means of convalescence.

—The new editor of the Moscow Gazette is Mr. Petropsky, a man of forty, a professor of law, but not at home in modern languages, as a Russian editor above all things ought to be.

—T. Y. Crowell & Co. will soon publish a number of Tolstoi's Stories for Children, translated by Mr. Dole, and his Napoleon and the Russian Campaign.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Biography.

- THE LAWYER, THE STATESMAN, AND THE SOLDIER. By George S. Boutwell. D. Appleton & Co.
MY AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND REMINISCENCES. By W. P. Frith. Harper & Brothers.
HORTUS INCLUSUS. Messages from the Wood to the Garden. Sent in Happy Days to the Sister Ladies of the Thwaitt, Coniston. By John Ruskin. John Wiley & Sons. $1.00
THE LIFE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON STUDIED ANEW. By Edward Everett Hale. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.75
ELIZABETH GILBERT, AND HER WORK FOR THE BLIND. By Frances Martin. Macmillan & Co. $1.75
MARY PRYOR. A Life Story of a Hundred Years Ago. By the author of "Consecrated Women," etc. Illus. 2d edition. Philadelphia: H. Longstreth.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN AS A MAN OF LETTERS. By John Bach McMaster. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25
THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF CHARLES DARWIN. Including an Autobiographical Chapter. Edited by his son. 2 vols. D. Appleton & Co. $4.50

- THE COMPLETE WORKS OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Compiled and Edited by John Bigelow. Vol. V. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $5.00
ORMSBY MACKNIGHT MITCHELL, Astronomer and General. A Biographical Narrative. By his son, F. A. Mitchell. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00

Essays and Sketches.

- THE SHAKESPEARIAN DRAMA. A Commentary. By Denton J. Snider. The Tragedies. Ticknor & Co.
VIRGINIBUS PUERISQUE, AND OTHER PAPERS. By Robert Louis Stevenson. 2d edition. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
MEMORIES AND PORTRAITS. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
LEGENDS FROM STORY LAND. By James Vila Black. Chicago: Charles H. Kerr. $1.00
NOTES FOR BOYS (AND THEIR FATHERS) ON MORALS, MIND, AND MANNERS. By an Old Boy. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00
SYLVAN SECRETS, IN BIRD SONGS AND BOOKS. By Maurice Thompson. John B. Alden. 50c.
THE BIDDY CLUB; and How its Members, Wise and Otherwise, some toughened and some tenderfooted in the rugged ways of housekeeping, grappled with the troublous Servant Question, to the great advantage of themselves, and, as they hope, of many others. By Griffith A. Nicholas. $1.25
GUNETHICS; or, the Ethical Status of Woman. By Rev. W. K. Brown. Funk & Wagnalls. 75c.
LIFE'S PROBLEMS HERE AND HEREAFTER. An Autobiography. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25
FRESH WOODS AND PASTURES NEW. By the author of "Frank's Ranch," etc. A. D. F. Randolph & Co.
A CHILD OF GENIUS. A Sketch Book for Winter Evenings and Summer Afternoons. By J. J. Wood. Illus. Hudson, Mich.: Wood's Bookstore.
WOMEN AND MEN. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson. Harper & Brothers.

Fiction.

- MAJOR LAWRENCE, F.L.S. By Hon. Emily Lawless. Henry Holt & Co. $1.00
MINGO, AND OTHER SKETCHES IN BLACK AND WHITE. By Joel Chandler Harris. Ticknor & Co. Paper, 50c.
HARLETT. By the Countess of XXX. F. Warne & Co. Paper, 35c.
FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, AND OTHER STORIES OF NEW ENGLAND LIFE. By C. H. W. Little, Brown & Co. $1.25
APRIL HOPES. By Wm. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers.
CALAMITY ROW; or, The Sunken Records. By John R. Musick. Rand, McNally & Co. Cloth, $1.00
THE COLONEL'S MONEY. By Lucy C. Lillie. Illus. Harper & Brothers.
THE WIDE, WIDE WORLD. By Elizabeth Wetherell. With etchings by Dielmann. J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.50
FROM A GARRET. By May Kendall. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00
WHO CARES? Episodes in the Life of Mary Campbell. By Mrs. Harriet N. K. Goff. With an Introduction by Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler. T. B. Peterson & Bros. 75c.
FREE JOE, AND OTHER GEORGIAN SKETCHES. By Joel Chandler Harris. Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00
THE GAVEROCKS. By S. Baring-Gould. J. B. Lippincott Co. 50c.
NEW WAGGINGS OF OLD TALES. By Two Wags. Illustrated by Oliver Herford. Ticknor & Co. $1.00
AN ALGONQUIN MAIDEN. By G. Mercer Adam and A. Ethelwyn Wetherall. Toronto: Wm. Bryce. Paper, 30c.
RONDAH; or, Thirty-three Years in a Star. By Florence Carpenter Dieudonné. T. Peterson & Bros. 75c.
EUNICE. By the author of "Janet's Love and Service." Illus. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.50
PAUL AND CHRISTINA. By Amelia E. Barr. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.00
HER TWO MILLIONS. By William Westall. Illus. Harper & Brothers. Franklin Sq. Lib. 25c.
GERMAN FANTASIES BY FRENCH FANTASIES. Tales by Richard Leander. Translated from the German by Pauline C. Lane. G. P. Putnam's Sons.
ANDY MERRIGAN'S GREAT DISCOVERY, AND OTHER IRISH TALES. By F. M. Allen. Illus. D. Appleton & Co. Paper, 50c.
PAUL PATOFF. By F. Marion Crawford. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50
THE FORTUNES OF THE FARADAYS. By Amanda M. Douglas. Lee & Shepard. $1.50
CALAMITY ROW; or, The Sunken Records. By John R. Musick. Rand, McNally & Co. Paper, 25c.
A PRINCE OF THE BLOOD. By James Payn. Harper & Brothers.
A MAGNIFICENT PLEBEIAN. By Julia Magruder. Harper & Brothers.
MAGDALENA; or, The Maid's Mischief. A Drama. By Theodore Davenport Warner. J. B. Lippincott Co.
BLUFFTON: A Story of Today. By M. J. Savage. 2d edition. Geo. H. Ellis. $1.50
THE STORY OF KREDON BLUFFS. By Charles Egbert Craddock. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00
THE BEGINNINGS OF CIVILIZATION. By Prof. C. W. Hutson. J. B. Alden. 50c.

ORIGINS OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE AND OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Compiled from the latest and best authorities. By John Roemer, LL.D. D. Appleton & Co.

MAHALY LAWYER; or, "Putting Yourself in her Place." By S. E. D. Cupples & Hurd. $1.25

THE VAGRANT, and Other Tales, by Vlademir Korolenko. Tr. from the Russian by Mrs. Aline Delano. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.25

A RUSSIAN PROPRIETOR, and Other Stories. By Count Lyof N. Tolstol. Tr. from the Russian by Nathan Haskell Dole. T. Y. Crowell & Co. $1.50

WESTMINSTER CLOISTERS. The Story of a Life's Ambition. By M. Bidder. London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.

ETHNE: being a truthful Historie of the great and final Settlement of Ireland by Oliver Cromwell, and certain other noteworthy events, from the Records of Ethne O'Connor and of Roger Standfast, Captain in the Army of the Commons of England. By Mrs. E. M. Field. London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.

History.

- HISTORICAL MEMORIALS OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D. 1st American from the 6th London edition. With illustrations. 3 vols. Large paper. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $7.50
SLAV OR SAXON. A Study of the Growth and Tendencies of Russian Civilization. By Wm. D. Foulke. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00
THE OLD SOUTH AND THE NEW. A Series of Letters by Hon. Wm. D. Kelly. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25
EGYPTIAN ARCHAEOLOGY. By G. Maspero. Tr. from the French by Amelia B. Edwards. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.00
AN ABRIDGED HISTORY OF CANADA. By W. H. Whitrow. Also an Outline History of Canadian Literature. By G. M. Adam. Toronto: Wm. Briggs. 60c.
IRELAND. By the Hon. Emily Lawless. With Additions by Mrs. Arthur Bronson. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
INSTITUTES OF CHRISTIAN HISTORY. An Introduction to Historic Reading and Study. By A. Cleveland Cox. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

Holiday Publications.

- NOTRE DAME. By Victor Hugo. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. 2 vols. $6.00
RAPHAEL. His Life, Works, and Times. By Eugene Muntz. Illus. New edition revised from the 2d French edition by Walter Armstrong. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $9.00
THE POETICAL WORKS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT. Edited by Wm. J. Rolfe. Illus. Ticknor & Co. $10.00
OUR DARLINGS. By Mrs. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $2.50
THE MAN WHO WOULD LIKE TO MARRY. By Harry Parks. F. Warne & Co.
THE BOOK OF BRITISH BALLADS. Edited by S. C. Hall. Illus. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
EUDORA: A Tale of Love. By M. B. M. Toland. Illus. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3.00

Juveniles.

- TOTO'S MERRY WINTER. By Laura E. Richards. Roberts Brothers. $1.25
THE FIDDLER OF LUGAN. By the author of "Mlle. Mori," etc. Illus. Thomas Whittaker.
THE PALACE IN THE GARDEN. By Mrs. Molesworth. Illus. Thomas Whittaker.
AFTER THE FAILURE; or, A Loss and a Gain. By Annette Lucille Noble. Presbyterian Board. $1.15
THE HEIR OF ATHOLE. By Julia McNair Wright. Presbyterian Board. $1.15
WIDENING CIRCLES. By Minnie E. Kenney. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
MRS. WINCHESTER'S KITCHEN; or, The One Talent Improved. By Mrs. Helen E. Brown. Presbyterian Board. $1.00
HISTORY OF JAPAN IN WORDS OF ONE SYLLABLE. By Helen Ainslie Smith. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.00
HISTORY OF RUSSIA IN WORDS OF ONE SYLLABLE. By Helen Ainslie Smith. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $1.00
LITTLE MISS PRIGGY: Only a Nursery Story. By Mrs. Molesworth. With illustrations by Walter Crane. Macmillan & Co. $1.25
VERY SHORT STORIES IN VERY SHORT WORDS. By the Hon. Emmeline M. Plunket. With numerous illustrations by T. Pym. London: Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.
WASHINGTON AND HIS COUNTRY; being Irving's Life of Washington Abridged for the Use of Schools. By John Fiske. Ginn & Co. 85c.
ONLY A YEAR AND WHAT IT BROUGHT. By Jane Andrews. Lee & Shepard. $1.00
A MODERN SAINT CHRISTOPHER; or, The Two Brothers. By Rose Porter. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.25
A GARLAND FOR GIRLS. By Louisa M. Alcott. Roberts Brothers. $1.25
THE YOUNG MAROONERS ON THE FLORIDA COAST; or, Robert and Harold. By F. R. Goulding. New edition. Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.25
DILLY AND THE CAPTAIN. By Margaret Sidney. Illus. D. Lothrop & Co. $1.00

Poetry.

- LIFE AND LOVE. Poems by Robert Burns Wilson. Cassell & Co. $1.50

LOTUS AND JEWEL. Containing "In an Indian Temple," "A Basket of Gems," "A Queen's Revenge." With Other Poems. By Edwin Arnold. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

POEMS BY DAVID ATWOOD WASSON. Lee & Shepard.
THE HOLY CHILD; or, The Flight into Egypt. By Thomas E. Van Bibber. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50
AFTERWHILES. By James Whitcomb Riley. Indianapolis: Bowen-Merrill Co.

MOLY; or, A Book of Poems. By Curtis May. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25
HEART LYRICS. By Jessie F. O'Donnell. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.25

LEGENDS OF THE SUSQUEHANNA, AND OTHER POEMS. By Truman H. Purdy. Illus. J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.50
FIFTY YEARS OF ENGLISH SONG. Selections from the Poets of the Reign of Queen Victoria. Edited and Arranged by Henry F. Randolph. 4 vols. A. D. F. Randolph & Co.

THE WHITE SAIL, AND OTHER POEMS. By Louise Imogen Guiney. Ticknor & Co. $1.25
DREAMS TO SELL. By May Kendall. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.00

POEMS. By George Macdonald. Selected by V. D. S. and C. F. E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.25

POEMS. By Edward Rowland Sill. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.00

Science and Philosophy.

PRE-GLACIAL MAN AND THE ARYAN RACE. By Lorenzo Burge. Lee & Shepard. $1.50
FAMILY LIVING ON $500 A YEAR. By Juliet Corson. Harper & Brothers.

A BUNDLE OF LETTERS TO BUSY GIRLS ON PRACTICAL MATTERS. By Grace H. Dodge. Funk & Wagnalls. 50c.
ELOCUTION FOR ADVANCED PUPILS. By John Murray. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.00

THE ASTEROIDS; or, Minor Planets between Mars and Jupiter. By Daniel Kirkwood. J. B. Lippincott Co. 75c.

HIGHER GROUND. Hints toward Settling the Labor Troubles. By Augustus Jacobson. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.00

SCIENCE SKETCHES. By David Starr Jordan. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

VERNER'S LAW IN ITALY. An Essay in the History of the Indo-European Sibilants. By R. Seymour Conway. With a Dialect Map of Italy. London: Trübner & Co.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF ANATOMY, PHYSIOLOGY, AND HYGIENE. By James K. Thacher and Arthur B. Morrill. Hartford: Case, Lockwood & Brainard Co. $1.75

WEATHER. A Popular Exposition of the Nature of Weather Changes from Day to Day. By the Hon. Ralph Abernethy. D. Appleton & Co. $1.75

THE INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION SERIES. Vol. V The Education of Man. By Friedrich Froebel. Tr. from the German and annotated by W. N. Hallmann. D. Appleton & Co. $1.50

WEALTH AND PROGRESS. A Critical Examination of the Labor Problem. By George Gunton. D. Appleton & Co.

THE TRUE AND THE FALSE THEORY OF EVOLUTION. By Rev. Chauncey Giles. Philadelphia: Wm. H. Alden.

THE REAL HISTORY OF THE ROSICRUCIANS. Founded on their own Manifestoes and on Facts and Documents Collected from the Writings of Initiated Brethren. By Arthur Edward Waite. With illustrations. J. W. Bouton.

MYTH, RITUAL, AND RELIGION. By Andrew Lang. 2 vols. London: Longmans, Green & Co. $7.00

HALF-HOURS WITH THE STARS. By Richard A. Procter. G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.00

MODERN SHIPS OF WAR. By Sir Edward J. Reed, R.N., and Edward Simpson, Rear Admiral, U.S.N. With Supplementary Chapters and Notes by J. D. Jerrold Kelley, U.S.N. Illus. Harper & Brothers. $2.50

Theology and Religion.

EVERY-DAY CHRISTIAN LIFE; or, Sermons by the Way. By F. W. Farrar. Thomas Whittaker.

THE LITTLE FLOWERS OF SAINT FRANCIS OF ASSISI. Tr. from the Italian, with a brief account of the life of Saint Francis, by Abby Langdon Alger. Roberts Brothers. $1.00

THE DIVINE MAN. From the Nativity to the Temptation. By George Dana Boardman. D. Appleton & Co.

TALKS TO YOUNG MEN. (With Asides to Young Women.) By Robert Collyer. Lee & Shepard. $1.25

CHRISTIANITY AND EVOLUTION: Modern Problems of the Faith. By the Rev. Geo. Matheson and others. T. Whittaker. $1.50

NON-BIBLICAL SYSTEMS OF RELIGION. A Symposium. By the Rev. Archdeacon Farrar and others. T. Whittaker. $1.50

THE HUMILIATION OF CHRIST; in its Physical, Ethical, and Official Aspects. 6th Series of the Cunningham Lectures. By Alexander Balmain Bruce, D.D. 2d edition. A. C. Armstrong & Son. $2.50

BETWEEN THE LIGHTS. Thoughts for the Quiet Hour. Compiled and Arranged by Fanny B. Bates. A. D. F. Randolph & Co. $1.75

Travel and Description.

THE WONDERFUL CITIES OF THE WORLD. By Helen Ainalle Smith. Illus. Geo. Routledge & Sons. $3.00

A GIRDLE ROUND THE EARTH. Home Letters from Foreign Lands. By D. N. Richardson. A. C. McClurg & Co. $2.00

MOUNTAIN TRACTS AND PARKS IN COLORADO. By L. P. France. ("Bourgeois.") Denver: Chain, Hardy & Co. $1.50

Miscellaneous.

A HISTORY OF ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE. By George Saintsbury. Macmillan & Co. $1.75

THE NEW PRINCETON REVIEW. Vol. IV. A. C. Armstrong & Son.

THE SACRED CANTATAS: their Stories, their Music, and their Composers. A Handbook by Geo. P. Upton. A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50

BROWNING. The book to buy is "Corson's Introduction to the Study of Browning." The 140 pages of introductory matter and the notes to 33 representative poems are invaluable helps to the understanding of the poet. Price $1.50.

Prof. R. G. Moulton, Cambridge University, England, author of "Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist," says: "I would venture the opinion that this work is the best model that I have seen of what the introduction to a writer should be."

D. C. HEATH & CO., Publishers,

Boston, New York and Chicago.

BARGAINS IN BOOKS, AUTOGRAPHS and Portraits. See catalogue free.
LORRAINE BOOK CO., 41 W. 31st St., New York.

"SYLVAN SECRETS."

By Maurice Thompson.

Ideal Edition, cloth, 80 cents; postage, 7 cents.

A new book by Maurice Thompson, dealing with outdoor subjects, in his inimitable way, is certain of an enthusiastic welcome by a large circle of readers.

"So delightful, fresh and invigorating."—Home Farm, Augusta, Me.

"He is a born lover of nature, and his pages have the delightful flavor of the field and wood."—The Post, Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Fresh, original and instructive. Mr. Thompson is not only a naturalist, but a poet."—News, Indianapolis.

"As fresh and interesting as the department of nature of which it treats."—Christian Advocate, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Order direct—NOT sold by dealers. Booklover's Bazaar and Catalogue, 132 pages, postpaid, 5 cents. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 393 Pearl Street, New York, Lakeside Building, Chicago.

THE BUREAU OF REVISION.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS says: "Reading manuscript with a view to publication is a professional work as much as examining titles to property; and this work is done, as it should be, professionally, by the 'Easy Chair's' friend and fellow-laborer in letters, Dr. T. M. Coan."—Harper's Magazine, April, 1888. Books edited for authors and publishers. Opinions on manuscript given. Dr. TITUS MUNSON COAN, 110 East 56th Street, New York City.

ODLA PODERIDA, or a well-digested Melange. Being Odds and Ends. No. 24 selected from the "Literary Junk Shop" of A. S. Clark, 34 Park Row, New York City. Now Ready. A. S. CLARK.

FOR NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES.

Send for our Catalogue of prices for 1888, just issued, and free to any address. Foreign periodicals cheaper than ever before. We charge, per year, for

Illustrated London News,	$7.75
Spectator or Saturday Review,	6.00
Punch, with Almanack,	3.40
London Times, weekly ed.,	3.00
Revue des Deux Mondes,	12.00
Deutsche Rundschau,	5.20
Fliegende Blätter,	3.20
Ueber Land und Meer,	3.50
Fresenius Zeitschrift,	4.00
and others in proportion.

Catalogue gives rates for nearly three thousand publications—American, English, French and German.

A. H. ROFFE & CO.,

No. 11 Bromfield Street Boston, Mass.

THE NEW ASTRONOMY.

By S. P. LANGLEY. Royal octavo, $5.00.

A fascinating and instructive volume, giving the latest discoveries in Astronomical Science, with nearly 100 elaborate illustrations. The following are the titles of the chapters: Spots on the Sun; the Sun's Surroundings; the Sun's Energy; the Planets and the Moon-Meteors; Comets; the Stars. Prof. Langley's scientific attainments have won for him the high consideration of distinguished scholars throughout the world, and insure for this work the leading position among astronomical treatises.

NEW WAGGINGS OF OLD TALES.

By Two Wags. Illustrated, $1.00.

An amusing group of burlesque novelettes and other bright witticisms, prepared by two of our most entertaining writers—Frank Dempster Sherman and John Kendrick Bangs (one of the editors of and contributors to "Life").

JAPANESE FAIRY TALES.

THE HUNTER IN FAIRY LAND, (40) cents.
THE BIRD'S PARTY, (30) cents.

These are two quaint stories heard by Prof. BASIL H. CHAMBERLAIN on the Island of Yezo, among the Ainu, the most ancient and primitive of dwellers on these islands, and by him translated into English. The two booklets were printed by The Kobunsha, Tokyo, Japan, on delicate and silky Japanese paper; with quaint colored illustrations in the text and on the covers, and bound with knotted silken cords.

NEW EDITIONS JUST READY.

KATE GANNETT WELLS'S
MISS CURTIS.

"Exceedingly fine studies of character."—Herald.

"Full of originality and common sense."—Gazette.

"Much good sense and good feeling, and is lighted up by a kindly humor."—Woman's Journal.

"Unconventional, full of suggestiveness, and original! It is a story which could well be given to every girl and boy just coming to the brink of adult life, and there are few grown people who will not be both wiser and better for reading its entertaining pages."—Boston Traveller.

NORA PERRY'S

A FLOCK OF GIRLS.

The Christmas book for girls, prettily illustrated and bound.

"Perfect little gems."—Globe.

"Has the charm of true hearts and gentle sympathy."—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"Lovely tales, told with fine artlessness and delicacy."—Quebec Chronicle.

"Pretty, refined, sprightly, interesting."—Witness.

"As joyous as they are delightful."—New York Mail.

SIR WALTER SCOTT'S POEMS. Revised, corrected and edited with notes and commentaries. By Wm. J. Rolfe. Royal 8vo, 350 illustrations. Full gilt, $10.00; half calf, $12.00; tree calf or full morocco, $16.00.

GERALDINE. A Rhythmical Romance of the St. Lawrence. 8vo, beautifully illustrated, $3.50; in full morocco, tree calf, or flexible calf, $7.50.

THE SWANEE RIVER. An exquisite illustrated edition of the celebrated song. $1.50.

MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME. A richly illustrated edition of the old song. $1.50.

JUAN AND JUANITA. By FRANCES COURTENAY BAYLOR. $1.50. There are many illustrations which vividly show forth Indian and Mexican manners, scenery and costume.

THREE GOOD GIANTS. Translated by JOHN DIMITRY, from the quaint old chronicles of Rabelais, and 175 delightful illustrations by GUSTAVE DORE and ANTON ROSIDA. $1.50.

For sale by all booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the publishers,

TICKNOR & CO., Boston.

WHEN CALLING, PLEASE ASK TO SEE MR. GRANT.

F. E. GRANT,
7 West 42d Street,
NEW YORK.

Did you know that there was a first-class Book Store at the above address? If you have not called there, you should do so, and make the acquaintance of Mr. Grant, who will be pleased to show you his stock, and who will offer you liberal inducements if you will mention this advertisement.

If you cannot call, write for what you want.

In any case, please send your name and address, that Mr. Grant may send you his book notices from time to time.

PAPER NOVELS,
STANDARD BOOKS,
IN ALL STYLES OF BINDINGS,
Stationery, Engravings, Etc., Etc.

THE FULL PRINCIPAL SUM will be paid in case of loss of both feet, both hands, a hand and a foot, or the entire sight of both eyes, by accident.

ACCIDENTS are always happening to those who do not "DON'T TRAVEL MUCH" as well as to those who do. The quietest PROFESSIONAL AND BUSINESS MEN are as liable as any others to the thousand hazards of life, at home or abroad.

"Moral: Insure in the Travelers."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

Also, Best of Life Companies.

ISSUES covering injuries received in Travel, Work, or Sport.
ACCIDENT TICKETS, In the Market. Indefensible, Non-Forfeitable, World-Wide.
BEST LIFE POLICY
Paid Policy-Holders, $18,500,000.

All Claims paid without Discount, and immediately on receipt of Satisfactory Proofs.

Assets $9,464,000
Surplus $2,227,000

J. G. BATTERSON, Pres.
RODNEY DENNIS, Sec.

One-third the Principal Sum will be paid for loss of a single hand or foot.

A LUMP IN HIS STOMACH

Was caused by DYSPEPSIA or resulted from INDIGESTION.

D. K. will remove the cause, relieve the suffering, cure the pain. Use them and you will be cured.
O. K. Dr. Mark R. Woodbury's DYSPEPSIA KILLERS are true to their name. Used by thousands who have been relieved.
Mailed to any address on receipt of 50 cents for a large box or 25 cents for a trial box by DOOLITTLE & SMITH, 24 and 26 Tremont Street, Boston.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, NEW YORK AND LONDON,

HAVE NOW READY:

A NEW BOOK BY MR. HALE.

THE LIFE OF WASHINGTON.

Studied anew by EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

Large 12mo, fully illustrated, $1.75.

"It has been my aim, using in my narrative chiefly the diaries and letters of the man himself, to present to the new generation of Americans the human Washington in such a way that they may have some conception of the man, and of the advantages and the disadvantages with which he worked through his great career."—Extract from Preface.

In the Story of the Nations Series:

VOL. XVII. THE STORY OF IRELAND.

By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS, author of "Harrish," etc. Large 12mo, with 57 illustrations and three maps, cloth extra, $1.50.

CHIEF CONTENTS: Primeval Ireland—Legends and Legend-Makers—Pre-Christian Ireland—St. Patrick, the Missionary—The First Monasteries—Columba and the Western Church—The Northern Scourge—Brian of the Tribune—The Anglo-Norman Invasion—Henry II., John, Bruce, Richard II.—The House of Kildare—The Plantations—The Desmond—The Tyrone War—Strafford—Forty-one—Cromwell in Ireland—The Act of Settlement—William and James—Codes, Penal and Commercial—Flood and Grattan—Ninety-eight—The Union—O'Connell and the Emancipation—Young Ireland—The Famine—The Latest Developments.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ART OF CONVERSATION.

By JOHN P. MAHAFFY, author of "The Story of Alexander's Empire," etc. 16mo, cloth extra, 75 cents.

In this little volume the brilliant classical scholar, heretofore best known in connection with his studies in Greek civilization, undertakes to outline the principles which underlie what is perhaps the most important of social accomplishments, an accomplishment for which he claims the standing of an art.

"A LITTLE WONDER."

THE POCKET ATLAS OF THE WORLD. A Comprehensive and Popular Series of Maps, illustrating Political and Physical Geography. Prepared by JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F. R. G. S. Beautifully printed in 32mo, cloth extra, $1.00; full leather, $1.50.

"One of the most convenient little books ever published. . . . It is a little marvel of full and compact information, and its maps are excellent."—Chicago Tribune.

"It is refreshing to find a thing so new, so unique, so correct, so serviceable. . . . It is all it purports to be, and is more and better than any one would suspect from the title or from any review that could be given it. It is what every student has wanted, what every office and home need. We would not be without it, personally, for several times its price."—Boston Journal of Education.

IMPORTED WORKS in LIMITED EDITIONS.

THE Gnostics and Their Remains, Ancient and Medieval. By C. W. KING, M. A. Royal octavo

For sale by all dealers, and sent postpaid on receipt of price by the publishers.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27 & 29 West Twenty-third Street, New York.

New classified catalogue of publications and catalogue of recent importations sent each on receipt of price.

"Admirable for its very simplicity and naturalness. No person with an earnest, intelligent purpose can fail of obtaining the most satisfactory results."—Winona Republican.

German Simplified.

An eminently successful method for acquiring a sound and practical knowledge of the German language that will prove of real use in business, reading, or travel. It is published in two editions: (1) For self-instruction, in 12 numbers, (with keys), at 10 cents each. (2) As a School Edition (without keys), bound in cloth, $1.25.

Now ready, by the author of "German Simplified," and on the same plan,

Spanish Simplified.

To consist of 10 numbers. Nos. 1 and 2 were published October 18, 1887. A new number will appear on the first of every month, until completed. Price, 10 cents a number. Both works are for sale by all bookellers; sent postpaid on receipt of price, by Prof. A. KNOFLACH, 140 Nassau St., New York. Prospectus free.

with 19 woodcuts and 75 lithographic figures; a bibliography and full index. Cloth extra, $9.00.

CHIEF CONTENTS: The Sources of Gnosticism—Pistis Sophia—Mithras and Serapis—Abraxas—Abraxaster and Abraxoid Gems—Figured Monuments—Templars—Rosicrucians—Freemasons—Gnostic Symbols, etc.

The volume is believed to be the only work now in print which gives a clear and comprehensive view of the principal forms of Gnosticism and the history of its development, together with an analysis of the relations of Gnosticism with Buddhism, and with the different phases of Christian belief; the creed of the Templars; the faith of the Rosicrucians, Freemasonry, etc.

ARCADY: For Better, For Worse.

A Study of Rural Life in England. By AUGUSTUS JESSOFF, D.D. Octavo, with two plates, $1.75.

"This is a capital book. . . . The doctor's style is exceedingly good; his thoughts flow freely; his observation is sharp and accurate; his sympathies are so broad and deep that he wins the reader's interest at once; and his facts are so fresh and suggestive as to render his discussions economically valuable as well as charming in their purely literary aspect."—New York Tribune.

THE REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT OF 1848-9 IN ITALY, AUSTRIA, HUNGARY and GERMANY.

With a preliminary examination of the events of the preceding thirty-three years. By C. EDMUND MAURICE, author of "English Popular Leaders in the Middle Ages," etc. Octavo, with illustrations, $4.00.

"A remarkably painstaking and thoughtful narrative, . . . presenting an admirable summary of events worth recalling. The story shows how the revolutionary movement of 1848 revealed the strength and the weakness of the principle of nationalities. It taught the peoples of Europe to aspire, while it also taught their rulers how, by dividing them, to rivet their chains."—N. Y. Sun.

REGINALD POLE. Cardinal Archbishop of Canterbury. An Historical Study, with Introduction, Prologue and Practical Epilogue. Octavo, with etched portrait of Pole, cloth extra, $2.50.

A curious and instructive biographical study, which throws light on various vexed questions of the reign of Queen Mary.

THE DAWN OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLAND. A Social Sketch of the Times. By JOHN ASHTON. With 116 illustrations drawn by the author from contemporary engravings. Second and popular edition. Octavo, cloth, gilt top, $3.50.

"It would be impossible to remark on all the telling points in Mr. Ashton's excellent work. It is in every way a most complete and thorough account of those early days, full of quaint humor and graphic sketches, faithful to life, and taken from undoubted contemporary sources."—London Spectator.

MEMORY

Wholly unlike artificial systems. Any book learned in one reading.

Recommended by MARK TWAIN, RICHARD PROCTOR, the Scientist, Hon. W. W. ASTOR, JUDAH P. BENJAMIN, Dr. MASON, &c. CHAIR of 100 Columbia Law students; two classes of 200 each at Yale; 400 at University of Penn., Phila., 400 at Wellesley College, and three large classes at Chautauque University, &c. Prospectus sent FREE from PROF. LOISELLE, 237 Fifth Ave. New York.

THE LIBRARY MAGAZINE.

Contents December 10, 1887:

The Catholic Revival of the Sixteenth Century, from the Quarterly Review. Science and the Bishops, by Prof. T. H. Huxley. The Theosophic Movement in India, by Herr Ernst von Weber. Rural France, from the Edinburgh Review. Also brief articles from the Saturday Review on the Future of Canada, American and Indian Wreath, Queries for Journalists, and Debts of Honor. NOT sold by news-vendors—order direct. Single copies 3 cents; $1.00 a year. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, New York and Chicago.

THE CENTURY CO.'S SUGGESTIONS.

A Year's Subscription to the Century.

A gift that reminds one of the donor twelve times a year. The volume just beginning will contain "Lincoln in the War," Kennan's papers on "Siberia and the Exile System," novels and novelettes by Eggleston, Cable, Stockton, and others, papers on English Cathedrals, a series on Ireland, papers on Sports in the West, papers on Musical Subjects, etc., etc., etc. Price, $4.00 a year.

A Year's Subscription to St. Nicholas.

As the Chester (England) Courant says, "It is at the very head of all illustrated magazines for young people in Europe or America." The new year begins with November, and among the writers will be Mrs. Burnett, Frank R. Stockton, Louisa M. Alcott, Joel Chandler Harris, John Burroughs, J. T. Trowbridge, and H. H. Boyesen. Price, $3.00 a year. It is "a liberal education in itself."

The Hundreth Man.

"A book that must stand in the front rank of American fiction—a book which will brighten the anticipation of everything that comes from his pen."

N. Y. COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER.

8vo, in neat cloth binding, $1.50.

The Brownies: Their Book.

The popular Brownie poems and pictures by Palmer Cox, with all the original illustrations from ST. NICHOLAS, and many new ones;—an attractive book ($1.50).

Bound Volumes of St. Nicholas.

The numbers of the past year, with serial stories, nearly 1,000 pictures, etc. Edited by Mary Mapes Dodge. In two parts. $2.00 each. Beautifully bound.

St. Nicholas Songs.

A music book for the home, containing 112 charming new songs, written especially for this work by Dr. Damrosch, W. W. Gilchrist, S. P. Warren, J. L. Molloy, and others,—the words from ST. NICHOLAS. 200 pp. (size of sheet music), 140 illustrations. In cloth, $2.00; in full leather, $3.50.

Other Holiday Books

Include "Baby World," a splendid volume for the little ones, edited by Mrs. Dodge ($1.00); "The Boys' Book of Sports," edited by Maurice Thompson ($2.50); "Sport with Gun and Rod," a Cyclopædia of American Sport ($4.00).

* * * The above are sold by dealers everywhere, or they will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by THE CENTURY CO., 33 East 17th Street, New York.

TEMPLE OF ALANTHUR.

The Temple of Alanthur with other Poems.
By ISAAC R. BAXLEY. Octavo, cloth, $1.25.

"Marked by many of the charms which come from the fervency of true poetic spirit."—St. Paul Dispatch.

"Has the gift of vivid expression and a sweet sense of melody . . . He possesses unmistakable talent."—Baltimore News.

"The story is wrought out with unmistakable poetic strength . . . the rest of the poems in this book are nearly all unusual in tone, and some of striking character."—Buffalo Times.

* * * Holiday lists sent on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

27 & 29 WEST 23D ST., - NEW YORK.

TO WRITERS

Of Prose and Poetry:
The first number of FAME AND FORTUNE will be issued February 1st, 1888. 5 cents per week; $2.50 per year. FAME AND FORTUNE pays $200 for the best novel; $150 for the second best novel; $10 for the best short story; $5 for the next best short story; $5 for the best poem; $1 each for the best joke, conundrum, riddle and a number of other prizes. Writers desiring to compete for prizes in the first number will forward their manuscripts before Jan. 1st, 1888. All unavailable manuscripts returned, when desired, if sufficient postage is inclosed. FAME AND FORTUNE Publishing Co., 324 Produce Exchange, New York.

Now Ready.

A CATALOGUE OF

PRINT

AND PORTRAITS

FOR

ILLUSTRATING

AND FOR

EXTRA ILLUSTRATING

BOOKS.

Sent for two-cent stamp.

WILLIAM EVARTS BENJAMIN,
744 Broadway, New York.

A GENUINE BOOK COLLECTOR AND A Lover needs "Help," both in looking up, and after, "Rare, Unusual, Out-of-the-Way Books," according to his fancy. No matter what your whim or fancy may be, send address and desires to
R. C. HARTRANFT, 709 SANSON STREET,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Who makes a business of seeking curious and strange books.
Send for Catalogue of Americana.

Samuel E. Cassino's

LIST OF NEW BOOKS,

For 1887-88.

187 HIGH ST., BOSTON.

RIP VAN WINKLE. By WASHINGTON IRVING. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. This most popular story by Irving has been superbly illustrated by Mr. Merrill, whose illustrations for Thackeray's "Mahogany Tree" were so successful last season. The forty or fifty photographs, and other illustrations, are printed in appropriate tints. The binding is a novel and attractive portion of the work. In cloth extra, boxed, $7.00; tree calf, $14.00.

Limited Edition.—One hundred copies of this work have been made on large paper, and with all the illustrations on Japanese paper, printed separately and carefully mounted. $20.00.

THE PICTURESQUE COAST OF NEW ENGLAND. A handsome portfolio, containing 12 photographs from drawings by Louis K. Harlow, each plate being 16 x 20 inches in dimensions. Large paper edition, portfolio or bound, $10.00; Japanese paper edition, signed proofs (50 copies), portfolio, $25.00; satin edition, signed proofs (25 copies), portfolio, $50.00.

"Mr. Harlow's talent and exceptional faculty of execution are uncommonly displayed in these sketches, which also reveal a romantic vein of sentiment. The portfolio has a unique cover of dark brown mottled boards, upon which, in relief, stands out a white sail, bearing in Pompeian red letters the title. Above this, at the left, a golden net is draped across the corner of the cover, while white seagulls are seen here and there flying across the brown field."

MY GARDEN. An original poem by SIMON TUCKER CLARK, M. D. Illustrated by Lena J. Ringneberg and F. Schuyler Mathews. This is superbly illustrated by fine wood-cuts, and makes a beautiful gift-book. Beautifully bound in cloth, size, 9 x 13 inches, $4.50.

ROMEO AND JULIET. By WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Illustrated by superb wood engravings after original compositions by the celebrated French artist, Andriolli, and engraved by J. Huyot. The satine binding is unique and very attractive. $2.50.

THE CHRISTMAS CAROL. By CHARLES DICKENS. Illustrated by the celebrated artists, I. M. Gauguigil and T. V. Chomlnski. Cloth, in a box, $9.00.

ETCHINGS. By LOUIS K. HARLOW. Six etchings of American scenery. $1.50.

BITS OF DUTCH LAND. By LOUIS K. HARLOW. A collection of etchings of charming bits of Dutch scenery made in Holland in 1886. $1.50.

THACKERAY'S WORKS. The complete works of WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. This edition is entirely new, and is by far the finest edition ever produced in America. It is printed from new electrotype plates, from a new font of beautifully cut long primer type, cast expressly for this work, on fine paper. The size of the page and the well-proportioned margins leave nothing to be desired in this respect. It is bound in a very neat and attractive style, in green and brown cloth. It contains about fifteen hundred illustrations by the author and other well-known artists. No other American edition contains over 325 cuts. It is published in ten handsome volumes, at a price which brings it within the reach of all. 10 vols., cloth extra, $15.00.

It is also published in 20 volumes, making the finest edition for convenience and ease in handling ever given to the public. Bound in a very attractive and tasty manner, in dark red cloth.

20 vols., 12 mo, averaging over 450 pages and 75 cuts each, cloth, $25.00.

BEACON-LIGHT SERIES.

Green Pastures and Still Waters. This new work in the series of Beacon-Light text books for the month is even more attractive than the book from which the series receives its name. It has a new and beautiful design for each day of the month, and the selections have been made with great care and good judgment. The book cannot fail to be very successful. The cover design is unique and very attractive. Size, 5½ x 6½ inches. Bronzed cover, $1.50; ivory binding, $2.00.

"God Bless You." By WILLIAM HALE. Illustrated by Miss E. N. Little. With designs, $1.50.

The Old Oaken Bucket. By SAMUEL WOODWORTH. Illustrated by Louis K. Harlow. This very popular song has been illustrated in colors by the well-known water-color artist, Mr. Harlow. Tied with silk cord, $1.50.

